If the PCs attack Riswan, he defends himself, even though he does not carry any weapons.

If liberated, Riswan is grateful. The halfling, who was lost before being captured, wishes to leave the dungeon, but he unfortunately does not know the way. If the PCs allow him to join them, he does everything in his power to help, hoping to eventually leave this dreadful place. Oddly, Riswan does not sleep much (like an elf) and is an excellent addition to a party needing a nighttime watch. When his strength returns, however, he is very talkative.

Treasure: Brakari's carries 21 cp and the key to Mamara's cell. In a pile in the corner of the Room are Riswan's belongings, tossed under a pile of rags and boxes.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three fighter levels to Brakari. To decrease the challenge, remove one rogue level.

▲ Brakari, Minotaur Rog 1: CR 5; Large monstrous humanoid; HD 6d8+18 + 1d6+3; hp 54; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 15, touch 10, flat-footed — (see text); Base Atk +6; Grp +14; Atk +9 melee (1d6+4/x3, meat cleaver) or +9 melee (1d8+4, gore); Full Atk +9/+4 melee (1d6+4/x3, meat cleaver) and +4 melee (1d8+2, gore); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Powerful charge 4d6+6; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., natural cunning, scent; AL CE; SV Fort +7, Ref +8, Will +5; Str 19, Dex 12, Con 16, Int 7, Wis 10, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Intimidate +3, Listen +8, Move Silently +3, Search +3, Spot +8; Great Fortitude, Power Attack, Track

Powerful Charge (Ex): A minotaur typically begins a battle by charging at an opponent, lowering its head to bring its mighty horns into play. In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +9 attack bonus that deals 4d6+6 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

Sneak Attack: The rogue's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the rogue flanks her target. This extra damage is 1d6. Should the rogue score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

▲ Riswan, Halfling Ftr 1: CR 1; Small humanoid (halfling); HD 1d10+1; hp 11; Init +1; Spd 20 ft.; AC 16, touch 12, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +2; Grp -2; Atk +5 melee (1d6+1/19-20, longsword) or +4 ranged (1d6/19-20, light crossbow); Full Atk +5 melee (1d6+1/19-20, longsword) or +4 ranged (1d6/19-20, light crossbow); SA —; SQ Halfling traits; AL LG; SV Fort +4, Ref +3, Will +0; Str 12, Dex 15, Con 12, Int 10, Wis 9, Cha 8.

F33. GUARD POST

This room has no furniture or decor. Four minotaurs bearing wicked-looking halberds and wearing thick hide armors stand guard. They are engaged conversation, whispering to one another and keeping their eyes on the doors.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Four minotaurs (hp 44, 42, 39, 36) guard this Room. Their primary duty is to fend off any who trespass. They are sturdy warriors, who take their duty seriously. Unlike most Broken Axe minotaurs, they are not afraid to fight anyone showing signs of aggression. If they see a door open (DC 15 Spot check), they immediately go on the defensive and prepare for whomever enters.

Encounter Condition: [Fearless]

Tactics: These minotaurs fight well together, always practicing and drilling. They are not the artisans their brothers are and deep inside resent the fragmenting of the tribe. A part of them wishes to be Red Horn minotaurs, but they know this is traitorous to even think about.

In combat, they use their horns to charge the PCs every chance they get, teaming up on the strongest-looking and most heavily-armored PCs otherwise. They send for help if things get too difficult, but aren't afraid to fight to the death if they perceive the PCs as serious threats to the Broken Axe tribe. The largest of the four is extremely vicious and kills fallen foes, even though the other three will not. He carries a potion of rage and drinks it after suffering 10 or more points of damage.

Treasure: The guards carry copper and silver, often stopping to play games of dice or cards when no one is looking. Each guard carries a pouch with 2d8 gp worth of gems and assorted coins, plus knucklebones, cards, dice, and the occasional dart.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four minotaurs. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

F34. RAMVIK'S PRIVATE CHAMBER

The secret door in the eastern wall can be found with a successful DC 30 Search check. A narrow slit framing the secret door indicates its location. The door is identical to the wall, and cut from heavy stone, but held in place with hinges that are noticeable once the doorway is opened. A DC 18 Strength check opens the door in 1 round. Otherwise, it takes the PCs 1d+1 rounds to push it open enough to step through, in which case it is impossible to surprise the minotaur inside.

Unlike most rooms in the Region, this small chamber is decorated with various marks painted on the walls and the floor is covered with rich furs. A massive bed takes up most of the room, but a small stone altar with a burning yellow candle upon it was placed in the northwest corner.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Ramvik (hp 71) is the last minotaur cleric of the Broken Axe tribe. Though she is currently training three apprentices (see Room F35), they have yet to receive their deity's blessings. Ramvik is a priestess of the Goddess of Pain and Despair, a deity that obviously took an interest in the Broken Axe tribe shortly after the revolt when the people of the Golden Axe tribe were split into two clans.

Though she has yet to build a suitable temple for her deity, Ramvik won Chieftain Markuli's confidence and hopes he will allow her to use the abandoned meeting hall (Room F12) for such a purpose. She believes that only by embracing the deity and accepting the pain and suffering that the tribe has endured over the past decade can the spirit of the Broken Axe people be mended. Ramvik is thus fervently dedicated to the teachings of her goddess.

If the PCs say or do anything to provoke her, she issues a battle cry and attacks. Minotaurs in Rooms F35 and F36 are allowed DC 20 Listen checks to hear the commotion, arriving 1d+1 rounds later.

Encounter Condition: Cover (soft). Fearless, Unhallowed 2

Tactics: In battle, Ramvik prefers to use her spells to harm the PCs. She targets the largest PC with doom, cause fear, and sound burst. She casts shield of faith before the PCs arrive, if she has time, or on the 3rd round if not engaged in melee. After that, she casts death knell on any weakened PCs before charging into combat.

She already has bull's strength cast when the PCs arrive.

Treasure: Ramvik has a small volume bound in thick brown leather. It is written in Common and titled: "Of Pain, Despair, and Sorrow." This book is the unholy tome of the goddess of pain and despair. It contains specific prayers and vile rituals to honor the deity. The book is worth 250 gp to any follower of the faith.

Ramvik also carries three candles of truth, two vials of unholy water, and a pouch with 56 gp. She wears a ruby amulet on a golden necklace (worth 355 gp). Her unholy symbol is filled with silvery spikes and carved from onyx. It is worth 145 gp to likewise clerics.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two cleric levels to Ramvik or two minotaur bodyguards. In addition, allow her to have protection from good and shield of faith already cast. To decrease the challenge, remove three of Ramvik's 2nd-level spells for the day.

F35. ACOLYTES' LIVING QUARTERS

This shadowy room is furnished with three massive beds covered with thick woolen blankets and the rich pelt of a large white wolf lies upon the floor in the middle of the room.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Ramvik's minotaur acolytes (hp 41, 39, 38, 37) live here. The three minotaur youths have not yet earned the deity's favor, but they consider themselves priests in training and followers of the teachings of Ramvik to the letter. Any intrusion into their chamber provokes the wrath of these minotaurs. They attack all intruders on sight.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: These minotaurs are young members of the tribe eager to prove their worth. They use no particular combat tactics, fighting instead in an unpredictable and solitary manner. They are however, eager to impress Ramvik. If she has fallen, they gain the benefit of rage, otherwise, they fight the strongest PCs to prove their worth.

If combat ensues, allow the guards in Room F36 a DC 22 Listen check to hear the sound of battle. If they do, they come charging into the fray 1d3+1 rounds later.

Treasure: Each acolyte carries a simple miniature axe made of iron. This unholy symbol is worth 10 gp to the followers of their goddess.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four minotaur acolytes. To decrease the challenge remove one.

F36. GUARD POST

This large hall is dark and empty. A closer look reveals the bull-headed figures of two powerfully built monstrous humanoids with large horns baring massive axes.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Three minotaur barbarians (hp 59, 55, 51) stand guard in this Room, which borders the Broken Axe tribe's territory. Like most of their kind, they are willing to parley with friendly PCs and even trade goods and information with them. They do not allow anyone inside the boundaries of their home, however. If the PCs request an audience with their chieftain, one of them fetches Markuli. He returns several minutes later and both men escort the PCs to Room F39.

Encounter Condition: Cover, Fearless

Tactics: In combat, these barbarians initiate their rage and charge the closest PCs using their mighty horns before fighting with their axes. Allow the acolytes in Room F35 DC 22 Listen checks to hear the fighting. If successful, they join their comrades in battle 1d3+1 rounds later.

As barbarians they are fearless and fight in a massive onslaught, double and triple teaming weak opponents. While they fight with some honor, they know that wizards can be wicked enemies and charge anyone who openly displays magic.

They fight until they reach 20 hit points or less, at which point, one of them runs for help, heading to the closest Room.

F37. ISOLATED WARP GATE III

The door leading into this Room is one of the many warp gates in the Region. It is unlocked, but a small lock of black iron is set above the knob. When this door is opened, roll on the Warp Gates: Random Locations table (at the beginning of this section) to determine into which Room it leads. A result of Room F37 means the door opens as a normal door into the narrow corridor encircling the Room. Like all warp gates, the door of this Room shuts itself as soon as the PCs move through it.

This small room is totally dark and has no furniture. Its only interesting features are the door with a black metal lock in the middle of the east wall and the bony remains of what must once have been an elf in the middle of the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The remains of an elven adventurer who died here many years ago lies in the middle of the Room. The poor soul was heavily wounded in battle against the minotaurs of the Golden Axe tribe (as they were called then) and escaped through one of the warp gates in the Region only to find himself here. He died of his wounds in this Room. Now, only his bony carcass and the treasures he carried remain.

Encounter Condition: Drafty, Fear 16

Tactics: The only means of escaping this isolated Room is by using its warp gate.

Treasure: Under the bony corpse are the rotted remains of a leather pouch that once held a topaz bottle stopper cork. The cork is of exquisite quality and sculpted to resemble a long curving feather. It is worth 975 gp. A masterwork shortsword in need of repair also lays near the elven skeleton.

F38. ELITE GUARDS' CHAMBER

This wide chamber contains twelve wide beds, which are lined along the north and south walls. A massive oak table surrounded by a dozen stools dominates the middle of the hall and an ancient tapestry that lost some of its splendor hangs on the western wall. Two five-ft. wide weapons' rack, one on either side of the door on the east wall, hold a variety of weapons, armors, and shields. A large wooden barrel stands in the northwest corner of the room, along with twelve goblets stacked upon it.

Four heavily muscled minotaurs wearing shiny golden breastplates and matching helmets covering their long muzzles but from which their long horns protrude are in this room. Two of them hold greataxes and large shields, standing guard near the open doorway, while the others sit on the edge of their beds, relaxing.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This large chamber houses the chieftain's honorary guards. These warriors are charged with the protection of their chieftain as well as issuing his orders to the other warriors of the tribe. Their station is one that harbors enormous respect and jealousy — and many in the Broken Axe tribe strive to one day enter the ranks of this exclusive group.

Four minotaur barbarians (hp 61, 56, 50, 47) are currently in this Room; four others are in Room F39 with their chieftain and the other four guard Room F24. Though they use this chamber to rest, they also keep constant vigil in the corridor outside their Room and remain on call twenty-four hours a day in case Markuli needs them.

If the PCs approach the warriors seeking a meeting with their leaders, the elite guards ask them to wait here while one of them goes to Room F39 to verify if their chieftain wants to see them. Unless the PCs have killed minotaurs (and have minotaur blood on their clothing or carry minotaur arms or treasures, for instance), they should have no trouble meeting Markuli. If, on the other hand, the PCs have slaughtered members of the Broken Axe tribe, these men do not hesitate to attack.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 5, Stagnant Air

Tactics: In battle, these cruel and bloodthirsty warriors are prone to initiate their barbarian's rage and charge their opponents with their mighty horns. They are also accustomed to fighting together and function well as a unit, often maneuvering in tight formations in an attempt to flank their foes. They use their shields to defend themselves, but on occasion also to bash smaller enemies.

If a battle occurs here, allow the guards in Room F39 a DC 25 Listen check to notice the ruckus of the battle and the cries of their comrades. If they do, they come charging into the fray 1d4+2 rounds later with their chieftain. Allow the minotaurs in Rooms F27 and F32 the same chance of hearing the sounds of combat. Half of the warriors in these Rooms come to investigate 1d6+2 rounds later.

Treasure: The elite guards carry large steel shields and wear golden armors of masterwork quality worth twice the value of similar masterwork items because of the precious metal used in their creation. Any minotaur from the Broken Axe or Red Horn tribes would pay up to five times their actual value. Each of these warriors also carries a masterwork greataxe as well as 2d12 gp worth of gems and coins. Additionally, one of them wears a thick gold chain with a massive ruby hanging from it. The crude-looking but obviously valuable necklace is worth 875 gp.

The weapons' racks hold half a dozen halberds, three longspears, two greatswords, one masterwork composite longbow (+5 Str bonus), as well as a well-fashioned quiver of deep blue leather holding 20 arrows. The barrel contains potent minotaur ale (see Room F7).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two barbarian levels to each minotaur. To decrease the challenge, remove two of them from the encounter.

F39. THRONE ROOM/MEETING HALL

The simple secret door on the north wall can be detected with a DC 30 Search check. This simple wall panel is unlocked and rests upon hidden hinges. It can be opened by pushing it towards the inside of Room F39.

This chamber is illuminated by the flickering flames of torches set on the east and west wall, but the pale light fails to put all the shadows of the great hall at bay. In the distance lays a massive throne carved from dark gray basalt. Upon the south wall above the royal chair is a wide tapestry of rich green hues with the design of an axe split in three parts embroidered in golden wires.

An old minotaur dressed in purple robes and baring a golden crown upon his head sits on the throne. The kingly figure is missing an arm and his face and neck reveal several deep scars. Beside him are four kindred males wearing golden breastplates and baring axes and shields.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Chieftain Markuli (hp 119) and four of his elite guards (hp 60, 57, 55, 51) are currently in this hall. If the PCs come into the throne Room with minotaur blood on their clothing or carrying treasures belonging to the tribe, Markuli's Initial Attitude becomes Hostile and he orders his men to kill them. Otherwise, the chieftain is mildly annoyed that the PCs have ventured in his great hall, but curious as to who they are and what they are doing in Broken Axe tribal lands.

If the PCs parley with Markuli, the chieftain reveals to them that the tribesmen of the Broken Axe are a proud and independent people, that they are allies of most other inhabitants of the Region, and that they need no outsiders to venture unescorted through their territory. Markuli does not like to talk about Grauki, the Red Horn clan, or the rebellion that led to the splitting of the Golden Axe tribe — for the wound of Grauki's treachery is still sore in the chieftain's heart. If the PCs question him on these matters, he becomes gruff and impatient. If the PCs persist, he orders his men to escort them out of their territory (in the corridor south of Room F36).

Though he does not ask for the PCs' help, he is willing to accept their aid if they offer to either fight the barghests that recently sacked Room F21 or hunt down manticores from another part of the dungeon. He is also happy to trade goods and information with the PCs.

If the PCs reveal to him that Grauki is plotting an attack against Rashmarik, he shrugs. If they mention to him that after their conquest of the rakshasa's lair, the Red Horns will undoubtedly attack the Broken Axe tribe, the chieftain listens to them with interest. Markuli, however, will not start a war unless his people are attacked first.

Encounter Condition: Fearless, Poor Footing 2

Tactics: Markuli willingly engages any who challenge him, flying into a rage and pulping the first opponent to stupidly oppose him. While his men fight well as a unit, the chieftain charges with his horns and moves in unpredictable patterns. To illustrate this, have Markuli attack a new opponent 25% of the time.

Treasure: Markuli's crown is made of solid gold and has been the property of all chieftains of the Golden Axe tribe since its founding, centuries ago. The crown now serves to identify the chieftain of the Broken Axe people. It is worth 300 gp, but tribesmen of the Broken Axe or Red Horns would pay up to five times its value.

The chieftain also wears a robe of blending and carries a vial of oil of darkness (3 doses) and a potion of magic vestment (5 doses). Additionally, Markuli holds the keys that unlock Room F15, F24, and F30 as well as the chest in Room F30.

The tapestry upon the south wall is of exquisite quality (worth 350 gp). Because it is the tribe's heraldic symbol, members of the Broken Axe or Red Horns would pay up to ten times its value.

EL: 11

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two barbarian levels to Markuli and add two minotaur guards. To decrease the challenge, remove two guards.

Powerful Charge (Ex): A minotaur typically begins a battle by charging at an opponent, lowering its head to bring its mighty horns into play. In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +10 attack bonus that deals 4d6+6 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

Rage (Ex): +4 to Str, +4 to Con, +2 on Will saves, –2 to AC for up to 7 rounds.

F40 THROUGH F43. NEST OF THE CRYOHYDRA

Rooms F40 through F43 are home of a powerful cryohydra. This section of the dungeon is still unclaimed, but a human fugitive named Darvil found his way here some twenty years hence. Darvil was a cunning and devious man who managed to survive by allying himself with various inhabitants of the surrounding Regions, notably with the goblins to the south.

Before he went into hiding in the dungeon, Darvil the Thief — as he was known — had stolen many objects. Though he traded most of these items with his neighbors to either befriend them or buy peace, he kept his most precious possession: The egg of a cryohydra.

When the hatchling came out of its shell, several months after Darvil's arrival, the thief nurtured it. With the passing years, the little cryohydra grew into a mighty monster, but it continued to regard Darvil as its parent and protector. When the human thief died of a bad case of pneumonia, the creature refused to leave its master. For months it stayed at his bedside, trying to revive the corpse.

When it finally dawned on the creature that its master was no more, it returned to its nest but refused to leave the Region and continued to visit its master's tomb daily. Since the arrival of the shadows in Room F41, the cryohydra was cut off from the chamber where Darvil's remains lie. It is now extremely angry.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	A portion of the ceiling falls near the PCs. The heavy stone shatters into a hundred pieces as it hits the floor, sending several fist-sized chunks of rock through the air. The PCs were far away enough to avoid damage, but the echoing sound of stone falling upon stone rings loudly throughout the area.
2–12	Nothing
13–14	A group of four shadows from Region E ventured into this place. Seeking only to destroy life, these loathsome fiends avoid light and they attack anyone coming in their way.
15	A greater shadow haunts this room. This devious undead remains hidden in the darkness, ready to ambush passersby.
16	Three Broken Axe minotaurs emerge from the warp gate in Room F40. They are searching the Section, hoping to find treasures they can bring home. They know that passing through the warp gate in Room F40 will eventually bring them to their own territory.
17	Two harpies from Morgul's Den unwittingly journeyed through a warp gate and found themselves in this Section. They use their captivating song to attract the PCs before savagely attacking.
18	The PCs stumble upon a trap.
19	The PCs stumble upon a trap.
	◆ Firetrap: CR 5; magical device; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (firetrap , 8th-level wizard, 8d6 fire, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

F40. DARVIL'S TOMB

The door leading into this chamber is wide open. The body is that of Darvil the Thief who died in his bed years ago. Both the corpse and the chests containing the thief's precious possessions are untouched.

A simple bed and two large wooden chests are the furniture in this room. Upon the huge polar bear's pelt covering the bed is the bony skeleton of what appears to be a human being. A decrepit brown leather vest, obviously useless, and rotted boots of black leather cover the bony remains. A tarnished sword lays beside the body.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Darvil apparently died in his sleep, long before anyone arrived. The minotaurs consider it a bad omen and leave the Room alone.

Encounter Condition: Diseased (cackle fever) 16, Stagnant Air

Tactics: PCs spending time in this Room run the risk of catching cackle fever. Have them make a Fortitude save every 30 minutes.

Treasure: The polar bear pelt on the bed is old and dried up, but still worth upwards of 200 gp because of the massive size of the specimen from which it was taken. Darvil's short sword is a masterwork item that needs polishing. Under the thief's body are masterwork lock picking tools as well as a battered leather pouch containing eleven moss agates (worth 15 gp each). It is actually a bag of holding (type 1), but the contents cannot be accessed in the dungeon.

The two chests in this Room are locked and trapped. A successful DC 15 Search check reveals the key to unlock both of them, which is tucked under the pine mattress and the wooden frame of the bed. Alternatively, a DC 25 Open Lock check will do the trick.

The first chest contains a simple poisoned needle trap and a fire trap. A tiny hole, barely visible upon the dark brown wood of the chest's lid, hides the mechanism that releases the needle as soon as anyone lifts the lid or fails to pick the chest's lock. This trap can be bypassed by picking a lock bypass on the back of the chest's lid, which is not easy.

The fire trap is nearly invisible, however.

♣ Fire Trap: CR 6; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (fire trap, 17th-level wizard, 1d4+7 fire, DC 19 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 40; Disable Device DC 29.

This chest holds three porcelain plates with blue elephant designs painted on them (worth 8 gp each), two finely made glass cups (worth 2 sp each), and a pitcher made of orange clay (worth 2 cp).

The second chest is bolted to the floor and rigged with a hail of needles trap, which fires needles from tiny holes upon the rounded lid. A bypass mechanism in the form of a square pressure plate at the bottom of the chest must be pressed in order to avoid the trap. Otherwise, the needles shoot out as soon as anyone opens the lid. Manuevering the pressure plate is delicate work and if the PC fails the Disable Device check by more than 10, the trap triggers.

This chest contains a monk's belt — which the thief took from the abbey of a monastery he once robbed — and Darvil's clear crystal warp gate key (Room F43). When this key is used in the black iron lock of any warp gate, the gateway opens in Room F43. The chest also holds 1,241 gp and a number of rounded gems (as if they had been dipped in acid).

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the blue whinnis on the poison needle trap with sassone leaf residue poison. To decrease the challenge, remove the blue whinnis poison from the poison needle trap.

F41. SHADOW INFESTED HALL

This great hall is filled with massive columns supporting the eighty-foot ceiling. A brooding darkness fills every corner of the room, and behind each of the columns the darkness moves constantly. An inexplicable cold fills the room as mist forms from your breath.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A pack of four shadows (hp 22, 19, 19, 17) claim this empty hall. Having fled from Region E, they have succumbed to a Room that touches a fracture piece of the realm of shadow. Though they have not encountered any beings in months, they keep to this Room, waiting for an opportunity to strike at the living.

The cold chill air is residue of the Room's fractured connection to the shadow plane. As a result, their touch is more caustic than most shadows (1d6+1) and they are harder to hit (miss chance 60%, +7 deflection bonus to AC). Lastly, they grow stronger with each touch, gaining from temporary hit points every time they drain Strength from a PC.

Tactics: This is a particularly vicious encounter and PCs without access to force magic or ghost touch weapons are at a disadvantage. The shadows hide behind the columns, waiting for all the PCs to enter before attacking. They target the slowest-looking PC, draining his Strength first. They target the strongest PC next, attacking from the shadows and taunting the PCs at every turn. They are not afraid to switch up opponents and draw attacks of opportunity, draining the PCs quickly for new spawn to aid their fight.

The shadows, luckily, do not leave the Room to pursue fleeing PCs, but do fight outside the Room if spellcasters throw magic at them from beyond the threshold.

Treasure: If the PCs cast detect magic or detect evil, a strong aura radiates from the columns and northwest corner of the Room. While no specific magic radiates, the source of the cold is evident. A DC 25 Knowledge (the planes) check or a DC 30 Spellcraft check reveals that the Room is indeed touching the plane of shadow. Something vile must have ruptured this Room and made its way out... or in.

PCs touching the shadow rift directly gain 1 negative level for 1d4 hours. Touching it repeatedly results in additional negative levels.

PCs can seal the rift by casting break enchantment, consecrate, or dismissal, which slows its growth for 1 week. Short of powerful spells like banishment, planar binding, imprisonment, or miracle, however, nothing closes it forever. Good-aligned PCs and clerics understand the effect this will have on their campaign world and the DM should encourage them to make it right.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a greater shadow. To decrease the challenge, remove one shadow.

Strength Damage (Su): The touch of a shadow deals 1d6+1 points of Strength damage to a living foe. A creature reduced to Strength 0 by a shadow dies. This is a negative energy effect. Each time a foe's suffers Strength damage, the shadow gains 5 temporary hit points.

Create Spawn (Su): Any humanoid reduced to Strength 0 by a shadow becomes a shadow under the control of its killer within 1d4 rounds.

Skills: Shadows have a +2 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks and a +4 racial bonus on Search checks. * A shadow gains a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks in areas of shadowy illumination. In brightly lit areas, it takes a -4 penalty on Hide checks.

F42. NEST OF THE CRYOHYDRA

The secret door on the north wall can be uncovered with a successful DC 24 Search check, revealing a thin panel fashioned from the same stone as the wall. This panel must be pushed two inches inside the wall with a DC 15 Strength check. Within one round, it sinks into the floor, opening the way to the narrow corridor beyond. After one minute, a hidden mechanism pushes the wall panel back into place, but another DC 15 Strength check from the PCs is required to put it back into its proper place, otherwise it becomes more noticeable (DC 15 Search check) since there is now a nook in the wall. This secret door has not been used in years.

Heavy footsteps echo from the darkness in this hall before suddenly dying out, and a noticeable chill emanates from this area. A closer inspection of this cross-shaped chamber reveals a large pile of debris composed of crushed rocks, broken stone rubble, pieces of dried wood, as well as the fragments of countless bones. The pile dominates the southern nook of the chamber and much of the debris is scattered in the center of this room.

The bodies of five goblins lie on the floor of the hall's western nook. The corpses are in poor shape and it is obvious by the wounds on their bodies they died violently. A thin crust of ice covers the corpses.

What truly catches the eye, however, is the huge creature standing in the middle of the room. Its eight vicious-looking reptilian heads on top of long serpentine necks bear eyes of the palest blue. The fanged mouth of each of the heads snarls or bites the air, a thin cloud of white mist issuing from it.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: An eight-headed cryohydra (hp 95) lives here. This creature ventured into this part of the dungeon eight years ago. Though it used to hunt in other parts of the dungeon, this fiend seldom leaves this Room, preferring to let its prey come to it rather than struggle through the narrow corridors. Since the shadows took control of Room F41, it avoids this place, opting instead to hunt the goblins from the southern Region.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Cold

Tactics: In battle, the cryohydra uses its cold breath weapon to harm as many opponents as it can before closing in on them with its many bite attacks. It releases jets of cold as often as it can, targeting the largest PCs first.

Treasure: Searching the massive cryohydra's nest takes the better part of an hour, as PCs need to move stone rubble and crushed pieces of wood. A successful DC 20 Search check reveals a bronze scepter imbedded with three fiery jewels as well as 1,286 sp, 953 gp, and 147 pp. Its last owner was a hobgoblin who ventured and perished in the dungeon six years ago. As an item, the scepter is worth upwards of 1,000 gp, but any one who succeeds at a DC 35 Appraise check realizes the item is in fact worth five times this amount.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, give the cryohydra two additional heads. To decrease the challenge, remove the cryohydra's breath weapon.

✦ Eight-Headed Cryohydra: CR 9; Huge magical beast; HD 8d10+43; hp 95; Init +1; Spd 20 ft., swim 20 ft.; AC 18, touch 9, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +8; Grp +20; Atk +11 melee (1d10+4, 8 bites); Full Atk +11 melee (1d10+4, 8 bites); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft.; SA Breath weapon (cold); SQ Darkvision 60 ft., fast healing 18, low-light vision, scent; AL N; SV Fort +11, Ref +7, Will +4; Str 19, Dex 12, Con 20, Int 2, Wis 10, Cha 9.

Skills and Feats: Listen +7, Spot +8, Swim +12; Combat Reflexes, Iron Will, Toughness, Weapon Focus (bite).

Breath Weapon (Su): Cryohydras can breathe jets of frost 10 ft. high, 10 ft. wide, and 20 ft. long. All heads breathe once every 1d4 rounds. Each jet deals 3d6 points of cold damage per head. A successful Reflex save halves the damage. The save DC is 10 + 1/2 hydra's original number of heads + hydra's Con modifier.

Cold attacks cannot prevent a cryohydra's stump from growing new heads (since a cryohydra has immunity to cold), but 5 points of fire damage does.

Fast Healing (Ex): Each round, a hydra heals damage equal to 10 + the number of its original heads.

A hydra has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

Feats: A hydra's Combat Reflexes feat allows it to use all its heads for attacks of opportunity.

F43. SCORCHED WARP GATE ROOM

This chamber once held a great collection of furniture, but it is obvious that most of what was here was burnt long ago. A great pile of scorched metal bars and plates as well as the remains of blackened wood dominate the room. Underneath it is a layer of gray ash covering most of the floor.

A thick layer of soot darkens the stones from the walls and high ceiling. A closer look at the south and west walls reveals metallic hinges on one side of the empty archways, suggesting that doors once stood there. The door in the center of the north wall is simple but scorched. A small black lock is set just above its knob.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There are no footsteps anywhere in this Room and the ash-covered floor is a more or less an even and undisturbed surface.

Long ago, a group of minotaurs from the Golden Axe tribe journeyed into this portion of the dungeon and encountered a pack of barghests. After a terrible battle, they defeated the fiends but several minotaurs fell in combat. Using the many wooden chests they had emptied while looting the place as well as the two reinforced doors from this Room, they built a great funeral pyre. While the bodies of their comrades were incinerated, they left the area using the warp gate.

The door in the center of the north wall is a warp gate. It is unlocked and cannot be locked by any means, since the black iron lock upon it is made to accommodate the special crystal keys that simplifies travel through the many warp gates of the Region. Roll on the Warp Gates: Random Locations table to determine into which Room the gate leads. If Room F43 is rolled, then the warp gate opens in the small empty Room north of Room F43 (just as a normal door would) and closes automatically once the PCs cross it. Opening the warp gate from this side also requires a roll on the Warp Gates: Random Locations table, so PCs venturing into the small Room to the north might not be able to return to Room F43 (unless another result of Room F43 is rolled on the table).

The smaller chambers to the north and south are empty, the walls covered in mold and sepsis. The air is stale.

Tactics: After the PCs spend 30 minutes in this Room, roll for a Random Encounter, ignoring minotaur encounters every other roll.

Treasure: PCs searching the debris find the burnt skulls and bones of three minotaurs as well as three darkened and damaged greataxes. A DC 30 Search is required to find the treasure. Under the bony remains is a small golden amulet, undamaged by the flames. It is a simple trinket with the face of a bull that belonged to one of the fallen minotaurs here. The amulet is worth 50 gp, but because the minotaur was a hero of the later days of the Golden Axe tribe, any member of this tribe or the Red Horn clan would pay up to ten times this amount for it.

F44 THROUGH F50. THE LAIR OF THE SPHINX

Arnarah, a cunning gynosphinx, controls Rooms F44 through 50. Though this creature works alone, Arnarah relies on several traps to protect her territory. Her main goal is to help maintain the peace established in this Region, as she benefits from it more than anyone. Back when the members of the Golden Axe minotaur tribe were a united people, all the inhabitants of the Region dreaded their raging raiders and everyone fought for a small piece of the labyrinth where they struggled for survival. What many people do not realize, however, is that Arnarah is one of the architects of the relatively stable peace that rules the Region.

Arnarah, like most of her kind, is fond of intellectual challenges, such as riddles and puzzles. She is also a cunning trader, always ready to bargain for service or treasure. When she met Durtenian Vaielle, a devious elven wizard, the two of them instantly shared a bond that few creatures could understand. For months they worked together to secure Arnarah's territory and make peace with their immediate neighbors: a powerful flight of harpies. In exchange, the gynosphinx agreed to provide the wizard with the protection he needed.

Eventually, Arnarah won the wizard's confidence. Durtenian Vaielle then revealed to Arnarah he had in his possession an item that would allow him to trade bodies with any creature he wished. Though he had not yet tried out the device, he yearned to use it. Arnarah agreed to help him do so. The gynosphinx locked Durtenian in a cell and he began to experiment with the magical item. The wizard then took control of the bodies of one creature, then another, and then a third. Each time, the wizard learned more information on this Region of the dungeon — information he shared with his ally Arnarah. When he entered the body of Grauki, a powerful minotaur who had a strong voice in the Golden Axe tribe, Durtenian began to understand the intricacies of minotaur politics. He returned to his body a month later and, with Arnarah, devised a plan to ensure the minotaur tribe caused no further trouble to the inhabitants of the Region.

Durtenian took control of Grauki's body once more. This time, he planned to stay for months. While in control of Grauki's flesh, the wizard aligned himself with several minotaurs who were discontent with the way the Golden Axe tribe was run. He planted the seed of a revolt that would trigger a civil war. This happened a decade ago and Durtenian never returned to his own body while Grauki remains a prisoner in Arnarah's prison.

Though she has not seen her ally in years, Arnarah is convinced Durtenian continues to ensure peace in the Region. She welcomes anyone who can share riddles, intrigues, or treasure with her, but does not tolerate anyone who is after her wealth or her territory.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	A lone goblin from Region B found its way into Arnarah's lair. He is lost and terrified, running at the first sight of the PCs. He pleads for his miserable life if caught.
2–12	Nothing
13	A pack of eight goblins led by Agnr the Bold (Rog 5), ventured into this Section. They carry 2d20 gp each and hope to trade for information on the Region and its inhabitants.
14	Two harpies ventured into Arnarah's lair. They are acting on their own and hope to uncover the legendary cache in which the gynosphinx holds her most precious treasure.

An intricate design composed of a white circle with three triangles of various shades of green cover the floor of this hall. Arnarah inscribed this symbol upon the floor and the spell is triggered when someone passes over it.

♣ Symbol of Sleep Trap: CR 7; magic device; touch trigger; no reset; spell effect (symbol of sleep, 18th level wizard, DC 22 Will save negates); multiple targets (all creatures within 60 ft.); Search DC 31; Disable Device DC 31.

The PCs come across strange runes of a deep blue in the shape of half a dozen electrical bolts. This rune was placed upon the wall, some six ft. from the floor. The spell is triggered when someone either touches or reads the rune.

♣ Symbol of Pain Trap: CR 6; magic device; special trigger; no reset; spell effect (symbol of pain, 18th level wizard, DC 22 Will save negates); multiple targets (all within 60 ft.); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30.

Crude yellow runes in the form of a human skull split in two marks the wall here. This symbol insanity, created by Arnarah, is triggered as soon as anyone looks at it.

20

A flock of four hieracosphinx found its way into the dungeon. These evil fiends learned from other inhabitants found out about Arnarah and their goal is to take over her lair and treasure.

F44. CELL BLOCK

On either side of this hallway are five small cells. The doors of each of these cells are made of stone reinforced with iron plates that are rusting. Small openings with three metal bars set into them are cut in each of the doors.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Centuries ago, these cells held minor demons, but the creatures escaped imprisonment and only one of the cells is currently in use. The others are empty save for a bit of dried hay sprawled upon the cold stone floors.

Each of the five cells to the west comprises a secret door fashioned by a master mason years after the demonic fiends escaped. These secret doors are rough. They allow the access to the corridor and Rooms.

Each secret door is a simple sliding panel resembling the surface of the surrounding wall. Though made of stone, each panel is hollow and can be easily opened. Since the hinges upon which each panel was set are hidden into the stone of the surrounding wall and made to support the weight of the secret door, they are extremely difficult to spot and the panels drop back into place the moment they are released. A DC 30 Spot check is required to notice the subtle cracks around the panels.

The northernmost cell on the east side holds the body of Durtenian Vaielle (hp 39), the elven wizard who took control of Grauki the Minotaur and founded the Red Horn clan. Durtenian's flesh now holds the spirit of Grauki, and the minotaur has been imprisoned here for the past ten years. Grauki is a broken man, driven mad by the shock of waking up in the body of a weakling elf.

Grauki has not talked to anyone in years. Though Arnarah brings him nourishment, she never addresses him and obstinately refuses to heed his pleas. Grauki eats what he is given, but he does so in a mechanical fashion, as though he had no real idea what is doing. Grauki has no idea of what happened to him or his people. All he knows is that he found himself in this body and this prison one day, and never awoke from this nightmare.

If the PCs talk to him, Grauki is grateful. He smiles in a befuddled manner, revealing blackened teeth, and tears pour from his eyes. All he says, however, is "I am not an elf." He repeats this statement, (in Elven) as if it would explain everything.

Grauki's current Intelligence score is reduced to 2. Restoration or similar spells are required to restore his Intelligence. Such spell will also cure him of his insanity. As he regains control of his mind (his original Intelligence score was 13), he understands what must have happened to him. He then explains to his saviors that he is Grauki, an important member of the Golden Axe tribe (he does not know the tribe split in two factions) and that he is actually a minotaur warrior. He also reveals he once dreamt he was trapped in this body and lived through a similar imprisonment for what seems like the better part of a month. He quickly regained his senses and returned to his reality after this first experience (when Durtenian first took control of his body). However, he returned here, long ago, and since then remained a prisoner of both the cell and elven body.

Grauki goes on to explain that both times he "awoke" in this body, he was holding a glowing jewel. He then proceeds to uncover the item from the stack of hay serving as his bed and offers it to the PCs (see treasure below). Grauki also explains the warden of this prison is a strange creature with the head of a humanoid and the body of a lion with feathery wings. He plans to take his vengeance upon this creature.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4, Unhallowed 2

Tactics: In his present condition, Grauki is unable to fight. If attacked, he cowers in a corner and sobs.

Treasure: The magical jewel that allowed Durtenian Vaielle to trade bodies with Grauki the Minotaur is hidden under a layer of hay. A successful DC 15 Search check is enough to uncover it. The jewel is shaped as a diamond the size of a troll's fist. It burns with an inner red glow, but the surface of the item is as clear as diamond.

This jewel is a diamond of trading souls, a potent magical item that allows its user to transfer his mind and soul into the body of a creature of his choosing while conveying the spirit of this creature into the user's body. This powerful magic item is usable once every week.

While triggering the diamond of trading souls' magic, the user does not need to know his target or its location. Instead, he uses the jewel to probe an area of one mile plus a number of miles equal to the user's intelligence bonus (if any). Though the user does not see the creatures around him, he gets a feel for their bodies and can accurately evaluate their healthiness. Once a target is chosen, it is allowed a Will saving throw (10 + 1/2 the user's caster level + his Intelligence modifier) to prevent the transfer. A failed save means the user takes control of the target's body while the target awakens in the user's body and suffers from 1d4 points of damage to his Intelligence score. A creature forced into an alien body over long periods of time takes an additional point of damage to his Intelligence score for each year that passes, regardless of the conditions in which he lives.

If the victim makes his saving throw, the user of the diamond fails to take control of his target's body. Furthermore, the user of the magical diamond takes backlash damage equal to 1d4 points of Charisma. Charisma score points lost from the diamond's backlash effect return at a rate of 1 per day.

The user of the diamond of trading souls can remain in control of the stolen body for as long as he wishes. He can return to his own body at anytime, even if the creature with which he traded bodies died while in control of his flesh. If the user's body was destroyed, however, he is now trapped within his new form.

While in the stolen body, the wielder of the diamond of trading souls retains his mental abilities (Intelligence, Wisdom, and Charisma), his class abilities (such as the ability to rage or cast spells), his base attack bonus, his base saves, and his skill ranks. He takes on the physical abilities (Strength, Dexterity, Constitution) of the new body as well as any racial abilities provided by his new flesh. However, as an additional curse to the victim, he now speaks the language of the body he is in and loses his old language. The bearer of the diamond can speak any language he wishes.

The diamond of trading souls allows the transfer of only one spirit at a time. While in use, its heart burns with a fiery red glow. When not in use, it appears as a big but otherwise ordinary diamond (which emanates a powerful magic aura). If the diamond of trading souls is destroyed while the spirit of the user is inside another being's body, he is trapped within this form permanently. This minor artifact is usable a maximum number of times per month equal to the user's Intelligence modifier (minimum of once per month).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 3 barbarian levels to Grauki and make him hostile towards anyone entering his cell. To decrease the challenge, assume Grauki lost his will (-5 circumstance penalty to all Will save) and his ability to rage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed. [Grauki retains this ability as he still thinks as a minotaur.]

Rage (Ex): +4 to Str, +4 to Con, +2 on Will saves, -2 to AC for up to 4 rounds.

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Grauki can no longer be flanked. This defense denies a rogue the ability to sneak attack the barbarian by flanking him, unless the attacker has at least four more rogue levels than the target has barbarian levels.

F45. FAKE DOOR

Though this door looks like any other in the Region, it is in fact part of the wall and impossible to open.

A large alcove is set in the northern wall of this hallway, halfway between both ends of the corridor. The alcove is four ft. deep, ten ft. wide, and ten ft. high. There is a door in the middle of the alcove, with a thick archway of dark stone surrounding it. Runic symbols are painted upon the door, forming an uneven semi-circle with three moon-like dots hovering in its midst.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A runic pattern is imprinted upon the floor, mimicking the non-magical runes on the door. A DC 31 Search check is required to see the runes, however, lest the PCs trigger them. The runes are, in fact, a powerful symbol of fear, which is triggered as soon as anyone touches the door.

Encounter Condition: Fear 22

Tactics: The symbol of fear trap is part of the dungeon and resets after 1 minute.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add an acid fog spell to the symbol of fear trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the symbol of fear trap with a bestow curse trap.

F46. FALLING COLUMNS

The PCs must succeed at a DC 35 Search check in order to notice the concealed door. A DC 30 Knowledge (architecture and engineering) check reveals that magic was used to create the wall and door, meshing the two into a near-solid frame.

The concealed door pushes open, just like any other in the dungeon complex, revealing a rectangular chamber with four massive square columns dominating the place. The four pillars are made of gray stone and stand thirty ft. high — twenty short of the ceiling above.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This four massive columns are trapped and crumble as soon as anyone touches them. Similarly, a PC standing in the dead center of the Room also triggers the trap.

♣ Collapsing Columns Trap: CR 8; mechanical; touch trigger; manual reset; Atk +15 melee (6d6, four stone blocks); multiple targets (up to four targets within the area; one for each of the columns); Search DC 33; Disable Device 39. This trap combines the effect of four CR 4 collapsing column traps.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 2, Poor Footing 3

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A DC 30 (40 if the columns collapsed) Search check reveals a small hallow stone at the base of each column that once held sacred text and powers. One of them still holds a scroll of scrying. However, the language of the scroll prevents it from being translated into a spellbook. Read magic, however, allows the PC to read and cast the scroll.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the collapsing columns trap with a crushing wall trap causing 18d6 crush damage. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the collapsing column trap to 3d6.

F47. FLOODING ROOM

The four doors leading into this Room are open.

A tall column stands in the middle of this otherwise empty room, supporting the fifty ft. ceiling. The column is marked with countless tiny holes, but otherwise seem like any other. Four doors, one upon each wall, are the only other features of this room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This chamber is rigged with a complex mechanism that automatically closes and locks all doors 4 rounds after anyone sets foot upon its floor. At the same moment, water pours from the countless holes in the column, filling the Room in four rounds. The Room remains flooded for two minutes before eight tiny trap doors in the floor (DC 30 Search check to notice) open to release it. It takes two rounds for the water to exit the Room.

PCs caught within the flooded Room may try to break the doors or pick the locks with a successful DC 30 Open Lock check. The doors automatically reopen as soon as there is no more water in the Room.

Arnarah relies on this mechanical trap — which was devised by the celestials who originally built the dungeon — to protect her private lair. She knows about the trap and always flies over the floor of this Room.

Encounter Condition: Flooded

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the flooding Room trap with a burnt orhur vapor trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the flooding Room trap with a 30-ft. deep camouflaged pit trap.

F48. ARNARAH'S PRIVATE CHAMBER

This large hall is sumptuously decorated. The walls are covered with golden rose and aquamarine colored silken drapes. A massive bed covered with olive woolen blankets in disarray lies in the northwest corner while a large iron coffer is visible in the southwest corner.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Arnarah the gynosphinx (hp 69) resides here. Though she might not be happy to see a band of rugged adventurers barging into her private abode, Arnarah is more than willing to talk to the PCs. She is especially intrigued by the puzzles, riddles, and various mind-games the heroes play, but she is also interested in getting her hands on more diamonds and opals.

Arnarah is also curious about the affairs of the Region and is more than happy to trade information with the PCs. If she learns the PCs met the minotaurs, she inquires about Grauki, the leader of the Red Horn clan (controlled by her elven wizard ally for the last decade). Though she speaks in riddles and never gives a direct answer, she tells the truth when she speaks — or at least tells what she believes to be the truth.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4, Fear 18, Spell Resistance 18

Tactics: In combat, Arnarah attacks the less armored foes first, pouncing and raking her opponents at every chance she gets. If things turn sour, she attempts to make good her escape by flying down the southern corridor and swiftly moving through Room F47.

Treasure: The large iron coffer in the southwest corner holds a small portion of Arnarah's treasure. The chest is unlocked but trapped with a symbol of persuasion spell, which is triggered as soon as anyone touches the lid of the chest upon which it is inscribed. The runes are three straight green lines separated by thick blue dots.

The coffer contains a large bag with 5,531 gp and eighteen jars filled with mercury, phosphorous, and powdered diamond and opal worth a total of 22,000 gp. Arnarah uses these expansive material components to maintain many of the magical traps protecting her lair.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the HD of Arnarah to 16. To decrease the challenge, make her male, instead.

Once per week a gynosphinx can create a symbol of death, a symbol of fear, a symbol of insanity, a symbol of pain, a symbol of persuasion, a symbol of sleep, and a symbol of stunning as the spells (caster level 18th), except that all save DCs are 22 and each symbol remains a maximum of one week once scribed. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

F49. PAINTED HALLWAY

A narrower section separates this wide hallway in its center. Four doors — two at the northern end and two in the south — are visible, but it is the multitude of paintings decorating its walls that catches one's attention. Though the paintings are crude, it is clear they represent animals, mythical beasts, and humanoids. The painters who decorated these walls used a number of different materials and techniques, making the chamber a truly remarkable work of art in itself.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This large hall was painted by several generations of goblins, hobgoblins, minotaurs, and other creatures that at one time or another dwelled in this section. Though it is impossible to discern the earlier paintings from the later ones, it is obvious that several artists worked on these walls and that it took them decades to accomplish the countless designs depicted here.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: This territory marks the beginning of Arnarah's lair and the central part of it (where it is narrower) is trapped with a magical device created by the elven wizard Durtenian Vaille. Anyone stepping upon this portion of the floor automatically triggers the magical trap.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge, double the effect of the lightning bolt trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the lightning bolt trap with a glyph of warding (blast) trap.

F50. TREASURE CACHE

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This secret Room is where Arnarah hides her most precious possessions. She relies on one of the most finely crafted secret doors in the Region as well as on her potent magic to protect her valuables. A portion of the wall here is actually a panel that can be pushed open with a successful DC 21 Strength check. A DC 40 Search check is required to notice the subtle indentations revealing what this portion of the wall truly is.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Anyone passing through the archway leading into this Room triggers the potent magical trap the gynosphinx placed here. Subtle silvery runes in the form of small crosses are visible just inside the archway.

⚡ Symbol of Pain Trap: CR 6; magic device; touch trigger; no reset; spell effect (symbol of pain, 15th-level wizard, DC 18 Will save negates); multiple targets (all creatures within 60 ft.); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30.

Treasure: This Room holds hundreds of useless bones, which Arnarah fervently collects. The bones come from the various creatures the gynosphinx defeated over the years and includes several humanoid skeletons.

There are several small pieces of jewelry here worth a total of 2,410 gp as well as 843 cp, 351 sp, and 84 gp. These are scattered around the Room under the countless bones. Three glass vials containing holy water as well as four different flask holding a potion of owl's wisdom (3 doses), a potion of true strike (5 doses), a potion of lesser restoration (2 doses), and a potion of water breathing (2 doses) can also be found here.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add an incendiary cloud to the symbol of pain trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the symbol of pain trap with a black tentacles trap.

F51 THROUGH F68. RED HORN CLAN TERRITORY

Rooms F51 through F68 are controlled by the Red Horn minotaur clan. Though the members of this group were part of the Golden Axe tribe, their leader Grauki initiated a revolt that led to a split.

Fifteen years ago, the people of the Golden Axe ruled supreme. They came to the labyrinth-like Region in large numbers and quickly took control of it. Their dominion was short-lived, as Grauki and his rebels turned against their people. After a bloody conflict, two factions emerged. Those who remained loyal to their chieftain became known as the Broken Axe and those who followed Grauki became the Red Horns.

What few people realize, however, is that Grauki was not himself when he led the revolution which culminated in splitting up the once glorious tribe. An elven wizard named Durtenian Vaille used a powerful magical item to take control of the barbarian's body. He planted the seed of the revolution to insure he and his ally, Arnarah the Gynosphinx, would find peace in their time. The elven wizard also found allies in Rashmarik, a mighty rakshasa, and Saria the Medusa. With their help, he successfully initiated a conflict that changed the face of the Region.

Durtenian's plan worked well, for the split up of the Golden Axe tribe led to the relative peace all inhabitants of the Region now enjoy. After the revolution, Durtenian — still inside the body of Grauki the Minotaur — negotiated peace between the Red Horns and the Broken Axe tribe as well as with several of the neighboring factions. Because he enjoyed his new body so much (as well as his privileged position as leader of the Red Horns), the elven wizard remained in the minotaur's flesh — permanently. He now leads what he considers his people.

The Red Horn clan is currently split into two main groups. The first and most important group is using Rooms F51 through F62. These minotaurs are under the direct leadership of Grauki the Minotaur (no one knows Durtenian has taken over the barbarian's body). The second group, which is much smaller, dwells in Rooms F63 through F68 and is cut off from the rest of their peers. Gartuk, Grauki's half-sister, currently leads them but they remain devoted to Grauki and the Red Horns. The Red Horns often journey from one part of their lair to the other, moving through Rashmarik's Hideout from Room F54 through F66.

F51. COMMON HALL

A large fire burns within a deep round hole in the center of this wide hall. Several thick animal pelts, wooden stools, and low marble tables lie about the room, which is inhabited by five stern-looking humanoid creatures with bull-faces and long horns of a blood red shade protruding from their skulls.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Five minotaurs (45, 42, 38, 36, 33) from the Red Horn clan are currently using this common hallway. A closer look at their bovine faces reveals signs of age — tufts of white hair upon their chins, deep lines upon their foreheads and around their eyes, as well as sagging skin. These men are the eldest warriors of the clan and Grauki's most trusted advisors. Though their leader seldom seeks their counsel nowadays, these minotaurs are proud of their station and remain faithful to Grauki and the people of their clan.

If the PCs befriend them, the minotaurs reveal that their leader Grauki is acting strangely since the Red Horns won their independence a decade ago. Their powerful leader is more reclusive and impatient. They believe he is plotting another war, one that might win the Red Horn some much needed respect and glory.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: If battle ensues here, the minotaurs use their mighty horns to charge the PCs and take up arms to engage them in melee. They also shout warnings and insults, which might alert the inhabitants of Rooms F53 and F54. Allow the minotaurs in these Rooms a DC 25 Listen check to notice the ruckus of the battle. If they do, they come to investigate 1d4+2 rounds later.

Treasure: Each minotaur carries 2d8 gp in coins and small gems. Additionally, one of them wears a silver armband in the form of a coiled snake (worth 250 gp).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two barbarian levels to each minotaur. To decrease the challenge, remove two minotaurs.

☛ Minotaur: CR 4; Large monstrous humanoid; HD 6d8+12; hp 45, 42, 38, 36, 33; Init +0; Spd 30 ft.; AC 14, touch 9, flat-footed — (see text); Base Atk +6; Grp +14; Atk +9 melee (2d8+6/x2, greatclub) or +9 melee (1d8+4, gore); Full Atk +9/+4 melee (2d8+6/x2, greatclub) and +4 melee (1d8+2, gore); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Powerful charge 4d6+6; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., natural cunning, scent; AL CE; SV Fort +6, Ref +5, Will -5; Str 19, Dex 10, Con 15, Int 7, Wis 10, Cha 8.

Powerful Charge (Ex): A minotaur typically begins a battle by charging at an opponent, lowering its head to bring its mighty horns into play. In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +9 attack bonus that deals 4d6+6 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

F52. BARRACKS

Large cots made out of dried branches, woolen blankets, and ragged animal pelts are lined up upon the south and north walls of this wide hall. There is a door on the other side of the chamber, in the middle of the west wall. Besides it is a small wooden barrel and half a dozen empty mugs. Three powerfully built minotaurs wearing thick hide vests sit upon the cots, their flail at their side. Blood-red horns crown their bovine heads.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Though this Room houses six minotaurs, only three (hp 48, 42, 39) are currently in their barracks. They react to the PCs' presence fiercely, standing to their feet and taking up arms quickly. If the PCs are at threatening, they do not hesitate to attack.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: These warriors are prone to battle. The minotaurs fight well as a unit and maneuver to flank the PC, using both their powerful horns and their heavy flails in melee. They are fearless and determined, willing to die for one another or the clan. They gain a +2 morale bonus on a Willpower saves so long as at least two of them remain.

If the battle goes poorly for them, they summon aid. Alternately, Kartai (Room F53) can overhear the commotion and come to their aid in 1d4+1 rounds. To give the PCs a real challenge, he can arrive with two minotaur guards, bent on subduing and imprisoning the PCs.

Treasure: The barrel contains minotaur ale (see Room F7 for details). In addition, each minotaur carries 1d8 gp of value in assorted coins and gems. PCs searching the cots in this Room uncover 1d3 pelts of fine quality (worth 4d4 gp each).

The small Room to the west is the private chamber of Hrumi, the minotaur in charge of the protection of the Red Horn territory. Hrumi is currently on duty in Room F61. The door is unlocked and not trapped. Inside is a wide bed made of fine oak, with several boars' skins lying upon the bed. PCs succeeding at a DC 25 Search check find 6 rough carnelians (worth 40 gp each) and a leather pouch filled with tiny pieces of broken bones. Though the bones are worthless to most people, Hrumi would pay upwards of 50 gp to get them back (if the PCs steal them). They are fragments of the remains of each of the enemies he slaughtered in battle since he became a Red Horn.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three minotaurs. To decrease the challenge, impose a -2 circumstance penalty to their Initiative check and add Echoes 4.

☛ Minotaur: CR 4; Large monstrous humanoid; HD 6d8+12; hp 48, 42, 39; Init +0; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 9, flat-footed — (see text); Base Atk +6; Grp +14; Atk +9 melee (2d8+6/19-20, heavy flail) or +9 melee (1d8+4, gore); Full Atk +9/+4 melee (2d8+6/19-20, heavy flail) and +4 melee (1d8+2, gore); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Powerful charge 4d6+6; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., natural cunning, scent; AL CE; SV Fort +6, Ref +5, Will +5; Str 19, Dex 10, Con 15, Int 7, Wis 10, Cha 8.

F53. STOREROOM

The archway leading into this simple room holds no door. Inside, the chamber is filled with worn wooden crates and barrels. A muscular minotaur with horns painted in scarlet sits on one of the crates in the middle of the place.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Kartavi (hp 58) is in charge of protecting and distributing the provisions stored here. Kartavi is not particularly interested in the task appointed to him. He is easily bribed and eager to trade anything from the storeroom for gold, jewels, gemstones, or weapons.

If the PCs know about Grauki's true identity or plans, they might be able to convince Kartavi to rebel against him since the minotaur has no lost love for the leader or his clan. Kartavi's price, however, is the promise of a safe escort out of the dungeon. He knows the way, but cannot face the countless inhabitants alone.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: In battle, Kartavi targets the strongest foes first, using his mighty horns and sneak attack as often as he can.

If there is a combat here, allow Mirak (in Room F54) a DC 15 Listen check to notice the sound of the battle. If Mirak is made aware of the danger, she comes out of her Room and charges the PCs. Similarly, give the minotaurs in Room F51 a DC 25 Listen check to hear the ruckus. They come to investigate 1d4+2 rounds later.

Treasure: The store holds five barrels filled with minotaur ale (see Room F7 for details). One small crate holds half a dozen iron boxes containing bright red paint. In addition, Kartavi has a potion of cure moderate wounds (3 doses) and he yields a +1 bastard sword in battle. He also has 31 gp and 23 sp.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three rogue levels to Kartavi. To decrease the challenge, remove two rogue levels.

▲ Kartavi, Minotaur Rogue 3: CR 7; Large monstrous humanoid; HD 6d8+12 + 3d6+6; hp 58; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 16, touch 10, flat-footed — (see text); Base Atk +8; Grp +16; Atk +12 melee (1d10+7/19-20, +1 bastard sword) or +11 melee (1d8+4, gore); Full Atk +12/+7 melee (1d10+7/19-20, +1 bastard sword) and +6 melee (1d8+2, gore); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Powerful charge 4d6+6, sneak attack +2d6; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., evasion, natural cunning, scent; AL CE; SV Fort +6, Ref +5, Will +5; Str 19, Dex 10, Con 15, Int 7, Wis 10, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Bluff +4, Intimidate +9, Listen +7, Search +2, Sense Motive +6, Spot +7; Dodge, Great Fortitude, Power Attack, Track.

Powerful Charge (Ex): A minotaur typically begins a battle by charging at an opponent, lowering its head to bring its mighty horns into play. In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +11 attack bonus that deals 4d6+6 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

Sneak Attack: Kartavi's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the rogue flanks her target. This extra damage is 2d6. Should the rogue score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Evasion (Ex): Kartavi can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility. If he makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, he instead takes no damage. Evasion can be used only if Kartavi is wearing light armor or no armor. A helpless rogue does not gain the benefit of evasion.

F54. SMITH'S QUARTERS

This small room is lavishly furnished, with thick furs and intricately woven tapestries hanging from the walls and a large bed dominating the southeast corner. A monstrous humanoid female with pale brown fur and a bovine face is sharpening her long-handled sword. Her curved horns are glistening with scarlet paint.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Mirak (hp 85), a female minotaur barbarian and wife of Skirmmi the Smith, sits upon her bed. Mirak is not pleased to see the PCs barge in her private chamber. Unless they manage to talk her out of it, she attacks them.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: Mirak enters her barbarian's rage as soon as she decides to attack the PCs. She charges the most heavily armored of them with her horns before engaging the party in melee with her greatsword.

Treasure: A successful DC 18 Search check reveals a loose stone in the south wall. The stone can be pulled easily, revealing a small alcove. Within are a girdle, a green glass bottle, and a goatskin pouch.

The girdle is fashioned from thick brown hide. Its large buckle is round and made from solid yellow gold. It is a family heirloom handed down from generation to generation belonging to Skirmmi. The item is worth approximately 100 gp. Because it is a vestige of the glory days of the Golden Axe tribe, the minotaurs of both the Broken Axe tribe and the Red Horn clan would pay up to six times this value.

The bottle holds three doses of striped toadstool poison while the goatskin pouch contain two greenish brown garnets (worth 125 gp). In addition to this treasure and the weapons held by Mirak, the female barbarian wears a set of beautifully wrought bracers of armor +3 and a golden necklace with a pale blue coral stone (worth 385 gp). Though the three tapestries upon the walls are not worth much (20 gp each), the pelts here total a 135 gp value.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three barbarian levels to Mirak. To decrease the challenge, remove two barbarian levels and the bracers of armor.

In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +13 attack bonus that deals 4d6+6 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

F55. GRAUKI'S PRIVATE CHAMBERS

This large room is sumptuously decorated, with large pelts from several animals and magical beasts dominating the western wall. A wide table lies in the middle of the chamber and there is a large bed covered with furs placed in the middle of the north wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This large hall is the private abode of Grauki the Minotaur, chieftain of the Red Horn clan. Though no minotaur knows about the fact that Grauki's body is currently inhabited by Durtenian Vaielle, many among them have seen the minotaur barbarian wielding powerful magic and all fear their leader. As such, they avoid his chamber.

All three secret doors in this Room are well-made fake wall panels, which can be noticed with a successful DC 35 Search check. These panels slide into the wall when opened, disappearing completely. Though opening them is easy, pulling the wall panels back into position requires a successful DC 20 Strength check, otherwise a crack between the wall and panel remains visible.

The secret door upon the north wall leads to Room F57 and the elite guards in this chamber are well aware of it. If the PCs are noisy while in Grauki's chamber, allow these minotaurs appropriate Listen checks to notice them.

The secret panel in the south wall leads to the Red Horn chieftain's hidden bedchamber, which none among the clan knows exists. Durtenian uses this chamber to rest his minotaur body. This Room contains a large but otherwise simple bed covered with three thick winter pelts.

The third secret door, upon the west wall, opens into Durtenian's treasure chamber. This panel is rigged with a firetrap, which is triggered as soon as anyone touches the panel.

Tactics: There is a 15% chance that Grauki (Room F59) is here, relaxing or counting his treasure.

Treasure: The main chamber contains approximately 200 gp worth of various pelts. Upon the table are a crystal goblet (worth 65 gp) and a crystal jug (worth 135 gp) containing fine red wine.

The hidden bedchamber behind the secret panel in the south wall holds a pouch with several arcane material components (chosen by the DM). The pelts upon the bed are worth a total of 85 gp.

The trapped secret panel to the west leads into the treasure Room, which contains seven different clay jars carefully lined up upon a small table, as well as a large porcelain jar of exquisite quality. Inscribed on the jar are a number of intricate designs representing different savanna animals (lions, hyenas, zebras, etc.). The pale marks are still clearly visible on the pure white surface of the porcelain. The jar is worth 600 gp. Within it are 1,148 gp.

Two of the jars are protected by a fire trap. The trap consumes the contents (oil of magic weapon and oil of darkness in one; potion of reduce person and potion of protection from arrows 10/magic in the other) that Durtenian found years ago. The other five are not trapped and contain substances of Durtenian's making — a potion of bull's strength (3 doses), a potion of eagle's splendor (4 doses), a potion of mage armor (5 doses), a potion of protection from energy (cold) (3 doses), a potion of spider climb (6 doses), oil of flame arrow (7 doses), and oil of invisibility (2 doses).

♦ Fire Trap: CR 5; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (fire trap, 8th-level wizard, 1d4+8 fire, DC 17 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the fire trap with an acid fog trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the fire trap with a burning hands trap.

F56. TANNERY

The terrible smell of strong chemicals pervade in this room. Several wooden barrels filled with oily liquids and two low long tables take up most of this chamber. Upon one of the tables is the dark brown and black pelt of a large beast. On the other are several large pieces of knotted cotton, which are soaked with oil.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room serves as the tannery. The members of the Red Horn clan took control of it when they split from what is now the Broken Axe tribe. They sometimes agree to treat the pelts of the Broken Axe minotaurs in exchange for other goods or services.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: A successful DC 20 Knowledge (the planes) check or DC 25 Knowledge (nature) check reveals the skin is from a barghest.

Treasure: There is nothing of interest in this Room except for the three barrels filled with oily tannic acid. This substance is as volatile as oil. The knotted cotton pieces are used to tan the skins brought here and are drenched with this stuff.

F57. GRAUKI'S PERSONAL GUARDS' CHAMBER

A pair of stern minotaurs with curved red horns stand guard here. Both wear chain shirts covering their furred torsos and wield heavy flails of a dark gray alloy. Behind them are two massive three-story high bunks.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room is the bedchamber of Grauki's six personal bodyguards. Two minotaur barbarians (hp 61, 57) serving this function are currently in this chamber. While these men are here, they are charged with guarding Grauki's private chamber. They take this duty lightly, however, since there never were any incidents concerning intruders in their Chieftain's Room.

These men are loyal to Grauki because their chieftain treats them well and their station as elite bodyguards is well regarded among the Red Horns. They are aware of their chieftain's plan to initiate a war against the allies who allowed them to win the battle against the Broken Axe people years ago. Though they fear both the rakshasa and his medusa consort, these elite guards are ready to face battle and eager to acquire more territory.

Encounter Condition: Fearless, Poor Footing 2

Tactics: In combat, the minotaurs rage and charge the PCs, using their horns and heavy flails to maim or kill the strongest opponents first. Each round they wound a PC, they gain a +2 morale bonus to their Will saves. This bonus increases by +1 for every PC downed during combat. If all the PCs are killed, the bodies are brought before Grauki (Room F59) as prizes.

Allow Skrimmi the Smith (in Room F58) a DC 20 Listen check to notice the sound of battle, every round. If successful, he comes to aid the guards in 1d3+1 rounds. If he enters unnoticed, grant him a +2d6 sneak attack bonus during his first attack only.

Treasure: In addition to the weapons they carry, each minotaur has 2d8 gp worth of jewelry and small coins. One of them also wears a thick golden band upon his index (worth 45 gp). Stashed under the lower bunk beds are three heavy flails, one large steel shield, as well as a spiked chain of masterwork quality.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two barbarian levels to the minotaurs. To decrease the challenge, remove one minotaur.

Possession: Chain shirt, masterwork heavy flail.

F58. FOUNDRY AND SMITHY

The shimmering light of the fires burning within this hall illuminates most of the passageway leading to it. The wide chamber is split in two distinct parts separated with a deep pit in which tall bluish flames dance. On the eastern side of the hearth are a wide anvil, open water barrels, blacked metal cauldrons, as well as several hammers and large tools made to work metals set upon iron pegs in the wall. A massive stack of chopped wood dominates the western portion of the room, with a long-handled axe planted into one of the logs.

A tall minotaur with red-painted horns feeds the hungry fire with dry logs. The fur of his face is soaked with sweat. A thick and well-worn leather apron covers his torso and belly, and a large warrior's hammer dangles from his belt.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Skirmmi the Smith (hp 69) works in this Room. Skirmmi's job is to fashion and repair armaments for the Red Horn clan as well as the arms and armors used by the Broken Axe tribe. The smith thus provides one of the services the Red Horns trade with their minotaur neighbors. Though Skirmmi is not overly loyal to Grauki and his cause, he enjoys his station and the life he leads with the Red Horns.

Skirmmi is interested in acquiring rare and precious metals and pays a hefty sum to PCs willing to part with such materials.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 2

Tactics: In battle, Skirmmi utters a loud cry and charges the PCs with his mighty horns at every chance he gets. He prefers melee combat and wields his enchanted warhammer with deadly accuracy, focusing his attacks on the weakest PCs in order to reduce the number of his opponents as quickly as possible.

Allow the minotaur guards in Room F57, DC 18 Listen checks to notice the sound of battle and Skirmmi's battle cries. If they do, they investigate 1d3+1 rounds later.

Treasure: In addition to his tools and enchanted hammer, Skirmmi carries a pouch with 27 semiprecious stones (banded and eye agates, hematite and blue quartz gems, polished obsidian stones, irregular fresh water pearls) worth 10 to 50 gp each. He also has 51 pp, 32 gp, and 47 sp.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two fighter levels to Skirmmi and give him Weapon Specialization (warhammer). To decrease the challenge, remove one fight level and replace his magical warhammer with a masterwork item.

F59. GRAUKI'S THRONE ROOM

The small Room to the east is locked and trapped. Though Durtenian has the only key unlocking this door upon his person, a successful DC 26 Open Lock check will do the trick.

The wizard rigged the door with a magical device, which is automatically triggered as soon as anyone opens the door unless they find and unlock a tiny keyhole beside the door's archway. A DC 22 Search check is required to find this bypass mechanism and the lock must be unlocked with Durtenian's key or a successful DC 30 Open Lock check.

A terrible demon with black leathery skin, shiny silvery fangs, and long pincer-like fingers stands in the middle of this large hall. The demon's head is crowned by a singular horn rising from the back of its skull. Its stands like a statue, unmoving, and a closer look reveals its eyes were replaced with roughly cut red stones.

Behind the demon's body is a massive throne made of a hundred skulls from various humanoids. Upon this loathsome throne sits a powerfully built minotaur wearing woven scarlet robes. The minotaur's head bears the blood-red painted horns of his people and his shoulders are covered with a cloak of a dark brown shade.

Two minotaurs with similarly colored horns stand close to the one upon the throne. One is a male dressed in a silvery chain shirt and baring a large circular shield and a thick bladed falchion. The other is a female with a red cloak upon her back. She holds a long double-bladed sword. A dusty scarlet and silver marks inscribed on the wall behind her.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Durtenian Vaielle (hp 98), the elven wizard in Grauki's minotaur body (see Room F44 for more details), is the leader of the Red Horn clan. Though no minotaur knows his secret, both members of the Red Horn clan and Broken Axe tribe learned that the barbarian Grauki became wise in the ways of magic — which gave the Red Horns an edge in their revolution. During the war that broke the minotaurs in two factions, Grauki also enlisted the help of Rashmarik the Rakshasa and Saria the Medusa. The Red Horns are still paying tribute to them in order to repay their decade-old allies — a situation Durtenian hopes to remedy.

With the help of his personal bodyguards, which are vaguely aware of his plans, Durtenian hopes to muster enough forces to surprise the rakshasa and his medusan consort. He is currently toying with the idea of bringing his old nemesis, Markuli of the Broken Axe tribe, in on his scheme, but he does not wish to split any of the reward with him and his people. For now, the relative peace still holds, but soon Durtenian will initiate another war that will give the Red Horns even more power.

If the PCs parley with Durtenian, the cunning wizard in Grauki's flesh, he gauges their strengths and weaknesses. He also evaluates whether they might be interested in taking on a dangerous mission for him — disposing of the evil rakshasa and the medusa controlling a good section of this Region. Durtenian explains to the PCs that these two are responsible for countless deaths and that the Red Horns suffered terrible loss because of them (which is of course not true). The wizard hopes the PCs accept the mission so he can then take over the rakshasa's hideout.

If the PCs are interested in the mission, Durtenian is willing to give up half of his personal treasure (see Room F55), including several of his potions, as well as up to a quarter of what the Red Horns possess.

The two minotaur barbarians (hp 61, 55) are part of Grauki's personal guard (see Room F57 for details).

Encounter Condition: Cursed 4, Fear 18, Fearless, Poor Footing 2, Spell Resistance 18, Unhallowed 4

Tactics: If the PCs engage Durtenian and his guards in combat, the wizard lets his warriors engage the PCs in melee while he casts spells such as mage armor, mirror image, and shield to protect himself as well as lightning bolt, magic missiles, and acid arrow to harm the PCs. He avoids melee for as long as he can manage, using his horns if forced. If reduced to 50 hit points or less, he casts invisibility on himself and escapes.

Treasure: The demon figure in the middle of the Room was once a living babau, but Durtenian (in Grauki's body) used his potent magic to kill it, thus winning the loyalty and respect of the minotaurs who later followed him in his revolt against Chieftain Markuli of the Broken Axe tribe. The creature was stuffed with treated leather strips by an expert who passed away years ago. The fiend's body is in otherwise perfect condition, with a few scrapes here and there. A naturalist or specialist in the arcane art might pay upwards of up to 3,000 gp for this specimen, which weights 500 lbs.

The small treasure chamber to the east contains 16,783 gp worth of jewels, gems, and coins. A 5-ft.-by-10-ft. carpet of flying can also be found there. This treasure represent what the Red Horn clan accumulated since their founding. A DC 50 Search check is needed to find the wizard's spellbooks hidden under flagstones in the floor.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three wizard levels to Durtenian and replace the acid arrow trap with a summon monster IX trap. To decrease the challenge, remove the two bodyguards from the encounter and ignore the acid arrow trap.

F60. SECRET DOORWAYS

Like most rooms and corridors in this Region, shadows bathe this oddly indented hallway, which opens into narrower passages leading north and south.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Two secret panels on the north and south corridors are the notable features in this hallway. PCs searching the corridor must succeed at two separate DC 28 Search checks, one for each panel, to uncover the 5-ft. long grooves between the floor and bottom of the western wall in both of these places. To open these secret doors, one must place a hand inside a groove, grip the bottom of the door, and pull. A successful DC 15 Strength check is required to open the doorways.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: While the secret door in the northern corridor leads into Broken Axe clan territory, the one in the south hallway opens into a small Room. This chamber once held portions of the treasure of the Golden Axe tribe, but has long been emptied. A thin layer of dark gray ash is visible on the floor of this Room and its walls are dirty with soot. A minotaur died here three years ago and was cremated — per the ancient tradition of these people.

F61. GUARD POST

The design on the north door marks the beginning of the Broken Axe tribe territory.

The secret door at the eastern end of this Room can be spotted with a successful DC 30 Search check, which reveals a 5-ft. long narrow groove between the floor of the chamber and the bottom of the wall. To open this secret doorway, one must place a hand inside the groove, grip the bottom of the door, and pull with all his might. A successful DC 18 Strength check is needed to open the door.

Two minotaur females dressed in silvery chain armor and an old male dressed in battered plate mail stand guard here. The three creatures have long blood red horns and each holds a different weapon. The door on the north wall is painted with simple blue marks in the form of a broken axe.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Hrumi (hp 62), the minotaur in charge of the defense of the Red Horn lair, currently talks with two of the Chieftain's personal elite guards (hp 61, 58) posted here. Hrumi knows nothing about his leader's plan to invade their neighbors' hideout. All he cares about is the protection of Red Horns and their lair. The two female guards were ordered here by their Chieftain, who prefers to have elite warriors in this important intersection.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If combat breaks out here, these three warriors fight effectively together and attempt to flank their opponents in order to get tactical advantages over them. The female barbarians are quick to anger and charge their foes, while Hrumi is more careful and picky, preferring to target the spellcasters first.

If the PCs engage the guards here, the two minotaurs guarding Room F59 enters the fray 1d2 rounds after combat begins. Meanwhile, Durtenian Vaielle remains upon his throne and awaits their return.

Treasure: In addition to their weapons and armors, the two elite female guards carry 1d8 gp in assorted coins and small gems. Hrumi wears a thick golden torc around his neck. The item is shaped as a crescent moon and decorated with brass wirings in its center. It is worth upwards of 75 gp, but at least three times as much to any member of the Broken Axe tribe or Red Horn clan. Hrumi also carries a pouch with 42 gp worth of small gems.

F62. WARP GATE

The door upon the north wall is one of the ten warp gates in the Region. It is unlocked, but a small lock made from black iron is set above the doorknob. When this door is opened, roll on the Warp Gates: Random Locations table (at the beginning of this Region) to determine into which Room the gate leads. Like all other warp gates, once the PCs walk through it, its door automatically shuts behind them.

This room is devoid of light, furniture, and decoration. The door in the middle of the northern wall, though similar to the others in the Region, has a small black locking mechanism above the knob.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: If Room F62 is rolled on the Warp Gates: Random Locations table, the door opens as any normal door would, allowing the PCs to cross in the small chamber north of Room F62. Once they pass through the gate, however, it closes shut behind them. When opened from the inside of this Room, the warp gates leads the PCs to another random location, unless a result of Room F62 is rolled again, in which case they return to this Room normally.

Tactics: The minotaurs of the Red Horn tribe have yet to uncover the secrets of this warp gate or find its special key, but there are no special markings upon this door.

F63. STOREROOM AND TUNNEL

This hall is filled with half empty wooden crates and barrels. In the southernmost corner are several small piles of crushed stone and broken rock. A closer look indicates someone began to dig a tunnel into the hard bedrock there, but stopped after only three. Three pickaxes lie at the tunnel's entrance.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Several months ago, Grauki ordered his men to build a tunnel that would allow all members of the Red Horn clan to gain access to both parts of their territory without having to pass through either Broken Axe territory (through s F17 and F18) or take the long road through the Rakshasa Hideout, moving east, then south and west towards s F52, F53, or F54. Though the Red Horns have an agreement with both the Broken Axe people and Rashmarik the Rakshasa, they prefer to take the long journey through the rakshasa's realm rather than request favors from the Broken Axe tribe. Since some members of the Red Horns agreed to guard Rashmarik's hideout, the rakshasa lets them pass through as often as they like.

Despite Grauki's orders, the tunnel was never completed because his half sister Gartuk, who is in charge of s F63 through F68 never bothered to, preferring to win the trust and friendship of Rashmarik rather than blindly serve her half brother (see Room F65 for more details).

Encounter Condition: Tremors 17

Tactics: Though the Red Horn minotaurs on patrol in this area frequently pass through here, no one has been assigned to keep an eye on the items in this Room.

Treasure: The crates in this chamber contain various gear and articles of clothing: Six adventurer's outfits (for large creatures) and three large-sized cloaks, a set of climbing tools, 17 torches, 2 lanterns, 14 oil flasks, flint and steel, 3 empty sacks, as well as five bedrolls.

F64. GUARD POST

The markings upon the door indicate the beginning of the territory claimed by the Broken Axe tribe.

This wide hall connects three corridors together. It is cast in heavy shadow, but a closer examination reveals markings on the door at the end of the northern passageway. The dark blue marks are crude and shaped in the form of a long-handled axe broken in three parts.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Rrilik (hp 61), a female minotaur rogue loyal to Gartuk, guards this Room. She hides in the shadows, ready to strike anyone she does not instantly recognize as a member of the Red Horn clan or their allies (mainly the minotaurs of the Broken Axe tribe, Rashmarik, and Saria the Medusa).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Rrilik uses her sneak attack to surprise the PCs, emerging from the shadows behind the last member of the party. If the PCs spot her before she has a chance to strike, she charges the closest PC with her minotaur horns before lashing out at them with her long blades.

Treasure: Rrilik has no treasures other than the weapons she carries: A pair of +1 short swords, which in her hands seem as small as daggers.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two or three rogue levels to Rrilik. To decrease the challenge, turn her into a 2nd level rogue with a pair of masterwork short swords instead.

Powerful Charge (Ex): A minotaur typically begins a battle by charging at an opponent, lowering its head to bring its mighty horns into play. In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +12 attack bonus that deals 4d6+6 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

Sneak Attack: Rrilik's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the rogue flanks her target. This extra damage is 2d6. Should the rogue score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Evasion (Ex): Rrilik can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility. If she makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, she instead takes no damage. Evasion can be used only if Rrilik is wearing light armor or no armor. A helpless rogue does not gain the benefit of evasion.

Possessions: Two +1 short swords, masterwork studded leather armor, masterwork stone colored cloak (+2 to hide checks in this area of the dungeon).

F65. GARTUK'S PRIVATE CHAMBERS

A successful DC 30 Search check is required to notice the pale luminescence issuing from a tiny crack from under the 5-ft. wide wall panel opening into this Room. To open this 5-ft. square secret door, all one has to do is push it. The door opens with a loud screeching of the rusty hinges upon which it stands.

This room is accessed through a simple secret panel. The smell of spiced candles burning upon a low table is strong. The pale flames reveal a simple room dominated by a large pile furs in one corner and a weapons' rack made from dark copper in the other.

A muscular minotaur female, whose bovine face is crowned by a mighty pair of horns, sits upon a low stool near the table. The wavering light illuminates her reddish eyes. Her curved horns are of a scarlet shade, but the paint upon them has begun to chip and fall off, revealing many spots of the natural yellowish color.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Gartuk (hp 99), a female minotaur barbarian and Grauki's half-sister, lives here with her mate, Aryss. Officially, Gartuk is Grauki's most important ally. She is her half-brother's second in command and is in charge of running the affairs of the Red Horn clan in Rooms F63 through F68. Gartuk, however, does not trust her half-brother and secretly turned against him. Though she did not reveal her new allegiance — not even to her mate — and continues to act as Gartuk's second in command, she betrayed the chieftain of the Red Horns by revealing his treacherous plans to Rashmarik the Rakshasa. Gartuk also swore loyalty to Rashmarik, promising the rakshasa that the minotaurs under her command will follow her rather than her half-brother Grauki, especially once he makes his plan known to them.

Gartuk is convinced Grauki is not himself and that by learning the magic arts (as she believes he has) he became a weakling and lost his way. Moreover, her half-brother distanced himself from everyone around him since he won the revolutionary war that split the Golden Axe tribe in two. Gartuk believes it is folly to turn against their most powerful ally, that the rakshasa is too powerful to be beaten, and that initiating a war against him will mean the end of the Red Horns — who will then be in an extremely vulnerable position. She tried to convince Grauki that the Red Horn clan could not afford to lose more members, but her pleas fell on deaf ears.

With the help of her rakshasa ally, she plans to assassinate her half-brother and take over the leadership of the Red Horns. If the PCs parley with her, Gartuk tells them her half-brother Grauki is mad, that he will bring the Red Horns to their bitter end, and that someone must stop his plans. If the PCs are sympathetic to her troubles, she tries to hire them to assassinate her half-brother, offering up everything she owns in return as well as ten percent of all that the Red Horns possess.

Aryss, Gartuk's mate, is currently keeping an eye on the trainees in Room F68 and comes to her aid if he hears a commotion.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: If the PCs engage Gartuk in combat, she attacks them mercilessly until she kills or otherwise incapacitates them all or suffers a similar fate herself. She only summons other minotaurs (from Room F66 and F68) with her war cry if reduced to 50 hit points or less.

Once reduced to 35 hit points, she drinks her potion of haste, followed by her potion of cure moderate wounds. She continues to fight with fervor even when she has only 25 hit points remaining, at which point she rages and charges the PC who has been dealing the most damage to her. If reduced to 10 hit points or less, she shatters her bead of force.

Treasure: In addition to the weapons she carries, Gartuk has a ring of animal friendship, a gold armband shaped as a vulture's claw (worth 175 gp), and a pouch with a tiny silver comb of elven design in the form of a tree with straight branches pointing upwards (worth 580 gp), a bright green emerald (worth 1,500 gp), and a piece of obsidian colored bone taken from a demon she once slew (worthless). The furs upon her bed are worth upwards of 55 gp and the four scented candles could be sold for 1 gp each.

The weapons' rack holds half a dozen different arms — a greataxe, a halberd, a masterwork hand axe, a +1 javelin, a heavy pick, and a warhammer. Grauki and her mate use these weapons to hone their combat skills through rigorous training.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three barbarian levels to Gartuk. To decrease the challenge, remove two barbarian levels and impose a -2 circumstance penalty to her Initiative check for the first round of battle.

F66. COMMON HALL

A fire burns at the center of this large hall, despite the chill air coming from the room. The bovine faces of three minotaurs illuminate with a reddish glow from the fire, as they keep warm. Upon both the east and west wall, a multitude of crude cots are lined, and narrow corridor opens in the middle of the western wall.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Three minotaurs (hp 43, 39, 39) from the Red Horn clan are currently in this common hall, but obviously this place was built to house a dozen of them. The minotaurs in this Room are typical members of the Red Horn clan, trying to keep warm, despite the unnatural cold of the Room.

They enjoy the relative peace of the Region and are unaware of their leaders' scheming. Few minotaurs come here now, but they enjoy the solitude. The Extreme Cold Encounter of this Room starts at DC 5.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Cold², Fearless

Tactics: The minotaurs here do not expect invaders, much less combat. If the PCs surprise them, they suffer from a -4 penalty to their Initiative check for the first round of battle. In combat, they fight defensively at first, only raging, once they PCs have done 10 of more points of damage to them. Once enraged, they fight savagely and without mercy.

Allow Gartuk (in Room F65) and the minotaurs in Room F68 a DC 22 Listen check to hear the ruckus. If they do, they charge into the fray 1d4+1 rounds later.

The largest of the three minotaurs carries a vial of acid, which he uses after taking damage from a magical source (he believes the vial holds "magic" as well).

Treasure: Each minotaur carries 1d8 gp worth of assorted coin and gems. Some of the pelts in this Room are in good condition, but most are old and well worn. A total of 20 gp worth of good quality furs can be salvaged.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two minotaurs. To decrease the challenge, remove one and add Echoes 5.

F67. ANCIENT TREASURE ROOM

A DC 30 Search check is required to notice the hidden button, which is part of the continuous stone surface of the wall at the southern end of the hallway. When this button is pushed, the wall panel sinks into the western wall, disappearing entirely two rounds later and giving the impression the corridor normally opens into Room F67. Pressing the button again makes the wall to return into its proper place, thus sealing the Room once again.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is empty, but allow the PCs a DC 30 Search check to notice that sacks, chests, and the like once lined the walls. Dust and stains to the stone suggest that piles of gems and valuables were here.

Encounter Condition: Drafty, Extreme Cold

Tactics: The Extreme Cold is magical in nature and cannot be abated.

Treasure: The people of the Golden Axe tribe once used this place as a secondary treasure Room, but it is now empty.

F68. TRAINING ROOM

This series of small square rooms is cast in total darkness.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The members of the Red Horn clan use these Rooms to train their warriors to navigate simple mazes in search of prey as well as to fighting close quarters. Aryss (hp 56), Gartuk's mate, and two other minotaurs (hp 40, 37) are currently using these small chambers to hone their hunting skills, by releasing a live rat somewhere in the Room and finding it with nothing but their scent ability and one melee weapon. The winner releases the next rat and the game begins again.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness, Echoes 4, Fearless

Tactics: If the PCs unwittingly stumble upon one of them, the minotaur utters loud battle cries to alert his companions and charge them instantly. Their companions come to his help 1d4 rounds later. Allow the minotaurs in Rooms F65 and F66 a DC 25 Listen check to notice the commotion. If they do, these creatures join the combat 1d4+1 round later.

F69 THROUGH F71. ASSASSIN VINE JUNGLE

Rooms F69, F70, and F71, as well as the southern shore of the underground lava flow opening into Rooms and hallways, are covered with dense vegetation. PCs walking into this Section feel like they are journeying through a subterranean jungle. The floor is covered with roots, vines, and vegetation that hampers their every movement. Some of these vines cling to the walls, which are covered with a thin layer of green and yellow lichen. The humidity is oppressive.

The underground lava flow coursing through the Section makes the temperature of all Rooms therein unnaturally hot. The walls and ceilings capture moisture, which allows for the magical tropical plants to thrive.

Because the vegetation is so thick, PCs moving through these Rooms suffer from a –10 ft. penalty to their base movement while traveling upon the ground. Druids and other characters with the woodland stride ability are unaffected by this penalty.

A patch of assassin vines took control of this portion of the dungeon. The corpses of their victims can be found under their constricting arms. The minotaurs are well aware of their presence and avoid the lava river.

F69. ASSASSIN VINE LAIR I

The entire floor of this room is hidden under a tangle of vines and pale brown branches, intermingled with long strands of blue algae and a layer of foamy yellow moss. The southern portion of the room has no wall. Instead, it opens into the boiling lava of the underground river that courses through this section of the dungeon. A portion of the floor is covered with magma and a closer examination reveals this part sunk several feet beneath the level of the steaming stream.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Four assassin vines (hp 36, 34, 33, 31) live in this Room, attacking any living creature on sight. The creatures are swimming with disease and every strike against the PCs also results in the need for a Fortitude save. Each possesses a different disease.

Tactics: The assassin vines use their entangle ability and constrict attack to immobilize the PCs. Each time a PC is struck, he must save against one of four diseases. Even in death, the disease lingers on the corpses of the assassin vines for 1d3 days each. Treat each as a contact disease during this time.

✦ Demon Fever—Injury, Fortitude DC 18, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d6 Con [When damaged, character must succeed on another saving throw or 1 point of damage is permanent drain instead.]

✦ Slimy Doom—Contact, Fortitude DC 14, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d4 Con [When damaged, the character must succeed on another saving throw or 1 point of damage is permanent drain instead.]

Those standing within 5 ft. of the boiling lava flow when failing this saving throw fall into the deadly stream, taking 12d6 points of fire damage every round they are submerged (DC 30 Fortitude save half this damage).

The corridor to the west of this Room is destroyed. The same slippery moss found in Room F69 covers its sunken floor and its walls are destroyed, providing access to the subterranean lava stream coursing here.

Entangle (Su): An assassin vine can animate plants within 30 ft. of itself as a free action (Ref DC 13 partial).

The effect lasts until the vine dies or decides to end it (also a free action). The save DC is Wisdom-based. The ability is otherwise similar to entangle (caster level 4th).

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, an assassin vine must hit with its slam attack.

It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Blindsight (Ex): Assassin vines have no visual organs but can ascertain all foes within 30 ft. using sound, scent, and vibration.

Camouflage (Ex): Since an assassin vine looks like a normal plant when at rest, it takes a DC 20 Spot check to notice it before it attacks.

Anyone with ranks in Survival or Knowledge (nature) can use one of those skills instead of Spot to notice the plant. Dwarves can use stonecunning to notice the subterranean version.

F70. TRIGGERED PIT TRAP

The central portion of the floor of this room opens into a chasm, but a narrow ledge covered with debris allows travel from one door to the next. A closer look at the pit reveals it is a hundred ft. deep and has skeletal remains of several humanoids in it.

The northern wall of the room has caved-in, covering most of the ledge, making travel impossible. The wall is damaged but seems strong enough to hold the high ceiling above. Lava pours through the southwestern tip of the chamber.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Moving through the narrow ledge around this Room is easy, but requires the PCs move at half their speed to avoid slipping. A PC moving at a faster pace must succeed at a DC 16 Reflex save to avoid falling into the pit bellow (and take 10d6 of falling damage). The pit is an old trap triggered long ago. Its mechanism was later destroyed by the cave-in that occurred here and is now inoperable. The pit is 100 ft. deep and requires a DC 22 Climb check to escalate.

Tactics: Dead vegetation lines the grooves of this Room, showing where assassin vines once bred. Treat the slimy doom disease in this Room as inhaled. PCs remaining in this Room for more than 5 minutes are required to make a Fortitude save. Every 15 minutes thereafter, another save is required.

✦ Slimy Doom—Inhaled⁺: Fortitude DC 14, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d4 Con [When damaged, the character must succeed on another saving throw or 1 point of damage is permanent drain instead.]

Treasure: At the bottom of the pit are the skeletons of five gnolls, the tip of five heavily rusted spears, a rusty falchion, and the remains of a rotten wooden shield. None of these weapons are unusable, but scattered among the bones and rusted iron the PCs can uncover 42 sp and 12 gp.

F71. ASSASSIN VINE LAIR II

Thick vegetation covers the floor. A tangled mess of vines dominate the Room next to an area several feet from the boiling lava that poured into the chamber.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The four walls of this Room were not affected by the cave-in that damaged this section of the dungeon, but the floor sank to a fifteen-degree angle and boiling lava covers its southwest portion.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Diseased⁺, Extreme Heat, Fearless, [Flooded], Hazardous Footing 16, Poor Footing 2

Tactics: The assassin vine attacks the PCs as soon as they set foot in the Room, grabbing the first unaware PC with its entangle ability. This assassin vine is so contagious, each time a PC is struck, he must save against two of four different diseases. Even in death, the disease linger on the corpse of this assassin vine for 1d6 days. Treat each as a contact disease during this time.

✦ Demon Fever—Injury: Fortitude DC 18, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d6 Con [When damaged, character must succeed on another saving throw or 1 point of damage is permanent drain instead.]

✦ Slimy Doom—Contact: Fortitude DC 14, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d4 Con [When damaged, the character must succeed on another saving throw or 1 point of damage is permanent drain instead.]

Treasure: Hidden under the thick vegetation covering the floor are a +1 throwing axe, a rotted pouch that holds three stones of polished obsidian (worth 25 gp each), as well as a rusted longsword.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one Huge assassin vine. To decrease the challenge, remove one disease.

✦ Assassin Vine: CR 6; Huge plant; HD 16d8+102; hp 174; Init -1; Spd 5 ft.; AC 19, touch 5, flat-footed 19; Base Atk +12; Grp +37; Atk +21 melee (2d6+13, slam); Full Atk +21 melee (2d6+13, slam); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft. (20 ft. with vine); SA Constrict 2d6+7, entangle, improved grab; SQ Blindsight 30 ft., camouflage, immunity to electricity, low-light vision, plant traits, resistance to cold 10 and fire 10; AL N; SV Fort +22, Ref +4, Will +6; Str 36, Dex 8, Con 24, Int —, Wis 13, Cha 9.

Entangle (Su): An assassin vine can animate plants within 30 ft. of itself as a free action (Ref DC 13 partial).

The effect lasts until the vine dies or decides to end it (also a free action). The save DC is Wisdom-based. The ability is otherwise similar to entangle (caster level 4th).

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, an assassin vine must hit with its slam attack.

It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Blindsight (Ex): Assassin vines have no visual organs but can ascertain all foes within 30 ft. using sound, scent, and vibration.

Camouflage (Ex): Since an assassin vine looks like a normal plant when at rest, it takes a DC 20 Spot check to notice it before it attacks.

Anyone with ranks in Survival or Knowledge (nature) can use one of those skills instead of Spot to notice the plant. Dwarves can use stonecunning to notice the subterranean version.

F72 THROUGH F83. RASHMARIK'S LAIR

Rashmarik the Rakshasa and his partner, Saria the Medusa, controls Rooms F72 through F83. Because they helped Grauki the Minotaur in his revolution against the people of the Golden Axe minotaur tribe, the members of the Red Horn clan share a special alliance with Rashmarik and Saria.

This alliance, however, has become precariously fragile in the last two months, for Rashmarik learned of Grauki's plans to invade his territory. The rakshasa, however, has found a new ally in Gartuk, Grauki's half-sister. He is now confident that if the Chieftain of the Red Horns initiates a war against him, Gartuk will take control of part of the clan and oppose her brother. Rashmarik promised Gartuk that she would become chieftain of the Red Horns in her weakling brother's place if she helps prevent Grauki from invading his lair.

For now, however, both Rashmarik and Saria continue to rely on members of the Red Horn minotaur clan to protect crucial areas of their territory and continue to allow them to journey through their lair — a situation that might change if Grauki gets his plan moving.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	The stringy stem of an assassin vine emerges from a crack at the bottom of the wall here. A closer look at it reveals the bark has turned into a dull gray and the stem is dead.
2-12	Nothing
13	An assassin vine ventured south from its territory to find itself here. Though it does not pose a great threat to the PCs and has no natural vegetation close by it can use to entangle them, it attacks the party on sight.
14	Three unarmed minotaur males are wrestling here. Though their duty is to help Gartuk protect the rakshasa's den, they are currently enjoying some free time. They suffer from a -5 circumstance penalty to all checks made to notice the PCs presence.
15-16	A group of three minotaurs loyal to Gartuk are on guard duty here. Their orders are to attack any strangers and prevent them from venturing further into Rashmarik's lair.
17	A lone 3rd level minotaur barbarian travels into this Region. The warrior holds a long-handled greataxe and paint has turned his horn red. This is a rogue member of the Broken Axe tribe seeking a meeting with Rashmarik. The elder minotaur hopes to trade information with the rakshasa since word of Grauki's plan somehow reached him.
18	The PCs venture upon a simple mechanical trap, which is triggered by stepping upon a 5-ft.-by-5-ft. pressure plate in the floor. ♦ Hail of Needles Trap: CR 3; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; Atk +22 ranged (2d4, needles); Search DC 22; Disable Device DC 25.
19	Saria the Medusa is encountered here instead of in her den. She uses her petrifying gaze to prevent the PCs from venturing further into what she considers her territory and does not hesitate to attack them.
20	Three manticores journeyed into this section of the dungeon. They attack the PCs as soon as they notice them.

F72. ANGELIC STATUE

The tall statue of a proud female angel warrior stands guard in this room. The dark gray stone of the statue is cracked in many places and deep claw marks scar the face and torso of the otherwise beautiful sculpture. Some fingers are missing from the right hand of the stone angel and its nose and bare toes are chipped. The figure holds a massive sword with her left hand, which is planted in the ground between her feet.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This ancient statue was sculpted from the bedrock to honor one of the most important builders of this dungeon. There is nothing special about it, but for the Red Horn clan it marks the beginning of Rashmarik's territory.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: This statue was once warded with powerful alarm and ghoul touch spells, that have faded over the years. Anyone imbuing the statue with an abjuration spell finds the spell enhanced, enlarged, and maximized.

Treasure: Gems once sat in the statue at various points, but all have been pried out. Gouges mark where the gems once rested. Good-aligned PCs who place a gem into the statue gain the benefit of bless for 24 hours.

F73. FOUL ROOM

Lava from the deadly underground stream has begun to seep through a narrow crack in the northeast corner. A thin layer of yellowish-green moss dominates the length of the entire floor, obviously thriving on the heat and humidity caused by the boiling lava.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room once held an assassin vine, which later died. Spores from its leafy stalk seeped into the stonework, resulting in tainted beds of moss. PCs walking through the Room, release these spores when they walk. Every 10 ft. they walk on the moss, require a Fortitude save against the red ache disease.

Encounter Condition: Diseased (red ache) 15°, Extreme Heat

Tactics: The red ache disease prevalent in this Room is communicable through inhalation, rather than injury.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace red ache with devil chills. To reduce the challenge, reduce the save DC of red ache by -3.

F74. TRAPPED HALLWAYInitial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: PCs with the Track feat are allowed a DC 20 Survival check to notice the undisturbed layer of dust. Success indicates that no creature has passed through this corridor in years. What the PCs do with this information, however, is up to them.

Tactics: The minotaurs are aware that a trap lies here and avoid this length of corridor. This trap is activated as soon as anyone sets foot upon a specific trigger in the corridor (determined by the DM). If the PCs surmised that a trap exists, because of the dust, allow them a +2 circumstance bonus to their Search rolls to find the trap.

♣ Bestow Curse Trap: CR 5; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (bestow curse, 18th-level cleric, DC 19 Will save negates); Search check DC 29; Disable Device DC 34.

Treasure: N/AEL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add deep slumber to the bestow curse trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the bestow curse trap with a color spray trap.

F75. GREAT HALLInitial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Four minotaur barbarians (51, 50, 48, 46) from the Red Horn tribe stand guard in this Room. These warriors work for Rashmarik (Room F77) and follow both his orders and those of Gartuk — to whom they remain loyal. Their duty is to wait in hiding and attack all non-minotaurs entering the hall. The smallest of the four gains a +2 competence bonus to his Hide checks.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Cover (soft), Fearless

Tactics: The minotaurs hide in the shadows, waiting for their enemies to enter. When the PCs are close enough, they rage and charge with their mighty horns. They fight well as a unit, letting the weakest distract the PCs (and suffer all the damage), while the others flank the PCs and push them to the ground. Because of their fighting style with the flail, they gain a +2 competence bonus to attack rolls against PCs armed with slashing weapons or no weapons at all.

Allow Rashmarik in Room F77 a DC 18 Listen check to notice the commotion. If he does, he joins the fight 1d3 rounds later.

Treasure: N/AEL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two minotaurs. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

♣ Red Horn Minotaur: CR 4; Large monstrous humanoid; HD 6d8+12; hp 51, 48; Init +0; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 9, flat-footed — (see text); Base Atk +6; Crp +14; Atk +9 melee (2d8+6/19–20, heavy flail) or +9 melee (1d8+4, gore); Full Atk +9/+4 melee (2d8+6/19–20, heavy flail) and +4 melee (1d8+2, gore); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Powerful charge 4d6+6; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., natural cunning, scent; AL CE; SV Fort +6, Ref +5, Will +5; Str 19, Dex 10, Con 15, Int 7, Wis 10, Cha 8.

Powerful Charge (Ex): A minotaur typically begins a battle by charging at an opponent, lowering its head to bring its mighty horns into play. In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +9 attack bonus that deals 4d6+6 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

F76. FUNERAL BEDCHAMBER

The door leading to this Room is locked but not trapped. A successful DC 35 Open Lock check is required to open it. Rashmarik once possessed the key that opened this door, but destroyed it long ago. Since the chamber holds the remains of his former mate, he does not want anyone to enter it.

A wide bed with delicately sculpted posts on its corners lies in the center of this room. Drapes of rose-colored silks of different subtle shades hang from post to post, shrouding the entire bed.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A closer look at the bed reveals the bony remains of a Medium humanoid with the skull of a feline. The corpse is dressed in a fine silken robe, which has begun to rot. With a successful DC 25 Knowledge (the planes), PCs ascertain the corpse is that of a rakshasa.

The body looks as though it was carefully placed in this chamber, showing the devotion the person burying her must have possessed.

Encounter Condition: Diseased (red ache) 15*

Tactics: PCs touching the body, run the risk of infection and merely staying in the Room for more than 10 minutes requires a Fortitude save. The DM is welcome to lower or raise the save DC of the red ache as he sees fit to justify the time she has been dead or the potency with which she was afflicted.

Treasure: A successful DC 20 Search check reveals the tarnished silvery ring upon the skeletal finger of the rakshasa. This ring of feather fall is the only item of value in this Room. It does not radiate magic however, and appears to be worth 50 gp (due to its craftsmanship). The ring works automatically if the PC ever falls more than 30 ft. No amount of magic, short of a wish, reveals the true nature of the ring, however.

EL: N/AScaling: N/AF77. RASHMARIK'S PRIVATE ROOM

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock it. This alerts Rashmarik inside, giving him ample time to prepare defensive spells if he is not expecting guests.

If for any reason he has been alerted to the PCs presence and knows them as intruders, he has black tentacles cast just inside the door and waiting for them when they arrive.

This simple chamber is separated in two sections: The main room and the smaller bedchamber that can be accessed through the archway upon the southern wall. The main chamber is furnished with a low table, a comfortable oak chair, a cabinet, and a copper candelabrum upon which three beige candles burn. The pale light of the candles reveals two colorful paintings framed in thick maple upon the north wall. Each of the paintings depicts a proud noble humanoid with tiger-like features: one male and one female.

The archway upon the south wall opens into a small room dominated by a sumptuous bed with heavy posts rising from each of its corners. Next to the bed is a large chest, but what is truly impressive is the muscular figure in fine silken cloth standing there, as if waiting for you. His face is like an enraged tiger, mouth agape.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: A successful DC 12 Intelligence check reveals the creature standing in the bedroom is the male depicted in one of the paintings upon the north wall of the main chamber.

Rashmarik the Rakshasa (hp 76) does not take kindly to intruders, but he does not provoke the PCs into combat unless they attack him first. If the PCs talk to him, Rashmarik evaluates them, using detect thoughts to gain a better understanding of those who dare violate his private sanctum. A charismatic creature, Rashmarik tries to win the PCs confidence and explains that the evil minotaur chieftains of both the Red Horn clan and the Broken Axe tribe are plotting a coup against him. He offers the PCs 10,000 gp worth of coins and gems if they agree to help him depose of both chieftains (in truth, only Crauki of the Red Horns is planning to attack Rashmarik's hideout, but the rakshasa wants to be rid of both). While evil, he is extremely lawful and if the PCs agree with his proposition, he honors his part of the bargain.

Encounter Condition: [Safe]

Tactics: Rashmarik casts mage armor and bear's endurance (gaining 18 hit points and +2 to his Fort saves) upon himself as soon as he hears the PCs fumbling with the lock on the door. If combat breaks out, he uses a number of different offensive spells to kill his opponents, targeting the spellcasters first. He is fond of acid arrow, chain lightning, magic missile, scorching ray, and slow. He is formidable, and wields great power against those who oppose him.

Rashmarik possesses a warped rod of splendor that also acts as a rod of wonder. He enjoys using it from time to time to see what vile things happen to those who oppose him. However, due to his lawful nature and hatred of the rods chaotic energies he can only bring himself to use it once every 2d6 rounds. However, if a PC is helpless, that won't stop him from seeing what he can do to them.

He is wily in combat and uses invisibility to hide when the PCs press him into a corner or get too close. He likes to use shadow conjuration to cast acid arrow (often alternating between the real and shadow version so PCs don't suspect anything), glitterdust, phantom speed, sleet storm, and summon monster III.

He fights calmly, killing the PCs without hesitation.

Allow the minotaurs in Room F75 a DC 15 Listen check to notice the sound of battle in this Room. If they do, they come to aid Rashmarik in 1d2 rounds. If Rashmarik has no chance of defeating the PCs he casts invisibility and leaves the Room. He sends minotaurs in to deal with the PCs before changing his form to that of a wise old dwarf and journeying to Room F81 to join Saria, his confidant and ally.

Should the PCs face him again, he retrieves his scrolls from his chest and uses them in battle as well.

Treasure: The copper candelabrum in the main chamber is worth 55 gp and the candles burning upon it are enchanted with a continual flame spell. The cabinet contains a full set of twelve porcelain plates, cups, and bowls as well as half a dozen wine glasses made out of glass and various silvery utensils (worth a total of 35 gp).

The chest in Rashmarik's bedchamber is locked. Though the rakshasa holds the key to unlock it, a successful DC 45 Open Lock check also does the trick. The chest contains a total of 6,210 gp worth of different coins (mostly gold and platinum) and assorted gemstones (mainly amethyst, quartz, and amber). On top of this treasure are seven different arcane scrolls containing blink, gaseous form, invisibility sphere, remove curse, ray of exhaustion, water breathing, and wind wall.

Rashmarik wears a silken deep blue shirt of natural armor +3 (which functions as per the amulet of the same name) as well as a simple silver chain (worth 10 gp) holding an amulet of proof against petrification (see sidebar, page 323). The latter is fashioned from the mummified eye of a medusa and provides the wearer total immunity against petrification attacks, such as the basilisk's and medusa's petrifying gaze special ability. He also holds a key to unlock the chest in his bedchamber as well as one that opens the doors of the cellblock (see Room F80).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three fighter levels to Rashmarik and equip him with a +1 flametongue longsword. To decrease the challenge, assume Rashmarik is a sound sleeper, that he was resting when the PCs entered his lair, and bestow him a -8 circumstance penalty to all skill checks made to notice the PCs' presence as well as a -2 penalty to his Initiative checks for the first 1d4+1 rounds of battle.

A Rashmarik, Rakshasa Sor 2: CR 12; Medium outsider (native); HD 7d8+21 + 2d4+6; hp 76; Init +2; Spd 40 ft.; AC 24; touch 12; flat-footed 22; Base Atk +8; Grp +9; Atk +9 melee (1d4+1, claw); Full Atk +9 melee (1d4+1, 2 claws) and +4 melee (1d6, bite); SA Detect thoughts, spells; SQ Change shape, damage reduction 15/good and piercing, darkvision 60 ft., SR 27; AL LE; SV Fort +8, Ref +7, Will +9; Str 12, Dex 14, Con 16, Int 13, Wis 13, Cha 19 [23].

Skills and Feats: Bluff +18*, Concentration +15 (+19 when casting defensively), Diplomacy +8, Disguise +18 (+20 acting)*, Intimidate +6, Knowledge (arcana) +3, Listen +13, Move Silently +13, Perform (oratory) +14, Sense Motive +11, Spellcraft +13, Spot +11; Alertness, Combat Casting, Dodge, Eschew Materials.

Detect Thoughts (Su): A rakshasa can continuously use detect thoughts as the spell (caster level 18th; Will DC 15 negates). It can suppress or resume this ability as a free action. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Sorcerer Spells Known (6/7/7/7/5; save DC 16* + spell level): 0—detect magic, ghost sound, light, mage hand, message, read magic, resistance, touch of fatigue; 1st—charm person, chill touch, mage armor, magic missile, silent image; 2nd—acid arrow, bear's endurance, invisibility, scorching ray; 3rd—lightning bolt, slow, suggestion; 4th—black tentacle, shadow conjuration.

Change Shape (Su): A rakshasa can assume any humanoid form, or revert to its own form, as a standard action. In humanoid form, a rakshasa loses its claw and bite attacks (although it often equips itself with weapons and armor instead). A rakshasa remains in one form until it chooses to assume a new one. A change in form cannot be dispelled, but the rakshasa reverts to its natural form when killed. A true seeing spell reveals its natural form.

Skills: A rakshasa has a +4 racial bonus on Bluff and Disguise checks.

* When using change shape, a rakshasa gains an additional +10 circumstance bonus on Disguise checks. If reading an opponent's mind, its circumstance bonus on Bluff and Disguise checks increases by a further +4.

Possessions: Amulet of natural armor +3, warped rod of splendor (wonder).

F78. WARDED ROOM

Two narrow corridors open into the western wall of this simple room and its two doors lend access to other parts of the dungeon labyrinth. The northern door is decorated with a thick red cross.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is empty, but the door upon the north wall is warded against intrusion. Though the small Room beyond is empty, it once held a demon and the trap built to prevent its escape is active. The cross of red paint indicates this Room is out of bounds and contains a dangerous magical trap. Though the door is unlocked, the trap is activated as soon as anyone crosses its archway.

♦ Ice Storm Trap: CR 5; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (ice storm, 16th-level wizard, 3d6 bludgeoning damage and 2d6 cold damage to anyone within a 20-ft. radius); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30.

Encounter Condition: Fear 16

Tactics: Good-aligned PCs spending more than 5 minutes in the Room are overcome with a need to exit. They immediately become shaken until they do and for 2d6 minutes afterwards.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a phantasmal killer to the ice storm trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the ice storm trap with a daze monster trap.

F79. GUARD POST

Three large humanoid males with bull-like faces and great red horns protruding from their skulls stand in this room. They hold massive flails and thick hides covering their muscular bodies.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Four minotaurs (hp 43, 42, 39, 36), members of the Red Horn clan, stand guard in this Room. Though loyal to Gartuk, these warriors obey Rashmarik's command and defend his lair. They attack intruders on sight.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: Like most minotaurs, these warriors fight savagely and mercilessly, using their mighty horns to charge their opponents every chance they get. They prefer ganging up on their victims, attacking the strongest foes first.

The smallest of the three summons for aid, as soon as the fight goes poorly for the minotaurs and otherwise keeps his distance from PCs who can overpower him.

Treasure: Each minotaur carries 1d8 gp worth of coins and small gemstones. The largest has a silver dagger than he found on a dead body and a deck of playing cards missing many of the face cards.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four minotaurs. To decrease the challenge, remove one and give the others a -4 circumstance penalty to their first Initiative check.

➤ Red Horn Minotaur: CR 4; Large monstrous humanoid; HD 6d8+12; hp 43, 39, 36; Init +0; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 9, flat-footed — (see text); Base Atk +6; Crp +14; Atk +9 melee (2d8+6/19–20, heavy flail) or +9 melee (1d8+4, gore); Full Atk +9/+4 melee (2d8+6/19–20, heavy flail) and +4 melee (1d8+2, gore); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Powerful charge 4d6+6; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., natural cunning, scent; AL CE; SV Fort +6, Ref +5, Will +5; Str 19, Dex 10, Con 15, Int 7, Wis 10, Cha 8.

Powerful Charge (Ex): A minotaur typically begins a battle by charging at an opponent, lowering its head to bring its mighty horns into play. In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +9 attack bonus that deals 4d6+6 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from getting lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

Possessions: Hide armor, heavy flail.

AMULET OF PROOF AGAINST PETRIFICATION

These items are formed of some part of a creature that has the ability to turn others to stone, such as a mummified eye of a medusa. The wearer of such an amulet is immune to any effects that would cause petrification, such as a medusa gaze or a flesh to stone spell.

Moderate transmutation; CL: 11th; Prerequisites: Create Wondrous Items, resistance, stone to flesh; Market Price: 30,000 (15,000; +1,200 xp); Weight: —

Treasure: Though the minotaurs who died here had nothing of value on them, PCs who return their long yellowish-white horns to Chieftain Markuli of the Broken Axe tribe (in Room F39) receive a 100 gp reward for their service. The act also changes the Initial Attitude of all members of the Broken Axe tribe (who know of this deed) to Friendly.

F81. SARIA'S CHAMBERS

Five exquisitely well-made stone statues are scattered upon the floor of this wide hall. Four of the statues represent mighty minotaurs wielding large axes are placed on either side of the western door. Their frothing mouths are opened as if uttering silent battle cries. Each statue is unique and stands in a battle stance.

A third statue, this one in the form of a fanged human-like figure bearing a large pair of wings, lies at the mouth of the corridor leading south. The stone figure is filled with intricate details showing a pair of reptilian legs and bird-like clawed feet, sharp facial features upon a long neck, and a tangle of messy hair crowning it.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is Saria's private domain and playground. She does not tolerate any intruders save for Rashmarik, who is always welcomed into her lair. The statues were once four minotaurs from the Broken Axe tribe and a harpy from Morgul's Den who unwittingly ventured into her chamber.

The door to the north leads to her bedchamber, which is decorationless and furnitureless save for a large nest made out of dried branches, brown leaves, and pine needles intermingled with long strands of cotton, wool, and silken fabrics.

Saria (hp 56), Rashmarik's medusa ally, lives here. Though she rests in her nest in the smaller northern Room, she is most often encountered in her main hall, surrounded by a handful of her victims. Saria is a cunning and devious creature and hates everyone except Rashmarik. The Red Horn minotaurs who venture close to her lair and through Room F82, fear her greatly, for she attacks anyone on sight.

Encounter Condition: Spell Resistance 18

Tactics: Saria relies on her petrifying gaze attack to turn her enemies to stone. Those that do not fall victim to her terrible gaze she tries to murder with her shortbow from distance. If forced into melee, she wields a short sword and her snake's heads bites anything they can get their teeth into.

Treasure: Hidden in Saria's nest are 44 small gems (bloodstones, carnelians, zircons, pearls, and clear quartz stones) worth an average of 10 gp each. The medusa collected these trinkets from her many victims.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three rogue levels to Saria and upgrade her bow to a +2 shortbow. To decrease the challenge, impose Saria with a -4 penalty to all skill checks made to notice the PCs as she dreamily examines the stone statues of her previous victims.

F80. CELL BLOCK

The doors opening these cells are locked (the key can be found on Rashmarik's person in Room F77). A successful DC 18 Open Lock check is required to unlock them.

Each of these three narrow corridors leads to an isolated cell. The doors of these cells are reinforced with iron and have a picture window with three bars across it, allowing a view into the small rooms.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These cells were once used by Rashmarik to keep members of the Golden Axe tribe loyal to Chieftain Markuli prisoner. Two minotaurs died within these walls and their bony remains lie in the two southernmost cells.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 4, Haunted

Tactics: N/A

F82. BROKEN STATUES

Two large statues lie in the middle of this long cross-shaped hall. These statues are broken and a large pile of rubble in the northern nook suggests more of them once decorated this chamber.

The two statues represent mighty minotaur figures wielding greataxes above their horned bovine heads. While one of the statues remains standing and is relatively untouched, with only an arm and part of its shoulder missing, the other is broken in three parts and lies in pieces upon the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These minotaurs were once members of the Broken Axe tribe who fell victim to Saria's petrifying gaze. The rubble piles are the remains of five other minotaurs turned to stone and then broken in countless pieces long ago.

Encounter Condition: Negative Energy

Treasure: Amidst the rubble are a masterwork greataxe, a silvered throwing axe, as well as +48 gp scattered under the various boulders which can be found with three separate DC 35 Search checks.

F83. OLD PYRE

The door of this Room is locked and has not been opened in a decade. The key was destroyed long ago and a successful DC 40 Open Lock check is required to unlock it.

The smell of burnt wood emanates from this sealed off chamber. The walls and high ceiling are covered with soot and the floor holds a layer of ash. Under the ashes are the bony remains of countless minotaurs, which obviously were incinerated here.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The carcasses of many minotaurs from both the Broken Axe tribe and the Red Horn clan were burnt here following the brutal conflict that separated the Golden Axe tribe in two groups.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: PCs spending more than 15 minutes in this Room are affected by doom (no save) for 24 hours. PCs spending more than 30 minutes are affected by crushing despair and doom for 1d20 + 24 hours.

Treasure: 100+ gp worth of small gemstones and assorted coins were left with the bodies when they were burned, but are nothing but slag now. PCs searching the bodies for 10 minutes or more uncover 2d6 sp and 1d4 gp.

F84 THROUGH F89. MORTGUL'S DEN

Mortgul, a powerful harpy priestess, and her flock of loyal harpy followers claims this area as his den. Though these creatures caused heartache for the inhabitants of this Region in the past, they accepted the relative peace in this Region of the dungeon and have been rather quiet for the past three years. The harpies, however, continue to take vile pleasure in tormenting the minotaurs of the Red Horn clan that passes through the northern portion of their den. Because they fear the mighty Rashmarik and her powerful medusa ally, however, they are content to scare the minotaurs.

They do not take kindly to other creatures journeying through their territory, however, and for the most part attack any other being on sight.

Mortgul built a shrine to honor the goddess of cruelty and suffering in this section of the dungeon. She hopes to one day gather enough strength to summon the goddess' avatar here and offer her the lives of all the creatures in this Region. It will take years before she grows strong enough to initiate her plan, and in the meantime she bides her time, waiting for prey she can capture and slaughter to honor the minor deity.

PCs who defeated Rashmarik the Rakshasa and display proof of their victory (his possessions, his head, etc.) automatically changes the harpies' Initial Reaction two steps towards Helpful, thus potentially saving them much grief when journeying through their den.

Note: All of the harpies in this Section drain 1 point of Wisdom per round with their captivating song, making them powerful foes. The harpy clerics drain 2 points.

20	A band of three ettins loyal to the night hag priestesses from Region G found there way into this Region. They are now lost and desperate to find a way home. Unfortunately for the PCs, they are also fearful and do not hesitate to attack anything that comes in their way.

F84. BORDER PATROL

This wide and oddly shaped hall is empty, the floor is scattered rubble and fragments of wood and cloth. At the far end, two monstrous female humanoids with reptilian feet, legs, and wings stand here, ready for battle. Both of these creatures' evil face is set amidst a mass of thick red hair from which long pointed ears protrude. Their mouths are small and fangs can be seen from between their parted lips.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Four harpies (hp 38, 35, 34, 30) stand guard here. These creatures are on the lookout for intruding minotaurs. However, they have no love for anyone really, and are ready to attack anyone coming into the Room.

Tactics: These harpies use their captivating song to ensnare the PCs before slashing at them with their rusty serrated daggers. They fight to the death, preferring to attack the weakest and less-armored enemies first. The harpies are prepared to fight ground-bound foes, so the floor is littered with caltrops, both scavenged and improvised. The caltrops are smeared with filth of various sorts, so anyone wounded is exposed to Filth fever.

PCs wounded by the harpys' daggers, must also save against filth fever with a –2 circumstance penalty.

The harpies enjoy bull rushing anyone who hasn't fallen or who wears too much armor, gaining a +4 competence bonus against PCs in Medium or Heavy armor.

If that doesn't work, the two smallest harpies fire their poison-tipped arrows at the PCs, hoping the Dexterity damage will make the Hazardous Footing and Poor Footing Encounter Conditions that much more deadly.

Allow the harpies in Room F85 a DC 20 Listen check to hear their sisters' chant. If they do, half of the harpies there come to lend a hand while the others wait in the wings, ready to defend their quarters.

Treasure: One of these harpies wears a golden choker depicting the face of three noble lions (worth 175 gp). The other carries a pouch with 5 irregular fresh water pearls (worth 15 gp each).

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four harpies. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

♣ Harpy: CR 4; Medium monstrous humanoid; HD 7d8; hp 38, 35, 34, 30; Init +2; Spd 20 ft., fly 80 ft. Skills and Feats: Bluff +11, Intimidate +7, Listen +7, Perform (oratory) +5, Spot +3; Dodge, Flyby Attack, Persuasive.

Captivating Song (Su): The most insidious ability of the harpy is its song. When a harpy sings, all creatures (other than harpies) within a 300-ft. spread must succeed on a DC 16 Will save or become captivated. This is a sonic mind-affecting charm effect. A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same harpy's song for 24 hours. The save DC is Charisma-based.

A captivated victim walks toward the harpy, taking the most direct route available. If the path leads into a dangerous area (through flame, off a cliff, or the like), that creature gets a second saving throw. Captivated creatures can take no actions other than to defend themselves. (Thus, a fighter cannot run away or attack but takes no defensive penalties.) A victim within 5 ft. of the harpy stands there and offers no resistance to the monster's attacks. The effect continues for as long as the harpy sings and for 1 round thereafter. A bard's countersong ability allows the captivated creature to attempt a new Will save.

In addition, the captivating song of these harpies drains 1 point of Wisdom per round.

Poison (Ex): The harpys' arrow points are coated in small centipede poison. Injury, Fortitude DC 11, initial and secondary damage 1d2 Dex.

Possessions: Serrated dagger, short bow, arrow (15).

F85. MAIN CHAMBER

Both doors upon the southern walls are false and cannot be opened by any means.

Ten different piles made out of dried branches, crushed stone, and strips of ruined clothing are lined up upon the walls of this large hall, which is separated in two identical parts. The form of four humanoid-like figures with large leathery wings protruding from their backs can be seen in this hall. The female creatures bear ugly features with reptilian legs and feet, sharp-clawed hands, long necks, and tangles of messy hair crowning their hideous faces.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Six harpies (hp 37, 35, 33, 33, 30, 26) inhabit this Room, waiting for minotaurs or anything living to come into the hall. They have no love for anyone and seek to harm anyone who comes in. They are malicious creatures seeking to maim and hurt, rather than kill. The largest harpy seeks out the weakest-looking PC and taunts him with her song and powerful scimitar.

Encounter Condition: Fearless, Haunted, Stagnant Air

Tactics: Like most of their kind, these harpies rely on their captivating song to enthrall the PCs before using their weapons and claws to shred them into pieces. They continue to sing while fighting.

They have poison-tipped arrows and scimitars. The largest carries a +1 scimitar (+8 melee, 1d6+1/18–20). The smallest carries three +2 arrows, using them quickly against powerful PCs.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two fighter levels to each harpy. To decrease the challenge, remove two harpies.

Poison (Ex): The Harpys' arrow points are coated in small centipede poison. Injury, Fortitude DC 11, initial and secondary damage 1d2 Dex. Their words are coated as well, affected only the first target struck.

Possessions: Scimitar, short bow, arrow (12).

F86. UNHOLY TEMPLE

This large and strangely cut hall is illuminated by the pale luster of burning blood-red candles in the southeastern nook. The wavering flames reveal a simple stone altar stained with dried blood. A golden chalice and a ceremonial knife made out of gold with a hilt decorated by bloodstones lies upon the altar besides the candles.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The harpies love and revere the goddess of cruelty and suffering, to protect the temple, a glyph of warding has been placed on the entrance. Harpy clerics do not trigger the glyph.

♣ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 4; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 5th-level cleric, 2d8 acid, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

Avertgul (hp 63), Mortgul's sister and a cleric of the evil goddess of cruelty and suffering, is currently praying in this temple. Unless the PCs manage to convince her they are worshippers of the vile goddess and came here to pay tribute to her (with appropriate Bluff or Diplomacy checks), Avertgul attacks them. Avertgul is immune to all of the Encounter Conditions in this Room.

Tactics: Avertgul uses her captivating song as soon as combat begins, hoping to distract as many PCs as possible while attacking those who are not charmed with her +1 keen heavy mace and claws. She also uses an array of divine spells to aid her cause, including invisibility, sound burst, and death knell. Her song automatically alerts the harpy acolytes in Room F87, who come to her aid 1d3 rounds later. If Avertgul is forced to flee, she uses disguise self to make herself appear like an elf prisoner, who has been tortured by the harpies.

If an evil cleric uses infect spells in this temple, it deals maximum damage. If a good cleric casts cure or infect spells in this temple, it produces minimal results (cure light wounds cures 1 + 1 per level points of damage). The Spell Resistance Encounter Condition is increased by +4 against divine magic cast by good clerics.

Treasure: The dagger upon the altar is obviously valuable. It is a masterwork item worth 900 gp and even more to members of the harpies' faith. The golden chalice is simple and worth 15 gp.

A successful DC 18 Search check reveals a loose stone hiding an alcove in the heart of the altar. It is protected by a glyph of warding that will trigger if the Goddess of Assassin's name is not spoken before moving the stone.

Inside is a stack of 21 blood-colored candles and a bottle of fine red wine (worth 45 gp) with an ornate silver stopper (worth 60 gp) can be uncovered from this secret compartment. The wine is made from the blood of the harpies victims. When they have enough blood, they can complete a great ceremony called the blood feasts in which they grow in power (gaining one cleric level each).

The ornate stopper is trapped. Unless a particular set of twists is made while opening it, a poisoned needle embeds itself in the opener's hand.

In addition to her weapons, Avertgul also carries four glass vials of unholy water and a golden idol in the form of her deity — a lean humanoid female figure holding a serrated blade between the crossed arms covering her breasts. The item is worth 235 gp, but any follower of the faith would pay upwards of 800 gp for it. A small black stone stained with dried blood serves as Avertgul's unholy symbol. This item is worthless but followers of the faith would pay up to 20 gp for it.

The unholy water is also from the blood of their victims and cures 1d4 points of damage if drank by an evil character.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two cleric levels to Avertgul and assume she has recently used death knell gaining 8 hit points, +2 Strength, and a +1 effective caster level for 70 minutes. To decrease the challenge, remove two cleric levels.

Captivating Song (Su): The most insidious ability of the harpy is its song. When a harpy sings, all creatures (other than harpies) within a 300-ft. spread must succeed on a DC 19 Will save or become captivated. This is a sonic mind-affecting charm effect. A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same harpy's song for 24 hours. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Sneak Attack: The rogue's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the rogue flanks her target. This extra damage is 1d6. Should the rogue score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

F87. ACOLYTE'S CHAMBER

This small chamber is void of decoration and light, but three large cots lie in different corners of the room. A narrow and uneven tunnel opens into the southeastern portion of the chamber.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Two harpy acolytes (hp 39, 36) are currently in this Room. The third cot is for Avertgul (in Room F86). These evil fiends do not accept anyone other than another harpy in their private chamber and attack the PCs on sight.

Encounter Condition: Fear 18

Tactics: Like most harpies, these low-level clerics use their captivating song to prevent the PCs from doing them any harm. Once a PC is at their mercy they use their claws and 1st-level clerical spells to help them incapacitate the PCs, preferring bane and inflict light wounds.

Avertgul (Room F86) comes to the aid her fellow clerics in 1d3 rounds, if the PCs have not already defeated her. She is less forgiving than her sisters lashing out with her magic and powerful magic.

Treasure: Each acolyte carries 1d20 gp in small coins. One of them also wears a simple torc made out of gold with a single bloodstone in its middle (worth 85 gp). Additionally, each carries a polished black stone with a fleck of dried blood upon it. These unholy symbols are worthless to most people, but followers of the cult might pay up to 20 gp for each of them.

A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same harpy's song for 24 hours. The save DC is Charisma-based.

F88. MORTGUL'S ROOM

This room is completely dark. A closer look reveals a small cabinet and a large cot made out of dried branches, torn cotton and wool, and ripped furs.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Mortgul (hp 83), the powerful harpy cleric who rules this Section, lives here. Unless the PCs announce to her that they killed Rashmarik and bring proof to her, she attacks. She is quite careful, and has trapped the door to her Room with a glyph of warding, speaking her name before entering disables it.

Encounter Condition: Fear 19, Fearless

Tactics: Mortgul is proud of being a priestess of the goddess of cruelty and suffering and she uses her godly blessings to help her fight the PCs. If forced into melee, she chants her captivating song in an attempt to turn the odds in her favor. She hopes to incapacitate the PCs and sacrifice them to her deity later.

She uses sound burst, followed by silence to disrupt PC spellcasters, before using invisibility to sneak attack the strongest PC. She finishes off any reeling PCs with death knell, and casts inflict serious wounds or scaring light on any retreating spellcasters.

Treasure: In addition to the weapons she carries, Mortgul also has a potion of cure serious wounds (3 doses), a large vial of unholy water (6 applications), and a well-polished obsidian stone with a drop of dried blood upon it. The latter is worth 25 gp, but followers of the goddess of cruelty and suffering might pay up to eight times this amount for it.

The cabinet in Mortgul's Room holds a total of 541 gp in assorted coins and gems as well as an alchemic lab. These are the riches the priestess accumulated since she came to the dungeon with her flight of harpies, many years ago. She has trapped it with glyph of warding to punish and prying hands and eyes that rummaging through it when she is not there, speaking the word "safe" before opening it, disarms the glyph.

Captivating Song (Su): The most insidious ability of the harpy is its song. When a harpy sings, all creatures (other than harpies) within a 300-ft. spread must succeed on a DC 21 Will save or become captivated. This is a sonic mind-affecting charm effect. A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same harpy's song for 24 hours. The save DC is Charisma-based.

A captivated victim walks toward the harpy, taking the most direct route available. If the path leads into a dangerous area (through flame, off a cliff, or the like), that creature gets a second saving throw. Captivated creatures can take no actions other than to defend themselves. (Thus, a fighter cannot run away or attack but takes no defensive penalties.) A victim within 5 ft. of the harpy stands there and offers no resistance to the monster's attacks. The effect continues for as long as the harpy sings and for 1 round thereafter. A bard's countersong ability allows the captivated creature to attempt a new Will save.

Poison (Ex): Mortgul's arrow points and rapier blade are coated in giant wasp poison. Injury, Fortitude DC 18, initial and secondary damage 1d6 Dex.

Sneak Attack: Mortgul's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the rogue flanks her target. This extra damage is 2d6. Should the rogue score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Typical Clerical Spells Prepared (5/5/4/3; save DC 14 + spell level) 0—cure minor wounds (2), guidance, resistance, virtue; 1st—bane, cure light wounds (2), *disguise self, entropic shield; 2nd—death knell, *invisibility, silence, sound burst; 3rd—dispel magic, *nondetection, prayer.

* Domain spell. Domains: Death (death touch once per day). Trickery (Bluff, Disguise and Hide are class skills).

Possessions: Customized masterwork leather armor, +2 keen rapier, +1 short bow, headband of wisdom +2, ring of protection +1, masterwork arrow (13), antitoxin (3), tanglefoot bag, thunderstone.

F89. COMPACTING ROOM

The door on the southern portion of the east wall is false and cannot be opened by any means. It is designed to keep creatures in the Room long enough for the trap to crush them.

This room is without light, furniture, or decoration. There are several scuff marks upon the floor, as well as barely visible traces of dry blood which seem to have faded with time.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: One minute after any of the doors leading into this Room is opened, all doors are instantly closed shut and locked into place. The south and north wall then begin to move at a swift pace towards the center of the chamber. A hidden button in the center of the east wall can be pushed to bypass this trap.

◆ Compacting Room Trap: CR 8; mechanical; timed trigger; automatic reset; hidden switch bypass (Search DC 25); walls move together (12d6 crush); multiple targets (all targets in the room); never miss; onset delay (3 rounds); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 36.

F90. ISOLATED WARP GATE IV

The easternmost door of this Room is a false one and cannot be opened by any means. It was designed, like several others in the Region, to fool those who travel into the maze.

This room is empty and cast in complete darkness. A closer look inside this oddly shaped chamber reveals three doors as well as a layer of undisturbed dust.

F91 THROUGH F94. THE LAIR OF THE DRAGONNE

A mighty dragonne took over Rooms F91 through F94. Though it mainly keeps to its lair, it sometimes ventures in other parts of the Region. The dragonne is hostile and attacks all creatures that come within its lair, so its neighbors go to great lengths to avoid the place.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1	A swarm of black flies hovers towards the PCs before veering off quickly and disappearing in the distance.
2–12	Nothing
13–14	A force of three minotaurs from the Red Horns managed to elude the harpies and found themselves in this section of the dungeon. They are searching for treasure and glory.
15–16	Two harpies came into this section to explore and make sure the dragonne remains in its lair. Though they fear the dragonne's might, they do not shy away from the PCs.
17	A group of four hieracosphinx learned from other inhabitants of the Region of the existence of Arnarah. Though they have yet to locate her, they hope to take over her lair. These creatures are extremely hostile.
18	The PCs stumble upon a trap. ◆ Glyph of Warding (Blast) Trap: CR 4; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 16th level cleric, 5d8 sonic, DC 18 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

20	A Vrok in search of a good challenge ventured into this Region of the dungeon. The demon delights in battle and is eager to engage the PCs in combat.

F91. DRAGONNE'S NEST

The creature's nest completely covers the door on the northern wall. PCs must succeed at a DC 28 Search check or clear the debris in order to find this door. The small Room to which it opens is empty.

A stack of stones and dirt dominates this Room. A huge beast with brass colored scale and a pair of small wings lies upon this ten-ft. tall pile of debris. Its dragon-like head holds burning dark eyes.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is the lair of a mighty dragonne (hp 168). It is crazed and hostile looking for the first thing he can kill to come through the door. Having fought minotaurs, harpies, manticores, and demons, it seeks the flesh of something new.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Fear 15, Haunted 5

Tactics: This creature roars loudly as soon as the PCs step into this Room, hoping to fatigue them. A moment later, it jumps from its 10-ft. high nest upon the strongest PC and uses its pounce special attack in an attempt to kill him.

Treasure: PCs succeeding at a DC 22 Search check notice something shiny buried under the heavy stone debris piled here. A group of four PCs clearing the debris must labor for four hours to clear enough stone and dust to uncover the treasure: a rod of cancellation made out of solid white gold as well as various coins and gems worth 541 gp.

Pounce (Ex): If a dragonne charges, it can make a full attack in the same round.

Roar (Su): A dragonne can loose a devastating roar every 1d4 rounds. All creatures except dragonnes within 120 ft. must succeed on a DC 20 Will save or become fatigued. Those within 30 ft. who fail their saves become exhausted. The save DC is Charisma-based.

F92. TRAPPED DOORWAY

The door at the end of the small chamber is a false door, made to trap the PCs into the Room. A complex locking mechanism is set upon it. A successful DC 35 Open Lock check unlocks it, but the door cannot be opened by any means.

The door at the end of this hallway opens into a tiny empty chamber with another door at the end of it.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Anyone stepping upon the floor of this Room triggers its trap 4 rounds later. When the trap is triggered, the eastern door shuts itself, trapping everyone inside. PCs who succeed at DC 32 Reflex save may jump outside the Room just before the door seals them in. At the same moment the door closes, a pit trap opens from under the PCs.

☛ Well-Camouflaged Pit Trap: CR 7; mechanical; location trigger; repair reset; DC 32 Reflex save avoids (by jumping out of the room); multiple target (all targets within the room); 70 ft. deep (7d6 fall); onset delay (4 rounds); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 22.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There is nothing special about this corridor aside from the fact that its western end is 20 ft. deeper than the eastern part of it. All Rooms to the west of it (including Room F91) are thus 20 ft. lower than the rest of the Region.

The first holds the skeleton of a gnoll dressed in rotted leather; the second has the semi-mummified corpse of a minotaur; and the third contains two small skeletons of demonic creatures. The other Rooms are empty.

Seven doors with small barred windows opens into tiny cells. The window on each door is a nine inches tall by six inches wide rectangle into which three massive black iron bars are set.

F96 THROUGH F99. THE MANTICORE PRIDE

Rooms F96 through F99 serve as the home of a pride of manticore. These creatures are isolated and surrounded by the lair of the rakshasa and the territory controlled by the harpy priestesses. Though they only occasionally venture out of their lair to hunt, they killed several minotaurs and a harpy in the last three months. They are ferociously territorial and not to be trifled with.

Due to the tight surroundings, it is sometimes difficult for them to fight to the best of their ability. However, this has only made them cagier and more prone to violence. Their standard tactic is to pounce on a single opponent, destroying it quickly to demoralize the rest.

F96. LEADER OF THE PACK

Broken bones, cover the floor. A large monster with a vaguely humanoid head, the body of a spotted lion, a pair of dragon's wings, and a long spiked tale crouches like a predator, ready to hunt.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room was once part of the territory of the gnolls who lived here long ago, but the alpha male of manticore pride turned it into its private lair. This small chamber now houses the most powerful manticore (hp 117) of the pride. The leader of the pack is aggressive and attacks anyone venturing into its territory. In addition to be larger and stronger than most manticore, it possesses a frightful presence.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4, Fear 20

Tactics: The manticore uses its spiked tale at every occasion and attacks the smallest PCs first. In battle, it utters loud roars to alert the members of its pack. Allow the manticores in Rooms F97 and F100 DC 22 Listen checks to hear their leader's call. If successful, they join the fight 1d3+1 rounds later.

Frightful Presence (Ex): Creatures within sight of the manticore are subject to the effect if they have fewer than 14 HD. A potentially affected creature that succeeds on a DC 22 Will save remains immune to that dragon's frightful presence for 24 hours. On a failure, creatures with 4 or less HD become panicked for 4d6 rounds and those with 5 or more HD become shaken for 4d6 rounds.

Spikes (Ex): With a snap of its tail, a manticore can loose a volley of six spikes as a standard action (make an attack roll for each spike). This attack has a range of 180 ft. with no range increment. All targets must be within 30 ft. of each other. The creature can launch only twenty-four spikes in any 24-hour period.

F97. MANTICORE NEST

Both doors leading into this chamber are wide open, revealing a dark room with several feline-like beasts with long leathery wings protruding from their backs. They lie upon a bone-covered floor.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is used as a manticore lair. Like most members of the pride, they do not tolerate intruders and are hostile toward anyone who is not of their kind. Three manticores (hp 59, 56, 54) are currently here, but others are out on patrol. They are presently resting, but when the PCs' approach, they ready themselves for battle and charge soon as the PCs are within range.

Encounter Condition: Concealment

Tactics: In battle, these beasts fight savagely, sending volleys of spikes before engaging in melee. They do not share their kills, however, an fail to coordinate an effective attack. The larger of the three goes after unarmored foes, while the smaller chases slow targets, like dwarves and orcs. The middle manticore has a fondness for elves and attacks them exclusively in melee.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three manticores. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

F98. OLD HEARTH

A deep round hearth from which fire once burnt dominates this room. Above the blackened hearth, the ceiling opens into a narrow chimney. A pile of dry wood lies in the northeast corner.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was once used by gnolls who inhabited the Region, but has long since been abandoned. The Room is filled with a sense of dread and misery. Good-aligned PCs suffer a -4 to their Will saves in this Room.

F99. LONE MANTICORE

A member of the mantichore pride frequently uses this chamber to rest. Though this creature is content with its status in the pride, it does not always agree with the way its leader runs the group. Because of this, it often feels the need to be alone.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A lone mantichore (hp 61) currently lies in the shadows of this chamber. This creature comes here to be alone and does not tolerate intruders — especially those who are not members of its pride. If battle occurs here, the mantichores in Room F100 come to its aid 1d2 rounds later. This is one of the most powerful mantichores in the Region and it too possesses a supernatural fearful presence, like a dragon.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Cover

Tactics: As soon as it sees the PCs, the mantichore attacks with its spiked tail before closing to melee. On the defensive, the mantichore attacks the largest PCs. However, should the mantichore surprise the PCs or gain the upper hand, it hunts the weakest enemies, dwindling their numbers quickly. It is important to remember that mantichores are supreme hunters and do not get into situations they cannot win.

Treasure: A DC 30 Search check reveals a few odds and ends amidst the debris. A few creatures have obviously died here over the years leaving behind daggers, rotted sacks, a few silver and gold coins, and a map. The map can be to anything the DM wishes. Perhaps a far away kingdom he wishes the PCs to visit later, a Region they haven't visited yet, the underwater caverns in Region L (or the waltz — see page 586), or a vital Room they somehow missed during their journey through the World's Largest Dungeon.

F100. ELEVATED GUARD POST

The four doors leading to this room were pulled from their hinges. A twenty ft. high palisade of gray stone dominates the chamber.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The gnolls who inhabited this Section before the mantichores used the top of the elevated palisade to keep an eye on the circulation below. Now, the mantichore pride uses it for the same purpose. There is always at least one member of the pack guarding this Room.

Currently, two mantichores (hp 57 each) hide on top of the stone palisade, keeping a silent vigil to protect the borders of their territory. They fall down on the PCs as soon as they come into the Room.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 2

Tactics: The mantichores try to surprise the PCs by attacking them from above. They use their tails to send volleys of spikes towards the PCs before closing in for the kill. These creatures are ferociously cruel and fight to the death.

In battle, they roar loudly to alert their fellow pack members. The mantichores in Room F99 automatically join the fray 1d2 rounds later. Those in Rooms F96 and F97 must succeed at DC 22 Listen checks to hear their brother's call. If so, they arrive 1d3+1 rounds later.

Treasure: PCs searching the top of the palisade find three longbows, a masterwork composite longbow (+2 Str bonus), as well as 141 arrows.

REGION G. HELL ON EARTH

Thousands of years ago, the demon lord Krasveshk unleashed his demonic hosts upon the world. Few recall the devastation mounted by these dark armies that issued from the abyss, but those who do refer to this period as the Great Oblivion. Though little is known of Krasveshk and his fiendish soldiers, legends from this era speak of the horrible deaths, despair, and pain the hosts of the demon lord wrought. The Great Oblivion is a time better left forgotten.

For what seemed like an eternity, the Lord Krasveshk took control of most of the Northland realms, imposing his havoc upon the creatures that survived his initial onslaught. This situation lasted for several decades, and the demonic hosts eventually gained control of more territory, until the demons dominated the planet. Modern historians are still baffled that ancient cultures — such as the elves — actually survived these desperate times, but sages who studied the era of the Great Oblivion uncovered several illustrations that would explain this phenomena.

Fortunately for the pre-human races, the troubles of the world caused sorrow in the heavens. Though the gods refused to intervene directly, some angels decided to take matters in their own hands and put a stop to Lord Krasveshk and his heinous minions. Eventually, an elite group of angel and celestial warriors descended from the heavens in a valiant effort to help save the world. Calling themselves the Children of the Inner Light, these beings came to the planet to oppose the demonic hosts. More importantly, however, the angels and celestials helped the elves and other ancient humanoids to organize themselves into competent fighting units strong enough to fend off most demon attacks — Thus the fight for the liberation of the planet began.

The desperate efforts of the mortals, combined with the tremendous might of the angel and celestial army, drove off most of the hosts under Krasveshk's control. After years of brutal warfare, the vile invaders were decimated and Cyrlebrai, the angel leader of the Children of the Inner Light, captured the demon lord Krasveshk. In the years that followed, the surviving creatures of the world reclaimed all the land which had originally been theirs.

The world was rid of Krasveshk, and the demon lord's name eventually became the stuff of legend. What the people did not realize, however, was that the Children of the Inner Light swore to prevent Krasveshk from causing harm to the world again. Under Cyrlebrai's leadership, the Children made sure the demon lord was kept under close guard and brought to the dungeon, where Krasveshk and the demons that had been caught with him were also imprisoned. Cyrlebrai and the Children of the Inner Light vowed to ensure the vile fiends would never be allowed to leave their new underground prison.

The recent rifts and other hazards, which caused the geography of the dungeon to mutate, make the angels' task more difficult. To make matters worse, some of the demonic forces have escaped their cells and took control of a portion of the complex. Some of them are now laying siege to the magical cocoon binding Lord Krasveshk to the place.

This section of the dungeon holds one of the most important prisons built in the vast complex. This prison, which takes the form of a cocoon made out of pure force that binds the powerful demon lord Krasveshk, is at the center of the island in the heart of the Region. Though the Children of the Inner Light were able to erect a protective dome around the prison, it is now under siege by the demonic hosts yearning to liberate their lord and master.

The haunting song of a trumpet archon charged with protecting the demon lord's prison is heard throughout the Region. The song, which she has woven for centuries, allows her to maintain the protective barrier around the cocoon (Room G100), but the soft soul-wrenching wail is laced with sorrow.

ENCOUNTER CONDITIONS

Region G is slightly different from the other Regions. For one, there are no 'set' Encounter Conditions. The reason for this of course is that in no other area of the dungeon is the push and pull of negative and positive energies more obvious. The end result is that the magic of the Region is always in flux. A Room that is hallowed one moment could be desecrated the next. The war goes poorly for the forces of good and the celestials have very little control over the Region. Their most important task: maintaining the wall around Rooms G99 and G100. Everything else is a luxury.

To reflect this erratic pulse of good over evil and evil over good, the DM must roll for random Encounter Conditions every time the PCs enter a Room and every time they return to a Room an hour or more later.

A general guideline is this. Empty Rooms get one roll, semi-important Rooms get 3 rolls, and very important Rooms get 5 rolls. Finale Rooms (like G100) can have as many as the DM wants, but in no instance should two conflicting Encounter Conditions co-exist. Below is a chart for the DM to use at his discretion.

1d20	Effect*
1	Negative Energy **
2	Ambush, Concealment, Cover
3	Cursed 2d6
4	Deep Darkness
5	Deep Silence
6	Desecration 1d6
7	Desecration 2d6
8	Distracting Noises 2d6
9	Distracting Visions 2d6
10	Drafty, Echoes [2d6]
11	Extreme Cold
12	Extreme Heat
13	Fog 5 or 10
14	Flooded, Poor Footing [1d6]
15	Hallowed 1d6
16	Hallowed 2d6
17	Spell Resistance 10+1d10
18	Unhallowed 1d6
19	Unhallowed 2d6
20	Positive Energy **

* This effect lasts for 1d4 hours, requiring another roll if the PCs remain or return later.

 All Room with the Negative Energy Encounter Condition are also considered Unhallowed 5. All Room with the Positive Energy Encounter Condition are also considered Hallowed 5.

Rooms with obvious Hallowed or Unhallowed Encounter Conditions can be set by the DM in addition to any rolls on this chart. Ignore conflicting results.

G1 THROUGH G33. THE CHILDREN OF THE INNER LIGHT

Rooms G1 through G33 are inhabited by the Children of the Inner Light, a group of angels and celestials responsible for imprisoning Krasveshk and his minions. Though once the wardens of the entire Region, the Children of the Inner Light lost control centuries ago, when the geography changed.

With more and more demons escaping their prison cells, the celestial wardens lost were forced to retreat. As the demons organized themselves into a powerful force bent on liberating their leader, Lord Krasveshk, the Children of the Inner Light barricaded this Region.

Led by Cyrlebrai, the Children of the Inner Light remain fervently dedicated to their self-appointed task of keeping Krasveshk and his demonic fiends inside these walls. Fortunately for them, the cocoon keeping the demon lord prisoner (in Room G100) remains. Set upon the central island of the Region, the cocoon is surrounded by a massive wall force unlike any other. It stands between the demon lord's prison and his minions. Under siege, many the Children of the Inner Light fear the demonic host might soon liberate their lord.

To make matters worse, when the demons took control of some portion of the Region, they also destroyed the enchanted crystals fueling the magical illumination, traps, and wards of the place. To ensure these traps and wards remained active, Cyrlebrai stole away to a secret chamber and created a new power source, using his body as a living battery.

Though the warriors of Cyrlebrai are still fervently dedicated to preventing the demon lord from escaping, they are now facing a force more powerful than ever. Most of the celestials are barricaded in this Region, and their most important task is to protect their leader, who is virtually defenseless while fueling the wards. They are also charged with guarding several artifacts of vile power, which were safely buried away in trapped crypts long ago, but now risk exposure to the demon horde.

The Children of the Inner Light is a powerful fighting unit. Each warrior is extremely loyal to Cyrlebrai and would readily sacrifice his life to protect him or prevent Krasveshk's escape. Evalan, Cyrlebrai's second in command, now leads the warriors who protect their leader. Her most immediate concern is to find reinforcements to help the Children of the Inner Light defeat the demonic hosts laying siege to their lord's prison.

The Children of the Inner Light have more pressing concerns, however, for their leader Cyrlebrai is dying. The solar angel has maintained the magical illumination, traps, and wards throughout this Region for too long, and it siphons the life from him. Evalan knows one way to prevent her leader's death is to uncover the sacred flame of Aranas, a holy relic that can repair the power source and thus save Cyrlebrai. Unfortunately, this relic is in the hands of the demonic hosts, and Evalan needs a group of strong heroes brave enough to uncover it.

Evalan and the Children of the Inner Light are suspicious of anyone entering their base of operation, but they might be convinced to accept the help of PCs who act with honor and respect their laws. If the PCs show interest in helping the Children defeat the fiendish host, or if they agree to rid the angelic warriors of the infernal basilisk who roams the southern shore of the island (Room G27), Evalan might bestow honorary titles and grant them temporary membership into their fighting order. The Children of the Inner Light, however, do not deal with evil PCs, who are hunted and destroyed, just as any demon or devil would.

Cyrlebrai, the leader of the Children of the Inner Light, is acting as the magical source of power that illuminates this Region of the dungeon (and powers up its magical traps and wards). Most importantly, Cyrlebrai insures that the magical prison in which the demon lord Krasveshk is trapped remains active. His powers, however, are ebbing. Normally, all Rooms in this section of the dungeon (except those containing evil relics) are illuminated as though under a daylight spell. As the PCs venture into the base of the Children of the Inner Light, however, the illumination is becoming more erratic. Though most Rooms are well lit by an unseen source, the magical illumination occasionally wavers, diminishes, or blinks out for a few seconds. Because of this, all the warriors of the Order are aware that something is wrong with their leader, but none other than Evalan knows exactly what is happening to him.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	Lantern archon on patrol. This little critter is friendly and curious about the PCs, but if they try to cause it harm, it moves away to alert angels or archons close by.
2–12	Nothing
13	Two hound archons returning from patrol. These men are discussing the problems faced by their order, paying little attention to what is going on around them. They suffer from a –4 circumstance penalty to any check made to notice the PCs.
14	Two hound archons on patrol. The warriors move in silence, armed and ready to face any challenge.
17	A group of four deva angels returning from a brutal raid against the demonic fiends by the bank of the lava river near Room G34. Against the impossible odds of the demonic fiends, these comrades in arms were forced to retreat to their base. Two of these warriors are heavily wounded.
18	There is a magic trap in this area of the base. All members of the Children of the Inner Light are aware of its presence. Even though they are well equipped to resist some of its effect, the angels and archons living here are careful to avoid this place. ♦ Ice Storm Trap: CR 5; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (ice storm , 16th-level wizard, 3d6 bludgeoning damage and 2d6 cold damage to anyone within the area); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.
19	Two vocks ventured into this part of the dungeon, hoping to catch warriors of the Children of the Inner Light unaware and take back the heads of their enemies to their master. These demons are nasty and cunning opponents that fight to the death.
20	A weak ceiling in this part of the base threatens to crumble upon anyone passing under it. A successful DC 22 Knowledge (architecture and engineering) check alerts the PCs of the imminent danger. A single creature passing through this area causes a 10% chance that the ceiling will fall down upon it. Add a 10% cumulative chance for every creature other than the first. The collapse causes 10d6 points of crushing damage to anyone within a 20-ft. square area. A successful DC 18 Reflex save halves this damage. The falling rumble does not completely block the corridor or room and creatures are still able to walk through the area after the collapse.

G1. HOUND ARCHON GUARD POST

The double doors to the south leading to Region C are unlocked and not barricaded. Two wide beams, however, bar the doors upon the north wall, making them impossible to open from the other side unless they are broken down.

Suspended from the ceiling of the corridor at the south of the Room is a heavy iron grate filled with spikes pointing downward. The 10 ft. square grate is as wide as the hallway and as long. The area directly under it is filled with barely noticeable pressure plates, making it impossible to walk upon this length of floor without stepping on at least one of them.

♦ Grate Trap: CR 9; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; grate moves down (12d6, crushing); multiple targets (all targets in a 10-ft. by 10-ft. area); never miss; onset delay (1 round); Search DC 34; Disable Device 34.

The secret door on the east wall is disguised as a simple stone wall, which is covered with trophies. A successful DC 25 Search check reveals its location. This stone panel must be pushed to the east. It veers on solid and well-oiled hinges hidden inside the archway.

This large hall is brightly lit by an unknown source, which clearly displays the strange trophies hanging upon its four walls. The bones of various creatures cover the walls: trophies of all sizes and shades, from the dark ribcage taken from a demon to the yellowish femur of what must have been a troll or another giant of some kind. At several places upon the grizzly display, the black craniums of many demons can be seen. Some were cracked open, some are missing fangs, and others have their horns broken. While the remains of these terrible fiends appear to have been battered in brutal combat, others are relatively undamaged. In all, over a hundred such skulls are put on display.

Sprawled upon the floor of the center of the place is the black leathery skin of a large demon. Upon this eerie trophy is a massive bronze table and four chairs.

There are six powerfully built creatures in the room. Two sit upon low stools around the table, while the others stand watch by the double doors of the north wall. Their canine faces are vigilant and their stout muscled bodies are armed with large swords.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The six hound archons (hp 39, 27, 34, 33, 32, 30) guarding this Room rely on the massive grate trap covering the southern corridor to fend off any trespassers coming to this Region of the dungeon. The archons are more worried about the abyssal basilisk haunting the Rooms beyond the northern doors (especially since its recent attack on Room G9) as well as the other demonic forces that occasionally try to break the doors down than about incoming threats from the south.

Tactics: The hound archons are hard to surprise. They are on guard duty and anyone entering the Room through normal means must do so by opening a door (add a +4 circumstance bonus to the archons' Listen or Spot checks). At the sight of the PCs, the hound archons sitting around the table quickly scramble to their feet and take up arms. The other four face the party, asking them to identify themselves. They use their detect evil ability to determine if the heroes pose any immediate threat to them — of if they might be allies of the fiendish host. The archons are willing to parley with non-evil PCs, but attack evil-aligned intruders mercilessly.

If the PCs convince the archons they are here to help, they challenge the PCs to take out the greater basilisk lurking on the south bank of the magma river (in Room G27). If the PCs agree, the archons open the doors leading north and tell them to return with proof of their kill.

If combat ensues, one of them howls to alert the hounds in Room G3. A successful DC 20 Listen check alerts these men, who arrive through the secret door on the eastern wall 1d3+1 rounds later.

Treasure: The hound archons carry no treasure, but upon the walls there are 1d3+1 demonic skulls in good condition that might interest a weapon smith, who could fashion them into exotic helms. These might be sold to the right buyer for upwards of up to 100 gp each.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four hound archons and increase the damage of the grate trap to 16d6. To decrease the challenge, remove one hound archon and reduce the damage of the grate trap to 8d6.

♦ Hound Archon: CR 4; Medium outsider (archon, extraplanar, good, lawful); HD 6d8+6; hp 39, 27, 34, 33, 32, 30; Init +4; Spd 40 ft.; AC 19, touch 10, flat-footed 19; Base Atk+6; Grp +8; Atk +8 melee (1d8+2, bite) or +8 melee (2d6+3/19–20, greatsword); Full Atk +8 melee (1d8+2, bite) and +3 melee (1d4+1, slam); or +8/+3 melee (2d6+3/19–20, greatsword) and +3 melee (1d8+1, bite); SA Spell-like abilities; SQ Aura of menace, change shape, damage reduction 10/evil, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to electricity and petrification, magic circle against evil, scent, SR 16, teleport, tongues; AL LG; SV Fort +6 (+10 against poison), Ref +5, Will +6; Str 15, Dex 10, Con 13, Int 10, Wis 13, Cha 12.

Aura of Menace (Su): A righteous aura surrounds archons that fight or get angry. Any hostile creature within a 20-ft. radius of an archon must succeed on a DC 16 Will save to resist its effects. The save DC is Charisma-based. Those who fail take a –2 penalty on attacks, AC, and saves for 24 hours or until they successfully hit the archon that generated the aura. A creature that has resisted or broken the effect cannot be affected again by the same archon's aura for 24 hours.

Change Shape (Su): A hound archon can assume any canine form of Small to Large size. While in canine form, the hound archon loses its bite, slam, and greatsword attacks, but gains the bite attack of the form it chooses. For the purposes of this ability, canines include any doglike or wolflike animal of the animal type.

Teleport (Su): Archons can use greater teleport at will, as the spell (caster level 14th), except that the creature can transport only itself and up to 50 lbs of objects. Within the confines of this dungeon, the hound archon can only teleport within line of sight.

Tongues (Su): All archons can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using a tongues spell (caster level 14th). This ability is always active.

G2. SEALED TREASURE VAULT I

The door leading to this Room is locked and trapped. Anyone touching the door or lock activates a deathblade ceiling scythe trap. Once the trap is triggered or deactivated, a successful DC 35 Open Lock check unlocks the door.

♣ Deathblade Ceiling Scythe Trap: CR 8; mechanical trap; touch trigger; manual reset; Atk +16 melee (2d4+8 plus poison, scythe); poison (deathblade, DC 20 Fortitude save resists, 1d6 Con / 2d6 Con); Search DC 33; Disable Device DC 33.

Unlike most of the rooms in this Region, this chamber is cast in total darkness. It is void of furniture save for a simple stone altar, which lies in the middle. Upon the altar is a thick volume bound in cracked black leather.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is one of four Rooms containing potent evil artifacts the Children of the Inner Light swore to protect from the hands of evil. The Rooms are accessible only via a secret door and close to the barracks of hound archon warriors. Lethal traps also protect these Rooms, which are kept locked.

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The volume on the altar is a vacuous grimoire, that looks like any other spellbook or tome. Once placed in a sack or library, it looks exactly like any other book it touches.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a second poisoned scythe blade that strikes a target in an adjacent square. To decrease the challenge, replace the deathblade poison on the trap with giant wasp poison.

G3. FIRST HOUND ARCHONS' BARRACKS

This cozy room obviously serves as barracks for warriors. The east and west walls are hidden behind thick three-story high bunk beds and several oak chests are lined up under the lower bunks. Wide blades are stuck between the south wall and the small table, obviously the weapons of the warriors housed in this room. Though there are eighteen beds, only six guards are resting here, presently.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This barracks normally houses 18 hound archons, but only 14 use it at the moment. There are six warriors in this Room, six standing guard in Room G1, and two patrolling the base. The six hound archons (hp 38, 35, 33, 33, 31, 29) serve as a reserve guard. Their primary duty is to relieve the warriors guarding Room G1 and prevent anyone from venturing near Rooms G2, G4, and G5.

Tactics: These archons are vigilant, but do not expect anyone other than members of the Children of the Inner Light to venture into the base. As a result, they suffer from a –4 circumstance penalty to Spot checks, but remain alert to any sound coming from Room G1.

Treasure: Fourteen small wooden chests hold the archons' personal effects. Though most contain clothing, one chest holds a ruby (200 gp), another a masterwork flute, and a third a potion of eagle's splendor (3 doses).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four hound archons. To decrease the challenge, remove two.

♣ Hound Archon: CR 4; Medium outsider (archon, extraplanar, good, lawful); HD 6d8+6; hp 38, 35, 33, 33, 31, 29; Init +4; Spd 40 ft.; AC 19; touch 10, flat-footed 19; Base Atk +6; Grp +8; Atk +8 melee (1d8+2, bite) or +8 melee (2d6+3/19–20, greatsword); Full Atk +8 melee (1d8+2, bite) and +3 melee (1d4+1, slam); or +8/+3 melee (2d6+3/19–20, greatsword) and +3 melee (1d8+1, bite); SA Spell-like abilities; SQ Aura of menace, change shape, damage reduction 10/evil, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to electricity and petrification, magic circle against evil, scent, SR 16, teleport, tongues; AL LG; SV Fort +6 (+10 against poison), Ref +5, Will +6; Str 15, Dex 10, Con 13, Int 10, Wis 13, Cha 12.

G4. SEALED TREASURE VAULT TWO

This vault contains a powerful ancient relic. Like the other Rooms designed for such purpose, its door is locked and rigged with a dangerous trap, which is triggered as soon as the door is touched. The magical trap affects everyone within a 30-ft. radius of the door, which can be unlocked with a successful DC 35 Open Lock check.

Mass hold monster Trap: CR 8; magic device; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (mass hold monster, 17th-level wizard, DC 24 Will save negates); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32.

A small stone altar is at the center of this small vault, which, unlike most other rooms in this section of the dungeon, is cast in deep shadows. A long spear made of an eerily dark alloy rests upon a red silken cloth. Many sharp points that appear to be dripping with a reddish oily substance serrate the weapon's bladed tip.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The item on the altar is the spear of Ternus, which belonged to a demonic servant of Krasveshk before the warriors of the Children of the Inner Light defeated the fiend in mortal combat. The angels who fell the demon took this potent artifact into their care, vowing to prevent anyone from ever wielding the dreadful weapon again. The spear of Ternus is named after its last proprietor — the demon killed by the angels long ago. It was forged in the Abyss especially for the demon Ternus ages ago. It acts as a +4 human bane longspike of wounding. Additionally, every time the weapon hits a living target, it must succeed at a DC 24 Fortitude save to resist the purple worm poison imbedded in the tip of the spear (1d6 Str / 2d6 Str). This poison never runs out since the magic of the spear is self-rejuvenating.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the mass hold monster trap with a wail of the banshee trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the mass hold monster trap with a glyph of warding (blast) trap that deals 8d8 points of damage.

G5. CYRLEBRAI'S INNER SANCTUM

All three hallways leading to Cyrlebrai are trapped. Any creature venturing into one of these corridors triggers the magical trap, affecting everyone in the Room as well as those standing in the hallway. The couatl is aware of the traps and uses its ethereal jaunt ability to avoid the worst of their effect.

♦ Ice Storm Trap: CR 7; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (ice storm, 16th-level wizard, 6d6 bludgeoning damage and 4d6 cold damage to anyone within the area); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32. This trap combines the effect of two CR 5 ice storm traps triggered simultaneously.

The 10-ft. square secret door opening into this chamber is made to resemble the stone surface of the walls. From the inside of the sanctum, it is filled with bas-reliefs and merges flawlessly with the surrounding decor. It is a simple stone panel that veers upon strong iron hinges, which can only be seen when the door is open. Because of the exquisite quality of its make and the fact that it has not been used in centuries, a DC 35 Search check is needed to notice the secret panel. To push it open or pull it back into place, a successful DC 24 Strength check is required.

The walls of this chamber are brightly illuminated by an unseen source, revealing a multitude of colorful frescoes and bas-reliefs. The images depict an epic tale. Starting on the section of the south wall to the west of the hallway and going all around the room from there, the paintings relate the story of a powerful demon lord and the brave angelic beings who valiantly opposed his might.

Painted upon the northern wall are the images of godlike beings looking down upon the wasted world. Angelically beautiful beings — with feathery wings — plead with the gods, but to no avail. The east wall shows the story of how a group of angels was organized into a potent fighting order, which then descended upon the world with the firm intention of ridding it from the demonic armies laying waste to its soil and inhabitants. The last frescoes on the southeast wall reveal the angels were victorious, that they defeated the fiendish hosts and captured the demon lord responsible for the devastation.

Four corridors open into this room, but the north and south hallways are short. At the end of each of these corridors is a gold throne. Though the throne to the north is empty, a weak-looking being sits upon the southern one. This being, though sickly, is inhumanly handsome and the tips of his wings hover above his head. The angel's eyes are closed and silvery strands of hair stick to his face.

What truly catches the eye, however, is the rainbow feathered winged snake of unbelievable beauty in the middle of the room.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This chamber is the inner sanctum of Cyrlebrai, who sits in the golden throne at the end of the south hallway. The solar angel is seated in a lotus position, his arms stretched out, and his hands touching the walls on either side of him. He uses all of his energy to power up the illumination, magical traps, and powerful glyphs still active in this section of the dungeon, focusing most of his remaining strengths to ensure that the demon lord imprisoned at the heart of the prison remains trapped.

The leader of the Children of the Inner Light is blind, deaf, and in an extremely weakened state. Cyrlebrai acts as a temporary power source to keep the lights, wards, and traps of the angels' base active. He is also responsible for powering up the magical prison that binds the demon lord Krasveshk in Room G100. He has done this for too long, however, and his life force is seeping out of him.

Cyrlebrai is not aware of what goes on around him. He does not see or hear the PCs, nor can he interact them. Even Evalan (see Room G19), his second in command, lost the ability to communicate with the leader of the Order. Cyrlebrai is the only one who can disconnect himself from the intricate magical network to which his body, mind, and soul are merged. Even though it is draining his life away, he refuses to stop fuelling the network. To do so would mean putting the members of the Order in peril; without the illumination he provides and the protective magical devices he keeps activated, the Children of the Inner Light would be at the mercy of the more powerful demonic host that controls a great portion of the Region. More importantly, the powerful demon Krasveshk would be set free, and that would be chaotic.

Because removing Cyrlebrai's hands from the walls and disconnecting him from the complex magical network in which he channels all his energies by force might kill him, Evalan's only hope is to uncover the only relic that can serve as a power source: The sacred flame of Ananas. This potent artifact is in the hands of the fiendish army and is found somewhere in the southeast portion of the Region (but the angels do not know that).

Placing this artifact upon the throne on the northern branch allows it to tap into the dungeon's power source — which automatically relieves Cyrlebrai of the task that is killing him. When the sacred flame of Ananas is placed there, the throne is shrouded in a white light and a powerful beam of pure energy connects it with the walls on both sides. The item fuels the lights, traps, and wards of this section — as well as the force wall keeping the lord Kraveshk prisoner — which allows Cyrlebrai to slowly regain consciousness.

Cyrlebrai is dying and he relies on the celestial couatl (hp 62) for protection. This creature is extremely loyal to the solar angel and does everything in its power to protect its master. If members of the Children of the Inner Light accompany the PCs, the celestial couatl does not threaten them in any way, but if they stumble into this Room by themselves its initial reaction is to determine whether they are friend or foe (using its psionics abilities). It communicates with the PCs telepathically. If the PCs exchange with the creature, it orders them to leave the Room. If they threaten or touch Cyrlebrai in any way, it attacks them.

Tactics: If combat ensues here, the couatl uses its ethereal jaunt to the best of its capability. It uses its spells against the PCs and fights intelligently, never wavering from its initial goal of protecting Cyrlebrai.

Smite Evil (Su): Once per day, the couatl can make a normal melee attack to deal an additional 9 points of damage against an evil target.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a couatl must hit a creature of up to two size categories larger with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 16, initial damage 2d4 Str, secondary damage 4d4 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Psionics (Sp): At will—detect chaos, detect evil, detect good, detect law, detect thoughts (DC 15), invisibility, plane shift (DC 20), polymorph (self only). Effective caster level 9th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Spells: A couatl casts spells as a 9th-level sorcerer. It can choose its spells known from the sorcerer list, the cleric list, and from the lists for the Air, Good, and Law domains. The cleric spells and domain spells are considered arcane spells for a couatl, meaning that the creature does not need a divine focus to cast them.

Telepathy (Su): A couatl can communicate telepathically with any creature within 90 feet that has an Intelligence score. The creature can respond to the couatl if it wishes — no common language is needed.

[Note: Normally the celestial template cannot be applied to an outsider, but as this couatl is older than time and defies stricture.]

* Domain spell. Domains: Air and War.

Protective Aura (Su): Against attacks made or effects created by evil creatures, this ability provides a +4 deflection bonus to AC and a +4 resistance bonus on saving throws to anyone within 20 ft. of the angel. Otherwise, it functions as a magic circle against evil effect and a lesser globe of invulnerability, both with a radius of 20 ft. (caster level 20th). This aura can be dispelled, but the angel can create it again as a free action on its next turn. (The defensive benefits from the circle are not included in an angel's statistics block.)

Tongues (Su): All angels can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using a tongues spell (caster level 20th). This ability is always active.

[The above represents Cyrlebrai as his full strength, when first freed from powering the wards, his Con would be 10 and he would not have access to any of his spells, their divine energy having already been expended.]

G6. SEALED TREASURE VAULT THREE

The door opening into this vault is locked and trapped. Anyone touching the door activates its magical device. A DC 30 Open Lock check is required to unlock this door.

Darkness fills this simple room, which contains a stone altar upon which a silver metal trinket can be seen. The trinket, which is an amulet marked with a multitude of deeply carved runes, rests upon a small square piece of embroidered cloth made of pure black silk.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The trinket lying upon the stone altar at the center of the Room is a talisman of ultimate evil.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add an incendiary cloud to the power word stun trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the power word stun trap with a with an acid fog trap.

G7. SECOND HOUND ARCHONS' BARRACKS

The eastern and western walls of this small room are covered with three-story high bunk beds under which are many small wooden chests. Upon the north wall, piled on either side of the door, are a dozen broad blade swords.

There are eighteen bunk beds in this room, half of them holding wounded warriors. The muscular bodies of these human-looking men with canine faces are bandaged with bloody strips of white linen. It is obvious these beings were recently involved in combat.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This barracks normally houses eighteen hound archons: The nine warriors present in this chamber; the four standing guard in Room G9 (which have just been reassigned from Room G30 to replace fallen comrades); the three who were petrified by the basilisk in Room G9; and two currently patrolling the base.

The nine wounded hound archons in this Room (hp 20 each) serve as a reserve guard. Their primary duty is to relieve the warriors guarding Room G9 and prevent anyone from venturing in Rooms G5, G6, and G8. Like the warriors from Room G3, they sleep in shifts and keep the door to their barracks open at all times.

Tactics: The hound archon warriors lying on their beds recently survived the brutal attack of the abyssal basilisk in Room G9. They are now nursing their wounds. Unless a member of their group accompanies the PCs, they react badly to their presence in this part of the complex and attack them on sight.

Treasure: There are eighteen small wooden chests under the lower bunks, which hold the hound archons' personal effects. The only items of interest here are a golden necklace (worth 100 gp), a small ivory amulet in the shape of a wolf's head (worth 50 gp), and a beautifully crafted masterwork jeweled dagger with tiny pieces of emeralds encrusted in its pommel (worth 750 gp).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 4 paladin levels to four of the hound archons. To decrease the challenge, remove three hound archons.

• Hound Archon: CR 4; Medium outsider (archon, extraplanar, good, lawful); HD 6d8+6; hp 20 each (38, 37, 35, 34, 33, 33, 33, 31, 29 when fully healed); Init +4; Spd 40 ft.; AC 19, touch 10, flat-footed 19; Base Atk +6; Grp +8; Atk +8 melee (1d8+2, bite) or +8 melee (2d6+3/19–20, greatsword); Full Atk +8 melee (1d8+2, bite) and +3 melee (1d4+1,

Aura of Menace (Su): A righteous aura surrounds archons that fight or get angry. Any hostile creature within a 20-ft. radius of an archon must succeed on a DC 16 Will save to resist its effects. The save DC is Charisma-based. Those who fail take a –2 penalty on attacks, AC, and saves for 24 hours or until they successfully hit the archon that generated the aura. A creature that has resisted or broken the effect cannot be affected again by the same archon's aura for 24 hours.

Change Shape (Su): A hound archon can assume any canine form of Small to Large size. While in canine form, the hound archon loses its bite, slam, and greatsword attacks, but gains the bite attack of the form it chooses. For the purposes of this ability, canines include any doglike or wolflike animal of the animal type.

Teleport (Su): Archons can use greater teleport at will, as the spell (caster level 14th), except that the creature can transport only itself and up to 50 lbs of objects. Within the confines of this dungeon, the hound archon can only teleport within line of sight.

Tongues (Su): All archons can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using a tongues spell (caster level 14th). This ability is always active.

G8. EMPTY SEALED TREASURE VAULT

Though this vault contains nothing of interest, its door is locked and trapped. This door can be unlocked with a successful DC 28 Open Lock check.

The magical trap protecting the vault is triggered as soon as anyone touches the door.

• Waves of Exhaustion Trap: CR 8; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (waves of exhaustion, 17th-level wizard, no save); multiple targets (all targets within a 60-ft. long cone shaped burst centered upon the door); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32.

No light illuminates this small chamber. In the midst of this square vault is a stone altar. The smooth tablet making up the top surface of this altar holds nothing of any value.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Like Rooms G2, G4, and G6, this chamber was designed to imprison a potent evil artifact. When the Children of the Inner Light placed the powerful relics in the other three vaults, they decided to keep this extra Room empty in case they would stumble upon another item of vile potency during their war against the demonic hoards.

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a power word stun to the waves of exhaustion trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the waves of exhaustion trap with a fire trap.

G9. SACKED HOUND ARCHONS' GUARD POST

A heavy iron grate filled with spikes pointing downward is suspended from the ceiling of the corridor leading to the southern double doors and another leading to the northern open hallway. The 10 ft. square grate covers most of this hallway and the area directly under it is filled with well hidden pressure plates, making it impossible to walk this length of floor without stepping on at least one of them.

♦ Grate Trap: CR 9; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; grate moves down (12d6, crushing); multiple targets (all targets in a 10-ft. by 10-ft. area); never miss; onset delay (1 round); Search DC 34; Disable Device 34.

This large room has been clearly been ransacked by a recent attack. The remains of countless creatures are scattered upon the floor. Bones of different shapes and hues, the mummified clawed hand of a demonic fiend, and several crushed skulls with tiny horns and long fangs are in disarray. Some of these bones cling to the walls upon which they were originally displayed. A wide table, broken in two, was thrown to one side and three wooden benches lay broken in the mist of the chaos.

What is most surprising about this room, however, is the fact that there are three stone statues of men with a well-toned human bodies and canine heads. These statues are well made, and intricately detailed. Each statue is in a unique position and each holds a massive sword, in an attack stance.

There are also four muscular men with dog-like faces in the room, each baring an uncanny resemblance to the stone statues.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The abyssal basilisk from Room G27 recently attacked this Room. It broke the doors upon the north wall, petrified three unsuspecting guards, and killed four others before it was eventually driven off by Ezekaim (Room G5) and Labarus, who now guards the place with three of his men. Though the recent raid weakened the hound archon forces charged with the protection of the area, the Room was nevertheless secured again, and the northern doors were barricaded as best as they could be (threat as barred doors).

Labarus (hp 64) and three hound archons (hp 37, 35, 31) now guard this Room. Though they are weary of the basilisk's return, they are confident that since they know what to expect they will be better able to fend the creature off. Labarus is also equipped with a great horn, which he will blast if the abyssal creature returns, thus alerting everyone of the monster's presence in Rooms G5, G7, and G10 succeeding at a DC 18 Listen check.

Labarus is eager to find heroes who might help him defeat the basilisk. He is thus more open to parley with the PCs and a successful Diplomacy check (with a ++ circumstance bonus in favor of the party) changes his Initial Attitude; unless he senses the PCs are evil, in which case he might view them as hostile. If the PCs agree to hunt down the basilisk for him, he promises them an appointment with the leader of his order (which he suspects might want to recruit the heroes to battle the evil minions). Labarus will not leave his post or allow any of his men to, but he will inform the PCs where to find the basilisk.

Tactics: If the PCs engages the Labarus and his men in combat, he uses his horn to alert his compatriots, blowing into it for 1d3 round, while his three subordinates position themselves to defend him. Labarus joins his warriors in the fight as soon as he has used his horn. If he feels the PCs are strong combatants, he does not hesitate to use his potion of bull's strength.

Treasure: There are no treasures in this Room except for what Labarus carries: his enchanted axe, a potion of bull's strength (four doses), a polished bone fragment from a retriever demon (worthless), and a simple horn carved from ivory (worth 150 gp).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four hound archons and increase the damage of the grate trap to 16d6. To decrease the challenge, remove two paladin levels from Labarus and reduce the damage of the grate trap to 8d6.

Detect Evil (Sp): At will, Labarus can use detect evil, as the spell.

Smite Evil (Su): Once per day, Labarus may attempt to smite evil with one normal melee attack. He adds his Charisma bonus (+2) to her attack roll and deals 4 extra points of damage. If Labarus accidentally smites a creature that is not evil, the smite has no effect, but the ability is still used up for that day.

Divine Grace (Su): Labarus gains a bonus equal to his Charisma bonus (+2) on all saving throws.

Lay on Hands (Su): Labarus can heal wounds (his own or those of others) by touch. Each day he can heal a total of 8 hit points of damage. Labarus may choose to divide his healing among multiple recipients, and he doesn't have to use it all at once. Using lay on hands is a standard action.

Aura of Courage (Su): Labarus is immune to fear (magical or otherwise). Each ally within 10 feet of her gains a +4 morale bonus on saving throws against fear effects.

This ability functions while the paladin is conscious, but not if he is unconscious or dead.

Divine Health (Ex): Labarus has immunity to all diseases, including supernatural and magical diseases.

G10. ASTRAL DEVA QUARTERS

This chamber has two narrow beds, a round wooden table, and a couple of chairs. Like most rooms and hallways in this section, the room is illuminated by an unknown source.

There are two beautiful creatures here. They resemble tall, well-built, human women with large feathery white wings. Their skin glows with a strong inner radiance that is both intriguing and disquieting. One of them stands close to the doorway, holding a nasty-looking mace, while the other sits cross-legged upon one of the beds.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room serves as both the dormitory and guard post of two astral deva angels (hp 105, 101). Originally in charge of preventing demons from entering the base of the Children of the Inner Light from Room G27, these warriors are now responsible for making sure the door north of their dormitory remains blocked by debris from the other side as well as providing support to the archon warriors in Room G9.

Though the astral deva angels are at first unfriendly to anyone venturing within the confines their base, they might be interested in recruiting non-evil PCs. If the PCs parley with them, the angels might even allow them to venture in the other areas of the base or arrange a meeting with their leader. If the PCs offer to help them in their fight against the infernal hosts, they are willing to provide healing to anyone who requires it.

Tactics: If the PCs attack the astral deva angels, the one guarding the door wields her mace to prevent anyone from entering the chamber while the other uses her spells to aid her companion and hinder the PCs. If one of them falls in combat, the other uses invisibility to make good her escape and alert others in the complex.

Treasure: There are no treasures in this Room except for the angels' weapons and one pure white and perfectly round fresh water pearl one of the angels is carrying (worth 1,450 gp).

Protective Aura (Su): Against attacks made or effects created by evil creatures, this ability provides a +4 deflection bonus to AC and a +4 resistance bonus on saving throws to anyone within 20 ft. of the angel. G11. FIRST TRUMPET ARCHONS' BARRACKS

Two thin, tall males with bluish skin, hairless scalps, and large feathery wings sit upon the beds.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The trumpet archons in this Room view any invasion of their privacy as a violation of ethics. Though they might not attack trespassers on sight, they will not hesitate to initiate combat with anyone they deem evil.

Tactics: The warriors in this Room are open to discussion with non-evil adventurers who make good use of the Diplomacy skill. If forced into a fight, one of the archons charges the PCs while the other uses his trumpet to weaken their opponents and alert their comrades in Rooms G10, who automatically hear the sound and come to the archons' aid 1d3 rounds later. Creatures in Room G15 and G16 are also allowed a DC 20 Listen check to hear the trumpet call. If they do, they rush to the rescue of their comrades in 1d4+1 rounds.

Treasure: The basin is filled with the equivalent of 5 vials of holy water. The silken sheets upon the beds are of good quality and each is worth upwards of 30 gp. Each of the chest holds sumptuous silken cloths (worth 150 gp in total), several blank scroll pages, two scroll cases fashioned from the purple bones of an unknown creature (worth 100 gp each), as well as 5 one-ounce vials of ink and two quills made from the long yellow feathers of a strange bird (worth 30 gp each).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one trumpet archon. To decrease the challenge, remove one of them.

*Domain spell. Domains: Good and Law (Cast good and law spells at +1 caster level).

Trumpet (Su): An archon's trumpet produces music of utter clarity, piercing beauty, and, if the trumpet archon wills it, paralyzing awe. All creatures except archons within 100 ft. of the blast must succeed on a DC 19 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 1d4 rounds. The save DC is Charisma-based. The archon can also command its trumpet to become a +4 greatsword as a free action.

If a trumpet is ever stolen, it becomes a chunk of useless metal until the owner can recover it.

Aura of Menace (Su): A righteous aura surrounds archons that fight or get angry. Any hostile creature within a 20-ft. radius of an archon must succeed on a DC 21 Will save to resist its effects. The save DC is Charisma-based. Those who fail take a –2 penalty on attacks, AC, and saves for 24 hours or until they successfully hit the archon that generated the aura. A creature that has resisted or broken the effect cannot be affected again by the same archon's aura for 24 hours.

Teleport (Su): Archons can use greater teleport at will, as the spell (caster level 14th), except that the creature can transport only itself and up to 50 lbs of objects. Within the confines of this dungeon, the hound archon can only teleport within line of sight.

Tongues (Su): All archons can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using a tongues spell (caster level 14th). This ability is always active.

Possessions: Trumpet (see above).

Inscribed upon the unlocked but closed door of this chamber is a symbol of insanity. This ward is triggered as soon as anyone steps within 20 ft. of it.

G13. SECOND TRUMPET ARCHONS' BARRACKS

Lined up upon the northern and southern walls of this room are two long and narrow beds with blue sheets of silks. Iron chests lay at the feet of the two beds and a basin of white marble stands between them along the west wall. The basin is filled with a crystal clear liquid.

G15. ASTRAL DEVA GUARD ROOM

This chamber has no furniture and no other decorative features, but two muscular beings resembling extremely tall and handsome human males with large wings of long white feathers stand on either side of the eastern door. They hold heavy maces and their bodies seem to burn with a potent inner light, making it hard to look directly upon them.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The two astral deva angels (hp 114 and 98) on duty here are responsible for preventing anyone from entering the corridor leading to Rooms G18 and G19. They take their duty seriously, but non-evil PCs might be able to convince them they can give the Children of the Inner Light a helping hand. If they do, these angels escort the PCs to Evalan in the war Room (Room G19). Like most members of their order, they refuse to have any dealings with evil beings and attack anyone who threatens the sanctity of their base.

Tactics: If forced into combat, these warriors use their heavy maces to strike down their opponents. They work well together and coordinate their efforts to flank their opponents, often targeting the same creature until felling it. They prefer to attack well-armed and heavily armored warriors first.

If there is a battle here, allow the inhabitants of Room G16 and G19 a DC 22 Listen check to notice the ruckus. If they do, they come to investigate within 1d3+1 rounds.

EL: 16

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, double the number of astral deva angels on duty. To decrease the challenge, remove one of the astral deva angels.

G16. ASTRAL DEVA PRIVATE QUARTERS

Two tall creatures with human features — one male and one female — are resting here. Massive wings of graying white can be seen protruding from their backs. Their honed bodies emanate a powerful light, which makes looking directly at them difficult. Each one holds a crystal goblet filled with rosy nectar.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Two astral deva angels (hp 112, 101) are resting here. They talk about the trouble plaguing the Children of the Inner Light — notably Cyrebrai's precarious health and the recent intrusion of the abyssal basilisk in Room G9. Though they are suspicious of strangers, these angels are more than willing to discuss with non-evil folks; especially if these seem to be fit heroes who might lend a helping hand to their cause. The angels do not negotiate with evil characters, however, and do not hesitate to engage such foes in melee.

Tactics: If forced into battle, these highly trained warriors wield their heavy maces and close in upon the PCs. They use their spell-like abilities to aid their comrade if needed.

Treasure: In addition to the weapons they carry, the male angel wears a golden armband shaped like a two-inches wide ring of long and wide bird feathers (worth 300 gp). The silken drapes decorating the walls are of exquisite quality and worth a total of 30 gp.

G17. ASTRAL DEVA CHAMBERS

This well illuminated room contains a pair of long two-story high bunk beds covered with silken sheets of a pale green shade. Under each of the bunks are two long and flat wooden chests. Like the only room leading into this chamber, thick strips of deep blue silk decorate the walls.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is the private chamber of four astral deva angels: Two are currently guarding Room G15 while the other two are relaxing in Room G16. These angels take turns guarding Room G15. When they are not on duty, they can either be found here (when sleeping) or in Room G16.

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The four wooden chests under the bunk beds hold the astral deva angels' possessions: Various clothes made out of silk and fine wool of various shapes and shades (worth a total of 200 gp) and six bloodstones (worth 75 gp each).

Treasure: This Room contains a wide variety of mundane suits of armors and weapons that the Children of the Inner Light collected from their enemies or fallen allies over the centuries. None of these items are magical or of masterwork quality, but every arm and armor listed in the PHB can be found here. Most of the items are in good shape, but they require a thorough cleaning — and the blades need sharpening — since they have not been used in years.

G19. WAR ROOM

A massive dark green marble table lays in the center of this room. Upon it is a map made out of pure white parchment. The map depicts a large dungeon complex, complete with rooms and corridors, and marks indicating creatures' lairs, doors, traps, and other special features. The map is intricately detailed and several notes were written upon it. A dozen chairs carved out of solid oak are lined up around the table.

A tall and shapely female being with emerald skin and large white feathery wings upon her back stands beside the table. The creature, which resembles an unnaturally attractive bald human woman with fiery eyes, wears silken robes in blues and pinks. A long-handled sword is sheathed into a leathery scabbard decorated with three bright diamonds at her side.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The creature in this chamber is Evalan, a powerful planetary angel (hp 152) and Cyrlebrai's second in command. The acting commander of the Order of the Children of the Inner Light is a proud and compassionate being. Unless the PCs are evil, she does everything in her power to parley with them and assess their worth and honor.

Her goal is to recruit a party of non-evil adventurers able to locate, steal, and bring back the sacred flame of Aranas, a unique crystal relic powerful enough to energize the magical lights, traps, and wards of the angels' base. This artifact would allow Cyrlebrai to stop using his life force to fuel the complex magical network of this Region of the dungeon, and thus perhaps save the solar angel's life (see Room G5 for more details).

Evalan, however, does not know where to find the sacred flame of Arana. She believes it is somewhere in this Region and that a powerful creature — possibly a demon — has it, but she does not know where to look for it. The acting commander of the celestial order also knows the layout of the Region. Though the map on the table is not complete, it still shows most of the Rooms and corridors in the Region. It also reveals all the traps and wards protecting the angels' base of operation.

More importantly, perhaps, is the fact that Evalan is aware of the various factions ruling over the different sections of the Region. She willingly reveals any of this information to the PCs, provided she believes them to be non-evil and able to help — or at the very least not hinder — the Children of the Inner Light's cause.

If the PCs agree to seek out the sacred flame of Arana for her, Evalan, in a simple ceremony, offers them silver medallions. These medallions are obviously valuable and bear the symbol of the celestial order: A flaming greatsword encircled by a band of long feathers. These items are magical and allow their wearers to use detect evil, guidance, and daylight, each once per day as cast by a 20th-level cleric. More importantly, the medallions identify them as honorary members of the Children of the Inner Light. While wearing them, the Initial Attitude of all members of the order (i.e. all angels and archons in this Region) moves one step towards Friendly.

Tactics: Evalan does not negotiate with evil adventurers or PCs endangering her or the members of her order. If pushed or threatened, she attacks the PCs using her earthquake, power word stun, and waves of fatigue, spell-like abilities. In melee, she prefers to target the strongest-looking combatant first, concentrating her strikes on a single warrior at a time until he is either killed or otherwise incapacitated.

In battle, Evalan also utter loud yet melodious cries to alert the warriors in Rooms G15, G21, and G23. Allow every creature in these Rooms a DC 20 Listen check. Success means they hear their leader's voice and come to her aid 1d3+1 rounds thereafter.

Treasure: Evalan carries no treasure save for her sword and scabbard. The latter is not magical but decorated with diamonds. It is worth upwards of 3,000 gp. Eight medallions of Evalan's celestial order (as described above) can be found in a hidden drawer under the table. A successful DC 25 Search check is required to notice the secret compartment. Evalan also has in her possession a tiny silvery key, which unlocks the drawers of the desk in her private sanctum (Room G20).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase Evalan's Hit Dice to 21 and increase the magical bonus of her weapon to +4. To decrease the challenge, make her an astral deva angel.

Protective Aura (Su): Against attacks made or effects created by evil creatures, this ability provides a +4 deflection bonus to AC and a +4 resistance bonus on saving throws to anyone within 20 ft. of the angel. Otherwise, it functions as a magic circle against evil effect and a lesser globe of invulnerability, both with a radius of 20 ft. (caster level 14th). This aura can be dispelled, but the angel can create it again as a free action on its next turn. (The defensive benefits from the circle are not included in an angel's statistics block.)

Tongues (Su): All angels can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using a tongues spell (caster level 14th). This ability is always active.

G20. EVALAN'S PRIVATE CHAMBER

The entrance of this chamber is rigged with a powerful holy word trap. This magical device is triggered as soon as any non-good creature steps inside the corridor. Anyone within a 20-ft. radius of the hallway is affected by the trap's power.

♣ Holy Word Trap: CR 8; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (holy word, 13th-level cleric); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32.

A massive desk made out of varnished birch dominates the northwest portion of this room. Upon the west wall is a large bed with silvery sheets. Feathery pillows of the deepest blue cover portions of the bed. What is most surprising about this chamber, however, are the colorful paintings masking the ceiling, walls, and floor.

The paintings depict various scenes, from the luscious wilderness of a woodland grove in spring upon the lower portions of the walls to the clear blue sky of day above it and upon the high ceiling. The floor is painted with grassy and rocky formations with small streams and rivers coursing through. The images are so vivid and their effects so impressive that stepping into this room is almost like setting foot outside.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This chamber is where Evalan rests. An artist of considerable talent, the acting commander of the Children of the Inner Light painted the floor, walls, and ceiling of her private abode to remind her of the things she misses most — of the things she will one day reunite with if she is successful in her mission. Though the paintings are ancient (for the artist decorated this Room many centuries ago), they are still beautiful, with vivid colors and detailed patterns.

There is no one in this Room at the moment, but Evalan can be found here when she rests which is seldom these days.

Tactics: N/A

The wide birch desk in this Room has three drawers: Two small ones and a larger taking up more than half of the desk. All are locked and a tiny keyhole is visible upon the face of each of them. Evalan (in Room G19) has the key that unlocks them. Otherwise, three separate successful DC 30 Open Lock checks are required to open them.

Treasure: The large drawer contains a silvery shield. The edges of the item are decorated with long golden feathers, forming a thick circle around the outline of the shield. A broad-bladed golden sword in relief completes the shield's decoration. The silver and gold item is of exquisite quality and it is obvious that a master smith crafted it. A successful DC 30 Knowledge (local), DC 30 Knowledge (nobility and royalty) or DC 35 Profession (weapon smith) reveals that one Findor of the Keep, a renowned elven weapons' crafter who lived thousands of years ago, fashioned the shield. Cyrlebrai offered the item to Evalan when she was ordained into the celestial order. It functions as a +3 large steel shield of bashing.

The first small drawer contains twelve vials of ink of various colors, a pot of deep blue sealing wax, five quills made out of long rainbow patterned feathers (worth twenty times as much as regular quills), and a silver seal with the heraldic symbol of the Children of the Inner Light, a fiery sword amidst a circle of long feathers (worth 500 gp).

The second small drawer holds seven navy blue candles, fifty-three sheets of pure white parchment, and a silver scroll case embedded with three deep blue sapphires (worth upwards of 1,800 gp).

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a power word stun to the holy word trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the holy word trap with a symbol of sleep.

G21. RECREATION ROOM

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The two astral deva angels (hp 104, 101) have recently returned from a raid against the demonic army. They discuss the failed raid in low tones. Though they are extremely suspicious of strangers, these angels are willing to talk with non-evil adventurers, even those who enter their Room uninvited. They do not negotiate with evil characters and attack such foes instantly.

In battle, the angels utter loud yet melodious cries that might alert their comrades in Rooms G19, 23, and 25. Allow creatures in these Rooms a DC 20 Listen check to notice the angels' cry. If they do, they come charging into the fray 1d3+1 rounds later.

EL: 16

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, double the number of astral deva angels present in the Room. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

G23. TRAINING ROOM

The high ceiling of this chamber is covered with dark blue paint along with white and silvery dots, which obviously represent the night sky. The hall is illuminated by an unknown light source, and both the eastern and western walls are filled with large weapons' racks containing all sorts of armaments: From the tiniest blades to the double headed axes favored by the dwarves and orcs. There are swords, hammers, bows and arrows, clubs, axes, picks, halberds, tridents, rapiers, maces, spears, lances, crossbows and bolts, as well as various other more exotic weapons such as kukris, spiked chains, dire flails, two-bladed swords, nets, dwarven urgroshes, and shurikens.

A powerfully built being with two large feathery wings issuing from his back stands in the middle of the hall. He holds a two-bladed sword, which he swirls in the air in front of him. The creature resembles a human male but his face is unnaturally handsome and his skin radiates.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This chamber serves training grounds for members of the Children of the Inner Light who wish to hone their combat skills. In order to ready themselves to face any battle situation, a multitude of arms were brought into this chamber. These are all neatly stacked upon the weapons' racks lined on the east and west walls.

Farnas, an astral deva angel (hp 112) is currently practicing combat maneuvers here. He wields one of the mundane two-bladed swords, which are part of the many weapons stored in this Room. His favored weapon, a +3 heavy mace of disruption, is secured upon his belt.

Tactics: Farnas is suspicious of strangers and eager for battle. He charges anyone he deems evil or unworthy of traveling through the base of the celestial order. He prefers to use the two-bladed sword he practiced with, targeting the most heavily armed combatant first.

If the PCs are non-evil and pose no threat to him, he challenges the party to a friendly (non-lethal damage) duel. If the PCs agree to face him and fight with honor, he offers to take them to his leader.

Treasure: The weapons racks in this chamber hold approximately two hundred mundane weapons of all types, sizes, and makes. All weapons from the Player's Handbook™ can be found here, including ammunition for bows, crossbows, and slings.

The astral deva angel carries a +3 heavy mace of disruption and wears a well-crafted golden necklace worth upwards 300 gp.

G24. EMPTY ASTRAL DEVA CHAMBER

A pair of long but narrow two-story high bunk beds covered with pale rose silk sheets dominates this chamber. Flat and narrow chests made of solid oak can be seen under each of the bunk beds and strips of deep blue silken drapes adorn the walls.

G25. WOUNDED ASTRAL DEVA CHAMBER

This room holds two long two-story high bunk beds draped with pale rose silken sheets. Two flat chests of solid oak can be found under each bed, and thick silken drapes of the deepest blue adorn the four walls of this chamber.

Two powerfully built humanoid-looking males with powerful feathery wings lay in their respective bunks. Their battered bodies are wrapped in bandages. A third sits upon the edge of one of the lower bunks, praying in silent meditation.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: There are three astral deva angels in this Room (hp 35, 62, and 104). Two are lying in their beds. They are heavily wounded and wrapped in white bandages. The other is taking care of them. These warriors recently decided to take matters into their own hands and attacked the powerful demonic forces controlling the underground lava river. They lost one of their comrades in the fray and are currently content to nurse their wounds and bruised egos.

Tactics: These three warriors are angry at any intrusion into their space. While the healthy angel quickly engages the party in melee, his companions use their spell-like abilities to turn themselves invisible and then provide aid to their comrade. It is important to note the curative abilities of these astral deva angels have already been spent for the day.

Once engaged in combat, these angels utter loud battle cries to alert their compatriots in Rooms G19, G21, and G23. A successful DC 20 Listen check alerts all creatures in those Rooms and they rush to aid the angels 1d3+1 rounds later.

Treasure: The four wooden chests under the beds hold the astral deva angels' possessions: Many articles of clothing fashioned from colorful silks and fine wool (worth about 190 gp altogether).

In addition, the door has a complex lock and requires a successful DC 35 Open Lock check to unlock.

In addition to the intense breath of hot air brought on by the underground lava flow, a loathsome stench pervades this area of the dungeon. Many bones are scattered around the edges of this large hall and a massive mound of dirt, crushed stones, rotted clothes, and broken skeletons is piled up in the southern portion of the room.

Amidst the loathsome refuse is a large reptilian atrocity. It lays there waiting with long, thin, and sharp spikes protruding from its rounded back. Its wide-open mouth reveals sharp yellowish white fangs and a long forked tongue, but it is the creature's gaze which is truly disquieting.

Encounter: An abyssal greater basilisk (hp 187) uses this Room to accumulate the remains of its victims as well as the debris it finds on the underground lava riverbank.

This basilisk recently raided Room G9, paralyzing three hound archons and killing four others in its wake. The combined forces of its victims' companions, however, eventually drove it off of the place. The fiend now roams the southern bank of the underground lava stream, keeping for the most part to itself in this area but occasionally venturing to its nest in Room G29.

Tactics: The abyssal greater basilisk is a bloodthirsty vicious fiend. Unlike most of its kind, it does not rely on its petrifying gaze ability to diminish the PCs' threat before launching its attack against them. In fact, it sees the PCs as easy prey compared to the mighty angelic beings it recently faced.

A PC looking through the refuse succeeding at a DC 25 Search check uncovers the hidden door on the south wall. The door is completely blocked by the rubbish and it takes a party of four adventurers 30 minutes to clear up the debris in front of it.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one abyssal greater basilisk and add a second poisoned scythe that strikes a target in an adjacent 5-ft. square. To decrease the challenge, reduce the abyssal greater basilisk's hit points to 140 (and assume it has not fully recuperated from its fight with the Children of the Inner Light in Room G9).

Petrifying Gaze (Su): Turn to stone permanently, range 30 feet; Fortitude DC 21 negates. The save DC is Charisma-based. This basilisk's gaze is powerful enough to harm celestials and anyone else immune to petrification.

This room is furnished with two long wooden tables and stools. There are currently three creatures in the room: A tall and slender female with pale green skin, white robes, and large feathery wings upon her back as well as two stout males with muscular human-like bodies and the heads of dogs. The males sit at one of the tables, talking in low tones, while the angelic being stands in front of the barrels, a gleaming silver trumpet in hand.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The female trumpet archon (hp 122) and the two hound archons (hp 35 and 33) are not anticipating any trouble. They have come to the mess hall, as they often do, to enjoy the company of their peers and relax.

Tactics: The archons prefer to parley than fight, but if the PCs threaten them in anyway they do not hesitate to teach a lesson to those who would violate their base of operation. The trumpet archon's first move is to use the magic of her instrument to paralyze her foes.

Aura of Menace (Su): A righteous aura surrounds archons that fight or get angry. Any hostile creature within a 20-ft. radius of an archon must succeed on a DC 16 Will save to resist its effects. The save DC is Charisma-based. Those who fail take a –2 penalty on attacks, AC, and saves for 24 hours or until they successfully hit the archon that generated the aura. A creature that has resisted or broken the effect cannot be affected again by the same archon's aura for 24 hours.

Change Shape (Su): A hound archon can assume any canine form of Small to Large size. While in canine form, the hound archon loses its bite, slam, and greatsword attacks, but gains the bite attack of the form it chooses. For the purposes of this ability, canines include any doglike or wolflike animal of the animal type.

Teleport (Su): Archons can use greater teleport at will, as the spell (caster level 14th), except that the creature can transport only itself and up to 50 lbs of objects. Within the confines of this dungeon, the hound archon can only teleport within line of sight.

Tongues (Su): All archons can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using a tongues spell (caster level 14th). This ability is always active.

Trumpet (Su): An archon's trumpet produces music of utter clarity, piercing beauty, and, if the trumpet archon wills it, paralyzing awe. All creatures except archons within 100 ft. of the blast must succeed on a DC 19 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 1d4 rounds. The save DC is Charisma-based. The archon can also command its trumpet to become a +4 greatsword as a free action.

Aura of Menace (Su): A righteous aura surrounds archons that fight or get angry. Any hostile creature within a 20-ft. radius of an archon must succeed on a DC 21 Will save to resist its effects. The save DC is Charisma-based. Those who fail take a –2 penalty on attacks, AC, and saves for 24 hours or until they successfully hit the archon that generated the aura. A creature that has resisted or broken the effect cannot be affected again by the same archon's aura for 24 hours.

Teleport (Su): Archons can use greater teleport at will, as the spell (caster level 14th), except that the creature can transport only itself and up to 50 lbs of objects. Within the confines of this dungeon, the hound archon can only teleport within line of sight.

G29. ABYSSAL BASILISK'S LAIR

The door on the south wall is completely blocked and hidden by the basilisk's nest. PCs who move stone rubble to search the nest uncover the door with a successful DC 25 Search check.

The blocked door is trapped. Anyone touching it triggers its magical mechanism. The potent spell of the trap affects everyone within a 20-ft. radius cone from the door.

♦ Ice Storm Trap: CR 5; magic device; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (ice storm, 16th-level wizard, 3d6 bludgeoning damage and 2d6 cold damage to anyone within the area); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

This area opens on the bank of the mighty underground stream that passes through this Region of the dungeon. A massive pile of broken stones, corroded weapons, ruined pieces of armors and shields, and dried algae block the southern part of the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room serves as the abyssal basilisk's lair. Although the creature only comes here to hide treasures and sleep, it can be encountered here if it escaped the PCs' in Room G27.

Tactics: If the basilisk is prepared for the PCs, add the Ambush Encounter Condition and grant it a +4 bonus to its Initiative check.

Treasure: PCs who actively search through the rubble of the nest and who succeed at a DC 30 Search check find a +2 throwing axe of thundering, a bone scroll tube, and an ancient medallion.

The dirty bronze medallion has two small crossed hammers engraved upon it, as well as a wreath of leaves forming a circle around it. At first glance, the trinket appears to be worthless, but a successful DC 30 Knowledge (history) check reveals the insignia is from an ancient dynasty. As such, it is worth upwards of up to 1,000 gp to dwarves and collectors who know of its true value.

The bone scroll, an intricate work of art from an ancient tribal people, is engraved with many runes (it worth 100 gp). It contains an arcane scroll with acid fog, cone of cold, mass bear's endurance, wall of force, and waves of fatigue. If cast directly from the scroll, the spells are all considered enlarged, but are normal when transcribed to a spellbook.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a symbol of sleep to the ice storm trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the ice storm trap with a burning hands trap.

G30. EMPTY CHAMBER

This small room contains three-tiered bunk beds. Under these beds are six small wooden coffer reinforced with iron. A tiny wooden table completes the furniture.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Until recently, this Room housed four hound archons, but these warriors were reassigned to the barracks in Room G7. They now guard Room G9. There is a 50% chance that a pair of hound archons from Room G9 are here on patrol.

Tactics: If the PCs spend 30 minutes in this Room, roll for a Random Encounter. Ignore the first roll that does not produce archons.

EL: N/A

G31. EMPTY CHAMBER

Tall, 3-bed high bunk beds dominates the north and south walls of this room. Under the beds are six small coffers made of out wood and iron. A simple table with an empty crystal vase upon it is lined up on the western wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room housed six hound archons once, but these warriors perished long ago. It is now unused. Should the PCs align themselves with the Children of the Inner Light and need a place to rest, Evalan makes this simple but comfortable chamber available to them.

Tactics: If the PCs spend 30 minutes in this Room, roll for a Random Encounter. Ignore the first roll that does not produce archons.

G32. HOUND ARCHON GUARD POST

The secret door leading to Room G34 is locked, but extremely noticeable from this side of the Room (a DC 20 Search check is enough to uncover it). This mechanism can be unlocked from inside the guard post, but PCs arriving from Room G34 must succeed at DC 35 Open Lock check in order to unlock the door.

This room has no furniture or decorations except for a big copper gong hanging in the southeast corner. A pair of powerfully built humanoid-looking creatures with canine heads guards each of the chamber's doors. These mighty warriors hold large swords and wear thick woolen clothes.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: There are four hound archons (hp 41, 36, 32, 29) in this Room. These warriors are responsible for ensuring no one enters their base without authorization. These hound archons are vigilant and take their duties seriously, for they know the horrors which lurk upon the south bank of the underground lava river as well as the fiends hiding in its boiling substance.

Non-evil PCs using tact and diplomacy might convince the hound archons they mean them no harm. If they do, one of the archons arranges a meeting with Evalan, provided the PCs offer to help them defeat the fiendish armies of the Region.

Tactics: If combat ensues here, one of the archons strikes the gong to alert all the warriors close by. He bangs on the gong for 1d4 consecutive rounds. Each round, allow all creatures in Rooms G23 and G28 a DC 24 Listen check to notice the alarm. If they do, one of them alerts Evalan in Room G19 and all present in the area, while the others move swiftly towards the guard post.

Meanwhile, the three remaining hound archons charge the opposition, hoping to prevent anyone from entering the base and fending off the attackers long enough for reinforcement to arrive. Because the hound archons fight so well together, they gain a +2 morale bonus to their Initiative check, Will saves, and AC against attacks of opportunity.

The largest hound archon considers himself the protector of the others and guards any escapes the group has to make.

Aura of Menace (Su): A righteous aura surrounds archons that fight or get angry. Any hostile creature within a 20-ft. radius of an archon must succeed on a DC 16 Will save to resist its effects. The save DC is Charisma-based. Those who fail take a –2 penalty on attacks, AC, and saves for 24 hours or until they successfully hit the archon that generated the aura. A creature that has resisted or broken the effect cannot be affected again by the same archon's aura for 24 hours.

Change Shape (Su): A hound archon can assume any canine form of Small to Large size. While in canine form, the hound archon loses its bite, slam, and greatsword attacks, but gains the bite attack of the form it chooses. For the purposes of this ability, canines include any doglike or wolflike animal of the animal type.

Teleport (Su): Archons can use greater teleport at will, as the spell (caster level 14th), except that the creature can transport only itself and up to 50 lbs. of objects. Within the confines of this dungeon, the hound archon can only teleport within line of sight.

Tongues (Su): All archons can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using a tongues spell (caster level 14th). This ability is always active.

Possessions: Greatsword.

G33. CYRLEBRAI'S PRIVATE SANCTUM

The only door leading to this Room is locked and trapped. A DC 40 Open Lock check is required to open it.

The trap is activated as soon as anyone passes through the door's threshold. It automatically resets itself at the end of the round it was activated, so anyone moving through the door again triggers the trap. Anyone standing within 20 ft. of the door is affected by the trap's effect.

✦ Holy Word Trap: CR 8; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (holy word, 13th-level cleric); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32.

The white walls of this chamber are draped with deep blue curtains, concealing all four corners. Painted upon the eastern wall is an intricate design representing a double-edged sword wreathed in blue flames. A wide circle of golden feathers surrounds the blade. The blazon is sculpted into the wall. A massive bed with several layers of pale blue sheets lays under the blazon, covering most of the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is Cyrlebrai's private chamber. It has not been used for several centuries, as the leader of the Children of the Inner Light concentrates all his energies to power up the lighting, magical traps, and wards of the celestial order's base (see Room G5 for more details).

Tactics: If the PCs spend 30 minutes in this Room, roll for a Random Encounter, ignoring anything that isn't a patrol of archons.

Treasure: Aside from sheets (which are worth upwards of 70 gp), and the drapes (165 gp), there is nothing of value in this Room.

The secret door on the north wall (DC 35 Search check to notice) opens into a vault containing great treasures. Five locked chests (DC 40 Open Lock checks) are filled with coins and gems, worth a little over 11,000 gp. The chests are guarded with additional holy word traps.

✦ Holy Word Trap: CR 8; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (holy word, 13th-level cleric); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32.

The Room also holds Cyrlebrai's +5 dancing greatsword and his +2 composite longbow (+5 Strength bonus), which if touched by anyone other than an outsider or lawful good PC, the weapons bestow 1d4 negative levels. Evil outsiders are paralyzed instantly (no save), if they grab the handle of either weapon.

G34 THROUGH G37. ABANDONED HALLS

Like most chambers in this Region, Rooms G34, G35, G36, and G37 once held demonic creatures of unbelievable power. Because of the dramatic changes in the environment, these Rooms are empty and remain unclaimed. The isolation of the Section, allows mighty creatures to roam the halls, undeterred.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	A lost lantern archon scurries across the PCs' path. It moves swiftly, desperately trying to find its way back to the base of the Children of the Inner Light.
2–11	Nothing
12	A band of four hound archons are on patrol. They move silently, careful not to attract unwanted attention. They are extremely vigilant and careful, for they fear what else might be lurking in these parts.
13	Two astral deva angels from the Children of the Inner Light hunt in these parts. These holy warriors are out for blood and hope to return to their base with nothing less than the head of a demon.
14	Three ettins loyal to the nighthag priestesses (Rooms G38 through G44) search for trinkets or gifts to offer her.
15–16	A pair of vrocks hunt, attacking everything in their wake. Fearless.
17	A lone succubus travels in the form of a beautiful elf woman, hoping to attract heroic PCs or evil assailants. She seduces the strongest male PC and use energy drain to weaken him when no one is looking.
18	Three babaus lie in wait for any prey to pass by them. Ambush.
19	The PCs stumble upon a potent magical trap.

20 Raverna (Room G35) hunts for demons. Though she has not officially allied herself with the Children of the Inner Light, Raverna met their leader and took it upon herself to rid the Region of the evil fiends haunting it. Unless the PCs are evil, she views them as potential allies.

G34. ABANDONED ANTEROOM

There is a secret locked door leading into Room G32 on the south wall. A successful DC 30 Search check is required to notice it. However, it is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock.

This room is in bad shape and is abandoned. The northeastern corner of the chamber opens on the southern bank of the underground lava river coursing through this Region of the dungeon. The opening leading to the boiling lava is a wide hole in the wall, which crumbled into dust long ago. The crushed stones that were once part of the northeast corner take up a good portion of the floor area, making movement from the room to the bank of the underground lava flow difficult.

Despite the ruined corner, the rest of the chamber is in surprisingly good shape. A solid door framed by a massive archway is visible in the northwestern corner. The floor is littered with stone rubble.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A DC 35 Search check unearths an immovable rod buried under a pile of crushed rocks. However, the portion necessary to turn it off is buried and the exposed end is non-magical. A DC 24 Strength check pries the stone up enough for a PC to slip a hand in and turn the immovable rod off; a DC 30 Escape Artist check is required for this.

EL: N/A

G35. ETTINS' CAMP

This small chamber is dark and dusty. At first glance, it holds no furniture or decoration, but upon closer examination you see a wooden structure that takes up most of the floor. This structure appears to be a wide bed, fashioned from crudely cut and half-rotten beams.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Ettins serving the nighthag priestesses once used this Room as a bedchamber. They have since abandoned the Room. Raverna (hp 81) now makes it her home, although she is rarely here. Since she is constantly hunting demons, there is a 50% chance she is here now.

Tactics: If Raverna is present, she is rushed, but as nice as possible. If the PCs are good, she invites them to join her crusade. Otherwise, she dismisses them. A fight breaks out, only if the PCs force it. She opens with destruction and gets violent from there.

EL: Varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the chance of Raverna being in the Room to 75%. To decrease the challenge, reduce the chance to 25%.

Gaze (Su): In humanoid form—slay evil creatures of 5 or less HD, range 60 ft., Will DC 18 negates. Even if the save succeeds, the creature is affected as though by a fear spell for 2d10 rounds. Nonevil creatures, and evil creatures with more than 5 HD, must succeed on a DC 18 Will save or suffer the fear effect. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Alternate Form (Su): Raverna can shift between her humanoid and globe forms as a standard action. In humanoid form, she cannot fly or use light rays, but she can use her gaze attack and spell-like abilities, make physical attacks, and cast spells. In globe form, she can fly, use her light rays, and use spell-like abilities, but cannot cast spells or use her gaze attack. The globe form is incorporeal, and Raverna has no Strength score while in that form.

Raverna remains in one form until she chooses to assume a new one. A change in form cannot be dispelled, nor does Raverna revert to any particular form when killed. A true seeing spell or ability, however, reveals both forms simultaneously.

Protective Aura (Su): Against attacks made or effects created by evil creatures, this ability provides a +4 deflection bonus to AC and a +4 resistance bonus on saving throws to anyone within 20 ft. of Raverna. Otherwise, it functions as a magic circle against evil effect and a lesser globe of invulnerability, both with a radius of 20 ft. (caster level equals ghaele's HD). (The defensive benefits from the circle are not included in a ghaele's statistics block.)

Tongues (Su): Raverna can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using tongues (caster level 14th). This ability is always active.

G36. ABANDONED STORE ROOM

G37. GHASTLY GRAVEYARD

This room looks like a natural grotto, but a closer examination of its remaining walls reveal they were once smooth surfaces fashioned by a master mason. What little is left of the walls is filled with dust and cobwebs, but what truly catches the eye are the thousands of bones scattered upon the floor.

The bones come from various creatures, from small kobolds to larger humanoids such as orcs, troglodytes, and humans. The yellowed remains of giants and other large creatures can also be found therein. There are also a number of charred carcasses.

The thick stench pervading from this area is nauseating. Obviously, some of these corpses have not been thoroughly cleaned and what meat remains upon them is rotting.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The fiendish minions haunting the boiling lava of the underground stream use this Room to pile up the carcasses of their many victims. G38 THROUGH G44.

TERRITORY OF THE NIGHTHAG PRIESTESSES

Rooms G38 through G44 are home of four nighthags and their servants, who control the northwestern bank of the underground lava flow coursing through this Region of the dungeon. The nighthags worship the demon lord Krasveshk and hope their mighty god will soon be freed.

Though the evil priestesses are not officially aligned with the demonic hordes, they share an understanding. Because of this, the nighthags respect the demons' war against the angels and archons; and the fiendish forces — glad to have worshippers of their lord among them — never cross into nighthag territory. Unlike most of the demonic fiends trying to liberate the evil lord, the nighthags willingly serve Krasveshk; a fact the demons greatly respect.

The nighthags form an exclusive covenant dedicated to honoring Lord Krasveshk. The covenant includes the four priestess sisters. Grelka, the eldest, heads the cult and teaches her younger siblings how to pay proper respect to Krasveshk, which they consider — perhaps rightly so — as powerful as a god.

While the nighthag priestesses perform rites and rituals, patiently waiting for their master's return, they entrusted the care of protecting their territory to ettin servants, that follow of the priestesses' strange religion. Vornarok, the most cunning and ambitious among them, leads the others. Though poorly organized, the ettins are a powerful force.

Grelka recently concluded an alliance with the mohrg Tarnaticus. She promised not to send any of her ettins into the undead's lair. In return, the mohrg keeps his zombie warriors out of her territory. Though the alliance is precarious, both Grelka and Tarnaticus benefit from it. Thus far, both sides have kept their promises.

While venturing through this Section, the PCs are in grave danger. The ettins and nighthags attack on sight unless the PCs prove they pay homage to Lord Krasveshk, a difficult task to say the least. Though the ettins serving the priestesses might be easily duped, Grelka and her sisters are much smarter and more skeptical. If the PCs convince them they are on their side, Grelka asks that they bring her the head of an angel as proof of their loyalty to Lord Krasveshk. If the PCs fail in this task, the head priestess orders her minions to kill the PCs.

G38. STORE ROOM

The door to this room is split in half. The lower portion is closed and holds a heavy iron lock, but the upper portion is open. Wooden barrels and large crates cover the floor. Hanging from the high ceiling are two-dozen long spears and sharpened halberds.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Narkun (hp 83), Vornarok's second in command, runs this storeroom. Though the quartermaster is loyal to his commander and the nighthag priestesses he serves, his deviousness and greed makes him an untrustworthy servant. The fact Vornarok keeps a close eye on him and that the powerful nighthags' quarters are nearby, however, prevents him from doing anything too drastic. Thus far, he only sold extra weapons and equipment to a couple of ettins he trusts, but his most ambitious hope is to steal one of the nighthags' powerful heartstones.

Tactics: Narkun is not smart, but he is a proud ettin. If the PCs parley with him, he is happy to do so and can be convinced not to raise an alarm. If the PCs offer him coins or precious stones, Narkun trades anything he has, including information. He willingly reveals anything the PCs need to know about this Section, including the location of the temple (Room G43) but excluding the statue in Room G44 (which none of the ettins have seen). If threatened or attacked, Narkun utters a loud cry to alert his companions and defends himself as best he can.

Treasure: This Room contains at least eighty different weapons, seven suits of armor, and plenty of equipment — torches, empty sacks, climbing tools. Nearly any mundane item can be found, plus the following special items — masterwork thieves' tools, three sunrods, five thunderstones, two smokesticks, and a Large masterwork breastplate.

Narkun wears a crude necklace fashioned from the fangs of a retriever demon (worth 150 gp), a beautiful silver dagger, and a handful of coins (worth a total of 118 gp).

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four fighter levels to Narkun. To decrease the challenge, remove two fighter levels.

G39. PRIESTESSES' PRIVATE ABODE

The walls of this elaborate chamber are draped with ancient tapestries that have lost their brightness over the years. Though the embroidery is still beautiful, the richness of their coloration has faded away. Three large beds covered with thick, half-rotten, brown linen blankets take up most of the chamber. A small white kitten purrs as it wakes.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is the private chamber of Grelka and her three nighthag sisters. Though they are here, the four priestesses of the demon lord rest here. While they are away at the temple (in which they spend most of their time), the nighthags keep their quasit spies in this Room.

Four cowardly quasit demons (hp 15, 13, 11, 10) serving the nighthag priestesses as spies, councilors, and occasional messengers lie in wait. Though usually solitary creatures, the powerful priestesses they serve forced them to cohabit — a situation that makes them unhappy.

Tactics: These quasits frequently argue with one another. They fear the nighthags they serve and do almost anything to please them — including working with each other. Anyone other than Grelka or her sisters entering the Room must face their viciousness.

As soon as they hear movement from the corridor, the three quasits become invisible, waiting for the intruders to enter the Room. The fourth takes on the form of a white kitten, which purrs loudly when the PCs enter. The quasits surprise their victims, using their poisonous claws and ability to cause fear to weaken the PCs. If they find themselves on the losing side, the surviving demons offer the PCs to commune in their behalf in exchange for a promise that their lives will be spared.

Treasure: A DC 35 Search check reveals a small hidden panel in the southern wall. This panel hides a small alcove with an iron coffer. The coffer is unlocked but engraved upon its lid is a deadly trap.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a bebilith (who remains invisible through a quixotic permutation of his plane shift ability). To decrease the challenge, remove two quasits.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 13, initial damage 1d4 Dex, secondary damage 2d4 Dex. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +2 racial bonus.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—detect good, detect magic, and invisibility (self only); 1/day—cause fear (as the spell, except that its area is a 30-ft. radius from the quasit, save DC 11). Caster level 6th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Once per week a quasit can use commune to ask six questions. The ability otherwise works as the spell (caster level 12th).

Alternate Form (Su): A quasit can assume other forms at will as a standard action. This ability functions as a polymorph spell cast on itself (caster level 12th), except that a quasit does not regain hit points for changing form, and any individual quasit can assume only one or two forms no larger than Medium. Common forms include bat, monstrous centipede, toad, and wolf. A quasit in alternate form loses its poison attack.

G40. VORNAROK'S CHAMBER

This room opens into the northern bank of the underground lava passing through the dungeon. A bed made out of dried and broken tree limbs, branches, and leaves fill the room, but a wide rock as large as a good-sized table lays in the northwest corner. The only illumination comes from two torches set into holes in the flat rock table.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is the chamber of Vornarok (hp 105) and his ettin mate (hp 68). If Vornarok was encountered before (see Random Encounters), only his mate is here. Otherwise both are present in this Room.

Tactics: Vornarok is a cunning ettin, but he does not tolerate intrusion — especially from those who are not part of his gang. He attacks the PCs on sight, allowing his beloved to aid him in his endeavor. His battle cries are loud enough to alert his men in Room G41 (if the PCs somehow managed to avoid the sentries there) who come to his aid 1d3 rounds later. With a DC 25 successful Listen check, the warriors in Room G42 also hear his cries. Half of them arrive at the scene 1d4+4 rounds thereafter, while the others remain at their post in Room G42, barricading the door.

Treasure: Behind the large rock on the northwest corner is a thick maple chest. It is locked but not trapped, and a successful DC 40 Open Lock is enough to unlock it. It contains Vornarok's most precious possessions — a human-sized mithral shirt taken from an adventure long ago and a pearl of the the sirines stolen from the same hero.

Vornarok carries the key to unlock this chest.

EL: 6, 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two ettin bodyguards. To decrease the challenge, remove two barbarian levels from Vornarok and reduce his weapon to a +1 heavy flail.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Vornarok retains his Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) even if he is caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker. However, he still loses his Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized.

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Vornarok can no longer be flanked. This defense denies a rogue the ability to sneak attack the barbarian by flanking him, unless the attacker has at least four more rogue levels than the target has barbarian levels.

Possessions: +3 heavy flail, large morning star, chain shirt.

▲ Vornarok's Mate (Ettin): CR 6; Large giant; HD 10d8+20; hp 68; Init +4; Spd 40 ft.; AC 18, touch 9, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +7; Grp +17; Atk +12 melee (2d6+6/19-20, greatsword) or +5 ranged (1d8+6, javelin); Full Atk +12/+7 melee (2d6+6/19-20, 2 greatswords) or +5 ranged (1d8+6, 2 javelins); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA —; SQ Low-light vision, superior two-weapon fighting; AL CE; SV Fort +9, Ref +2, Will +5; Str 23, Dex 10, Con 15, Int 6, Wis 10, Cha 12.

G41. ETTINS' QUARTERS

A pair of two-headed giants guard the entrance to this room. In silence, each holds two morningstars and keeps an eye towards the bank of the underground lava flow. Behind them, burning torches set in iron sconces high upon the walls cast eerie shadows to all corners of this chamber, revealing several piles of cloth and debris. Four more two-headed giants rest on crude beds.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Though this chamber serves as a bedroom for the ettins, the giants here are also in charge of protecting the northern bank as well as their leader's quarters (Room G40). Two ettin guards (hp 68, 63) are posted at the Room's entrance at all times and there are currently four ettins (hp 67, 65, 65, 61) resting inside.

Tactics: The two guards attack anyone who is not an ettin, a nighthag, demon, or devil. Though the priestesses recently concluded an agreement with their neighbors to the east, the ettins do not trust the zombies controlled by Tarnaticus (Room G57). They are fearful of the undead master as well as the countless demons inhabiting these lands.

If the guards spot intruders, they cry out to their comrades and attack. It takes 1d2 rounds for the other ettins resting in the Room to take their weapons and join the two guards. The alert also warns Vornarok and his mate in Room G40. Though he does not interfere directly, preferring to let his men handle the situation, Vornarok nevertheless readies himself for combat in case his men fail him. With a successful DC 25 Listen check, half the ettin warriors in Room G42 arrive at the scene 1d4+4 rounds later. The others remain at their post to guard the entrance to the temple.

Treasure: A successful DC 30 Search check reveals a small piece of amber (worth 35 gp) hidden in one of the piles. In addition to their weapons, each ettin in this Room carries 2d6 gp of value in various coins and simple gemstones.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four ettins. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

Possessions: Morningstar (2)

G42. ETTINS' GUARD POST

The light from a fire burning in the midst of this strangely shaped hall illuminates the place. The flames cast light and shadow upon the wall, carved out long ago. Several giants with two heads sit around the fire pit in the middle of the room. They talk in low tones, as if afraid to disturb someone or something.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Six ettins (hp 73, 67, 65, 65, 63, 61) guard this Room. Their duties are to prevent anyone from venturing into the temple of the demon lord (Room G43) and protect the nighthag priestesses should they call upon them. Though the warriors in this Room are talking softly, they nevertheless pay attention to what is going on around them. One of the guards keeps an eye on the door to the east while another remains vigilant in the hallway to the south.

Tactics: These ettins fear nothing save the nighthags they serve and the demons living in this Region. They attack anyone else on sight. They especially hate the archons and angels, who gave them much trouble in the past.

Treasure: There is nothing valuable in this Room, save for what the ettins carry. One of them, however, has a small electrum idol made in the semblance of a grotesque ape-like creature bearing wide tusks and a pair of feathered wings. This statue, made in the image of the Lord Krasveshk is worth 800 gp to any of his follower.

G43. TEMPLE OF THE DEMON LORD

Though the doors to the east and west are unlocked and not trapped, the door on the northern wall (which is hidden behind the black tapestry) and the one at the end of the southern corridor are locked and trapped. A successful DC 30 Open Lock check unlocks any of these doors, but on the north wall a symbol of insanity is written.

The 5-ft. square floor immediately north of the door at the end of the south corridor is trapped with a simple but effective pit trap.

♣ Well-Camouflaged Pit Trap: CR 6; mechanical; location trigger; repair reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 100 ft. deep (10d6, fall); Search DC 27; Disable Device DC 26.

This large hall is bathed in a pale purplish light that undulates and flickers in a seemingly random pattern. This unnatural light reveals a long hall with several columns supporting the forty-foot high ceiling, which displays the crude paintings of a powerful demon lord and his fiendish armies, involved in cruel and horrific deeds. Though the pictures are unclear, the lord of the army is well designed, with the muscular body of a massive ape, a pair of feathery wings protruding from its back, and a hideous face of a wild pig with long tusks.

A thick black tapestry embroidered with silver threads and golden wires covers the northern wall. Under this beautiful drapery is a simple stone altar upon which lays an exquisite black silken cloth. A silver candelabrum holds five unlit black wax candles. Beside it are a silver urn and a shiny serrated blade.

The three thin but tall females with bluish skin and open sores, blisters, and warts. Various bones are attached to their dark hair and long curved horns protrude from their foreheads. These women have terrible faces bearing beady but disquieting eyes and their dark purple dresses are in dire need of mending.

Encounter: The three nighthag priestesses (hp 71, 66, 65) present in this temple of the demon lord are Grelka's younger siblings. They are in charge of running the temple and performing rites and rituals to honor Krasveshk.

Tactics: If the PCs stumble into the temple by themselves, the nighthags attack them immediately. If, on the other hand, they convinced the ettins they were followers of the demon lord, or if they were taken prisoner, the nighthags use their various detect abilities to determine the PCs' alignment as well as whether or not they carry any valuable magical items. If the heroes convince the nighthags they are here to pay homage to their god, they ask that the PCs bring them the head of an archon to prove their allegiance.

If combat ensues, the nighthags use magic missile, ray of enfeeblement, and sleep to defend themselves. They do not hesitate to charge the PCs, preferring to target the weakest-looking foes first and using their bite attack to bestow diseases to the PCs. The smallest of the three fights from behind the other two, summoning ettins and Grelka if necessary.

The sound of battle alerts the ettin guards in Room G42 if they succeed at a DC 25 Listen check. The curses and shrieks of the battling priestesses might also alert their older sister in Room G44. Allow Grelka a DC 30 Listen check to notice the battle. If she does, she comes to aid her sisters, to whom she is surprisingly loyal.

Treasure: The black tapestry covering the door on the north wall is in terrific shape and is worth 900 gp. The dagger on the altar is an intricate silver ceremonial item. Its blade is serrated, it has no guard, its handle is covered with supple black leather, and a large ruby completes theommel of the weapon. Though this silver dagger is not magical, it is worth 700 gp. The urn is beautifully made and well polished, with intricate designs (250 gp). It contains the mixed blood of several creatures.

Each of these nighthags wears a golden amulet of their god on a silvery chain (worth 500 gp each) and carries a heartstone.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one nighthag and increase the depth of the pit trap to 200 ft. To decrease the challenge, remove one nighthag and ignore the symbol of insanity trap.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—detect chaos, detect evil, detect good, detect law, detect magic, magic missile, polymorph (self only), ray of enfeeblement (DC 12), sleep (DC 12). Caster level 8th. A nighthag can use etherealness at will (caster level 16th) so long as it possesses its heartstone (see below). The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Dream Haunting (Su): Nighthags can visit the dreams of chaotic or evil individuals by using a special periapt known as a heartstone to become ethereal, then hovering over the creature. Once a hag invades someone's dreams, it rides on the victim's back until dawn. The sleeper suffers from tormenting dreams and takes 1 point of Constitution drain upon awakening. Only another ethereal being can stop these nocturnal intrusions, by confronting and defeating the nighthag.

Heartstone: All nighthags carry a periapt known as a heartstone, which instantly cures any disease contracted by the holder. In addition, a heartstone provides a +2 resistance bonus on all saving throws (this bonus is included in the statistics block). A nighthag that loses this charm can no longer use etherealness until it can manufacture another (which takes one month). Creatures other than the hag can benefit from the heartstone's powers, but the periapt shatters after ten uses (any disease cured or saving throw affected counts as a use) and it does not bestow etherealness to a bearer that is not a nighthag. If sold, an intact heartstone brings 1,800 gp.

G44. STATUE OF THE DEMON LORD KRASVESHK

In the darkness, the long, narrow, and twisting corridor eventually leads to a rough onyx statue. The black statue presents a powerful ape-like being with feathery wings protruding from its back and a hideous face bearing long, curved tusks. An emaciated humanoid female with purplish skin filled with dreadful swellings, open wounds, and awful pimples is dressed in a simple but soiled deep red robe. Her long hair is filled with a multitude of small bones that fail to hide the long horns on top of her forehead. She stands before the statue, admiring it.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Grelka (hp 121), the head priestess of the temple, is a mighty nighthag who leads her sisters and their many ettin servants. For several months now, she has been sculpting the statue of her lord and master. Though the statue is not complete, she is proud of work thus far and hopes it will further her cause once Krasveshk is liberated.

Tactics: Grelka is not happy to see anyone in the forbidden areas of her territory (Rooms G43 and G44). Though the ettins who follow her and her sisters are allowed to pray to Krasveshk once per day at the temple (Room G43), only half of their number attends the hour-long ceremony (while the others remain on guard duty). Most of the time, only Grelka and her sisters are allowed into the temple. Following her orders, no one enters the hallway leading to the demon lord's statue.

If Grelka notices the PCs, she hides behind the statue and assesses the situation before attacking. Like her sister, she uses magic missile, ray of enfeeblement, and sleep to weaken the PCs, but she especially relies on her ring of shooting stars to harm them. If push comes to shove, she bites the PCs, preferring to target the spellcasters first. If the PCs have not killed everyone else in the Region, ettin bodyguards arrive in 1d4+2 rounds after hearing the sounds of battle.

If the PCs look like they are too much for her, she bluffs them, convincing them she is a prisoner of Krasveshk and only his destruction can save her and the rest of the dungeon. If the PCs begin the journey to "destroy," she sets out to foil them once they are inside the cocoon (Room G99 and G100).

Treasure: Like her sisters, Grelka wears a golden amulet of her god on a silvery chain (worth 500 gp) and carries a heartstone. She also has 600 gp worth of precious gemstones as well as a ring of shooting stars.

Caster level 16th. A Grelka can use etherealness at will (caster level 16th) so long as it possesses its heartstone (see below). The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Dream Haunting (Su): Grelka can visit the dreams of chaotic or evil individuals by using a special periapt known as a heartstone to become ethereal, then hovering over the creature. Once Grelka invades someone's dreams, she rides on the victim's back until dawn. The sleeper suffers from tormenting dreams and takes 1 point of Constitution drain upon awakening. Only another ethereal being can stop these nocturnal intrusions, by confronting and defeating the nighthag.

Heartstone: All nighthags carry a periapt known as a heartstone, which instantly cures any disease contracted by the holder. In addition, a heartstone provides a +2 resistance bonus on all saving throws (this bonus is included in the statistics block). A nighthag that loses this charm can no longer use etherealness until it can manufacture another (which takes one month). Creatures other than the hag can benefit from the heartstone's powers, but the periapt shatters after ten uses (any disease cured or saving throw affected counts as a use) and it does not bestow etherealness to a bearer that is not a nighthag. If sold, an intact heartstone brings 1,800 gp.

Possessions: Heartstone, ring of protection +1, ring of shooting stars, bracers of defenselessness (only trigger while Grelka is wearing them if she is attacked by a 17th-level or higher character in anger).

Rooms G45 through G57 Lord Tarnaticus controls Rooms G45 through G57. His homestead for centuries, the undead lord gradually turned many living beings into mindless creatures of the night. The many zombies now serving Tarnaticus form a powerful force in this Region of the dungeon.

Fortunately for the Children of the Inner Light, Lord Tarnaticus is more interested in his personal survival and in the accumulation of wealth and power than in claiming territory or in liberating the demon lord imprisoned by the magical cocoon at the heart of the Region. Because of this, Tarnaticus spends a lot of time and effort maintaining the mechanical traps spread throughout the Rooms that make up his lair, as well as in striving to make his army constantly more powerful.

Lord Tarnaticus recently made a non-aggression pact with Grelka and her three nighthag sisters, for the undead master now has important things to worry about. Mainly, the mohrg is worried the angel and archon warriors of the Children of the Inner Light will take it upon themselves to drive off the zombies under his control. More importantly, however, is the constant threat of the demonic forces so close his lair. Lord Tarnaticus does not trust them, and it is no secret there is no great love — or even complicity — between the undead master and the fiendish fiends.

Lord Tarnaticus' soulless minions roam the Rooms of this Section. The lord's orders are simple; prevent anyone from venturing in. Tarnaticus' zombies obey his whim to the best of their abilities and attack anyone who is not an undead.

The master of the undead possess the key of all locked doors in this section. When the zombies travel through this section, they are unable to open these doors and thus must find alternate routes; a situation Lord Tarnaticus finds quite practical.

2–12	Nothing
13	Six kobold zombies returning from patrol. These creatures walk slowly, their mindless gazes surveying the area.
14	A band of eight ogre zombies on patrol. They are slow to react but vigilant.
15	Eight minotaur zombies stand guard in this portion of the undead master's lair.
17	A nasty hezrou has ventured into Tarnaticus' lair. The demon is on the hunt, searching for easy prey.
18	The PCs stumble upon a trap.
	♦ Spiked Blocks Falling from the Ceiling: CR 8; mechanical; location trigger; repair reset; Atk +18 melee (6d6, spikes); multiple targets (1d4 spikes to all targets in a 10-ft. by 10-ft. area); Search DC 26; Disable Device 22.
19	A pair of harpies from Region F have secured a gem from Tarnaticus' lair, but are frightened and desperate.

G45. ZOMBIE CAVE

This wide cave is cast in total darkness. It is filled with creatures resembling elves in tattered clothes with hollow eyes, emaciated bodies, and pale gray skin. The grotto's mouth is wide at the south, opening into the northern bank of the underground lava stream. There are two damaged archways leading into dark corridors: one to the north and one to the east.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A score of elf zombies (hp 16 each) dwell in this grotto. Their orders are to prevent any creature from venturing further into the lair of the undead master. On occasion, some of these zombies are found along the southern bank, but for the most part they keep to their cave. If the PCs travel upon the bank of the lava flow, allow the zombies the appropriate Listen and Spot checks to notice them. If they do, they move toward the PCs to attack.

Tactics: These undead are mindless minions obeying the whim of Lord Tarnaticus. They lack the ability to process logical thoughts or parley, and they attack anyone crossing their paths. The zombies move slowly and without order. They attack anyone within range.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four ogre zombies and give all the zombies fire resistance 10. To decrease the challenge, remove ten zombies.

A zombie can move up to its speed and attack in the same round, but only if it attempts a charge.

G46. GRAY RENDER ZOMBIE FAMILY PEN

The door on the southern wall of this Room is locked. A successful DC 30 Open Lock check is required to open it.

A putrid smell issues from this room, which contains a thick pile of detritus covering the entire floor. Upon the refuse are six massive creatures with stooped frames, hairless white skin, and powerful shoulders. Their unnaturally long arms are sinewy, and dark claws complete the hands of these bi-pedal undead creatures. Their powerful-looking jaws are filled with sharp black teeth. What is most surprising about the fiends, however, are the six beady yellow eyes protruding from the side of each of their heads.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Six undead gray renders (hp 133 each) guard this Room. These creatures ventured into the lair of the undead master long ago, and have since then been turned into soulless minions of the night. Undoubtedly Lord Tarnaticus' most powerful servants, these creatures are left alone and, for the most part, remain in this chamber.

Tactics: The gray renders attack the living on sight. They charge without subtlety, using their bite and slam attacks simultaneously.

Treasure: PCs succeeding at a DC 25 Search check uncover 14 pp, 142 gp, and 61 sp scattered in the refuse as well as a tarnished silver ring (worth 15 gp if cleaned).

EL: 11

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two gray render zombies to the family. To decrease the challenge, remove two.

G47. EMPTY CHAMBER

Both doors leading into this Room are locked. A successful DC 30 Open Lock check unlocks them.

This room holds no furniture or decorative features. The walls are scarred with claw marks, as if something tried to dig into the bedrock.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: It is unclear why the doors of this empty Room were locked. Perhaps something locked itself in and died, and no one has dared to open it since. The stale air and layers of dust indicate much time has past since anything has been in here.

Tactics: N/A

G48. FIRST OGRE ZOMBIES' QUARTERS

The door on the western wall of this Room is locked, requiring a successful DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock.

A large but crude throne-like chair carved out from a chunk of shear rock sits in the northeast corner. A powerful, but gaunt creature with greenish white skin and wearing the pelt of a brown bear sits upon this chair, a great axe on its knee. Six other creatures with similar features bearing large clubs stand in front.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The creature sitting upon the wide rock chair is an ogre zombie (hp 66). It carries a greataxe and slowly charges anyone entering the Room other than its master or another zombie. The other six (hp 58 each) carry greatclubs and follow its every move. Originally part of a powerful gang, these creatures serve their new master.

Tactics: These mindless servants show little understanding of tactics. They move slowly, brandish their weapons, and attack without hesitation. Mindlessly, they fight to the death. If combat ensues here, allow the ogre zombies in Room G49 a DC 22 Listen check to notice the noise. If they do, they come to the aid of their comrades 1d4+2 rounds later.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four ogre zombies. To decrease the challenge, remove two.

✦ Ogre Zombie: CR 3; Large undead; HD 8d12+3; hp 66*, 58; Init -2; Spd 30 ft. Single Actions Only (Ex): Zombies have poor reflexes and can perform only a single move action or attack action each round. A zombie can move up to its speed and attack in the same round, but only if it attempts a charge.

G49. SECOND OGRE ZOMBIES' QUARTERS

This room is filled with pieces of broken chairs and a ruined green marble is in pieces among the other debris. Six powerfully built, pale warriors holding nasty-looking clubs stand amidst the debris.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Six ogre zombies (hp 60 each) are posted in this Room. They engage anyone who is neither Lord Tarnaticus nor another zombie.

Tactics: These creatures have neither intelligence nor grace. They move in predictable patterns toward their intended victims and use either their weapons or natural slam attacks to neutralize them.

If there is a battle here, allow the ogre zombies in Room G48 a DC 22 Listen check to notice it. If they do, these zombies come to help their foul kin in 1d4+2 rounds.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, double the number of ogre zombies present. To decrease the challenge, cut their number in half.

G50. TRAPPED ROOM

To prevent the zombies from venturing into this Room, its door is locked. A successful DC 30 Open Lock check is required to unlock it.

This room is empty except for the colorful painting on its western wall. The painting is set upon a wide golden frame and depicts a chubby noble woman in elaborate pink robes sitting upon a massive burgundy couch with two large wolfhounds with coarse gray fur lying at her feet.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was originally designed to dissuade intruders to journey through this part of the dungeon, and thus encourage them to keep to their own Rooms. When Lord Tarnaticus took over the Section, he discovered this chamber's trap had already been triggered. He later placed a valuable painting upon the eastern wall, reset the trap, and locked the door.

Anyone over 50 lbs. who steps on the floor of this Room automatically triggers its trap 1d4 rounds later. A hidden lock in the Room's archway (which can only be uncovered once the door is opened) bypasses the trap, provided the PCs have the required key or succeed at a DC 35 Open Lock check.

♣ Well-Hidden Spiked Pit Trap with Poisoned Spikes: CR 11; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; hidden lock bypass (Search DC 25; Open Lock DC 30); DC 25 Reflex save avoids; 70 ft. deep (7d6, fall); multiple targets (all targets within the room); pit spikes (Atk +10 melee, 1d4 spikes per target for 1d4+5 plus poison each); poison (large scorpion venom, DC 18 Fortitude save, 1d6 Str/1d6 Str); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC *.

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The painting on the northern wall is exquisite and precise. This painting is worth upwards of 2,800 gp. The frame holding it is made out of wood with chipped golden paint. It has no value if separated from the painting.

EL: 11

Scaling: To increase the challenge, replace the large scorpion venom poison on the well-hidden spiked pit trap with dragon bile. To decrease the challenge, replace the poison on the well-hidden spiked pit trap with black adder venom.

G51. MINOTAUR ZOMBIE GUARD ROOM

This small chamber is empty except for the tall and emaciated minotaur undead standing in it. These dreadful-looking creatures have bluish white skin hanging upon tall frames, long horns protruding from their bull-like heads, and silvery breastplate armors protecting their torsos. Each holds an axe with a mighty serrated blade.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Eight minotaur zombies (hp 81 each) guard this Room, preventing anyone other than their master to enter Room G52. These soulless creatures were once proud members of the Broken Axe tribe (see Region F for more details). Six years ago, they unwittingly ventured into this section of the dungeon and faced Lord Tarnaticus in battle. The mohrg turned them into undead zombies and they have served him well ever since.

Tactics: These creatures attack anyone other than Lord Tarnaticus or other zombies. Like the majority of the undead creatures in this section, they charge slowly in a disorganized fashion.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four minotaur zombies to the group. To decrease the challenge, remove two.

♣ Minotaur Zombie: CR 4; Large undead; HD 12d12+3; hp 81 each; Init -2; Spd 30 ft. Skills and Feats: —; Toughness.

Single Actions Only (Ex): Zombies have poor reflexes and can perform only a single move action or attack action each round. A zombie can move up to its speed and attack in the same round, but only if it attempts a charge.

G52. TREASURE VAULT

The door leading to this treasure vault is locked with a complex mechanism. A successful DC 32 Open Lock check is required to open it.

Opening the door (but not unlocking it) triggers its trap: Poisonous needles spring out of tiny slits from the wall on either side of the doorway (the north and east walls of Room G51). By finding the hidden lock at the base of the door (DC 30 Search check required to notice it) and unlocking it bypasses the trap.

♣ Poisoned Needle Trap: CR 5; mechanical; touch trigger; manual reset; lock bypass (DC 28 Open Lock); Atk +18 ranged (1 plus poison, needle); poison (greenblood oil, DC 13 Fortitude save resists, 1 Con / 1d2 Con); multiple targets (1d8 needles per target within a 10 ft. by 10 ft. area); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

In addition, a silent alarm has been placed on the door, alerting Tarnaticus that intruders are in the Section. This gives him time to prepare defensive spells. Surprise is now impossible.

Three massive wooden chests line the northern wall of this room. The dark brown wood of these heavy coffers is reinforced with braces of black iron and obvious locking mechanisms secure the items within. In front of the treasure, however, is a hideous beast. Its dragon-like body is emaciated and its pale brown hide fails to conceal bulky muscles.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Once the only door leading into this Room is unlocked and its trap dealt with, PCs venturing into the area must face its guardian -- a mighty wyvern zombie (hp 150).

Tactics: This undead fiend engages anyone entering the Room. It uses its slam and talon attacks alternately, having no preferred targets and using no particular tactics.

Treasure: The three chests in this Room are locked and trapped. A successful DC 27 Open Lock check is required to unlock each of them, but anyone tampering with the lock or causing damage to one of the chests automatically triggers its trap. The easternmost chest has a glyph of warding trap upon it, the one to the west is protected by a fire trap, and the central chest contains a lightning bolt trap. Each of these chests has a bypass mechanism: A tiny button blending upon the wooden surface at the back of the chest. PCs who succeed at a DC 32 Search check while observing each chest find this button, which must be pushed and held while the chest is being opened to avoid triggering the trap.

♣ Fire Trap: CR 5; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (fire trap, 7th-level wizard, 1d4+7 fire, DC 17 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

The chests contain all the monetary treasure Lord Tarnaticus accumulated over the years. The easternmost chest holds 3,214 cp, the western chest contains 2,051 sp, and the one in the middle has 1,786 gp as well as two small pouches. One of these pouches holds 68 pp and the other is filled with the following: two yellowish green chrysoberyls (worth 100 gp each), three silver pearls (150 gp each), a roughly cut blue-green aquamarine (worth 500 gp), and an oval black pearl (worth 650 gp).

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add another improved wyvern zombie and replace the greenblood oil poison on the trapped door with giant wasp poison. To decrease the challenge, reduce the wyvern zombie's Hit Dice to 16 and ignore the trap upon the door.

♣ Wyvern Zombie: CR 5; Large undead; HD 20d12+3; hp 150; Init +0; Spd 20 ft. (can't run), fly 60 ft. (poor); AC 20, touch 8, flat-footed 20; Base Atk +10; Grp +19; Atk +15 melee (2d6+7, slam) or +15 melee (2d6+7, talon); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA —; SQ single actions only, damage reduction 5/slashing, darkvision 60 ft., undead traits; AL NE; SV Fort +6, Ref +6, Will +12; Str 21, Dex 10, Con —, Int —, Wis 10, Cha 1.

G54. GRAY RENDER ZOMBIE LAIR

This room is void of furniture and decoration. The door upon the west wall is closed, but the one on the eastern wall is half opened. In the midst of the place are two massive creatures. They stand in hunched positions, their hairless and broad shouldered bodies as large as giants. The pale gray shade of their skin is turning to a dull green hue and they bear distinct signs of decomposition. The creatures' massive jaws of black teeth are crowned with sloped foreheads upon which are rows of strange yellowish eyes.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room serves as a pen for four gray render zombies (hp 133 each), which attack anyone other than their master or one of its undead servants.

Tactics: These mindless creatures use their claw and bite attacks in battle, alternating between the two modes of combat as they see fit. They have no preferred targets and use no particular ruse in combat.

Tarnaticus has trained the zombies to make as much noise as possible, alerting him that intruders are about. If he succeeds at a DC 20 Listen check, he prepares to face his intruders and casts his defensive spells as necessary. He can no longer be surprised.

G55. LORD TARNATICUS' MAIN HALL

The southern door leading into this chamber is locked. A successful DC 32 Open Lock check is required to open it.

The 5-ft. square area north of this locked door is trapped. Anyone stepping upon it triggers the magical device, which can be bypassed by unlocking a hidden mechanism by the side of the door. A successful DC 28 Search check is required to notice this lock bypass.

The flames of several candles set upon large bronze candelabums cast this large hall in an eerie glow. Each of the four 5-ft. high candelabums is shaped in the semblance of a three with five main branches, each holding an orange hued candle.

The luminescence cast by the dancing flames reveals several tapestries hanging upon the north wall. A layer of gray dust is impregnated upon these intricate works of art, making the magnificently colorful patterns bleak.

Encounter: This is Lord Tarnaticus' main hall. The undead master, a powerful mohrg (hp 194), lives in this Room, which he has not left in decades. Here, he contemplates squandered opportunities and fractured memories. He does not like doing anything for himself, relying instead on his minions to do his bidding. If he knows the PCs are coming he is ready for them, having cast cloak of chaos and prepared a wide array of paranoid traps for them. If worthy, he turns them into undead guards after they are dead.

Tactics: Unlike his minions, Lord Tarnaticus is a proud, cunning, and vicious opponent. He harbors a deep hatred toward the living, for above all else he wishes to become a living, breathing being once again. Though he does not tolerate intruders, he might be willing to talk with them if they open up negotiations and change his attitude. However, unless the PCs convince Lord Tarnaticus they help him live again, the undead master engages them in combat.

In battle, Tarnaticus is mercilessly cruel. He uses horrid wilting, harm and unholy blight first, later turning to bane, doom, and crushing despair. If forced into melee, his paralyzing touch and touch-based abilities remind the PCs to stay at a distance. He targets wounded foes and those not wearing armor first, hoping to quickly diminish the number of foes facing him. If possible, he turns dead PCs into undead allies.

If a battle ensues in this hall, or if the chain lightning trap is sprung, the two gray render zombies in Room G54 come to the aid of their master in 1d3+1 rounds. Similarly, allow the bugbear zombies in Room G57 a DC 18 Listen check to notice their master is in trouble. These zombie servants arrive 1d3+1 rounds after they hear the noise.

If Tarnaticus cannot win, he uses veil to make himself appear like a helpless or wounded child, hoping to draw upon the sympathy of the PCs. He pretends they have freed him from his imprisonment and he wishes to go home. Of course, his irrational fear of leaving the Room must be stifled for this to work. But, if the PCs fall for it, he travels with them until such time as he can turn against them.

Treasure: There are four beautifully woven tapestries upon the northern wall. Each weighs 30 lbs. and is worth upwards of 300 gp to any collector or history buff. The four candelabums are large and heavy, each weighing 55 lbs. They are made of tarnished bronze and worth 150 gp each. The chair upon which Lord Tarnaticus sits is an elven masterpiece. At first glance, it is worth no more than 100 gp, but a successful DC 30 Knowledge (history) or Knowledge (nobility) check reveals it can be sold to an elven noble for ten times that amount.

Lord Tarnaticus' ring of keys can be found upon his beautifully well-crafted chair. It holds seven keys of various shapes and sizes. These keys were taken from the decrepit warden of the place long ago. They unlock the many doors, chests, and hidden locks made to bypass the various traps in this portion of the dungeon (Rooms G45 through G57).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add eight minotaur zombie guards. To decrease the challenge, remove Tarnaticus' spell resistance.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a mohrg must hit a creature of its size or smaller with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

Paralyzing Touch (Su): A mohrg lashes out with its tongue in combat. An opponent the tongue touches must succeed on a DC 21 Fortitude save or become paralyzed for 1d4 minutes. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Spell-Like Abilities (Su): 1/day—horrid wilting (DC 19), veil (self only); 3/day—animate dead, cloak of chaos, create undead, harm (DC 17), poison (DC 15), unholy blight (DC 15), vampiric touch (DC 14); At will—*bane, chill touch (DC 12), *crushing despair, *doom, command undead, inflict light wounds (DC 12), magic weapon, magic vestment. * No save. Otherwise, the save DCs are Charisma-based.

Lord Tarnaticus powers are unreliable however. His fractured memories cause him to use all his spell-like abilities as if the target had spell resistance 20. If the target already has spell resistance, he must roll twice.

Create Spawn (Su): Creatures killed by a mohrg rise after 1d4 days as zombies under the mohrg's control. They do not possess any of the abilities they had in life.

G56. LORD TARNATICUS' PRIVATE CHAMBER

The door leading to Room G56 is hidden a heavy tapestry hanging on the northern wall. PCs looking behind it automatically uncover the door. Otherwise, a successful DC 30 Search check is required.

This chamber is cast in total darkness. Unlike most of the rooms in this area, it is sumptuously furnished and decorated. A high bed covered with thick dark brown woolen blankets is lined up on the north wall. Above it is a painting representing a handsome youth with raven hair and disquietingly dark eyes. The human male is attired in fine clothing and the hilt of a jeweled sword hang from his belt.

Two large bronze candelabums with unlit dark orange candles are set in the northeast and northwest corners of the room. An iron chest with a complex locking mechanism stands in front of the massive bed.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The iron chest at the foot of the bed is locked. PCs must either use one of the keys taken from Lord Tarnaticus' chair (in Room G55) or succeed at a DC 40 Open Lock check to open it. The iron chest can be moved and manipulated without danger and its lock can be picked without any problems. When its lid is opened, however, a hidden switch must be pressed to prevent triggering its trap.

The iron chest contains Lord Tarnaticus' personal effects — eighteen dark orange wax candles wrapped in yellowed and dried parchment sheets; a rotted and useless suit of black leather armor; and a beautiful jeweled sword. A successful DC 20 Intelligence check reveals the sword's jeweled hilt is identical to that depicted in the painting. The blade is a +2 mighty cleaving unholy longsword, which belong to Tarnaticus when he was still alive. The weapon was used to murder countless victims and a strong evil aura emanates from it. Tarnaticus' fractured memories, however, stop him from being able to use the weapon any longer. Whenever he (or anyone else) touches it, they suffer nightmares, per the spell.

The painting on the north wall shows Lord Tarnaticus in his prime — before he became undead. It can be sold to connoisseurs for upwards of 300 gp. The two candelabums are identical to those in Room G55.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add chain lightning or poison to the acid fog trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the acid fog trap with a mass reduce person trap.

G57. LORD TARNATICUS' PRIVATE LIBRARY

The walls of this dark room are covered with shelves filled with books, scrolls, and papers. Some of the wooden shelves, however, have succumbed under the weight of time and crumbled. The many volumes held by these rotted and broken shelves either fell on top of others or to the dusty stone floor below.

Hundreds of yellowed volumes, dried parchment, and unsealed scrolls are scattered upon the floor or piled upon one another in the remaining bookshelves. There is nothing else in the room save for the eight creatures with bear-like faces whose gazes are disquietingly hollow. These undead fiends look like pale and undernourished bugbears. They stand seven ft. tall and sharp yellow fangs protrude from their wide mouths. They hold nasty-looking morningstars but wear no armor.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Six bugbear zombie warriors (hp 47, 45, 43, 42, 40, 38) obey the whim of their master, Lord Tarnaticus. Though weak, these bugbears are all which remain of the first spawns created by the undead master. The mohrg uses them as personal aids and keeps them close by.

Tactics: Though they seldom engage in combat, these minions do not hesitate to defend their lord and master. Like the rest of the zombies under Tarnaticus' control, they use neither tact or subtlety in battle.

Treasure: At first glance, there is little of value in this Room. However, many of the tomes and documents piled here are either historical accounts of kings of old or specific documents pertaining to the courtly day-to-day affairs of these rulers. A successful DC 25 Knowledge (History) check reveals these archives could be sold to historians for upwards of 250 gp, provided the PCs are able to find the right buyer.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add six bugbear zombies. To decrease the challenge, remove two.

G58 THROUGH G73. FALLEN ANGEL'S DOMAIN

Room G58 to G73 serve as the hideout of Sarnikyan, also known as the Vile Enchantress, an erinyes who fell from grace. Though the fallen angel wishes to reclaim her place among the blessed celestial children, she has yet to prove to her angelic neighbors — and indeed to herself — that redemption is within reach.

Sarnikyan is troubled. On one hand, she hates herself for the foolhardy temptation she failed to resist centuries ago, she loathes the vile and terrible creature she has become, and she despises being trapped within the confines of this god-forsaken place without hope of escaping. On the other hand, Sarnikyan is a tribute to her kin — she is cunning, ambitious, and evil. Though she claims she would love nothing more than to redeem herself and return to her rightful place among the angels she openly admires, she nonetheless continues to act without mercy, kindness, or remorse. In fact, her abominable acts of cruelty over the years have brought her the enmity of all other factions in this Region of the dungeon.

Though she tried countless times to open negotiations with both the Children of the Inner Light and the demonic forces opposing them, Sarnikyan never managed to win the trust of an ally she could rely on. The members of the celestial order do not trust her and refuse to heed the fact that she wants to return to grace. Meanwhile, the demonic hosts are so obsessed with liberating their master that all they want from the erinyes is her devotion to their cause.

Because Sarnikyan does not care whether the demon lord is freed or not, she does nothing to help or hinder his fiendish minions.

All she wants is to secure her lair, find more willing minions to serve her, and improve her image and reputation among the angels in this Region. In the meantime, she dreams of the day she will reclaim her grace. She believes the cocoon in the middle of the island, where the demon lord is imprisoned, is the key to her salvation. Unfortunately, she is unable to get to it and fears the demonic army might free their lord before she can destroy him once and for all.

Sarnikyan has few servants, but those who follow her have proven their loyalty. Her most important minion is Ranveed, a former noble knight who failed the erinyes in life and now serves her in death. Ranveed tried in vain to uncover the sacred flame of Aranas. Because his mistress believes this artifact is the key to win the trust and friendship of the Children of the Inner Light, she desperately wants him to find it. But thus far Ranveed was unable to fulfill her request.

Ten years ago, a group of tiefling adventurers unwittingly ventured into the dungeon and were trapped within. The last survivor of this adventuring band, Narla the Assassin, serves the erinyes in the hopes the devil will eventually get her out of the place. One of those who perished, however, was a brilliant wizard. At Sarnikyan's command, he set up several magical traps throughout her territory. The fallen angel also relies on a pack of hell hounds to protect her domain. His most cherished pet is a strong nessian warhound that follows her whenever she journeys out of her lair.

14	Six ogre zombies loyal to Lord Tarnaticus ventured from their compound. They are confused.
15	Sir Ranveed (Room G63), the bodak loyal to Sarnikyan the Fallen (Room G67), patrols his mistress' domain. He does not attack unless he knows he can win, preferring instead to report to Sarnikyan.
18	The PCs stumble upon a trap. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ◆ Fireball Trap: CR 6; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (fireball, 12th-level wizard, 10d6 fire, DC 16 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

Though this succubus and her retinue (two babau demons) have neither been invited by Sarnikyan nor sent by the lords of their army, they took it upon themselves to locate the fallen angel and strike a bargain with her.

G58. HIDDEN SHRINE

A magical trap that detects good-aligned creatures is poised at the entryway to this Room. The trap is triggered 3 rounds after any good creature enters. It fires fifteen missiles divided among all good-aligned beings within range.

The hallway behind the secret panel leads to an intersection. To the west is a column decorated with designs, each more intricate and beautiful than the last one. To the north, the passageway leads to a simple door.

This door opens into an austere room illuminated by thick burgundy candles. The candles rest on a stone altar, which dominates the center of the chamber. On the altar is a long and carefully woven mesh of raven hair. Beside it is a silver cup reflecting the wavering light from the dancing candle flames.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is an altar where Narla (Room G59) performs dark ceremonies to honor the god of darkness and debauchery. Though she is but a simple servant of the deity, Narla is dedicated to follow the god's teachings. Sarnikyan agreed to let her servant use this hidden Room to perform her vile rituals (those she does not approve).

Tactics: There is no one currently using this vile temple, but if Narla survives an encounter with the PCs in Room G59 and escaped with her life, she might be found hiding in this shrine. Alternately, she is here 25% of the time, as the DM sees fit.

Treasure: The three wax candles upon the altar are imbued with continual flame. The silver cup is filled with blood and is worth 75 gp. The blood in the cup and the length of blackened toenail used to belong to the tiefling wizard from Narla's original adventuring band. The assassin killed him and offered his soul to her god. She keeps his blood and a piece of his nail clipping to remind her she has the power to slaughter anybody she wants.

There is a hidden compartment in the altar, which can be revealed by moving a loose piece of stone. A DC 30 Search check reveals its location. The small compartment holds a copy of the unholy book of the followers of the god of darkness and debauchery bound in black leather (worth 50 gp to any worshiper of the faith), four glass vials of unholy water, and a black velvet veil of the finest quality (worth 65 gp), which Narla puts on to hide her face when performing rituals to honor her deity.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a symbol of weakness to the magic missile trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the magic missile trap with a burning hands trap.

G59. NARLA'S PRIVATE CHAMBER

Behind the cabinet, on the eastern wall, is a secret panel opening into a hallway leading to the hidden shrine of the god of darkness and debauchery (Room G58). A successful DC 25 Search check is required to uncover this secret door, and the cabinet must be moved in order to open it and allow PCs to move from Room G59 to Room G58.

This room is shaped like a cross. A wide column decorated with various markings made by an unknown sculptor dominates the northern section. The column is beautifully made, with various indentations forming different shades of gray. The eastern branch of the chamber holds a simple bed covered by thick orange blankets. On the far wall of the western section is a cabinet made out of black wood. The triangular shaped cabinet holds half a dozen small drawers: One small on top, two medium in the middle, and three narrow but deep drawers underneath. Over the top drawer is a keyhole.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This well-furnished Room is the private chamber of Narla (hp 57). The tiefling hates any being entering her Room without permission. After all, even her mistress respects her much-deserved privacy.

Narla is a foul and wicked creature. At a time, she was at odds with herself, never knowing how to contain her debauchery, however, she now revels in her power over others and has no qualms about killing innocents or maiming self-proclaimed heroes.

Tactics: Narla hides in the shadows and waits for the perfect opportunity to strike. She casts darkness and then attacks, using her +1 unholy wounding dagger of venom in combination with her lethal sneak attack ability, targeting the weakest and opponents first. If time allows, she casts divine favor, entropic shield, and silence before applying her black adder venom and oil of keenness to her dagger, making her initial attack deadlier. Otherwise, she uses invisibility and true strike to guarantee a near-fatal sneak attack.

Once in combat, she uses bane on her enemies, but prefers her deadly skill with the blade to slaughter her prey. She does not kill them quickly, however, preferring to maim and wound them. If Narla realizes the PCs are too strong for her, she takes a draught of her potion of greater invisibility to make good her escape, warning her mistress as quickly as she can. She has no compunction about fleeing if it helps her get an advantage over her prey.

Allow Narla to get a 20 for her Initiative check, if she surprises the PCs.

Treasure: The cabinet upon the east wall contains Narla's many articles of clothing (which she stole from her fallen comrades) and a pair of beautiful emerald earrings in the form of a quill (worth 275 gp). The cabinet requires a series of three DC 35 Open Lock checks, which reset all the locks if any of them fail.

Narla also carries an iron key that unlocks the door leading into her chamber (from Room G60).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three assassin levels to Narla. To decrease the challenge, remove her assassin levels.

Sneak Attack: Narla's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when she flanks her target. This extra damage is 4d6. Should Narla score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Evasion (Ex): Narla can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility. If she makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, she instead takes no damage. Evasion can be used only if the rogue is wearing light armor or no armor. A helpless rogue does not gain the benefit of evasion.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Narla to danger before her senses would normally allow her to do so. She retains her Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) even if she is caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker. However, she still loses her Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized.

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Narla can no longer be flanked. This defense denies another rogue the ability to sneak attack Narla by flanking her, unless the attacker has at eleven rogue levels.

Poison Use: Assassins are skilled in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning themselves when applying poison to a blade.

Poison: Black Adder Venom—Fort DC 11 to resist, primary and secondary damage 1d6 Con.

Darkness (Sp): Narla can use darkness once per day as a 10th-level caster.

G60. MEETING HALL

This dreary hall is cast in darkness. A subtle cool breeze emanates from high above ground level. The north and south walls hold doors framed in stone archways while the western wall opens into a corridor leading to a chiseled column. This decorated column is out of place at the end of the hallway. A corridor in the middle of the eastern wall leads to another doorway.

In the middle of the floor is an impressively wide blood stain. Though the blood that left its mark here dried long ago, it is still clearly visible.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The party of tiefling adventurers who swore allegiance to Sarnikyan once used this large Room as a meeting and dining hall. The chamber is now completely empty, as even Narla, the last of the tieflings, prefers to dine in her private bedchamber.

Tactics: The bloodstain on the floor is another souvenir of Narla's assassination of her wizard companion. The other members of her adventuring band perished at the hands of the demonic fiends in the other Sections of the Region, long before Narla turned upon her remaining ally.

The branch leading east holds a small hearth, and the stone wall there is blacked by soot and the ceiling disappears into the shadows high above — somewhat like a naturally carved chimney. A small pile of dry wood is stacked beside the hearth.

The western portion of the room is filled with various empty wooden crates and barrels, most of which are now useless.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was used by the tieflings who allied themselves with the fallen angel. Now, only Narla comes here. She seldom uses the fireplace and no flame burns in the hearth.

G62. TRAPPED INTERSECTION

The four walls of this dark square room open into hallways cast in shadow. Other than the massive archways that frame the open corridors to the south, east, north, west, there is nothing of interest in this hall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This chamber is rigged with a powerful centuries old mechanical trap imbued with a potent magical effect. As soon as anyone steps within 10 ft. of the middle of the Room, the floor opens into a pit where the temperature is as cold as the dead of winter.

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The corridor leading north has a long but narrow secret alcove hidden into its western wall. This alcove is extremely hard to notice and the inhabitants of this domain never uncovered it. The fact that they seldom use this hallway and never venture into the trapped Room (preferring instead to journey through Rooms G65, G69, and G71 to enter and exit their hideout, explains in part why Sarnikyan and her servants never noticed this compartment.

A successful DC 40 Search check is required to notice the secret sliding panel into the east wall. Behind it is a narrow but long alcove in which a +2 shock halberd can be found.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the depth of the pit trap to 160 ft. To decrease the challenge, reduce the depth of the pit trap to 60 ft.

G63. SIR RANVEED'S SECRET CHAMBER

The hidden door on the southern wall of the corridor opens into a wide chamber dominated by a huge stone pillar in the center. The room is dark, but several sconce holding unlit torches are set upon the four walls. Behind the massive column supporting the fifty ft. ceiling is a large bed, a wooden desk, and a chair. The high and wide chair, made of dark wood covered in deep red silk, is in the southeast corner of the chamber.

Upon it is a large and odd figure. The creature is shaped like a humanoid, but it has loathsome gray and hairless flesh and an elongated skull belonging to no known humanoid race. It is noseless, but a thin hole marks the middle of its face, right under its white, empty, disquieting eyes.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is the private chamber of Sir Ranveed (hp 162), a large bodak serving Sarnikyan. In life, Ranveed was an honest man. He was a knight born of a noble family, he upheld the law, and made quite a name for himself in his country of origin. At the height of his career he was contacted by Sarnikyan — who was a wonderful angel then — and swore to serve and protect her. Though the angel long ago fell from grace — and Sir Ranveed with her — the undead continue to serve his mistress to the best of his abilities.

Ranveed is not smart, but he is not easily fooled either. He reacts with anger towards anyone other than Sarnikyan or Narla (who he barely tolerates) violating his privacy. He also perceives adventurers as a serious threat to his station at his mistress' side. The tieflings who joined her cause were trouble enough, and now that only one remains he does not wish to have more people competing for his mistress' good graces.

Tactics: Ranveed relies on his death gaze ability to kill anyone entering his lair. Once his opponents have taken a good long look at him, he charges without pity, using his bare hands to kill anyone strong — and impudent — enough to resist his dreadful stare.

Treasure: Sir Ranveed keeps the items he possessed in his lifetime close to him. Though he never uses them, they remind him of better days. Under his bed is a silver +1 full plate armor, complete with blue feathered helms and chain mail gauntlets, as well as a masterwork bastard sword and a masterwork heavy mace. The drawers at his bedside store rotted clothing, which he no longer needs.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two bodaks (who serve Ranveed). To decrease the challenge, reduce Ranveed's hit points to 122.

G64. WAR HOUND SECRET PEN

The secret wall opens into a wide hall in which a massive but simple column in the midst of the room supports the high ceiling. This chamber is dark, but an eerie luminescence comes from behind the massive pillar.

A large beast shaped as a muscular lupine creature with short rusty-hued fur, long black fangs, and sooty black tongue emerges from the darkness. The abomination wears a darkened chain barding upon its back. Its blazing red eyes are lit with fire as it utters a terrible sneer.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This chamber is the pen of Sarnikyan's favored pet, a hellish warhound (hp 131). It seldom leaves this Room, except on those rare occasions when it accompanies its mistress on a dark errand outside of her domain. The creature is extremely aggressive.

Tactics: This hell hound uses its breath weapon and fiery bite, attacking PCs in an almost random pattern. If a PC deals more than 20 hit points of damage in a single round to the warhound, it concentrates its attack on this PC for a least 1d4 rounds thereafter.

Treasure: N/A

Possessions: +2 chain shirt barding.

G65. COLUMNED ROOM

A pair of intricately carved columns supports the high ceiling of this wide chamber. Various patterns are engraved into these well-crafted pillars, forming countless shades of gray that disappear into the darkness. A corridor running from east to west passes through this hall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: On each column is a trap. Each is sprung if the PCs succeed at a DC 30 Search check, but fail at a DC 40 Search check. This is a sinister trap that is designed to trick adventurers who must check every corner. Since they will only find the trigger by searching every groove, this trap is a wicked punishment and should be ignored if the PCs haven't been abusive with their Search checks.

One column has a energy drain trap on it, the other has flame strike.

G66. TRAPPED ANTECHAMBER

This chamber is shaped like an egg. The walls are rounded and the low 10-ft. high ceiling forms an oval dome. Even the floor is an inverse dome, creating a eerie look.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This strange Room is empty but trapped. Anyone stepping inside it automatically triggers the magical device, which cannot be bypassed. The only way to avoid this lethal trap is to fly over it; something Sarnikyan the Fallen is well equipped to do. The trap, like many other in this section of the dungeon, was designed for the erinyes by the tiefling wizard Narla assassinated years ago.

If PCs trigger the trap here, allow Sarnikyan in Room G67 a DC 22 Listen check to notice the commotion. If she does, she readies herself for trouble.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add the effect of a second chain lightning trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the chain lightning trap with a flame strike trap.

G67. FALLEN ANGEL'S PRIVATE INNER SANCTUM

Candlelight tosses shadows upon the walls of this perfectly cylindrical room. The wavering light is strong enough to illuminate portions of the sumptuous furniture, but most of it remains in brooding shadows. In the dusk-like glow, the burning candles are set upon a silvery candelabrum on a low, round, marbled table in the center of the room. Between the ancient table and the north wall is sofa large enough to sit two humanoids. On the other side of the table is a large throne-like chair carved from a solid block of obsidian. The dark throne is fashioned with countless grooves, forming intricate patterns. Standing beside the east door is an unnaturally beautiful creature — six ft. tall, her muscular frame and pale skin are flawless. Large wings of long white feathers with blackened tips protrude from her back. The wings move gently, a motion which signals that this statuesque female is real. Opening her eyelids, she reveals blazing-red eyes.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Sarnikyan (hp 179), the powerful erinyes devil controlling this section of the dungeon, lives here. Though evil, this fallen angel is careful, disciplined, and bound to an archaic sense of honor few living beings could understand.

The fallen angel is hostile towards anyone venturing into her domain uninvited. If the PCs parley with her, however, successful Diplomacy checks might change her attitude towards them. PCs wearing the medallion of the Children of the Inner Light (see Room G19 for more details) benefit from a +8 circumstance bonus to any Diplomacy checks made to improve Sarnikyan's attitude.

Though Sarnikyan's ultimate goal is to return to her original angelic state, she realizes the best way to ensure this is to help the cause of the Children of the Inner Light. If the PCs won her trust and question her about the sacred flame of Aranas, she agrees to reveal the location of the ancient relic to them on the condition that she be the one to return it to the leader of the celestial order. If the PCs agree to her terms, she tells them the demonic forces in Rooms G76 through G87 have the artifact in their possession. She also orders her loyal servant Ranveed to accompany the PCs on their mission, as she wants to keep a close eye on them.

If she feels the PCs derogate from this agreement in any way, she either kills them herself or orders Ranveed and her pet nessian warhound to do it for her. If, on the other hand, the PCs complete their quest and bring the potent artifact back to her, Sarnikyan honors her part of the bargain and allows them to escort her to the base of the Children of the Inner Light where she offers the item to their leader (see Room G19).

Tactics: If the party avoided the trap in Room G66 or managed to keep silent enough for the fallen angel not to notice their approach, allow her a DC 22 Listen check to notice them pick the lock leading into her chamber. If she does not hear them, she is caught unaware.

If Sarnikyan hears the PCs approach her Room or unlock the door, she readies for combat, using her mirror image and summon demon before the PCs enter her chamber. In battle, she relies on her rope to entangle the strongest PC, then closes with her enchanted longsword.

Though she would prefer not to, Sarnikyan does not hesitate to use her greater teleport spell-like ability to save her life, preferring instead to escape and plot her revenge against the PCs. If she escapes in this fashion, she teleports herself to Room G64 and then moves to Room G63 where she orders her loyal servants to protect her. She also unleashes all the hell hounds in Room G71 against the party.

Treasure: There is little treasure in this Room aside from what Sarnikyan carries. The silver candelabrum upon the table is worth 50 gp and each of its five candles imbued with a continual flame spell. The wonderfully crafted throne is worth upwards of 800 gp, but the item is large and weighs over 1,500 lbs.

Sarnikyan carries a large key that unlocks all doors in this Section as well as a silver key that bypasses all traps with a bypass mechanism.

EL: 12.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two hell hounds. To decrease the challenge, Sarnikyan is shaken.

G69. TREASURE VAULT

The door leading to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 35 Open Lock check to unlock it.

This round room is similar to the devil's private throne hall leading into it, but it is much smaller. A massive bed covered with exquisite blue silken sheets dominates the dark chamber and several chests made out of wood and iron are lined upon the southern wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is Sarnikyan's bedchamber and treasure vault.

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The five chests on the south wall contain the fallen angel's most precious possessions. None of the chests are locked or trapped. They hold 5,500 gp worth of coins, gems, and jewels. The silken sheets upon the bed are also worth 45 gp.

G69. TRAPPED INTERSECTION

This small square chamber opens into two wide corridors, one leading east and the other running south. The hall is otherwise empty and without outstanding features.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The entire floor of this Room is trapped, but a hidden mechanism at the mouth of each of the hallways leading into it neutralizes its trap long enough for people to pass through. This bypass mechanism requires a DC 30 Search check to locate. PCs who failing to find and pick this lock bypass trigger the trap the round after they enter the Room, sending a volley of spears down from narrow slits in the ceiling.

Scaling: To increase the challenge, double the amount of spears shot from the trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the trap to 1d3 spears per target.

G70. HELL HOUNDS' PLAYGROUND

The walls of this small room are marked with black soot and thick piles of bones from various creatures cover the floor. The skeletal remains are broken into small pieces and charred.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Rooms and the corridor leading to it is where the many hell hounds belonging to Sarnikyan eat, run, and play. Whenever the fallen angel or her servants have a chance, they bring creatures of all kinds here to nourish the hounds. Prisoners caught in this section of the dungeon are brought here.

Four hell hounds (hp 29, 25, 21, 17) are currently in this Room. These creatures are loyal to their mistress and obey her every command. Since Sarnikyan seldom uses her hounds to hunt the neighboring Regions, preferring to use them to guard her territory, she lets them run freely in this large area. The magical beasts attack anyone venturing here.

Tactics: The hell hounds charge their prey, using their breath weapon and fiery bite attack as they see fit. If they notice the PCs approaching this Room from the corridor to the south, they do not hesitate to run towards them, flashing fangs and breathing wisps of black smoke.

If combat ensues here or anywhere in the corridor leading into this Room, allow the hell hounds in Room G72 a DC 18 Listen check. Success means they hear the ruckus and join the attack within 1d2 round.

Treasure: Except for a small piece of uncut beautiful dark amber (worth 45 gp) which used to belong to one of the victims of the hell hounds, there are no treasures in this Room.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four hell hounds. To decrease the challenge, remove two.

G71. HELLHOUND PEN

This large room houses eight powerfully built dog-like creatures with rust colored fur, black teeth and gums, and fiery eyes. In the darkness, the beasts appear extremely menacing, their low growls send shivers down the spine of the bravest of folks.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is the pen of the twenty hell hounds owned by Sarnikyan. There are eight hounds at all times in this chamber. The others are separated in groups of four: one pack stays in Room G70, one in Room G72, and the remaining four sent out on patrol. Because the creatures are well trained and loyal to the fallen angel, they obey her command and take their duties extremely seriously.

Eight hell hounds (hp 22 each) are present in this Room. They attack anyone other than Sarnikyan, Sir Ranveed, or Narla the Assassin instantly.

Tactics: Half of these fierce creatures use their breath weapons in the first round of battle while the others charge the PCs. The creatures alternate between their fire breaths and their fiery bites, attacking until either they or the PCs are defeated.

G74. FIENDISH EARTH ELEMENTAL'S GROUNDS

The entire northeastern portion of the bank of the underground lava stream is home to a powerful fiendish earth elemental. This fiend haunts the area directly south of Room G55 to the southeastern tip of ground below Room G73. It considers this territory home and does not take kindly to visitors.

Though the infernal earth elemental is powerful and vigilant, it does not see anything going on in his domain, even though it does its best to keep every living and undead being from venturing unto its soil. Though it fears the powers of some demons as well as that of the fallen angel Sarnikyan, it does its best to spot and attack anyone daring to step upon its territory.

Unless encountered randomly (see Random Encounters below), the fiendish earth elemental is found in the area numbered G74 on the map, close to the large pile of rubble under which the artifact used in the fiend's creation can be uncovered. Since the tainted elemental's territory encompasses Sarnikyan's domain (Rooms G58 through G73) as well as one of the two entrances leading the undead master's lair (Rooms G45 through G57), other monsters are occasionally encountered here.

G72. HELL HOUND GUARDIANS

Two doors on the south wall lead into this small chamber. Upon the north wall, there is a corridor. There is nothing of interest in this room other than its fearsome inhabitants: A foursome of muscular wolf-like creatures with blazing red eyes, long blackened fangs, and coarse red fur.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Four hell hounds guard this Room. They attack anyone other than their mistress or her loyal minions.

Tactics: The hell hounds attack on sight, using their breath weapon ability as often as they can and biting their prey with all the might they can muster. If they hear the PCs approach this Room from the north corridor, they charge down the hallway to meet them, baying loudly.

If combat ensues here or anywhere in the corridor north of this Room, allow the hell hounds in Room G70 DC 20 Listen checks. Success means they hear the sound of battle and join the fray in 1d3 rounds.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	The PCs notice a piece of cloth coming out of the rocky ground near their position. The small red cloth is the only thing remaining of an adventurer who died here ages ago.
2–12	Nothing
13	Four hell hounds escaped their pen (Room G71) and are currently hunting in these parts, heedless of the fiendish elemental's menace.
14	A group of six ogre zombies are on patrol here. Lord Tarnaticus (see Room G55), who wishes to assess the situation with the fiendish earth elemental claiming this territory, sent them out.
15	A lone bebilith, part of the demonic army, ventured here.
16	Eight dretchs on patrol were sent out in this area by the demonic host. These fiends hope to uncover clues that would lead them to the potent artifact their masters seek.
17	Two babaus are currently journeying through this area. They plan to offer their service to the masters of the demonic army laying siege to the demon lord's prison.
18	A magical trap was set here. Symbol of Sleep Trap: CR 6; magic device; touch trigger; no reset; spell effect (symbol of sleep , 18th-level wizard, DC 20 Will save negates); multiple targets (all creatures within 60 ft.); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30.
19	Falling debris. This portion of the underground lava stream's shore was shaken recently and its high stone ceiling is fragile. When the PCs passes through this spot, a portion of the ceiling falls upon them, causing 10d6 points of crushing damage to everyone in the party. A DC 16 Reflex saving throw half this damage.
20	The dreadful fiendish earth elemental living here noticed the PCs. It emerges from the ground and attacks them. If encountered randomly in another part of its territory, remove the creature from Room G74.

G74. PILE OF RUBBLE

This wide area of the underground lava shore is littered with massive boulders, chunks of falling rock, and piles of crushed or broken stone. Most of the debris seems to have come from the ceiling, but obviously some sort of structure once stood here.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: An elder fiendish earth elemental (hp 228) lives here. This creature was once a noble elder earth elemental, but was tainted long ago when an evil cleric used the rod of tainted earth to summon, control, and corrupt it. Though its master died long ago, the fiendish earth elemental remains here, close to the powerful artifact used to summon and taint it. This artifact is buried under the rubble, along with the dried and bony remains of the cleric Larna, the wild elf who once wielded it.

Tactics: This creature is quite mad. It attacks anything that come within 500 ft. of the artifact it holds dear, erupting from the rocky ground. It uses its slam attacks and push ability to incapacitate its opponents. It has no specific pattern of attack and no preferred targets. Instead, it fights instinctively in a savage manner. There is no reasoning with this creature.

Treasure: The massive pile of rubble hides the rod of tainted earth, a potent relic capable of summoning and corrupting an elder earth elemental. The artifact is buried under ten ft. of heavy stone and a potent magic aura emanates from under the rubble. A detect magic spell reveals strong transmutation magic.

It takes a party of four adventurers over four hours to uncover the buried relic.

The rod of tainted earth is a thick, three-ft. long, cylindrical rod made out of dark bronze. The item is inscribed with various runes of intricate design. A closer inspection of the rod reveals a tiny hand-like symbol inscribed at both ends of the object.

The rod of tainted earth has one purpose, to summon and corrupt one elder earth elemental. Only an evil character can use the rod's magic, however, and a non-evil PC who has the rod in his possession suffers from 5 negative levels for as long as the item remains on his person.

The power of the rod of tainted earth, which can be used once every week, initially functions as the summon monster IX spell but can only be used to call an elder earth elemental. The summoning has no time limit and the summoned creature remains permanently loyal to the rod's wielder. The only events that can break the elder earth elemental's loyalty to the person who summoned it are if the rod's wielder or the creature dies. Every twenty-four hours that passes, the elder earth elemental must succeed at a DC 35 Will save or become permanently tainted by evil. Once the creature fails this save, its alignment shifts to neutral evil and the creature becomes a fiendish elder earth elemental and adds the fiendish creature template to its statistics. This change is permanent. The rod's wielder can have under his control a number of fiendish elder earth elementals equal to his Wisdom modifier (minimum of one).

Earth Mastery (Ex): An earth elemental gains a +1 bonus on attack and damage rolls if both it and its foe are touching the ground. If an opponent is airborne or waterborne, the elemental takes a -4 penalty on attack and damage rolls. (These modifiers are not included in the statistics block.)

Push (Ex): An earth elemental can start a bull rush maneuver without provoking an attack of opportunity. The combat modifiers given in Earth Mastery, above, also apply to the elemental's opposed Strength checks.

Earth Glide (Ex): An earth elemental can glide through stone, dirt, or almost any other sort of earth except metal as easily as a fish swims through water. Its burrowing leaves behind no tunnel or hole, nor does it create any ripple or other signs of its presence. A move earth spell cast on an area containing a burrowing earth elemental flings the elemental back 30 feet, stunning the creature for 1 round unless it succeeds on a DC 15 Fortitude save.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day, the fiendish earth elemental can smite with an attack an additional 24 points of damage against a good target.

G75. BLACKGUARD'S HIDEOUT

Room G75, which is found upon a small and isolated island in the southeastern portion of the Region, is home of Aramnan, a mighty half-fiend wild elf blackguard. Aramnan's hideout is a solid structure that was once part of the underground prison complex. Now, it stands as a lonely fortress on the small island surrounded by the lava flow filled with fiendish demons.

Though Aramnan has few friends, he nevertheless won the respect of many demons and other creatures inhabiting this Region. Relying on his loyal nightmare mount Elair for the protection of his hideout as well as for crossing the demon-infested lava river, Aramnan frequently raids other sections of the dungeon in order to gather treasure.

Aramnan's main goal is to kill Sarnikyan (the erinyes controlling Rooms G58 through G73) and claim her domain. Because the devil relies on two loyal servants as well as a number of hell hounds, Aramnan has thus far been unable to take anything from her. The blackguard is aware of the existence of the rod of tainted earth and he believes retrieving this artifact is an essential for achieving his goal. He has yet to figure out how to recover the potent relic, however, since not only is it guarded by the infernal elder earth elemental, but it is also caught between Sarnikyan's domain and the powerful demonic forces haunting the underground lava stream and its shores.

The blackguard is loyal to the God of War and dedicates a good coefficient of his day to prayer, meditation, and training. Aramnan's skill with the blade is well known throughout the Region, and all who faced him in battle and lived to tell about it dubbed him a fearsome opponent.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

15–16	A force of four babaus emerges from the shadows to attack the party. The demons were posted upon the island of the blackguard, hoping the catch the wild elf unaware.
17	A vrock came to the isolated island to challenge its owner and claim his meager fortress. The demon delights in battle and is content to face the PCs instead.

19	Elair, Aramnan's nightmare mount spots the PCs while patrolling the skies above the island. It comes down charging upon them. If Elair is encountered here, remove the nightmare from its lair (see Room G75 for further details).
20	The spirit of Larna, Aramnan's former companion, haunts this place. The former 16th-level evil cleric died in Room G74 awhile ago. It now strives to protect the home of her former lover.

G75. ARAMNAN'S FORTRESS

The fortress is protected by a powerful magic. Anyone touching the outer walls of this place takes 10d6 points of cold damage. A successful DC 20 Reflex save reduces this damage by half. Larna, the evil human 16th-level cleric who once lived here with Aramnan, created this simple but effective magic. The demon forces are well aware of the potency of the magic placed upon the fortress and avoid the place. Some, however, have sworn to take this domain away from its owner (see Random Encounters above).

An intricate mechanism locks the door leading into the fortress. Though this door can be picked with a successful DC 28 Open Lock check, anyone touching the door directly suffers from the magical device.

The walls of what appears to be a dark fortress stand upon the small isolated island in the southeastern part of the underground lava river. Amidst the boiling stream, this place appears to be a bastion of some sort — the last refuge of a pirate or ruffian. The fortress stands twenty ft. tall and a closer examination reveals its walls were plastered in many places. Rubble covers the majority of the keep and its general appearance suggests the walls of this structure once resembled the walls of most of the chambers in this dungeon complex. Someone or something turned it into an independent structure.

A single door leads into this fortress. It opens into a square hall illuminated by the flames of torches stuck in bronze sconces set upon the walls, which are decorated by old tapestries. Between the many sconces are discolored embroidered cloths damaged by wear, but the images they depict can still clearly be seen: a small human tribe, which members are dressed in simple clothes, battle against a mighty host of giants upon one tapestry. Another shows the same people waging war against the painted wild elves of the woodland a third reveals the same tribe venerated their god, a bear-like creature with powerful human legs and feet holding a red broad sword. Upon the last embroidered cloth is a powerful member of this tribe holding the broad blade of his god in one hand and the bloody head of a great brown bear in the other.

In the eastern corner of the southern wall, an archway opens into a small room. Thick black smoke issues from this chamber, and the hint of a red glow behind the cloud.

A male elf garbed in black armor decorated with fine bluish steel epaulettes and greaves stand behind a table made out of bronze. Several chairs, a massive iron coffer, and a simple cot in the northeast corner are all that furnish the rest of the hall.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Aramnan (hp 67), a wild elf blackguard, and Elair (hp 198), his faithful nightmare cauchemar mount, inhabit this hall. Though the fortress has little protection other than the simple wards set upon the island, Aramnan relies on his reputation and his powerful nightmare servant to discourage anyone from venturing too close to his home. Since the death of his lover Larna, the powerful cleric who possessed the rod of tainted earth (see Room G74 for more details) things have gone gradually worse for Aramnan. The blackguard now fears the powerful demonic hosts will one day decide to cleanse his fortress.

Though this day has yet to come, Aramnan nevertheless tries his best to prepare for the inevitable. He plans to recuperate the rod of tainted earth, which belonged to his fallen companion, and knows exactly where to find it. He does not welcome PCs entering his home uninvited, but those who successfully change his Initial Attitude through good Diplomacy checks might be able to cut a deal with Aramnan. If such is the case, the blackguard asks the PCs to uncover the rod of tainted earth for him. In exchange, he promises to allow them safe haven in his hall, reveal anything he knows about the inhabitants of this Region (which is a lot of information), and offers them a reward of 10,000 gp in gems and jewels upon completion of this task. If the PCs manage to recover the artifact, Aramnan honors his part of the bargain. If satisfied with the PCs, he tries to convince them to join him in his quest to destroy Sarnikyan and claim her domain for himself.

Aramnan remains in telepathic contact with Elaiir and his faithful mount comes to him at the first sign of trouble. If the blackguard talks with the PCs and feels they are no threat to him, Elaiir remains in the southeastern chamber that serves as its pen. The PCs then only see the black smoke and reddish glow emanating through the archway leading to this Room and the creature never truly reveals itself.

Elaiir is a fiendish servant. Aramnan summoned it years ago with the help of his beloved, who perished shortly after. He now relies on it for protection. It is his only true ally.

Tactics: If combat ensues here, Elaiir charges into the Room. Aramnan does not hesitate to attack good-aligned heroes and those wearing the sign of the Children of the Inner Light --- for he knows from past experience these people are enemies and of little use to him. In battle, he uses a number of tactics, preferring to drink a sip of his potion of bear's endurance and cast harmful spells against the PCs until forced into melee. Once engaged, he uses his magical blade and targets the weakest looking wounded enemies first.

Treasure: Aramnan possesses a number of magical items, which he keeps on his person (see below), as well as a key that unlocks the door leading into this hall. The tapestries upon the walls are ancient and depict the story of the Andurar tribe, which lived and died long ago. These people worshiped the Bear Spirit and legend holds their chieftain slaughtered their god to claimed his deadly blade. A successful DC 28 Knowledge (history) check reveals all this as well as the tapestries' true value of 250 gp each. Otherwise, they appear to be worth a mere 25 gp each. The large iron coffer is unlocked and not trapped. It contains 11,000 gp worth of gems and jewelry of all kinds.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three blackguard level to Aramnan. To decrease the challenge, remove one blackguard level from Aramnan and replace Elaiir (nightmare cauchemar) with a mundane nightmare.

Sneak Attack: Aramnan's attack deals extra damage any time his target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when he flanks her target. This extra damage is 3d6. Should Aramnan score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Poison Use: Blackguards are skilled in the use of poison and never risk accidentally poisoning themselves when applying poison to a blade.

Smite Good (Su): Twice per day, Aramnan may attempt to smite good with one normal melee attack.

He adds his Charisma modifier (+3) to his attack roll and deals 5 extra points of damage. If a blackguard accidentally smites a creature that is not good, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

Aura of Despair (Su): Aramnan radiates a malign aura that causes enemies within 10 feet of him to take a -2 penalty on all saving throws.

Command Undead (Su): Aramnan has the supernatural ability to command and rebuke undead. He commands undead as would a cleric of two levels lower.

Elf Traits: Immunity to sleep spells and effects, and a +2 racial saving throw bonus against enchantment spells or effects (not included above). +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks. An elf who merely passes within 5 feet of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if he were actively looking for it.

Smoke (Su): During the excitement of battle, a nightmare snorts and neighs with rage. This snorting fills a 15-foot cone with a hot, sulfurous smoke that chokes and blinds opponents. Anyone in the cone must succeed on a DC 25 Fortitude save or take a -2 penalty on all attack and damage rolls until 1d6 minutes after leaving the cone. The cone lasts 1 round, and the nightmare uses it once as a free action during its turn each round. The save DC is Constitution-based. Because of the smoke it gives off, a nightmare has concealment against creatures 5 feet away and total concealment against creatures 10 feet or farther away. The smoke does not obscure the nightmare's vision at all.

Astral Projection and Etherealness (Su): These abilities function just like the spells of the same names (caster level 20th); a nightmare can use either at will.

Empathic Link (Su): The blackguard has an empathic link with his servant out to a distance of up to 1 mile. The blackguard cannot see through the servant's eyes, but they can communicate empathically. Because of the limited nature of the link, only general emotional content can be communicated.

Because of the empathic link between the servant and the blackguard, the blackguard has the same connection to a place or an item that the servant does.

Improved Evasion (Ex): If the servant is subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, it takes no damage on a successful saving throw and only half damage on a failed saving throw. Improved evasion is an extraordinary ability.

Share Spells: At the blackguard's option, he may have any spell (but not any spell-like ability) he casts on himself also affect his servant. The servant must be within 5 feet at the time of casting to receive the benefit. If the spell has a duration other than instantaneous, it stops affecting the servant if it moves farther than 5 feet away and will not affect the servant again even if the servant returns to the blackguard before the duration expires. Additionally, the blackguard may cast a spell with a target of "You" on his servant (as a touch range spell) instead of on himself. A blackguard and his servant can share spells even if the spells normally do not affect creatures of the servant's type (magical beast).

Carrying Capacity: A light load for this stallion is up to 612 pounds; a medium load, 613-1,224 pounds; and a heavy load, 1,225-1,840 pounds.

G76 THROUGH G97. THE BASE OF THE DEMONIC HOST

Rooms G76 through G97, including the mighty underground lava flow coursing through this Region of the dungeon (Room G88), are controlled by the powerful demonic hosts struggling to free their lord from Room G100. A fragile triumvirate composed of Lord Nasherbiz, a bebilith, Lord Gwarny'z, a hezrou, and Lord Glebshayy, a glabrezu lead these forces. Officially, the latter heads the triumvirate and speaks on behalf of his two equals, but in reality a complex power struggle exists between the three.

Lord Glebshayy, a glabrezu demon, is the second most powerful of fiend in this Section of the dungeon (short of the marilith in Room G99, who oddly, serves him). As such, the forces under the triumvirate's command harbor a great respect towards him. Nasherbiz and Gwarny'z, each of whom earned the undivided loyalty of several demons in the fiendish army, however, compromise Glebshayy's reign of fear. Because of their influence over portions of the great host, Glebshayy must deal with the arrogance and petty ambitions of his allies in the triumvirate. Fortunately, all three demons agree on one thing: Their ultimate goal is to free the demon lord Krasveshk from his prison (Room G100).

To accomplish their task, the three lords agreed to each take control of a portion of the territory they call theirs. Lord Gwarny'z is in charge of ensuring no angels or celestials from the Children of the Inner Light cross the boiling lava river leading to the main island at the center of the Region. His forces are spread out throughout the stream (Room G88) while he leads from Room G82.

Over a year ago, Lord Nasherbiz ordered his forces to claim all the chambers on the main island. The demonic fiends loyal to him inhabit Rooms G89 to G97, laying siege to the fortress (Room G98) preventing them from liberating Lord Krasveshk. The demon commander remains close to the action (in Room G90), where he can get directly involved in the various raids against the mighty walls of the stone fortress.

Meanwhile, Lord Glebshayy's forces are charged with the defense of the most important and secured area controlled by them (Rooms G76 to G87). Lord Glebshayy is content to keep his forces away from the main battle scenes, especially since they remain close to him.

Unfortunately for the triumvirate, the intervention of the Children of the Inner Light as well as the presence of some of the other creatures in this Region of the dungeon prevents the demonic forces from completing their goal. The recent incursion upon the main island, however, allowed them to weaken the fortress' wall (Room G98). Soon, they believe, they will reach the force cocoon imprisoning their lord and master at the heart of the island.

Larna, an evil cleric who died long ago, built most of the traps in this Section. The cleric made an agreement with Nasherbiz letting her (and her blackguard lover) alone on their isolated island (Room G75) provided she used her magic to make protective wards and traps throughout the Rooms controlled by the hellish host.

DEMON SUMMONING, REVISITED

Because the process of demons summoning other demons is so unpredictable, much of the creature's CR, in effect, goes to waste, when nothing arrives. However, in order to keep the "logic" of the prison intact, few if any demons are ever summoned in. To compound the issue, summoning demons is (usually) the equivalent of a 3rd- or 5th-level spell, making it easy to negate inside the prison confines where magic and anti-magic flows like water.

So, what's a DM to do?

In order to make the encounter challenging, we recommend cutting the number of "potential" summoned creatures by 1/2 or 1/3 and merely place them in the Room along with the largest demon present. Remove the ability to summon at all. This should balance the encounter and still give the PCs something to remember.

G76. LORD GLEBSHAYY'S TREASURE ROOM

The door to this Room is locked and trapped. A DC 35 Open Lock check is required to unlock it, and pushing it open triggers its trap.

Flame Strike Trap: CR 8; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (flame strike, 16th-level cleric, 15d6 fire, DC 17 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 35; Disable Device DC 35.

This simple room holds a pile of coins intermingled with silver and gold jewelry as well as colorful gems of all denominations. The stack, which is five ft. at its highest point, is piled upon the northern wall, but coins and gems cover most of the floor of the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Over 40,000 gp worth of coins, gems, jewelry, and ancient paintings, vases, and small sculptures is piled up in this chamber. Lord Glebshayy does not care much about the wealth he and his minions accumulated here over the past centuries, but he knows this treasure might come in handy later. Because of this, he personally safeguards the treasure (since he seldom leaves Room G78) and makes sure the door to this Room is locked at all times.

The most important item in this Room, however, is undoubtedly the sacred flame of Anas. A chunk of crystal glowing with an inner orange radiance, this relic is the only thing that remains of the enchanted crystals used to power up the magical lights, traps, and wards of this Region of the dungeon. The Children of the Inner Light seek to recover sacred flame of Anas, for it is the only thing that can save the life of their leader (see Rooms G5 and G19 for further details). The relic's sole purpose is to be used as a power source in Room G9 and is thus otherwise useless to the PCs.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a flame strike trap to the sacred flame. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the flame strike trap to 10d6.

G77. LORD GLEBSHAYY'S SLAVE ROOM

The door leading to this Room is locked but not trapped. A successful DC 35 Open Lock check is needed to open it.

This room is ominous. Chains can be heard in the darkness, and a closer examination reveals a pair of youthful-looking bald, pale-skinned beings. Large feathery wings protrude from these tortured creatures but their faces remain extraordinarily beautiful.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Two trumpet archons (one male, one female) are imprisoned here (hp 37, 49); both heavily wounded, dirty, and stripped of their clothing. Massive chains bound to the south wall prevent them from moving more than 5 ft. away from the wall. An invisible quasit (hp 15) taunts and torments the archons continuously, preventing them from sleeping and recuperating their powers. Their trumpets were cast at the bottom of the lava flow and destroyed weeks ago. The shackles are guarded with a powerful flame strike trap and are nearly indestructible.

If liberated, the archons explain they are members of the Children of the Inner Light. They desperately want to return to their base (Rooms G1 through G33), but are more than willing to reveal everything they know about the demons in this Region before leaving the dreadful place.

Tactics: The invisible quasit surprises the PCs with its poisonous sting, attacking the lesser-armored individual of the group first. Once it reveals itself, it uses cause fear, hoping to send dread in the PCs' heart before turning itself invisible again. It flies out of the Room, invisible, as soon as it takes a single hit point of damage.

If it escapes, the quasit moves to Room G78, G79, and then to G82 to alert the demonic forces of the PCs' presence.

Treasure: N/A

EL: Varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the quasit with a hezrou torturer. To decrease the challenge, remove the quasit.

✦ Quasit: CR 2; Tiny outsider (chaotic, extraplanar, evil); HD 3d8; hp 15; Init +7; Spd 20 ft., fly 50 ft. Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 13, initial damage 1d4 Dex, secondary damage 2d4 Dex. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +2 racial bonus.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—detect good, detect magic, and invisibility (self only); 1/day—cause fear (as the spell, except that its area is a 30-foot radius from the quasit, save DC 11). Caster level 6th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Once per week a quasit can use commune to ask six questions. The ability otherwise works as the spell (caster level 12th).

Alternate Form (Su): A quasit can assume other forms at will as a standard action. This ability functions as a polymorph spell cast on itself (caster level 12th), except that a quasit does not regain hit points for changing form, and any individual quasit can assume only one or two forms no larger than Medium. Common forms include bat, monstrous centipede, toad, and wolf. A quasit in alternate form loses its poison attack.

G78. LORD GLEBSHAYY'S CHAMBER

This wide hall is cast in darkness. A door can be seen in the middle of the eastern wall and a large throne is placed in front of it. The massive throne is fashioned with a multitude of bones and skulls, which are glued to one other.

A vulture-like creature with powerful feathery wings and dark blue skin stand on either side of the throne. Upon the dreadful throne is an enormous creature. The demon's four arms end in powerful-looking weapons, two large clawed hands and two powerful pincers. Great horns top its canine head and sharp fangs protrude from its long muzzle. The fiend's eyes are cold, dark, and calculating.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This is the private abode of Lord Glebshayy (hp 192), a powerful glabrezu demon. A pair of vrocks (hp 122 and 107) are part of his personal guard and constantly protect his chamber. Like the other three lords that make up the demonic host's triumvirate, Glebshayy encourages intrusion. Though he does not tolerate trespassers and is extremely aggressive towards them, he enjoys a good fight and sees the incursion into his chamber and territory as a chance for good sport.

If the PCs parley with Glebshayy, the cunning demon is eager to talk. Like any demon, he is exceedingly verbose. Glebshayy knows more than he lets on and even when he's at a loss, he still pretends to have a secret. He spends a great deal of time "talking" just to learn about the PCs. If he senses they are not righteous, or if he believes they could be corrupted, he offers to "purchase" their services. If the PCs negotiate with him, the demon lord is willing to give most of the treasures he has, provided they agree to assassinate Cylrebrai (in Room G5) for him.

Though Glebshayy hopes his forces can breach the wall standing between him and his lord and master (see Room G98), he knows that killing the solar angel would take care of his problems. Since his forces are unable to take the angels themselves, he hopes a small group of heroes might infiltrate the angels' base for him. If, on the other hand, the PCs are good-aligned, or wear the medallions of the Order of the Children of the Inner Light, Glebshayy attacks them immediately.

Tactics: The two vrocks attack as soon as their lord allows. They are vigilant and keep their eyes on the western corridor opening into this hall. If they notice the PCs approach from this direction (roll appropriate Listen and Spot checks), they use their mirror image spell-like ability to make it look as if there were more of them. They charge the PCs, using their deadly spores and stunning screech as often as they can. If the PCs do not fall within four combat rounds, they use their summon tanar'ri ability to call reinforcement.

While his vrock bodyguards attack the PCs, Glebshayy sits in his throne, using chaos hammer, confusion, and reverse gravity. If the PCs become a threat (taking down a vrock or two), he uses mirror image and his summon tanar'ri ability before charging into the fray himself. If Glebshayy finds himself on the losing side of battle, he summons demons from all over the Section with his telepathy, providing an escape route to his most loyal lieutenant (Room G84).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two vrocks. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a glabrezu must hit a Medium or smaller opponent with a pincer attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—chaos hammer (DC 19), confusion (DC 19), dispel magic, mirror image, reverse gravity (DC 22), greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), unholy blight (DC 19); 1/day—power word stun. Caster level 14th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Once per month, a glabrezu can fulfill a wish for a mortal humanoid. The demon can use this ability to offer a mortal whatever he or she desires—but unless the wish is used to create pain and suffering in the world, the glabrezu demands either terrible evil acts or great sacrifice as compensation.

Summon Demon (Sp): Once per day a glabrezu can attempt to summon 4d10 dretches or 1d2 vrocks with a 50% chance of success, or another glabrezu with a 20% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 4th-level spell.

True Seeing (Su): Glabrezu continuously use true seeing as the spell (caster level 14th).

Skills: Glabrezu have a +8 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

Dance of Ruin (Su): To use this ability, a group of at least three vrocks must join hands in a circle, dancing wildly and chanting. At the end of 3 rounds of dancing, a wave of crackling energy flashes outward in a 100-foot radius. All creatures except for demons within the radius take 20d6 points of damage (Reflex DC 18 half). Stunning, paralyzing, or slaying one of the vrocks stops the dance. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—mirror image, telekinesis (DC 18), greater teleport (self plus 50 lbs. of objects only); 1/day—heroism. Caster level 12th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Spores (Ex): A vrock can release masses of spores from its body once every 3 rounds as a free action. The spores automatically deal 1d8 points of damage to all creatures adjacent to the vrock. They then penetrate the skin and grow, dealing an additional 1d4 points of damage each round for 10 rounds. At the end of this time, the victim is covered with a tangle of viny growths. (The vines are harmless and wither away in 1d4 days.) A delay poison spell stops the spores' growth for its duration. Bless, neutralize poison, or remove disease kills the spores, as does sprinkling the victim with a vial of holy water.

Stunning Screech (Su): Once per hour a vrock can emit a piercing screech. All creatures except for demons within a 30-foot radius must succeed on a DC 22 Fortitude save or be stunned for 1 round. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Summon Demon (Sp): Once per day a vrock can attempt to summon 2d10 dretches or another vrock with a 35% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 3rd-level spell.

Skills: Vrocks have a +8 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

G79. LORD NASHERBIZ'S CHAMBER

This large hall is dominated by thick webbing that takes up most of the northern half of the room. The web is gray and runs from the floor to the ceiling, blocking a good portion of the chamber. There is no other feature of interest in this dark hall aside from the door in the middle of the western wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is the private chamber of Lord Nasherbiz. The demon is currently using Room G90, so no one actually dwells in this Room at the moment. Lord Nasherbiz wove the massive webbing himself, which serves as a nest for the demon. Anyone touching the web must succeed at a DC 20 Reflex save or become entangled.

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: PCs succeeding at a DC 35 Search find a small silvery key that unlocks the doors to Rooms G80 and G81.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

G80. TRAPPED EMPTY ROOM

The door to this Room is locked and trapped. A DC 35 Open Lock check is required to unlock it, and pushing it open triggers its trap.

✶ Flame Strike Trap: CR 8; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (flame strike, 16th-level cleric, 15d6 fire, DC 17 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 35; Disable Device DC 35.

This small Room is dark and empty and deep gouges line the floor. The stone surface is blanketed with an undisturbed layer of dust.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: After the trap triggers, roll for a Random Encounter, ignoring a 20.

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the flame strike trap attack twice. To decrease the challenge, replace the flame strike trap with a bestow curse trap.

G81. DECEIVING SEDUCTRESSES' CHAMBER

The door leading to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 35 Open Lock check to unlock.

This small chamber is dark and humid. A wide bed takes up most of the room, which holds no other furniture. The silhouette of two elven females lie upon the bed in the darkness. Their half-naked bodies are bruised and battered. There is fear in their eyes.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This chamber is home of two succubui (hp 37, 30) loyal to Lord Nasherbiz. While he is away waging his war upon the central island fortress, he left these two servants behind to spy on the activities of Glebshayy (Room G78). The "harpies," however loyal, take their duties lightly and remain in this chamber, leisurely bidding their time.

The succubui are alert and remain attentive to what goes on around them. When they hear movement in the corridor or anyone tampering with the complex mechanism locking the door leading to their Room, they assume the shape of elven damsels in distress.

Tactics: These demons are deviously cunning. Instead of acting grateful to see the PCs, they view their "liberators" as yet another menace. For the first few rounds, they act terrified, as though years of torture and abuse had drained them. If the PCs explain "you are free," they gradually warm up and recount the false tale of their capture and imprisonment. When the time is ripe, they thank the PCs and plant their deadly kiss upon them.

If combat ensues and the demons find themselves on the losing side, they flee to Room G90, where they tell their master about the PCs.

Treasure: A silvery key that unlocks the doors leading into Rooms G80 and G81 can be found under the pillows on the bed.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two succubui. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

Energy Drain (Su): A succubus drains energy from a mortal it lures into some act of passion, or by simply planting a kiss on the victim.

If the target is not willing to be kissed, the succubus must start a grapple, which provokes an attack of opportunity. The succubus's kiss or embrace bestows one negative level. The kiss also has the effect of a suggestion spell, asking the victim to accept another kiss from the succubus. The victim must succeed on a DC 21 Will save to negate the effect of the suggestion. The DC is 21 for the Fortitude save to remove a negative level. These save DCs are Charisma-based.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—charm monster (DC 22), detect good, detect thoughts (DC 20), ethereal jaunt (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), polymorph (humanoid form only, no limit on duration), suggestion (DC 21), greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only). Caster level 12th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Summon Demon (Sp): Once per day a succubus can attempt to summon 1 vrock with a 30% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 3rd-level spell.

Tongues (Su): A succubus has a permanent tongues ability (as the spell, caster level 12th). Succubi usually use verbal communication with mortals.

Skills: Succubi have a +8 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

* While using her alter self ability, a succubus gains a +10 circumstance bonus on Disguise checks.

G82. LORD GWARNY'Z'S PRIVATE CHAMBER

A stench emanates from this large hall, which is cast shadows. A closer look reveals a large pile of crushed bones and rubble in the northeast corner of the room. Upon these debris is a large creature bearing horrible features. The wide road-like face of the fiend holds a pair of yellow bulbous eyes. Its half-open mouth reveals rows of blunt teeth and its forelegs are a pair of well-muscled arms shaped as a humanoid creature but with unnatural skin of a blackened bronze coloration.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is the private chamber of Gwarny'z (hp 173), a mighty hezrou demon and a member of the triumvirate controlling this Section of the dungeon. Though he does not have the scheming instincts of the other two powerful demons that comprise the triumvirate, Lord Gwarny'z won his share of battles and the demon under his command are extremely loyal — for they fear him tremendously. Glebshayy and Nasherbiz consider him the lesser member of the triumvirate, but Gwarny'z knows better. Without his troops, the powerful demon lord they serve will never be freed. And once they accomplish this task, his master will properly reward Gwarny'z (so he believes).

Tactics: Like Glebshayy, Gwarny'z enjoys a good challenge, especially a battle. Whenever someone other than a demonic minion enters his chamber, he immediately attacks. He does not shy from using spell-like abilities to aid him in combat, but he only summons others after he is reduced to 100 hit points or less.

Treasure: PCs searching through the refuse in the northeast corner of the Room uncover, with a successful DC 24 Search check, Gwarny'z's most precious possession: A platinum finger ring embedded with a large but cracked ruby (worth 3,200 gp).

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one vrock. To decrease the challenge, reduce his total hit points to 133.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a hezrou must hit with both claw attacks. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—chaos hammer (DC 18), greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), unholy blight (DC 18); 3/day—blasphemy (DC 21), gaseous form. Caster level 13th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Stench (Ex): A hezrou's skin produces a foul-smelling, toxic liquid whenever it fights. Any living creature (except other demons) within 10 feet must succeed on a DC 24 Fortitude save or be nauseated for as long as it remains within the affected area and for 1d4 rounds afterward. Creatures that successfully save are sickened for as long as they remain in the area. A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same hezrou's stench for 24 hours. A delay poison or neutralize poison spell removes either condition from one creature. Creatures that have immunity to poison are unaffected, and creatures resistant to poison receive their normal bonus on their saving throws.. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Summon Demon (Sp): Once per day a hezrou can attempt to summon 4d10 dretches or another hezrou with a 35% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 4th-level spell.

G83. LIEUTENANT'S PRIVATE CHAMBER

This darkened room contains a wide bed covered with colorful sheets torn to shred. A small wooden chest with a smashed open lid sits in the southeast corner.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is Ranvek's private chamber. Lord Glebshayy's second in command rarely uses this Room, but he sometimes rests here. There is a 25% chance of finding him here, rather than Room G84.

G84. LIEUTENANT'S OFFICE

This wide room is in a dire state. Broken pieces of furniture that cannot be identified are all over the place and ripped tapestries hang from the walls. In the center of the room is a large marble slab, which is used as a table. The marble tablet is broken, but a wide portion of it remains intact.

A gaunt, large humanoid-like creature with pitch black and leathery skin, pointy ears, and curved horns protruding from the back of its skull stands in the middle of the chamber; its red eyes glow with hatred. Its long fingers snap the air in front of it.

Encounter: Ranvek (hp 186), a powerful babau demon and Lord Glebshay's most trusted warrior, uses this chamber as an office from which he leads the many minions under his master's control. The evil demon serves Glebshay to the best of his abilities and, following Lord Glebshay's instructions, he does not tolerate anyone inside his master's compound.

Tactics: Ranvek attacks the PCs on sight, using his sharp claws and darkness spell-like ability to harm and confuse his enemies. He does not hesitate to summon other demons or teleport himself from harm's way should the PCs be too powerful for him to handle alone. He never retreats to his lord, however — fearing his failure against the PCs might be the death of him —, but instead moves to Room G82, hoping to convince Gwaryn'z to help him defeat the intruders.

Any weapon that touches it takes 2d6 points of acid damage from the corrosive goo, and the weapon's hardness does not reduce this damage. A magic weapon may attempt a DC 24 Reflex save to avoid taking this damage. G85. FIRST GUARD ROOM

The walls of this small chamber are smeared with deep claw marks and several piles of detritus lay in the four corners of the room. Four gaunt but muscular medium-sized demons with black skin and fiery eyes inhabit this chamber.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Four babau (hp 68, 67, 65, 61) live here. Like most of their kind, these creatures are ferocious and cruel. They enjoy tormenting their prey and love to see lowly humanoids squirm. If the PCs are hesitant to engage them in battle, the babaus tease them for a few rounds in an attempt to dishearten them. Otherwise, they gladly fight them.

Tactics: In battle, the babau work as a unit. They flank their enemies (in order to use their sneak attack ability) and charge the strongest opponents. They pursue fleeing PCs for up to 200 ft. before returning.

G87. DEMON GUARD POST

This room is devoid of furniture and cast in total darkness. Heavy hissing and moaning emanates from the darkness.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is cast in perpetual darkness, where three vrocks (hp 115 each) wait to ambush those who would enter the demons domain. Though they often argue amongst themselves, they remain vigilant and watchful of trespassers.

Tactics: These evil fiends opening with a stunning screech and follow with a spores attack. Since there are only two of them, they cannot do a dance of ruin. Instead, they flank their enemies and summon for assistance after 2d4 rounds. They are extremely fierce and fight to the death, using telepathy to let the others know the PCs are here.

G88. INFESTED STREAM

PCs touching the lava suffer 2d6 fire damage each round. PCs falling into the deadly stream take 12d6 fire damage each round. The mephits (page 14) avoid this Room, so the PCs are safe from their attacks.

The lava of the underground river coursing through this Region of the dungeon is hot and burning. It is impossible to determine the depth of the lava flow.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Several demons haunt the lava flow, preventing anyone from crossing to the large island upon which the Lord Krasveshk is imprisoned. Whenever the PCs cross the stream, there is a 75% chance they are noticed by one of several bands of dretch demons (hp 13 each) patrolling the lava flow. There are nine dretches in every patrol.

Tactics: The demons attack mercilessly, using stinking cloud as soon as possible to hamper the PCs. The summon for help or use telepathy to get others to attack the PCs. While this encounter may start easy, the PCs are in trouble after a few rounds when babau, vrocks, and finally hezrou arrive to investigate the intrusion. G89. RETRIEVER'S ROOM

A huge creature that looks like a dreadful spider with massive pincers at the end of its forelegs takes up most of this otherwise empty room. The creature's four bulbous gleaming eyes shine under the thick layers of its black carapace.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A retriever demon (hp 135) has made this its home. Though the creature cannot use the southern door, it manages to move surprisingly easily through the corridors to the east and north. If it hears the PCs move through the hallway leading to Room G90, it quickly comes out of its lair to protect its master.

Tactics: This powerful demon uses its eye rays, targeting the strongest PCs first, but it does not shy away from a physical encounter. While it does not have telepathy, it can shriek, alerting nearby dretches and babau of intruders. Allow the patrols in Room G88 a DC 20 Listen check if the retriever is in trouble.

Skills and Feats: —

Eye Rays (Su): A retriever's eyes can produce four different magical rays with a range of 100 feet. Each round, it can fire one ray as a free action. A particular ray is usable only once every 4 rounds. A retriever can fire an eye ray in the same round that it makes physical attacks.

The save DC for all rays is 18. The save DC is Dexterity-based.

Fire: Deals 12d6 points of fire damage to the target (Reflex half).

Cold: Deals 12d6 points of cold damage to the target (Reflex half).

Petrification: The target must succeed on a Fortitude save or turn to stone permanently.

Find Target (Sp): When ordered to find an item or a creature, a retriever does so unerringly, as though guided by discern location.

The being giving the order must have seen (or must have an item belonging to) the creature to be found, or must have touched the object to be located. This ability is the equivalent of an 8th-level spell.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a retriever must hit with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and grips the opponent fast in its mouth. This is the method by which it usually "retrieves" things.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 24, initial damage 1d6 Con, secondary damage 2d6 Con. Bebilith venom is highly perishable, losing its potency and becoming inert, foul-smelling goo almost as soon as it comes into contact with air. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Rend Armor (Ex): If a bebilith hits with both claw attacks, it pulls apart any armor worn by its foe. This attack deals 4d6+18 points of damage to the opponent's armor. Creatures not wearing armor are unaffected by this special attack. Armor reduced to 0 hit points is destroyed. Damaged armor may be repaired with a successful Craft (armorsmithing) check.

Web (Ex): A bebilith can throw a web up to four times per day. This is similar to an attack with a net but has a maximum range of 30 feet, with a range increment of 10 feet. This attack is effective against targets of up to Gargantuan size. The web anchors the target in place, allowing no movement.

An entangled creature can escape with a DC 24 Escape Artist check or burst the web with a DC 24 Strength check. The check DCs are Constitution-based. The web has 14 hit points and hardness 0. There is a 75% chance that the webbing will not burn if any sort of fire is applied to it (check each round).

Plane Shift (Su): This ability affects only the bebilith. It is otherwise similar to the spell (caster level 12th).

Skills: A bebilith has mottled coloration that gives it a +8 racial bonus on Hide checks.

G90. LORD NASHERBIZ TEMPORARY CHAMBER

The bare walls of this chamber are scorched and deep scars mark its dark gray stone. A huge spider-like creature takes the space. Its bluish gray exoskeleton is enormous and misshapen. Its two forelegs are barbed and a yellowish venom drips from its fanged mouth.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Lord Nasherbiz (hp 181), a bebilith demon, uses this large hall as headquarters from which he leads the demons that make up his armies. He is presently here alone, speaking through telepathy to Glebshayy (Room G78), Gwarny'z (Room G82), and Ranvek (Room G84). If the PCs attack, they immediately become aware of it and send reinforcements or come of their own accord.

Tactics: Nasherbiz lays siege to the fortress at the center of the island. He does not tolerate non-demons in his sight and attacks mercilessly, using his web and poisonous bite. He summons for aid immediately, using whatever demons are at his disposal. He does not fight to death, knowing his value to the mission. Instead, he flees to Room G98 (if the others fall), having the demons there fight the PCs for him.

G91. RUBBLE

The door on the southern wall is inaccessible and hidden by stone debris. It would take four PCs 20 hours of manual labor to dig through the rubble and uncover the door. PCs arriving from the corridor to the west are unable to open this door, due to the weight of the rubble piled upon it.

This large hall is filled with stone debris ranging in size from crushed rock powder to massive boulders giants would have trouble moving.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There is a 50% chance that four babau (like those in Room G95), are here digging through the rubble. If they spot the PCs, they immediately use their telepathy to call for reinforcement.

This small room is dark and foreboding. Hundreds of scratches upon the walls are evidence of its overcrowding. In the center of the room, twelve slothful demons crowd for space.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Fourteen dretches (hp 13 each) dwell in this chamber, waiting for the order to storm the fortress in the center of the island. Combined, these Rooms (G92, G93 and G96) contain 29 dretches, who are constantly engaged with one another in telepathy.

Tactics: Four dretches use their scare and stinking cloud abilities before engaging the PCs, while the others charge, attacking the mercilessly. The ninth waits by the door for the others to arrive.

G93. LESSER DEMON CHAMBER II

This square room has no furniture or decoration, but the stone surfaces of the walls, floor, and ceiling are covered in a thick layer of dried blood. In one corner of the room, a blubbery and almost hairless creature with sickly flesh and sunken eyes stands, its head drooping to the floor and its nervous eyes glancing in all possible directions.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Six dretches (hp 13 each) dwell in this chamber, waiting for the order to storm the fortress in the center of the island. Combined, these Rooms (G92, G93 and G96) contain 27 dretches, who are constantly engaged with one another in telepathy.

Tactics: These six dretches are the most cowardly of the three groups. They take the longest to respond to the others and summon aid the quickest. Three dretches use their scare and stinking cloud abilities from a distance, rather than engage the PCs directly. The others wait 1d3 rounds each before engaging, waiting for the mental response from the other dretches. G94. SEPULTURE OF THE ANGEL

The bony remains of a large humanoid-looking creature with the skeleton of massive wings upon its back is sprawled out in the middle of this room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: An astral deva angel paladin died here long ago. Though there is no one inhabiting this Room, the demons of the foul host prefer to avoid what they call the sepulture of the angel. The four walls of this small chamber are characterized by countless marks inscribed by powerful claws. Four dreadful-looking demons with taunt black flesh covering gaunt bodies dwell in this room. Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Four babau (hp 75, 69, 64, 59) live here. Though they occasionally leave their chamber to patrol the island and often try to break down the fortress to the east, they are now waiting for their commander's order to storm the castle once again.

Tactics: Despite their chaotic nature, these evil fiends work well together. They flank their enemies to use sneak attack on them. G98 THROUGH G100. THE DEMON LORD'S FORTRESS PRISON

Rooms G98 through G100 is the prison area where the powerful demon lord Krasveshk was taken, centuries ago. A mighty dome of mystical force forms the principal defense around the prison's perimeter. Cyrlebrai, the solar angel leader of the Children of the Inner Light (see Room G5), is responsible for maintaining the magical fortification, but his strength is ebbing.

Mavian, a trumpet archon, uses the magic of a greater lyre of building to help Cyrlebrai weave the protective dome of this fortress. In order to maintain the fortification, Mavian must ceaselessly sing and play the lyre, reinforcing the protective wall around this Region as soon as it is damaged.

The haunting tunes from this trumpet archon can be heard throughout the Region, but in this section her soul-wrenching wail is clearly laced with sorrow and fear. Mavian has been doing this for eons, and she dreads the day when the powerful demonic forces will finally breach the wall. She knows this day is on its way, as the fortress of force she helps maintain is damaged and the power of her leader is rapidly diminishing.

Centuries ago, Mavian vowed to stand guard at the heart of the island, where the lord Krasveshk is kept prisoner. Krasveshk is imprisoned in a magical cocoon made of pure force, and while the demon is trapped within he remains powerless.

The demonic forces surrounding the island cut the angels from the central prison and their greatest prisoner. However, Cyrlebrai (Room G5) and Mavian maintain the magically created dome of pure force that stands between the fiendish hosts and their master.

The demonic forces have been trying to breach the outer force wall ever since they took control of the island. Though they managed to weaken the fortification, they have been unable to break through. In order for them to accomplish this goal, they first need to kill Cyrlebrai (in Room G5). If they do, the force wall crumbles and Mavian becomes the only defense standing between the demons and their goal.

G97. ASSASSIN DEMONS ROOM II

Four dreadful-looking demons with taunt black flesh, meander through the room. They gibber and bicker with one another, making nonsensical noises. Piles of detritus fill the corners of the room, serving as nests of some kind.

Encounter: Four babau (hp 77, 64, 63, 57) live here, guarding their feeble possessions. Though they occasionally patrol the island and often try to break down the fortress to the east, they are lazy and hide here whenever possible.

Tactics: These fiends do not get along and fail to work well together. They summon dretches to aid them, unwilling to fight the PCs themselves. However, their use of telepathy results in no attention and they realize they must fend for themselves. If creatures nearby hear a disturbance, it is 50% likely, they will not come to the aid of the babau.

If the demonic hosts breach the wall, roll on this chart every 5 minutes or pick a Room (from the closest to the farthest) in which there are demons and bring them into Room G98 and G99.

1	A loud wail, more dreadful than what is normally heard here, echoes. The sound comes from an unknown source, but sends chills down the PCs' spines.
2–9	Nothing
10–11	Eight dretchs scouts the area. They attack the PCs on sight, sending the smallest dretch to retrieve reinforcements.
12	Ten dretchs are currently trying to break down the domed stone wall surrounding Room G98. If a breach has already occurred, they move inside Room G99. These demons are fierce and attack the party on sight.
13	A band of five babaus ambush the party. These demons flank the PCs and make good use of their sneak attack abilities.
14	A succubus in her true form is overseeing a group of four babaus. She orders her subordinates to attack the PCs while she summons reinforcements.
15	Two vorks looking for action stumble upon the PCs' location. The vulture-like demons attack savagely.
16	A vrock leading a group of eight dretchs move towards the party. They attack as soon as they notice the PCs.
17	The PCs encounter a lone retriever. The spider-like demon uses its deadly rays to harm them from a distance before closing in upon them.
18	A hulking bebilith, a new comer to the Region, recently joined the demonic army. The demon is ambitious and cunning. It wants to prove its worth and attacks all enemies of the host.

G98. OUTER WALL

A giant dome rising over a hundred ft. at its central point dominates the large island in the middle of this Region. The dome is fashioned from semitransparent force and is cracking in several places. Grooves and marks of countless makes and kinds also scar the once perfectly smooth face of the structure.

Looking through the dome, one can see the vague shape of a tall angel in front of a powerful golden light. The silhouette stands still, a black shadow shrouded by the strong illumination. There is a soulful melodious voice issuing from the place, as well as the music from a sweet instrument. The chant is a sorrowful tune.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The demonic hosts control the area surrounding the gigantic dome of force protecting the demon lord's prison near the center of the island. The demonic army working to free the demon lord from its prison at the center of the island (Room G100) took control over the area. In recent years, the Children of the Inner Light were forced out of the island, but they hope to reclaim what was once theirs and finally secure the prison keeping the Lord Krasveshik.

The dome surrounding the demon lord's cocoon is made out of 20-ft. thick semi-translucent force. Because of the combined efforts of Cyrlebrai and Mavian, it is unbreakable. Though cracks appear upon its surface, the solar angel and trumpet archon magically bind the force wall together and ensure it remains standing. The only way to lower this great force field is to kill Cyrlebrai (in Room G5), who is responsible for powering it. Mavian, the trumpet archon in Room G99, works to regenerate the gaps in the force wall.

There are two groups of demons in this Room. The first is comprised of twenty-one dretchs (hp 13 each) and a marilith overseer (hp 241) working on the southwestern corner of the domed force wall. The goal of these demons is to breach the deep force wall; a task they've worked extremely hard at in the last few months. Though these creatures are often relieved in their duties by other demons, it is mostly the dretchs which are given the dreary assignment of creating a gap in the solid force wall. This group works under the scrutiny of a marilith who constantly shouts orders and menaces to imprison the workers in a casket filled with ice whenever they slack off. These creatures concentrate all their attention and efforts on their task and receive a –5 circumstance penalty to all Listen and Spot checks made to notice the PCs.

The other group is a foursome of babau demons (hp 75, 69, 62, 58) charged with protecting the Room. These foul prowls the length of Room G98, keeping to the shadows. Their primary duty is to watch the demons working on the southwestern portion of the dome, but they often patrol the entire Room, circling the entire thing.

Tactics: The babaus are vigilant in their duty. If they notice the PCs' anywhere around the magical dome, they emerge from the shadows to ambush them. If these demons attack the PC in hearing or visual range of the demons working to breach the wall, allow them the appropriate Listen or Spot checks to notice the battle. If they are made aware, the marilith orders the dretchs to charge the PCs while she transforms to surprise them. If, on the other hand, the battle occurs upon the northern bank or in the corridor directly east of the dome, the babaus act alone.

If the PCs notice the dretchs working on the wall and creep up on them, the babaus arrive at the scene of the battle 1d4+1 rounds thereafter. These fiends summon other demons as often and as quickly as possible. This is a particularly heinous encounter, designed to discourage the PCs from merely "fixing" the dungeon. It should be noted, that a group of 12th level PCs are going to be at a serious disadvantage against a marilith.

Constrict (Ex): A marilith deals 4d6+13 points of damage with a successful grapple check. The constricted creature must succeed on a DC 27 Fortitude save or lose consciousness for as long as it remains in the coils and for 2d4 rounds thereafter. The save DC is Strength-based.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a marilith must hit with its tail slap attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it succeeds on the grapple check, it can constrict.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—align weapon, blade barrier (DC 23), magic weapon, project image (DC 23), polymorph, see invisibility, telekinesis (DC 22), greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), unholy aura (DC 25). Caster level 16th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Summon Demon (Sp): Once per day a marilith overseer can attempt to summon 4d10 dretches, 1d4 hezrou, or one glabrezu with a 50% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 5th-level spell.

True Seeing (Su): Mariliths continuously use this ability, as the spell (caster level 16th).

G99. TRUMPET ARCHON'S LAST STAND

An amber light bathes the gigantic force dome. There is a large tomb-like shape in the middle. A close look reveals a cocoon made out of pure force. Inside this cocoon, one can see only shadow.

Initial Attitude: Varies (see below)

Encounter: Though the trumpet archon using the greater lyre of building is the only creature in this Room, 50% of the floor here is rigged with a holy word trap. A rogue who carefully examines each 5-ft. by 5-ft. section of the floor can determine whether or not this area is rigged with a successful DC 32 Search check. There is a 50% chance that a given tile is trapped. Fortunately for good- and neutral-aligned PCs, these traps are only activated by the presence of evil.

☛ Holy Word Trap: CR 8; magic device; location trigger (detect evil spell determines if the trap is triggered on the specific location or not); no reset; spell effect (holy word, 13th-level cleric); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32.

The soil here is considered hallow, as if under the permanent effect of a consecrate spell. Additionally, the entire Room is warded against teleportation, and no creature can use teleportation spells or items to move to or from this place.

Mavian (hp 139), the trumpet archon guarding this Room, uses her greater lyre of building to maintain the protective dome fortress. This sad soul chants her sorrow while weaving the magic of her potent instrument to repair the damage done to the dome by the countless demons. If the demonic forces kill Cyrlebrai, the wall of force disappears.

Tactics: If the force wall falls, Mavian's first instinct is to utter a terrible cry to alert her compatriots of the Children of the Inner Light. Since the demons will attack, Mavian uses her magical trumpet and enchanted greatsword to fend them off. She also relies on the traps spread out throughout the hall to hinder the demon's movement.

If the PCs were the ones who killed Cyrlebrai or if they are on the side of the demonic hosts, Mavian attacks them just as she would any demon. Her Initial Reaction towards them is Hostile and she does not shy from using all her might to drive them back. PCs using Diplomacy might change her attitude, provided they are non-evil and convince her they are on her side.

If the PCs come to Mavian's help and fight the demons, or if they are wearing medallions of the Children of the Inner Light (see Room G19 for details), Mavian's Initial Attitude towards them changes to Friendly. Unless they are evil, she instinctively trusts the PCs and is grateful for their help. If the PCs are evil, she remains grateful but orders them away as soon as the demons are defeated. If they refuse, she attacks them.

Once the wall is breached, a mighty battle occurs in this place. 1d6+4 rounds after the wall is destroyed, a first wave of demonic troops (from all Rooms where there are demons — G76 to G98) pours into the great hall. Each 1d4+2 rounds following brings another demon strike force. Similarly, 1d10+5 rounds after the wall is breached, mighty angels and archons come into the hall to defend Mavian and — more importantly — prevent the demonic host from liberating Krasveshk (see Room G100).

The PCs involvement during this epic battle remains crucial. Though the forces of good and evil wage a mighty war here, the DM should make certain the PCs play a central role in defending Mavian and protecting the prison cocoon of lord Krasveshk. The PCs should not have to face all the demons waging battle alone, as the members of the Children of the Inner Light come to help, but they should nevertheless play a central role in this war. On the other hand, if the PCs have aligned themselves with the demons, they should play a major role in freeing the demon lord Krasveshk.

Treasure: The most important item carried by Mavian is a greater lyre of building. This magical item functions as a typical lyre of building with the exception that it negates attacks made against all inanimate constructions up to 500 ft. away. This power can be used five times a day and each use lasts one hour. When the greater lyre of building is used to build structures, it functions twice as fast as a mundane lyre of building. This construction power can be used three times a week. Because of the unique nature of the dungeon and the force wall powered up by Cyrlebrai, anyone using the magical lyre can also use its magic to repair any dent in the structure.

This item is undoubtedly Mavian's most important possession, as it has allowed her to help the leader of her Order maintain the force dome protecting this area for centuries.

EL: Varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, double the number of demons that pour into this hall or make each of the three lords (Room G78, G82, and G90) arrive in successive waves. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, give the PCs time to drive off each wave of demons before another arrives.

A Mavian, Trumpet Archon: CR 14; Medium outsider (archon, extraplanar, good, lawful); HD 12d8+72; hp 139; Init +7; Spd 40 ft. (8, fly 90 ft. * Domain spell. Domains: Good and Law.

Trumpet (Su): An archon's trumpet produces music of utter clarity, piercing beauty, and, if the trumpet archon wills it, paralyzing awe. All creatures except archons within 100 ft. of the blast must succeed on a DC 19 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 1d4 rounds. The save DC is Charisma-based. The archon can also command its trumpet to become a +4 greatsword as a free action.

If a trumpet is ever stolen, it becomes a chunk of useless metal until the owner can recover it.

Aura of Menace (Su): A righteous aura surrounds archons that fight or get angry. Any hostile creature within a 20-ft. radius of an archon must succeed on a DC 21 Will save to resist its effects. The save DC is Charisma-based. Those who fail take a –2 penalty on attacks, AC, and saves for 24 hours or until they successfully hit the archon that generated the aura. A creature that has resisted or broken the effect cannot be affected again by the same archon's aura for 24 hours.

Teleport (Su): Archons can use greater teleport at will, as the spell (caster level 14th), except that the creature can transport only itself and up to 50 lbs of objects. Within the confines of this dungeon, the hound archon can only teleport within line of sight.

Tongues (Su): All archons can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using a tongues spell (caster level 14th). This ability is always active.

✶ Various Demons: Varies. See Rooms G76 through G98 to determine how many demons come here to wage war.

G100. THE PRISON COCOON

The DM is welcome to have the wall of this cocoon come down in a climax of magical energy just as the PCs arrive. Perhaps the demons actually broke through, Krasveshk hit the right spot from inside the prison, or an assassin made her way into Cyrlebrai's private sanctum and murdered him, destroying the powerful wall of force in one swift move.

DM Note: Lord Krasveshk has powers that other nalfeshnee do not. Familiarize yourself with his defenses before this encounter begins.

At the very heart of this Region of the dungeon is a tomb-shaped cocoon made out of semi-translucent force. Inside this weird sarcophagus, darkness seeps through the cocoon's wall of force. From these shadows, a low and terrible moan can be heard. The voice is muffled and unclear, but nevertheless truly disquieting.

Initial Attitude: Hostile*

Encounter: This magical cocoon binds the demon lord Krasveshk. The immortal lord is physically trapped and unable to move, and his prison prevents him from using any of his dreadful powers. Though the force cocoon is solid, once Cyrlebrai is destroyed Krasveshk's prison weakens. After the fall of the wall of force (Room G98), it becomes possible to free Lord Krasveshk from his centuries' of imprisonment. All one has to do is break the outer shell of the magical cocoon — hardness 10, hp 100, Break DC 40.

Once the cocoon is reduced to 0 hit point, it falls into clear dust and Krasveshk rises from its ashes, emerging from the ground in all his loathsome splendor.

Tactics: Once Lord Krasveshk (hp 2688), a powerful nalfeshnee, is released from imprisonment, he attacks anyone who is not a demon.

Since being imprisoned he has summoned and destroyed countless demons, never maintaining the patience to endure them for long. At present, one glabrezu (hp 174) and one hezrou (hp 138) serve as his retainers, doing all he commands, including killing the PCs and dying for his lordship.

Krasveshk is in a fit of rage. He waited centuries for this moment to arrive and he vents his anger on any who stand in his way. He already has unholy aura cast when the cocoon comes down and uses chain lightning on the PCs as soon as the wall comes down. Once combat begins, he targets clerics and lawful good PCs almost exclusively, venting his rage on any he deems responsible for his imprisonment. He uses feeblemind on any spellcaster dealing damage to him and casts dispel magic on clerics shrouded with magical enchantments. He casts slow on rogues and fighters and summons additional demons to the battle if he thinks of it. He alternates from melee attacks to spell-like abilities in a chaotic, ruthless pattern. He is a force of nature unlike anything the PCs have encountered in the Region and he cannot be reasoned with.

The glabrezu and hezrou keep the rest of the PCs busy, targeting good PCs first and warriors second. They are ruthless warriors, serving Lord Krasveshk as loyally as a demon possibly can. If they come in contact with clerics or spellcasters, they use chaos hammer and unholy blight. The glabrezu has no problem throwing reverse gravity at an assassin or rogue, sending him spiralling to the 300 ft. high cavernous ceiling above, or confusion on a cleric, or using mirror image to confound wizards. Power word stun is reserved for strong fighters and barbarians, while gaseous form is the hezrou's final option before he succumbs to death. Alone, these two beasts are powerful enemies, worthy of a climactic finale. With Lord Krasveshk with them, they are unstoppable.

Scaling: Since it is likely that the PCs have some celestial assistance with them, increase the number of demons present to equal the number of archons and angels. In the end, the PCs should face off against Lord Krasveshk and one or two of his retainers. This is not supposed to be an easy encounter.

♣ Glabrezu: CR 13; Huge outsider (chaotic, extraplanar, evil); HD 12d8+120; hp 174; Init +0; Spd 40 ft.; AC 27, touch 8, flat-footed 27; Base Atk +12; Grp +30; Atk +20 melee (2d8+10, pincers); Full Atk +20 melee (2d8+10, 2 pincers) and +18 melee (1d6+5, 2 claws) and +18 melee (1d8+5, bite); Space/Reach 15 ft./15 ft.; SA Improved grab, spell-like abilities, summon demon; SQ Damage reduction 10/good, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to electricity and poison, resistance to acid 10, cold 10, and fire 10, spell resistance 21, telepathy 100 ft., true seeing; AL CE; SV Fort +18, Ref +8, Will +11; Str 31, Dex 10, Con 31, Int 16, Wis 16, Cha 20.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a glabrezu must hit a Medium or smaller opponent with a pincer attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—chaos hammer (DC 19), confusion (DC 19), dispel magic, mirror image, reverse gravity (DC 22), greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), unholy blight (DC 19); 1/day—power word stun. Caster level 14th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Once per month, a glabrezu can fulfill a wish for a mortal humanoid. The demon can use this ability to offer a mortal whatever he or she desires—but unless the wish is used to create pain and suffering in the world, the glabrezu demands either terrible evil acts or great sacrifice as compensation.

Summon Demon (Sp): Once per day a glabrezu can attempt to summon 4d10 dretches or 1d2 vrockes with a 50% chance of success, or another glabrezu with a 20% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 4th-level spell.

True Seeing (Su): Glabrezu continuously use true seeing as the spell (caster level 14th).

♣ Hezrou: CR 11; Large outsider (chaotic, extraplanar, evil); HD 10d8+93; hp 138; Init +0; Spd 30 ft.; AC 23, touch 9, flat-footed 23; Base Atk +10; Grp +19; Atk +14 melee (4d4+5, bite); Full Atk +14 melee (4d4+5, bite) and +9 melee (1d8+2, 2 claws); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Spell-like abilities, stench, improved grab, summon demon; SQ Damage reduction 10/good, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to electricity and poison, resistance to acid 10, cold 10, and fire 10, spell resistance 19, telepathy 100 ft.; AL CE; SV Fort +16, Ref +7, Will +9; Str 21, Dex 10, Con 29, Int 14, Wis 14, Cha 18.

Skills and Feats: Climb +18, Concentration +22, Hide +13, Escape Artist +13, Intimidate +17, Listen +23, Move Silently +13, Search +15, Spellcraft +15, Spot +23, Survival +2 (+4 following tracks), Use Rope +0 (+2 with bindings); Blind-Fight, Cleave, Power Attack, Toughness.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a hezrou must hit with both claw attacks. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—chaos hammer (DC 18), greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), unholy blight (DC 18); 3/day—blasphemy (DC 21), gaseous form. Caster level 13th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Stench (Ex): A hezrou's skin produces a foul-smelling, toxic liquid whenever it fights. Any living creature (except other demons) within 10 feet must succeed on a DC 24 Fortitude save or be nauseated for as long as it remains within the affected area and for 1d4 rounds afterward. Creatures that successfully save are sickened for as long as they remain in the area. A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same hezrou's stench for 24 hours. A delay poison or neutralize poison spell removes either condition from one creature. Creatures that have immunity to poison are unaffected, and creatures resistant to poison receive their normal bonus on their saving throws. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Summon Demon (Sp): Once per day a hezrou can attempt to summon 4d10 dretches or another hezrou with a 35% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 4th-level spell.

♠ Lord Krasveshk, Nalfeshnee: CR 16; Huge outsider (chaotic, extraplanar, evil); HD 18d8+144; hp 268; Init +1; Spd 30 ft., fly 40 ft. Smite (Su): Three times per day Lord Krasveshk can create a nimbus of unholy light. When the demon triggers the ability, rainbow-colored beams play around its body. One round later they burst in a 60-ft. radius. Any creature within this area must succeed on a DC 24 Will save or be dazed for 1d10 rounds as visions of its worst fears hound it. The creature receives its full Dexterity and shield bonuses to AC if attacked but can take no actions. Other demons are immune to this effect. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—call lightning (DC 18), feeblemind (DC 20), greater dispel magic, slow (DC 18), greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), unholy aura (DC 23). Caster level 12th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Summon Demon (Sp): Twice per day Lord Krasveshk can summon 1d4+4 vrockes, 1d4+4 hezrou, or 1d3 glabrezu with a 75% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 5th-level spell.

True Seeing (Su): Lord Krasveshk continuously use true seeing, as the spell (caster level 18th).

Skills and Feats: Lord Krasveshk has a +8 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

REGION H. PROTECTORS OF THE TREE

Centuries ago, this Region was the focus of a large-scale derro excavation project. Whatever it was they sought, they were unable to find; instead, they brought the cavern's ceiling down upon them in what resulted in a massive landslide, dropping hundreds of thousands of pounds of earth and a massive lake (Regions K and L) into the dungeon proper. Mostly unperturbed, the derro moved their operations to a more suitable location, leaving the rubble and wreckage behind.

Amidst that rubble, however, was something unique: an ancient tree touched by the gods themselves, guardian and advisor to the elves that inhabited the forests of the surface world; a tree older than the first living thing and something to be cherished by all woodland races. Somehow, the tree survived the miles-long fall from sunlight to darkness and from survival emerged a profound duty for the elves — protect the sacred tree from the ravages of the underworld.

The elven kingdom called for its greatest warriors, its keenest mages, its holiest druids. The flower of elven youth and the oaken wisdom of the elders were called to renounce the stars and heavens for the caverns below in order to defend their sacred tree, Belatu-Cadros. The elven king further called upon the life-debt owed his kingdom by a nearby dwarven clan, that they might have dwarven expertise in defending their new outpost. It was a holy calling, a sacred duty. Those called did not hesitate. They would build a true elven city underground; they would bring the beauty of sun and moon to the darkness.

As the years sped by, the luster of adventure faded, leaving duty's cold reality in its wake. In the end, their glittering new outpost remained a mere hole in the ground, separated by emptiness without life and without the light of the world above. Still, it was an important duty, and where adventure failed, discipline remained.

Today, this place is an underground sylvan paradise in the eyes of the casual observer. The sacred tree still flourishes despite its location, and a small forest has grown up about the treant's grove. An intricate network of mirrors channels a lattice of light down to the Council Spire, ensuring that the Region is as brightly lit as the surface world. The druids have performed great deeds of magic from here, cleansing the earth, calling up a spring of fresh, clean water, and tending to the creatures of the forest. The frontiers appear secure, and all is well.

BETTER TO RULE IN HELL

Unfortunately, there is a cancerous rot in paradise. The High Council still consists of all seven elders, but they are divided in purpose and spirit, losing sight of the bigger picture and higher truth of their station here.

Enoriel Lasathairian, the High Druid, speaks more to his trees than he does to his fellows. No one knows how old he is — he has, it is said, been in the fortress forever. Or, at least, since the Tree fell. Enoriel is well-known to suffer an apoplectic fit if even a twig is broken or a leaf crushed, yet he does not flinch at spending the lives of the elven troops like water — provided, that is, that they perform their sacred duty.

Enoriel's indifference to the outside world is hotly contested by the second member of the High Council, Jacan Lightshield. Jacan is a holy paladin, a distant descendant of one of the celestials who built this place, and his heritage burns in his blood and mien. He has lived here a mere thirty years (by elven standards), and has become the High Commander of the elven troops more-or-less by default; troops come and go, but he remains. Jacan is torn between conflicting duties: defend the Tree, or lay the evils of the dungeon to rest? In trying to balance the two, he succeeds at neither, and his zeal is now frustrated anger.

The third member of the Council, Pardek Mirroreyes, is relatively young (as elves go), and arrived around the same time as Jacan Lightshield. Pardek is contentious, hot-tempered, and stubborn — all perfectly understandable in an elemental with a passion for fire magics. Unfortunately, these are not precisely the qualities needed in a statesman and a Councilor, and Pardek has utterly lost patience with the constant bickering of his fellows. He spends much of his time around the lava-maze, plumbing the secrets of elemental flame from the lava flow.

The fourth Councilor regards all his fellows with heavy distrust. Gurthang Hadrakson, leader of the small dwarven enclave within the fortress. Despite his high-unintelligible accent, Hadrakson is in possession of a keen eye and mind, and is not blind to the problems besieging the fortress. Unfortunately, he can't get the elven leaders to understand that he's not a holy warrior — he's an engineer, and he's getting more and more frustrated by Enoriel's constant demands to have his cadre of engineers and sappers simply stand ceremonial guard about the Tree.

The two nonhumanoid members of the Council have quietly retreated into their private corners: Sythiss, the guardian naga, slides endlessly through the cavernous maze he has tunneled out beneath the rubble from the landslide. Sythiss is more agitated lately, but does not — or cannot — explain why. Meanwhile, Malachi, the lammasu, lairs in a cave beneath the southeastern plateau, where he keeps a careful watch on the few aerial steeds remaining to the elven troops.

The final member of the Council is the sacred tree itself — Belatu-Cadros, a holy treant, rooted in place by age and power. Belatu-Cadros has not uttered a word for many, many years. It watches. It weeps. It grieves. But it does not speak. Rumors whispered among the elven soldiers suggest that should Belatu-Cadros speak once more, doom will befall it and all that surround it.

The elven garrison troopers are disaffected, disillusioned and apathetic despite Jacan's best efforts; to combat the malaise of his army, he has metamorphosed into a harsh disciplinarian. Twice Jacan has attempted to rally the elven forces, in true paladinic style, to decisively deal with the evils surrounding them, only to be beaten back with hideous losses each time. After the last bloodbath, the Council decreed that there would be no further excursions outside their border. The true cause, and the overwhelming need, was to protect Belatu-Cadros.

The army dwindles in fits and spurts — men disappear in the middle of the night with no warning, no cause, and Jacan simply believes them to be deserters. The common trooper knows better, however: dark rumors abound of something dire lurking in the maze of lava flow to the southwest. More than one patrol is missing.

It is an open question whether the rumors have reached Jacan's ears — of late, he has increasingly handed administrative tasks to his closest friend and advisor, Jolinaar, a drow escapee from the far west. If one is so foolish to ask Jolinaar to investigate the disappearances, he replies merely that the elven forces are so thinly stretched that they cannot afford to investigate one more case of desertion.

The desertions and disappearances have grown so frequent and the unrest so rampant that the elven queen above has sent down a spy to investigate. Silmarien Meliambre, a half-elven royal investigator and kin to the queen herself, arrived six months ago to replace the second-in-command. Her investigations meet as such with limited success.

H1 THROUGH H7. THE DRAGON'S BONES

Jagged spikes of basalt and obsidian thrust forth from the ground, falling against one another like the laundered bones of some long-dead giant. Occasionally, great openings gape forth, beckoning further exploration of twisting, turning passages. The wise adventurer, however, is careful where he steps; the razor-sharp shards of fused stone and volcanic glass will rend flesh as readily as cloth.

Rooms H1 through H7 are part of a long-cooled lava flow, thrust above ground by a forgotten earthquake, resembling the petrified remains of some great serpent or dragon. Canyons appear and disappear as the blocks of volcanic stone shift in response to the constant minor tremors shaking the dungeon.

PCs must make DC 18 Reflex saves when within 5 ft. of the walls of the canyons during an earthquake or taking one of the following actions: climbing, fighting, running, or spellcasting. On a failed save, they take 2d6 damage. PCs may climb the massif; each must succeed at a DC 15 Climb check for every 15 ft. of vertical movement, but suffer 1d6 damage doing so. A DC 25 Climb check reduces the damage to 1d3 per 15 ft. of movement, and a DC 30 Climb check negates the damage entirely.

In addition, the elves seeded the area with traps to capture unintelligent beasts wandering into the area.

REGIONAL CONDITIONS

LIGHT

Unlike most portions of the dungeon, initial lighting conditions here are considered normal for the time of day — those with unenhanced vision can see normally during the day, while low-light or darkvision are required for adequate night-sight.

MAGICAL TRANSPORTATION

The landslide weakened but did not entirely destroy the celestial wards upon the prison in this area. Thus, as with the rest of the dungeon, characters and creatures may not use teleport, plane-traveling magics, or other transportation magics to enter or leave Region H. Further, purely arcane means of transport such as teleport are redirected to one of two locations, depending on proximity — one is in Room H36, just outside the northern exit from the Spire, and one is in Room H20 near the southern watchtowers. However, nature-based methods of instantaneous transport such as tree stride are fully effective, thanks to centuries of work by the elven druids.

INITIAL ATTITUDES

Initial attitudes provided in the rooms of Region H assume that the PC party is comprised of good- (or at worst) neutrally-aligned characters and are pursuing peaceful interactions with the inhabitants. If the PCs approach the Region with hostile intent, however, all "Friendly" areas become at best "Unfriendly", and more likely "Hostile", at the DM's discretion. Use common sense when determining the initial attitude of the various Rooms under alternate conditions, bearing in mind that the creatures in this Region are not going to welcome marauders with open arms.

WHAT A TANGLED WEB WE WEAVE...

Region H is significantly different than the other dungeon Regions; it is populated primarily by good-aligned creatures and, presuming that the PC adventuring party is also good- or neutral-aligned, is not suited to simple hack-and-slash adventuring. The challenges posed in this Region are designed to be solved mostly through non-combat means, possibly providing the characters with a safe haven from which they can explore the rest of the dungeon.

Every NPC in this Region has at least one agenda — some are obvious, some are hidden. Ultimately, if the PCs do not intervene, the intersecting agendas will lead the elven fortress to its doom. It is suggested that DMs advance the plot as is appropriate, based on the actions of the PCs and the amount of time they spend adventuring in other Regions.

NPC AGENDAS

Diantha, the erinye, is juggling several different plots along with her desire to escape the dungeon once and for all. She has charmed a band of pixies into playing destructive practical jokes, irritating the other inhabitants of the fortress and further driving a wedge between races. The pixies are also working to destabilize the stone columns supporting the cavern ceiling, hiding their depredations beneath permanent image spells. Further, Diantha has managed to trick Sythiss, the naga, into donning an enchanted collar that enslaves its wearer. She is also pushing Enoriel further and further into madness. Ultimately, she plans to assassinate Silmarien (casting the blame on Jolinaar). Once Jolinaar is imprisoned or killed, she plans to steal his amulet, and destroy Belatu-Cadros; she believes that sacrificing such a potent celestial creature will restore her wings. Finally, she brings the cavern down around the elves' ears and uses the ensuing chaos as a cover for her escape.

Silmarien Meliambre wishes to find the source of the rot underlying the fortress. She has no compunctions about enlisting the assistance of the PCs, and rewards them as handsomely as she may. If the PCs can help her ferret out the source of the evil, Silmarien has Gurthang Hadrakson create an adamantite weapon for one of the PCs.

Malachi wants to halt the fortress' slow decay as well; he believes Enoriel will have to be replaced if the citadel's fortunes are to change. He also wants Jacan replaced and Jolinaar gone. Despite the lack of proof of the drow's treachery, Malachi suspects that Jolinaar is behind the elven disappearances — he finds it all-too-coincidental that the slow trickle of "desertions" began after the drow's arrival in Region H.

Jolinaar, the drow, also seeks to escape the cavern, although he is more patient in his plots than Diantha, and is unaware of the devil's interference in his machinations. Slowly but surely, he draws a spiderweb of rumors, lies, and deceptions about the inhabitants of the fortress. His ultimate goal is to force the elves to abandon tree and fortress, and to ride out on their coattails, then disappear.

Pardek has no real agenda other than furthering his arcane studies. He is committed to protecting Belatu-Cadros to a point, but he is ultimately a pragmatist. If the Tree cannot be saved, he rescues those whom he can and flees.

Sythiss wants to be free of the compulsions upon him at any cost. During the periods in which he is mostly free to do as he wishes, he contemplates means by which he can escape Diantha's grasp. He is coming to the conclusion that he cannot do so, but has not quite given up hope. If nothing else, he hopes that his friends Malachi and Aligheri will realize something's amiss.

Jacan no longer knows what to believe. His faith in his paladinic abilities is wavering, thanks to the manipulations of Diantha and Jolinaar. He is quite attracted to his new subcommander, but the way she wavers between good and evil confuses and frightens him. Or perhaps, he thinks, the problem is with him — he has failed to heed the calling of his blood, and he is being justly punished. He is also beginning to suspect that Jolinaar is not quite what he seems, but is unwilling to face the truth. Jacan is on the precipice — one more step, and he will fall from grace.

Enoriel is sliding into inevitable madness. He is determined to hold on to the leadership of the fortress for as long as he has life left in him, and the vile traitors that surround him may be consigned to whatever hell awaits them. He is beginning to believe that Belatu-Cadros is utterly corrupted by outside influences — a corruption that can only be cleansed by a blood sacrifice.

Aligheri has the potential to be a hero, if someone notices it and is willing to give him a bit of help. He is ready to rise to any challenge necessary, but if he confronts the fortress' problems on his own, he'll end up as dead as the rest.

THE PLOT THICKENS

The various rooms in Region H describe the situation as it stands when the PCs first arrive in the area, and the following paragraphs describe how the plot advances provided the PCs do not take an active hand.

Both Diantha and Jolinaar cease their attacks on the elven troopers once the PCs arrive, preferring to observe the newcomers and determine how best to manipulate them to their own ends. Jolinaar in particular uses his abilities to steal some small but identifiable weapon from the PCs, such as a dagger or dart.

The brief respite ends when the PCs depart, either on a mission from the Council or to further their own explorations. The night the PCs leave, Jolinaar kills an elven trooper (preferably one the PCs have quarreled with) using the stolen weapon, and leaves both body and weapon on the edge of the Region corresponding to the direction the PCs took.

Naturally, the PCs are accused of the crime when they return. The Council is called into session, and the PCs placed on trial. No matter what evidence the PCs offer in their defense, Enoriel casts a vote of 'guilty.' However, as long as the PCs can testify truthfully under Jacan's zone of truth that they did not kill the soldier, the rest of the Council votes for acquittal. At this, Enoriel explodes in a fit of paranoid rage, accusing his fellow Councilors of plotting against him with the help of the outsiders. He declares the Council to be dissolved and threatens to kill anyone who trespasses upon his grove until he can summon a new, loyal Council.

Any accusations the PCs make against Jolinaar at this time still fall on deaf ears; Jacan sees no reason to distrust his loyal friend. The troops' morale continues to suffer as the rumors continue to fly. Some soldiers believe that the PCs committed the murder; others believe them innocent. Some blame Jolinaar, some blame Enoriel, some blame the dwarves. Malachi and Silmarien arrange for the PCs to pursue another task outside the Region, in order to allow heated tempers to cool.

Diantha decides to eliminate her enemies, and sets Sythiss up to kill Malachi. The PCs return to the fortress just in time to see naga fighting lammasu in the skies above the citadel. (A successful DC 27 Spot check at this point reveals that Malachi is fighting with padded claws — he seeks to subdue, not to kill.) If the battle continues uninterrupted, Sythiss slays Malachi. Diantha's last command to Sythiss frees him, and in his despair, Sythiss commits suicide.

H1. ABANDONED BLIND

At first glance, this seems to be one of the most uninhabitable places imaginable; although the temperature is tolerable, instinct screams that the nearby lava-flow is a pit of fire, danger, and death. The wicked shards of glassy stone jutting out at all angles only add to the impression that living beings are completely unwelcome here. And yet, a stray shaft of light illumines something that, in decay, appears to have decidedly unnatural boundaries.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: Down this canyon is an abandoned hunter's blind, long since fallen into decay. The only parts of the blind that remain are stones and an occasional mostly-rotted piece of unidentifiable wood. On a successful DC 20 Spot check, dwarven party members can identify the remains as dwarven work, although it is impossible to tell how long the blind has been abandoned.

Encounter Condition: Poor Footing 4

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A pair of obsidian arrowheads are mostly-buried beneath the debris, found on a DC 17 Search check.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

PATROLS

Region H is intended to be a dynamic area. Thus, it is entirely possible that part or all of the elven squads garrisoning a specific Room is not actually in that Room, but is instead on patrol around the area. In general, to simulate patrols, allow a given Room's NPCs a DC 15 Listen check (modified as appropriate if PCs are using the Move Silently skill). When the garrison succeeds at such a check, they investigate. Usually, they send half the garrison (3-4) elven soldiers to investigate.

Further, when combat breaks out in a Room, unless otherwise specified in the room description, allow NPCs in adjacent areas a DC 15 Listen check; NPCs that succeed at this check arrive as soon as possible to reinforce their fellows.

OBSIDIAN

Obsidian is ill-suited to making melee weapons, but fractured carefully along its crystalline grain, it makes superb arrowheads that hold an edge better than the finest grade of steel. Arrowheads made from the obsidian in this Region automatically gain the keen quality. The benefits gained from obsidian do not stack with other qualities or abilities that increase the critical range of a weapon.

H2. TESTING GROUNDS

A stench emanates from the depths of this canyon, and something in the wind stings the eyes. The stony walls seem to have been shattered in places; in others, scorched; in still others, melted. It is as if a miniature war in has taken place here, judging from the remnants of utter, violent abandon. In the clearing at the end of the canyon squats a metal scaffold that looks for all the world as if it were simply welded together in a haphazard mass. A closer look, and the scissored lengths of metal resemble teeth...

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This canyon is where the dwarven engineers test dangerous traps and weapons: siege engines, strange alchemical concoctions, explosives, and the like. As far as the dwarves are concerned, it's a barren rock, so there's no harm done — even the elves must agree with that. Unfortunately for the casual passerby, one of the dwarven engineers was in the midst of working on his latest pièce de résistance (a creation he lovingly calls "The Jaws of Death") when he was summoned to stand guard over Belatu-Cadros. He thinks he disengaged the jaws, but he's always been rather absent-minded.

PCs entering this area must take care — there are a great deal of not-quite-expended munitions lying about. Pools of unlit alchemist's fire, fuming acid spills, unexploded tanglefoot bags, and the debris of multiple explosions combine to make footing tricky. PCs that move at a normal rate in this room must succeed at a DC 18 Reflex save or suffer one of the following random effects:

1	PC's foot slips directly into a pool of acid, splashing it about. PC takes 2d6 acid damage; those around him in a 5 ft. radius take 1d6 damage.
2–8	PC sets off an unexploded tanglefoot bag. PCs within a 10 ft. radius are affected.
9–14	PC is covered in unlit alchemist's fire.
15–19	PC kicks over a pile of stones. One of the stones is a thunderstone, which affects all PCs within a 10 ft. radius.
20	PC trips over an abandoned trap, triggering a flint and steel striker. If he is covered in unlit alchemist's fire, he is set ablaze.

PCs may avoid the hazards by moving at half their normal rate. Further, PCs that touch the odd sculpture in the middle of the canyon must make a DC 16 Reflex save or set off the Jaws of Death.

♦ Jaws of Death: CR 5; mechanical; touch trigger; no reset; Atk +12 melee (3d6); multiple targets (all targets within a 10 ft. radius); Search DC 16, Disable Device DC 17. Note: This trap falls apart into a haphazard mass of metal once triggered.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Thunderstone, two vials' worth of alchemist's fire, two vials' worth of acid.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of all saves by +2. To decrease the challenge, lower the Attack bonus of the Jaws of Death by 2 and reduce the damage to 2d6.

H3. BARREN CANYON

The wind wails through the jagged rocks, carrying the faint scent of dust and death with it. It appears that the stone walls of the nearby gorge are stained with blood, but that's the lurid glow of the nearby lava-flow. And the faint knocking, rattling sound from deeper within the ravine is merely the sound of stone on stone... isn't it?

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This canyon is completely barren; the elves avoid it religiously because the wind plays odd tricks here, howling like the wails of the damned. However, enterprising PCs who venture down this canyon find a long-desiccated body, reduced to a skeletal state.

The skeleton appears to be that of a humanoid, approximately five and a half ft. tall. Lodged within its ribs is an obsidian arrowhead, the shaft utterly decomposed. Elven PCs should be able to recognize one of their dead, if they inspect the bones.

Encounter Condition: Desecration 2 or Unhallowed 4

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Amidst the rotting scraps of leather that once served as a belt pouch, PCs can find 1d8 gold pieces and 4d4 silver pieces.

EL: N/A

H4. FUMAROLE PIT

A noisome stench wafts from the canyon on a stray current of wind, sending even a strong man into a fit of teary-eyed coughs. From deep within the ravine, a half-hiss, half-bubbling noise is heard, resembling nothing so much as the labored breathing of a creature in the throes of death. The stench intensifies as you approach, and through the faint haze can be seen a pool of thickly boiling mud, its surface disturbed by giant bubbles that release noxious gases when they burst.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: The rock between this room and Room H5 is riddled with cracks and pores; depending on the wind's direction, the gases are either trapped in Room H4 or swept through to Room H5. The elves have turned the natural danger of the fumarole pit's gases to their advantage — triggering the trap in Room H5 triggers a modified gust of wind spell here, which vents the gas into Room H5. The device can be disabled, but PCs risk succumbing to the fumes in doing so.

♦ Gas Shunt: CR 8; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; DC 17 Fort save or gas does 2d6 subdual damage per round; multiple targets; never miss; onset delay (1 round); gas; Search DC 27; Disable Device DC 27; PCs that are reduced to 0 HP by this trap fall unconscious but take no further damage from the gas.

Encounter Condition: Fog 15 or Smoke

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of the Fort save by 3. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, decrease the DC of the Search and Disable Device checks by 4.

H5. ROCKFALL

The looming walls of the stone canyon are cracked and crazed, uneven fissures rending stone from stone. The shadows here are deceptive — it is difficult to tell what is rock and what is shadow. The rough canyon floor is treacherous under foot at best, as loose rocks and debris roll freely under a careless step.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This canyon is an elaborate trap. The elves use this area to stun and trap dangerous creatures or intruders, encouraging their sprite allies to herd creatures into the crevasse. A rockfall blocks the canyon exit, while noxious gases are vented through the canyon to incapacitate any creatures trapped by the deluge.

Creatures and PCs climb out of the canyon; condensation on the canyon walls and reduced visibility from the fumes combine to make this a difficult proposition. PCs must succeed at a DC 18 Climb check for every 15 ft. of vertical movement and suffer 2d6 damage doing so. A DC 27 Climb check reduces the damage to 1d6 per 15 ft. of movement, and a DC 30 Climb check negates the damage entirely.

♦ Rockfall: CR 4; mechanical; location trigger; repair reset; Atk +12 melee (4d6 subdual, rocks) and targets are trapped; multiple targets (all targets in a 10 ft. radius); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20.

Tactics: Triggering the rockfall trap sets off the device hidden in Room H4 (unless the PCs have already disabled it) that shunts the noxious gases of the fumarole pit into this area. PCs are affected as per the rules for the Gas Shunt trap in Room H4.

When the rockfall is triggered, a band of six grigs (hp 13 each) arrive to investigate within 2d6 rounds, followed 1d6 rounds later by a wild elf patrol of four (hp 27 each).

Possessions: Uniform cloak (+2 circumstance bonus to Hide checks in Region H), bronze cloak clasp, long sword, masterwork long bow, 15 obsidian tipped arrows, masterwork studded leather, light shield.

Fiddle (Su): One grig in each band carries a tiny, grig-sized fiddle. When the fiddler plays, any nonsprite within 30 feet of the instrument must succeed on a DC 12 Will save or be affected as though by irresistible dance for as long as the playing continues. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Skills: Grigs have a +8 racial bonus on Jump checks. * They also have a +5 racial bonus on Move Silently checks in a forest setting.

Possessions: [all tiny] short sword, long bow, 14 arrows, leather armor.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of Spot and Disable Device check by 2, and have the wild elf patrol arrive in 1d4 rounds. To decrease the challenge, reduce the checks by 2.

H6. WOUNDED GIRALLON

This canyon appears especially treacherous — the walls are choked with rubble and the scent of half-rotted meat fills the air. Stones slide unpleasantly beneath the feet of the unwary, and the slightest disturbance kicks up plumes of dust. The noise of stone hitting stone is echoed by a low half-moan, half-growl issuing from a bend in the canyon.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Several days ago, an elven patroller was killed by Diantha, the erinye (see “The Fallen Angel” sidebar). The elf was accompanied by a girallon; overcome by the devil’s aura of fear, the beast fled, triggering the rockfall trap in this area. The trap wounded but did not kill the girallon, and now his mate tends his wounds. He cannot move far or fast due to his injuries, but he is still a fearsome foe for anyone who gets in his reach. His mate, on the other hand, is in excellent health, and is fiercely protective of the wounded male. Handle Animal checks for either girallon suffer a circumstance penalty of –4.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Cover

Tactics: The male girallon (hp 56*) is immobile; however, his placement against one wall of the canyon makes it difficult to flank him. He still possesses his rend attack, however, and he fiercely attacks any foe within his reach. The female (hp 67) does not stray far from her mate, but fights as a normal girallon with a +2 morale bonus to attack and damage rolls. Fortunately for the PCs, she is not intelligent enough to deliberately maneuver the PCs into the reach of the wounded male except by accident.

Treasure: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the female girallon’s HD to 11. To decrease the challenge, the male girallon begins the encounter with 25% of his HP total (hp 20) and can only rend 50% of the time.

♣ Male Girallon: CR 8; Huge magical beast; HD 11d10+50; hp 56 (111 when healed); Init +3; Spd 5 ft. Skills and Feats: Climb +18, Move Silently +8, Spot +11; Iron Will, Toughness (2), Weapon Focus (claw).

Rend (Ex): A girallon that hits with two or more claw attacks latches onto the opponent’s body and tears the flesh. This attack automatically deals an extra 2d6+20 points of damage.

Skills: A girallon has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on a Climb check, even if rushed or threatened.

♣ Female Girallon: CR 7; Large magical beast; HD 9d10+24; hp 67; Init +3; Spd 40 ft., climb 40 ft.; AC 16, touch 12, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +9; Grp +19; Atk +14 melee (1d4+6, claw); Full Atk +14 melee (1d4+6, 4 claws) and +9 melee (1d8+3, bite); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Rend 2d4+9; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., low-light vision, scent; SV Fort +7, Ref +8, Will +5; Str 22, Dex 17, Con 14, Int 2, Wis 12, Cha 7.

Rend (Ex): A girallon that hits with two or more claw attacks latches onto the opponent’s body and tears the flesh. This attack automatically deals an extra 2d4+12 points of damage.

Skills: A girallon has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on a Climb check, even if rushed or threatened.

H7 THROUGH H8. THE DRAGON’S EYE

The Dragon’s Eye is a gem deposit, long abandoned by the dwarves who originally turned it into a small mine. Seismic activity has made the mine unstable, and all the gems of any true quality have been removed long since. Still, for those whose eyes are caught by the prospect of riches, it is easy to overlook the danger.

The walls of the Dragon’s Eye are even more hazardous than those of the other canyons. PCs must make a DC 20 Reflex save when within 5 ft. of the walls of the canyons during an earthquake or while taking one of the following actions: climbing, fighting, running, or spellcasting. On a failed save, they take 2d6 damage. PCs may climb the walls of the mine; they must succeed at a DC 18 Climb check for every 15 ft. of vertical movement, but suffer 1d6 damage doing so. A DC 27 Climb check reduces the damage to 1d3 per 15 ft. of movement, and a DC 30 Climb check negates the damage entirely. As well, any PC that climbs the walls in the Dragon’s Eye has a 25% chance of triggering a landslide. A landslide catches all PCs in a 30 ft. radius around the PC that triggered the landslide, inflicting 5d6 damage and trapping them as per the spell transmute mud to rock. PCs may make a DC 18 Reflex save to halve the damage and a second DC 18 Reflex save to avoid being trapped. If they fail the second Reflex save, they must succeed at a DC 18 Fortitude save to break free of the rubble, taking 1d6 damage for each attempt.

H7. MINE ENTRANCE

The rocks at the entrance to this canyon catch the eye. Here, the basalt of the lava massif gives way to obsidian. A few steps into the canyon, and flecks of color amidst the black give way to shards of gem-quality stones embedded in the volcanic glass. Diamonds, emeralds, rubies, sapphires, all lend their color to the stark black canyon walls.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This room was the entrance to the gem mine. A DC 15 Spot check reveals the marks of masonry and mining tools on the walls. The canyon walls are roughly dressed, and the places where gems have been removed are visible on a DC 20 Spot check. A DC 20 Appraise check reveals that what remains of the gems are still valuable, if they could be safely mined. A DC 15 Profession (mining) or a DC 20 Spot check indicates that the mine is unstable; careful exploration is possible, but removing what few gem shards remain is likely to result in disaster. Due to their Stonecunning ability, dwarven PCs may replace the Profession: Mining check with a DC 15 Spot check to recognize the instability of the mine.

Encounter Condition: Tremors 20

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: 1d3 × 10 sp worth of gem shards loose upon the ground. Prying gems forth from the canyon walls have a 50% chance of triggering a landslide as per the description above.

EL: 8

H8. THE GEM MINE

The canyon opens up into a semi-circular hollow carved out of the living rock. The hollow, easily large enough to hold several men, appears oddly textured — almost as if faceted in reverse. The reason for this is obvious, even to the untrained eye. Many, many gems have been mined from here. Many more shimmer behind the protection of tons of green-black obsidian. A light spell, a torch, or a passing sunbeam strokes the gems to life in a dazzling display of color.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: The gem mine was the source of the Council's initial resources and the reason they were able to fortify the area so quickly. Although most Elders would deny it, the closure of the mine and the cessation of the steady flow of wealth it provided were an early harbinger of the Region's malaise. The dwarves refuse to mine any further, despite pressure from the High Council. The mine is unstable due to the threat of seismic activity and the fragility of the remaining obsidian matrix.

A DC 15 Profession (mining) check reveals the mine's instability. PCs that succeed in a DC 20 Profession (mining) check discover that a landslide will ruin the remaining gems. Due to their Stonecunning ability, dwarf PCs may replace the Profession (mining) checks with Spot checks at the same DC. Mages in the mine feel uncomfortable, as if a bright light were bearing down on their skin; detect magic reveals a lingering aura of evocation magic.

Mining for gems in this location triggers a landslide as per the description above. If the PCs set off a landslide in this room, all the remaining gems are destroyed, and interactions with dwarven NPCs encountered later in this Region suffer a -4 circumstance penalty to Diplomacy checks.

Encounter Condition: Spell Resistance 11

Tactics: N/A

H9 THOUGH H10. THE DRAGON'S MAW

Rooms H9 through H10 are known as "The Dragon's Maw." Here, seismic activity opened up a vent to the nearby lava flow, resulting in a small but hot pool of magma. Few of the steam and lava mephits that roil in the molten river have swarmed through the vent; thus, the magma-pool is correspondingly hotter. Pardek Mirroreyes spends much of his time here, studying the bubbling magma for insights into the magics of fire.

H9. THE GNASHING TEETH

Shimmering heat waves roll out of the open gorge on a tower of steam, resembling the breath of a sleeping red dragon. The constant susurrus of fire-creatures warming in and out of the lava seems fainter here, in contrast to the heat. A dull red glow reflects off the surface of the basalt, throwing jagged shadows on the ground.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This is the entrance to the Dragon's Maw, and Pardek has the area trapped and warded. Like the rest of the Dragon's Bones, the traps are nonlethal and designed to warn and ward, not to kill.

Rock shards make up the Gnashing Teeth, and Pardek has used this to his advantage. Worked into the natural striations of the rock is a symbol of sleep.

Pardek has further warded the Gnashing Teeth with a permanent alarm spell; the mental alarm is triggered either when the symbol of sleep is activated or when creatures successfully pass beyond the symbol. The material foci of the alarm spell are hidden well out of reach of the average adventurer, in a crevice uncomfortably close to a superheated jet stream. PCs who possess fire protections and/or the ability to fly receive a +5 circumstance bonus to Disable Device checks and Reflex saves for the purpose of disabling the alarm.

THE FIRE MAGE

Pardek Mirroreyes is young, for an elf; at a mere century and a half, he is considered barely out of adolescence by elven standards. Despite his youth, however, his magical abilities are prodigious, so prodigious, in fact, that his parents fostered him at an early age to a mage-academy of some fame. Unfortunately, they were not aware of the mage-school's darker reputation.

Years passed, and Pardek grew to adulthood. Despite the torments of his training, he remained a decent individual, although reputedly hot-tempered. His training, while thorough, focused on the destructive aspects of magic, for which he displayed a distinct talent. As he grew more skillful, however, he came into greater conflict with his master, who was increasingly angered by his inability to break the young elf's spirit. Eventually, the situation exploded in a whirlwind of mage-fire, as the two fought spell with spell.

Pardek emerged victorious, though not unscathed — a well-placed curse left him drained to a shadow of his former self. Half the mage-academy burned before the magical fires were brought under control; despite his weakness, the distraction allowed him to escape the area before his former schoolmates could bring him to their twisted version of justice.

After regaining what strength he could, he made his way back to the elven kingdom, where he took up service in the elven army. Ultimately, the fascination with the fire-magics that freed him brought him to the attention of the temple of Belatu-Cadros, and he was sent below the earth to serve in the fortress protecting the sacred tree.

Pardek is highly skilled in the arcane arts, and has not allowed his service to interrupt his studies. Rather the opposite — the nearby lava-flow provides him an incomparable opportunity to study fire. He is not particularly interested in the worship of Belatu-Cadros, regarding it as a waste of time. Nonetheless, he does not shirk his duties — Pardek respects power, if little else, and understands the necessity of presenting a strong front against the hostile inhabitants of the cavern.

In the quarter-century Pardek has lived here, his war-magics have earned Jacan Lightshield's grudging respect, although his devotion to his arcane studies are a constant point of contention with Enoriel. Oddly, he is on reasonably good terms with Gurthang and his cadre of engineers. He respects the dwarven command of fire and is usually happy to add some small enchantment to a dwarven machine. He avoids the nonhuman members of the Council, for the most part; they are of no interest to him. He also avoids the fey creatures of the wood; some few years ago, he fell victim to a pixie prank involving the irresistible dance spell. Silmarien is a newcomer to the cavern whom he does not know well, yet treats with a cautious courtesy. For Jolinaar, he has no love whatsoever.

Pardek views the slow disintegration of the elven forces with considerable dismay, but does not know what is causing it, nor how to fight it. He chooses to throw himself even deeper into his magics, so that he, at least, shall be prepared should the worst case scenario take place.

H10. THE FURNACE

The rough rock of the canyon floor continues to slope downward, ending abruptly in a scatter of ash and cinders. The canyon opens up into an unevenly rounded cul-de-sac, filled by a fuming pool of roiling magma. On the north and west sides of the cul-de-sac appear to be small spits of rock upon which a brave (or fire-protected) man could stand for a few moments. Runes are painted and carved upon the walls, shimmering like mirages in the heat.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This is Pardek's laboratory, where he spends his days investigating the mysteries of elemental flame. Over the years, he has carved runes of power into the walls, focusing and amplifying the elemental forces of the magma pool. He has thus far succeeded in tripling the size of the magma pool, and is confident that he will continue to unlock the secrets he desires.

Pardek (hp 27) is a slender elven male of average height, with dark, shoulder-length hair pulled back into a tail and a neatly-trimmed beard. Oddly, despite his preoccupation with fire, neither hair nor beard are singed or scorched. His eyes are a reflective shade of silver, earning him the name "Mirroreyes." Pardek is a touchy, arrogant man with a temper as hot as his fire magics — all Diplomacy checks receive a -2 circumstance penalty upon initially encountering him. PCs can improve his demeanor by offering him a fire spell he does not possess; this automatically raises his attitude one step. However, if Pardek's attitude drops to Hostile, he attacks.

Tactics: Pardek lets the surroundings work for him. He has lived underground long enough to assume that any creatures intruding into the elven-controlled Region are hostile, and acts appropriately; however, he won't fire first unless the PCs are openly hostile (or unless his attitude drops to Hostile).

In the event that a fight breaks out, the magma pool serves Pardek as both weapon and shield; if surrounded by a group of more than eight creatures, he casts wall of fire, then, protected by his lava-striding boots, retreats over the magma pool to one of the small alcoves, from which he can teleport to safety. Otherwise, he blinds his opponents with pyrotechnics, then drops a delayed blast fireball in the middle of the PCs and cleans up with fireball, burning hands, and other spells as appropriate.

He does not fight to the death, and teleports away when he reaches 15 HP or less, casting defensively when necessary.

Regardless of whether Pardek flees or not, there is a 30% chance that reinforcements from the southern watchtowers arrive in 1d6 rounds, and a 20% chance that reinforcements from the western watchtowers arrive within 1d6+6 rounds. Reinforcements consist of a four-man squad of wood elves (hp 31 each), armed with longswords and longbows.

Treasure: Pardek carries a wand of fireballs and two elixirs of fire breath. His pride and joy, however, are his lava-striding boots. He also carries 1d4 precious gems of various sorts among his material components.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a wood elf bodyguard (hp 45) hidden in the rocks above. To decrease the challenge, lower Pardek's level to 9th and delay the reinforcements by +1d6 rounds.

H12. GEODE CAVERN

Even the smallest torch gets the cavern glittering as the thousands of crystals set in the walls and ceiling refract dizzying patterns of light. The display of light is echoed by the whispers of sound stroked from the cavern by even a faint movement of air. From outside the cavern, it is merely beautiful. From within, it must surely be overwhelming.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly; appears Friendly

Encounter: The cave itself is what remains of a giant air pocket, long since cooled. The inside of the cave is a giant geode, studded with sparkling red and black crystals. There is a hidden danger in the cave, however; at any given time, 1d20 of the obsidian shards that cover the ceiling and walls have worked themselves loose, and are ready to fall with the slightest intonation of a vibration. Diantha is an expert at moving silently, and has long-since learned how to avoid causing the knife-sharp crystals to fall. Intruders that fail a DC 17 Move Silently check cause the shards to shatter and fall, causing 3d6 damage to everyone in the cavern. If lighting conditions are dim, PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Spot check to see the loose crystals; if they use a torch or light spell, a –5 circumstance penalty is incurred as the crystals wildly reflect the light.

Although she rarely uses it as anything but a trap, the cavern provides Diantha a decidedly spartan abode; there is a bedroll along the far reaches of the cave, half-hidden beneath a ledge. Most of her magic items are far too valuable to leave strewn about the cavern; she disposes of her victims in the lava flow — no bodies = no evidence. However, a DC 30 Search check reveals a cunningly hidden crevice among the crystals, in which is hidden a thin, silvered obsidian mirror that emanates moderate divination magic. (Diantha's scrying mirror, it is too large for her to comfortably carry.)

Encounter Condition: Poor Footing 6, Tremors 20

Tactics: Diantha (hp 85) is a strong opponent. However, she does not seek to openly fight the PCs; rather, she prefers to beguile them into doing her work for her. She strives to keep her true nature hidden and uses her ring of the chameleon extensively to change appearance or set an ambush for the unwary. If she is near her lair when the PCs approach (80% chance), she uses minor image to create the illusion of a rockfall at the opening of the canyon, diverting the PCs away from the cave itself; she then approaches in one of several guises, depending on the approach she wishes to take:

- If there is a paladin in the party, Diantha approaches in the guise of her true form: a wing-clipped erinye, although she uses the ring of the chameleon to appear unarmed. She claims that she is one of the guardians of the dungeon, long since cursed by a pit fiend to wear the guise of a devil, and cast out as a result. She shamelessly plays on the sympathy and pity of the PCs, and if she can use charm monster to beguile one or more of the PCs, so much the better. Note that any Bluff checks she makes using this story have at least a +5 circumstance bonus, as she possesses intimate knowledge of the celestial forces. PCs must succeed at a DC 35 Knowledge: Planes or Knowledge: Arcana check to suspect that the story is false, but even so, by this time the PCs should be aware that the dungeon was created to hold extremely powerful evil creatures, and the possibility that she speaks the truth cannot be completely discounted.
- If there is no paladin in the party, Diantha has more options. She may approach as a dryad, who claims that the sacred tree is the center of a prophecy about the dungeon. If the treant can be convinced to speak, she confides, it can tell the PCs exactly how to free the world of a great evil. (This story can be adapted in any way the DM sees fit, depending on the rationale he used to get the PCs into the dungeon.)

H11 THROUGH H12. DIANTHA'S LAIR

A cave at the end of one of the basalt massif's chasms serves as the hiding place of Diantha, an erinye that has taken up residence in Region H. Diantha uses this cave and its entrance (rooms H11 and H12) to observe the goings on of the elves as she plots her next ambush. She has had some luck in setting the elves against each other, and sees the arrival of the PCs as yet another success on her path to complete vengeance and, at the end of the day, her escape.

H11. LAIR ENTRANCE

The scent of sulfur is heavy, stirred only occasionally by a stray breeze. Little light penetrates the gloom of the canyon, and what little does only heightens the shadows. Even the faintest footstep echoes in the uncanny stillness, sending a cascade of rocks rattling down the canyon walls like the bones of some long-dead creature. Finally, at the end of the canyon yawns the mouth of a cavern that plunges deep into the basalt massif.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: The mouth of the canyon leading to Diantha's cavern is possessed of a sound-dampening quality. Whispers can barely be heard, and even normal speech seems muted. An intricate network of cracks in the canyon walls, however, carries those sounds directly back to Diantha's cavern in Room H12, ensuring that she is not surprised by someone approaching.

- If the PCs have already encountered the elves at the Western Watchtowers, she may appear as a badly abused male elven warrior. "He" claims that he is the sole survivor of an elven squad that turned upon each other for no reason he can identify. He refuses to allow the PCs to return him to the elven enclave, telling the PCs that the elves are corrupt — why, they even allow a drow into their midst! (See the Diantha vs. Jolinar sidebar for more information.)

The DM should feel free to create additional stories and guises for Diantha; in fact, she may approach the PCs multiple times, under multiple faces!

In a fight, Diantha is clever and dangerous. If near the lava flow, she uses it as protection while she calls down unholy blight upon the PCs, then snipes at them with her +1 flaming composite longbow. Otherwise, she uses charm monster to turn her opponents against each other, then follows up with unholy blight. She targets spellcasters with her entangling rope to keep them busy while she deals with the other threats.

THE FALLEN ANGEL

Long ago, untold numbers of evil creatures were imprisoned here, never to be released back into the world. Equally, untold numbers of celestials were sanctioned to guard them. Yet, over the millennia, the dungeon became a prison for the celestials bound to guard it, as year after year and eon after eon slipped past. Demons raged. Devils plotted. And, all along, the celestials kept guard.

Diantha was an astral deva, a warrior for the cause of good. She was a protector; a guardian. Thus, when the call came for celestials to serve as wardens in this massive prison, she responded joyfully.

After millennia, joy replaced boredom. A fearsome warrior, she had no real enemies to fight; a fiery spirit, she was slowly stifled by the endless darkness. She longed for sunlight and crisp clean battle, not the endless drudgery of a prison guard.

Eventually, her discontent became known to Balzuth, a pit fiend imprisoned within the dungeon; he preyed upon her desires and artfully seduced her, even going so far as to feign that her love and attentions had swayed him from his evil ways. Balzuth eventually offered her an elaborately jeweled collar as proof of his love and swore his eternal devotion to her.

His actions were deceitful, of course. The regalo di amore (tr. "love-gift") was a potent magical item Balzuth wished into creation, allowing him to manipulate her emotions and control her actions through the ring mated to it. Ultimately, through guile and magic, he convinced her to help him escape the dungeon. The escape attempt failed, and Diantha was stripped of her wings and excommunicated from the celestial ranks. Her punishment: to be imprisoned for millennia adjacent to those she formerly guarded, now reduced to a life as Balzuth's personal plaything.

Millennia passed, and Balzuth tired of his toy; when the opportunity presented itself, Diantha stole the ring and collar, escaped the great tomb and fled to find a place where she could nourish her vengeance. She has preyed on the elves for months now, slowly but surely eroding their morale with every vanished warrior.

Diantha gathers intelligence and sows chaos through a cadre of charmed sprites, each of whom she has given a small obsidian crystal from her own small cave. The crystals are not themselves magical, but serve as foci for her screaming spells. Further, she has tricked Sythiss, the guardian naga, into wearing the jeweled collar that is mate to Balzuth's ring.

Eventually, she plans to strike at Belatu-Cadros; she has become aware of the prophecy surrounding it, and plans to use the prophecy to destroy the treant. Once the treant is destroyed, she will take advantage of the ensuing confusion and escape to the surface.

BALZUTH'S RING AND COLLAR

This ruby-studded gold ring is part of a set that includes a finely-crafted collar. The wearer of the ring may compel the being wearing the collar to obey his commands in a manner similar to the spell dominate monster, although more subtle. Unlike dominate monster, the victim may go about his normal life while the ring's master is not actively commanding his victim via the collar, but is completely unable to reveal the compulsions placed upon him.

ELVEN TROOPS

Remember that, while Region H is weakened by internal conflict, it remains a war-fortress. There are no civilians in the fortress, no children, no servants. The elven troops do their own chores, aided sometimes by mage-conjurings (unseen servants, etc.).

The elven uniform consists of a calf-length lightweight hazel cloak, clasped at the neck. The cloak, due to its cunning manufacture, provides the wearer a +2 circumstance bonus to Hide checks in Region H. Beyond that, warriors are expected to go armored; magic-wielders may wear what they wish (usually, robes or comfortable tunic-and-trews sets in woodland colors).

The cloak-clasps are designed in the shape of a stylized tree; subtle differences in the materials of the broaches indicate rank and assignment. Line troopers' cloak-clasps are cast in bronze; squad lieutenants' cloak-clasps are aged copper. The second-in-command's cloak-broach is silver, inset with small sapphire chips; members of the Council wear gold studded with emeralds. The cloak-clasps are faintly magical, and a number of traps and doors in the Region are keyed to pass only someone wearing the appropriate cloak-broach.

Because of this, the elves look unkindly on intruders possessing the badges. When the PCs first enter this Region, the only way they can come into the possession of a cloak-broach is to slay its owner. If the PCs are caught holding one of these badges, the elves' attitudes shift downward one step (Friendly becomes Indifferent, Indifferent becomes Unfriendly, etc.) and the PCs had best have a very good explanation for it.

The cloak-clasps are of minimal value; the bronze and copper ones are worth 5 cp, the silver badge is worth 5 sp, and the gold badge is worth a mere 2 gp, most of it for materials.

PCs may be given bronze or copper cloak-clasps as payment for performing some service for the Council, indicating that they have free passage through the elven lands. They are never offered the badges of higher rank.

Squad lieutenants carry small, silver-banded horns which they can blow to summon reinforcements. Each squad has a separate horn-call, and the elves have developed a sophisticated signal language to alert their fellows to the location, number, and nature of their enemies.

Elven troops stationed in the fortress are not paid in gold, silver, or gems; there is no economy in the fortress to take advantage of. Troops are paid in wooden chits stamped with the queen's sigil on one side and a stylized image of the Tree on the other. When the soldiers return to the surface, they turn their chits in for hard currency.

H13 THOUGH H16. WESTERN WATCHTOWERS

The noisy debris underfoot is muffled by the overgrown grass that carpets the cavern floor. Eyes long-accustomed to darkness aches as honey light pours forth from the distant spire to the west; it shines with sunlight and moonlight both, and is so bright it could be magical. Dark shafts of rock thrust themselves through the ground cover, and beyond them there is greenery.

When the elves initially fortified this Region, their dwarven associates carved watchtowers out of the living rock itself, shaping stalagmites into suitably defensive structures. From these watchtowers, keen elven eyes could survey the western perimeter — especially demons or devils that might escape their grim tomb for fairer lands. Open fields were excellent for elven bow-work, and an uneven, debris-littered cavern floor (even when grass-covered) was ideal ground for devious dwarven sappers.

Historically, the west was the most dangerous of the elven frontiers. Not long after the elves took possession of the area, a group of devils broke out of the tomb from the west and breached elven defenses, turned back only by the fury of Lyonatar's eye. After that, the elves ensured that the western front was their most secure point.

Over the years, the memory of the infernal assault dwindled and vanished. Today, duty on the western watchtowers is considered the worst duty posting of the elven kingdom.

When PCs approach within 100 ft. of one of the watchtowers, they must succeed at a Spot check DC 35 (distance penalties taken into account). A successful check reveals regular lines and features much more reminiscent of an artificial structure than of a natural feature. As the PCs draw nearer to the tower, the Spot DC decreases by 1 for every 10 ft.

There is a 20% chance that any given tower is currently abandoned, its assigned elven patrol having slipped away (temporarily or permanently). Abandoned towers have a 30% chance of being temporarily inhabited and trapped by a band of the Region's sprites.

The initial encounters with the elves should proceed as follows: on the first encounter, the elves simply shoot at the unwanted intruders. Although they are accurate archers, the elven patrols fire warning shots and refrain from giving chase, content with driving the PCs away. If the warning shots do not work, they shoot to maim.

The second time the PCs encounter the elves, they are more directly accosted. An elven patrol containing 2-3 elves for every PC intercepts the adventuring party. The leader of the patrol harasses the PCs, demanding to know their purpose in being in the elven lands, refusing to answer questions himself. The elves do not directly harm the PCs, and eventually release them, demanding they leave the elven Region immediately.

The third and subsequent encounters are handled per the individual room encounters.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	Shift change. Twice the usual number of elven guards are present.
2	Nonfunctional trap. The long-abandoned remnants of a snare trap lie rotted in the grass and rubble. There is no indication that the trap was ever sprung; it was simply allowed to decompose.
3-4	The area is infested by sprites (pixies and grigs), who have set up a number of practical jokes for the unwary. Gopher holes hidden behind permanent images ; concealed bees-nests, etc. The DM is encouraged to be creative.
5-7	Snare trap. If the trap is triggered, a band of pixies comes along to check on it within 1d6 rounds.
8-19	Nothing
20	PCs encounter the corpse of an elven warrior. The body has suffered a single long, slender stab wound to the back, and a successful DC 20 Heal check reveals traces of some dark substance around the wound. If the PCs leave the body unattended at any time, it is not there when they return.

THE WATCHTOWERS

All the watchtowers are designed in roughly the same way. The single entrance to each watchtower is a stone door on the ground level, cunningly worked to appear an uninterrupted part of the stalagmite's surface. Originally, the doors would not be considered well-hidden secret doors; now, due to neglect, the doors are considered concealed. They are stoutly constructed, however.

Each tower has three levels, accessed by a central spiral staircase. The ground level is divided between a storage and a barracks area. The storage area is just large enough to hold several days' worth of supplies for a typical garrison, and usually does not hold even that much. The barracks area is separated from the storage room by a stone wall and a stout door of metal-reinforced wood, and is large enough for up to 6 people to sleep in. The stairs cannot be accessed from the storage room; intruders must break through to the barracks in order to proceed upward.

The second level holds the armory. Weapons are meant to be stored here while the garrison troops are off-duty, and this also provides a strong point to resist any intruders attacking from below. In practice, the armory has become the de facto break room, where soldiers while the time away instead of cramming into the uncomfortably small barracks below.

The third level of the watchtowers is the actual guard post. What appear from a distance to be merely crevices in the rock are in fact arrow-slits; there is sufficient room for archers to be stationed at all eight arrow-slits. Ordinarily, however, the post is manned with three or four elves at a time, as the elves do not anticipate that they might be surrounded. There is one other weakness of the guard post — the narrow slits create a zone directly adjacent to the tower into which the elven archers can neither see nor fire.

While the towers are designed to be semi-autonomous in the event of war or protracted siege, in everyday practice, elven garrisons return to their more comfortable quarters in or atop the central mound. Consequently, the storage rooms in each of the watchtowers are no longer kept stocked in case of hostilities.

H13. NEGLECTED WATCHTOWER

There is a feeling of general decay as you approach the tower, cleverly camouflaged as a broken stalagmite. Upon inspection, signs of neglect dominate. The door hangs awkwardly in its frame, one of the hidden hinges is broken. The wind whistles mournfully through a long-untended chink in the rock of the tower. The musty scent of death is stirred by an occasional gust of wind.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This watchtower is largely abandoned by the elves; they believe that it is haunted, as many of their missing comrades have disappeared from this area. In reality, the missing patrols have been slaughtered by the erinye Diantha, who dislikes having an elven stronghold anywhere near her lair (Room H12).

There is a 30% chance that a reluctant wood elf patrol (hp 28 each) is temporarily garrisoning the tower and a 40% chance that the tower is completely abandoned.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the elves are in the tower, they are hostile and demoralized. Upon spotting the PCs, they open fire (unless the PCs are within 30 ft. of the tower, in which case they barricade themselves in the upper level). Elves that suffer 50% or more damage retreat, otherwise they barricade themselves inside the tower. If they cannot retreat or fortify their position, they surrender.

Elves that surrender obviously expect to be killed out-of-hand; if the PCs show the surrendered elves mercy, their attitude changes to Friendly and they offer to escort the PCs to their second-in-command, Silmarien Meliambre. If the PCs do kill the surrendered elves, then all elven attitudes henceforth become Hostile, as the word is spread by the creatures that lurk in the area.

LYONATAR'S EYE

Lyonatar was the elven artisan-mage who worked with the dwarves to create the lattice of mirrors and lenses that channels sunlight and moonlight down to the great diamond-lens atop the Spire. Long before the mirror-web was complete, Lyonatar realized that, in the darkness, light itself could be a weapon. Working closely with dwarven craftsmen, Lyonatar created a hidden mechanism of clockwork and magic to be the fortress' last defense against terrible danger. Lyonatar's original name for the device was lost long ago; it is known now simply as Lyonatar's eye.

The eye has only opened once, in all the time the elves have protected their sacred tree, against an incursion of devils from the west. (The derro have, for their own inscrutable reasons, never challenged the strength of the elven protections.) However, it made enough of an impression upon the denizens of the dungeon that none have dared attack in force since.

The eye is said to bring the ravening fire of the sun into the darkness, searing flesh and bone and leaving not even cinders; no one currently in the fortress can say for certain, for like its name, the hidden workings of Lyonatar's eye are lost.

Lyonatar's eye sits atop the Council Spire: a perfect diamond easily a foot across. A platinum rod inset with prism-cut rubies, sapphires and emeralds anchors the eye to the rock (and is well-hidden by the rough basalt of the Spire itself — the rod is impossible to see from any distance and requires a DC 25 Search check on close inspection to find) and allows the eye to rotate.

The eye was designed so that only a Council acting as one could unleash its full power; Lyonatar believed that requiring such unity would keep the eye's power from being improperly used. Seven voices raised in harmony and counterpoint cause the crystals in the great chandelier to resonate, triggering the desired effect. There are different combinations for the various effects that the eye can perform, and there is no single being (with the exception of Belatu-Cadros, who does not speak) in the entire fortress who currently knows all the eye's songs. However, with time and effort, enterprising PCs may be able to discover the lost secrets of the eye.

Lyonatar's eye has 100 charges when fully-charged and regenerates 1 charge per day. If the proper command songs are known, the eye can generate the following effects at caster level 20th.

- Blindness (2 charges)
- Daylight (2 charges; affects the entire Region)
- Searing light (4 charges)
- Sunbeam (6 charges)
- Sunburst (8 charges)

Note: Spells cast from Lyonatar's eye have a range encompassing the entire Region. Therefore, targeted spells may target any creature or object in the Region (within reason; creatures that are hidden underground may not be targeted).

H14. UNFRIENDLY WATCHTOWER

From a grassy field of flowers juts a jagged stump of rock, stretching up a good twenty or thirty ft. Once it was a graceful stalagmite; now, it looks like a rotted tooth, incongruous amidst the riotous flora carpeting the cavern for as far as the eye can see. Indeed, the rampant overgrowth has even begun to attack the stones themselves — ivy curls round the splintered base of the outcrop, its roots finding purchase in even the smallest crevice. In the distance, the keen eye can make out one or two more larger stubs of broken stone that are similarly under siege.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The six wood elf guards (hp 27 each) in this watchtower are not as edgy and trigger-happy as the patrol garrisoning Room H13, but they are not pleasant to outsiders, either. When the PCs first approach the tower, they are accosted by the elven garrison. The lieutenant of the garrison (hp 49) is not initially inclined to answer the PCs' questions, nor does he offer any assistance. "These," he says, "are elven lands, and intruders are not welcome." He can be negotiated with, however. A successful DC 15 Sense Motive check reveals that he is more interested in keeping things quiet than aggressively protecting the borders. If the PCs can raise his disposition to Indifferent, he does not care if they remain in the area, provided they do no harm.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: When the PCs approach the tower, two elves emerge from a door at its base to negotiate with the PCs. They are obviously armed and armored, but their weapons are sheathed.

The garrison in the tower does not attack the PCs if they do not strike first. However, if hostilities break out, the archers in the tower provide covering fire for the lieutenant and his guard to retreat back to the tower, and then hammer the PCs with direct arrow fire while calling for reinforcements. Six wild elf guards (hp 28 each) arrive from the forest within 1d3+3 rounds.

H15. ABANDONED WATCHTOWER

Upon approach of the long-broken stalagmite, the signs of intentional workings become obvious. Lines too straight to be natural, the faint marks of tools in the stone, a subtle pattern to the growth of the flowers and vines covering the cavern floor, and, finally, the arrow-slits in the top of the tower, now made evident by the tower's disrepair. Strange that something that required so much care to create was abandoned in this way, yet the signs of neglect are obvious.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This tower is deserted, as the elves haven't the strength to garrison all the outposts. As this tower is close to the elven-held lands, not even the sprites claim it. It is left to its demise, and only occasionally do the elves bother to send a patrol to ensure that all remains quiet.

The external door to the tower is closed, but a DC 20 Search check is sufficient to identify it. The door is neither barred nor locked. The interior suffers from dry rot, the stairs are not entirely reliable, and every surface is covered with dust or lichen endemic to caverns.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: One of the walls has partially collapsed, revealing a cache of crystals that shimmer in the darkness. The crystals are worth approximately 100 gp, and if used as an additional material component in fire- or electricity-based spells, provide a +1 to save DCs against those spells.

H16. ENFILADE MEADOW

This pleasant meadow is surrounded by remnants of stalagmites, each casting a fingerlike shadow over the fields. The ground cover is many years' worth of growth, and is only occasionally marred by the mark of foot or weapon. Aside from the plant growth, however, the area seems curiously still, and in the stillness is the barest hint of unfriendly eyes, watching.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This killing field is irrigated with blood. Protected by the watchtowers at Rooms H13, H14, and H15, the area is flat, open, and provides no place to take cover. In wartime, garrisons at all three towers can pepper the area with heavy ranged fire, usually counting on spell support as well to increase the overall firepower. In times of peace, the elves merely keep watch over the area, discouraging the occasional visitor with a well-placed shot.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the overall elven attitude is not Hostile, then the PCs encounter no resistance. Otherwise, the elves garrison all three towers and openly attack the PCs on three fronts, hitting them with massed arrow fire from a distance.

Treasure: Every 10 minutes the PCs spend in this room, roll 1d20. On a roll of 1-4, the PCs find gem fragments worth 2d8 sp scattered amidst the remnants of a long-decomposed body.

H17 THROUGH H21. THE SOUTHERN RAMPARTS

Rooms H17 through H21 comprise the southern bulwark of the elven defenses. Initially, the elves believed that the derro to the south were as much of a threat as the devils and demons entombed to the west; as time passed and the derro proved themselves more interested in continuing their excavations, the watch on the southern front suffered. Years of quiet, in addition to the protection of the lava flow separating the elven lands from the derro excavations, contribute to the slow demise of the elven forces.

Recently, however, the southern ramparts seeing increased activity, as the new second-in-command strives to raise morale and tighten discipline. Silmarien Meliambre is well aware that many of the disappearing elves have vanished from the southern and western watchtowers, and is doing her utmost to stop the slow hemorrhaging of elven lives, but her efforts have thus far been for naught.

1	The PCs find the corpse of an elven warrior. The body has suffered a single long, thin stab wound to the back, and a successful DC 20 Heal check reveals traces of a dark substance around the wound. If the PCs leave the body unattended for 15 minutes, it is gone when they return.
2-3	Nothing
4-7	The area is infested by sprites (pixies and grigs), who have set up a number of practical jokes for the unwary. Gopher holes, hidden behind permanent images ; concealed bees-nests, etc. The DM is implored to be creative.
9-14	Nonfunctional trap. The much forsaken remnants of a snare trap lie rotting in the rubble. There is no indication that the trap was ever sprung; it was simply allowed to decompose.
15-19	Snare trap. If the trap is triggered, a band of pixies arrive to check on it within 1d6 rounds.

H17. PREPARED WATCHTOWER

The broken stalagmite rises from a sea of knee-high grass, casting shadows to the southwest. There is no wind here to stir the grass, and if there are small creatures that scamper about, they have learned to do so unobserved. For the races of man, there is nowhere to hide on this wide, wide sea of grass.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This watchtower is well-maintained, garrisoned by an elite squad of six wood elf guards (hp 31 each) and a lieutenant (hp 55), and does not appear to be a watchtower from a distance. Only if the PCs have encountered the western watchtowers will they be aware that this is another of the same kind, only in better repair.

The garrison in this tower is one of the most steady garrisons in the elven fortress, mostly due to the nearby presence of Pardek Mirroreyes (in Room H10). This squad is well-positioned to come to Pardek's aid if he need be, and in turn they are confident that he will return the favor. Thus, they do not feel the need to be openly hostile to intruders. While they are still not overly friendly, the garrison here is willing to summon Silmarien Meliambre, the army's second-in-command, to negotiate with the PCs.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The garrison do not attack the PCs if they do not attack pre-emptively. However, when hostilities break out, the archers in the tower concentrate arrow fire on the PCs, especially concentrating on spellcasters, while the bright notes of an elven horn call for reinforcements. Pardek Mirroreyes (Room H10) arrives in 1d3 rounds (via fly), providing spell support from the top of the tower. A squad of four wild elf guards (hp 25 each) arrive in another 4 rounds.

H18. WRECKED WATCHTOWER

Scorched stone litters the ground around the tower. The door to this watchtower hangs half-off its hinges, deformed by some unaccounted for enormous force. Great rents are blasted into the rock at the upper levels, leaving the tower open to the air. Some cataclysm has left this tower a splintered wreck.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This tower is abandoned due to an explosion that took place quite a while ago. The exact details are lost, but the elves believe it was some infernal dwarvish war machine which malfunctioned. For their part, the dwarves believe that it was an elven alchemical experiment gone awry. Regardless of the cause, it resulted in essentially destroying the tower.

Instead, the remains of the tower are occasionally used by elven deserters as a temporary hiding place before they make their way east to the stable plateau. That it is used for such is an open secret among the more disaffected, and is well-known to Jolinaar, who frequently preys upon the deserters towards personal ends.

Of late, Silmarien has paid closer attention to the area, so the tower has fallen to disuse. The interior of the tower is empty, the staircase snapped off just below the second level, and the stone wall separating the storage area and the barracks mostly crumbled to dust. The floor has long since been cleared of the remnants of the explosion, but cold ashes in one corner suggest that someone camps here, but not of late.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: In the ashes, PCs succeeding on a DC 20 Search check an obsidian crystal, warped and splintered by the heat. If the PCs have already encountered the charmed sprites in Room H63 or approached Diantha's lair in Room H12, the DM may allow a DC 25 Appraise check to recognize this as a similar crystal. The crystal has been ruined by the fire and is utterly worthless.

H19. COMMAND POST

Once one of the mighty pillars that supported the miles-high ceiling of the dungeon, this tall granite column was shattered by the cataclysm that brought a pocket of light into the midst of the cavernous darkness. Snapped off at a mere fifty ft. in height, the top of the column is still as rough as it was when the ceiling first came tumbling down. The area around the column, however, is well-tended, and any debris that might have been scattered has been cleared. The exterior of the column is rough, but in places bears the mark of intentional working. The markings are clearest at the top of the column, where at night, the keen eye can occasionally spot a faint glow from within. Outside the column, the endless plains stretch in all directions, broken only by a solitary oak tree standing some ten ft. away.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: The builders of the elven fortresses initially intended this to be a smaller version of the southern shield wall. Over time, its purpose shifted, and it became a post, where a commander could survey the entire southern border and direct troop movements as necessary. As even more time passed, it became tradition for the second-in-command of the fortress to reside in the tower, in case of an attack, and as a symbol of the elven leadership's willingness to risk their lives alongside their troops.

For many years after that, the command post stood empty, as the morale of the elven army failed, and commanders and seconds cycled in and out with the change of the seasons. Now, however, there is a new second-in-command who upholds the tradition. It is true that many claim this is merely a mark of Jacan Lightshield's disfavor, but regardless, the result is that morale is slowly improving in this area.

The tower is not as highly-worked as the shield wall to the southeast, a deliberate tactic to draw the bulk of an enemy's forces toward the stronger fortification. It is intended to appear lightly guarded, if at all, although on demand it can support a reasonably-sized defensive force.

A secret door (DC 30 Search check) on the northern face of the column allows entrance to the command post. The door can be set to either of two modes: when 'locked', the door admits only those with a silver or gold badge (second-in-command or Council members); when 'unlocked', allows entry to any badge-wearer. Usually, Silmarien leaves the door locked.

The command post has three levels. The first level is general storage, which can also be used as temporary barracks. Much like the nearby shield wall, the command post is designed to withstand sieges. A strong door of copper-clad wood protects the staircase; the door is not magical and has break DC 25 when locked. The lock on the door is good, but aged; success on a DC 25 Open Lock check bypasses the lock. The door leads to a spiral staircase, 5 ft. wide, which leads to the two upper levels.

The second level of the command post is the second-in-command's living area, currently inhabited by Silmarien Meliambre. The common room is sparsely decorated; the floor is covered by slightly-worn rugs to protect against the stone's chill, and the furniture is old but comfortable-looking. Along one wall stands a slender bookcase, holding worn volumes on warcraft. Along the other wall is a weapons rack, which bears several well-kept weapons. The bedroom is equally sparsely furnished. The third level of the command post is designed both for observation and defense, widely crenellated for maximum visibility. Someone with a keen eye can easily see all the way to the plateau in the east and the end of the Dragon's Bones in the west. A large map of the Region is etched into the stone wall, delineating the elven defenses in detail; charcoal marks on the wall indicate their tragically-undermanned situation.

Silmarien Meliambre (hp 102) is a tall, broad-shouldered half-elf whose build runs more human than elven. Her raven hair is plaited in a warrior's braid, and her violet eyes miss little. Although sharp-featured, she bears an aura of command.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: When Silmarien sees the PCs, she summons four elf warriors (hp 35 each) from the woods and goes to meet them. She thoroughly questions the PCs: where they came from, what they are doing on the borders of the elven lands, what their intentions are. If they answer to her satisfaction, she offers them sanctuary for a night or two, with the caveat that anything else must be authorized by the Council. If they are rude, or her questions go unanswered, she turns them away.

If the PCs attack, Silmarien's guards engage in melee while she steps back and hammers the PCs with devastatingly accurate sniper fire. Silmarien moves frequently, using Shot on the Run, but remaining within 30 ft. if possible. She takes ranged sneak attacks against flanked or flat-footed PCs. Alternately, she readies Manyshot to interrupt any spellcasting. The garrison from Room H17 arrives in 2d3 rounds; Pardek Mirrorreys flies in within 2d4 rounds.

Evasion (Ex): Silmarien can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility. If she makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, she instead takes no damage. Evasion can be used only if the rogue is wearing light armor or no armor. A helpless rogue does not gain the benefit of evasion.

Half-Elf Traits: Immunity to sleep spells and effects, and a +2 racial saving throw bonus against enchantment spells or effects.

Favored Enemy (Ex): Silmarien's favored enemies are humans and elves. She gains a +2 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks when using these skills against creatures of this type. Likewise, she gets a +2 bonus on weapon damage rolls against such creatures.

Sneak Attack: If Silmarien can catch an opponent when he is unable to defend himself effectively from her attack, she can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

Silmarien's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the rogue flanks her target. This extra damage is 3d6. Should she score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Ranged attacks can count as sneak attacks only if the target is within 30 feet.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Silmarien can react to danger before her senses would normally allow her to do so. She retains her Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) even if she is caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker. However, she still loses her Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized.

Woodland Stride (Ex): Silmarien may move through any sort of undergrowth (such as natural thorns, briars, overgrown areas, and similar terrain) at her normal speed and without taking damage or suffering any other impairment.

However, thorns, briars, and overgrown areas that are enchanted or magically manipulated to impede motion still affect her.

THE QUEEN'S DARK SHADOW

Every ruler needs at least one person they can trust above all others to do what is necessary to make safe the crown and kingdom. For the ancient and powerful elven kingdom in the world above, that person is Silmarien Meliambre.

A distant relation of the royal family, Silmarien was the result of a brief infatuation that was unwisely consummated. Her human father wandered on along his own road long before her birth; her elven mother died in childbirth. The orphaned Silmarien was raised in the queen's own household, despite her mixed blood. The elven queen took early note of the girl's potential, and made certain that she was trained as befit her abilities and the realm's needs.

In the blink of an elven eye, Silmarien grew from an infant into a strong-willed young woman who embodied the best of both worlds; as thoughtful as the elves she was raised among, she was also capable of swift, decisive action when necessary. Her greatest weaknesses were a tendency toward impulsiveness and a hot temper. She was equally at home in the heart of the forest or in the midst of the city, and understood men and wild creatures alike. At the age of eighteen, she entered royal service as a scout, but was quickly drawn into the intrigues of the court. She quickly distinguished herself by uncovering a conspiracy to unseat the queen and bringing its ringleaders to justice.

Twenty years later, Silmarien has become known as the Queen's Dark Shadow, ferreting out threats to the queen's realm and dispensing royal justice. She has killed more men than she likes to count, and not all in open battle; although she acts without hesitation, never without due cause. In truth, not even the queen knows the lengths to which Silmarien has gone to protect the realm; both prefer matters to be handled that way.

Thus, when disturbing rumors reached the queen's ears about the decline of Belatu-Cadros' fortress, nothing could have been more natural than to turn to her Shadow. She sent Silmarien down in secret to replace the old second-in-command, to observe the situation and rectify it. Given the ragged state of the Region's forces, few questioned the arrival of a half-elf as anything more than another sign of the fortress's diminution.

Silmarien has dwelt below ground for six months now, and the situation is little ameliorated from when she first arrived. Silmarien's patience and temper are wearing thin, and she knows there is no easy solution to be had. She is deeply suspicious of Jolinaar's presence in the fortress, as something about him sets off instincts honed by years of operating in the shadows. She has no proof of his wrongdoings, but she keeps her eye on him nonetheless.

Her relations with Jacan Lightshield are uneasy at best; the paladin's behavior has become extremely erratic around her. At times, it seems as if Jacan wishes to court her; at others, he apparently cannot abide her presence. Silmarien's distrust of Jacan's best friend only increases the discord. For the sake of the troops, she deals with this by minimizing the amount of time she must spend in his presence. She likewise spends as little time as possible around Enoriel, finding him to be arrogant, rigid, and condescending. She is on reasonable terms with Gurthang and his cadre, however, and quietly finds ways to put them to the kind of work they were meant for.

Silmarien is on good terms with most of the non-human residents of the Region. She spares time to chat with the dryads and gossip with the nymphs, thus ensuring that she is one of the most well-informed people in the Region. She also consults with Malachi on a regular basis; he is the sole being here who is aware of her true mission, and she respects and trusts his advice.

Silmarien is entirely willing to use the PCs to fulfill her mission; she is savvy enough to know that outsiders can see things that someone more entrenched in a situation cannot, and is ready and willing to take advantage of the chaos caused by the unknown element.

Skills: +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks. An elf who merely passes within 5 feet of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if she were actively looking for it.

Possessions: Elven chain mail, light shield, Uniform cloak (+2 circumstance bonus to Hide checks in Region H), bronze cloak clasp, long sword, masterwork long bow, 21 obsidian tipped arrows (3 masterwork).

H20. SHIELD WALL — INNER RAMPARTS

The shield fortress reaches a good sixty ft. into the air, curving around on the eastern side to form a jagged "L." Protective crenellations top the stone bulwarks on all sides, allowing the fortress' defenders to stand against foes from all directions. At the foot of the fortress, cradled in the curve of the "L," a gnarled and twisted oak has taken root, its branches rising a mere twenty ft. high.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent to Unfriendly

Encounter: The shield wall was carved from an ancient mass of granite protruding through the cavern floor. The first corps of dwarven engineers built the ramparts high and strong enough to stand off armies. The northern approach looks over friendly territory, but any intruders trapped between the shield wall and the southern protuberance of the central mount would, under ideal circumstances, be raked on both sides by arrows and spells.

The shield wall is usually manned by no more than six wood elf guards (hp 33 each), and their attention is divided between the inner and outer ramparts, though through long habit, they watch more for the inevitable desertions than for an enemy that has never come. As a consequence, PCs sneaking past the shield wall's northern ramparts suffer a -2 circumstance penalty to Hide and Move Silently checks.

The oak tree at the foot of the fortress was planted there when the fortress was built, and its growth was encouraged by the druids that tend the fortress. The tree serves as one of the two teleport foci in Region H, but is also strategically placed to allow druids to reach the fortress quickly via tree stride. The oak also helps conceal the secret door that is the only entrance to the rampart. A successful DC 30 Search check reveals the door, which is cunningly worked into the stone of the fortress. The door is made of stone, is faintly magical, and is keyed to the elven troops' cloak-broaches (see the "Elven Troops" sidebar).

■ Stone Entry Door: 6 in. thick; Hardness 8; hp 90; break DC 30; Open Locks DC 30.

All corridors inside the fortress are 10 ft. wide unless otherwise specified. A single corridor stretches about 25 ft. from the door, ending in a T-junction with the main hall. Great doors of copper-banded stone lie against either wall; as needed, the elves can bar the entry corridor and prevent hostiles from going any deeper into the fortress.

■ Interior Doors: 6 in. thick; Hardness 8; hp 90; break DC 34; Open Locks DC 30.

The main corridor runs east-west, bisecting the fortress. Two sets of spiral staircases at either end are the only access points to the upper ramparts; each staircase is 5 ft. wide. Small storage rooms are carved into the rock at irregular intervals, containing food, water, and replacement weapons. Other rooms are rough barracks; currently unused, they are meant to shelter off-duty soldiers under siege. A rather larger armory is located in the northward protrusion of the fortress, along with a bare-bones blacksmith's forge.

The upper ramparts are deep gashes carved into the face of the rock, providing elven archers a covered walkway flanked by a crenellated waist-high wall. These ramparts extend around the outside of the entire fortress. The walls have been carved into a sheer vertical face and are polished making them intentionally impenetrable. However, neglect has roughened the surface some, and it may be possible, after considerable study, for someone to climb the outside. Such a feat requires a successful DC 30 Climb check for every 15 ft. of upward movement.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Cover

Tactics: The shield wall garrison does not attack the PCs unless they initiate conflict. If the PCs are spotted approaching more-or-less openly, the elves call for them to halt and stand to negotiate (in this case, treat the elves as Indifferent). If the PCs are spotted trying to infiltrate through stealth, the elves punctuate their words with a well-placed warning shot, and demand that they turn back (treat the elves as Unfriendly).

If hostilities break out, the archers in the tower concentrate arrow fire on the PCs, while calling for reinforcements. Pardek Mirror eyes (Room H10) teleports in within 2d4 rounds, and provides spell support from the upper ramparts. Silmarien Meliambre (Room H19) arrives within 1d3 rounds and immediately takes command, providing the elven troops a +2 morale bonus to their attack rolls. A four-man squad of wood elf guards and a group of four wild elf druids arrive within 2d6 rounds to provide further reinforcements.

H21. SHIELD WALL, OUTER RAMPARTS

A granite edifice stretches across the southern border, at least a hundred paces long and easily ten times the height of a man. Its immense outer bulwark was long ago planed and polished into a sheer, slightly outward-leaning drop, punctuated at the top by darker crenellations. Its shadow brings back echoes of the rest of the cavern, dark since the structure's size blocks all sources of light save the hints of twilight that slip around the edges. Nothing grows on the rough expanse of rock and sand that stretch out beneath the shield wall, in the darkness.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent to Unfriendly

Encounter: The southern approach to the shield wall is a field of volcanic rock covered by sparse, hardy grasses and scrub, rugged enough to slow both infantry and cavalry but flat enough to provide enemies little cover.

The shield wall is manned by no more than six wood elf guards (hp 32 each), and their attention is turned both inward and outward. Through long habit, they watch more for the inevitable desertions than for an enemy that has never deemed it fit to come. Because of this distraction, PCs that approach from the southeastern corner may be able to sneak past the shield wall. PCs gain a +4 circumstance bonus to Hide and Move Silently checks made for the purposes of avoiding the notice of the shield wall's guards.

The southern wall counts as a sheer vertical surface that is impossible to climb.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment, Cover

Tactics: The shield wall garrison does not attack the PCs if they do not attack first. If the PCs are spotted approaching more-or-less openly, the elves call for them to halt and stand to negotiate (in this case, treat the elves as Indifferent). If the PCs are spotted while infiltrating the encampment through stealth, the elves punctuate their words with a well-placed warning shot, and demand that they turn back (treat the elves as Unfriendly).

If hostilities erupt, the archers in the tower concentrate arrow fire on the PCs, while calling for reinforcements. Pardek Miroreyes (Room H10) teleports to Room H20 within 2d4 rounds, and provides spell support from the upper ramparts. Silmarien Meliambre arrives within 1d3 rounds from Room H19 using her ring of tree stride and immediately takes command, providing the elven troops a +2 morale bonus to their attack rolls. A four-man squad of wood elf warriors (hp 25 each) and a group of four wild elf druids (hp 46 each) arrive within 2d6 rounds to provide further reinforcements from Room H20.

H22 THROUGH H25. THE EASTERN PALE

Rooms H22 through H25 comprise the Eastern Pale, the area well inside the Region's outer defenses. The defenses here were built before the elves realized that the eastern boundary of their Region lies along the eastern wall of the dungeon; thus, there is little danger of any attack from the east. The defenses are maintained in a desultory manner, as a possible invasion from the south could curl around the southern shield wall and proceed north between the central mount and the eastern plateau, but few now believe that is likely.

Thus the ancient fortifications crumble. Grass and flowers grow under the warming light of the eye atop the Council Spire. The fey folk cavort in the "moonlight" of an evening beneath the starless sky. It appears the very picture of serenity... but beneath this veneer of careless ease lies an uncomfortable stillness, an indefinable ill will. If this is peace, it is an uneasy one.

H22. ABANDONED WATCHTOWER

As one approaches the long-broken stalagmite, the tower's decay becomes painfully obvious: the door hangs slightly askew, the rough-worked façade crumbles, the arrow-slits are overgrown by hanging creepers. Ivy works its way into the cracks and crannies at the tower's base, and colorful mushrooms are scattered about the tower in a ring.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This tower lies underused by the elves, as it is well within the area that the elves consider safe. They have left it to decay. It has long been occupied by a band of grigs (hp 9 each) and pixies (hp 10 each) who enjoy playing practical jokes on newcomers to the fortress. Most elves, having fallen prey to the pranksters on their own arrival, deliberately neglect to warn neophyte troops about them. In fact, it has become somewhat of a rite of passage to send a patrol of green troops to sweep the tower and face the consequences. As far as the sprites are concerned, the ring of mushrooms about the tower is fair warning that all may not be as it appears.

The external door to the tower is not difficult to discern; it is closed, but neither barred nor locked. The interior doors suffer from dry rot, the stairs are not entirely reliable, and every surface is covered with dust or the slow-growing molds endemic to caverns. However, PCs may not recognize this at first, as the pixies cast permanent image upon the interior of the tower, changing its appearance in any of a number of ways. They are known to make the inside of the tower appear as if those entering have stepped outside; this is particularly amusing when the unwary smack into the invisible walls. Another favorite theme is a cartoonish mockery of Hell, complete with gigantic fountains of fire, ribbon-like rivers of lava, and gibbering, laughing imps.

PCs can extricate themselves from the situation in several ways; through the use of the Bluff skill (opposed by the sprites' Sense Motive skill), through the Diplomacy skill (PCs that successfully raise the sprites' attitude to Friendly are considered to have 'passed'), or somehow managing to beat the faeries at their own game.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Concealment, Cover, Safe

Tactics: PCs that take the practical jokes in jest are applauded and offered thimble-sized cups of potent feywine. Those that take the jokes poorly are razed and driven back out of the tower using irresistible dance. Those that attack the sprites, however, find that their foes are potent despite their nano size.

Both pixies and grigs possess the capacity to make themselves invisible at will, and this is one of their favorite tactics. Pixies remain invisible while attacking, and if forced to enter melee combat, use this to their greatest advantage. Grigs become visible when attacking, but generally don't care; they fearlessly swarm larger creatures.

Pixies vanish from sight as soon as possible and cast lesser confusion on any fighters in the group. Once they have done so, they fly out of easy reach and pelt the spellcasters with sleep arrows. One pixie usually casts detect evil; evil creatures become targets for the pixies' memory loss arrows. Grigs prefer to entangle their foes, then retreat into the air out of ready reach, blind the enemy with pyrotechnics, then attack with bow and arrows.

H23. SUPPORT COLUMN

This towering column of stone reaches toward the roof of the cavern, stretching far outside the range of ordinary sight. Gray striations ripple through the stone where throughout eons, the dripping water laid down layer upon layer of minerals leached from the world above. What at first appears to be a slender vine twining up the column like a rose on a trellis is, upon closer inspection, revealed to be a staircase easily the width of a man, small only in comparison to the behemoth it encircles. Smaller tendrils sprout at irregular intervals, interlacing in a lattice pattern along the vine's outer edge.

At the very limit of unassisted vision appears a faint widening of the column and the shadow of something predatory, more sensed than seen. Beyond that, only the sharpest of eyes can make out faint sparkles of light, like stars in the darkness extending infinitely upwards.

Encounter: This is one of the few remaining natural columns in the Region; most of the columns that once supported the cavern ceiling were destroyed long ago by the derro excavations that caused the collapse. Now, in addition to bolstering what remains of the cavern roof, it supports large landing platforms for the elves' aerial steeds that function as way stations for troops to rest their mounts during the grueling flights to and from the surface. The stone pillar also mounts many of the mirrors used to channel light into the darkness. Its dissolution would be disastrous for the beleaguered elven fortress.

Diantha, the erinye (Room H12 and "The Fallen Angel" sidebar), is counting on just that. She has coaxed the band of sprites that she has charmed into subtly weakening the column, then hiding the damage beneath a permanent image. Since no one in the elven fortress expects the column to be damaged, no one has so far considered doubting the illusion and why would they want to? The trail is further muddled by a tradition that grew in the long years of the elven occupation: upon their departure from the fortress, an elven trooper carves his sigil into the rock.

Once the column is sufficiently weakened and her other plans come to fruition, Diantha targets the stone columns with a well-placed shatter spell. In the ensuing chaos, she garners her escape.

PCs affected by a true seeing spell have no problem perceiving the damage. Likewise, a PC touching the stone has a 15% chance of feeling one of the cracks, as permanent image does not include the sense of touch. Finally, dwarven PCs have a 50% chance of sensing weaknesses in the stone due to their stonecunning ability. Otherwise, PCs should have no reason to disbelieve the illusion.

Beneath the illusion, several long, deep cracks gouge into the column's surface. In places, it appears as if the stone was struck a sharp hammer-blow, radiating damage in a web pattern. However, when the PCs first arrive in Region H, the damage is not yet enough to doom the stone column.

The damage can be repaired by use of the spells make whole or stone shape. The damage is sufficient to weaken the supports for the staircase leading up to the first landing platform. PCs that attempt the climb are likely to discover the sabotage at the worst possible moment.

H24. SUPPORT COLUMN

A column of stone stretches upward, disappearing into the eternal night of the cavern. Here and there, points of light flicker along its length like fireflies. A wide staircase, narrow only in comparison to the behemoth supporting it, spirals around the stone pillar.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This is the second-largest of the Region's natural columns, similar in size and purpose to the column in Room H23. This support column has also been damaged, and the damage hidden beneath a permanent image.

PCs affected by a true seeing spell have no problem perceiving the damage. Likewise, a PC touching the stone has a 15% chance of feeling one of the cracks, as permanent image does not include the sense of touch. Finally, dwarven PCs have a 50% chance of sensing the weakness in the stone due to their stonecunning ability. Otherwise, PCs should have no reason to disbelieve the illusion.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Beneath the illusion, several long, deep cracks have been gouged into the column's surface. Again, as in Room H23, when the PCs first arrive in Region H, the damage is not yet enough to doom the stone column.

The damage can be repaired by use of the spells make whole or stone shape. The sabotage to this column has weakened the moorings that hold the great mirrors on the column. Any creature that climbs the staircase sends vibrations through the stone, causing one of the mirrors to be cast loose. Creatures within 40 ft. of the base of the column when the mirror hits ground suffer 6d8 damage from razor-sharp flying shards (Reflex save DC 20 for half damage).

H25. SHARMIANA'S TOWER

This tower appears significantly more weathered than those on the southern or western fronts. It rises from a sea of flowers, wrapped in ivy's clinging vines. The greenery has inserted tendrils into every tiny crevice on the tower's surface and exploited them ruthlessly, widening them into cracks, taking hold of the stone in a grip impossible to break. Flowers curl invitingly around the old arrow-slits, now widened by time and the ivy's relentless onslaught.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: This tower was claimed by Sharmiana (hp 54), queen of the fey, when the elven troops ceased to garrison it. With a few judicious spells, she turned the forbidding watchtower into an ivy-covered bower, and now makes her dwelling here.

The inside of the tower is as green as the outside; flowering vines twine up the banisters of the staircase and creep up the walls. The floors are carpeted in fresh flower petals, and the air is somehow crisp and clean. Despite appearances, the stairs are perfectly safe, and there are no doors to bar the way to the second level, although a curtain of rose vines blocks the staircase to the third floor. The second floor is likewise carpeted in flowers, and rough, irregular windows have been carved in the walls, letting in the light from outside. At the far end of the room, a beautiful woman sits in a simple wooden chair garlanded in ivy and roses, surrounded by a band of pixies (hp 9 each) and grigs (hp 8 each) perched on the walls and sprawled on the floor.

Sharmiana is a nymph of surpassing beauty and unknown age. Her complexion rivals the finest porcelain, her eyes are green pools in which wisdom and youth intermingle, all crowned by the silver-gilt hair which falls in a shimmering cascade to pool at her feet. Even when her true, blinding beauty is suppressed, she seems almost to glow.

Sharmiana receives visitors warmly, engaging them in pleasant conversation. She seeks their opinion of the elven fortress, and gently teases out their reasons for being in the Region. A DC 20 Diplomacy check or appropriate role-play raises her disposition from Friendly to Helpful, and she decides she can trust the PCs. At this point in the conversation, she asks for their assistance in a small matter. A band of sprites in the western part of the Region, she confides, seems to be indulging in somewhat more destructive tricks than are their usual wont, and they are avoiding the rest of their fellows. She asks the PCs to investigate for her and find the source of the corruption. "I know it is a small thing, compared to the other ills besetting this poor place, but my children are dear to me, and I would not see them fall to the darkness." (See sidebar "The Fallen Angel" for more information.)

Sharmiana cannot offer anything material as payment for the PCs' assistance, but in return for their assistance, she offers them whatever magical healing they may need.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Sharmiana seems frail, but if attacked is a formidable opponent. As a free action, she activates blinding beauty, then casts barkskin on herself. She then casts heat metal and rusting grasp spells against fighters; spellcasters she stuns with a stunning glance. If severely outnumbered or severely wounded, Sharmiana uses dimension door to seek safety in the Council Spire (Room H40).

Both pixies and grigs possess the capability to make themselves invisible at will, and this is one of their favorite tactics. Pixies remain invisible while attacking, and if forced to enter melee combat, use this to their greatest advantage. Grigs become visible when attacking, but generally don't care; they fearlessly swarm larger creatures.

Pixies vanish from sight as soon as possible and cast lesser confusion on any fighters in the group. Once they have done so, they fly out of easy reach and pelt the spellcasters with sleep arrows. The grigs prefer to entangle their foes, then retreat into the air out of easy reach, blind the enemy with pyrotechnics, then attack with bow and arrows. If Sharmiana is wounded, the sprites seek to delay the PCs long enough for her to dimension door to safety.

H26. MALACHI'S LAIR

The shadows cast against the escarpment of the plateau by the great support columns swallow the light for several feet to either side of an opening in the rock, so the tendency of the eye to exaggerate the light between them is understandable. A second look suggests something more; the smaller pillars that flank the opening cast shadows that point the wrong direction to be cast by the central "sun". On even closer examination, the pattern of light on the stone ripples gently in response to the merest breath. The lucent columns seem to have been subtly shaped to suggest a myriad of shapes with only the palette of light and shadow.

The cavern itself is a wonder, pellucid columns shimmering in the soft luminescence. Columns of cloudy alabaster have been carved by a master's touch into fantastic shapes, revealing the hidden treasures within. The ceiling, a good fifteen ft. high, is scalloped by tissue-thin fans of gold-veined stone. A nymph is caught in the midst of an eternal bath in rippled crystal, her hand outstretched to a bird with plumage limned by the pigments of the stone. A delicately winged faerie dances suspended only by ribbons of stone as fine as silk.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Few visit Malachi (95 hp) in his lair of late; he has fallen out of favor with the head of the Council. Where once the elven elders were pleased to listen to his words of wisdom, now his words fall upon deaf ears. Even his friend and Council ally, Sythiss, has retreated into his own dark corner. From his lair, Malachi observes all that occurs around him with leonine patience. And, even if his advice is not heeded, he can still perform some small service for the elven fortress — under his watch, fewer of the prized aerial steeds have disappeared.

The cavern which he has made his lair bears his mark — Malachi is a gifted sculptor and, over the centuries, has patiently worked many of the columns and stalagmites into works of art that any king would be proud to own, could they be moved.

PCs that express admiration for his sculptures receive a +2 circumstance bonus to their Diplomacy checks; while Malachi is not ordinarily swayed by flattery, like all artists he appreciates the occasional compliment. If PCs raise Malachi's disposition to Friendly, he can be persuaded to give them some information on the inhabitants of the Region. Of his fellow Council members, he says little beyond describing their faces and duties — he feels it is not his place to speak ill of his co-governors. If the PCs seek further information, he suggests that they speak to the second in command of the fortress, Silmarien Meliambre, who can usually be found at the command post in Room H19, and who (he says) he trusts implicitly.

If the PCs succeed in raising his disposition to Helpful, they have gained a potent ally. Malachi does not ordinarily leave the Region, but like any other full member of the Council, he can grant permission for the PCs to remain as long as they wish, and to leave and return at will. If he does so, he extracts a promise in return: he is deeply concerned by the malaise affecting the elven fortress, and requests that the PCs look into the problem. He believes that someone or something is actively working to divide elf from non-elf, old from young, warrior from druid, and that perhaps the PCs, as outsiders, can perceive what those in the midst of the situation cannot.

PCs that accidentally harm one of Malachi's sculptures reduce his Attitude by one step, and, unless his Attitude is Hostile, he politely asks them to leave his cavern. He may speak to them at another time, once he has repaired the damage. PCs that deliberately harm or destroy one of the sculptures shift his Attitude to Hostile. Once Malachi's Attitude reaches Hostile, he demands the PCs leave and he does everything in his power to make the PCs unwelcome in the elven fortress.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Poor Footing 3

Tactics: Malachi is a formidable foe. He emanates a magic circle against evil in a 20-ft. radius around himself. He is larger than an ordinary lammasu, but is not overly encumbered by his bulk. The cavern is easily large enough to accommodate him, and he fights equally well in close quarters or open air.

H26 THROUGH H27. THE EASTERN PLATEAU

The Eastern Plateau consists of rooms H26 and H27. The plateau stretches east and south beyond the reach of the light for some distance, where it ultimately terminates in the dungeon wall. Grass grows thickly atop the small mesa, turning brown and sere in the perpetual twilight at the edge of the Region, and ultimately dwindling as the light fails. The top of the plateau is used as a corral for the few aerial mounts remaining to the elven fortress. Below the plateau in a small cave lives Malachi, a lammasu dedicated to protecting Belatu-Cadros.

However, if his enemies outnumber him while he is in his lair, he dimension doors directly upward; 500 ft. above the floor of the cavern, he casts greater invisibility, bull strength, entropic shield and divine favor. Thus fortified, he drops to spellcasting range and targets holy smite in the midst of his enemies. Then, he re-enters melee combat, raking his opponents in flyby attacks. Malachi prefers to attack evil spellcasters or clerics first, then turn his attention to the warriors supporting them.

PCs casting dimension door are redirected to the teleport point outside Room H20; Malachi avoids this through his centuries of experience in the Region and can cast dimension door normally.

Treasure: If Malachi's sculptures could be safely removed from the cavern (requires a DC 30 Craft (sculpture) check or a DC 35 Profession (mining) check; dwarves have a +4 circumstance bonus to these rolls due to their stonemaking ability), they would each fetch several thousand gold for the rarity of materials and fine craftsmanship. (Of course, the PCs would first have to smuggle the sculptures out past a fortress of angry elves and an even angrier lammasu.) Destroying the sculptures outright frees the equivalent of 2d4 gp per sculpture in fragile gold foil, likewise triggers their creator's wrath.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase Malachi's hit dice to 13. To decrease the challenge, reduce his hit dice to 9.

THE UNCERTAIN GUARDIAN

Malachi is old, so old that he has forgotten his age. He is one of the few remaining original inhabitants of the fortress, and is profoundly distressed at the garrison's slow decline. A scholar and an artist by nature, he wears the form of a warrior, and the dichotomy between the two is the cause of many sleepless nights, as he struggles to reconcile body and soul.

Age has not withered him: only a few silver strands thread themselves through his fiery mane, and the russet and gold of his wings echo the colors of his mane and pelt. Powerful muscles and razor-sharp claws proclaim their readiness to launch into battle at an instant's notice, if need be, yet the crags of his face suggest a gentleness belied by his warlike form. He pays close attention when someone speaks to him, watching them with his catlike golden eyes, but his hand-claws constantly worry a piece of stone into a small sculpture. He frequently surprises his visitors by presenting them the results (a rough bust of one of them, for example) as a small gift.

Malachi would be content to retire and attend to his sculpting, but he is all too aware that, if matters continue as they are, the fortress will fall and him with it. He knows there is a threat to the fortress and the safety of Belatu-Cadros. He suspects that the disappearances are due to more than desertions, and offers as proof the fact that in several months, no one has made an attempt to steal an aerial steed. Jacan Lightshield dismisses his concerns — he believes the deserters are becoming more subtle, simply leaving the Region to seek other exits to the dungeon.

Malachi's friends in the fortress are, unfortunately, few. Sythiss, the naga, he counts as a friend, but Sythiss' behavior has become erratic, and the naga has withdrawn into his own lair. The troops, for the most part, fear him — his presence beneath the corral plateau is an effective deterrent to would-be thieves, but such unreasoning fear discomfits the gentle lammasu. Enoriel is becoming more and more blatant about his belief in the inferiority of non-elves, which makes it almost impossible for Malachi to be an effective member of the ruling Council. Jacan considers the lammasu to be an alarmist, overly concerned about things that aren't his responsibility such as the morale of the troops, or the cause of the disappearances.

Malachi is aware of Silmarien Meliambre's true mission, and wholeheartedly supports it, but does not himself actively pursue the root of the malaise for fear of unintentionally sabotaging her efforts. Nonetheless, he keeps his eyes and ears open, and provides her what assistance he may.

Ultimately, Malachi is a tragic figure — he knows there is rot within the fortress, but he has no proof of who or what is causing the decay. Without proof and with few friends, he cannot take action. Too much contemplation is eroding his ability to make the hard, instant decisions that will be required of him should the garrison self-destruct.

H27. PLATEAU CORRAL

The tableland slopes gently upward to the southeast. At the very edge of the darkness, the gentle slope takes a sharp upturn and, abruptly, becomes the cavern wall. No fences disturb the gently waving grasses of the plain; the only boundary is created by the failing light. The plateau is large enough to allow a large herd of creatures to roam free, but a quick glance reveals only a few winged beasts — certainly not enough to carry the full garrison.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: The garrison's few remaining aerial steeds are corralled on the southeastern plateau to protect them from deserters. Upon the northern half of the plateau, a hippogriff (hp 52) and a mated pair of griffons (hp 85 each) maintain an uneasy truce. To the south, two pegasi (hp 68, 51) — one golden, one black — keep close watch upon the carnivores to the north. Along the edge of the plateau nests a giant eagle (hp 78), and in the shadows to the southeast, a solitary giant owl (hp 74) makes its perch on an outcrop of the cavern wall.

Griffons and hippogriffs are not terribly intelligent, although trainable. They are well-trained and do not attack the other mounts unless they are maddened, frightened, or charmed. However, an intruder who wishes to sneak close enough to madden, frighten, or charm the less-intelligent beasts first has to avoid the notice of the giant raptors and the pegasi, who are fully as intelligent as an average human.

The griffons and hippogriffs are trained to recognize the badges of the elven troops and allow anyone wearing the badge to mount and ride them. If a PC does not wear an elven badge, but approaches one of these creatures, it avoids being mounted. Further attempts cause the war-trained creatures to attack the PCs. If the PC actually manages to mount an aerial steed, the creature abruptly takes off, gains several hundred ft. in altitude, then dislodge its unwanted rider.

The giant eagle and giant owl are not only much more intelligent than their bestial near-kin, but are fluent in Common and Sylvan, and may be negotiated with. The giant eagle is Enorie's animal companion, and cannot be persuaded to allow another to ride him. However, (provided that PCs have received permission from the elves) if PCs can raise the giant owl's disposition to Friendly through a successful Diplomacy check and provide a compelling reason, the owl consents to bear one or two of the PCs.

The pegasi are not among the pool of common mounts. The golden pegasus, Zephyr, is Jacan Lightshield's mount, and possesses all the abilities of a paladin's mount. The black pegasus, Aquila, is Silmarien Meliambre's animal companion. Neither pegasus allows itself to be ridden by anyone other than their chosen rider.

The PCs may believe that the flying mounts represent a safe and easy way out of the cavern. The DM should disabuse them of this notion. PCs that venture into this room with the intention of stealing the aerial steeds face massive resistance from all quarters. For the elven troops, the few remaining mounts are their lifeline to the surface — their only link between them and their surface home. The elves will fight tooth-and-nail to protect them from marauders.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Extended training and near-human intelligence allow the aerial steeds to work in concert to drive off intruders. The hippogriff pair takes to the air immediately to execute their typical diving rakes, driving them into the claws of the griffon, who remains on the ground and pounces. If the creatures are attacked during the day, the giant eagle enters the fray, driving its opponents toward the edge of the plateau. During the night, the owl stoops silently upon the hostile PCs, grappling them one at a time and dropping them from a considerable height.

Within a round of a fight breaking out, Malachi comes to the defense of the aerial steeds from Room H26. Elven reinforcements arrive from nearby rooms at approximate three-round intervals after that.

Skills and Feats: Diplomacy +3, Listen +8, Sense Motive +9, Spot +8; Flyby Attack, Iron Will.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will — detect good and detect evil within a 60-foot radius. Caster level 5th.

Empathic Link (Su): Lightshield has an empathic link with his mount out to a distance of up to 1 mile. The paladin cannot see through the mount's eyes, but they can communicate empathically.

Note that even intelligent mounts see the world differently from humans, so misunderstandings are always possible.

Because of this empathic link, Lightshield has the same connection to an item or place that her mount does, just as with a master and his familiar (see Familiars).

Improved Evasion (Ex): When subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, Zephyr takes no damage if it makes a successful saving throw and half damage if the saving throw fails.

Share Spells: At Lightshield's option, he may have any spell (but not any spell-like ability) he casts on herself also affect Zephyr.

Zephyr must be within 5 feet at the time of casting to receive the benefit. If the spell or effect has a duration other than instantaneous, it stops affecting the mount if it moves farther than 5 feet away and will not affect the mount again even if it returns to the paladin before the duration expires. Additionally, Lightshield may cast a spell with a target of "You" on her mount (as a touch range spell) instead of on herself. A paladin and her mount can share spells even if the spells normally do not affect creatures of the mount's type (magical beast).

Command (Sp): Six times per day, Zephyr can use this ability to command other any normal animal of approximately the same kind as itself (for warhorses and warponies, this category includes donkeys, mules, and ponies), as long as the target creature has fewer Hit Dice than the mount. This ability functions like the command spell, but the mount must make a DC 21 Concentration check to succeed if it's being ridden at the time. If the check fails, the ability does not work that time, but it still counts against the mount's daily uses. Each target may attempt a Will save (DC 10 + 1/2 paladin's level + paladin's Cha modifier) to negate the effect.

Skills and Feats: Diplomacy +3, Listen +9, Sense Motive +9, Spot +9; Dodge, Flyby Attack, Iron Will.

Link (Ex): Silmarien can handle her animal companion as a free action, or push it as a move action, even if she doesn't have any ranks in the Handle Animal skill. The druid gains a +4 circumstance bonus on all wild empathy checks and Handle Animal checks made regarding an animal companion.

Share Spells (Ex): Silmarien's option, she may have any spell (but not any spell-like ability) she casts upon herself also affect her animal companion. The animal companion must be within 5 feet of her at the time of casting to receive the benefit. If the spell or effect has a duration other than instantaneous, it stops affecting the animal companion if the companion moves farther than 5 feet away and will not affect the animal again, even if it returns to Silmarien before the duration expires.

Additionally, Silmarien may cast a spell with a target of "You" on her animal companion (as a touch range spell) instead of on herself. Silmarien and her animal companion can share spells even if the spells normally do not affect creatures of the companion's type (animal).

H28 THROUGH H34. NORTHEAST QUADRANT

H28. DECAYED WATCHTOWER

This watchtower, on the far eastern edge of the elven-held lands, is extremely decrepit; the natural façade is crumbling, the foundations are cracked, and the entire tower leans precariously toward the northwest. The door hangs slightly askew in its frame; it will probably open, but the entire structure looks so unstable that a too-strong breath might knock it down.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This tower should be abandoned, considering its unsound state. Never particularly stable, it was badly damaged by a small swarm of earthquakes and has never been repaired. In the ordinary run of things, the tower would be deserted and ultimately either repaired or destroyed.

Unfortunately, political considerations mandate that the tower continue to be inhabited by at least a token force. Enoriel Lasatharian's grove is nearby, and he does not countenance abandoning the tower. Nor does he allow the dwarves to repair it; such stonework, he claims, is an affront to the god-tree. Under his gimlet eye, the elven troopers must keep up the appearance of holding the tower in force as a proper protection for Belatu-Cadros.

The external door to the tower is closed, but is not difficult to discern; a DC 15 Search check is sufficient to identify it. The door is neither barred nor locked. The interior doors suffer from dry rot, the stairs are not entirely reliable, and every surface is covered with dust or the slow-growing molds endemic to caverns. The four wood elf guards (hp 28 each) usually stationed in this tower step very carefully and pray that they are never attacked, for they are in as much danger from the tower as from an enemy.

For practical purposes, the bottom floor of the tower is relatively safe. Climbing the stairs requires a DC 14 Reflex save; on a failed save, the PC cannot make any headway against the odd angles in the tilted tower. On a critical failure, the PC's foot has broken through a rotted portion of the stairs; upon pulling his foot free, he takes 1d4 damage from splinters of wood and stone. Once on the second and third levels, PCs must move at half their normal movement rate. If they wish to move at their normal movement rate, they must succeed at a DC 18 Reflex save or slip and slide down to the floor's lowest point.

Tactics: The elves in this tower are not particularly interested in fighting; if they are attacked, they do their best to climb down to the first floor and exit the unstable tower. Once outside, they harass the PCs with cover fire while retreating toward Enoriel's Grove (Room H32).

H29. NORTHERN WATCHTOWER

The northern watchtower looks out over the dark mirror that is the northern lake. The scent of the air off the water is fishy and unpleasant, with the undertone of rotting things, and the watchtower seems a lonely sentinel against the unknown depths. Of all the watchtowers, this northern tower is the most obviously a guard tower, built of stone and mortar and not camouflaged in any way. It fairly bristles with activity, even in the middle of the night; men routinely walk patrols around the area, in squads of no fewer than three men.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This watchtower is well-maintained. The garrison in this tower is the most alert in the elven fortress due to the threat of the nearby lake. The lake to the north is known to be a haunt of lacedons and sahuagin, and the elves frequently have to slay an undead horror or a scaled water-denizen menacing the nixie colony (Room H31). The tower contains a double squad of wood elf warriors (hp 34 each) plus a garrison lieutenant (hp 57), and if they need further support, they can bring giral-lons up from the forest. However, the tower's response to PCs that approach over the lake tends to be shoot-first-ask-questions-later, and their reactions range from unfriendly to openly hostile to such intruders. Conversely, PCs that assist them in fending off an attack are regarded with a significantly improved disposition (raise disposition to Friendly). In other situations, while they are not overly friendly, the garrison here is willing to summon Silmarien Meliambre, the army's second-in-command, to negotiate with the PCs.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The garrison does not attack the PCs if they do not attack first. However, if hostilities break out, the archers in the tower concentrate arrow fire on the PCs while calling for reinforcements. Enoriel Lasathairian arrives from Room H32 via tree stride within 1d3 rounds to provide spell support. An additional squad of four wild elf troopers arrives within 1d6 rounds.

H30. SMALL DRYAD GROVE

Beyond the clear waters of the river, the forest curtain thins into a small clearing protected by an irregular ring of shrubs and saplings. A soft carpet of flowers covers the ground in a myriad of vibrant colors, all surrounding a large oak tree with three distinct trunks. Soft laughter wafts in on a warm breeze, echoed by giggles from the underbrush.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: The clearing is home to dryad triplers, bound to the three-in-one tree. Although identical in appearance, the sisters are very different in personality and preferences. The unwary person who threatens this tree finds himself in a great deal of trouble.

Tiphané (hp 50) is the eldest and fiercest of the three; she is extremely skilled with bow and arrow and does not hesitate to use it in defense of her tree or her sisters. She also loves to challenge others to archery contests; if she triumphs, the loser has to perform some small service for the three. If she loses, she takes the loss with good grace, offering something in return, such as healing from her sister Megareos or information on the elven lands.

Megareos (hp 52) is the middle sister; a druid, she is calm and deliberate in speech and manner, and regards Tiphané's antics with quiet amusement. She gauges the PCs carefully before revealing her presence, preferring to keep the true extent of her abilities hidden until need arises. She spends much of her time tending to the wild things within reach of her tree and only rarely seeks the company of people. From the lore of the dryads, Megareos has pieced together Lyonatar's Song of the Ravener (see sidebar "Lyonatar's Eye"; this song activates the eye's searing light ability), but does not share it with others unless she is certain they can be trusted to use it for the good of all.

Alecia (hp 34) uses her sorcerous skills to enhance the natural enchantments of a dryad. Where Tiphané is fierce and Megareos distant, Alecia is the very definition of alluring. She is as fickle as she is beautiful, and teases male and female PCs alike, never settling on a single person.

Tactics: If their tree is attacked, the three sisters are absolutely ruthless about protecting it. Tiphane hides amongst the tree branches, using her superior bowcraft to snipe at spellcasters. Alecia spends her enchantments on the weak-willed, turning the invaders against one another. Megareos intermingles natural dryad abilities with her druidic spells, turning the very ground against the invaders.

Further, the sisters have befriended a small company of five girallons (hp 56, 54, 54, 53, 51). When attacked, one of the three lets out a strange ululation, summoning the beasts to their defense. The company arrives within 1d4 rounds, savagely falling upon whatever might menace the dryads.

Favored Enemy (Ex): Tiphane has humans and undead as her favored enemies. She gains a +2 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks when using these skills against creatures of this type. Likewise, she gets a +2 bonus on weapon damage rolls against such creatures.

Swift Tracker (Ex): Tiphane can move at his normal speed while following tracks without taking the normal –5 penalty. She takes only a –10 penalty (instead of the normal –20) when moving at up to twice normal speed while tracking.

Wild Empathy (Ex): This power works like the druid's wild empathy class feature, except that the dryad has a +6 racial bonus on the check.

Woodland Stride (Ex): Tiphane may move through any sort of undergrowth (such as natural thorns, briars, overgrown areas, and similar terrain) at his normal speed and without taking damage or suffering any other impairment.

However, thorns, briars, and overgrown areas that are enchanted or magically manipulated to impede motion still affect her.

Trackless Step (Ex): Megareos leaves no trail in natural surroundings and cannot be tracked. She may choose to leave a trail if so desired.

Changing form (to animal or back) is a standard action and doesn't provoke an attack of opportunity.

H31. NIXIE RIVER MOUTH

Here, where the river pours into the lake, the ground is soft and marshy and the footing uneven. The fishy, unpleasant odor of the lake is much less noticeable here, replaced by the crisp, clean scent of freshly-running water.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: Here, the Crystalbrook runs into the lake forming the northern border of the elven Region. Nixies (hp 10 each) play in the clean waters, guarded by a pair of indulgent nymphs (hp 34, 32); they always keep a sharp eye to the north for lacedons or sahuagin.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If attacked, the nixies disappear beneath the surface of the lake; they are well aware that they cannot face a larger foe. The nixies use the run action to swim west to Room H29, where they summon the guard contingent to their aid. The guards from Room H29 arrive in 1d4 minutes. Meanwhile, the nymphs use their druidic spells and spell-like abilities to harass and slow attackers, retreating once the guards arrive.

EL: 11, 14 with reinforcements

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add another 8 HD nymph. To decrease the challenge, reduce the HD of both nymphs to 7.

✦ Nixie: CR 2; Small fey (aquatic); HD 3d6; hp 10; Init +3; Spd 20 ft., swim 30 ft.; AC 14, touch 14, flat-footed 11; Base Atk +1; Grp -5; Atk +5 melee (1d4-2/19-20, short sword) or +5 ranged (1d6/19-20, light crossbow); Full Atk +5 melee (1d4-2/19-20, short sword) or +5 ranged (1d6/19-20, light crossbow); SA Charm person; SQ Amphibious, damage reduction 5/cold iron, low-light vision, spell resistance 16, water breathing, wild empathy; AL N; SV Fort +1, Ref +6, Will +4; Str 7, Dex 16, Con 11, Int 12, Wis 13, Cha 18.

Charm Person (Sp): A nixie can use charm person three times per day as the spell (caster level 4th). Those affected must succeed on a DC 16 Will save or be charmed for 24 hours. Most charmed creatures are used to perform heavy labor, guard duty, and other onerous tasks for the nixie community. Shortly before the effect wears off, the nixie escorts the charmed creature away and orders it to keep walking. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Amphibious (Ex): Although nixies are aquatic, they can survive indefinitely on land.

Water Breathing (Sp): Once per day a nixie can use water breathing as the spell (caster level 12th). Nixies usually bestow this effect on those they have charmed.

Wild Empathy (Ex): This ability works like the druid's wild empathy class feature, except that a nixie has a +6 racial bonus on the check.

Skills and Feats: A nixie has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line. * Nixies have a +5 racial bonus on Hide checks when in the water.

Blinding Beauty (Su): This ability affects all humanoids within 30 feet of a nymph. Those who look directly at a nymph must succeed on a DC 18 Fortitude save or be blinded permanently as though by the blindness spell. A nymph can suppress or resume this ability as a free action.

The save DC is Charisma-based.

Typical Druid Spells Prepared (6/5/4/3/1, save DC 13 + spell level):

H32. ENORIEL'S GROVE

The trees in this grove are old, gnarled and twisted, and their canopies overhang the clearing, blocking the light. Thorny vines wrap around the ankles of the unwary and bramble-bushes grasp with needle-fingers at legs and cloaks. At every step, dried leaves crunch, stones turn beneath the feet, and branches whip at unprotected eyes.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Enoriel's grove is much like Enoriel himself, dark and hateful, the trees growing as twisted as his mind. PCs are at a -2 penalty to physical actions within the grove, as their very surroundings turn against them. Further, PCs suffer a -4 penalty when using the Diplomacy skill to adjust Enoriel's disposition (elven PCs find this penalty reduced to -2). Enoriel has little patience for intruders and especially resents being disturbed in his grove.

Although Enoriel is difficult to deal with, if the PCs manage to raise his disposition to Indifferent or better, he condescends to set them a task so that they may earn the fortress' shelter.

Enoriel is an old elf, thin and twisted with age. His gnarled hands grasp his staff as much for support as for comfort, and his long, yellow-white hair is constantly snarled with twigs and leaves. He does not appear concerned with the cleanliness of his robes; the various green layers bear more than one stain of dubious origin.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If Enoriel is attacked in his grove, he summons his animal companion to his aid (the giant eagle in Room H27). The eagle arrives in two rounds and harries the attackers while Enoriel casts stoneskin upon himself, then summons up a lightning storm (call lightning storm) to pound his opponents. If Enoriel is badly hurt, he uses the wind walk spell stored within his staff to escape to the Council Tower, where he summons the combined forces of the fortress to deal with the intruders.

Enoriel's growing senility and madness is represented by decreasing his Wisdom attribute. Once Enoriel's Wisdom drops below 11, he can no longer cast divine spells.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase Enoriel's druid level by two. To decrease the challenge, remove one spell per level (already cast for the day).

THE DERANGED DRUID

Enoriel Lasathairian has lived in the underground fortress for a very long time. He was a junior druid in the first contingent sent to fortify the Region and ensure the safety of the sacred tree, Belatu-Cadros. He has witnessed events from the opening of Lyonnatar's eye to the last attempt to clean out the tombs to the west. He has grown in power even as the fortress has aged, and in his deepest heart, he believes that his fate and the fortress' fate are linked.

Now, he is the High Druid of the fortress. First upon the Council and the final arbiter of what must be done to protect the Tree. Unfortunately, Enoriel's personality is not suited to the delicate balance of diplomacy and leadership required in the Council head. He has always been rigid, but now he is openly intolerant, inflexible in his beliefs and thoroughly convinced of his own rightness. Always temperamental, he has grown erratic of late, and some whisper that his mind is starting to slip. He has never gotten along well with those who were not of the purest elven blood, and his intolerance is driving large rifts in the Council.

If true, it would be one of Enoriel's darkest fears, and the one which he spends most of his time denying. His mind is as sharp as it ever was – otherwise, the fortress would be crumbling at his feet, or so he believes. Furthermore, an elf of his age and wisdom are entitled to a few eccentricities, not to mention the respect of his juniors. Or so he believes.

Unfortunately, Enoriel's mind is slipping. The fractures of age are becoming more pronounced, and he has a distinct tendency to view the fortress through the golden haze of long-past glories. When he does perceive the fortress' current parlous state, he blames its condition on everyone else, the weaklings who do not understand what needs to be done to protect the Tree, to maintain the fortress. He does not even acknowledge that even the spells he wields in all their fury are growing more and more difficult to summon to his hand.

In his growing madness, he has become convinced that the exquisite queen of the fey, Sharmiana (Room H25), is in love with him, and that he has both the right and the strength of will to look upon her full beauty and survive. This is a fiction conceived and perpetrated by the erinye Diantha, who seeks to push the aged druid farther and farther into senility. She has several times appeared to him in Sharmiana's guise, teasing him with words and looks, then disappearing. When she is around, he feels more himself, more clear of mind (helped along by subtle castings of owl's wisdom); when she is gone, all the doubts and cobwebs return to his mind. She has suggested some ways to cure the woes of the fortress, which Enoriel finds himself considering more and more. Blood makes things grow, after all...

Enoriel is on poor terms with the rest of the fortress. The common soldiers despise him for his madness and his inflexibility. Jacan Lightshield resents his meddling in military matters that he understands poorly, if at all. Enoriel himself has nothing but contempt for the non-elven members of the fortress. He believes that the fey are weak, and need protection; the naga and lammasu are incapable of understanding the needs of the fortress like a true elf, and Jacan is blinded by his strange heritage. Silmarien he loathes as a half-breed; Pardek he ignores as a mere arcanist.

Enoriel worships Belatu-Cadros, but has become frustrated by the Tree's silence. Surely he is worthy to hear the Tree's voice! Surely the Tree recognizes his worth, and his sacrifices, and his devotion! Once a week he goes to Belatu-Cadros' grove (Room H34), sends the guards away, and prostrates himself before the Tree, begging for a word which has, thus far, never come. He begins to think that it never will.

H33. SACRED SPRING

Clear water bubbles up from the rock, pouring out in a sparkling stream into a pond, then spilling north in a bubbling creek toward the lake. The spring waters are crystal-clear, yet the bottom of the spring cannot be detected.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: When the elves first began to build their underground fortress, it quickly became apparent that the lake to the north was not suited to providing a clean water source for the Region. Therefore, the High Druid at the time enacted a ritual, summoning up a clean spring from the depths of the earth. Over time, the spring overflowed, creating a river that runs north to the lake.

Water taken directly from the spring has inherent cleansing properties. When sprinkled over tainted food or drink, it acts as purify food and drink. For any given PC, it can remove disease or remove curse once — having done so, any further drinks from the spring are merely pure, refreshing water. The water loses these properties after eight hours, becoming merely pure water.

The spring is tended by a band of nixies (hp 10 each) and guarded by a pair of nymphs (hp 38, 34).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If attacked, the nixies disappear beneath the surface of the spring; they are well aware that they cannot face a larger foe. One of the nymphs tree strides to Belatu-Cadros' grove (Room H34), summoning help from the guards posted there; the other nymphs use their druidic spells to harass and slow attackers. The nymphs fall back once the guards arrive, but continue to use their spells to support the guards. The guards arrive in 4 rounds.

H34. BELATU-CADROS' GROVE

A peaceful silence settles comfortably around the grove; a ring of trees muffles noise. Several elves stand guard, half-hidden, among the outer ring of trees. A lush carpet of grass spreads inward, cushioning even the heaviest footfall. In the center stands an enormous tree, easily fifty ft. tall and twenty ft. in diameter. In the perpetual spring of the cavern, the tree's leaves are the soft green buds, and golden flowers are sprinkled along its branches.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This is the heart of the elven fortress. The grove of Belatu-Cadros, the tree that the elves hold holy and will lay down their lives to protect.

The elves do not allow the PCs free access to the grove; it is sacred ground. A full twelve elves (five wood elf guards [hp 38 each], six wild elf druids [hp 46 each], and a guard lieutenant [hp 58]) stand guard in the grove at all times, and additional defenders can be summoned at a moment's notice. To trespass here is tantamount to a death sentence, and the guards make the PCs aware of this (assuming the PCs are non-hostile).

If one of the Council has given the PCs permission to pay their respects to the Tree, they are required to enter the grove barefoot, unarmed and unarmored — the Grove is a temple of peace, and they are not allowed to profane the Grove with their bloodstained weapons. The elves who stand guard are sanctified by the High Druid, and are allowed to bear weapons in Belatu-Cadros' defense.

Belatu-Cadros (hp 150) does not speak to the PCs — it does not speak to anyone, and its thoughts remain its own. PCs that succeed on a DC 17 Wisdom check become aware of the uncomfortable feeling of being watched by something unseen, or at least unrecognized. The tree possesses a palpable presence.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs attack Belatu-Cadros, they incur the wrath of the entire garrison upon their heads. Every surviving NPC, major and minor, (with the exceptions of Diantha and Jolinaar) comes running to Belatu-Cadros' defense. Belatu-Cadros itself calls up the encircling ring of trees to guard it, while the elven guards hammer the invaders with sword, spell, and arrow. Further, the PCs suffer a -2 holy penalty for invading sacred ground, while the NPC defenders enjoy a +2 morale bonus.

If the PCs have been marauding along the edges of the Region, attacking the watchtowers and sapping the elven forces, the guard is tripled and Enoriel Lasathairian himself is present. However, in that case, there are no troop reinforcements other than surviving major and minor NPCs; the elven forces are thin-stretched even under the best circumstances.

Any battle taking place here spurs Diantha and Jolinaar to make their moves — Jolinaar casts greater invisibility, maneuvering to backstab Jacan Lightshield with Cutless. Meanwhile, Diantha exerts control upon Sythiss one final time, sending the naga against his friends. She then reveals herself in all her infernal glory, casting unholy blight, entangling spellcasters with her enchanted rope, and otherwise terrorizing the troops. Diantha and Jolinaar both allow the PCs to do the lion's share of the fighting, only to turn upon them (and each other) once the Tree and its defenders are destroyed.

Note: As the very heart of Region H and the entire reason for the fortress' existence, this encounter is intended to be almost impossible for a 10th to 12th level party to survive without taking extreme precautions beforehand to whittle down the forces facing them.

THE SACRED TREE

Belatu-Cadros is a celestial treant of indeterminate age — no one knows how old it is, and Belatu-Cadros itself does not count the seasons. Long ago, it settled in the Region above the dungeon to keep watch and prevent anything from penetrating the horrors below.

As the years passed, Belatu-Cadros settled into its duty, and into the soil. Perhaps it was age, perhaps the strange magics of the dungeon below leached into the rocks above, but Belatu-Cadros eventually found itself immobilized, as securely rooted as any tree. Although bound to a single place, it continued to grow, and kept its watch upon the upper ramparts of the dungeon.

Time wore on, and the remote corner of the world in which Belatu-Cadros lived became settled by elven refugees who had fled a great war. The elves considered the presence of such a holy being a good omen, and, over time, reverence turned into worship. The elves were the ones to give the treant its name, for it had never answered any question put to it.

In the darkest hour of a midwinter night, Belatu-Cadros spoke: "This is the first of the three and the depths shall open, and the people of the Star shall seek the darkness." Seers among the elven druids and wizards sought answers in the stars, in the woods, in the flickering of flames and in the running water. All the signs and portents pointed to a looming disaster, but none could say what it would be.

The questions were answered that spring, when the earth roared, trembled, yawned wide and swallowed Belatu-Cadros whole. Down, down into the darkness Belatu-Cadros fell... but, through some divine power, it did not die. And so the children of the star sought out the darkness in order to protect their sacred tree.

None knows who first spoke the prophecy surrounding Belatu-Cadros, save that it became known at around the same time that the Tree fell. "Let the Tree speak once: dawn falls into darkness. Let the Tree speak twice: the infernal vaults gape wide. Let the Tree speak thrice: let doom descend in fire." The Tree itself, of course, spoke neither to confirm or deny the prophecy, and the elves wondered when it would speak a second time, and what fate its words would herald.

Belatu-Cadros spoke again not long after Lyonatar finished creating the great Eye atop the Council Spire; again, his words rumbled out into the night. "This is the second of the three: let not the west swallow the sun." Three days later, a group of infernal horrors from the tombs to the west poured into the Region. Only the ravenous fire of the newly-created Lyonatar's eye allowed the elves to stand against them — but stand they did, driving the unholy creatures into utter defeat.

Belatu-Cadros has uttered nothing since, and the prophecy is long forgotten, save by a few elders. Enoriel once knew the prophecy, but whether he remembers it in his insanity, who can say? Malachi was present for both the first and second utterances, but does not himself speak of it. Meanwhile, the fortress decays as those within it succumb to dissension.

Belatu-Cadros is tired, and begins to wonder if it is time for it to speak a third time, time for it to bring its vigil to an end. The tombs to the west are silent, and the derro to the south appear to be no threat. The dungeon is cracked in two which is not his thought, so what remains of its duty? It knows the prophecy, but thus far, does not know what fire it will call down upon its head, and the heads of those who worship it.

However, thorns, briars, and overgrown areas that have been magically manipulated to impede motion still affect her.

This ability functions like the polymorph spell, except as noted here. The effect lasts for 1 hour per druid level, or until she changes back. Changing form (to animal or back) is a standard action and doesn't provoke an attack of opportunity.

The form chosen must be that of an animal the druid is familiar with.

A druid loses her ability to speak while in animal form because she is limited to the sounds that a normal, untrained animal can make, but she can communicate normally with other animals of the same general grouping as her new form. H35 THROUGH H40. COUNCIL SPIRE

An upthrust finger of rough-cut black basalt towers above the mountain of rubble that makes up the majority of the Region. Atop the tower is a diamond the size of a man's chest; it shines almost as brightly as the sun, as it sheds the light brought from above across the entire Region.

The Spire is the seat of the Council of Elders, and is the place where the business of governing the fortress is meant to take place. However, the Council does not meet often, and the day-to-day operations of the fortress are left to the disparate Council members. It is a situation rife with misunderstandings. Of late, not a day has gone by in which the leaders of the fortress have not squabbled over some inconsequentiality or another.

H35. COUNCIL SPIRE ENTRANCE

Great rock walls tower at the entrance to the Council Spire; it could be called a tunnel, save that it is open to the sky. The way is smooth and paved in slabs of the same black basalt of which the Spire is built, just rough enough for proper traction. Great doors of black stone bound in mithral stand twice the height of a man, by their very size forbidding entrance to the unworthy or the unwelcome.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: The approach to the Council Spire is designed for defense; elven warriors and druids, led by a guard lieutenant, stand atop the cliff faces to either side, ready to rain mayhem upon an attacker foolish enough to storm the Spire. The great basalt doors are cunningly wrought, bound with mithral and, when barred from within, are impassable.

In normal times, the doors are unbarred, and inhabitants of the fortress can enter the spire unhindered. The doors are not unguarded even when open, however. A symbol of death is worked into the intricate design of the inlaid silver, triggered by passing through the doorway or destroying the door. The symbol is keyed to the rank badges worn by the elven troops, and is not triggered by a PC wearing one of the badges (or a group escorted by such a PC). Destroying the door triggers the symbol despite the passkey.

▲ Permanent symbol of death Trap: CR 9; spell; location trigger; automatic reset (10 minutes); passkey bypass; spell effect (symbol of death); Fortitude DC 23 negates; Search 33, Disable Device 33.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs desire to force their way into the citadel, they first have to force the doors. Upon destroying the doors, the symbol of death triggers, with a burst radius of 60 ft. Meanwhile, the elven guards atop the walls attack the PCs with ranged weapons and area-effect spells. Druids at the southern opening use stone shape to block the PCs' retreat to the south, trapping them in a killing ground.

H36. SECRET ESCAPE TUNNEL

This tunnel is small and claustrophobic, and only the faintest hint of light creeps in from the far end. The rock walls are rough to the touch and the ground is uneven, requiring careful attention to one's feet.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: The escape tunnel leading directly north from the Council Spire is well-hidden. The northern exit is camouflaged by a permanent image hiding a door of rough-cut stone. The image replicates the appearance of the rest of the central mound, and PCs must succeed at a DC 25 Will save to disbelieve the illusion hiding the door.

Halfway down the tunnel is a permanent alarm spell, triggered by any passing creature. The spell triggers audible alarms in the elven barracks and in the northern watchtower. There are no provisions for bypassing the trap; escaping elves welcome the reinforcements summoned by the alarm spell.

The door into the Spire at the southern end of the tunnel is an exceptionally well-constructed secret door, made of the same basalt as the rest of the tower. The door cannot ordinarily be opened from the outside, but can be forced. Forcing the door triggers the glyph of warding worked upon it.

From inside the Spire, the door can be opened by any PC who steps on the flagstone in front of it, provided they are wearing one of the elven badges. The door is not hidden from the inside.

H37. COUNCIL SPIRE, 1ST FLOOR

The ivory marble walls reflect in muted colors the lights flickering along the ceiling. The intricate designs carved into the walls dance as the hues and shadows move. The polished black floor gives the impression of walking suspended above an abyss. Ahead, the hallway curves slightly to meet the great spiral staircase in the center of the tower, flanked by two elven guards in formal dress. Simple doors are set into both the east and the west walls of the foyer.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: There are normally only two guards (hp 43 each) in the foyer, and while they have the appearance of honor guards, they are also quite capable of holding the stair for reinforcements. The doors on either side of the hallway lead to the Spire's guardroom. There are always at least eight additional guards (hp 38 each) on duty in the guardroom, day in and day out. Ordinarily, it is a boring duty, and the guards in the guardroom are accustomed to playing cards or dice, reading, or otherwise whiling away the time. They are slow to react because of this.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If attacked, the two guards in the foyer raise the alarm and hold the stair while waiting for reinforcements. The soldiers in the guardroom do not emerge into the foyer for two full rounds. Once the reinforcements arrive, the elven troops flank the PCs, specially targeting the spellcasters first. At least one (if not two) of the guards leave the tower to seek further reinforcements from the guards outside in Room H36.

H38. COUNCIL SPIRE, 2ND FLOOR: JACAN'S QUARTERS

The second floor landing is immaculate; not a grain of dust mars the wood and stone. There are two doors that lead off the landing, but are closed and locked.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: The second floor of the Council Spire are traditionally the domain of the fortress' warleader — currently, Jacan Lightshield, paladin and commander. Jacan's living quarters reflect his personality, precise and meticulous. Jacan can be found in his quarters late in the evenings, after he has concluded his business for the day.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If Jacan is attacked in his own rooms, he responds with equal force. He seeks to hold his attackers at a doorway, to limit their maneuverability. THE WAVERING PALADIN

Rarely do those marked by the blood of the celestials have an easy path, but Jacan Lightshield's has been harder than most. As a young man, he felt the call to be a holy warrior, to take up sword and shield in the defense of good. His call led him to the north, where a small elven kingdom defended a sacred tree in the depths of a long-lost dungeon.

The elven realm was pleased to accept the assistance of a paladin, and Jacan went willingly into the dungeon's depths to pursue his calling and protect the sacred treant against the evils of the dungeon. For the first several years, as he established himself as a warrior and a commander, that seemed to be the path he was meant to tread.

As he grew older, however, the call of his blood changed, and he became convinced that he had not been brought to the fortress to protect a single tree, but to defeat the evils held therein. A prison once breached, he believed, would never again be able to truly hold its captives. He further argued that in taking arms against the fiends surrounding the Region to all sides would secure the Region's borders and reduce the forces threatening the Tree.

At first, he was able to sway most of the Council to his position. A force was assembled and placed under his command, and he led them north against the sahuagin. The expedition was a disaster — Jacan's force was fighting on the sahuagin's terrain, and the elves retreated in defeat. His second expedition against the derro to the south fared no better.

There was never a third expedition. The Council ruled that the elven forces should not take an active role against the evils of the other Regions, but instead should turn their efforts to fortifying their own small corner of the dungeon. Enoriel even suggested that if the elves did nothing more to anger the other denizens of the dungeon, that they would be left alone.

Jacan was forced to abide by the terms of the Council, though he disagreed with the decision. Perhaps it was that disagreement that prompted him some few years later to spare the life of a drow that had fled the Regions far to the northeast. The drow did not appear to be an evil creature, and swore an oath to Jacan that he would do no harm. Jacan, in turn, pledged to stand surety for the drow's actions, and there the matter stood. Over time, Jolinaar and Jacan became good friends, and Jolinaar made himself a place in the fortress through assisting Jacan in the day to day operations of the troops.

Today, Jacan's leadership abilities are openly questioned. He allows Jolinaar to handle administrative matters for the elven troops, and does not question it when Jolinaar suggests that the patrollers are deserting due to Enoriel's madness. He has first-hand experience with Enoriel's inexperience with military affairs, after all, and witnessed the druid's slow decline directly. He would trust Jolinaar with his life — indeed, he already has, given that his life is forfeit if the drow is ever caught perpetrating a crime.

Then, there is the matter of Silmarien. Jacan believes that Silmarien was sent to evaluate his command of the troops and, eventually, replace him. He bears her no ill will for that, as she is merely following orders. And, although he does not admit it, he finds himself attracted to the sword-sharp half-elf with the violet eyes.

He is more and more disturbed by the thought that his paladinic grace is deserting him. On several occasions he has perceived a great evil emanating from Silmarien — an aura that is decidedly absent on other occasions. He wonders if the fault is in her, or in himself? And if he doubts himself, what of the whispers surrounding his best friend? Has he been deceived?

Detect Evil (Sp): At will, Lightshield can use detect evil, as the spell.

Smite Evil (Su): Thrice per day, Lightshield may attempt to smite evil with one normal melee attack. He adds his Charisma bonus (+3) to her attack roll and deals 1 extra point of damage per paladin level. If the paladin accidentally smites a creature that is not evil, the smite has no effect, but the ability is still used up for that day.

Divine Grace (Su): Lightshield gains a bonus equal to her Charisma bonus (+3) on all saving throws.

Lay on Hands (Su): Each day Lightshield can heal 42 hit points of damage. Lightshield may choose to divide his healing among multiple recipients, and he does not have to use it all at once. Using lay on hands is a standard action.

Alternatively, a paladin can use any or all of this healing power to deal damage to undead creatures. Using lay on hands in this way requires a successful melee touch attack and doesn't provoke an attack of opportunity. The paladin decides how many of his daily allotment of points to use as damage after successfully touching an undead creature.

Aura of Courage (Su): Lightshield is immune to fear (magical or otherwise). Each ally within 10 feet of her gains a +4 morale bonus on saving throws against fear effects.

This ability functions while the paladin is conscious, but not if she is unconscious or dead.

Divine Health (Ex): Lightshield has immunity to all diseases, including supernatural and magical diseases.

Turn Undead (Su): Lightshield may turn undead. He may use this ability six times per day and turns undead as a 11th level cleric.

Remove Disease (Sp): Lightshield can produce a remove disease effect, as the spell, three times per week.

Daylight (Sp): Lightshield can use daylight once per day as a 14th-level caster.

H39. COUNCIL SPIRE, 3RD FLOOR (CAPTAIN'S OFFICES)

The rooms visible from the third floor landing are immaculate and polished to a high sheen. A sand table dominates a strategy room, maps neatly hanging on the walls. Through another door is an office, chairs placed at precise angles to one another and to the desk in front of them.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Jacan is usually to be found in his office, going over the hundred little details that a commander must deal with. He receives visitors coolly and with little apparent interest unless one of the visiting PCs is a cleric of one of the good-aligned deities. Then, he becomes much more animated, focusing his attention on the cleric.

If PCs can raise Jacan's disposition to Friendly through role-playing or successful Diplomacy checks, Jacan allows them to take refuge in the elven Region, though he requires that they perform a service for him. Jacan Lightshield is an imposing man near early middle age. He wears his burnished-gold hair cropped to fit beneath a helm; his strange eyes, the same shade as his hair, are a mark of his celestial ancestry. His silver-washed mail glows, proclaiming his holy calling for all to see.

Tactics: If Jacan is attacked in his own rooms, he responds with equal force. He seeks to hold his attackers at a doorway, to limit their maneuverability. If he cannot hold such a chokepoint, he positions himself to prevent flanking maneuvers. H40. COUNCIL SPIRE, 4TH FLOOR (COUNCIL CHAMBER)

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: The Council chamber is used infrequently in these latter days, as the Council does not meet as often as it once did. Given the resentments lingering between the primary Councilors, this may not be that unfortunate.

The Council chamber is also the one place from which Lyontar's eye may be safely operated. To use Lyontar's eye requires both the proper song and a full Council complement (see sidebar "Lyontar's eye").

Encounter Condition: N/A

Treasure: The crystals in the chandelier, if taken down and subjected to a DC 25 Appraise check, prove to be high-quality gemstones worth a combined total of 1,500 gps.

H41 THROUGH H44. SYTHISS' CAVERNS

H41. SYTHISS' LAIR

The warm air of this chamber reeks with mild decay and simple neglect. Lengths of translucent hide peek out from beneath small piles of sand and grit scattered about. Some of it has surely fallen from the walls, but far too much can be accounted for by that explanation. A few elongated bits of furniture are also present, quite obviously not designed for humanoid use.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Sythiss' (hp 110) main lair is a mess. The normally tidy naga, in a desperate attempt to convey the trouble he is in with Diantha, has left off cleaning for quite some time. Most times, Sythiss can be found either in this cavern or in his sand pit, attending to only his most basic needs.

Visitors to the lair are not terribly welcome, but neither are they chased away. Sythiss answers the PCs' questions, offering curt responses. The once cheery trickster of the cavern has become sullen, withdrawn and morose, caving in to despair and wondering what foul deed the fallen celestial will call upon him to perform next...

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If confronted, Sythiss defends himself with the minimum force required to subdue intruders, unless ordered to do otherwise by Diantha. The only thing that rouses him to pure rage is the belief that the intruders are allied with the erinye, in which case he casts greater invisibility upon himself, then retreats far enough to spellcast with impunity, alternating offensive spells such as scorching ray or lightning bolt with gouts of spat venom.

Spit (Ex): A guardian naga can spit its venom up to 30 feet as a standard action. This is a ranged touch attack with no range increment. Opponents hit by this attack must make successful saves (see above) to avoid the effect.

Spells: Guardian nagas cast spells as 9th-level sorcerers, and can also cast spells from the cleric list and from the Good and Law domains. The cleric spells and domain spells are considered arcane spells for a guardian naga, meaning that the creature does not need a divine focus to cast them.

THE SPELLBOUND SERPENT

Sythiss has guarded the underground fortress since it was first built — even he and his old friend Malachi have lost count of the years. Sythiss is as dedicated to protecting Belatu-Cadros as any other creature in the fortress, but expresses his dedication in odd ways.

Sythiss is a merry soul, quick to laugh, quick to joke, and quick to pull a harmless but amusing prank on someone. He lets the others fret about military tactics and troop strength, and turns his own efforts to making sure the elves still remember how to laugh. Nothing, he believes, lights up the darkness like a good laugh.

If only that were true — these days, Sythiss has nothing to laugh about and no way to lift the darkness that rests upon him. He's not entirely certain how the collar got on him in the first place — he remembers something about pixies and a practical joke — but regardless of how, the truth is that he is helpless to resist his infernal mistress' commands.

Under Diantha's command, he has caused several of the disappearances — those surrounding the "Haunted Watchtower" (Room H13), especially. A naga's venom is strong, and the ordinary troopers don't stand a chance against a foe striking invisibly from the shadows.

Sythiss does not know what Diantha does with the bodies, and he does not want to know. In his despair, the merry trickster has turned into a sullen recluse. He finds it far too much trouble to continue to keep up the spirits of those he might be ordered to kill. Fortunately, his behavior is noted by those he calls friends — Malachi and Aligheri. Unfortunately, they'll have to do something about it before it's too late.

H42. SAND PIT

A thick, reptile scent clings to the moist air here. The rocky floor slopes down until it ultimately gives way to dark, fragrant sand. Too warm for most humanoids to be comfortable, the heat makes the room seem more claustrophobic than it truly is.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Sythiss burrowed out a sand pit, in which he used to spend a great deal of time. Now, even the precious oils worked into the sand smell vaguely rotten, and it is evident that the sand pit has not been disturbed for some time. The oils worked into the sand make it difficult to traverse, and a DC 20 Balance check is required to maintain footing at any speed greater than walking.

H43. STEAM VENT

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This room is where Sythiss ordinarily takes his leisure, luxuriating in the natural steam vent near the ceiling. Those searching the room can discover Sythiss' makeshift 'ladder' (actually just roughened shelves of rocks) with a successful DC 18 Search check. Above the 'ladder' is a low, wide rock shelf, capable of supporting Sythiss and several humanoids of Medium size or a pair of Large creatures.

PCs spending more than 10 rounds in this room while carrying anything but a light load become fatigued until they can move to cooler, well-aired areas.

Encounter Condition: [Extreme Heat]

Tactics: If confronted here, Sythiss climbs to the rock shelf near the steam vent and launches his attacks from there. Again, unless ordered to do otherwise by Diantha, Sythiss only attacks to subdue foes, acting to kill in only the direst of circumstances.

H44. MESSY HALL

This corridor is strewn with junk – and the length of the hall reeks. The disorder hasn't quite crossed the line from messy to filthy, but it's well on its way.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Continuing his last ditch efforts to alert someone, anyone, of his peril, Sythiss has left the primary hallway to his lair uncleaned for quite some time. Aligheri, the elven clerk in Room H45, has grown quite worried about his friend, but mistakenly thinks that Sythiss is suffering the effects of extended time underground, and that the naga would prefer to be alone with his depression.

A successful DC 23 Search check reveals a well-kept crossbow hidden in a niche behind one of the tapestries. The loaded crossbow is scrupulously cared for; a quiver of bolts hangs next to it. The crossbow's condition is a startling contrast to the state of the hall. If Sythiss (Room H41) is questioned about the crossbow, he denies knowledge of it, and as he lacks hands, it is useless to him.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Amidst the clutter lies a masterwork heavy crossbow and 20 masterwork crossbow bolts.

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of the Search check by 4. To decrease the challenge, decrease the DC of the Search check by 2.

H45 THROUGH H48. STOREROOM COMPLEX

Rooms H45 through H48 are currently used for storage, with the exception of the quartermaster's office in Room H45. Originally, they were designed to be guest quarters or quarters for guard captains, but over the years the dwindling garrison came to prefer quarters above ground, or in the shield wall. The rooms were first abandoned, then converted into storerooms, which is their current function.

H45. ALIGHERI'S OFFICE

This small room is built along the lines of a storeroom, sparsely designed and sparsely furnished. The ruler-straight walls and sharp corners are hallmarks of dwarven precision, but a simple knotwork design carved at the join of floor and ceiling speaks to elven sensibilities. Rickety shelves line the northern and eastern walls, and a battered desk sits a few feet from the southern wall. The western wall is shrouded by a heavy moth-eaten tapestry depicting a scene from elven legend.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: This storeroom was converted into a small office for Aligheri (hp 66), the elven quartermaster. From this room, Aligheri coordinates troop transfers, juggles dwindling supplies, and otherwise organizes the day-to-day operations of the elven garrison. Volumes of accounting ledgers weigh down the rickety shelves, in some places interspersed with smaller volumes both mundane and esoteric.

Inside the room, a successful DC 19 Spot check reveals that the tapestry is not tied down at the bottom and occasionally ripples slightly as a draft passes beneath it. Moving the tapestry aside reveals an irregular opening in the dressed-stone wall. If Aligheri is not in his office, the door is locked and trapped (see trap statistics below). The trap on the lock seems simple enough, and is obvious enough for a less-skilled rogue to detect and bypass — a simple acid trap, enough to destroy a set of lockpicks, but nothing lethal. Bypassing the acid trap sets another, more subtle trap. If not detected, the second trap is triggered when the door is opened, spraying a sedative gas mixed with bright red dye into the intruder's face. Once both halves of the trap are disarmed, a successful DC 24 Open Locks check is required to open the door.

Aligheri is a friendly elf around two centuries old, just coming into his prime. He is of middling height with a stocky build that, beneath the loose tunics and treads he favors, lends him a soft, clumsy appearance. His left arm is markedly weaker than the right; although he favors it, it does not seem to discomfit him. His eyes are inquisitive, but the gleam of curiosity is hard to spot beneath his air of naiveté. Altogether, he seems an entirely unprepossessing fellow.

If PCs can raise Aligheri's disposition to Helpful through good role-playing or a successful Diplomacy check, he is willing to lend them assistance up to and including bartering for supplies. He is particularly eager for tales of high adventure — especially if they are true.

◆ Aligheri's Surprise: CR 10; Acid spray; mechanical; touch trigger; repair reset; hidden lock bypass (DC 25 Search/DC 30 Open Lock); Atk +17 melee (1 plus 1d4 acid); acid (1d4 acid dmg for 1d8 rounds against lockpicks); Search DC 22; Disable Device DC 17; The Surprise: mechanical; location trigger; repair reset; gas; never miss; onset delay (1 round); poison (sleep gas, DC 20 Fortitude save resists, 1d4 Dex/Unconsciousness, target marked with dye); single target; Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 25.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Aligheri is no fool — if he is attacked in his office, he runs, using the withdraw maneuver and fighting defensively if he must pass multiple opponents. He rips away the tapestry and darts down the uneven passage to the west into Sythiss' lair. Along the way, he snatches up the loaded crossbow (see Room H44). There is a base 50% chance that Sythiss is in his lair and capable of intervening; if so, Aligheri takes cover behind one of the stone formations (providing him a +4 cover bonus) and snipes at spellcasters, readying actions to interrupt their spellcasting. Otherwise, he hides down one of the darkened side passages, preferably to double back and escape through one of the storerooms. If absolutely necessary, he escapes through Jolenaar's quarters.

Treasure: Aligheri's office contains several scholarly tomes on herbalism, magic, engineering, naturalism, astronomy, and planar travel, each of which provide a +2 circumstance bonus to the appropriate Knowledge skill check when using the book.

Possessions: Mithril chain shirt, masterwork dagger, masterwork heavy repeating crossbow, obsidian tipped bolts (2 clips), uniform cloak (+2 circumstance bonus to Hide checks in Region H), copper cloak clasp.

H46. STOREROOM

Straight walls and perfect corners bespeak dwarven craftsmanship, serving to draw attention to the intricate mosaic of fantastic beasts, improbably elongated and marvelously intertwined, set into the walls and ceiling. The colors of the ceramic tiles are as bright as they were the day they were removed from the kiln, though many of them have fallen loose over the years, leaving large empty patches in the otherwise fabulous mosaic. Fine ceramic dust covers the unused shelves toward the back of the room, although the shelves to the front are kept clean and sees considerable use.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This Room appears to have been built for some other purpose, but was pressed into service as a storeroom as the garrison expanded. Down the hall from Aligheri's office, this storeroom is where the more dangerous substances are kept: dwarven explosives, spell components, hazardous alchemical substances, and so forth. The door is always locked, and requires a DC 27 Open Locks check to open. Aligheri is extremely careful with the contents of this storeroom, and makes certain that its contents are accounted for at all times.

SENTENCED TO PURGATORY

Aligheri is an elf not entirely satisfied with his current lot in life. As a youth, he volunteered for a tour of duty in the underground garrison, seeking adventure. In his second month below ground, a poisoned javelin injured him in the arm while he fended off a group of lacedons. The wound festered and he lay in a fevered coma for weeks. He survived, thanks to his hardy constitution, but his arm was permanently weakened.

In a single moment, Aligheri's hopes of adventure were dashed — with his weakened arm, he could not draw even a child's bow, nor could he bear a shield. It was a bitter blow, but he bore it as bravely as he could, taking over the office of quartermaster to free an able-bodied elf for the duty.

That was half a century ago. Troops rotate in and out, but Aligheri remains. Indeed, he does not wish to leave. The menial nature of his job does not embarrass him — rather, he is proud that he can perform a service for his people. He has also struck up a friendship with Sythiss; he carefully overlooks the naga's occasional pantry raids, and in turn, Sythiss feeds his hunger for tales of glorious adventure.

Aligheri is on good terms with the dwarven engineers, as well. In return for ensuring that they remain supplied with strong dwarven ale, Gurthang built Aligheri a repeating crossbow, thus allowing him to load a new bolt with his weakened left arm. Aligheri has become frighteningly competent with the crossbow, although few are aware of this.

Over the years, Aligheri has had the opportunity to observe both good and bad leaders, and he is coming to the conclusion that, for the most part, the fortress' leaders are deeply flawed. He does not know the new second-in-command well enough to judge her, but she seems competent, if a bit distant. Jacan, he believes, needs to be relieved of duty, having been too scarred by his repeated defeats to effectively lead. He is growing concerned for Enoriel's sanity; a druid gone mad is a fearsome foe indeed. And he is truly worried about the changes he's observed in his friend Sythiss, who is becoming more and more reclusive and whose behavior is shifting more and more toward the bizarre. He makes very sure that Jolenaar only sees an unassuming clerk when he must deal with the drow.

Ignored by the Council lords, casually mocked by the average trooper, and utterly discounted by the evils at work in this Region, Aligheri finds himself in the unenviable position of being the one person in the entire fortress who is entirely indispensable.

Alternately, PCs may choose to convince Aligheri, the clerk in Room H45, to open the door — he holds the key. This is exceedingly difficult, as he does not wish to see the contents of the storeroom misused. A successful DC 32 Diplomacy check is required to allow the PCs access to the room.

Dwarven handiwork is evident in the walls and sharp corners of this plain room, although even something as prosaic as a storeroom displays a touch of artistry; a vine-and-leaf pattern winds up the corners and along the ceiling, providing a small oasis of color against the stone. Sadly, the colors are faded, and now only hint at its former glory.

Stout wooden shelves, carved and polished, line the walls and stand at precise intervals like alert soldiers in formation. Not an iota of space is wasted; there is just enough room between the shelves for someone to work. However, dust covers the shelves, and it is evident that the storage capacity of this room has not been fully taken advantage of for some time.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This simple storeroom is a repository of common items. The door is usually kept locked, and requires a DC 18 Open Locks check to open. Alternately, PCs may get Aligheri, the clerk in Room H45, to open the door — he holds the key. A successful DC 23 Diplomacy check or a Bluff check opposed by Aligheri's Sense Motive skill convinces him to open the door.

Treasure: Common items such as blankets, cloaks (see "Elven Troops" sidebar for description of elven cloaks), waterskins, etc. are found here.

H48. COLD PANTRY

A faint layer of frost covers walls and floor in this storeroom, making the room perfect for storing perishable items. Stone shelves reach from floor to ceiling, holding baskets of roots, vegetables and grains, while fully-dressed carcasses hang from large metal hooks in the corners.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This pantry is the primary perishable food storage area for the garrison. The door is kept locked, and requires a DC 23 Open Locks check to open. Alternately, PCs may convince Aligheri, the clerk in Room H45, to open the door — he holds one key. Rhendale, the bartender in the nearby tavern (Room H54), holds the other. In general, Aligheri is disinclined to allow PCs free rein in the cold pantry; the food stored within is for the entire garrison, though if PCs want to barter for food, he is willing to make a trade as long as his disposition is Friendly or higher. Rhendale is made of weaker stuff; a DC 21 Bluff check convinces him to allow the PCs to rummage through the pantry.

PCs that detect magic in the storeroom find that the room is magical and possesses a moderate aura of evocation.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The food in the pantry is reasonably fresh, and once removed from the pantry, thaws rapidly. It is not suitable for long journeys, but lasts 1d6 days after being removed. Quite possibly, it is the first bit of food the PCs have seen in ages and most will gorge themselves on it, just to taste "something."

H49. TEMPLE HALL

The ceiling arches up into a great dome the color of an evening sky. In the four corners of the hall, four columns stand, cunningly carved into the likenesses of colossal trees. Niches in the walls hold smaller statues of gods and goddesses of both elven and dwarven belief. Each statue has a nameplate carved into its pedestal, and the plinths of the four great support columns are scribed with elegant calligraphy.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: Although the elven citadel was built for the purpose of protecting Belatu-Cadros, the original builders of the fortress were not such fools as to ignore or slight the other gods. Thus, they built a great temple in which all the gods could be honored, and those who followed a specific deity would have a place to worship.

The carvings in the temple hall were created by Malachi, the lamma-su, and represent some of his finest works. Once a year, he closes off portions of the temple hall in order to repair and clean the statues; several years ago, he did more than merely repair. Aware that knowledge of the prophecy surrounding Belatu-Cadros was fading, and that the old songs that operate Lyonatar's eye were slowly being forgotten, he decided to make sure the information was not entirely lost. Malachi spent a week reworking the four pillars of the temple; when he was done, the prophecy was etched into the stone of three of the plinths, and the Song of Daylight into the fourth.

The northeastern column is carved in the likeness of an ash tree, and bears the Song of Daylight, which would allow the Council to use the daylight ability of Lyonatar's eye. The southeastern column is carved into the likeness of an elm, and bears the first triplet of the prophecy: "Let the Tree speak once: dawn falls into darkness." The southwestern column, carved into the likeness of a birch tree, bears the prophecy's second triplet: "Let the Tree speak twice: the infernal vaults gape wide." And the column in the northwest, carved into the likeness of an oak, bears the final triplet of the prophecy: "Let the Tree speak thrice: let doom descend in fire."

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The statues and carvings in the temple hall are carved with love and skill, many of them gilded and inlaid with gold and silver, but there is no removing them from the hall. H50 THROUGH H53. DWARVEN COMPLEX

H50. GURTHANG'S ROOM

Surprisingly comfortable, given the dour reputation of the dwarves, this room combines practical function with stark aesthetic. The walls are covered with carefully colored mosaics, each speaking of a great dwarven hero or legend. A plain, comfortable bed sits in one corner, bearing a cleverly jointed arm holding a small writing desk. A second, larger, desk sits against the opposite wall, with ample room to sketch out more elaborate ideas. A stout wooden chest sits at the foot of the bed.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: Gurthang's (hp 78) room is simple enough — a place to sleep, a place to work, and little else. Aware that inspiration might strike at any time, Gurthang keeps pen, ink and foolscap handy at his desk and near the bed (and its smaller desk) just in case. The chest at the foot of the bed contains years of Gurthang's work, and is kept locked unless Gurthang is in the room.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The lock on the chest is absolutely fiendish in its design, and only Gurthang knows all of its secrets. Would-be thieves must contend with a DC 35 Open Locks check to deal with the lock itself. A DC 30 Search check reveals a maze of traps, clearly meant to mislead thieves. Gurthang has phantom trap cast upon the chest as a warning. Beyond that, a thief must face six devilishly clever devices to foil thieves. Each device requires a separate Disable Device check, beginning at DC 43, and reduced by two for every device bypassed, to a final DC of 31. Perhaps oddly, only the last device is actually a trap — a spray of acid and dye to mark the foolish thief.

Treasure: Gurthang's chest contains extensive scrolls on architecture and engineering, a masterwork trapmaker's kit, and enough notes on the cavern, grove and killing grounds to provide a +2 equipment bonus to attacks, skills and saves in any of those areas.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, give Gurthang three fighter levels. To decrease the challenge, decrease Gurthang's PC level by one.

Stoneworking (Ex): This ability grants a dwarf a +2 racial bonus on Search checks to notice unusual stonework, such as sliding walls, stonework traps, new construction (even when built to match the old), unsafe stone surfaces, shaky stone ceilings, and the like. Something that isn't stone but that is disguised as stone also counts as unusual stonework. A dwarf who merely comes within 10 feet of unusual stonework can make a Search check as if he were actively searching, and a dwarf can use the Search skill to find stonework traps as a rogue can. A dwarf can also intuit depth, sensing his approximate depth underground as naturally as a human can sense which way is up. Dwarves have a sixth sense about stonework, an innate ability that they get plenty of opportunity to practice and hone in their underground homes.

Stability (Ex): Dwarves are exceptionally stable on their feet. A dwarf has a +4 bonus on ability checks made to resist being bull rushed or tripped when standing on the ground (but not when climbing, flying, riding, or otherwise not standing firmly on the ground).

H51. DWARVEN COMMON ROOM

This simple room contains two tables — one sized for dwarves, and another, smaller table meant for taller visitors. The chairs are similarly sized, matching their appropriate tables. A battered chest sits in one corner, and the walls are decorated with cheap tapestries, stained by smoke.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: The common room is where the dwarves (and select members of the guard) relax and take their minds off the rigors of guarding the sacred tree. Those found in this room are usually playing cards or smoking pipes, exchanging war stories, or just as often explaining the intricacies of their latest device.

The card games in the common room have become something of a minor legend among the troops, and are sought after eagerly by the bored and foolish. The dwarves, despite half-serious rumors spread by those who lose the games, are scrupulously honest in their playing, just as happy to lose a good game as to win. Hard feelings are banished here, though on occasion Lightshield, Silmarien or Gurthang has had to discipline someone under their command for a minor brawl breaking out over a lost hand or accusations of cheating. None of the dwarves hold a grudge concerning the accusations, and the games continue on a regular basis, the pay chits flowing like dwarven ale and elven wine.

PCs could do worse to gain the trust and friendship of the dwarves than to play a few hands; Gurthang himself often says that the measure of a man can be found in how he handles his card game. Further, PCs that participate in the card games may pick up some rumors or small snippets of information about the fortress. For more information on the rumors that are currently circulating, see Room H54.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The chest in this room has a sturdy lock on it, requiring a DC 40 Open Lock check to open. The chest contains several decks of cards and a few elven board games, including a deck of cards marked by Jolinaar. The marked deck becomes obvious after a few hours of play. As Gurthang is the ultimate arbiter of the dwarves' honesty, Jolinaar hopes to cast the honest dwarf, and by extension, all the dwarves, in a more sinister light.

H52. DWARVEN BARRACKS

The barracks are simple quarters for a surprisingly complex folk. Two sets of stout bunks provide a place to sleep, each with a pair of equally stout chests at their feet. Four desks provide a place for inventive dwarven minds to plan, each facing the other so those who work may confer comfortably.

H53. DWARVEN FORGE

Heat rivaling the stream of lava outside the fortress is readily apparent here, baked into the walls by the ever-blazing forge dominating a full half of the room. Racks of tools hang along three of the walls, ready to be used and placed for easy access by their wielders. Along two of the walls, workbenches are set, bits of armor, tools and weapons upon them. Metal stock is stacked neatly near the forge next to anvils of various dimensions, and a bellows stands ready to stoke the fires into a white-hot inferno. At the base of a forge is a bright silver plate with a stylized hammer worked into its surface.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This forge is the primary source of metal armor, tools and weapons for the fortress' forces. All of the tools here are of masterwork quality. The forge, anvils and tools combine when used together to offer a +4 equipment bonus to Craft (blacksmithing), Craft (weapon-smithing), Craft (armormaking) or Craft (trapmaking) rolls. More than the mundane tools, there is the pride of the engineering team present here — a hammer capable of forging not only steel and iron, but the holy mithril and adamantine.

The sacred hammer of the dwarves is kept in a holy receptacle beneath the forge, its head kept white-hot by the fires. Opening the compartment holding the hammer is not possible without the use of a shatter spell or its equivalent; the hammer must be removed using a pair of tongs from the heart of the forge itself.

HEILIGESHAMMAR

This hammer is not designed to be wielded in combat; rather, it is a forge-tool that allows its user to create metal items at increased speed or reduced cost. When creating an item using the appropriate Craft skill or item creation feat, the user may choose one of the following results: the time required to create the item is halved, or the raw materials used to make the item cost 10% less than usual. In order for the user to benefit from these effects, the hammer must be stored beneath the forge so that it never cools. A character who wields Heiligeshammar in combat suffers a –4 penalty to attack rolls.

The dwarves guard their treasures religiously; the best lock that dwarven expertise could contrive secures the door, and the lock is guarded by a truly vicious trap. The lock requires a successful DC 45 Open Locks check to open. If the trap is not bypassed, the iron bindings upon the door snap out like scissoring jaws to entrap the unlucky thief. The snap of the trap going off is unmistakable, and summons the dwarven engineers from Room H52 to see why the trap was triggered.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Stacked neatly to the side of the forge is 500 gp in metal and mithril stock (weighing 100 lb.)

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Disable Device and Search DCs of the scissortooth door trap by +4. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the scissortooth door trap to 7d6.

H54 THROUGH H59. BARRACKS AREA

H54. TAVERN

The faint clank of metal and glassware can be heard over the dull hum of conversation within. Along one wall stands a makeshift bar; behind the bar, a skinny elf, all elbows and knees, attends to the needs of the soldiers. In front of the bar, a number of ramshackle tables have been set up, and several off-duty soldiers cluster around each table, talking, gaming, and bragging.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: Here, with a bit of elven wine and a bit of talk, the elven troopers can forget that they're stuck in an underground fortress at the edge of the elven kingdom. Like any tavern anywhere, there's the occasional brawl, which explains the state of the furniture. Rumors spread quickly in the tavern, and PCs that are willing to spend a little coin for drinks (the bartender, Rhandale (hp 20), takes coin as readily as pay chits) quickly become privy to any number of rumors.

Snippets of information that the PCs can pick up include:

- "Enoriel's gone off his rocker. So what if he's the oldest druid here, they need to replace him."
- "Damn dwarves. You'd think a man could find a fair game somewhere, but not when they're around."
- "I tell you, that drow of Captain Lightshield's is creepy! He keeps showing up and staring at people with those weird red eyes of his."
- "At least Aligheri keeps the wine flowing."

- "That new subcommander is going to get someone killed. Hasn't she heard about the lost patrols?"
- "Deserters! Nothing more than deserters! No such thing as lost patrols."
- "Those rotten little sprites are getting out of hand. I nearly broke my leg on one of their 'jokes'!"
- "A nixie told me that something came up out of the water, something black and dripping vile fluids. She said it shambled off into the forest — no one's seen it since."
- "Something stinks like the dead up on the mount; guess the mud pit's aboil again. Wonder what fell into it this time?"
- "That Pardek's a nutty one. Fire this and fire that. Where is he when we need him, though?"
- "Who would ever trust a snake? Always hiding out in that hole it calls a lair... slithering and hissing, ugh!"
- "Ol' Render's been upset lately; I saw him sniffing around the Dragon's Bones the other day, and he was growling like he smelled something he didn't like."
- "Wish the old fart would let the dwarves fix the damned watchtowers. They're falling apart on us."
- "The Haunted Watchtower claimed another victim last night... whoo. Glad my duty posting's in the east; if I had to patrol the Haunted Tower, I'd desert too!"

The DM is encouraged to add to these. It is up to the DM which of the rumors is true.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If a fight breaks out in the tavern, the off-duty soldiers with-in generally keep it to bludgeoning weapons and subdual damage. If the PCs genuinely attack the elven troops, however, the elves adopt a no-holds-barred style, trapping the PCs in the furniture, blinding the PCs with a thrown mug of ale or wine, tossing a chair at a PC's legs, and otherwise improvising weapons. The guard patrol in Room H58 arrive to put down any brawl in two rounds; Aligheri arrives from Room H45 four rounds after that. Rhandale, the bartender, ducks beneath the bar and covers.

H55. ARMORY AND SALLE

This plain stone room is empty enough to echo when one walks inside; half-full weapons racks stand neatly against two walls, and the floor is covered with a tough, slightly springy wood-like material. An archery target attached to the wall and a set of pells haphazardly stacked in the opposite corner confirm that this room is both armory and practice ring.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: The salle is infrequently used these days, as there is no rain outdoors, and ample room to practice martial maneuvers. The Room also serves as armory and sees more use now after Jacan has forbidden weapons in the barracks. The Room is not locked, allowing anyone to enter and arm themselves as needed, or to practice day or night.

Treasure: The weapons racks along the walls hold 10 masterwork longswords, 10 masterwork longbows, five +1 longswords and five +1 elven longbows. In another corner, an armor stand holds 10 sets of elven chain mail (designed to fit a wood or wild elf).

H56. JOLINAAR'S QUARTERS

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly (may appear Friendly)

Encounter: Jolinaar keeps his sleeping chamber as dull and mundane as possible. The drow keeps none of the items necessary to his web of plots in the room, preferring to conceal them outside the fortress where they are more difficult to locate. The only item found here is also the most damning — gutless, Jolinaar's stiletto, stained in history, if not the blood of his victims.

Jolinaar values his privacy and reacts badly to intrusions, calling for the guards if unwelcome visitors enter his chambers. If pressed, he calls for Jacan, begging the paladin's protection.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Jolinaar is the very definition of a sneak and backstabber. He prefers to have the guards and Jacan do his fighting for him. If he must fight, he employs his sorceries to his best advantage, casting greater invisibility, then moving unseen between his foes to catch the weakest of them flat-footed. As an additional distraction, he withdraws from melee (while still invisible) and unnerves his enemies with illusions. He uses baleful polymorph and suggestion to turn his attackers against one another.

Treasure: Jolinaar leaves gutless, while he goes about his daily administrative duties. It would never do, after all, for him to walk into Jacan's office wearing an infernal weapon. The stiletto is hidden in a secret compartment in the frame of his bed, which requires a DC 35 Search check to reveal. Casting detect evil grants a +15 circumstance bonus to the Search check. Gutless can be conclusively identified as Jolinaar's by the rune etched into the pommel — his name, in Undercommon script.

THE TREACHEROUS COWARD

Once a minor functionary within the ranks of a great drow army, Jolinaar has suffered multiple twists of fate during his inadvertent imprisonment. One factor has remained constant throughout his unnaturally long and shadowy career — Jolinaar has terrible luck. Whether the result of a curse laid upon his family, his own arrogance (exceptional, even for a drow), or simple fortune, events always seem to turn on Jolinaar at precisely the wrong time. Now, Jolinaar is determined to take his fate into his own hands, and the gods help any who stand in his way.

During his tenure with the drow army, Jolinaar was an aide to the wizards supporting the army's advance, and quickly became indispensable to his masters. Unfortunately, his responsibilities outweighed his experience. In a time of relative peace or during the ordinary plots and treachery of drow politics, Jolinaar would have excelled in avoiding disaster. Such was not the case; an avowed coward, he failed to deliver a vital message to the front lines. For want of a message, the battle was lost, and the army fell into a disorderly retreat into the depths of the dungeon.

Foul luck continued to dog Jolinaar. Reduced to a simple foot soldier, Jolinaar found himself far closer to joining the dozens of his fellows slain by the fiendish escapees from the army's new stronghold than he ever wanted to be. Through a combination of ruthlessness, patience and treachery, Jolinaar rose through the ranks to rejoin the circle of wizards as they plotted a terrible vengeance against the surface dwellers. In fact, it was one such well-timed betrayal that earned him a pair of fiendish stilettos. Jolinaar christened the weapons Gutless and Spineless, amused by his own sense of irony.

Untold years passed as Jolinaar made his way through the dungeon, eking out a miserable existence among the undead, abominations and fiends trapped within its warrens. One timely use of his abilities left the drow trickster in possession of a curious amulet, once held by a devil prince. Originally intended to mute the devil's aura of supernatural evil, the amulet took on a more subtle aspect in Jolinaar's hands. He found that it would misdirect attempts to divine his alignment, as well as masking its own presence. It was a potent weapon for one inclined to skullduggery, and Jolinaar gladly added it to his small arsenal.

After an unknown quantity of time spent wandering the dungeon in self-imposed exile, Jolinaar's luck seemed to turn once again, this time for the better, when he encountered the elves of the hidden grove and their paladinic leader. With a bit of fast talk, more than a little luck, and the aid of his hidden amulet, Jolinaar convinced Jacan Lightshield of his patently false intentions — to reform and join the ranks of his 'lost brethren.'

With the paladin for protector, Jolinaar slowly began to spin his web of lies throughout the hidden grove, intending to ascend to the surface and make his way to civilization — any civilization. Anywhere away from the dungeon would do.

Unbeknownst to Jolinaar, his luck was turning worse again, this time in the form of Diantha, an erinye also seeking to escape the celestial prison. Through keen eyes and fiendish sorcery, Diantha detected the presence of his amulet. Worse still, she recognized its creator's sigil-mark — Balzuth, the very devil who caused her fall from the ranks of the celestial guardians. The erinye quietly cultivated an elven squad leader's suspicions (a simple matter, given a true elf's innate distrust of the drow). This time, Jolinaar's luck was not restricted to him alone. Confronted in secret by the suddenly-ambitious lieutenant, Jolinaar slew his accuser in a short struggle, and dumped his body into a pit of volcanic mud (Room H60). Unfortunately for Jolinaar, the lieutenant's dying grasp relieved the drow of one of his beloved weapons, consigning Spineless to the depths of the bubbling mire.

Jolinaar continues to nurture his plans more slowly — time and experience have shown him that patience truly is a virtue. He has the witless paladin well under his thumb, and in his guise of harmless penitent, has managed to insinuate himself into Jacan's day-to-day decisions. Those who speak against him are discredited; once his opponents are discredited, Jolinaar murders them in secret, depositing their bodies in the same mud hole that serves as Spineless' grave. Occasionally, he disposes of inconvenient evidence in the lair of the gray render (Room H61), but always while the creature is occupied elsewhere. He loathes the beast, and the render returns his ill regard tenfold.

Jolinaar has one particular trait that affords the elven troopers much amusement: he is severely arachnophobic. The shadow of wiggling fingers upon a wall makes him jump. A single tiny spider spotted across the room makes him blanch. A swarm of spiders... he flees in terror. The common troops have learned not to laugh in front of Jolinaar, however; his luck, it seems, is catching.

AMULET OF ANONYMITY

This amulet disguises the wearer's natural aura by misdirecting divination spells to the nearest representative of the most common alignment in the area. If in a crowd of creatures with wildly-differing alignments, the wearer's aura acts as an Amulet of Proof against Detection and Location. Thus, a rogue in a group of paladins would be perceived to have as noble a soul as any of them; that same rogue would be greeted as a kindred spirit by the band of blackguards he consorts with later that evening. Moderate abjuration and illusion, CL 8th; Craft Wondrous Item, nondetection and misdirection; Price 50,000 gp.

GUTLESS

+2 keen wounding dagger: 1d4 base damage, threat range 18–20; PCs wounded by gutless must succeed at a DC 20 Will save or suffer the effects of cause fear (as cast by a 10th-level evil cleric). Gutless is a thin, wickedly hooked stiletto whose blade is inscribed with terrible runes, its haft of black wood wrapped in the still-living skin of a planetar.

SPINELESS

H57. ELVEN BARRACKS

The door opens onto a plain rectangular room. The only decoration that relieves the stark quality of the walls is an engraved moon-and-star motif along its top and bottom edges. Plain wooden bunks sit in regular rows, wooden wardrobes against their feet. A garderobe in the far corner is discreetly hidden behind a faded curtain.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This is a simple barracks which houses many of the off-duty elven troops. The furnishings are plain, but reasonably comfortable; the beds are comfortable enough to sleep in, and the wardrobes provide enough room for a common soldier to keep his meager personal belongings.

There are no weapons allowed in the barracks, ever since a particularly nasty brawl resulted in the deaths of two soldiers. All weapons are stored in the armory (Room H55) while the owner is off-duty; Jacan hopes that, by doing so, future brawls will be restricted to fists.

H58. GUARD PATROL

Plain stone passages lead north-south and east-west, lit by golden globes of continual flame. A quartet of elven soldiers stands guard at the intersection, marking all who pass and standing ready to respond to any trouble.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Ever since a barracks brawl that turned deadly, Jacan has issued new standing orders. No weapons are allowed in the barracks, and a guard of wood elf soldiers (hp 34 each) is posted at the corridor junction to respond to any disturbances. The guard patrol is usually rather bored; despite the tensions, little happens that requires intervention.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If attacked, the guards bottle the intruders up in the corridor east of the intersection, providing time for the soldiers in the barracks to reach the armory. Aligheri arrives to assist within 4 rounds.

H60 THROUGH H61. CENTRAL MOUND

H60. VOLCANIC MUD PIT

Bubbling and stinking, the earth here has become deadly mire, heat rising from its surface like the talons of a fiend. The hot mud roils and bubbles like a cauldron ringed with jagged rock, threatening to escape its confines at any moment. Objects tossed about by the heat and movement bob just beneath the surface, seen only in the occasional glimpse of something off-colored escaping the clutching fingers of thick, liquid earth.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: Discovered by Jolinar some time ago, this pit of liquid mud serves as the perfect dumping ground for those he murders. What flesh the heat does not cook into scraps of leather, the minerals within the pit dissolve into nothingness.

But secrets, like many things thought buried and lost, have a way of coming to the surface. One particular secret remains clutched in the petrified hand of the elven lieutenant murdered by Jolinar some time ago — Gutless twin, Spineless. Damning evidence indeed, if it can be found, as it bears Jolinar's sigil etched into the pommel, but doing so requires braving the lethal, boiling mud.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Those who fall into the pit suffer 2d6 fire and 2d6 acid damage every round they remain immersed. A Swim check (with a +2 circumstance bonus from the mud's relative buoyancy) must be made, or the victim drowns.

Treasure: Spineless.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage to 3d6 fire/3d6 acid per round. To decrease the challenge, increase the Swim check's circumstance bonus to +4 and reduce the damage to 2d6 fire per round.

H61. GRAY RENDER'S LAIR

Well-hidden behind a copse of thorny bushes, a dark opening gaps between two large granite boulders. Although the thorns jab at unprotected flesh, they are relatively easy to push aside. From the gap issues a faint odor, the scent of stale air and rotting flesh. As you venture deeper into the slightly claustrophobic tunnel, the stench intensifies. The light does not penetrate beyond the first few paces, making the spongy, marsh-like footing even more hazardous.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A gray render (hp 162) has free run of the entire Region, and hunts the area on a frequent basis. Usually, it merely brings down one of the forest animals with which the area is stocked. It is, however, extremely effective at dealing with intruders in a permanent and gruesome fashion. The gray render is utterly devoted to the elven fortress and its defenders, and does not attack the inhabitants of the fortress. The elves have learned to present new arrivals to the render in the presence of one it already knows, to avoid unfortunate incidents.

The lair is ordinarily utterly dark, with no light penetrating into its depths. Unless using alternate light sources, PCs without darkvision suffer standard darkness penalties to Spot and Search checks.

The floor of the lair is ankle-deep in bones, many of which still have rotting flesh clinging to them. Humanoid bones are mingled among the animal bones, and all of them bear the print of large teeth marks.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Deep Darkness

Tactics: If the PCs are accompanied by one of the elves or have been "introduced" to the gray render, it does not attack. Otherwise, thanks to its excellent sense of smell, it is not surprised by adventurers entering its lair. It is also unhampered by the darkness, and attacks the first intruder to enter its lair. If facing multiple foes, it uses Power Attack and Cleave to quickly reduce the PCs' numbers, then latches onto the nearest foe.

Treasure: On a DC 28 Search check, the PCs find a cunningly worked figurine in rowan wood, the shape of a young elven woman. The figure is three inches long, with a hole bored sidewise through the top of the head. The figure is worth 1d6 silver for the workmanship if the PCs can clean the gore off it. However, questioning the elven troops in the Southern Rampart reveals that the figure belonged to Borileos, one of the elven warriors gone missing some time ago. The figure is the image of his betrothed.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a gray render must hit with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

Rend (Ex): A gray render that wins a grapple check after a successful bite attack establishes a hold, latching onto the opponent's body and tearing the flesh. This attack automatically deals 2d6+9 points of damage.

Skills: Gray renders have a +4 racial bonus on Spot checks due to their six keen eyes.

H62. FAERIE REVEL

Dancing figures move between the trees with a casual grace that belies their bestial forms, moving in step to the faint sound of pipes carried on the wind. All about, delicate nymphs laugh and clap in time with the dance steps.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: The PCs come across a faerie gathering in the wood. Food, wine, and song are flowing freely, and the laughing fey are more than willing to welcome the PCs into their revelry — provided they pay a toll. The satyrs (hp 38, 38, 37, 36, 34, 32) have worked up a thirst during the dance, and nothing satisfies it like a cask of stout dwarven ale. Unfortunately, the dwarves are largely immune to the blandishments of the nymphs. As the price of entry, the PCs must return with a cask of dwarven ale.

There are several ways for the PCs to accomplish this, including bartering with Aligheri (Room H45) or Rhandale (Room H54), stealing it from the dwarves, winning it in a game with the dwarves, etc.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the faerie are attacked on their home ground, the piper uses his pan-pipes to cast charm person on the intruders. If successful, he convinces the attackers to just go away and leave them be. If the charm person fails, the nymphs harry the attackers with druidic spells while the satyrs engage in melee combat.

Treasure: N/AEL: 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two nymphs. To decrease the challenge, remove two satyrs.

Blinding Beauty (Su): This ability affects all humanoids within 30 ft. of a nymph. Those who look directly at a nymph must succeed on a DC 17 Fortitude save or be blinded permanently as though by the blindness spell. A nymph can suppress or resume this ability as a free action. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Stunning Glance (Su): As a standard action, a wrathful nymph can stun a creature within 30 ft. with a look. The target creature must succeed on a DC 17 Fortitude save or be stunned for 2d4 rounds. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Unearthly Grace (Su): A nymph adds her Charisma modifier as a bonus on all her saving throws, and as a deflection bonus to her Armor Class. (The statistics block already reflects these bonuses).

Wild Empathy (Ex): This power works like the druid's wild empathy class feature, except that a nymph has a +6 racial bonus on the check.

Skills: A nymph has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. She can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. She can use the run action while swimming, provided she swims in a straight line.

Pipes (Su): Satyrs can play a variety of magical tunes on their pan pipes. Usually, only one satyr in a group carries pipes. When it plays, all creatures within a 60-foot spread (except satyrs) must succeed on a DC 14 Will save or be affected by charm person, sleep, or fear (caster level 10th; the satyr chooses the tune and its effect).

In the hands of other beings, these pipes have no special powers. A creature that successfully saves against any of the pipe's effects cannot be affected by the same set of pipes for 24 hours. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Skills: Satyrs have a +4 racial bonus on Hide, Listen, Move Silently, Perform, and Spot checks.

Possessions: Short sword, short bow, quiver of 12 arrows.

H63. UNPLEASANT SPRITES

The underbrush, cloaked with thorny branches, grasps at passing legs. The soft soil gives way to a pebbly loam, and the trees loom in a vaguely menacing way.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Diantha (Room H12) has charmed a group of pixies into performing a number of slightly dangerous, thoroughly unpleasant practical jokes. They have riddled the southwestern part of the forest with pit traps, vine snares, hives full of angry bees, and similar "pranks". Some of the traps, while not lethal, can certainly harm the unwitting passersby; in fact, several elfen troopers have fallen prey to the pixies' pranks, and are not pleased.

♣ Angry Bee Trap: CR 3; mechanical; proximity trigger; no reset; Atk +6 melee (1d4 plus poison); bee venom (DC 11 Fortitude save negates, 1d4 Con/1d4 Con); multiple targets (all creatures in a 30 ft. radius); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 23.

Encounter Condition: Invisibility

Tactics: The pixies use their magic to best advantage; they conceal themselves using greater invisibility, but their giggles when a PC falls prey to one of their traps may give them away. If the PCs attack them, they fly up out of the PCs' reach and retreat, the sounds of their laughter echoing behind them.

Greater Invisibility (Su): A pixie remains invisible even when it attacks. This ability is constant, but the pixie can suppress or resume it as a free action.

Spell-Like Abilities: 1/day—lesser confusion (DC 14), dancing lights, detect chaos, detect good, detect evil, detect law, detect thoughts (DC 15), dispel magic, entangle (DC 14), permanent image (DC 19; visual and auditory elements only), polymorph (self only). Caster level 8th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

One pixie in ten can use irresistible dance (caster level 8th) once per day.

Special Arrows (Ex): Pixies sometimes employ arrows that deal no damage but can erase memory or put a creature to sleep.

Memory Loss: An opponent struck by this arrow must succeed on a DC 16 Will save or lose all memory. The save DC is Charisma-based and includes a +2 racial bonus. The subject retains skills, languages, and class abilities but forgets everything else until he or she receives a heal spell or memory restoration with limited wish, wish, or miracle.

Sleep: Any opponent struck by this arrow, regardless of Hit Dice, must succeed on a DC 16 Fortitude save or be affected as though by a sleep spell. The save DC is Charisma-based and includes a +2 racial bonus.

Notes: One of the six possesses irresistible dance.

REGION I. THE HALLS OF FLESH

"The Halls of Flesh" is not a metaphor. The corridors and Rooms of this blighted Region make it unlivable for normal beings and a perfect place for unspeakable and horrible diseases. Oozing with miscreant detritus and foul ichor, the Halls of Flesh house some of the dungeon's most unseemly and uncontrollable beasts. Abominations that no man could have devised, live here and their sepsis flows through the halls like the bloody remains they leave in their tracks.

The abominations are the work of a drider named Mahir and his progeny. His dark experiments, centuries ago, still resonate in the timeless Halls of Flesh and even after his passing, the laboratory in Region M continues to churn out vile, impossible 'things.' Chaos beasts, oozes, chokers, and a pair of organisms aptly called 'the Twins', make Region I both a home and battleground to an their unnatural menagerie.

The twins are Anguish and Madness — a chimera made from the unholy union of a dragon egg, a drow, and a protoplasmic goo that cannot be destroyed. They are the truest kind of evil. Pure in their form as forces of chaos and destruction, they lack understanding of their actions and have lost any semblance of morality. Together, they are the core of the Region's suffering and the reason the inevitables in Region E stand ever watchful.

If nothing else, Region I is the effect to the drider's cause. Whatever remnants of their infernal experiments that do not succeed are discarded and abandoned here. For centuries they have pushed off their beasts, leaving them to whatever fate the dungeon wills. For the celestials, this has caused them to pull back to Region E and seal off the dungeon from the aberrations and discarded genetic effluence left by Mahir's children.

The story of Region I goes back centuries to when the driders, (with their drow slaves in tow) searched for a new home. Having recently lost their status among other driders, they stumbled through a series of underground caverns, before Seizing Region M. The driders settled there and set their slaves to the task of digging out Region I. However, what they found were dungeon walls already cut into the earth.

It wasn't long before the driders began to experiment on their drow slaves in hopes of creating more driders. Mahir set up laboratories throughout the Region, in tandem with the efficient tunnel structure of the previous inhabitants. However, not realizing the taint of evil that permeated the halls was abyssal in nature, Mahir's early experiments would result in unwanted and unthinkable mutations. It would be decades before a creature even close to what they imagined would be created. Meanwhile the failures of their vile experiments were exiled to monster-controlled Sections of the complex.

Perhaps the dark goddess of the drow chose to intervene? Perhaps the driders, given to the same arrogance as their former masters, were lost in error. Whatever the cause, in a single night the driders lost their new home to what was to be the Mahir's greatest creation. Having traded away nine sickly drow slaves to the hag coven in Region K, he acquired a bronze dragon egg, which he used to destructive ends.

Mahir took a dozen captive drow and injected them with a foul serum he concocted from alchemical elixirs, protoplasmic enzymes, and the "yolk of the egg." Eight of the drow died instantly and one of them lingered in agony for months before dying at the hands of a drider chiurgeon. Two others spilled into an ooze, forming a single mass of mutated jelly. Reduced to a mass of protoplasmic flesh, only their teeth and eyes left untouched, these two became the creature named Madness, which after only a few short hours, then rampaged out of the laboratory and into the southern halls of Region I.

The twelfth drow survived. Left convulsing and vomiting in a cata-tonic state, it sprouted into a semi-draconic, three-headed abomination. The creature's first conscious act was to turn on its creators. Mahir and all but one of his assistants quickly fell to its vicious attacks. Within weeks, most of the complex was lost as the two unstoppable juggernauts broke through walls and doors in search of more victims.

Since the terrible accident that forced the driders to abandon the corridors they once called home, the driders and drow have fought to reclaim small pockets of the Region, but to no avail. Now, the driders force drow slaves to guard what little is left of the Halls of Flesh, ever vigilant against the attacks that have driven their brethren to such madness.

TYRANNY OF FLESH: ENVIRONMENT OF THE HALLS

Thanks to the contamination caused by Mahir, the Halls of Flesh have earned their dastardly name. Unnatural life exists in abundance here, enough so that undead dare not enter.

In addition to the traps and monstrous menaces that threaten characters while adventuring within the Halls of Flesh, the environment presents hazards to the unwary. The remnant arcane energies created by the earthquake continue to affect the area. Mingled with the unholy experiments, the Region is a mess. While the abominations that dwell within the Halls have adapted to its bizarre properties, recent arrivals are in for a rude awakening.

Characters and creatures, excluding those who do not heal naturally (such as constructs and the undead) that are injured within the confines of the Halls of Flesh soon discover a miraculous property of this environment. Living creatures who are injured regain their hit points at an accelerated rate.

Instead of the normal rate, creatures and characters recover lost hit points every hour, rather than every day and nonlethal damage is recovered at the rate of 1 point per minute. DMs are encouraged to describe the odd but harmless distortions of the character's body that take place within 1d4 hours of a PC benefiting from the unnatural vitality — strange changes in skin color or texture, bumps or warts, growths of hair, etc.

TOO MUCH OF A GOOD THING

Characters, especially clerics, may come to depend on the accelerated healing the Halls of Flesh provide, electing to use spells that do other than heal their comrades. This is a mistake.

Characters and creatures injured within the Halls of Flesh discover there is a price to be paid for the unnatural vigor that keeps them among the living. In cases where the creature or character takes enough damage to reduce them to their Constitution or less in hit points, a DC 20 Fortitude save must be made. Failure results in a check on the following table.

1d20	Effect (Duration)
1–3	Abnormal Vigor. +1 Constitution or Dexterity. –2 Wisdom. Distracting pain. 1d8 hours.
4–6	Abnormal Vigor. Immunity to poison, disease and nonlethal damage. –2 to attack rolls and Charisma. Body is wracked by spasms and nearly unbearable agony. 1d6 hours.
7–10	Body Warping. +1 Strength or Dexterity. –1 Charisma. Bulbous twitching under the skin. 1d6 hours
11–13	The Curse of Anguish. +2 Strength and Constitution. –6 Charisma. Assume minor traits of a chimera (horns, foul stench, animal features). Every day, make a DC 20 Will save or suffer rage, attacking everything for 2d6 rounds. 1d4 days.
14–16	The Curse of Madness. +2 Intelligence and Wisdom. –6 Charisma as the afflicted is tormented by insane visions. Each day, make a DC 22 Will save or suffer insanity . 1d4 days.
17–18	Madness Insight. +2 Intelligence or Wisdom. Every hour, make a DC 19 Will save or suffer confusion . –2 Charisma. Paranoia and strange visions. 1d10 hours.
19–20	Mahir's Vengeance. +3 Dexterity, spider climb at will, grow fangs (Bite 1d6 plus poison, Fortitude DC 16, 1d6/1d6 Str damage). –8 Charisma. May not wear normal armor or clothing. 1d4 days.

Creatures affected by the Halls may be cured via lesser restoration (for effects lasting hours) or greater restoration (effects lasting days), remove curse, limited wish, wish, or miracle.

FILTH AND DISEASE

The abnormal life in the Halls of Flesh lends itself to filth and disease. The offal left by the battles between the inhabitants of the Halls serves as a breeding ground for any of a number of ailments. PCs who are wounded in battle, or camp in Room recently inhabited by creatures may contract illness, according to the following chart.

The DM should never require more than one roll per battle or three rolls per day.

1d20	Disease
1–3	Cackle Fever—Inhaled, Fortitude DC 16, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d6 Wis
4–6	Devil Chills—Injury, Fortitude DC 14, incubation period 1d4 days, damage 1d4 Str [The victim must make three successful Fortitude saving throws in a row to recover from devil chills.]
7–10	Filth Fever—Injury, Fortitude DC 12, incubation period 1d3 days, damage 1d3 Dex, 1d3 Con
11–13	Mind Fire—Inhaled, Fortitude DC 12, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d4 Int
17–18	Shakes—Contact, Fortitude DC 13, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d8 Dex
19–20	Slimy Doom—Contact, Fortitude DC 14, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d4 Con [When damaged, the character must succeed on another saving throw or 1 point of damage is permanent drain instead.]

A Heal check (a DC equal to the DC of the Fortitude save + 10) may be made to treat a diseased character, as well as a cure disease.

DRIDER KEYS

These magical keys are held by the drider in charge of the drow slaves. Each key resembles a miniature onyx drider. To use a drider key, the creature places it over a lock. The figurine then comes to life, performing the necessary task needed to unlock the door in question.

Non-drider using the keys may suffer an unpleasant surprise — the magic in each allows any of the drider sorcerers to locate any given key at any time. At the sorcerers' discretion, each key emits a highly concentrated contact poison (DC 28 Fort save resists, 1d8 Con/1d6 Dex) when used. Dispel magic and similar effects suppress the poison and location abilities of the key, but also render it useless for opening the appropriate locks.

11. FIRST CONTACT

The air here grows fetid as the thick iron door swings aside with a squeal. The darkness is palpable. Stepping forth into its presence is akin to passing through a pane of icy water.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: The doors leading into the Halls of Flesh have been warded since before Mahir's magical disaster. To discourage the celestials' interference, the drow and drider wizards have inscribed foul runes upon the doors and walls leading into the Halls of Flesh. There is a magic circle against good radiating from each door leading into the prison complex.

EL: 6

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge, add two gricks, who are lurking near one of the doors to the east or west. To decrease the challenge, remove the magic circles against good.

12 THROUGH 115. CHOKING FOR AIR

A bizarre proto-society has developed among the half-intelligent chokers resulting from the twisted arcane methods of healing the Halls provide. As such, this Section is controlled by a gang of "thinking" chokers led by a mutated choker of remarkable girth and above-average intelligence. He, however, still thinks like a beast at times.

Disobedience is punished by death, and advancement within this group hierarchy is solely based on one's cunning. Outright murder is frowned upon, but assassination is a commonly used to get ahead. Woe to the adventurer who haphazardly chooses a place to sleep; the chokers are merciless.

The chokers engage in regular warfare against the nearby gricks, and waylay adventurers or drow patrols unlucky enough to intrude. Unlike most choker gangs, these vile sneaks and murderers are organized to exploit the traps and poisons left behind by the celestial warders and by the drow and drider. While not overtly intelligent, the chokers recognize the healing properties of the Halls. To preserve their numbers, the chokers retreat and then they lead their opponents into an ambush so their wounded can hide in the Halls and be healed.

To be plain among the choker gang is to become outcast. Instead, the chokers embrace their mutations. It is not unusual for an intruder's last vision to be of a swarm of chokers with useless wings, and an unnatural number of arms and legs. [The Random Mutation chart on page 440 works for chokers as well as gricks — though it is designed for the gricks. It is the whim of the DM, whether chokers deserve such benefits.]

The lair of the chokers differs little from that of the gricks — garbage and rubble litter their homes. The vast quantity of waste left lying about provides the chokers with an ideal environment to defend their home — not only does the rubble provide significant cover, but the stones serve as ammunition to harass enemies. Only the power of the Halls prevent the gricks from being eradicated. However, should an intelligent enough mutation arise among the chokers, the gricks' days are numbered.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

12. ABANDONED CHAMBER

This large chamber is abandoned — debris is strewn across the cracked floor tiles. The air is stale, stirred only by the ominous sound of metal creaking against stone up ahead.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: Few creatures in the Halls of Flesh venture here, thanks to its proximity to the lair of Anguish (Room 198) to the north. As such, it can provide a safer haven for weary PCs than many of the rooms elsewhere in this section.

After the PCs spend 30 minutes in this Room, roll for a Random Encounter.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

13. THE CUBBY-HOLE

The sheets of tattered living flesh endemic to other areas of the Halls are less prevalent here.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: PCs venturing down this hallway may make a DC 18 Spot check to notice that one of the southern sections of wall in this Room is free of the disgusting tissue that infests the area.

Opening the secret door here is a simple matter — a single stone set roughly 8 ft. above the door may be pressed inward to unlock the latch securing it, causing a cantilever to swing the stone door on a central pivot. A DC 25 Search check reveals the location of the stone.

The hidden room once held a small rack of weapons for use by the celestials during uprisings in the prison. The weapons rack, now vandalized is simply, at this point, useless rubble that litters the floor. The choker leader (hp 46) has left the continual flame stone set into one wall intact but damaged, the better to cast shadows for the creature to hide within.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the choker leader is in the Room — there is a 50% chance that he's here — it hides within the shadows cast by the damaged continual flame stone near the ceiling. A DC 30 Spot check is required to determine its presence. As only one PC is likely to be in the Room at any given time, the choker leader waits until an opponent is fully within the room, then triggers the door's closure mechanism (located on the south wall) as a move action, trapping the character inside.

Once a character is trapped inside the Room, the choker leader knocks the continual flame panel from the wall as the extra standard action granted by its Quickness ability. This breaks the enchantment and plunges the Room into darkness. The choker then attacks while the victim is flat-footed, using a poisoned dagger. Once the poison takes effect or the victim successfully resists, the choker abandons the dagger in favor of strangulation.

Treasure: A few trinkets are kept here by the greedy choker, amounting to 100 gp. More useful to the PCs, though, is the drider key that the choker leader possesses.

EL: 6

Scaling: To make this encounter more challenging, replace the choker leader's poisoned dagger with six poisoned darts, which the creature throws from the ceiling. To decrease the challenge of the encounter, lower the save DC of the poison to 18.

14. THE SOUTHERN CACHE

The entrance into the cache area is well concealed (Search check, DC 30), and requires eight drops of blood to open — one for each leg of the spider glyph that serves as the central locking mechanism for the door.

The spider fangs, pointed outward, draw the blood for the glyph — offering a clue for clever intruders. Though originally intended for only the drow, elven blood suffices to unlock the door, and human blood works 50% of the time, due to the decay of the mechanism.

Failure to add the blood before opening the locking mechanism triggers repulsion, centered on the glyph (Will save, DC 21). The repulsion pushes creatures a full 60 ft. away from the glyph and remains in effect until the mechanism resets (10 rounds).

♦ Repulsion Trap: CR 9; magical device; touch trigger; automatic reset (10 rounds); hidden lock bypass (Search DC 25, Open Lock DC 30); multiple targets (10 ft. radius); spell effect (repulsion, 12th-level sorcerer, Will save DC 21, remains 10 rounds); Search DC 31; Disable Device DC 31.

⇒ Cache Door: 3 in. iron, Hardness 15, hp 90, Break DC 30/30.

This hallway drips with vile slime and patches of fleshy fungus. Only a few areas remain clear, none of them taller than a human.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: Established by drow slaves some time ago, this Room acts as a haven for drow fleeing the horrors of the Halls.

The interior of the cache is unlit, though darkvision does work normally. The central circular area is a makeshift meeting and dining area, complete with a single large stone table and several chairs. The western room is uncomfortable barracks for up to eight Medium creatures, with uncomfortable cots and a masterwork healer's kit. The eastern room serves as the armory, and at any given time has a 10% of a random minor magical weapon or item of armor being present, as well as a variety of normal longswords and leather armor.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Treasure: Hidden in the armory in a secret niche (Search check, DC 30) is a single significant magical two-bladed sword called eight strike fang, a glimmering sword wrought of the coldest iron and edged so finely that the blade appears to be made of ice. Mahir created this weapon soon after the driders took power to control his errant creations. Shortly before the disaster which killed him, Mahir discovered that eight strike fang had been stolen. Unwilling to jeopardize his place among the driders, Mahir said nothing of the theft — a decision which would prove to be his nemesis.

In truth, fang was stolen by the drow, who were even then plotting to regain their power over the driders. Over time, the drow have discovered that the sword is effective against Anguish (Room 198) and Madness (Room 156), and believe that it is the only means by which Anguish and Madness can be destroyed. Siglinde (Room 131) is the only creature who knows differently, and for her own reasons, has not informed the drow of this. Thus Lorath and the drow plot to mount an expedition and retrieve eight strike fang.

The secret chamber is locked (Open Lock check, DC 30) and trapped with acid fog. Lorath (Room 1103) and his lieutenants carry keys to the cache which disable the trap.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have two Random Encounters. To decrease the challenge, select have the Random Encounter occur after 1 hour.

EIGHT STRIKE FANG

Eight Strike Fang is a +1/+2 axiomatic shapeshifterbane two-bladed sword. In addition to its bane properties, shapeshifters struck by eight strike fang must succeed at a DC 18 Will save or be forced back into their natural forms. Damage inflicted by the sword to Anguish (Room 198) or Madness (Room 156) heals at the normal rate, not the accelerated rate of the Halls. Further, if Anguish or Madness are reduced to -10 HP by the weapon, they regenerate after 1d6+1 weeks instead of days.

15. THE DISCIPLE OF MADNESS

This rectangular room yields an unpleasant scent, reminiscent of vinegar. There is no furniture, and the floor, while stained and pitted, is spotless. A shadow dances along its back wall, and from it, sonorous chanting arises, the words laying greasily in the ear.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This chamber serves as the home of the Disciple of Madness (hp 150), an unfortunate drow reduced to a vomitous slag of black ooze during the disastrous experiments of the driders generations ago. Characters entering the room are not attacked automatically, but anyone approaching within 30 ft. of the Disciple must succeed at a DC 16 Will save or be affected by hypnotism for 2d4 rounds. This is a sonic, mind-affecting compulsion. PCs who successfully save cannot be affected by the Disciple's babbling for 24 hours. Those hypnotized are staggered and sense "recorded" visions of torture and debauchery they cannot immediately be explained. DMs should feel free to bury these images deep in the PCs subconscious, bringing them to the surface at an opportune moment later. Nonetheless, the Disciple's babbling is constant and distracting, making spell casting difficult.

Any creature targeting the Disciple with thought detection, mind control, or telepathy suffers 1d4 Wisdom damage.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Distracting Noises 6

Tactics: Though insane, the Disciple is a terrifying opponent. It is intelligent enough (barely) to lull its opponents into a stupor (with hypnotism) before attacking. Should the PCs fall victim to the Disciple of Madness' babblings, a suggestion that they simply stand (flat-footed) and listen to its insane proselytizing takes effect.

Treasure: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add +30 hp to the Disciple. To decrease the challenge of the encounter, reduce its Intelligence score to 1 and remove its spell-like abilities.

✱ Disciple of Madness, Black Pudding: CR 9; Huge ooze; HD 10d10+60; hp 135; Init -5; Spd 20 ft., climb 20 ft.; AC 3, touch 3, flat-footed 3; Base Atk +7; Grp +18; Atk +8 melee (2d6+4 plus 2d6 acid, slam); Full Atk +8 melee (2d6+4 plus 2d6 acid, slam); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft.; SA Acid, constrict 2d6+4 plus 2d6 acid, improved grab; SQ Blindsight 60 ft., darkvision 120 ft., spell-like abilities, spell resistance 18, split, ooze traits; AL CE; SV Fort +9, Ref -2, Will -2; Str 17, Dex 1, Con 22, Int 10, Wis 1, Cha 1.

Acid (Ex): The creature secretes a digestive acid that dissolves organic material and metal quickly, but does not affect stone. Any melee hit or constrict attack deals acid damage, and the opponent's armor and clothing dissolve and become useless immediately unless they succeed on DC 21 Reflex saves. A metal or wooden weapon that strikes a black pudding also dissolves immediately unless it succeeds on a DC 21 Reflex save. The save DCs are Constitution-based.

The pudding's acidic touch deals 21 points of damage per round to wooden or metal objects, but the ooze must remain in contact with the object for 1 full round to deal this damage.

Constrict (Ex): A black pudding deals automatic slam and acid damage with a successful grapple check. The opponent's clothing and armor take a -4 penalty on Reflex saves against the acid.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a black pudding must hit with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—hypnotism, suggestion (DC 3). 1/day—dancing lights, deeper darkness, faerie fire. Caster level 9th. The save DCs are Intelligence-based.

Split (Ex): Slashing and piercing weapons deal no damage to a black pudding. Instead the creature splits into two identical puddings, each with half of the original's current hit points (round down). A pudding with 10 hit points or less cannot be further split and dies if reduced to 0 hit points.

Skills: A black pudding has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on a Climb check, even if rushed or threatened.

16. DEAD END

This alcove is the sight of a gruesome display—a humanoid skeleton, taller than a human or elf, pinned to the wall with iron spikes, clotted with rust. Those same spikes are still stained with this being's blood, despite the advanced age of the corpse. It glimmers like liquid silver and gold intermixed, shimmering softly in the darkness.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: The being spiked to the wall was once a celestial warden of the prison. Ambushed foully by the escaped prisoners after the cataclysm that set them free, the warden was left to die, its lifeblood oozing out over the dozens of spikes driven deep into its body.

The foul chokers that infest this Section avoid the alcove, repelled by the lingering aura of holiness. Encounter Condition: Hallowed 4, Positive Energy

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The tragic loss of a celestial being can be a boon to PCs—A DC 18 Knowledge (religion) check reveals that the blood that still runs over the spikes can be harvested by the faithful and used to create three vials of maximized holy water, or a single potion of cure serious wounds with minimal effort. Generous DMs may, at their discretion, waive the cost of creating these items should particularly pious PCs take steps to lay the celestial to rest, if it is within their faith to do so.

EL: N/A

17. LOOK CLOSER

This chamber reeks. Hovels are constructed from the debris and are held together with slimy-looking sheets of living flesh. Perhaps half a dozen small, gray-skinned humanoids squat inside or around these mounds, chattering in soft, high-pitched voices.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This room is home to half a dozen chokers (hp 16, 16, 15, 15, 14, 14) encountered the Disciple of Madness in room 15 and have been driven insane by its blasphemous chanting. The chokers emulate the Disciple, going so far as to slaughter one of their own and use its living flesh to bind their homes together. A DC 21 Sense Motive check will reveal that these creatures are dangerously insane.

These chokers are reviled by their evil brethren nearby, shunned and forced to eke out a miserable existence in this room. PCs that can achieve a Neutral or Better result utilizing Diplomacy or appropriate spells will be told that a 'great prophet' lives in room 15, and will be provided with a single choker guide to lead them to the Disciple. Hostile PCs are set upon by every inhabitant of the room. It is important to note that the chokers that roam the lower Halls will not investigate the battle, considering themselves well off if the insane former members of their gang are slain.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The chokers here are utterly mad, fighting with little regard for their personal safety. They are intelligent enough to employ their superior reach against enemies, and to swarm fallen foes. Should a PC be knocked unconscious, a pair of chokers drag them to Room 15 to face the Disciple.

Treasure: The mad chokers have a few baubles scavenged from the victims of the Disciple (Room 15) and other horrors of the Halls, totalling 100 gp. A PC who succeeds at a DC 18 Search check is rewarded with an inactive drider key.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, one of the chokers has a small black pudding (hp 20) that it keeps in a jar, releasing the creature in the midst of battle (treat as a grenadelike weapon). To decrease the challenge, the chokers' brethren nearby have slain two of them in a fit of pique, reducing their numbers to four.

✱ Choker: CR 2; Small aberration; HD 3d8+3; hp 16, 16, 15, 15, 14, 14; Init +6; Spd 20 ft., climb 10 ft.; AC 17, touch 13, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +2; Grp +5; Atk +6 melee (1d3+3, tentacle); Full Atk +6 melee (1d3+3, 2 tentacles); Space/Reach 5 ft./10 ft.; SA Improved grab, constrict 1d3+3; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., quickness; AL CE; SV Fort +2, Ref +5, Will +4; Str 16, Dex 14, Con 13, Int 4, Wis 13, Cha 7.

Skills and Feats: Climb +13, Hide +10, Move Silently +6; Improved Initiative¹, Lightning Reflexes, Stealthy.

Constrict (Ex): A choker deals 1d3+3 points of damage with a successful grapple check against a Large or smaller creature. Because it seizes its victim by the neck, a creature in the choker's grasp cannot speak or cast spells with verbal components.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a choker must hit a Large or smaller opponent with a tentacle attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict. Chokers receive a +4 racial bonus on grapple checks, which is already included in the statistics block.

Quickness (Su): Although not particularly dexterous, a choker is supernaturally quick. It can take an extra standard action or move action during its turn each round.

Skills: A choker has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened.

18. ABANDONED GUARD STATION

This room has dual entrances — the one you've just entered, and one on the opposite wall. Effort has been made to besmirch the holy symbols that adorn the lintel, though the efforts are clearly half-hearted and not entirely successful. Several panels of stone, roughly at head height, are luminescent.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: The celestials once used this room as a guard post. It retains a small amount of the holy energy that once resided here, and is shunned by the creatures of the Hall. Several stones light the room, enchanted with continual flame. It is important to note that the lingering Celestial magic here prevents the disease effects found elsewhere in this section.

Encounter Condition: Positive Energy

Tactics: An enterprising minor sorcerer has enchanted the continual flame stones with phantom trap, in the hopes of driving visitors into other, less than safe rooms. Please note that there is no actual trap here; the phantom trap may be detected with a DC 26 Search check.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this area, add four chokers. To decrease the challenge, remove the phantom trap.

19. THE TRAPPED CACHE

This circular room has seen better days. Still, it may be a relief from the haunted corridors outside. Silk sacks line one wall, and small stone barrels, fashioned from fallen columns, take up space next to them. An iron rack holding several pole arms and swords is bolted to one wall, and beneath it a leather case hangs. The room is musty.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: As further discouragement to unwelcome visitors, the driders have trapped the first of several caches of medical supplies, armor and weapons. Wary characters may notice that while this particular cache is dusty and clearly has not been used for quite some time (Spot DC 15), the medical supplies are still fresh.

Encounter Condition: N/A

• Terinav Root—Contact, Fortitude DC 16, initial damage 1d6 Dex, secondary damage 2d6 Dex

• Drow Poison—Injury, Fortitude DC 13, initial damage unconsciousness, secondary damage unconsciousness for 2d4 hours.

The Search and Disable Device DCs for these traps are 30.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of the encounter, increase the save DCs of the traps by +2. To decrease the challenge, use only one trap from above.

110. CHOKER LAIR

These rooms are stained and fouled with some unnameable excrement. Rusted iron doors hang half open. In places, the walls are jagged, broken. The only features not vandalized are the lintels and support beams that hold the ceiling in check, and even there the shadows gather thickly, bloated with seeming menace.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: These small cells, are now the lair of a gang of chokers. Led by a Medium choker leader (hp 52), these horrid beasts constantly squabble among themselves, only presenting a unified front when faced with intruders. The lair is strewn with random garbage from other sections of the prison complex. Due to the debris scattered about, characters must make Move Silently checks (–2 penalty for the rubble) opposed by a group Listen check by the chokers.

Encounter Condition: [Ambush], Cover

Tactics: Any noise the PCs create brings four chokers (hp 18, 16, 15, 11) to investigate within 1d4 rounds. If a battle occurs, the chokers ambush their foes in the central area. Every round the combat continues, two additional chokers (hp 16 each) join the fight, until there are three chokers per PC, plus the choker leader (who arrives one round after the first four chokers). The remaining members of the choker gang remain in reserve.

The chokers, while of animal intellect, are cunning and familiar with their environment, attacking from beneath loose rubble and, most often, the tops of doorways and from ceiling supports, using their 10 ft. reach to best advantage. Multiple chokers use the Aid Another action to grant attack bonuses to a single attacking choker.

If reduced to 50% or less hit points, the choker leader flees to Room 125, hiding in the secret room. Normal chokers fight until reduced to 50% or fewer hit points, fleeing into the maze of rooms, and waiting until the arcane healing of the Halls restores them to full health.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, arm the chokers with poison-tipped (drow blood) shortspears and shortswords. To reduce the challenge of this encounter, reduce the number of choker reinforcements to two per PC. If the PCs succeed in wounding the choker leader and half of their opponents, have the choker gang retreat, only to attack the PCs later, when they are at their weakest.

• Choker: CR 2; Small aberration; HD 3d8+3; hp 18, 16, 15, 11; Init +6; Spd 20 ft., climb 10 ft.; AC 17, touch 13, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +2; Grp +5; Atk +6 melee (1d3+3, tentacle); Full Atk +6 melee (1d3+3, 2 tentacles); Space/Reach 5 ft./10 ft.; SA Improved grab, constrict 1d3+3; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., quickness; AL LE; SV Fort +2, Ref +5, Will +4; Str 16, Dex 14, Con 13, Int 4, Wis 13, Cha 7.

Skills and Feats: Climb +13, Hide +10, Move Silently +6; Improved Initiative⁶, Lightning Reflexes, Stealthy.

Constrict (Ex): A choker deals 1d3+3 points of damage with a successful grapple check against a Large or smaller creature. Because it seizes its victim by the neck, a creature in the choker's grasp cannot speak or cast spells with verbal components.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a choker must hit a Large or smaller opponent with a tentacle attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict. Chokers receive a +4 racial bonus on grapple checks, which is already included in the statistics block.

Quickness (Su): Although not dexterous, a choker is supernaturally quick. It can take an extra standard action or move action during its turn each round.

Skills: A chokers has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can choose to take 10 on Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened.

Skills: A choker has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened.

111. READY ROOM

The secret door can be found with a successful DC 20 Search check. Inside a gouge in the wall are two narrow stones which must be squeezed together. A successful DC 16 Strength check is required to bring the stones together and open the secret door, which swings opens into the hallway.

What happened in this room is a mystery. Skeletal bodies lay scattered about the floor or smashed into walls, mangled beyond recognition. Though the skeletons are humanoid, their race is indeterminate. The armor and weapons here have been rendered useless by whatever calamity befell these warriors. A corrugated tunnel is present in the southeastern portion of the room. Any further inspection is interrupted as the corpses stir, wormlike forms as large as a human stirring to life beneath them!

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Six gricks (hp 28, 27, 26, 23, 21, 18) have wandered from Room 19 to gnaw through the dried husks and accidentally activated one of the functions of a ring of chameleon power, worn on the desiccated finger of a drow corpse. The ring grants the gricks a +10 circumstance bonus to their Hide checks while amidst the trash, rubble and detritus.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment

Tactics: The gricks exhibit subtlety against intelligent opponents. Upon detecting the PCs — lying in wait among the corpses and trash — they erupt from hiding and ambush intruders. The gricks fight until reduced to 50% their total hit points, before fleeing the Room.

Treasure: A DC 30 Search check reveals a ring of chameleon power among the rubbish and a DC 24 Appraise check reveals the ring is of celestial manufacture, perhaps provided to the unlucky ex-adventurer by the celestial wardens.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one grick per PC. To decrease the challenge, reduce the number of gricks to four.

✖ Grick: CR 4; Medium aberration; HD 4d8; hp 28, 27, 26, 23, 21, 18; Init +2; Spd 30 ft., climb 20 ft.; AC 16, touch 12, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +4; Grp +6; Atk +6 melee (1d4+2, tentacle); Full Atk +6 melee (1d4+2, 4 tentacles), -2 melee (1d3+1, bite); SA —; SQ Damage reduction 10/magic, darkvision 60 ft., scent; AL LE; SV Fort +0, Ref +2, Will +5; Str 14, Dex 14, Con 12, Int 3, Wis 14, Cha 5.

Skills and Feats: Climb +10, Hide +5/13*, Listen +6, Move Silently +4, Spot +6; Alertness, Track, Stealthy.

Skills: A grick has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on a Climb check, even if rushed or threatened.

112. HIDDEN GUARDROOM

The hallway here is rough, almost like a throat. Abruptly, the warm walls give way to smooth, regular stone, terminating in a dead end, decorated with tiles in a strange language.

If the PCs gain entry into the guardroom, read the following.

This room is plain and well preserved despite its apparent age. Several stone panels shed golden light, reflected in a series of round silver mirrors along one wall. Small runic plaques are beneath each mirror, their purpose not readily apparent.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This hidden guardroom was originally created to monitor the cells in Room 19. Finding the room requires a Search check at DC 25.

Entry into the room is accomplished by pressing a series of tiles to one side of the door in a specific sequence. The sequence can be determined by a legend lore spell, or with a DC 30 Search check. The room is small, but lit by the same continual flame effect found in Room 13. A permanent scrying effect allows a character in the room to observe the grick lair in Room 19. The runic plaques are in Celestial, and mark where each scrying mirror's sensor is placed.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the secret door Search check DC by 4. To decrease the challenge, decrease the initial Search check DC by 2.

113. DEATH AND DARKNESS

At the northernmost end of this corridor is a statue of a spider like being, though its features are worn away by time or a passing touch.

Encounter: The mechanism attached to the crude figurine is part of a trap the droids call Death and Darkness. Moving the statue triggers the trap. It was deliberately constructed to seem as if it opens a nearby secret door.

Encounter Condition: [Deep Darkness], [Total Concealment]

Tactics: When triggered, the trap casts heightened deeper darkness in a 60 ft. radius. Then the trap mechanism releases a cloud of alchemical dust that provides total concealment for 1d4 rounds.

If a source of open flame such as a torch or lantern is present, the dust bursts into searing flame, inflicting 5d6 fire damage. The creatures inhabiting the Halls are sensitive to dust, and there is a 25% chance each round of a Random Encounter.

♣ Death and Darkness Trap: CR 9; mechanical; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (heightened darkness, 10th-level wizard, 10 rounds), spell effect (alchemical device, fireball, 5d6 damage, DC 20 Reflex save, avoids); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 30.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the chance of a Random Encounter to 40%. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the death and darkness trap by 1d6.

114. HIS MAJESTY'S THRONE ROOM

This room is adorned with what some being surely thinks is luxury — half-rotted tapestries line the floors and walls, and a deeply scratched and pitted, but still ornate chair rests against one wall. More of the tapestries, along with what might be scrolls or scraps of scrolls, lay atop a wooden bed frame, making a crude mattress.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This room served as the choker leader's 'throne room' from which it lorded over its fellow chokers. Beyond the direct supervision of their superior, the other members of the choker gang foment rebellion. Having the intelligence to recognize the impending mutiny of its fellows, it moved its quarters to the communal living space in room 115.

The choker leader (Room 110) left behind several scraps of parchment that were stolen from a (now dead) rebel drow. The scraps of parchment (DC 18 Search check to find, DC 18 Decipher Script check to assemble, written in Undercommon) detail a particularly fiendish lock constructed from the living body of a drow involved in the almost forgotten attacks on the surface.

"It is certain that... and he is the son of... but the vile traitor, Mahir, has sentenced him to a fate worse than death! Only the venom of the slaves can open the flesh lock, and even then only by the touch of frost, so rare in these nighted halls... must write again later, deliver my message to the leader... I know where the cache lays! Our vengeance is at hand!"

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The scraps of parchment provide a valuable clue to the locks guarding Mahir's sorcerous cache, lost to nearly all the denizens of the Halls.

115. THE SCUTS

Half a dozen or more gray-skinned humanoids with freakishly long arms infest this room. A few emerge or go into doors along each wall, bearing trash or trinkets, eyes glaring hatefully about. They squabble among themselves frequently, even in the few moments they are observed.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Lowest-ranking among the chokers are these ten scuts (hp 16, 15, 14, 14, 14, 14, 14, 13, 12). Having yet to prove themselves in thievery, treachery, or battle against the gricks, these young bravos eagerly seek opportunities to advance among the gang. Three carry slings, while the rest fight with their "hands."

Encounter Condition: Cover

Tactics: The young scuts fight with impressive ferocity. Among the chokers, those armed with slings harass attackers from a distance while their comrades close. The chokers engaged in melee employ their superior reach against foes, and make the best use of their ability to climb walls, attacking from all directions. A noisy battle here (Listen check, DC 15) is likely to alert the elder chokers in Room 110, bringing 1d10 chokers to the battle within 1d4 rounds.

Treasure: The closets to the east and west of this Room hold a few piles of debris, 13 cp, an eye agate (15 gp), and a crumbled scroll of arcane lock that the scuts considered trash.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the elder chokers arrive within 2 rounds. To decrease the challenge, remove two chokers armed with slings.

♣ Scut, Choker: CR 2; Small aberration; HD 3d8+3; hp 16, 15, 14, 14, 14, 14, 14, 13, 12; Init +6; Spd 20 ft., climb 10 ft.; AC 17, touch 13, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +2; Grp +5; Atk +6 melee (1d3+3, tentacle) or +5 ranged (1d3, sling); Full Atk +6 melee (1d3+3, 2 tentacles) or +5 ranged (1d3, sling); Space/Reach 5 ft./10 ft.; SA Improved grab, constrict 1d3+3; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., quickness; AL LE; SV Fort +2, Ref +5, Will +4; Str 16, Dex 14, Con 13, Int 4, Wis 13, Cha 7.

Skills and Feats: Climb +13, Hide +10, Move Silently +6; Improved Initiative; Lightning Reflexes, Stealthy.

Constrict (Ex): A choker deals 1d3+3 points of damage with a successful grapple check against a Large or smaller creature. Because it seizes its victim by the neck, a creature in the choker's grasp cannot speak or cast spells with verbal components.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a choker must hit a Large or smaller opponent with a tentacle attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict. Chokers receive a +4 racial bonus on grapple checks, which is already included in the statistics block.

Quickness (Su): Although not particularly dexterous, a choker is supernaturally quick. It can take an extra standard action or move action during its turn each round.

Skills: A choker has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened.

116 THROUGH 118. GRICKS

These corridors in the lower Halls have been lost to the savage, bestial gricks. No one is sure where the creatures originated — perhaps they were created by Mahir's magical disaster, perhaps they wandered in from other areas. Or perhaps, they are a manifestation of the aberrant energies and twisted life spread throughout the Region — a theory only whispered by the more potent sorcerers among the ranks of the driders. Siglinde may suspect more, but what she knows, she does not reveal.

The gricks are not particularly intelligent, but they possess more than mere animal cunning. Sheer malevolence underlies their every action. Prey discovered by one grick becomes the target of several, as the scent, sight and sound of intruders propagates through the walls. The gricks possess the ability to disappear into the bloated flesh covered walls and ceiling, only to reappear and ambush unsuspecting characters.

The harmony in which the gricks live with the Halls, their greatest strength, is also their greatest weakness. Gricks in this area gain a +4 circumstance bonus to Hide and Move Silently checks, as they can become one with their surroundings. However, the sheer amount of living flesh in the area makes it difficult to single out any particular victim, and they suffer a –2 circumstance penalty to Spot and Listen checks.

RANDOM GRICK MUTATIONS

1d20	Mutation
1-5	Nothing
6	The grick is festooned with extra tentacles, gaining Multiattack and +5 ft. reach, but its speed is reduced -10 ft.
7	The grick is covered in luminescent slime. It receives a -8 circumstance penalty to Hide checks. Wizards may use the slime as a material component in light-based spells, increasing the duration by 10%. Gricks secrete enough slime for 1d6 castings. CR -1.
8	Eyes in all shapes, sizes, and colors cover the grick's body. It receives a +6 circumstance bonus to Search and Spot checks and it cannot be caught flat-footed, but is automatically stunned by spells such as flare . CR +1.
9	The grick gains the Regeneration (Ex). The grick regenerates 5 points per round unless wounded by fire or acid. CR +1.
10-11	The grick's outer skin is hard like a carapace, and acts as +6 natural armor. CR +1.
12-13	The grick is unhealthy and its Constitution is considered 8. Touching its dead body results in possible contagion. CR -1.
14	The grick's tentacles are covered in sharp spines. The grick's natural weapons are considered keen and wounding . CR +1.
15	The grick possesses leathery, cloak-like wings. The grick gains the ability to fly at 40 ft. per round. CR +1.
16	The grick is covered with slime that acts as a mimic's Adhesive (Ex) special ability. In addition, the slime provides the grick a +4 circumstance bonus to Climb checks. CR +1.
17	The grick is dense, weighing 1,200 lbs. and has its speed cut in half. It, however, gains a +8 bonus to Strength checks involving bull rushes or grapples.
18	The grick's tentacles constantly exude a contact poison. CR +1.
♣ Malyss Root Paste —Contact, Fortitude DC 16, initial damage 1 Dex, secondary damage 2d4 Dex
19	The grick's skin is dry, shriveled and cracked, constantly leaking vile ichor. When wounded, it continues to bleed as if struck by a wounding weapon. CR -1.
20	The grick has maximum hit points, plus Toughness (3). CR +1.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1-3	The walls ripple and writhe, stretching out long pseudopods that grope hungrily about the PCs.
4-8	The flesh lining the walls form into a demonic face that gabbles nonsense at the PCs, stringing together random words in a variety of languages from Celestial to Infernal to Undercommon. At the DM's discretion, the "face" may provide some clue as to what awaits the PCs, or it may throw them off the scent entirely.
9-11	Nothing
12-16	Two chokers are locked in mortal combat with a Large grick. When the PCs arrive, the chokers divert the grick toward the newly arrived prey, fleeing past them as fast as they can.
17-19	A wounded cloaker sneaks through the corridors, avoiding the gricks. It engages the PCs in conversation, but once they let down their guard, the cloaker ambushes them.
20	A hot wind blows through the corridor, the smell of fetid meat permeates the air. Odd striations along the walls pulse in time with the gusts of rancid winds that move in and out like a bellows... or a throat. Cursed 5, Echoes 5, Extreme Heat, Haunted.

116. WORMS IN THE ALCOVE

The walls and floor of this room are thick with iridescent purple slime. Whatever was in the room previously has long since dissolved leaving a gluey mess that sticks to both feet and equipment.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Six gricks (hp 11, 10, 10, 10, 9, 9) prowl this Room, responding to some noise or scent. They are looking for something, but they don't know what. When PCs enter the room, the gricks have dug under the slime and rubble (Spot check, DC 18 to notice), possible tracking something that has come through here. They attack once the PCs are within range.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness)

Tactics: The gricks employ few tactics, attacking intruders savagely, leaving the fallen where they lay or dragging unconscious PCs off to a corner. Their tactics and behavior are as chaotic as the unsavory masters who devised them.

This encounter works effectively well if the DM has seen the movie 28 Days Later.

Treasure: Under the slime and debris, the PCs find a mummified cat with a successful DC 22 Search check. It is not valuable, but a tell-tale sign of the inherent chaos of the Region.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add Poor Footing 5 that does not affect the gricks. To decrease the challenge, remove two gricks.

117. GRICK LAIR

The hungry and violent gricks in this area have smashed the locks on the iron doors, leaving the doors to swing open freely, creaking if disturbed.

Once clearly a block of cells for creatures of roughly human size, this area is now fouled with garbage. Several stones have crumbled from the ceiling, as well as an occasional fragment of support. The cells, even at this distance, give off a foul, meaty odor, unhampered by the yawning iron doors that once held their occupants in check.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is strewn with rubble and the remains of the dead. The floors and walls are disgusting, covered in foul ichor. Just standing in this Room should make the PCs feel ill and their boots squish the detritus beneath their feet. If that doesn't convince them the Room is disgusting, force a Will save against a fear check or a Fort save against disease.

Almost a dozen gricks (hp 19, 19, 17, 17, 15, 15, 15, 15) have made this Room their home, although most are in the cells when the PCs arrive. While most are tougher than normal, a pair of Large gricks (hp 40, 36) push the others around, ruling through intimidation and fear. Whichever door the PCs come through, the Large gricks are on the opposite side.

Encounter Condition: Diseased (cackle fever) 16 or Fear 15, Poor Footing 4, Stagnant Air

Tactics: Creatures wandering into the grick lair are confronted with the foul aberrations from every corner — gricks attack from the cells, launching from behind half-closed doors, as well as dropping onto the unwary from the rough ceiling. While PCs are attacked by the smaller gricks, the larger pair employ their superior reach against weaker foes.

This encounter is not easy and PCs should find themselves pushed against the wall. Some smaller gricks to pop out of cells, the PCs thought were empty. Let them feel safe before dropping two more creatures on top of them. The tempo here should be chaotic. Just as they think they have the upper hand, a grick that was playing dead gets back up or a vial of acid or alchemical fire (buried under the sludge) explodes under the heavy boot of a PC. Perhaps a trap that has never been sprung goes off at an inopportune moment. This encounter works best for DMs who think fast on their feet.

Treasure: Allow the PCs an hour to search every cell and corner of this Room. On a DC 30 Search check they find a bony drow hand clutching a iron key, leading to the locked door in Room 125.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add +20 hp to each grick. To decrease the challenge, remove the Large gricks entirely.

118. BLOCKED CORRIDOR

Once a larger corridor leading deeper into the corridors beyond it, this room is choked with rubble and debris. Though a few gaps in the fallen stones are present, the pile rises to kiss the ceiling. The entirety of the blockage seems unstable, and shadows move across it as if it were about to topple at any moment.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Not as harmless as it seems initially, this corridor was blocked with rubble by the celestials to prevent incursions by the horrors of the Halls. Over time, the rubble has settled and become a minor lair for a knot of four gricks (hp 20, 20, 19, 17).

Encounter Condition: Cover, Echoes 6

Tactics: Vicious and fearless, these creatures attack anyone who comes within sense range, striking from the rubble that provides them with cover (+4 AC) and withdrawing into it if badly injured. The gricks have a +8 bonus to their Hide checks due to the rocks and debris.

Treasure: N/A

119 THROUGH 121. CLOAKERS ALONE

The cloaklers living in this area work for the dark naga, Siglinde. When not on duty as guards or messengers, the cloaklers bide their time here, in a state of perverse contemplation and setting traps for the unwary. Where they came from is a mystery even unto themselves. Siglinde believes the cloaklers to be simply another aberration created by the unnatural vitality of the Halls; even she does not know what spawned the shadow-creatures.

Like so many other creatures in the Halls of Flesh, the cloaklers owe their existence to Mahir. His long-ago cataclysm spewed magical energy through the Region in a white-hot blast, incinerating many a luckless drow and leaving only tattered spirits and blackened shadows scorched into the stone walls. Years passed, and the curtains of mindless flesh expanded throughout rooms and corridors, swallowing the remains. The shadows infused into the flesh and slowly came to life.

No true memories remain to the cloaklers, but they do bear a fierce hatred for the driders. Thus, they take childish delight in assisting the rebel drow against the hated driders. If they ever uncovered Siglinde's little secret, they would turn upon her in a heartbeat and rend her limb from limb, a threat of which Siglinde is utterly unaware.

The cloaklers are masters of shadow, but there is one clue to their origin. When caught in strong light, such as that caused by a daylight spell, the shadows the cloaklers cast appear not only humanoid, but distinctly drow. The cloaklers themselves fear light, as much for the truth it reveals as for the shadows it dispels.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	Shadows crawl along the walls. At the end of a hall, for just a moment, the PCs can make out a humanoid figure, silhouetted against the moving flesh. When they reach the corner, the shadow is gone. This persists for 1d6 × 10 minutes. Distracting Visions 5.
2	A drider hangs in the middle of the hall, a rope wrapped around its flabby neck and its eight legs twitching gruesomely. The rope leads up into the shadows lurking along the ceiling, presumably attached to some outcrop. After a moment, the rope slithers down, dropping the dead drider in a heap.
3–15	Nothing
16–17	A pair of wounded cloaklers are returning to their lair after venturing too far into grick territory. If attacked, they pretend to flee, but their flight is carefully designed to lead their pursuers into an ambush.
18–19	Two chokers lay in the Room, recently dead. Their heads loll slackly on their shoulders, necks clearly broken. Negative Energy.

119. 'ROUND AND AROUND

This corridor unveils a hideous scene — three dark-skinned humanoids, lying in a heap to form some bloodstained indalo. Its meaning is unclear, but by the expressions on their mummified faces recommend these unfortunate souls died in terror's mortal grip.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The corpses are drider spies detected by the rebel drow. Assigned on a reconnaissance by Lorath (Room 1103), the drow captain, the spies found themselves trapped in the lower Halls. Murdered by the cloaklers, their bodies were dumped here as a warning to others.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: One of the spies bears a signet ring, indicating his allegiance to Lorath and the another bears a ring indicating his loyalty to the drow goddess.

EL: N/A

120. SPOILS OF WAR

The door to this Room can be locked, but presently is unlocked. A DC 35 Open Lock check is required to lock or unlock this door.

Stout wooden pegs line the walls of this room. Each peg bears a meticulously maintained tunic, tabard or surcoat. The symbols on the clothing either depict a spider or a striking viper.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These clothes were collected by the cloaklers from drow slain during expeditions to the lower Halls. Each is considered masterwork in quality. Should the cloaklers find a PC has stolen one of the items of clothing, their attitude automatically becomes Hostile.

Encounter Condition: [Safe]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A dozen items of masterwork clothing, worth 600 gp.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

121. CLOAKED IN WAITING

Perhaps a welcome respite from the decaying halls, these rooms seem clean, fresh even. While there is no light, at least the dust is swept away, and there is rough furniture scattered about. It does not appear to have been inhabited recently.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Not even the drow and driders know where these ten cloaklers (hp 51, 50, 48, 47, 46, 46, 45, 44, 43, 43) originated. These vile creatures lurk and waylay the occasional delver or drow guard unlucky enough to venture into their lair. The dark naga — Siglinde — in Room 131 occasionally makes use of the cloaklers to protect her own lair from other horrors that make their home in the Halls of Flesh, or to 'encourage' visitors.

The cloakler lair is meticulously clean, if damaged. Over time, the cloaklers have dragged furniture and other accouterments here to lend it the appearance of an abandoned guard complex.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), [Concealment], Cover, [Safe]

Tactics: As intruders approach, the cloaklers remain hanging from pegs along the walls until the fears of their visitors are allayed or they are attacked. A DC 30 Spot check is required to reveal the cloaklers for what they truly are.

Some of the cloaklers use their bodies to conceal the continual flame stones in the rooms, casting deep shadows. If left undiscovered, the cloaklers use shadow shift to confuse and frighten their prey.

If a creature or group of creatures is unwise enough to camp in these safe rooms, the cloaklers wait for the creatures to fall asleep, then moan, starting with their stupor effect. Once the creatures are held, the cloaklers descend and feast.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Spot check DC to notice the cloaklers to 35. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Spot check DC to 26; the cloaklers do not attack unless PCs make camp here.

Cloaklers are immune to these sonic, mindaffecting attacks. Unless otherwise specified, a creature that successfully saves against one of these effects cannot be affected by the same moan effect from the same cloakler for 24 hours. All save DCs for moan effects are Charisma-based.

Unnerve: Anyone within a 60-ft. spread automatically takes a –2 penalty on attack and damage rolls. Those forced to hear the moan for more than 6 consecutive rounds must succeed on a DC 15 Will save or enter a trance, unable to attack or defend themselves until the moaning stops.

Fear: Anyone within a 30-ft. spread must succeed on a DC 15 Will save or become panicked for 2 rounds.

Nausea: Anyone in a 30-foot cone must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or be overcome by nausea.

122. RECEPTION

A bizarre sight greets you here — a full table setting, complete with tableware, plates and candles. There is no food here but the room is kept meticulously clean.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: A single cloaker (hp 49) guards this Room, observing anyone coming through and reporting back to Siglinde (Room I31) when the intruders are asleep. Allow the PCs a DC 20 Spot check to notice the cloaker waiting in the darkness.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The cloaker here is tasked with observation, not battle. It would rather flee than fight. If attacked, it flies up beyond the PCs' reach and use its moan to incapacitate enemies before leaving.

Treasure: The tableware and dishes are heavy (50 lb.), but worth 250 gp.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a cloaker (hp 45). To decrease the challenge, remove the cloakers entirely.

122 THROUGH 133. SIGLINDE AND CLOAKERS

This area is held firmly in the serpentine grip of the dark naga, Siglinde (Room I31). Siglinde is older than the Halls themselves, and she lays her plots with her viper-like patience. She dismisses the drow as weaklings, though she outwardly assists their rebellion against their drider overlords. The driders she scorns as unimaginative; they spend their days enmeshed in petty intrigues and base pursuits. The cloakers she uses, as she uses any creature that falls into her clutches.

The cloakers here act as Siglinde's guards and couriers, ferrying messages between Siglinde and the rebel drow. They are under standing orders to bring any "interesting" intruders directly to Siglinde for interrogation. For the most part, the cloakers obey her orders; she has proven on more than one occasion that she can eavesdrop on them. Occasionally, though, their bloodlust overtakes their better judgment.

Siglinde has a terrible secret: the form she wears is not her own, and she does not wish to relinquish it until she can take its power for her own. Thus, she never, ever, gives any being reason to believe that the Eight Strikes Fang, a powerful magical weapon and bane of shapeshifters lost somewhere in the Region, could in any way inconvenience her. The very idea she would dismiss as preposterous — except in the hidden vastness of her mind.

Siglinde tolerates the occasional rebel drow patrol through her area, feeding them samples from the Flesh Pits, to keep their drider masters satisfied. Otherwise, she prefers to allow the cloakers and the other horrors of the Halls only to be powerful enough to keep the driders at bay. These twin measures ensure that her drow allies do not venture too deeply into the lower Halls, where she suspects the Eight Strikes Fang is hidden.

☛ Cloaker: CR 5; Large aberration; HD 6d8+18; hp 49; Init +7; Spd 10 ft., fly 40 ft. (average); AC 19, touch 12, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +4; Grp +13; Atk +8 melee (1d6+5, tail slap); Full Atk +8 melee (1d6+5, tail slap) and +3 melee (1d4+2, bite); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft. Skills and Feats: Hide +8, Listen +13, Move Silently +12, Spot +13; Alertness, Combat Reflexes, Improved Initiative.

Moan (Ex): A cloaker can emit a dangerous subsonic moan as a standard action. By changing the frequency, the cloaker can cause one of four effects. Cloakers are immune to these sonic, mind-affecting attacks. Unless otherwise specified, a creature that successfully saves against one of these effects cannot be affected by the same moan effect from the same cloaker for 24 hours. Fear: Anyone within a 30-foot spread must succeed on a DC 15 Will save or become panicked for 2 rounds.

Nausea: Anyone in a 30-foot cone must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or be overcome by nausea and weakness.

Stupor: A single creature within 30 ft. of the cloaker must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or be affected as though by a hold monster spell for 5 rounds. Even after a successful save, the creature must repeat the save if the cloaker uses this effect again.

Engulf (Ex): A cloaker can try to wrap a Medium or smaller creature in its body as a standard action. The cloaker attempts a grapple that does not provoke an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and bites the engulfed victim with a +4 bonus on its attack roll. It can still use its whiplike tail to strike at other targets.

Attacks that hit an engulfing cloaker deal half their damage to the monster and half to the trapped victim.

Shadow Shift (Su): A cloaker can manipulate shadows. This ability is effective only in shadowy areas and has three possible effects.

123. THE CELL

This room is, in fact, two rooms. An outer corridor surrounds an inner room and the walls are crystal. Shattered iron rings decorate the floor, and the cloudy view offered by the once transparent walls of the inner chamber show that it is completely vandalized. Illegible from without, something indistinct is carved into the walls of the inner cell.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Once containing a powerful hezrou, this cell is now abandoned, though haunted by the echo of the demon's power. The wall surrounding the inner cell is clear crystal, allowing one to view the foul interior.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 4, Haunted, Stagnant Air

Tactics: Any creature entering the hezrou's former cell is assaulted by a stench, and subsequently uncovers sickening, blood-caked runes left behind before the demon's escape. Creatures capable of reading the runes (Infernal, or Decipher Script check, DC 30) become enraged, as per rage (DC 20 Will save, negates), attacking anyone in sight.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, reading the foul runes acts as suggestion (Will save, DC 22, negates) upon the PC triggering them and affecting the others PCs within 30 ft. as rage. To reduce the challenge of the encounter, remove the Stagnant Air.

124. FLESHY CHAMBER

Due to the flesh covering the walls here, PCs must succeed at a DC 12 Strength check to open the doors.

This small room is claustrophobic. Worse yet, the walls are coated with mucus and rubbery flesh, hot and unpleasant to the touch. The echoes from the halls, combined with the unnerving manner of the room, make it sound as though the walls were breathing.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room and 126 are both persistent nuisances for Siglinde (Room 131) and the cloakers. Despite their best efforts, the flesh that grows here continues to grow after it is slain. Lately, Siglinde has had her mind on other matters (the drow rebellion) and has neglected to clean here, making it a safe haven for PCs... if their stomachs can handle it.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 6, Diseased (any) 15, Poor Footing 4

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

125. THE ABANDONED TEMPLE

The lock on the door to this Room is intact, and given that there is only a single entrance, the room is quite defensible. It is presently unlocked. It requires a DC 30 Open Lock check to lock or unlock (or the key on the drow in Room 117).

Columns hold up the ceiling of this chamber. Half a dozen desiccated corpses clad in silks on the floor, their bodies twisted and contorted with whatever agony, their skin dark as pitch. The columns here have been carved in the likeness of some dark goddess, though several of them appear melted, as if from great heat. At the far end of the central hallway, three drow bodies have been strung up, nailed to the stone, and burned in effigy.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This Room once served as a temple to the dark goddess of the drow. Since the disaster unleashed by Mahir and his sorcerers, the temple was abandoned. The continual flame stones present in some of the other rooms of this part of the prison are not present here, leaving the Room in total darkness.

The entire Room radiates evil and transmutation.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness, Negative Energy, Unhallowed 4

Tactics: If the door remains unlocked (and after the PCs spend 30 minutes in this Room) roll for a Random Encounter.

Treasure: If the PCs spend an hour here searching, allow each a DC 25 Search check. Each success indicates the PCs have found an oddly carved stone on one of the six columns in the Room. Each of these stone bears the sigil of the drow goddess and radiates evil (alternately these stones can be found with a DC 20 Spellcraft check if detect evil is cast in the direction of the columns).

These sigils once produced wall of fire, creating a ring of heat that guarded the occupants in the center of the Room from anything entering. The magic of the sigils is now warped, however, and they merely telegraph that evil once lived here. If a PC spends an hour studying the sigils and succeeds at a DC 15 Spellcraft check or a DC 20 Knowledge (arcana) he not only learns what is wrong with the pillars, but how to correct it. Unfortunately, the PCs lack the equipment necessary to rebuild the columns.

After all this, allow the PC with the highest Intelligence score (or the one examining the columns) a DC 15 Intelligence check to realize that the columns once ward against anyone tampering with the magic in this Room. The wards not only produced a wall of flame, but guarded against anyone stealing from the Room. If the PCs are smart enough to pull down the bodies from the back hallway, they find a niche in the wall, where an item of great power was once stored.

126. FLESH CHAMBER

The walls here are slimy and ribbed, pulsing with ichor that drawn from the very stone itself. A hallway twists around the corner and out of view, slime and skin caking the walls.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room and Room 124 are both persistent nuisances for Siglinde and the cloaklers. Despite their best efforts, the flesh that grows here continues to grow after it is killed. Lately, Siglinde has had her mind on other matters, like the drow rebellion, and has neglected to clean here, making it a safe haven for PCs... if their stomachs can handle it.

Encounter Condition: Diseased (demon fever) 19, Distracting Visions 4, [Fear 14], Poor Footing 6, Stagnant Air

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the PC follow the hallway all the way around, they find a dead drow, his skin and flesh caked to the floor. A DC 14 Will save is needed not to become nauseated. Another DC 18 Will save is required if the PCs wish to examine the body. Lifting the body requires a DC 12 Strength check, which rips skin from the body as it clings to the ever-growing flesh of the hall.

Around the neck of the dead drow is a thin rope with small heart-shaped vial. Inside the vial are three doses of giant wasp poison.

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of the Will saves by +2. To decrease the challenge, replace the giant wasp poison with a potion of lesser restoration (3 doses).

127. STAGING AREA

This room holds fewer of the strange oozes and fungi that afflict the other walls in the prison. Some effort is made to scrape and scrub away the filth and grime, though truly it only serves to reveal the scars that catastrophe has left here. The northern wall is blasted away, leaving a gaping hole leading to the chambers beyond. To the southwest, an iron door stands, closed and rusted nearly shut, its twin in the northwest firmly sealed by stone that has run like melted wax.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Once used as a staging area by first the drow, then the driders, this cross-shaped Room sits abandoned, shunned by the its former occupants as bad luck. Unfortunately for the drow and driders, and perhaps fortunately for the other denizens of the prison, the ill-reputation of this Room conceals an important secret — the hidden entrance to the sorcerer Mahir's cache of magic.

Sealed Door: 6 in. thick; Hardness 12; hp 120; break DC 35.

Clues to the cataclysm that caused the Halls to be abandoned can also be found here. A DC 25 Search check uncovers scraps of parchment, once part of the cabal's spellbooks, that radiate magic and an assortment of alchemical items. One item in particular, a flask of still-fresh drider venom, may be useful to the PCs later on.

Beyond the sealed door is a short corridor, apparently blocked by more of the melted stone.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: The door in the northeastern corner of the Room is covered with stone melted by Madness' ground manipulation ability. Chipping away at the stone is noisy work, and brings creatures to investigate the racket, after 15 minutes [roll for a Random Encounter].

Treasure: A few scattered bits of metal worth 20 gp and a flask containing three doses of drider venom can be found after 15 minutes of searching.

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, automatically introduce a wandering monster into the Room after 15 minutes (whether the PCs chip at the stone or not). To decrease the challenge, a Random Encounter only occurs after 1 hour.

128. THE DAMNED CORRIDOR

The walls of this corridor are slick with an oily substance or slime, leaving an unpleasant stink in the air. An iron portcullis stands to the north, and a curiously open portal is to the south; beyond it, a small, shimmering ball of light hovers. To the east, a large hole is ripped into the wall, blasted out from within. Curiously, no debris litters the smooth floor below.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Originally intended to guard the laboratory in Room 134 against an escape of prisoners, this complex magical trap is designed to incapacitate intruders instead of killing them.

The trap in this Room is perversely complex, combining both spells and mechanical contrivances. An intruder entering the north-south hallway near Room 128 is confronted by a series of pressure plates on the floor, ceiling and walls. The plates on the ceiling and walls have been disabled over the years since the cataclysm that rocked the prison complex; only the floor plates work properly.

Triggering the floor plates activates the trap.

In the first round after activation (thus allowing PCs or creatures time to fully enter the trap), the north-south floor between Rooms 128 and 129 collapses into a pair of steep downward sloping ramps, 60 ft. deep. As the ramps are activated, grease takes effect, making the ramps slippery and dumping those caught in the trap to the bottom of a pit. Every creature that slides to the bottom of the ramps takes 3d6 falling damage and is immediately subjected to the trap's second spell effect — waves of exhaustion. The waves of exhaustion target every creature. After 5 rounds, they are grappled by telekinesis (the glowing ball seen in the Room description), and carried to open cells at the rear of the Room.

Once all creatures have been deposited in the cells, the warden trap activates a modified wall of ice spell, creating a wall 18 in. thick with 54 hp. If the wall is attacked with heat-based spells, weapons or effects, it takes full damage. Shattering the wall by means other than fire causes it to explode, dealing 9d6 damage to the attackers in the form of icy shrapnel. If the wall is subjected to fire-based attacks (a favorite tactic for both demons and devils), it melts normally until the wall is reduced to 10 hp or less. At that time, the wall is reduced to a thick, clinging fog, duplicating the effects of a mind fog spell cast by an 18th-level caster.

In all cases, once intruders are corralled in the cells, the hidden guardroom in Room 112 is alerted, though there is no one present to respond to the summons.

Encounter Condition: [Fog 10]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Search and save DCs of the warden trap by +2. To decrease the challenge, do not have the wall of ice explode when attacked with fire-based spells.

129. CROSSFIRE

The narrow passageway makes marching difficult and short ceiling cramps your steps, making it challenging to raise your arms. Your shoulders scrape against the walls and the sleeves of your clothes grow damp with ichor. As you reach an intersection it gets harder and harder to breathe.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: As the PCs reach the intersection allow the leader character a DC 16 Spot check to notice the blackened walls at the intersection. If the PC succeeds by 10 or more, allow him to notice the four vents built into the direct corners of each wall, the nozzle of each vent blackened with ash.

The PCs have stumbled into a 4-way burning hands trap, that triggers as soon as a PC steps onto the center of the intersection. The jets of flame point toward the center, but a PC standing in an adjacent square must make Reflex saves as well (albeit at a +4 circumstance bonus); one for each vent.

Encounter Condition: [Smoke], Stagnant Air

Tactics: The object here is not to kill the PCs, but either separate them from one another or force them to turn back. If they are coming from Room 122 or 28, this is double jeopardy because the PCs must weigh the damage to determine what is worse. Each of them getting scorched or

However, what the PCs may or may not immediately know is that the trap takes 3 rounds to reset, so only the first and last PCs are likely to get singed if they move fast enough.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of each burning hands trap vent to 4d4 or 5d4. To decrease the challenge, increase the reset time of the burning hands trap to 5 rounds.

130. SIGLINDE'S CROSSROADS

This cuneiform corridor might go unnoticed, save for a single feature: at its southern end, a series of concentric iron and gold rings, fully three ft. across at their largest are set into the wall. Small indentations dot each ring randomly.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room is the first line of defense against the wandering horrors that populate the Halls. At the southern extremity of the crossroads is a complex series of rings melded into the walls. The rings contain several effects, any or all of which can be activated or deactivated by Siglinde from her lair (Room 131).

Anyone entering the intersection of this Room triggers a silent alarm, alerting the dark naga to their presence. Siglinde typically uses scrying on the Room to observe intruders. In any case, the other three portions of the trap only trigger if the PCs investigate the wall or Siglinde sets them off (she cannot trigger the first ring).

The outermost ring projects wall of ice extending from the southern hall to the northern door, effectively sealing the area from floor to ceiling. Curiously, this spell effect is an artifact of the celestials' occupation of the area, and radiates a faint aura of goodness.

The middle ring can be turned, as if it were a trigger mechanism for a secret door. Doing so triggers touch of idiocy on the PC touching the ring. A DC 30 Knowledge (architecture and engineering), DC 25 Craft (trapmaking), DC 30 Search check (Rogue only), or detect secret doors reveals the mechanism, but unless the PC succeeds by 5 or more, he believes the mechanism turns off the trap effect. Otherwise, he knows the middle ring is a trap and that it must be disarmed. In addition, if the PC does not succeed by 10 or more, he does not realize that the inner ring is also trapped, but he should be able to draw a logical conclusion.

The innermost ring is Siglinde's final defense against particularly annoying pests — it contains phantasmal killer. When the trap is triggered, either by a clumsy intruder or at Siglinde's will, the phantasmal killer springs forth and attacks a random target within 15 ft. If triggered by Siglinde, this trap is preceded by touch of idiocy (again).

A DC 32 Disable Device check can bypass the first and second rings of the trap. However, a DC 37 Disable Device check is required to bypass the last ring. In any case, the trap resets itself magically after 2d6 rounds.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Search and Disable Device DCs by 2 each. To decrease the challenge, only two of the rings are functioning at any given time.

131. SIGLINDE'S LAIR

These circular chambers are adorned with tapestries, as well as a series of widely spaced iron bars snaking across the ceiling and walls. The tapestries are abstract, depicting sinuous shapes and bright colors. Incense burns here, driving back the fetid odors of the hallways.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly, but appears Friendly

Encounter: This series of chambers serves as the home for Siglinde (hp 70), a dark naga sorceress, who entered the prison for reasons yet unaccounted for. Siglinde is accommodating to visitors, once they have proven their sincerity. She thinks nothing of manipulating or outright lying to anyone she encounters, and does so if it benefits her personally. Siglinde's lair is guarded by magical traps and effects, including her sorcery.

Siglinde rarely allows visitors into her inner chambers. The first sight greeting the PCs is the forward chamber of her lair, in the east. To impress her visitors, the dark naga collected the a few leftovers and gaudy decorations from the northern part of the dungeon. Deeper chambers become progressively more practical, eventually giving way to Siglinde's laboratory, assembled from the leavings of the drider laboratory in Room 120.

Siglinde has a secret that is conveyed to not a single soul she encounters — Mahir was not the only survivor of the terrible calamity unleashed by the forgotten drider master sorcerer. Once, Siglinde was among the trusted circle of casters. A touch of vile arcane energies combined with attacks of Madness stripped away her natural form, leaving her with the visage of a dark naga. Siglinde knows of the existence of the master sorcerer's hidden cache in Rooms 142.

Currently, she is conspiring with the drow slaves guards and their captain Lorath (Room 1103) to overthrow the drider. A successful DC 25 Diplomacy check entices Siglinde to reveal that there is a member of Mahir's cabal still living within the Halls of Flesh; important, as it is one part of the key to unlock the cache.

What she is not telling the drow, of course, is that she plans to continue Mahir's experiments, and with the aid of the master sorcerer's cache, regain her form as drow while retaining the sorcerous abilities of the dark naga. If adventuring PCs prove useful, Siglinde thinks nothing of stalling her drow allies in favor of a more immediate solution... and should the PCs be killed by the magical traps or the denizens of the Halls, so much the better.

Siglinde is, as may be guessed, motivated purely by self-interest. If angered, she can be as dangerous and lethal an opponent as her ally, the drow guard captain Lorath. Encountering adventurers, Siglinde does everything within her power (including enchantment spells) to persuade them to help her. Given the opportunity, she sacrifices such pawns if it will move her closer to her goals of both acquiring magical power and escaping the dungeon. She is no fool, though, and prefers to maintain an air of seductiveness, so much the better to preserve her pawns' usefulness for as long as possible.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment, Cover

Tactics: Siglinde is less a direct combatant and more of a schemer. She prefers guile and trickery over melee. She has altered her lair to allow her easy escape if confronted by a superior force, physically or magically. If attacked, Siglinde casts displacement on herself defensively and targets the strongest-seeming member of the party with a ray of enfeeblement. At the earliest opportunity, she flees to one of the rear chambers, triggering a trap identical to the one she set at the crossroads of Room 117 to deter pursuit.

Treasure: Siglinde's lair contains tapestries and assorted gems worth a total of 1653 gp. The high quality magical components present can be used by sorcerers or sorcerers to increase the save DC of the Enchantment or Illusion schools by 2 for up to 2d20 castings.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four cloak-ers or a pair of 5th-level drow fighters as guards. To decrease the challenge, set Siglinde's Initial Attitude to Friendly.

132. FLESH PIT

This room reeks of foul alchemy mingling with it a taste of strong soap. To the west is a pitted and crudely-patched iron railing and gate set into the floor. Beyond the railing yawns a precipice plunging down into doom. A sludgy, bubbling noise rises from the pit below, as something shifts and squirms wetly in the shadows.

Initial Attitude: N/A [Hostile]

Encounter: Siglinde maintains this chamber for two reasons — providing her drow allies with 'specimens' to present to their drider masters, and to mollify the drow, preventing them from venturing further into her domain.

On Siglinde's orders, offal from the creatures of the Halls is cast into the pit on the western edge of the room by the cloak-ers, where it melds into a mindless, slimy mass of tissue similar to that infesting the lower Halls. When needed, the drow use longswords to scoop chunks of living flesh from the pit below, dropping it into sacks or other containers, presenting the spoils as 'samples' for the driders.

As Siglinde has discovered, the Room must be kept scrupulously clean, lest the mindless flesh within the pit senses something living is present and escapes its confines to seek it out.

Encounter Condition: [Hazardous Footing 15]

Tactics: PCs approaching the edge of the pit put themselves in the way of significant danger — the flesh-thing residing in the pit, while not precisely a creature, is still dangerous. The dried flesh near the railing makes footing precarious.

Anyone within 15 ft. of the iron railing or gate must make a DC 15 Reflex save, or slide down into the pit, taking 1d6 falling damage. Once the PC is in the pit, the flesh-thing lashes out with slimy pseudopods, grappling its victim. Once its tentacles wrap around its prey, the fleshy mass emits poisons and acids, as it digests the unfortunate creature and incorporates his flesh into its own. If a character escapes the flesh-thing's grapple, a successful DC 25 Climb check is required to escape the pit and return to safer ground. The flesh-thing cannot be killed, though inflicting 50 or more points of damage on it or a targeted dispel magic causes it to become quiescent for 1d10 minutes.

◆ Flesh-Thing: CR 7; special: visual trigger; automatic reset; Atk +7 melee 1d6+4 plus 2d6 acid, 1d4+7 tentacles; multiple targets (up to six tentacles per target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares). Search DC 22, Disable Device N/A.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four drow fighters, who are retrieving a sample of flesh from the pit. To decrease the challenge, reduce the DC of the Climb check to 18 and allow PCs who fall into the pit 1d4 rounds to escape before the flesh-thing senses them.

133. SIGLINDE'S PERIMETER

This room is slime-free. Lumps of charred flesh, dried to husks, litter the floor. Nearby, what appears to be a door is set flush with a stone wall. A series of interlocking metal rings covers the door.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Siglinde (Room 131) maintains this Room as additional protection from the drider and wandering horrors of the Halls of Flesh, employing a similar trap to that in Room 130, with the addition of a second trap to further discourage unwanted visitors.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: There are two traps present here. The first is identical to the Siglinde's rings trap found in Room 130. It is supplemented by a black tentacles trap nearby that forces intruders into Siglinde's rings.

134 THROUGH 144. MAHIR'S LAB AND CACHE

Sought after by drider and drow alike, the lost laboratory and secret cache of the sorcerer Mahir has kept its secrets hidden from prying eyes since the well-documented magical disaster of long ago. Though the laboratory is functionally harmless, Mahir guards his secret cache of lore with devious traps and guardians.

Mahir's cache is avoided by most of the creatures in the Halls of Flesh. Even Siglinde, who is aware of both the cache's location and its deepest secrets, does not dare venture here. To the driders, this domain is an ill-omen in and of itself, the epicenter of the magical disaster that created Anguish and Madness and rendered a good half of the Halls uninhabitable. The drow fear the echoes of the cataclysm that still ripple through the cache, and the horrors that now haunt the abandoned chambers. If the edges of the magical disaster created such abominations as gricks and cloaklers, what could have been born from the heart of the storm?

One of the irreconcilable things about Mahir's cache is that the omnipresent pulsing tissue found in the other Halls is conspicuously absent here. The walls are scorched, cracked and crazed in places, but remain free of the aberrant growths. This does not mean that the rooms making up Mahir's cache are less dangerous, however; the wild magics released in the rituals failure are absorbed by the very stone of the dungeon.

Other curiosities are the large, curved fragments of bronze embedded in the walls, floors and ceilings. A successful DC 30 Knowledge (nature) roll reveals that these are the shattered fragments of a bronze dragon egg; if the PCs have already encountered Anguish or Madness, this sheds a light on the source of their draconic traits.

The failure of Mahir's great experiment was born of several causes. First, the egg stolen from the bronze dragon imprisoned in Region K was ill-suited to such experimentation. The phasm was instructed to retrieve the egg of a black or red dragon, both known to be imprisoned elsewhere in the dungeon, but deemed the job too risky. Second, the magical components involved in the ritual were secretly tampered with by a drow sorcerer awaiting his transformation. After the ritual, that sorcerer fled to the east rather than face the punishment of his drider masters. Third, the magical weapon Eight Strikes Fang was stolen by rebel drow just before the ritual. Although it could not have prevented the failure of the ritual, it could have ameliorated the effects and slain Anguish and Madness. The phasm trapped in the cache is aware of the first event, but not the second and third.

134. THE LABORATORY

Unlike the prison status quo, this room has lights. Radiant balls pin-wheel bouncing from the walls, ceiling and floor, casting a shadowy beam over everything.

Scattered across the floor and walls are the remnants of an unnamed long-abandoned magical laboratory; whatever workings were once held here, nothing of interest remains. Indeed, even the walls are pitted and cracked, pale tendrils of oozing flesh. To the north, a maze of passages have been blasted out by some now forgotten cataclysm.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This Room originally served as the laboratory of the sorcerer Mahir and his cabal. Here, the driders carried out their unholy experiments, twisting and warping the flesh of their victims. That taint still lingers in the room to the current day.

The balls of arcane light that illuminate the room are deceptive — while they appear to light the room, they instead cast continual darkness, masked by a minor image in the form of balls of magical light.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Visions 5, Echoes 2

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the PCs spend 30 minutes searching the Room, they find 1d6 vials of acid, a cursed scroll (casts baleful polymorph on the reader as a 12th-level sorcerer), 200 gp in silver bar stock, and 1d4 vials of alchemist's fire.

EL: Varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one 5th-level drow fighter for each PC, the Disciple of Madness (from Room 17), or four gricks. To decrease the challenge, reduce the hp of Anguish or Madness by -20 if they arrive.

135. TREACHEROUS REAGENTS

Wonders lie close at hand here — neatly labeled in spiky script, jars and bottles, vases and boxes are neatly stacked on the walls, as if waiting for a hand to retrieve them.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The appearance of this room is deceptive. The reagents and spell components have been cleverly altered — all the PCs a DC 30 Knowledge (arcana) check to determine the alterations — to be a terrible danger for those who would use them.

REAGENTS EFFECTS CHART

2	The spell area of effect or duration (or both) is cut in half.
3	The spell slot is lost, but the spell effect goes off 1d4 rounds later.
4	Spell effect lasts for 1 round only, no matter what its duration. Instantaneous spells continue to fizzle, but produce no additional effect.

15	The spell is Extended, but the caster suffers 1d4 damage per level of the spell.
16	The spell is Heightened, but the caster suffers 1d4 damage per level of the spell.
17	The spell is Maximized, but the caster suffers 1d8 damage per level of the spell.
18	Caster is struck blind for 1d6 hours. A DC 25 Heal check reveals the condition is temporary. However, the blindness can only be healed by magical means before the duration expires.
19	Caster is struck deaf for 1d6 hours. A DC 25 Heal check reveals the condition is temporary. However, the deafness can only be healed by magical means before the duration expires.
20	Caster becomes the target of the spell.

136. HIDDEN CACHE ENTRANCE

This corridor was once subjected to immense heat. Stone flowed like molten wax, then cooled into smooth, ropy bands along walls, ceiling, and floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Beyond the sealed door is a short corridor, apparently blocked by more of the melted stone. However, this is not the case. A hidden catch at the end of the corridor (Search check DC 28) opens a panel, gritty with dust. Within, a magical statuette of Mahir awaits. One round after the panel is opened, the magical lock (a permanent magic mouth) speaks in Undercommon.

"To pass beyond these doors, you must answer questions two, the number of the cursed Twins. The first. Who is the Master of this place?"

The answer is Mahir.

"The second. How many of the Master's brood still live within these haunted corridors?"

The second question is likely to be more difficult for PCs to answer; Siglinde (Room 131) is the last surviving member of the original cabal that still resides in the Halls of Flesh, and she is unlikely to be recognized by the PCs as a former drider, unless the lock can be tricked (see below). If they have successfully negotiated with the naga, the riddle becomes significantly easier. The answer, no matter how the PCs arrive at it, is one.

A DC 20 Bluff or Diplomacy check can be used (with appropriate role-playing) to trick the magical lock (a somewhat intelligent magical apparatus) into revealing one of the following pieces of information. However, if the PCs do not interact with the lock, do not give this information away.

- There were originally 12 members of the sorcerous cabal in addition to Mahir.
- Of the original cabal, there were two survivors.
- One of the survivors of the accident fled north beyond the Halls.
- The second survivor was transformed into a serpent by the arcane backlash of the accident.

If a DC 30 Search check is made, the magical lock may be bypassed by attacking the hidden door directly. The door is thick stone reinforced with iron bands cunningly aged to blend seamlessly into the stone.

Stone Door: Hardness 20, hp 120, Break DC 35

If the PCs cannot answer the question, or if the questions are answered incorrectly, the lock refuses to open and the walls scream. The scream is of such intensity and torment that PCs must make a DC 20 Will save or become shaken for 24 hours. This is a mind-affecting fear effect.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 6, [Fear 20], Haunted

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of the Bluff or Diplomacy checks against the magical lock by 4. To decrease the challenge, the lock is damaged and only asks one question.

137. THE CHAMBER OF SORROWS

This Room has continual deeper darkness cast. If the PCs are capable of seeing through the deeper darkness, read the following.

This roughly cubical room is illuminated by a flickering radiance cast by a pillar of black basalt at its center. Unlike the preceding chamber, it is offal-free. The only sign of decrepitude is the dust of ages that fills the air and cakes the floor in murky clumps. To the north, south and east lie gleaming iron doors surrounded by stone lintels. Stone plaques are set into the face of each door, twisted, unpleasant-looking script etched into each of them.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This chamber serves as the entryway to Mahir's hidden magical cache, lost for now for centuries. As such, it is rife with traps, tricks and security measures. As might be inferred, the deceased drider sorcerer bore neither love nor trust for his compatriots.

This Room is under the effect of continual deeper darkness combined with major image. The illusion cast is filtered torchlight, centered on the hollow pillar. The light only radiates in a 5-ft. radius, however. The pillar does not radiate magic.

A DC 30 Spot check reveals an aura of numbing cold radiating from the immediate area of the pillar, and a DC 32 Search check allows the PCs to discover the secret hidden within — a cache of sickly gray icicles. Intended as an emergency set of keys for Mahir, these spikes of frozen poison can be used to open the living lock north of this Room. The frozen poison lasts for 1d10 rounds before melting, unless treated with a cold-based spell such as ray of frost.

The doors are detailed below.

Eastern Door. Amongst the doors, this one could either be considered the most or the least dangerous. The door itself radiates significant heat, though not enough to damage a creature coming into contact with it. The door, unlike the others, radiates weak abjuration (resist energy (fire); Spellcraft DC 17 to identify). Its plaque reads, in Ignan: "Feed me and I live. Give me drink and I die. What am I?" The answer in this case is 'fire.' The answer to this riddle must be spoken in Undercommon, and unlocks this portal, which leads to Region J.

Eastern Door: 3 in. thick; Hardness 10; hp 120; Break DC 28.

Northern Door. This sturdy portal is locked when the PCs initially enter the room. Its stone plaque reads, in Undercommon: "I cannot be seen, cannot be felt, cannot be heard, cannot be smelt. I lie behind the stars and beneath the hills. I end life and kill laughter." The answer to this riddle is 'the dark.' The answer must be spoken aloud in Undercommon. Answering the riddle correctly unlocks the door and allows passage into the Rooms beyond.

Northern Door: 3 in. thick; Hardness 10; hp 120; Break DC 30.

Southern Door. This door has seen better days, and is easy to destroy. Its plaque reads, in Elvish: "I pass before the despised sun, yet make no shadow. What am I?" The answer in this case is 'the wind.' Spoken aloud in Undercommon, the answer to the riddle unlocks the door and opens it with an ear-piercing shriek. Once opened, the door cannot be closed again.

Southern Door: 3 in. thick; Hardness 8; hp 60; Break DC 25.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, roll for a Random Encounter after each door opens. To decrease the challenge, the answers to each riddle must be spoken in the language in which the riddle is composed.

138. THE LIVING LOCK

This Room has continual deeper darkness cast. If the PCs are capable of seeing through the deeper darkness, read the following.

No more than two paces beyond the northern door lies a second iron portal, shattered but still hanging just barely on to its hinges.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These rooms comprise the true legacy of the sorcerer Mahir. Though difficult to access, the secrets contained within these benighted chambers are key to defeating the deadly Twins that terrorize the Halls of Flesh.

The Room directly north of the entrance is thick with a death and darkness trap. The dust has lost potency over the years; however, a PC that stumbles into it — DC 20 Reflex save to avoid being covered in the dust — provides aberrations within the Halls a +2 morale bonus to attacks and damage, as the creature is driven into a frenzy of violence and hunger. The effects of the dust fade within 1d4 days. A DC 28 Craft (alchemy) check reveals the nature and likely effects of the dust.

Death and Darkness Trap: CR 9; mechanical; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (heightened darkness, spell level 8th, 10th-level, 10 rounds), spell effect (alchemical device, fireball, 5d6 damage, DC 20 Reflex save, avoids); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 30.

A secret door is set into the eastern wall requires a DC 35 Search check to locate (due to the darkness), and is the first entrance to the deeper chambers. Once located, opening the door is a difficult task; the locking mechanism for the door is located on the ceiling and is found by a successful DC 30 Search check and is only reachable with a DC 20 Climb check.

Exploration of the lock mechanism (Disable Device check, DC 25 or Search check DC 30) reveals something peculiar — the lock is alive. The locks on all the secret doors in this area are part of a single being; its name lost to the shadows. The drow who secured the hidden doors here was one of Mahir's closest advisors, but he betrayed the sorcerer during their battle on the surface. As punishment for his treachery, Mahir used his flesh-warping magics to imprison his former confederate within the stone walls thus forcing it into eternal servitude to guard the mad sorcerer's dark secrets.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 8, Distracting Noises 6, Distracting Visions 5, Fear 15, Haunted, Unhallowed 6

Tactics: Normal lockpicks cannot open the living lock; it has an effective Strength of 25 to break such tools. The key is at once perverse and appropriate to the punishment — drider venom (found in Room 127, for instance) paralyzes the muscles that lock the hidden doors. For the door in this chamber, the poison must be frozen and inserted into the lock 'mechanism' (actually the unfortunate drow's eye socket).

If the PCs are successful, a thin, high-pitched wailing (duplicating the effects of a fear spell, Will save DC 20) emanates from the walls for one round before the first secret door opens.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of the Search check by 2. To decrease the challenge, reduce the DC of the Search check by 2.

139. DOOR NUMBER ONE, TWO, OR THREE?

This small chamber possess no doors whatsoever. The blackened walls are coated with lava, offering no escape.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There are two secret doors leading out of this chamber, each requiring a DC 30 Search check to locate. The northern secret door's locking mechanism is located high in one corner, requiring a DC 20 Climb check to access. Opening this door requires a dose of drider venom be dripped into a concealed basin (Search check, DC 30). The door opens onto a steep ramp leading into a deep pit.

The eastern secret door's lock is set directly above the lintel (Search check, DC 28), and requires a successful DC 25 Climb check to access. To unlock this portal, characters must insert a piercing weapon poisoned with drider venom into the lock. The blade must be left in place for two consecutive rounds for the muscles locking the door to release, allowing the PCs to pass beyond it.

To complicate matters, modified confusion (Will save, DC 23) exists in this room, preventing those who come under its influence from recognizing the door that they just entered the chamber through.

140. PROTOPLASMIC PIT

The air of this room is steaming, thick with unpleasant moisture, smelling faintly sweaty. Its sides gradually slope towards its center, where something in the shadows writhes.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A thin 1 ft. ledge surrounds the length of this Room. Beyond that the floor drops off 20 ft. into a flesh-lined pit of protoplasmic goo. At the bottom of this pit seethes a pile of living flesh once used by Mahir in his vile experiments. Over the years and decades, the lingering arcane energies have coalesced, changing and twisting the protoplasm into a chaos beast (hp 55), trapped within the pit.

In an unusual bit of foresight, before his death Mahir placed a magic circle against chaos on the door and outer walls of this chamber, an enchantment that persists to the current day. A DC 25 Knowledge (arcana) check or a DC 20 Spellcraft check reveals that the runes worked into the stone walls and door as part of the enchantment.

Whether the sorcerer divined that this experiment would develop a life of its own, or was simply being cautious, is a question lost to the ages.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 5, Distracting Noises 5, Distracting Visions 8, Fear 15, Haunted, Unhallowed 5

Tactics: If attacked, the chaos beast grapples the PC and drags him into the glass-lined pit, where it attacks using its corporeal instability to make it part of itself. Due to the nature of this chaos beast, if anyone with fewer than 12 HD remains unstable for more than 6 hours, he becomes a permanent part of the protoplasmic chaos beast, who gains another HD (much like a barghest who feeds on the dead).

Lastly, every time the chaos beast strikes a PC, it deals 1 point of temporary Charisma damage in addition to any other effects. If left unchecked for more than a week, this damage becomes permanent.

The chaos beast attacks randomly, lashing out at any enemies within reach unless it is slain. However, because it lies in a warded pit, it cannot leave the Room and the PC.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the wards become damaged, allowing the chaos beast to pursue the PCs outside the Room. To decrease the challenge, the chaos beast begins the encounter wounded (-15 hit points).

Corporeal Instability (Su): A blow from a chaos beast against a living creature can cause a terrible transformation. The creature must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or become a spongy, amorphous mass. Unless the victim manages to control the effect (see below), its shape melts, flows, writhes, and boils. The save DC is Constitution-based.

An affected creature is unable to hold or use any item. Clothing, armor, rings, and helmets become useless. Large items worn or carried—armor, backpacks, even shirts—hamper more than help, reducing the victim's Dexterity score by 4. Soft or misshapen feet and legs reduce speed to 10 feet or one-quarter normal, whichever is less. Searing pain courses along the nerves, so strong that the victim cannot act coherently. The victim cannot cast spells or use magic items, and it attacks blindly, unable to distinguish friend from foe (-4 penalty on attack rolls and a 50% miss chance, regardless of the attack roll).

Each round the victim spends in an amorphous state causes 1 point of Wisdom drain from mental shock. If the victim's Wisdom score falls to 0, it becomes a chaos beast.

A victim can regain its own shape by taking a standard action to attempt a DC 15 Charisma check (this check DC does not vary for a chaos beast with different Hit Dice or ability scores). A success reestablishes the creature's normal form for 1 minute. On a failure, the victim can still repeat this check each round until successful.

Corporeal instability is not a disease or a curse and so is hard to remove. A shapechange or stoneskin spell does not cure an afflicted creature but fixes its form for the duration of the spell. A restoration, heal, or greater restoration spell removes the affliction (a separate restoration is necessary to restore any drained points of Wisdom).

Immunity to Transformation (Ex): No mortal magic can permanently affect or fix a chaos beast's form. Effects such as polymorphing or petrification force the creature into a new shape, but at the start of its next turn it immediately returns to its mutable form as a free action.

141. MAHIR'S ANTECHAMBER

This room has less the aspect of a simple chamber and more that of a temple. A small basin stands nearby with remnants of the water it once held long since evaporated. Next to the basin, a small rack holding simple linen towels, the cloth crumbling to dust. A rack of cracked jars is above the basin, and several rotting cloaks hang from decayed wooden pegs. To the north is an ornate iron door, decorated with runes and held shut with a complicated-looking mechanical lock.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was utilized by Mahir to prepare for his dark experiments. The basin and jars held powders and liquids he would use to "purify" himself. None of the items here are recoverable; although a DC 25 Knowledge (religion) check or DC 20 Knowledge (arcana) check reveals the nature of the room and its contents. PCs casting detect evil, detect magic, or similar abilities sense a faint aura of arcane evil from the north, though its true origin cannot be pinpointed.

A second DC 20 Knowledge (arcana) or Knowledge (religion) check reveals the door and its mechanism as a powerful ward against arcane energy and evil, nearly on the order of something produced by celestials. In fact, the celestial guardians of the prison created the door, only to have it utilized by Mahir later following the drider invasion of this Region.

Opening the mechanism on the iron door requires three consecutive Open Locks checks (DC 28, DC 30, and DC 32). Failure on the second or third roll jams the mechanism, requiring the use of make whole (or similar) to repair it. Breaking through the door is also an option, but takes a long and creates a great deal of noise.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 6, Distracting Noises 6, Distracting Visions 5, Fear 15, Haunted, Unhallowed 5

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: This room contains tattered cloaks designed for driders, worth no more 5 gp for the material, and a collection of long-decayed salves worth about 20 gp. There are enough spell components for about 1d12 castings.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

142. SPELLBOOK CHAMBER

A single column of stone covered with maddening carvings rises from the smooth basalt floor to the ceiling, while the walls are covered in dark stones, without any apparent design.

If the PCs have darkvision, read the following.

Though the stones set into the walls are a single hue according to the logic of standardized vision, darkvision reveals that the walls are covered with intricate mosaics depicting the foulest atrocities imaginable.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: To reach the spellbook chamber, characters must negotiate a twisting passage that curves upwards and plunges down, designed for use by the drider sorcerer and explicitly not designed for the comfort simple bipeds. Successful negotiation of the passage requires a DC 15 Balance checks; on a failed check, the character tumbles down the roughened, sharp stone and sustains 4d6 falling damage.

All of these traps may be bypassed without incident by the elder drow Muhaimin (Rooms 184 through 188) and any who accompany him.

A Search check (DC 25) reveals that there is a gap between the top of the column and the ceiling; Mahir's spellbook rests atop this column. A Climb check (DC 20) is required to reach the top of the column.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 6, Distracting Noises 8, Distracting Visions 4, Fear 15, Haunted, Unhallowed 5

Tactics: Fortunately for would-be thieves, the column's traps have long since fallen to ruin. However, the DM is encouraged to roll dice or ask for Search checks, as well as describe hissing or rattling noises from within the column to reinforce the PCs' paranoia.

Treasure: The only treasure in this chamber is Mahir's spellbook, which weighs over 20 lbs. and contains some 300+ pages. It contains the following spells, all of which require read magic and a Spellcraft check (DC 25 + spell level) to decipher.

bestow curse, charm monster, confusion, fire trap, polymorph, resilient sphere; 5th—cone of cold, prying eyes, shadow evocation, summon monster V⁺, wall of iron; 6th—acid fog, control water, disintegrate, flesh to stone; 7th—finger of death, mass invisibility, shadow walk; 10th—ritual of unmakingSM.

If summoning spells have been ruled out (see page 14), replace them with conjuration spells of equal level from outside the core rulebooks.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase all DCs by 2. To decrease the challenge, reduce the DCs by 4, noting the column is cracked, allowing an easier time of things.

143. ALCHEMICAL LAB

This room appears exactly as it did the day it was first conceived. Sturdy slate-topped tables are heavy with scrolls, and torches guttered in their scones on the wall. The chamber is inhabited — a dark-skinned humanoid with burning red eyes looks up, startled, from a bubbling alchemical apparatus. His shock-white hair is cut in a tonsure, half-hidden by the hood of his robe.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is a trap left behind by Mahir to snare the inquisitive and unwary who investigate these benighted chambers. When the door is opened, a temporal stasis effect upon the rooms beyond is dispelled.

This creature, despite the likelihood it is a drow, it is actually a phasm (hp 100), trapped here by Mahir before the cataclysm. The alchemical apparatus contains a mixture of exotic substances, and when shattered, releases a noxious gas into the room. The gas acts as an area-effect spell whose radius expands by 10 ft. every round until it fills the room; the gas also provides total concealment to the phasm.

♣ Poison Gas Apparatus: CR 8; mechanical trap; touch trigger; repair reset; gas; never miss; onset delay (1 round); poison (insanity mist, DC 15 Fortitude save resists, 1d4 Wis/2d6 Wis); multiple targets. Search DC 0, Disable Device DC 25. Note: Break DC 5; hp 10.

There are two doors leading from this room. The southwest door leads to a living area replete with finery. The second door is concealed and leads to Room 144. In order to locate it, the PCs must succeed at a DC 25 Search check, which reveals a narrow groove where a key might fit. However, the lock has been damaged over the years and any slender piece of metal will do. With a successful DC 15 Open Lock check, the cantilever lifts and the secret door slides down into the floor.

Once open, the secret door remains in this position until 50 lbs. of pressure is placed on the top of the stone, sliding the door back into place. The other side of the door is a comparable lock that is equally easy to locate and open.

Encounter Condition: [Total Concealment]

Tactics: Upon being released from stasis, the phasm leads the PCs to believing it is, in fact, the drider sorcerer Mahir. If attacked, the phasm assumes drider form and retreats to the ceiling to destroy the alchemical apparatus in the next round.

If the poisonous gas is released, the phasm takes advantage of the total concealment provided by the choking fumes to assume its natural form, which is immune to the poison, and escape. If it cannot release the gas and escape, the phasm negotiates with the intruders, admitting first that it is not Mahir. A successful DC 25 Intimidate check or DC 20 Diplomacy check gets the phasm to reveal the secret door to the southeast and the contents of Room 144.

Treasure: The alchemical apparatus is merely a trap and cannot be salvaged. There is also a unique magical item worn by the phasm — a belt of the drider, detailed in the sidebar below.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two drow warriors bodyguards. To decrease the challenge, increase the onset delay of the poison gas apparatus to 3 rounds.

THE RITUAL OF UNMAKING

"Do not call up that which cannot be put down once again."

Half magic item, half ritual, this particular spell has but a single purpose — to utterly destroy the creatures created by the drider sorcerer Mahir's experiments. Originally intended as a safeguard against calamity, the ritual failed miserably. It waits now, locked away in the sorcerer's tome of arcane lore, waiting for the day when its powers are called forth again.

Performing the ritual of unmaking requires an arcane caster of at least 9th-level, and several components from the master sorcerer's cache intended specifically for use in the ritual. A DC 25 Knowledge (arcana) check is required to identify the specific components required for the ritual, and any deviation from what is prescribed could lead to catastrophe. The caster must also possess a piece of flesh from the Twin they wish to destroy.

Once the components are gathered and the appropriate space in the laboratory is prepared, the caster may begin. The total time required to cast the ritual is 1 hour. Casting time may be reduced by 10 minutes (to a minimum of half an hour) for every participant that possesses the 5 ranks or more in Spellcraft skill.

The ritual of unmaking is a perversion of magic and nature, and thus extremely dangerous to those who undertake it. Beginning the ritual requires a simple incantation and a DC 15 Spellcraft check. For the duration of the ritual, make a Spellcraft check every 10 minutes. The DC for the secondary checks begins at 20 and rises by 2 for every 10 minutes of the ritual, to a normal maximum DC of 30. Casters may not take 10 or 20 on these checks.

If the caster fails his Spellcraft check, he must immediately make a Concentration check at the same DC of the failed Spellcraft check. Success on the check allows the caster to make a second Spellcraft check at +2 DC. Failing the Concentration check or the second Spellcraft check results in dire consequences, defined on the chart below.

For the duration of the spell, the Twin targeted is helpless, as its very existence is stripped away from it piece by piece. Unfortunately, the ritual acts as a beacon for the other Twin; it moves at its best speed from its current location, usually arriving within 1d4 rounds. (DMs must exercise good judgment here — for example, it undoubtedly takes longer for Anguish to batter its way out of its prison.) Upon its arrival, the Twin mercilessly attacks the caster unless deterred. Worse, the ritual is incomplete — even if one Twin is destroyed, the other remains. With some planning and forethought, PCs may find that the threat of a single Twin is preferable to the destruction that both surely bring.

The ritual is intended to work once and only once; a DC 25 Spellcraft check is sufficient to confirm this. If the PCs attempt to cast it a second time (targeting the second Twin), the effects are best left to the DM's imagination. The easiest solution is that it simply fails. More perverse or cruel DMs are encouraged to inflict any number of awful side effects on presumptuous magic-users. Especially clever PCs might try to use this danger (if they become aware of it) to strike against one of the more powerful drider sorcerers.

1	Caster's bones become soft and his skin slimy and flexible. Caster's subtype changes to ooze for 1d10 days.

3	Arcane energies course uncontrollably through the caster, inflicting 4d6 force and 4d6 electricity damage to everyone within 20 ft. of the caster (including the caster); everyone but the caster is allowed a DC 22 Reflex save for half damage.
4	Caster is engulfed in fire, inflicting 6d8 fire damage to everyone within 20 ft. of the caster (including the caster); everyone but the caster is allowed a DC 22 Reflex save for half damage.

12	Repulsion centers on caster for 1d4 hours.

16	Caster loses one spell slot (chosen at random), permanently. If the caster is a wizard, he also loses one spell from his repertoire that he can never memorize again (chosen at random).
17	Caster gains tremorsense 120 ft., which cannot be turned off. Sleeping/meditation are nearly impossible and the PC is always fatigued (whether he sleeps or not). A Will save (DC 20 — number of days without sleep) is needed for the PC to get 8 hours of rest.
18	Caster suffers 1d3 Wis damage and suffers confusion.
19	Caster suffers 1d4 Wis damage and suffers insanity.
20	Caster suffers 1d6 temporary Wisdom damage and 1d8 temporary Intelligence damage.

Resilient (Ex): A phasm has a +4 racial bonus on Fortitude and Reflex saves (included in the statistics block).

Alternate Form (Su): A phasm can assume any form of Large size or smaller as a standard action. This ability functions as a polymorph spell cast on itself (caster level 15th), except that the phasm does not regain hit points for changing form. A phasm can remain in its alternate form until it chooses to assume a new one or return to its natural form.

Tremorsense (Ex): A phasm can automatically sense the location of anything within 60 ft. that is in contact with the ground, so long as it is touching the ground itself.

144. SORCERER'S STOREROOM

Shelves and tables take up most of the space here. Carefully labeled boxes, jars, vases and bottles fill all the available surfaces of the room, seeming as fresh as the day they were created.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is Mahir's storehouse, but it rarely sees use at this point. Unlike the altered reagents found elsewhere in the cache, these spell components are exactly as they seem — high-quality, preserved through minor spells across the gulf of years. There are enough components here for 5d12 castings.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4, Safe

Tactics: If the PCs close the secret door in Room 143, they need not worry about Random Encounters here.

Treasure: In addition to the regular uses for spells listed above, the high-quality items in this Room grant a sorcerer the Heighten Spell metamagic feat five times for free, after which the high-end components are used up, but the normal components — like spider legs and bat guano — remain.

145 THROUGH 157. MADNESS ITSELF

Of all the horrors of the Halls of Flesh, none are more feared than the creature called Madness. Born of the magical catastrophe unleashed by the sorcerer Mahir, this protoplasmic terror roams its domain randomly, dealing death and far worse to those who have the misfortune to cross its path. It cannot die, save by a single spell, and the only weapon that can harm it or its twin Madness has been lost to the ages...

Whenever the PCs enter a Room in this Section there is a 5% chance Madness (Room 156) is already there, waiting for them.

145. RUINED CACHE

These four circular rooms are warped as if they were once a toy at the hands of a cruel child. Each of the four chambers pulses like a living heart. The fluids discharged by their walls flow through the shattered remains of their frame to mingle in a disgusting pool in the halls connecting them.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Altered by the magical fallout caused by Mahir's failed experiment, the four chambers are the consequence of a discarded magical theory detailing the four humors of the body. Each chamber is dangerous in its own right, producing terrible effects on the minds of those exposed to them. PCs spending 15 minutes examining the content — and succeeding at a DC 20 Knowledge (arcana) check — have a cursory understanding of what was going on here, but without further examination cannot tell one clue from another.

The Rooms are blood (eastern chamber), black bile (northern chamber), yellow bile (southern chamber), and phlegm (western chamber) and look precisely how they sound.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Visions 6, Fear 14* (in addition to the phlegm chamber).

Tactics: Each chamber represents one of the four bodily humors, described below. Avoiding contact with any of the humors in a chamber requires a DC 24 Reflex check every 2 rounds the characters are in the chamber in question.

Eastern Chamber (Blood). PCs coming into contact with the red ichor flowing from the walls find themselves afflicted with insane good cheer. To avoid the effect a DC 22 Will save must be made. Failure indicates the creature or character is affected as by hideous laughter for 2d6 rounds.

Northern Chamber (Black Bile). Touching this substance induces a deep, abiding depression. Those failing a DC 22 Will save are paralyzed for 2d6 rounds, lost in their own misery.

Southern Chamber (Yellow Bile). This thin, foul-smelling goo creates terrible anger in those it affects, as per rage (DC 22 Will save resists) for 2d6 rounds. Those afflicted do not recognize allies and attack anything and everything in the environs.

Western Chamber (Phlegm). Sticky, revolting slime flows from huge open sores in the flesh here. Those who touch this disgusting substance becomes the victims of terrible fear and cowardice. PCs failing a DC 22 Will save suffer fear for 2d6 rounds.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DCs of all saves by +2. To decrease the challenge, reduce the DCs by –2.

146. THE RIGHT HAND OF MADNESS

Tough, leathery skin covers the floors and walls here, rippling occasionally, as if it were twitching.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: While this Room is no threat in and of itself, the creature called Madness (Room 156) is capable of causing the muscles and skin (making up the floor and walls) to contract, trapping its prey in an iron grip. His tremorsense ability allows him to sense when PCs are in this Room and 2d6 rounds after someone first steps on the floor, the floor comes to life.

The false door on the east wall is locked and requires a DC 30 Open Lock to unlock. It is also trapped with poison gas trap which is set off if the PCs tamper with the lock without disabling it.

♣ Ungol Dust Vapor Trap: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; gas; multiple targets (all targets in a 10-ft.-by-10-ft. room); never miss; onset delay (2 rounds); poison (ungol dust, DC 15 Fortitude save resists, 1 Cha/1d6 Cha plus 1 Cha drain); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 16.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The floor of this Room is considered Larger, has a Strength of 30, and possesses the Improved Grapple feat, which can be used to grapple any PC in contact with the floor or walls. Its caustic touch deals 1d3 acid damage per round in addition to whatever grappling damage it deals.

Causing 20 or more points of damage in a single attack against the constricting skin causes it to release the PC, but it also erupts in a shower of gore. The gore is caustic to the skin and acts like acid splash (as a 5th-level caster) against everyone in the Room. If the "floor" is destroyed it releases five acid splashes at once.

Treasure: If the PCs destroy the muscle fiber of the floor and walls, they find the skeleton of a drow under a layer of fibers in the process of being slowly digested.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the effective strength of the Room to 35 and have the floor attack after 1d6 rounds. To decrease the challenge, remove the ungol dust vapor trap.

147. LUNGS OF MADNESS

Grit, dust and flecks of bone whirl around this room in pulsing waves with hurricane force. One moment, the air rushes in, then the next, propelled by the expanding and contracting tissue covering the walls.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These are the 'lungs' of the domain of Madness (Room 156), their movements stir the air into violent, impossible motion. Shards of bone, dust and dirt whirl about this diseased place, presenting great hazard for those crossing it. Each side is considered a lung, but affect the occupants of the Room the same way.

Encounter Condition: Diseased (any) 20, Distracting Noises 8

Tactics: Those caught in this Room are affected by gust of wind. Additionally, unless proper eye protection is worn (such as goggles, or keeping one's eyes shut), a DC 18 Fortitude save must be made, or the PCs suffer a -2 penalty on all visual Spot and Search checks for the next 24 hours. Madness is not affected by this room's spells or penalties.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, reduce movement through the Room by 10 ft. and add ungol dust which whips around the Room threatening to choke the PCs. To decrease the challenge, have the gust of wind active every 1d3 rounds.

148. PATH TO FIRE

The door leading to this Room is locked and trapped. The lock requires a DC 35 Open Lock check to unlock and the trap triggers if the PCs touch the lock without disabling the trap set into it. The glyph is so small to be nearly invisible, making it almost impossible to notice.

♣ Greater Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 7; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 16th-level cleric, 8d8 cold, DC 17 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32.

As soon as the door opens, a blast of heat assaults you. Hot winds slap your face, pushing you back. Ahead you can see light, hurting your dark-adjusted eyes.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is the causeway between Regions I and J. As soon as the PCs step through the doorway, the door closes and the trap resets. Opening the lock from the east side requires a DC 45 Open Lock check.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a second glyph of warding trap to the door or extend the range to 15 ft. To decrease the challenge, remove the Extreme Heat.

149. THE LEFT HAND OF MADNESS

This room is ridged with pale ivory, covering every surface save the doors. It seems as if it might be connected, somehow to a vast puzzle or prison of bone, trembling with unholy anticipation.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is filled with sheets and fragments of fused bone, presenting a serious hazard for characters simply passing through. Like Room 146, Madness (Room 156) can bring the bone of the Room to life to attack the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Hazardous Footing 5

Tactics: By itself, the Left Hand of Madness is relatively harmless, if disturbing. With Madness present, the Room becomes a deadly weapon. As a move action, Madness can cause the bone in the room to erupt, clenching tightly around the PCs, piercing them with razor-sharp spikes. Everyone present suffers 4d6 piercing damage from the bone shards and spikes (DC 22 Reflex save for half).

Treasure: N/A

EL: Varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage to 4d8 and the DC of the Reflex save by +3. To decrease the challenge, have the damage affect Madness (as well), if he is present.

150. SUBCONSCIOUS SEPSIS

This room is alive with movement, the floor moving in random directions, to and fro, the stones in motion by some unknown, terrible agency. The walls are thick with fungus and decay, absorbing all of the light in the Room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The floor here is actually 5 ft. below the PC's line of vision. The flooded area is so thick with contaminants, it appears as a shifting layer of stone, when in actuality it's a diseased, putrid water. PCs stepping over the 3 ft. wide ledge surrounding them Room into the "pit", suffer no damage, but must succeed at a DC 20 Reflex save to remain standing after falling. Small creatures suffer a -4 circumstance penalty to this save and should consult the drowning rules.

Allow sharp PCs a DC 28 Spot check to notice the floor is actually swampy water and not stone.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 6, Diseased (devil chills) 14, Drafty, Flooded, Poor Footing 5

Tactics: PCs falling into the water are more susceptible to disease, suffering a -4 profane penalty to their Fortitude saves to the resist devil chills.

Treasure: N/A

151. HAVEN

This small room is quiet, the stones smooth, regular and cool. The heavy iron door bears several dents, but none seem to have affected the stout iron bars keeping it safe from the insanity outside.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room provides a safe haven for PCs fleeing the depredations of Madness (Room 156). The door is made of iron, stone, and wood and is very strong, making it easy to barricade.

Reinforced Door: Hardness 20, hp 400, Break DC 40.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4, [Fear 15], Safe

Tactics: Every hour, allow Madness a 5% chance to notice the PCs. At which point he slams on the door for 30 minutes before giving up and retreating elsewhere. If this happens, have the PCs make DC 18 Will saves or be shaken for the duration plus 2d6 minutes afterwards (as a result of the jarring noise). Sleeping PCs suffer a -6 penalty to this save.

152. FEAR AND FLAME

The small confines of this room are only made worse by the thick, greasy stink of the casks of oil within it. A small slit in the stone, crudely chipped out, provides viewing into the hallway outside. Several channels have been carved into the slit, each clogged with viscous oil gone to varnish.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is employed by particularly desperate drow and droids in an attempt to drive Madness back to its home before it reaches more defended areas. Using the alchemist's fire and flammable oil here is dangerous at best, suicide at worst. PCs using this tactic run a 20% chance of setting one or more of the casks ablaze. Even if this does not occur, the heat from the flames outside provoke a DC 15 Fortitude save. Failure causes the character to become fatigued. The effectiveness of the flames is dubious at best.

Encounter Condition: [Extreme Heat]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Twelve casks of flammable oil and six vials of alchemist's fire are stocked here, labeled in Undercommon.

EL: N/A

153. A SAFE CHAMBER

The walls of this Room are enchanted with permanent silence, preventing sound from being heard outside.

This small room is free of the meaty scents and bits of living flesh endemic to its neighbors. Hammered sheets of iron have been pounded into the walls and floor, sheathing the entirety of the room in metal. Curiously, when struck, the walls make no sound.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This chamber was carefully constructed over time by the droids and their drow slaves to provide a safe haven for unfortunates caught in one of Madness' rampages. The iron door is heavily reinforced and the metal sheathing on the ceiling, walls and floor ensure that if Madness lurks about, it cannot hear or see creatures within the Room, nor is it able to use its Ground Manipulation ability against them.

Iron Door: Hardness 20, hp 120, Break DC 35.

A DC 25 Knowledge (architecture and engineering) check or DC 30 Knowledge (dungeoneering) check indicates that the Room's design is heavily drow-influenced. Detect magic reveals that the Room radiates faint Illusion (glamor) magic.

154. THE MIND OF MADNESS

Here, all reason has left. The walls roil and bubble, stone flowing like water, the air thick and solid-seeming. Worse still, the very substance of the room scream with a thousand voices, tearing at the mind like hooks, begging madness.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: It is here that Madness' insanity most manifests. If Madness is not present, characters moving through the Room are affected by solid fog. Additionally, every 1d4 rounds the PCs remain in the room, a DC 21 Will save is required, lest the PCs be stricken by insanity and for 1d4 hours. If Madness is present, he is not affected by the solid fog.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The insanity and solid fog effects are an everpresent danger here and cannot be dispelled. Spells like dispel magic and greater dispel magic dispel the effects for only 1d3 or 1d6 rounds, respectively.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of the Will save DC by +2. To decrease the challenge, remove the solid fog.

155. A KICK IN THE PANTS

The floor of this room roils with sickeningly quick waves. A few fragments of wood and stone are thrown violently against the walls by the motion, shattering into even smaller fragments.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The floor of this Room is constantly in flux due to the warped energies released by Mahir's failed experiments. PCs moving through this Room must succeed at DC 24 Reflex saves or be thrown against the hard stone walls, taking 3d6 damage in the process.

Encounter Condition: [Hazardous Footing 18]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the PCs spend 30 minutes searching the Room, allow each a DC 25 Search check to find a backpack filled with typical adventuring gear — 50 ft. of rope, two vials of oil, four torches, a small hammer, and a potion of cure light wounds. Inside a secret compartment of the pack is a single immovable rod that can only be found on a DC 30 Search check.

The rod is set and cannot be moved. If the PCs lift the sack quickly, it tears open, tossing the contents across the floor and revealing the rod.

156. THE MAW OF MADNESS

All four doors leading to this Room are broken and shattered, lying at various angles.

The first sight of this chamber, though certainly hideous, is nothing compared to the demonic caterwauling that echoes from every surface. The room itself churns nauseatingly, the walls, ceiling and floor alive with pale, writhing flesh. Here, a cluster of fingers, there a bubble of pallid eyes. Whatever terrible thing has happened here has pried the stones from the walls, rendering them into a plastic nightmare of ramps, bubbles and less than identifiable shapes. Occasionally, mouths set into the stone... or set in flesh... screech deafening. The whole room erupts into a chorus of screams... Madness itself is present!

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This cracked and crooked hall is where Madness (hp 140), one of the twisted twins produced by Mahir's experiments, makes his home. The Maw is an expression of Madness' own twisted, protoplasmic form. Here and there, spars of temporarily solid stone jut from the floor, allowing PCs a place to stand above the churning morass. Several chambers split off from the central Hall, and Madness makes best use of them during a battle.

Madness is a bubbling, twisted mockery of life. Leathery one moment and sickening fluid the next, eyes, mouths while spider-like appendages erupt from its constantly. Madness is always making noise: screams, low whispers, laughter, all erupt from its chorus of mouths.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Cursed 4, Diseased (shakes) 18, Negative Energy, Total Concealment, Unhallowed 5

Tactics: Madness' lair is a lethal place to combat the horror — the floor acts as if affected by the creature's Ground Manipulation ability, requiring a move-equivalent action every round a PC is in contact with the floor to avoid becoming mired. Madness' gibbering ability gains a +6 circumstance bonus to the difficulty of the save while it is within the room, raising the DC of the Will save to 19.

Madness begins combat with full concealment, hiding within the nearly fluid stone and flesh of the Maw. As long as it can remain concealed, Madness gibbers. After 1d6 rounds (or until he is detected), Madness closes to a distance to employ acid spittle and flame breath, taking a full round to attack with both. Within the Maw, Madness' flame breath continues to burn for an additional round, inflicting an 4d8 flame damage (DC 19 Reflex save for half) in the affected area the round following the attack before burning out.

Madness is constantly on the move and employs the concealing abilities of the Maw to their utmost end. A typical combat round consists of Madness striking from concealment, with appropriate bonuses, then immediately withdrawing into concealment. While concealed, he has a +10 circumstance bonus to its Hide checks (as per a ring of chameleon power), opposed by the PCs Spot checks.

PCs cornering Madness are in for a nasty surprise — if trapped, he takes to the air, sprouting membranous wings and attacking from above. Madness can only remain airborne for a total of 1d6 rounds, but is even more fearsome while airborne than while grounded. While flying, Madness continues to use the concealing effects of the Maw and prefers to use its breath weapons against foes. If pursued into the other chambers of the Maw, Madness squeezes through a door, then use it as a weapon against foes, effectively adding the Power Attack feat for a single attack; the door is destroyed after the attack is concluded, whether successful or not.

As noted elsewhere, Madness cannot be completely destroyed unless subjected to the ritual of unmaking, found in Mahir's hidden cache (Room 142). If Madness is killed by anything less than the total destruction of its form (such as by disintegrate), he reforms within 1d6 hours at full hit points. Otherwise, he reforms within 1d6 days.

Treasure: Several masterwork weapons of various types can be extracted from the gelid flesh and stone of the Maw. If some of the flesh is retrieved, it can be fashioned (with a successful use of Brew Potion) into a potion of change self or chameleon power for one-fourth the XP cost. The flesh from the Maw may be employed in spells from the Illusion, Enchantment or Transmutation school as a component, adding a +2 circumstance bonus to save DCs against spells from those schools for 2d6 castings.

If the PCs succeed at a DC 30 Search check they find a cache of magic that Madness was trying to destroy. It is unclear why, but he was unsuccessful. The items are buried under flesh and sinew and require a DC 18 Will save to extract, lest the PC become nauseated for 1 hour. Under the fleshy detritus the PCs find a +2 warhammer, a +1 composite shortbow [+2 Str bonus], a pearl of power (2nd), a lens of detection, and a scroll of delayed blast fireball.

Skills and Feats: Listen +16, Spot +20, Swim +22; Improved Initiative, Improved Natural Attack (bite), Multiattack, Lightning Reflexes, Weapon Focus (bite).

Amorphous (Ex): A gibbering moulder is not subject to critical hits. It cannot be flanked.

Blood Drain (Ex): On a successful grapple check after grabbing, that mouth attaches to the opponent. It automatically deals bite damage and drains blood, dealing 1 point of Constitution damage each round. A mouth can be ripped off (dealing 1 point of damage) with a DC 12 Strength check or severed by a successful sunder attempt (the mouth has 2 hit points). A severed mouth continues to bite and drain blood for 1d4 rounds after such an attack. A creature whose Constitution is reduced to 0 is killed.

Breath Weapon (Su): Once per day, Madness can shoot a 60 ft. line of lighting causing 6d8 damage, a Ref save (DC 25) for half damage.

Engulf (Ex): A gibbering moulder can engulf a Large or smaller opponent grabbed by three or more sucker mouths. The opponent must succeed on a DC 26 Reflex save or fall and be engulfed. In the next round, the moulder makes twelve bite attacks instead of six (each with a +4 attack bonus). An engulfed creature cannot attack the moulder from within. The previously attached mouths are now free to attack others. The save DC is Strength-based and includes a +2 racial bonus.

Gibbering (Su): As soon as a moulder spots something edible, it begins a constant gibbering as a free action. All creatures (other than moulthers) within a 60-ft. spread must succeed on a DC 18 Will save or be affected as though by a confusion spell for 1d2 rounds. This is a sonic mind-affecting compulsion effect. A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected by the same gibbering moulder's gibbering for 24 hours. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Ground Manipulation (Su): At will, as a standard action, a gibbering moulder can cause stone and earth in all adjacent squares to become a morass akin to quicksand. Softening earth, sand, or the like takes 1 round, while stone takes 2 rounds. Anyone other than the moulder in that area must take a move-equivalent action to avoid becoming mired (treat as being pinned).

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a gibbering moulder must hit with a bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day, Madness can inflict an extra 12 points of damage against a good target.

Spittle (Ex): As a free action every round, a gibbering moulder fires a stream of spittle at one opponent within 30 ft. The moulder makes a ranged touch attack; if it hits, it deals 1d6 points of acid damage, and the target must succeed on a DC 25 Fortitude save or be blinded for 1d4 rounds. Eyeless creatures are immune to the blinding effect, but are still subject to the acid damage. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Skills: Thanks to their multiple eyes, gibbering moulthers have a +4 racial bonus on Spot checks. A gibbering moulder has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It always can choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

157. THE VESTIBULE

The floor here roils and shifts like a serpentine swamp squirming beneath its surface. The walls seem tiled at odd angles, and all that is visible is tinted in the colors of life — blood red, arterial blue, venous purple and flesh, random splashes of hues that would make sense only to the insane. A fetid breeze taints the air with the scent of meat hovering on the edge of corruption and fills the room with a murky haze.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room is a vestibule in name only. Its original purpose was obliterated by time and the taint of Madness threads through the floor and walls with errant ribbons of twisting, writhing flesh, suggesting all manner of horrors that once took place here.

The vestibule is permanently affected by Madness' ground manipulation ability, altering the stone floor's consistency into a soupy morass. Creatures moving through have their movement reduced by 10 ft. if walking along the floor.

The secret door to the north can be found on a successful DC 30 Search check, but is locked from the other side. PCs must first succeed at a DC 25 Disable Device check to line the cylinders and blocked stone properly (a process that takes 15 minutes). Then, a DC 35 Open Locks check is required to open the secret door, which swivels on a central pivot. This door leads to Room 1117 where drow stand guard, waiting for intruders.

Encounter Condition: [Concealment], Poor Footing 18

Tactics: Moving faster than half speed through the vestibule causes the ribbons of flesh to contract and writhe violently, provoking a DC 18 Reflex save. PCs who fail the Reflex save are considered pinned. To escape, they must succeed at an opposed grapple check against the tendrils' grapple check of +15. The tendrils may be attacked with any Small or Light weapon. Those who are not grappled may attack the tendrils freely. Inflicting 5 hp or more damage causes the grappling tendril to release the PC.

Madness is immune to this effect.

If Madness pursues PCs into this Room, it is considered to have partial concealment and may make a Hide check with a +10 circumstance bonus as it sinks below the sludgy flooring.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the grapple bonus of the tendrils by +3 or the DC of the Reflex save by +2. To decrease the challenge, remove the hardness from the ribbons of flesh.

158 THROUGH 161. CAISSON OF MADNESS

Controlled by neither the driders or Madness, this Section exists in an uneasy balance between the two opposing forces. Once a center for the celestial warders' operations in the prison, it refused to give up its secrets, even after the occupation by first the drow then later by the driders.

Following the catastrophe unleashed by the sorcerer Mahir, the handful of rooms and corridors became a desperate battleground between the horrors unleashed, the driders and their drow slaves. Given its proximity to the accident, some driders believe that the lingering celestial energies mixed with the arcane power of the failed experiment. Others believe that chaos took hold, and it was here that many of the battles simply happened to be fought. Within these rooms, Anguish, wounded after a terrible battle with its twin, was captured by the driders and imprisoned in the sections they control. More recently, it served as the site for forays against the Green Death nearby.

For whatever reason, chaos reigns supreme within these walls, and nothing that lives within the Halls of Flesh finds it pleasant to venture here. Still, it lies at the confluence of several sections, and as a result, is vital to the survival of all who dwell nearby.

158. DOWN THE HATCH

This room is choked with vegetation and rock. An unpleasant odor wafts from deep inside the grayish green mass, its source unidentifiable.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Damaged in the disaster and released by the sorcerer Mahir years ago, the erosion begun by a desperate battle to contain Anguish (Room 198) and Madness (Room 156). Since then, the morass has worsened under the relentless assault of mutated vegetation endemic to the Halls of Flesh. An exit from this room leading to the destroyed laboratory in Room 134 may be located by chopping away some of the vegetation and succeeding at a DC 28 Search check. Only Medium or smaller creatures can negotiate the passage, with Medium creatures having to crawl (1/4 normal movement).

Encounter Condition: Poor Footing 18, Stagnant Air

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the PCs spend 30 minutes cutting away at the morass, allowed them DC 20 Search checks. Successful PCs find one of the following items (no two appear twice) — a potion of barskin +3, a potion of jump, a 5-in. pearl (250 gp), and a masterwork silver short sword.

159. VIEWING ROOM

This chamber sits at a crossroads — doors to the north, south, east and west are heavily scarred by battle. The walls are not wrought of mere stone, but instead of translucent crystal, smudged and fouled with a thin film of ambient skin. On the floor, several piles of scorched humanoid bones slowly disintegrating into dust, some still clad in useless remnants of armor or clutching broken weapons.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room stands empty, befouled by the taint of the horror of Madness (Room 156). Portions of discarded flesh have invaded the enchanted crystal sheets lining the walls, reducing them to little more than deranged abstracts.

The crystal sheets cannot be moved, and detect magic reveals moderate divination magic. This Room is avoided by the drider and drow, as they believe Madness frequents it. This superstitious belief is incorrect, however. It is wise not to dally here, though, as the tissues left behind by Madness' passage are capable of alerting the creature to the presence of intruders near its lair.

If intruders clear away the tissue or remove one of the crystal sheets from the walls, the tissue shrieks like a wounded animal. The sound carries a good distance alerting the drow guards in Rooms 168, 177, and 1131 who go on alert, securing their choke points for the next 1d6 hours. In addition, Madness shambles from his lair, eager to investigate the disturbance.

Encounter Condition: Haunted, Unhallowed 6

Tactics: The flesh in this Room is incapable of hostile action; it merely cries out when injured. If Madness is alerted, he travels at normal combat speed (30 ft. per round), gibbering to himself. PCs are allowed Listen checks — starting at DC 25 — to hear his approach. As Madness enters each intervening room (159 and 160), lower the Listen check by 5. Madness reaches the viewing chamber in 1d3+2 combat rounds.

Madness' tactics depend on what it finds. If the PCs have fled or managed to remain hidden, he makes a most cursory examination of the Room then shambles off to consume another creature or return to its lair. If another creature or PC is detected, then Madness softens the stone in the Room to hamper movement, following up with acidic spit or a burst of magical fire.

If Madness is reduced to 10 or less hit points, he makes a full retreat to Room 156 to heal.

160. DEFOLIANT STORAGE

The room here is utterly free of the vegetation of nearby areas, and the air here is redolent with a sharp, unpleasant stench.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The main room here is devoid of anything, almost an anomaly in an otherwise chaotic and disheveled dungeon. If the PCs do not spend at least 5 rounds here, do not allow them to find the secret door on the west wall.

The secret door can be located with a DC 30 Search check. The door is wrought of a specially-treated silk created by the drider sorcerers nearby, and requires either a drider key to open, or application of an acid to the gooey 'mechanism' that secures it. Beyond that, a DC 35 Open Lock check opens the mechanism after 1d3 minutes of trying.

☞ Secret Door: 4 in. thick; Hardness 10; hp 50; Break DC 30; Open Lock DC 35.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The hidden cache contains several small casks of an extremely potent alchemical defoliant, employed by unlucky drow slaves to control the growth of the Green Death, the massive, immobile tendriculos located in Room 139. Primitive pumps are also in the Room, requiring two Medium-sized creatures or one Large creature to carry. The casks weigh 20 lbs. each and a single pump weighs 10 lbs.

If the casks containing the alchemical defoliant are ruptured all creatures within a 10-ft. radius of the broken container take 4d6 acid damage (Reflex DC 15 for half). Plant creatures hit by the defoliant take 8d6 acid damage per round of contact, that bypasses any damage reduction the creature might possess.

There are six casks, each containing ten doses of defoliant (for a total of 60 doses) present at any given time.

161. CAISSON OF MADNESS

The domed ceiling of this room likely held some sort of inspirational artwork to uplift the wardens of the prison. But time has reduced it to the dust of a once-proud past. Echoing from the walls of the chamber is a hideous cacophony produced by monstrously distorted mouths formed of the thick sheets of flesh that cling tenaciously to the stonework. The floor ripples unhealthily, as if made of murky liquid.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The walls of the caisson are covered by flesh discarded from Madness — flesh lost in battle, gnawed away in a fit of rage or simply shed. The mouths that chant, gibber and scream along the wall are mindless, though their voices retain nearly the potency of Madness itself.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 4, Diseased (red ache) 18, Haunted, Hazardous Footing 18

Tactics: Characters remaining in this room for more than two rounds must succeed at a DC 16 Will save or be affected by confusion duration of their time in the caisson, plus 2d6 rounds afterwards. Creatures muffling their ears receive a +2 circumstance bonus to the Will save and creatures that cannot hear are immune.

This is a sonic, mind-affecting compulsion effect.

162 THROUGH 167. GREEN DEATH

Created with energies released by the sorcerer Mahir's failed experiment, the vegetation in this location runs wild. Blown in on a thermal wind from the surface world, spores multiply exponentially and threaten the drider-controlled sections of the Halls of Flesh. Mutated into the stuff of greenish nightmare, what were once weeds are now just barely kept in check by a few desperate driders and their drow slaves.

The battle against the Green Death and its spawn has left several rooms of the Halls poisoned and uninhabitable in an area already severely lacking in space. The Green Death, mindlessly malevolent, cares nothing for the other inhabitants of the Halls; its sole imperative is its own survival. Here, as nowhere else, survival between the competing species is reduced to its most primal form.

The driders battling the encroachment of the Green Death are led by Padeema and a contingent of slaves deemed too weak or unsuitable to survive the sorcerers' experiments. Padeema, despite his species' inability to innovate and penchant for treachery, or perhaps because of it, approaches the problem differently than his comrades. While the drider sorcerers scheme and plot against the other denizens of the dungeon and the surface, Padeema focuses his considerable wit and artistry in an attempt to banish the Green Death to a few rooms, held there by a ring of virulent poisons and concoctions. Surprisingly, this strategy has met with success. The few cases where it has not are due to outside interference: the rebel drow, who find it to their advantage to prevent the driders' spread into the Lower Halls, Padeema's fellow driders who seek to keep him firmly in his current place in the power structure of the Halls, or Madness, who seeks out those who toil in the Halls to incorporate their flesh into its own. Padeema perseveres, bitterly forging ahead with his strategy, ultimately planning to employ a new device, an apparatus of the crab fitted with alchemical sprayers, against the heart of the Green Death to destroy it.

The Green Death's strategy is difficult to counter because it possesses no strategy that any intelligent being can track. It acts within a brutal set of parameters, spiraling out from the magical force that twists its being and gives it unholy life: there is It, and there is Other. It must grow, and Other must be destroyed. The Green Death does not retreat; indeed, it cannot. Instead, when badly injured by one of Padeema's sorties against it, the Green Death allows its spawn to perish and withdraws to regenerate. It has nothing but time to extend its tendrils and roots throughout the Halls of Flesh and beyond to the rest of the dungeon... and eventually the surface world.

There is secret door set in the southwestern wall, is a little trickier. For starters, locating the secret door requires a DC 29 Search check. A simple combination lock opened by either a drider key or a Small or smaller weapon secures the door. A DC 28 Open Locks check releases the lock. A DC 25 Disable Device check opens the lock as well, but leaves it broken and triggers a silent alarm in Room I69, summoning ettercaps to repair the lock.

This corridor ends suddenly in a jumble of cracked stones the result of an ancient earthquake.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This passage is not function, now that the drow have been pushed out, but it was once a favorite location for sneaking behind the enemy or moving about quietly.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: There is a 25% chance of a drow guard from Room I83 patrolling this hall. If so, this is possibly the first drow the PCs have encountered. Depending on how this Region is planned, the DM may decide to have the drow be sympathetic or least approachable. This need not be a combat scene, unless the plan is to simply clear every Room.

164. DEFOLIANT CACHE

The sharp, acrid scent of some strange chemical hangs in the air. The foliage upon the walls is patchy and burned, and one corner is entirely free of greenery. Several small casks sit in that corner.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was a staging area used by drow slaves preparing to trim back the Green Death. More recently, it has been used to store excess defoliant after the destruction of Room I62.

A secret door is hidden among the greenery on the eastern wall of the Room, and leads to a shortcut to Room I62, often used before that Room's destruction. Locating the secret door requires a DC 29 Search check. A simple combination lock opened by either a drider key or a Small or smaller weapon secures the door. A DC 28 Open Locks check releases the lock. A DC 25 Disable Device check opens the lock as well, but leaves it broken and triggers a silent alarm in Room I69, summoning ettercaps to repair the lock.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: If the casks containing the alchemical defoliant are ruptured, all creatures within a 10 ft. radius of the broken container take 4d6 acid damage (DC 15 Reflex save for half). Plant creatures hit by the defoliant take 8d6 acid damage per round of contact. There are six casks, each containing ten doses of defoliant (for a total of 60 doses) present at any given time.

Treasure: There are three casks of defoliant in one corner of the room. The casks are old but usable.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one deathspawn tendriculos (that wandered in from Room I67). To decrease the challenge, remove the Stagnant Air.

165. DEADLY TUNNEL

This hallway and its attached rooms are overrun by rank green vegetation. It invades every crack and crevice as if to undermine the solidity of the stones themselves, wearing away with rootlet and vine. The doors to chambers to the north and south yawn open like weed-choked mouths, their hinges clotted with yet more greenery. The plants extend like an explosion from a crude tunnel to the southeast, the end of which is not visible from this vantage.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Following the explosion of the alchemical lab in Room I76, the Green Death expanded from its chamber in Room I67, threatening the safety and security of the Northern Corridors and their residents. A drow fighting force was dispatched to beat back the hostile vegetation, with disastrous results. Several of the drow warriors fell back into the north and south chambers, only to have the doors ripped open by tendrils from the Green Death and a contingent of tendriculos.

A DC 25 Search check reveals the mauled and partially-digested forms of the drow warriors, their flesh eaten away by the ravenous vegetation. The weapons of the fallen warriors are useless, but their uniforms, alchemically treated, remain intact, offer the possibility of a useful disguise for canny adventurers.

Encounter Condition: Fear 14, Stagnant Air

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Eight suits of alchemically-treated studded leather (fire resistance 10), along with drow guard uniforms, can be pried from the clinging vines and roots. The armor is foul and blood-caked, but a successful DC 18 Fortitude save allows PCs to ignore the flesh clinging to the inside of their newly-acquired armor, lest they be nauseated. Humans find the armor snug as it is designed for drow, but any Medium creature (save for dwarves), can wear the armor.

166. BATTERED HALLWAY

Stout doors flank each end of this short hallway. The omnipresent sheets of tissue hanging on the walls have taken on a faintly iridescent green tint, and small tendrils of plant growth curl in and out of small crevices in the stone.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This hallway connects the Caisson of Madness (Room I61) and the chamber of the Green Death (Room I67). It usually frequented only by those ambushed by one of the horrors. The stone underfoot is uneven, damaged by the constant inroads of the tendriculos' rootlets. Meanwhile, the doors at either end, while reinforced, have taken a terrible battering from Madness (Room I56) and the Green Death. The ettercaps rarely venture here to make repairs, and when they do, they first make sure that Madness is occupied elsewhere.

⇒ Reinforced Doors: 6 in. thick; Hardness 12; hp 105/150; break DC 33; Open Locks DC 30.

Encounter Condition: Drafty

Tactics: The hallway is not itself malign; however, if the PCs are pursued by either the Green Death or Madness, their pursuers are entirely capable of breaking down a door just to get to their prey. PCs may decide to lure Madness into the clutches of the Green Death; this tactic should be rewarded, as the Green Death sees Madness a more fulfilling encounter than the PCs are, while Madness considers Green Death — an aberrant plant — an interesting challenge. PCs may take collateral damage from such a brawl, but may escape with their lives.

167. CHAMBER OF THE GREEN DEATH

The interior walls of this room are obscured by dark green vegetation. It covers over everything, rising up and out of sight to unknown heights. Here and there, the lush green gives way to solid-looking dark brown roots and branches. All of this is seen a mere moment before the vegetation boils like fat in a hot cauldron, the greenery, roots and sharp branches springing to malignant life with a fearsome roar!

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This chamber houses the creature known as Green Death — a massive tendriculos (hp 130) — and its Deathspawn — two tendriculous (hp 50, 48). Green Death is a mostly-stationary hazard to the creatures and adventurers that lurk within the Halls of Flesh. Deprived of sunlight, the Green Death is normally dormant, stirring only when it detects a random surge in the positive energy contaminating the Halls, or when tasty meat wanders into its lair.

The Path of the Gauntlet forms a pair of tunnels as it passes through this room, the midpoint of each located within 5 ft. of the Green Death (well within its reach). Traversing the Path here requires a DC 17 Climb check. Travelers who stray within reach of the Green Death will soon regret their misstep.

Tactics: The main mass of the Green Death is not anchored on the floor, but rather against the ceiling. It once grew up into a crack caused by the cataclysm; later, its lower 'trunk' was destroyed by alchemical defoliants. When attacking, the Green Death extends itself down from the 15 ft. ceiling to strike at any characters within reach using Power Attack and its Improved Grab. The Green Death is not capable of pursuit; during any combat, it starts in the center 20 ft. of the room, and may move 5 ft. in any direction as a move action. The Green Death may not leave the Room, and if reduced to 10 or fewer hit points, it retreats to the ceiling until it recovers its full health.

Also present in the room are the Deathspawn. These smaller versions of the Green Death form from buds or discarded bits of plant matter severed from the main mass of the Green Death.

Skills and Feats: Hide +9, Listen +2, Move Silently +2, Spot +2; Alertness, Improved Natural Attack (bite), Iron Will, Power Attack, Stealthy.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a tendriculos must hit a creature at least one size smaller than itself with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can try to swallow the opponent in the following round. A tendriculos can also use its improved grab ability on a tendril attack. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold, picks up the opponent, and transfers it to the mouth as a free action, automatically dealing bite damage.

Swallow Whole/Paralysis (Ex): A tendriculos can try to swallow a grabbed opponent by making a successful grapple check. Once inside the plant's mass, the opponent must succeed on a DC 20 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 3d6 rounds by the tendriculos's digestive juices, taking 2d6 points of acid damage per round. A new save is required each round inside the plant. The save DC is Constitution-based. A swallowed creature that avoids paralysis can climb out of the mass with a successful grapple check. This returns it to the plant's maw, where another successful grapple check is needed to get free. A swallowed creature can also cut its way out by using a light slashing or piercing weapon to deal 25 points of damage to the tendriculos's interior (AC 14). Once the creature exits, the plant's regenerative capacity closes the hole; another swallowed opponent must cut its own way out. A Huge tendriculos's interior can hold 2 Large, 8 Medium, 32 Small, 128 Tiny, or 512 Diminutive or smaller opponents.

Regeneration (Ex): Bludgeoning weapons and acid deal normal damage to a tendriculos. A tendriculos that loses part of its body mass can regrow it in 1d6 minutes. Holding the severed portion against the mass enables it to reattach instantly.

168. THE PATH OF THE GAUNTLET

Room 168 is not a single Room, but a series of connected chambers that form a complete encounter. The DM can antagonize the PCs with a series of encounters, or simply allow them to walk through safely with a drow escort (see Room 163).

Life within the Halls of Flesh is cruel, harsh and unforgiving. Nowhere else is this more prevalent than the twisted society of the drow and driders that occupy the northernmost portion of the Halls, and in nothing else is it more clearly incarnated than in the vicious contrivance called the Gauntlet.

The Gauntlet serves as a funnel where drow can kill just about anything coming north into their controlled Section of the dungeon. For the masters of the hunt, this is a true sport. Constructed primarily of tough webbing treated with the vile alchemical substances created by the driders, the Paths of the Gauntlet is one enormous Room. As the Gauntlet inches closer to drider-controlled territory, the Path takes on new names, based the hardship the unfortunates forced along it must suffer — the Path of Strength, the Path of Fire, and the Path of Worth (Room 167 is annex part of the path, called the Path of Terror, but is not controlled by the drow). Trusted servants are told the secrets of traversing the Gauntlet and provided the appropriate equipment to do so; slaves and intruders must fend for themselves.

The Paths of the Gauntlet share several common traits — the top portion of the webbing, what humanoids would normally walk across, is coated with an insidious toxin to prevent creatures such as the Green Death from infesting it. The toxin requires a DC 18 Fortitude save to resist, and inflicts 1 point of cumulative temporary Constitution damage for every failed save. The Fortitude save must be made for every 30 ft. of Path crossed, and is treated as a contact poison. The underside of the webbing is slightly sticky, thus allowing the drider, ettercaps and trusted drow servants to traverse it. The Gauntlet slopes downward as it approaches Room 167, and as travelers progress along the Paths, the DCs of the Climb checks required to move increase, beginning with DC 15 and increasing by +2 for every named Path encountered to a maximum of 21. Stopping along the Paths for more than 2 rounds activates a gust of wind effect placed upon the webbing, which is intended to cause no end of trouble for hapless travelers.

Specific Paths are further described below.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Every hour the PCs spend in the gauntlet, roll for a Random Encounter. In addition, at some point they are ambushed by a drider sorcerer (hp 61) looking for a kill to take back and prove its worth. He fights to death, unwilling to give the PCs, an inch. The DM can drop this encounter anywhere he likes.

Spell-Like Abilities: 1/day—dancing lights (DC 13), clairaudience and clairvoyance, darkness, detect good, detect law, detect magic, dispel magic, faerie fire, levitate, suggestion (DC 16). Caster level 6th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Skills: A drider has a +4 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks. It has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on a Climb check, even if rushed or threatened.

Possessions: Daggers, shortbow, two quivers, 36 arrows, 4 masterwork arrows.

* Casts as a 9th-level sorcerer due to his drider innate abilities.

THE PATH OF STRENGTH

This small room has certainly seen use — the walls are battered and pitted, cracked as if squeezed by some mighty, unseen hand. A crack in the northwest corner is wide enough to accommodate a human or similarly-sized creature, though the passage beyond is choked with dark green vegetation.

Initial Attitude: Neutral or Hostile

Encounter: This Room is one of several containing hidden doors and passages that allow the driders and their drow slaves to pass by creatures like the Green Death and Madness without encountering them, and is typical of passages leading through the northern portion of Region I. Drow patrols encountered here are either resting or passing through the room, headed either deeper into the Halls or returning to their fortified positions with a prize in tow.

Passage through this Room is accomplished by a fiendishly simple method — a “path” of webbing created by the ettercap trapmakers. The driders, drow and ettercaps use the bottom of the webbing, climbing like spiders along the underside of the Path towards safe areas in the north. Drow slaves forced to follow the top of the Path face a much harder road. A DC 18 Spot check is required to see the Path among the vegetation, and a successful DC 20 Climb check is required to reach it. The Path of Strength is stickier than the other Paths, and creatures that fail a DC 18 Strength check find their movement reduced by 5 ft. per round. This effect fades when travelers reach the Path of Terror in Room 165.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a Huge tendriculos (hp 94) that charges the PCs from a side passage (gaining the advantage of Ambush). To decrease the challenge of this encounter, reduce the Search DC to locate the door by 2.

THE PATH OF FIRE

This winding, narrow corridor is little more than a crack in the wall. Cobwebs hang from the ceiling in ragged curtains, obscuring sight beyond a few paces ahead. The floor is unstable, groaning and creaking as if threatening to collapse with every step.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is known as the Path of Fire. The floor is a pit trap, cunningly engineered by the ettercaps to catch the unwary. The trap itself is fairly simple, and PCs may make a DC 24 Spot check to avoid it as they feel the slight heat radiating from the floor.

Those who traverse the Path of Fire, cling to the webbing above, must make a DC 22 Fortitude save or suffocate as they climb through pockets of volcanic gasses and hot air. Any PC falling from the Path triggers the concealed pit trap, and suffers an additional 3d6 damage from the fall.

The Path abruptly terminates 10 ft. from the northern end of this room, forcing travelers to climb down; doing so opens the possibility of triggering the concealed deadfall.

♣ Wide-Mouth Pit Trap: CR 6; mechanical; location trigger, manual reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 40 ft. deep (4d6, fall), 4d6 fire damage on failed Reflex save; multiple targets (all targets within a 10-ft.-by-10-ft. area); Search DC 26; Disable Device DC 25.

Note: While the webbing is treated alchemically (fire resistance 10), webs are webs and therefore highly flammable. If the PCs have it too easy, have a stray spark ignite one end of the webbing and quickly consume the rest of the bridge.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat, Smoke

Tactics: The Room uses a simple pit trap to drop unwelcome visitors into a lava-filled ditch some 40 ft. below. The thin cover over the sinkhole is treated with the same alchemical process as the drow leather armor, which aids in concealing the heat from below. The floor acts as a moving platform and unceremoniously dumps its victims into the Path of Worth.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, PCs that fail their Reflex saves take 2d6 additional damage from sharp rocks in the pit. To reduce the challenge, reduce all trap-related DCs by -2.

THE PATH OF WORTH

This stinking, benighted chamber is dominated by a fearsome red glow arising from a fall of lava flowing from the southwest. Eight massive chains of iron, glowing white hot from their proximity to the molten rock, suspend an equally titanic shallow iron bowl ringed with fiercely glowing symbols at its edges. In the center of that crude arena stands a being with fire-scorched red skin, nearly a dozen paces tall. Each of the creature's six arms grips a fearsome weapon, and it roars as it stalks the confines of its prison. Over the rush of gale force winds rising from the lake of fire below, chanting can be heard... a name, spoken in tones of horror and awe: Arioch.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Recognizing the symbols ringing the arena requires a DC 25 Decipher Script check or knowledge of the Celestial language. A DC 18 Knowledge (religion) or Knowledge (arcana) check is required to divine the purpose of the runes. A DC 15 Knowledge (the planes) check identifies the creature in the arena as a Balor.

The Path of Worth ends in the iron arena suspended over the collapsed floor of this room. PCs following the Paths must face Arioch (hp 133), Lorath's brother, in combat. However, all is not as it seems — Arioch is not a Balor, but a drider, magically disguised by his masters. Despite this, Arioch is a terrifying opponent, living only to slake his battle lust. Only Lorath (Room 1103), Shalara the priestess (Room 1125), and the driders know of this deception, leaving the ettercaps and drow to believe that a fearsome demon is bound to their service. Those who pass into the arena are subjected to a terrible test of arms.

The Path of Worth's purpose is twofold — it disposes of intruders if need be, and, in the minds of the driders, culls the weak and foolish from the ranks of their slaves, leaving only the strong to be transformed into driders themselves. If someone survives the battle with Arioch, the driders extend a platform to the edge of the arena, and welcome survivors into their home. Of course, the driders' ultimate goal is to recruit more beings into their ranks.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Arioch is a cunning and deadly opponent. The saving grace of battling him is that the drider blackguard only battles for 5 rounds, testing the 'worthiness' of his foes. Arioch utilizes his multiple limbs and superior mobility to his advantage.

Flying beyond the edges of the 40 ft. arena is inadvisable: PCs doing so are subjected to hurricane-force winds, as per the control weather spell. Arioch targets flying opponents with light crossbows with poisoned quarrels using his Multiattack feat.

Opponents who remain in the arena face more dangers than Arioch — the disguised blackguard constantly forces foes to the edges of the arena with a Bull Rush, where the runes that once bound a true Balor reside. Where the runes are etched, the solid floor of the arena falls away.

Arioch prefers to use his spider climb ability to move along the bottom of the arena, then emerge behind his foes and employ the spiked chain's bonuses to trip them while they are flat-footed.

The blackguard disdains the use of his innate spells in the arena, but employs them if necessity demands it. Better a victory than death.

Smite Good (Su): Once a day, Arioch may attempt to smite good with one normal melee attack. He adds his Charisma modifier (+3) to his attack roll and deals 4 extra points of damage. If a blackguard accidentally smites a creature that is not good, the smite has no effect but it is still used up for that day.

Crossbow Bolts: Deathblade, injury, Fortitude DC 20, initial damage 1d6 Con, secondary damage 2d6 Con.

Sneak Attack: Arioch's attack deals extra damage any time his target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when Arioch flanks his target. This extra damage is 1d6. Should the rogue score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

169 THROUGH 176. CENTRAL CORRIDORS

One of Mahir's successes still exists within the Halls of Flesh to this day. In his maddened attempts to create more driders to swell their ranks, the sorcerer and his cabal experimented on a unique species of spider that they found within the former prison that served as their home. Originally created as pests controlled by the celestial warders of the prison, the spiders took exceptionally well to enchantment and transmutation magics, forming what Mahir thought would be an ideal foundation for new driders.

Mahir did not know that the celestials' superiors, realizing that their captives could not be stripped of all of their magic, created the spiders with certain limitations. The primary limitation was that changes wrought upon the spiders by magic would never make them truly independent beings able to be of aid the prisoners in their plans. As a result, the sorceries used to transform the tiny vermin killers instead created ettercaps... and an entirely unexpected side-effect.

Once capable of primitive magical communication to increase their efficiency in disposing of tiny vermin and offal, the newly-created ettercaps became a hive-mind. The intelligence imparted to them (stolen from drow victims) created a single mind, capable of primitive thought and with a surprising talent for trapmaking, perhaps attributable to their origins as nature's trapmakers.

With the ettercaps, the driders found a seemingly safe worker caste to take care of the messy job of placing traps to snare fleeing slaves, intruding celestials, and any other enemies that might venture into controlled rooms. The ettercaps were simply happy, as such things are measured, to be put to work. They toil constantly within a series of workshops provided to them by the driders, and venture out into the Halls of Flesh to repair or reset traps that have been triggered. Their unique hive-mind serves them well in this capacity — what one ettercap knows, all know, instantly, anywhere within the Halls of Flesh. They are not particularly enamored of the driders, but neither do they despise them. As long as they are allowed to build, repair and maintain the traps of the Halls of Flesh, the ettercaps have purpose.

Along with the ettercaps, the Central Halls also boast the frontline defenses of the driders against the horrors that besiege them. This is a punishment duty for the drow, who often die in large numbers during assaults by Madness or other creatures. As a result, those who man the Central Halls have developed a fatalistic attitude towards their duties. Despite the scourges of their drider masters, the drow do not respond to minor threats, instead forcing the driders to use their sorceries against such incursions. This is all to the good of the drow, for the day is coming when the driders' magic may be expended, and the overseers will find themselves alone with several dozen armed and extremely angry drow...

Roll for a Random Encounter once every 30 minutes.

1d20	Random Encounter
1	Tremors and moans fill the halls, indicating that Madness is waking... or something else.
2	The sound of boots marching on stone echoes through the halls and then fades after a few moments.
3-12	Nothing
13	The PCs stumble upon a trap.
	♦ Fusillade of Spears: CR 6; mechanical; proximity trigger; repair reset; Atk +21 ranged (1d8, spear); multiple targets (1d6 spears per target in a 10 ft.-by-10-ft. area); Search DC 26; Disable Device DC 20.
14	Ten gricks scout for potential drow victims. They attack without warning and fight until killed. Ambush 4.
15	Six drow guards have taken a deserter prisoner. They are escorting him north for the driders to deal with.
16	Six slovenly drow guards patrol the halls. Indifferent, they carefully withdraw to report back to the driders.
17	Ten ettercaps head for their lair (Room 169). Indifferent, they attack if provoked.
18	Six ettercaps head for their lair (Room 169). If the PCs are hostile, web the PCs and summon six drow guards.
19	A single gibbering moulder, spawned temporarily from Madness' flesh, mindlessly attacks, fighting until slain.
20	Lorath (Room 1103) and a patrol of ten drow guards hunt some nameless horror from the south. Lorath and his men subdue the PCs and take them to rebel-controlled areas.

169. ETTERCAP LAIR

The approaches to Room 169 are constantly webbed by the ettercaps. Approaching creatures must succeed at a DC 20 Spot check to notice a web, or stumble into it and become trapped as though affected by the spell. Attempts to burst the webbing receive a +5 bonus if the trapped creature has something to walk on or grab while pulling free. Each 5-ft. section of web has 6 hit points, hardness 0, and takes double damage from fire. 10 ft. from Room 169 itself, the webbing ends, preventing intruders from firing the webs that the ettercaps use as their home.

This room is encrusted with thick, sticky ropes of a silken substance, some as thick as a human's arm. Sheets of the material hang down from the ceiling and cover the floor in gauzy profusion. A single square column of stone rises up from the floor, obscured by layer upon layer of the cobwebs.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The ettercaps (hp 61, 60, 55, 50, 48, 40, 37, 35) that live here are "employed" by the driders to maintain the traps in the immediate vicinity; a task the driders deemed too dangerous to entrust to the potentially rebellious drow. Room 169 is a central dispatch point for the ettercaps. At any given moment, there are eight ettercaps present, either sleeping or working on traps and parts of traps, chattering amongst themselves in Undercommon. However, there is a 25% chance that two more are passing through to receive new orders.

The ettercaps do not appreciate interruptions, and the cruel treatment inflicted by the driders has taught them to distrust all outsiders. They start any encounter with an initial attitude of Unfriendly. Fortunately, the craven creatures are intelligent enough to negotiate (a DC 25 Diplomacy check adjusts their attitude to Friendly). If the ettercaps are Friendly or Helpful, they chatter on endlessly about their labors within the prison. Despite their rudimentary intelligence, they possess an extensive knowledge of the traps and secret passages present in this section, and can forewarn PCs of traps, ambushes, and other complications existing within the Halls of Flesh. They can also, if the PCs are very persuasive, tell them about the drow cache in Room 14.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Like the ettercaps in Room 170, these creatures entangle their opponents in webbing before attacking. Unless their webs are set ablaze, the ettercaps attack from all directions, coordinating attacks so entangled opponents have little opportunity to counterattack before the poison from the creatures' mandibles takes effect. If the webs are set ablaze, the ettercaps abandon them, towards Room 167, hoping to lead their attackers engender conflict with the massive tendriculos living there.

Treasure: The ettercaps keep eight masterwork Trapmaking kits, maps showing the locations of secret doors in Rooms 14, 162, 170, 175 and 1116 in this room.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one ettercap for every two PCs. To reduce the challenge, reduce the number of ettercaps to one per PC.

✦ Ettercap: CR 3; Medium aberration; HD 5d8+5; hp 61, 60, 55, 50, 48, 40, 37, 35; Init +3; Spd 30 ft., climb 30 ft.; AC 14, touch 13, flat-footed 11; Base Atk +3; Grp +5; Atk +5 melee (1d8+2 plus poison, bite); Atk +5 melee (1d8+2 plus poison, bite) and +3 melee (1d3+1, 2 claws); SA Poison, web; SQ Low-light vision; AL NE; SV Fort +4, Ref +4, Will +6; Str 14, Dex 17, Con 13, Int 6, Wis 15, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Climb +10, Craft (trapmaking) +4, Hide +9, Listen +4, Spot +8; Great Fortitude, Multiattack.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 15, initial damage 1d6 Dex, secondary damage 2d6 Dex. The save DC is Constitution based and includes a +2 racial bonus.

Web (Ex): An ettercap can throw a web eight times per day. This is similar to an attack with a net but has a maximum range of 50 ft., with a range increment of 10 ft., and is effective against targets of up to Medium size. The web anchors the target in place, allowing no movement.

An entangled creature can escape with a DC 13 Escape Artist check or burst the web with a DC 17 Strength check. The check DCs are Constitution-based, and the Strength check DC includes a +4 racial bonus. The web has 6 hit points, hardness 0, and takes double damage from fire.

Ettercaps can also create sheets of sticky webbing from 5 to 60 ft. square. They position these to snare flying creatures but also try to trap prey on the ground. Approaching creatures must succeed on a DC 20 Spot check to notice a web, or they stumble into it and become trapped as though by a successful web attack. Attempts to escape or burst the webbing receive a +5 bonus if the trapped creature has something to walk on or grab while pulling free. Each 5-ft.-square section has 6 hit points, hardness 0, and takes double damage from fire.

An ettercap can move across its own sheet web at its climb speed and can determine the exact location of any creature touching the web.

Hive Mind (Ex): All ettercaps (from this dungeon) within 10 miles of their drider overlord are in constant communication. If one is aware of a particular danger, they all are. If one in a group is not flatfooted, none of them are. No ettercap in a group is considered flanked unless all of them are.

Skills: Ettercaps have a +4 racial bonus on Craft (trapmaking), Hide, and Spot checks. They have a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened.

170. THE EASTERN SENTINELS

This chamber is martial in its design, impossible to be mistaken for anything else. The center of it is taken up by three high barricades of iron faced with bundles of a fibrous substance held in place by strips of leather. Each of these siege towers is fringed with barbed iron hooks, and arrow slits sprout like eyes. One tower is in the direct center of the room, the other two covering a set of doors to the northwest and southwest.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room is fortified and maintained by two driders (hp 55, 51) and three drow guards (hp 40 each), guarding against an attack from Madness (Room 156). Every being here fears an attack, knowing that it could mean death, or worse, a battle between Madness and Anguish (Room 198). The drow guards are effectively slaves, doing what they are told and living in fear, despite their training with a blade which makes them deadly. This stress level puts them on constantly on edge and any Diplomacy checks that fail (or any Bluff attempts at all), shifts their Attitude to Hostile.

The drow manning this outpost could be charitably described as nervous. They are likely to shoot first and ask questions later. The guards become especially fearful when Anguish's keepers travel to its lair in room 198 to gather samples or feed some unfortunate slave to the chimera.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Cover

Tactics: The drow fighters manning the towers are tough, skilled and terrified. Hostile PCs find themselves facing a dozen well-armed drow and three drider sorcerers, all of whom attack from the safety of their siege towers. While the drow pelt enemies with missile fire, their sorcerer masters attack with spells.

Should PCs not prove hostile, they are taken into custody, and a detachment of extremely relieved drow escort them northwards, to be interrogated by their drider masters. Alternately, the drow could fake an 'escape', if the PCs are on good terms with Lorath (Room 1103), and allow them passage to rebel-controlled areas.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one drider. To decrease the challenge, remove one drider.

✦ Drider: CR 7; Large aberration; HD 6d8+18; hp 55, 51; Init +2; Spd 30 ft., climb 15 ft.; AC 17, touch 11, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +4; Grp +10; Atk +5 melee (1d6+2/19–20, dagger) or +6 melee (1d4+1 plus poison, bite) or +5 ranged (1d8/x3, shortbow); Full Atk +3 melee (1d6+2/19–20, 1d6+1/19–20, 2 daggers) and +1 melee (1d4+1 plus poison, bite); or +5 ranged (1d8/x3, shortbow); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Spells, spell-like abilities, poison; SA Darkvision 60 ft., spell resistance 17; AL CE; SV Fort +5, Ref +4, Will +8; Str 15, Dex 15, Con 16, Int 15, Wis 16, Cha 16.

Spell-Like Abilities: 1/day—dancing lights (DC 13), clairaudience/clairvoyance, darkness, detect good, detect law, detect magic, dispel magic, faerie fire, levitate, suggestion (DC 16). Caster level 6th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Spells: Driders cast spells as 6th-level clerics, wizards, or sorcerers. Drider clerics can choose from the following domains: Chaos, Destruction, Evil, and Trickery. The typical spells prepared shown here are for a drider sorcerer.

Skills: A drider has a +4 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks. It has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on a Climb check, even if rushed or threatened.

♣ Drow Guard, Ftr 5: CR 7; Medium humanoid (drow elf); HD 5d10+5; hp 40; Init +7; Spd 30 ft.; AC 16, touch 13, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +5; Grp +6; Atk +8 melee (1d8+3/19–20, longsword) or +8 ranged (1d8/19–20, heavy crossbow); Full Atk +8 melee (1d8+3/19–20, longsword) or +8 ranged (1d8/19–20, heavy crossbow); SA Spell-like abilities: SQ Darkvision 120 ft., elven traits, light blindness, spell resistance 16; AL LE; SV Fort +5, Ref +4, Will +1; Str 13, Dex 16, Con 12, Int 12, Wis 10, Cha 9.

Elf Traits: Immunity to sleep spells and effects, and a +2 racial saving throw bonus against enchantment spells or effects.

Light Blindness: Abrupt exposure to bright light (such as sunlight or a daylight spell) blinds drow for 1 round. On subsequent rounds, they are dazzled as long as they remain in the affected area.

Skills: +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks. An elf who merely passes within 5 ft. of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if she were actively looking for it.

171. HIDDEN PASSAGE

This large room's original purpose is lost to the ages. Now it stands empty, save for the sheets and lumps of slowly moving vegetable matter that slither across the floor. There's a heavy sigh to the room as if you just walked in on someone sleeping.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is indeed empty and the vegetation merely squashes under the PCs' feet as they walk. Nothing horrible jumps out and attacks them (unless you wish).

A DC 25 Search check is required to locate the hidden door into this Room. The door is thin stone over web-reinforced earth and is easily opened by cutting the strand of webbing that serves as a lock.

⇒ Hidden Door: 4 in. thick; Hardness 8; hp 12; Break DC 20; Open Lock DC 25.

The hidden door has a silent alarm cast on it, alerting the ettercaps in Room 169 that it is open, summoning a squad of four to repair it in 1d4 rounds.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 8

Tactics: After the door is opened (if the alarm is not disabled — a task that requires a DC 26 Disable Device check), four ettercaps arrive to repair the door. The ettercaps have an Initial Attitude of Unfriendly; however, they are conditioned to ignore humanoids and driders. If the characters do not attack, neither do the ettercaps, who merely reset the alarm manually.

If the ettercaps are attacked, they web intruders and retreat to Room 169, where the other ettercaps stand ready. If pursued, they web their opponents, then move in to bite, trusting in their poisonous mandibles to discourage further conflict.

173. THE (WESTERN) SENTINELS

This chamber is martial by design, impossible to be mistaken otherwise. The center of it is taken up by three high barricades of iron faced with bundles of some fibrous substance kept in place by leather strips. Each of these crude siege towers is fringed with barbed iron hooks at its crest, and arrow slits sprout like eyes. One tower is in the direct center of the room, the other two covering a set of doors to the northwest and southwest.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room is a fortified position maintained by the driders and their drow slaves to guard against an escape by the creature called Anguish. Every single being here fears such an escape, knowing that it mean instantaneous death, or worse, a battle between Anguish and Madness.

Four drow guards (hp 42 40, 38, 34) and a single drider (hp 55) maintain the center tower, making the noises heard by the PCs. The towers flanking the center are maintained by other drow (with similar hit points) and the driders overseeing them (hp 55, 51) are bitter rivals, willing to come to the aid of the center tower troops, but not one another.

The drow manning this outpost could be charitably described as 'nervous'. They are likely to shoot first and ask questions of the corpses later. The guards become especially fearful when Anguish's keepers travel to its lair in Room 198 to gather samples or feed some unfortunate slave to the chimera.

174. A MIGHTY PAUSE

This room is as empty as it is vast. Voices echo off the walls, lost in the darkness beyond sight. The sounds double and redouble, crashing against the senses, dizzying and unpleasant.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Borrowing a trick from the vile creature Madness, this Room is enchanted with confusion to baffle potential invaders. The effect can be resisted with a DC 19 Will save. The driders hope the confusion will cause intruders to attack one another or give another indication of their presence, alerting the guards in room 173.

A DC 25 Search check is required to locate the hidden door leading out of this room. Unlike those found in nearby rooms, the door made out of thick stone, but is still easily opened by cutting the strand of webbing that serves as the lock.

☛ Hidden Door: 4 in. thick, Hardness 8, hp 12, Break DC 15, Open Lock DC 25.

Encounter Condition: [Fear 14]

Tactics: Random Encounters involving drow or driders do not take place in this Room. They know to stay away and avoid the trap they've set.

Treasure: PCs spending at least an hour searching this Room find a false drider key hidden under some vegetation and debris in the corner. Finding the key isn't difficult, but battling the constant confusion makes it difficult to concentrate. The key is enchanted with alarm and creates a high-pitched wail whenever it is used to open a door. It was left here as a trick by the drow.

175. ABANDONED BYPASS

This room is covered in rank, sticky green vegetation that hover s somewhere between life and death. It is pervasive, its thickness unknown, transforming the presumably stone chamber into a disgusting hell.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is similar to the bypass in Room 174, but the slow invasion of vegetation spawned by the Green Death renders it unusable. PCs remaining in this room for an hour or more find that any equipment made of wood, leather or another organic substance is ruined. PCs spending the night here wake up entangled.

If the PCs spend a 30 minutes searching, allow a DC 32 Search check to find the secret door. Its a simple door to open, but cutting away the vegetation takes another 30 minutes.

176. ABANDONED ALCHEMICAL STORAGE

The door to this Room is locked and damaged. An apparent explosion inside the Room slammed the door closed and wedged the lock and doorframe together. A DC 40 Open Lock check and DC 20 Strength check are required to open it. If the Strength check fails, the Open Lock check suffers a –10 circumstance penalty due to the weight of the door smashing the mechanism. Make both checks at the same time, each time the PCs try to open the door.

A Disable Device check can be made in lieu of an Open Lock check, at a –5 circumstance penalty. However, using Disable Device instead of Open Lock grants a +2 synergy bonus to the Strength check.

This room reeks of strange alchemical substances, its walls stained in a lurid range of colors. Several shattered bits of crockery and the remains of small casks litter the floor. The burned husk of some mutilated creature lies curled against one wall, its withered carapace shattered, softer flesh mummified and leathered.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This Room was used by drow and driders to brew and store their alchemical defoliant. Several months ago, the storage room was caught in a battle between a phase spider and a spider eater. The result was the destruction of the alchemical defoliant, as well as the laboratory equipment.

Encounter Condition: Smoke or Stagnant Air (subtle effect)

Tactics: The fumes present in the room are a powerful hallucinogen. Creatures not immune to poison staying in the room for more than 5 minutes must succeed at a DC 16 Fortitude save every round thereafter or be affected by confusion for 1d3 hours.

Treasure: If the PCs spend 30 minutes here, they can gather 2d6 castings worth of spell components that have been singed, but not burned. One of these spell components increases the effect of an evocation or transmutation as if it were Maximized. A DC 30 Spellcraft check is needed to recognize this effect, otherwise the component gets consumed randomly in the casting of the wizard's spells.

Sadly, due to the exposure, these components increase the chance of arcane spell failure by 10%. Of course the PCs won't know this until they use them. This roll should be made in secret each time.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a phase spider that is unaffected by the fumes. To decrease the challenge, reduce the save DC of the fumes by 2.

177 THROUGH 180. NORTHERN CORRIDORS

Over the decades, the social order originally established by the drow has become warped, eroded by the drider rebellion, the cataclysmic magical accident caused by the sorcerer Mahir, and the infestation of the Lower Halls by the horrors the cataclysm unleashed. As such, assumptions commonly held by the surface dwellers regarding drow society are, in many cases, entirely incorrect when dealing with the enclave trapped in the Halls of Flesh and beyond.

The drow crushed beneath the boot heels of the drider seem almost humble when observed by an outsider. They speak little, communicating only in short, rapid bursts; many of the creatures of the Hall can locate prey by sound, and the drow have learned this bitter lesson through painful firsthand experience. They eschew the ornamental armor and weapons of their kin beyond the dungeon, preferring instead utilitarian clothing and the most effective weapons they can manufacture. Rebellion against their drider masters is publicly presented as unthinkable, with such actions punished by a fate worse than death: consignment to the drider sorcerers for their hideous experiments. To the casual observer, the drow slaves are all but resigned to their fate.

The true feelings of the drow are another matter entirely. Unknown beyond the tightly-knit extended family that the drow have formed, a burning hatred is steadily fed by the cruelties heaped upon them by their former slaves. The drow perceive neither irony nor oddity in this reversal of fortune that made them both fodder for the driders' experiments and a Praetorian Guard between the sorcerers and the horrors of the Lower Halls. They simply wait, plotting for the day when their fortunes will turn. Given the tainted immortality of the prison, the drow have all the time in the world to scheme. Their erstwhile leader, the drow guard captain Lorath (Room 1103), even now conspires with the dark naga Siglinde, bartering services and information for magical aid.

The celestial wardens of the prison, the legion of horrors of the Lower Halls, the casual cruelty of the driders — the drow are now accustomed to all of these. Perhaps the time is coming when a new element introduced into the fragile social structure renders it into chaos — such as a band of adventurers.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Roll for a Random Encounter once every 30 minutes.

1d20	Random Encounters
1	A ragged cheer echoes through the Section.
2	No matter what surface the PCs are walking on, it sounds like pustules popping underfoot (1d6 minutes).
3	An abandoned trapmaking kit leans against the wall. The ettercap using it has gone back to the workshops (Room 1105) to retrieve a part, returning in 1d6 minutes.
4–12	Nothing
13	A single drider is on his way to the temple (Room 1110) for his daily ritual. Already drugged, it is automatically surprised. It fights until at 50% of its total hit points, then flees.
14	A patrol of four drow and a drider overseer are on a routine sweep of the Section. They subdue the PCs and bring them to the other driders (Room 179 or 190) for interrogation.
15	A small patrol of four drow guards scouring the Halls for intruders at the behest of a particularly paranoid drider. If encountered, they capture the PCs and bring them back to their drider commander (Room 179).
16	A gang of three ettercaps walks silently toward their workshops. They are Indifferent to the PCs.
17	Six ettercaps work on a complicated mechanism of some sort. They are Indifferent, but if accosted, the ettercaps attack, and one triggers the lightning bolt trap they were working on, targeting the PCs.

18	Several drow slaves are doing manual labor and are, unfit for patrol duty. They are unarmed. If Lorath gets word of the PCs slaying slaves, his Initial Attitude shifts one degree toward Hostile. If Lorath gets word of the PCs aiding slaves, his Initial Attitude shifts one degree toward Helpful.
19	Arioch (Room 168) returns from the temple to the arena. Arioch taunts the PCs from a distance in an attempt to lure them to Room 168 for a battle.
20	Lorath (Room 1103) and a patrol of six drow fighters patrol the halls. With no driders around, Lorath attempts to quietly move the PCs to rebel-controlled areas and hide them, promising to negotiate later.

177. THE STRIKE CHAMBER

The martial nature of this room cannot be denied — every surface bristles with reinforcements to the walls, racks for weapons, and in one corner, a massive, sturdy iron barrel sits on its side next to several fired pottery casks. Hoses run from several casks to a horn of sorts, crudely soldered onto one side of the barrel. What appears to be a bellows is propped up next to the casks and barrels. In the southern portion of the room, several stone and iron barriers on wooden carts rest, and beyond them, the doors are heavily, if crudely, reinforced with strips of iron and arcane runes.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This room is in the process of being modified by the driders and drow for use as a strong point for dealing decisively with the Green Death, located to the south in Room 167.

This heavily reinforced chamber is used by the drow and driders as part of an experiment by one of the drider sorcerers, Padeema (hp 50) — trading with the foul denizens in other regions of the dungeon, the sorcerer has acquired a partially-functioning apparatus of the crab (which looks suspiciously like a spider).

Judicious tinkering has outfitted the apparatus with a crude sprayer, fed by a bellows pump, designed to spray the alchemical defoliant developed by the driders. Ultimately, Padeema's intent is to employ the apparatus against the Green Death, in the hope that the plant creature can be eradicated. The modifications are not entirely successful, though — attaching the spraying apparatus (the design for which was extracted from an unfortunate dwarven engineer that also came with the trade, now deceased) has created a breach in the device, allowing toxic fumes to leak into the interior. Padeema is well aware of the defect, and plans to soon recruit 'volunteers' to test the apparatus' effectiveness in battle.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: There are four drow bodyguards (hp 40, 40, 38, 36), along with half a dozen drow slaves (hp 34, 32, 30, 30, 30, 28) and Padeema. When confronted by intruders, the bodyguards ordered the slaves into battle, as they cover Padeema's activities. In the ensuing melee, the drider sorcerer polymorphs herself into one of three forms (depending on her assessment of the intruders' intentions) — a slain dwarven engineer, a drow slave, or an ettercap. Once the second or third form is assumed, she casts spells modified by her Silent Spell and Still Spell feats against foes. Like the drow guards in Room 1103, the guards, fighters and sorcerer here do not typically strike to kill; intruders are far more valuable as slaves or experimental stock.

Treasure: The contents of this Room are obvious — a damaged apparatus of the crab (move 10 ft.; contaminated with toxic fumes; DC 18 Fort save or take 1d6/1d4 Con if inside for more than 2 rounds for every additional round they remain in the crab) and six barrels of alchemical defoliant.

178. PROMENADE AND GUARDPOST

The guardhouse door in the southern Room is kept locked and can only be opened with a DC 50 Open Lock check or by knock or a similar spell. If the guardpost comes under attack, the guard blows a horn and bangs a gong that echoes throughout Rooms 177 and 179, summoning a contingent of drow fighters and a drider sorcerer within 1d4 rounds.

This room has seen better days. The carvings on the walls, once magnificent, have acquired a patina of dust from the cracked ceiling above. Doors are situated on every wall, including a heavily reinforced portal to the south.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This promenade buffers Rooms controlled more by the drow than the drider. The large central chamber echoes sound effectively, granting the guard in the small post to the south a +6 circumstance bonus to Listen checks opposing Move Silently checks. It also grants a +2 bonus to Listen checks in Rooms 177 and 179.

It has the opposite effect on PCs, however, imposing a –6 penalty on their Listen checks.

Encounter Condition: [Echoes 6]

Tactics: A single drow guard (hp 45) is stationed down the hall in the small adjoining Room to the south. The guard is not prepared to combat foes, though he is armed. Guardpost duty of this sort is considered punishment — often, the unlucky drow is stationed for weeks without contact from his fellows. As such, even on a failed Move Silently check the guard does not immediately sound an alarm. Usually, the guard is clumsy and bored, or just foolhardy enough to challenge interlopers, allowing PCs an opportunity for diplomacy or trickery.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one guard and put them on alert, sounding the alarm immediately when intruders are detected. To decrease the challenge, adjust the Initial Attitude to Indifferent and increase the time for guards to arrive from other Rooms to 1d6 rounds.

179. NORTHERN PROMENADE

This room has seen more than its share of ill-use. The carvings on the walls, once proud, have acquired a patina of dust from the cracked ceiling. Doors leading out of the room are set in every wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A; or Unfriendly

Encounter: This is one of several promenades buffering areas more controlled by the drow than the drider. A door leads to the west; beyond is a short corridor terminating in another door. The room beyond is empty, and has been abused for quite some time. The door remains solid, and despite its size can provide a potential hiding place for PCs on the run.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 6

Tactics: There are always two drider guards (hp 56, 52) and a 25% chance of four drow slaves (from Room 177) manning the promenade (60%) or hunkered down in the west chamber (40%). In any case, they do not take well to trespassers and demand the PCs explain themselves. If a fight starts, the drow slaves defend the driders to the best of their ability, but flee to Room 180 or 1115 if they are reduced to 50% of their total hit points.

If there is commotion in Room 178, the chance of an encounter raises to 50%.

Treasure: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the likelihood of drow slaves by 25%. To decrease the challenge, change the Initial Attitude of the drow slaves to Indifferent.

180. ENTRANCE TO THE SLAVE HOLD

This warren of rooms is kept meticulously clean, the floors smell strongly of soap and are scrubbed and shining which required extensive labor. To the northeast, a tunnel bores through the black stone of the prison, leading to yet more rooms beyond. A long, wide passage-way slopes down to the south, and to the east an equally long, narrow hallway terminates in a cracked and pitted dead end.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is another (and perhaps the last) choke point for the driders and the drow, staving off the invasion of aberrations into Region M. This Room also acts as a fallback position, if the promenade falls to enemies. Unlike the other choke points, it lacks the mobile barricades used by defenders. The driders, while not suffering from limited resources, simply do not consider the entrance to the slave hold important enough to defend as vigorously as other Rooms. The drow have ruthlessly exploited the driders' arrogance, allowing Lorath (Room 1103) and his cadre to establish quarters for the elder drow historian Muhaimin (Room 184) nearby.

The southern door is weaker than most of the other dungeon doors. The door has a manual lock, but does not have a siege bar. The lock on the door is relatively simple, again owing to the arrogance and disdain of the driders; a DC 21 Open Lock check disengages the lock's mechanism.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Six drow guards (hp 41, 40, 40, 39, 39, 38) are assigned to patrol the area and prevent slaves from escaping to the southern halls. As this duty is generally considered punishment, the guards are none too enthusiastic about their jobs. They are poorly equipped as well, the only concession to a unified force being lightly-treated leather armor. In the event of combat, the drow immediately starts using the Fight Defensively action while calling for help from one of the promenades or the slave hold. The drow guards here have not been provided with any true means of contacting help. If it becomes necessary, the DM may allow a DC 15 Listen check for guards in nearby areas. Success on a Listen check brings 1d4 guards within 4 rounds.

Treasure: Four suits of leather armor (with fire resistance 10) can be recovered, along with the guards' rapiers and glaives.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, substitute the guards from Room 1117. To decrease the challenge, the drow guards only fight for 1 round before fleeing the area, taking the Full Retreat action.

181 THROUGH 186. THOUGHT AND MUHAIMIN

Nowhere else is the hatred of the drow better personified than in the chambers housing the eldest drow, Muhaimin and his guards. Hidden from the watchful eyes of the driders, the chambers where the elder resides also serve as a monument to the rage the dark elves harbor for their oppressors.

Now long forgotten Muhaimin serves as the "memory of the drow" for a brutally pragmatic reason — the elder drow kills any drider or drider ally if he can, taking no heed of danger to himself. Even across the decades and centuries, the elder has forgotten nothing — not the lost battle that forced the drow into the prison, not the single night when the driders rose and enslaved their masters, and not the magical disaster unleashed by the mad sorcerer Mahir. Muhaimin has forgotten nothing. He is unmistakably a father figure — the eldest of the drow is considered by those who know him to be at best a deadly oracle, and at worst insane. None of these idiosyncrasies alter the reverence given to him by the drow.

Even blind, Muhaimin is less impaired than some might imagine. He is a frequent advisor to Lorath and a living repository of history for the drow slaves and warriors. Despite his years of service, the elder drow retains his burning hatred for the driders. His son, a drow fighter named Arif, was taken by Mahir the sorcerer decades ago and used to construct the traps that guard the now dead sorcerer's cache. Though Muhaimin does not know the location of the cache, he is the only drow capable of bypassing the traps without incident.

More important to the drow than Mahir's cache is the location of the Eight Strikes Fang currently known only to Muhaimin. The elder drow participated in the theft of Mahir's weapon, and might be considered responsible for the cataclysm Mahir's final experiment unleashed. Muhaimin feels no remorse for his act, seeing the Eight Strikes Fang as a key to the future of the drow inhabiting the Halls of Flesh.

Muhaimin barely trusts the dark naga Siglinde (Room 131), and has come to suspect that the creature has a hidden agenda that only involves the drow peripherally. The drow elder barely realizes how correct he is.

181. HIDDEN PASSAGE

Locating the southern door that initially leads into the hallway requires a DC 32 Search check and a DC 35 Open Lock check to open the locking mechanism. Failing this, a DC 32 Decipher Script check or use of legend lore allows PCs to discern the name of the drow elder's son that must be used to pass through the door (As if). The name is spelled out with a series of tiles set into the hidden frame and lintel of the door itself, and must be arranged to spell his name.

This narrow hallway is achingly, blisteringly hot, the floor below ready to collapse into lava flowing beneath it. Poisonous fumes choke the air, suffocating and burning the eyes.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The read aloud text describes the room as it appears under hallucinatory terrain. This hidden hallway leads to the memorial chamber of the drow (Room 184), as well as Muhaimin's quarters (Room 186) to the east and the guardroom (Room 183) in the west. A crystal sphere enchanted with hallucinatory terrain gives the appearance that the hall is open to the magma flow running through the dungeon. Locating the crystal sphere requires a DC 30 Search check and can only be made if the illusion is successfully penetrated.

Opening the door to the north is more complicated, requiring that one penetrate the illusion. Once accomplished, those who wish to enter may use one of three names to open the guardroom door by moving the appropriate tiles on the wall to form it — Lorath, Shalara, or Arif. The door to Muhaimin's chambers (Room 185) is likewise operable, but only by using the name of Shalara or Arif.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The Room relies on the hallucinatory terrain effect to disorient unwelcome visitors. Staying within the area of effect of the crystal sphere for more than a single round arms the silent alarm leading to the drow elder's chambers and the guardroom. Likewise, if the sphere is removed or destroyed, the alarm to the north immediately activates.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of the Search check by 2 and add a silent alarm for Room 183. To decrease the challenge, secretly roll a Will save for the PC with highest Intelligence score to disbelieve the hallucinatory terrain.

182. HIDDEN CORRIDOR

Entering this Room from Room 181 alerts the guards in Room 184 to trespassers. The silent alarm may be detected with a DC 38 Search check and bypassed or dispelled normally.

This rustic hallway, kept sullenly clean by the occasional desultory swipe of a broom, leads to a pair of doors, one to the left, one to the right.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This short corridor leads to the guardroom in 184 or the drow elder's chambers in 181. If the alarm triggers, oil drops from the ceiling onto the PCs 1d3 rounds later. The oil is viscous and does not come off easily.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Drow guards that come running, arrived in 1d3+1 rounds, carrying torches or alchemical fire. The oil on the PCs adds +3 damage per die and extends the duration of any non-magical fire by 1 round.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two drow guards at the end of the hallway. To decrease the challenge, remove the alarm.

183. GUARDROOM

This cozy room is retrofitted for the comfort of its inhabitants — several thick silk sleeping mats are set against the walls, and more silk is draped over the carved stone chairs and table. Four dark-skinned humanoids are present here, armored in leather and armed with slimly bladed swords. A series of runes mark the south wall, each rune carved into its own scored tile.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Three elite drow fighters (hp 50, 45, 42) are stationed here, enjoying the calm of guarding Muhaimin (Room 186) and the memorium chamber (Room 184). However, when a fight breaks out, they respond swiftly and brutally. They are not slouches and fight the PCs toe-to-toe.

The secret door leading to Room 184 requires the PCs press a series of tiles spelling the name of Muhaimin's son, Arif. Since the stones are Undercommon runes, doing so is complicated even for those who speak Undercommon. Without speaking Undercommon, the PCs either need to get lucky or succeed at a DC 30 Search check, followed by a DC 35 Disable Device check to get into the Room 184.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The elite drow fighters are devoted to Muhaimin. If he is hurt or killed, they have no compunctions about killing those responsible, even though they would have to answer to Lorath (Room 1103) later. Each fighter targets the weakest-seeming PC in a group, usually a rogue or a sorcerer, using them for cover and as hostages against the PCs, then brutally slaying them in the end. If the fight goes badly, one elite fighter retreats beyond the exit door and into Room 186 and calls for reinforcements using a specialized alarm in that Room, alerting the Lorath to the danger. Lorath typically arrives within 1d4 minutes with six drow fighters.

Treasure: N/AEL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one elite drow fighter. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

184. MEMORIAL CHAMBER

The curving wall in the center of this room is crudely yet painstakingly carved out of the black volcanic rock. Writing is chiseled carefully into the rough surface, tiny runic letters covering the vast majority of what may be some sort of monument.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room was carved from volcanic rock by the drow as a memorial to those of their kind who have fallen in battle, service to the driders or fallen victims to the aberrations' vile experiments. It is attended to by an elderly, blind drow named Muhaimin (hp 32), who was charged to etch the names of the fallen into the memorial stones, and to remember their life stories for the day when the drow rise up and slay their oppressors.

Blind though he is, Muhaimin is less impaired than some might think. He is a frequent advisor to Lorath and a living repository of history for the drow slaves and warriors. Despite his years of servitude, the elder drow retains his burning hatred for the driders. His son, a drow fighter named Arif was taken by Mahir the sorcerer decades ago and used to construct the traps that guard the now dead sorcerer's cache. Though Muhaimin does not know the location of the cache, he is the only drow capable of bypassing the traps without incident, calling upon the blood of his family in order to do so.

Muhaimin's hatred of the driders is a frightful thing to behold. Lorath has appointed him 'memory of the drow' for a brutally pragmatic reason — the elder drow kills any drider or drider ally if he can, taking no heed of danger to himself. An opposed Diplomacy check against Muhaimin's Sense Motive check convinces the elder that the PCs wish to harm the driders (the PCs suffer a –5 circumstance penalty if the PCs do not truly wish this). Once convinced, the elder gleefully informs the PCs of any drider activity he is aware of, including any of the following information.

- The nature and use of the driider keys.
- The lost history of the drider and drow within the prison complex, including all that is known of Mahir and his circle of sorcerers.
- The vile and terrible experiments that the drider perform on prisoners and drow slaves.
- Navigation of the Paths (Room 168) and the true nature of Lorath's brother, Arioch.
- The location of the drow caches in the lower Halls, including the cache which holds eight strike fang (Room 14).

Deciphering the inscriptions on the memorial stone requires use of comprehend languages, a DC 33 Decipher Script check, or the capability to read Undercommon.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Muhaimin is barely capable of defending himself, and calls for guards if he can. The guards are stationed in Room 183, and can arrive within the round to deal with intruders. Given the isolated nature of the memorial chamber, the guards feel little remorse about killing intruders, though they are under orders not to do so. Assaulting the memory of the drow is considered direct blasphemy by the drow community.

Treasure: N/AEL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, remove Muhaimin's expert levels and replace them with adept levels. To decrease the challenge, the PCs do not suffer a circumstance penalty to their Diplomacy check for lying to Muhaimin.

105. MUHAIMIN'S CHAMBERS

This simply adorned room is laid out with a precision that borders on obsession. A sleeping mat is laid neatly out in one corner, a small washbasin nearby. Nothing litters the floor, and the rough stone walls bear an odd sheen, as if polished regularly and slowly over years.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room is the home of the drow elder Muhaimin, and where he meditates when not attending to the memorial chamber (Room 184). Due to his blindness, the Room is kept simple and stark; ornamentation is absent. The sheen of the walls is due to Muhaimin's fingers brushing along them, slowly wearing away at the stone.

The secret door in the southern portion of the room may be located with a DC 32 Search check. Opening the door requires that Muhaimin's name be traced across a sequence of stones in the door's center with one's fingers. Doing so draws a small amount (1 hp) of blood; once fed, the door unlatches, easily pushed inward to reveal Room 1108 beyond.

Otherwise the PCs must succeed at a DC 40 Disable Device check to get passed the complicated locking mechanism.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness, Haunted, Unhallowed 2

Tactics: There is a 25% chance that Muhaimin is present (if the PCs did not already meet him). If attacked, he calls for his guards, who arrive in 1d3 round from Room 184.

Treasure: Muhaimin keeps several small trinkets crafted for him by Shalara (Room 1125), worth perhaps 100 gp.

EL: Varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have a few drops of demon fever-infected blood placed on the door's trigger mechanism. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Search DC of the door by –4.

106. MUHAIMIN'S HIDDEN CLOSET

This tiny room holds little of interest, save a great deal of dust and a few shelves the home of decades of accumulated grime. A few vials, the statue of a spider, and half a dozen leather-bound books stand lonely vigil here neglected and abandoned here by their owner.

Initial Attitude: None

Encounter: The small Room to the south of Muhaimin's chambers is ludicrously well-protected given the value of its contents — a drier key, a few doses of sacred poison prepared by Shalara (Room 1125), and several journals.

Owing to the blind drow's paranoia, removing the journals is a dangerous proposition. Muhaimin has acquired a small amount of the alchemical substance used in the death and darkness traps employed in the Halls. A DC 28 Search check must be made to notice that the dust that falls from the covers and pages of the journals is not, in fact, simply rotting parchment. The powder is changed regularly by Muhaimin, and retains its flammable properties (which ensure the destruction of the journals in a single round if they are exposed to flame) and its ability to attract the wandering horrors of the southern Halls. At the very least, Muhaimin's sense of smell is keen enough that he can detect the taint of the dust upon those who have come into contact with it, ensuring that would-be thieves are caught and appropriately punished.

▲ Death and Darkness Dust: If the dust contacts an open flame such as a torch or lantern, it bursts into searing flame, inflicting 5d6 fire damage. The creatures inhabiting the Halls are sensitized to the dust, and gain a +4 morale bonus to attacks and damage against a character contaminated with it. This effect lasts for 1d4 days, or until the dust is washed off with high proof alcohol.

Encounter Conditions: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Of the three things hidden here, the journals are the most tantamount. In them, Muhaimin has concluded that the dark naga Siglinde (Room 131) is in truth a former member of Mahir's cabal, using magic to conceal her true identity. While this is not entirely correct, it is close enough to the truth that the elder drow would be killed by Siglinde and the alliance between her and Lorath (Room 1103) broken if the information were revealed. Muhaimin has kept careful notes of the locations of hidden doors within the Halls, though no map is provided, merely descriptions of the doors and the means for opening them. Deciphering the journals requires use of comprehend languages or a DC 32 Decipher Script check. Possession of the journals provides a +4 circumstance bonus to bypass any secret door within Region I.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, the journals are also trapped with a poison needle. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Search DC to notice the death and darkness powder by 2.

107 THROUGH 1107. WEBS OF DECEIT

Since the magical disaster unleashed by Mahir, the driders have been battling against their environment and its denizens in what may well result in a futile attempt to regain control of the Halls of Flesh. Despite their natural sorcerous power, the driders find themselves at a serious disadvantage, and fight hard for every room and doorway they hold.

Once, the driders say, they had no need to fight for their homes. Once, before the sorcerer Mahir was betrayed by others in his circle, the driders were poised to retake their rightful place among the surface dwellers. Such ravings are typical of even the lowliest of the driders, underlying the madness that infests every last member of their enclave.

This is not to say that the driders are ineffectual or chaotic; there is certainly method to their madness. The strategy of the driders is twofold — to increase their numbers by continuing the magical experiments begun by Mahir, and to plunder the Halls of Flesh for any remaining magical artifacts left behind by the fiendish prisoners or their celestial warders. This belief in their inevitable triumph has resulted in certain blind spots.

The driders hardly recognize that plots exist against them. Indeed, they have absorbed all the perceived arrogance of their former masters, the drow, and expanded upon it. That one of their slaves could plot against them is abhorrent, and punishable by death. That the whole of the drow might conspire is inconceivable... something that the drow exploit to utmost advantage. The driders, meanwhile, press forward with their schemes, secure in the knowledge that they alone are the masters of the Halls of Flesh.

Each of the driders that has risen sufficiently in rank pursues their own agenda and projects, all to further the glory of the driders as a whole. One such example is Padeema (Room 177) and his modifications to a stolen apparatus of the crab and forays into alchemical defoliants. Another project of the driders is Arioeh (Room 168), the disguised drid-

Anguish is the 'twin' of Madness (Room 158), the half-draconic gibbering moulder that plagues the Halls and all those who dwell within. Captured with spell and the sacrifice of dozens of drow slaves and warriors, Anguish now lays, chained, in its chamber. The driders send willful slaves to it occasionally, to collect samples of its magically-charged flesh and venom to further their experiments. More often than not, the slaves are do not return from the likes of such a bestial encounter.

Their arrogance aside, the driders maintain a strong presence in the Halls of Flesh, commanding their troops and slaves nearest the dangerous Sections with an iron fist. Disobedience is punished with torture, and outright rebellion with death. Those who serve the drider well are rewarded with the highest honor — used as experimental fodder for the spider beings' horrific experiments. The drow find this not to be an honor at all, to say the least. Any PCs captured by the driders can expect the same fate — transformation or worse at the hands of their captors.

16	A patrol of four drow and a drider overseer are on a routine sweep of the Section. They subdue the PCs and bring them to the other driders (Room 190) for interrogation.
17	A small patrol of four drow guards scouring the Halls for intruders at the behest of a particularly paranoid drider. If encountered, they capture the PCs and bring them back to their drider commander (Room 1103).
18	Several drow slaves are doing manual labor of some kind, unfit for patrol duty. They are unarmed. If Lorath gets word of the PCs slaying slaves, his Initial Attitude shifts one degree toward Hostile. If Lorath gets word of the PCs aiding slaves, his Initial Attitude shifts one degree toward Helpful.
19	Padeema (Room 177) and a contingent of six drow warriors hunt for deserters. Padeema intends to return the PCs to Region M where they would prove useful in his experiments.
20	Anguish (Room 198) fights six drow guards and two driders. PCs joining the battle are attacked by the driders if Anguish is defeated.

187. BLASTED ROOM

This chamber suffered in the grips of a small yet fierce battle — the walls are scorched and pitted, crazily cracked where they have not been melted outright, and the floor is slick as clean glass. A tunnel slopes off to the southwest, dull crimson light and stinking vapor rising from it. A second tunnel rises into darkness to the northeast.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The slope of the tunnel to the southwest is used as a ramp to deliver prisoners and 'potential driders' to Arioch in Room 168. The driders frequently send drow who have been driven mad by the altar in Room 1110 here, where they slide into Arioch's iron prison.

Encounter Condition: Hazardous Footing 17

Tactics: PCs navigating this Room must be wary — the floor is fused by heat and magic, forging a nearly-frictionless surface. The Room presents little challenge to the driders, who can navigate the walls and ceiling, but crossing the floor requires a DC 18 Reflex check, use of spider climb, or a DC 20 Climb check.

188. SUNKEN CHAMBER

The floor of this room was cast asunder somehow — it is cracked and tilts at dangerous angles. Few places provide a level walking surface, the large stone tiles smashed and jutting upwards to give the appearance of broken teeth, sharp and ready to bite.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is difficult to navigate without injury. For every 5 ft. of floor area crossed, PCs must make a DC 15 Reflex save or suffer 1d4 damage from the sharp, jutting rocks and unexpected holes that trap unwary feet. Moving through this chamber reduces movement by 10 ft. per round, and a failed Reflex save alerts the guards in Rooms 190 and 191 that intruders are approaching as rocks tumble loudly against one another. A DC 20 Move Silently check or silence negates this effect.

190. THE LAST BASTION

This was once perhaps a feast hall, or large audience chamber. Any dignity these rooms once had is gone now, replaced by cracked walls, defaced carvings of a bygone age and the stink of desperation rising from its defenders. The southern portion of the room is given over to barricades and choke points befitting its besieged state, manned by both the spider-like beings that haunt these halls and dark-skinned elves. All are armed and mill about looking preoccupied.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The Bastion (as it is called) is a punishment duty, but also remains important to the safety of the driders and their drow slaves. To the south lies the lair of the chimera Anguish (Room 198), and the creature makes attacks against the bastion often, much to deep the regret of those who man the Guardpost.

Little thought was given to the guards of the Bastion—instead, it exists purely to stave off the attacks of Anguish. Two-man barricades litter the room, and the southern doors have been replaced with magically-strengthened iron and etched with runes to discourage the chimera. The guards here are not of Lorath's (Room 1103) cadre; instead a mixture of driders and drow remain vigilant to attacks, always ready to repulse intruders. The driders, as is common, are fanatically loyal to their own cause, and the drow guards brutally conditioned and magically compelled to the point that they cannot feel fear. Each creature present is willing to die before deserting their post.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: Before the battle begins, the Krast and Vala (hp 50, 48) — two drider sorcerers — already have disguise self cast, to make themselves look like drow. PCs sympathetic to the drow shouldn't suspect that they are among the enemy. If a fight breaks out the sorcerers step beyond the reach of melee, launching spells from the cracked and pitted ceiling while the six elite guards (hp 53, 53, 51, 50, 50, 48) pepper foes with missile fire and reach weapons.

On round one, the sorcerers use invisibility sphere to hide all of them, each standing next to three drow fighters. While the drow fighters move into position, the sorcerers cast mage armor, shield, fire shield, and any other spells that do not neutralize their invisibility sphere. If things go poorly for the drow, the driders hide and cast ranged spells such as web, fireball, and slow.

Once intruders are detected, the elite guards retreat to their barricades, which create a deadly maze bristling with weaponry for those unfortunate enough to venture into the Bastion. They provide partial cover for the drow manning them. Typically, two pikemen, two swordsmen and two crossbowmen man three of the six barricades, supported by two drider sorcerers. The pikemen keep intruders at bay while crossbowmen fire. When intruders close with those manning the barricades, the pikemen move to support those with rapiers and crossbows using the 'aid another' action.

191. RING TRAP

In the south wall, you see a circle of carved mystical symbols in the with a depression behind it, set into the wall. All around the ring are black smudges and blood.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: At first glance, the PCs may believe that the ring is another ring trap (like Room 130), but it is in fact a key hole that requires a dridr key to open. A DC 20 Knowledge (arcane) check reveals them as warding runes, hopefully. If a dridr key is not placed in the keyhole before passing more than 5 ft. down the corridor, a magic mouth triggers, shouting in Undercommon "Invaders! Call to arms!" It repeats this message five times and then vanishes until it is triggered.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the magic mouth triggers, the drow in Rooms 192, 193, 194, and 195 sent two guards each to investigate. The guards from Rooms 192 and 193 arrive in 2 rounds and the guards from Rooms 193 and 194 arrive in 1d3+2 rounds. They do not engage in battle (unless they outnumber their foes) but instead report back to their respective lieutenants, anything they find that is of any interest. They do not negotiate and keep opponents at bay with spears or whatever else they carry.

The lieutenants in Rooms 192 through 195 all have drower keys and any time a soldier is sent out from these Rooms, he carries one with him, so he can return without triggering the magic mouth.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, the ring casts shocking grasp on any non-drower or non-drow inserting a drower key into the keyhole hole. To decrease the challenge, allow the PCs to insert any key into the keyhole.

192. CHOKE POINT WEST

The doors to this Room are locked and barricaded. Even if the PCs unlock a door (DC 40 Open Lock check), they need a DC 36 Strength check to break the bar pinning the door closed. Negotiating with the drow lieutenant inside is the only option for getting inside (see Tactics).

A crude slit in the door can be opened and closed from inside allowing the PCs and drow to communicate.

If the drow lieutenant lets the PCs in, read the following.

This stark chamber reflects a single purpose — siege. The doors here are heavily reinforced, and no attempt is made to hide the symbols of elemental magic etched upon them; they fairly glow with power.

Midway through the room rise up stone and iron barricades, their ends hinged, drilled through with murder holes for spears. The barricades nearly reach the ceiling.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room — along with Room 193 — is one of the central choke points against attacks by Anguish (the half-dragon chimera located in Room 198). After several previous attacks by the beast, the drowers have learned their lesson, knowing full well that if the chimera breaks through to the habitable areas of the prison, slaughter will quickly ensue. A great deal of magic goes into protecting these Rooms such as reinforcing the doors with spells and simple engineering, as well as constructing the barricades.

At present five drow guards (hp 38, 36, 36, 36, 34) and a drow lieutenant (hp 55) guard this Room, manning the west choke point. This is considered terrifying duty for all the drow enlisted. Should Anguish attack, it would certainly signal their demise, even given the reinforcements. Thus, the drow are on edge and ready to prove their worth in repelling an attack. If any of the them kills Anguish he would be given a promotion and quite possibly his freedom, but the drowers.

Encounter Condition: Cover

Tactics: The drow lieutenant is willing to hear reasons for letting the PCs in and/or through this Room. If they are coming from the south, he is suspicious and any Diplomacy check suffers a –6 circumstance penalty. If the PCs cannot change his mind, he does not open the door and does not let them in.

The lieutenant stationed here is level-headed and a good leader, but overtly reactionary about two very important topics. One, he will not put his men in harm's way unless he knows it will either save more lives to the north or get him promoted (he is a drow after all). Two, he has been stationed here for far too long, and the threat of Anguish's potential attack against the Room keeps him on edge.

Despite orders to the contrary, the drow guards strike to kill. The barricades give them the benefit of full cover, which they exploit, using specially-prepared longspear to their greatest advantage. If the battle goes badly, a "panic lever" is thrown. Once tripped, creatures in the Room have two rounds before a series of locks and springs seal the Room. One round after being sealed, the room floods with burnt other fumes.

If the panic level is thrown, the occupants of Room 193 are alerted and prepare to receive visitors at the north door or enemies at the south.

Burnt Other Vapor Trap: CR 7; mechanical; manual trigger; repair reset; gas; multiple targets (all targets in a 10-ft. by 10-ft. room); never miss; onset delay (3 rounds); poison (burnt other fumes, DC 18 Fortitude save resists, 1 Con drain/3d6 Con); Search DC 21; Disable Device DC 21

Treasure: The lieutenant wears a drower key around his neck. He has been assigned this key by the drowers and if he loses the key, his life is forfeit. This drower key is used to get passed the trap at Room 191 and is his identification (proving his not a shape-shifter) should he visit other guard posts.

193. CHOKE POINT EAST

The doors to this Room are locked and barricaded. Even if the PCs unlock a door (DC 40 Open Lock check), they need a DC 36 Strength check to break the bar pinning the door closed. Negotiating with the drow lieutenant inside is the only option of getting inside (see Tactics).

A crude slat in the door can be opened and closed from inside allowing the PCs and drow to communicate.

If the drow lieutenant lets the PCs in, read the following.

This plain square chamber is equipped for siege. Reinforced doors glow with the power of elemental magics, and barricades reach from floor to ceiling, bristling with spears.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room — along with Room 193 — is one of the central choke points against attacks by Anguish (the half-dragon chimera located in Room 198). After several previous attacks by the beast, the driders have learned their lesson, knowing well that if the chimera breaks through to the habitable areas of the prison, slaughter would ensue. A great deal of magic has gone into protecting these Rooms, reinforcing the doors with spells and simple engineering, as well as constructing the barricades.

At present five drow guards (hp 38, 38, 35, 34, 31 each) and a drow lieutenant (hp 55) guard this Room, manning the west choke point. This is considered terrifying duty for all the drow involved. Should Anguish attack, it would certainly mean their death, even given the protections. Thus, the drow are on edge and ready to prove their worth in repelling an attack. If any of the them kills Anguish he would be given a promotion and quite possibly his freedom, but the driders.

Encounter Condition: Cover

Tactics: The drow lieutenant in this Room is willing to hear reasons for letting the PCs in and/or through this Room. If they are coming from the south, he is very suspicious and any Diplomacy check suffers a -4 circumstance penalty. If the PCs cannot change his mind, he does not open the door and does not let them in. He is not nearly as reactionary as the lieutenant in Room 192, but he has his orders and follows them. He is not stupid, however, and if the PCs appear genuine or want to help, he invites them in, barring the door quickly once they are inside.

The drow guards are under strick orders to subdue anything that attacks (except Anguish), but most strike to kill out of fear or desperation. The barricades give the drow the benefit of full cover, which they exploit, using specially-prepared longspear to their greatest advantage. If the battle goes badly, a "panic lever" is thrown. Once tripped, creatures in the Room have two rounds before a series of locks and springs seal the Room. One round after being sealed, the room floods with insanity mist.

If the panic level is thrown, the occupants of Room 192 are alerted and prepare to receive visitors at the north door or enemies at the south.

◆ Insanity Mist Trap: CR 7; mechanical; manual trigger; repair reset; gas; multiple targets (all targets in a 10-ft. by 10-ft. room); never miss; onset delay (3 rounds); poison (insanity mist, DC 15 Fortitude save resists, 1d4 Wis/2d6 Wis); Search DC 21; Disable Device DC 21

Treasure: The lieutenant wears a driider key around his neck. He has been assigned this key by the driders and if he loses the key, his life is forfeit. This driider key is used to get passed the trap at Room 191 and is his identification (proving his not a shape-shifter) should he visit other guard posts.

194. CHOKE POINT NORTH

The doors to this Room are locked and barricaded. Even if the PCs unlock a door (DC 40 Open Lock check), they need a DC 36 Strength check to break the bar pinning the door closed. Negotiating with the drow lieutenant inside is the only option of getting inside (see Tactics).

A crude slat in the door can be opened and closed from inside allowing the PCs and drow to communicate.

If the drow lieutenant lets the PCs in, read the following.

This simple chamber is built to withstand a siege. The doors here are strongly reinforced, and the symbols of potent sorceries upon them glow with power. Stone and iron barricades rise from floor to ceiling, their ends hinged and drilled through with murder holes for spears.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room — along with Rooms 192, 193 and 195 — are the northeastern choke point against attacks by Anguish (the half-dragon chimera located in Room 198). After several previous attacks by the beast, the driders have learned their lesson, knowing well that if the chimera breaks through to the habitable areas of the prison, slaughter would ensue. The Room has been heavily reinforced through judicious use of magic and solid engineering.

At present five drow guards (hp 37, 37, 36, 34, 31 each) and a drow lieutenant (hp 55) guard this Room, manning the west choke point. The drow involved consider this a terrifying duty. Should Anguish attack, it would certainly mean their death, even given the protections in place. The drow are ready to prove their worth, because the driders have promised the drow that any of them who destroys Anguish will be freed. This is not strictly the case; the driders believe that any drow who can survive an encounter with Anguish is worthy of becoming a drider themselves.

Encounter Condition: Cover

Tactics: The drow lieutenant is level-headed and smart. While he is willing to hear reasons for letting the PCs in and/or through this Room, if they are coming from the south, he becomes suspicious and the PCs suffer a -8 circumstance penalty to any Diplomacy checks. If the PCs cannot change his mind, he does not open the door and does not let them in. He does not pull the alarm level either, because he would rather "wait out" the offending PCs. If possible, he sends two runners around to the other Rooms to warn them.

The lieutenant stationed here has a sound sense of tactics, but is concerned more with his own personal welfare. He has no reluctance to spend the lives of his own men to save his skin, and is equally willing to use outsiders as shock troops.

Despite orders to the contrary, the drow guards strike to kill. The barricades give them the benefit of full cover, which they exploit, using specially-prepared longspear to their greatest advantage. If the battle goes poorly, a "panic lever" is thrown. Once tripped, creatures in the Room have two rounds before a series of locks and springs seal the Room. One round after being sealed, the room floods with burnt orthur fumes.

If the panic lever is thrown, the occupants of Room 193 are alerted and prepare to receive visitors at the north door or enemies at the south.

195. CHOKE POINT SOUTH

The doors to this Room are locked and barricaded. Even if the PCs unlock a door (DC 40 Open Lock check), they need a DC 36 Strength check to break the bar pinning the door closed. Negotiating with the drow lieutenant inside is the only option of getting inside (see Tactics).

A crude slat in the door can be opened and closed from inside allowing the PCs and drow to communicate.

If the drow lieutenant lets the PCs in, read the following.

This square chamber is plainly ready for a siege. Doors locked and barred glow with the power of elemental magics, and barricades reach from floor to ceiling, bristling with spears.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is the southeastern choke point against attacks by Anguish (the half-dragon chimera located in Room 198). After several previous attacks by the beast, the driders have learned their lesson, knowing well that if the chimera breaks through to the habitable areas of the prison, slaughter would ensue. The room is reinforced by potent magics and solid engineering.

At present five drow guards (hp 41, 36, 34, 32, 32 each) and a drow lieutenant (hp 55) hold this Room against invasion. The drow involved consider this a terrifying duty, but most of them have become friends and at the very minimum enjoy one another's company. Should Anguish attack, it would certainly mean their deaths, even given the protections, so they make the best of what they have. The drow lieutenant is only here 50% of the time, often going for long walks to "check" on things. It is unknown to the guards whether he is a coward to a contact for Lorath (Room 1103).

Encounter Condition: Cover

Tactics: The drow lieutenant in this Room is completely unwilling to hear reasons for letting the PCs in and/or through this Room, especially if they are coming from the south. Due to his paranoia, any Diplomacy check suffers a -10 circumstance penalty. If the PCs cannot change his mind, he does not open the door and does not let them in. If the PCs set any example at all, it is that they are against the driders, however, they gain a +4 competence bonus to Bluff or Diplomacy checks.

The lieutenant stationed here is paranoid and xenophobic; his duty station has suffered the most from Anguish's rampages. If PCs do manage to convince him to allow them through, it takes only one wrong word to cause him to pull the panic lever and retreat north to Room 194.

The drow guards are under strict orders to subdue anything that attacks (except Anguish), but most strike to kill out of fear or desperation. The barricades give the drow the benefit of full cover, which they exploit, using specially-prepared longswords to their greatest advantage. If the battle goes badly, a "panic lever" is thrown. Once tripped, creatures in the Room have two rounds before a series of locks and springs seal the Room. One round after being sealed, the room floods with burnt othur fumes.

Because the driders have promised the drow that any of them who destroys Anguish will be freed, they have formed a pact that should any of them kill the beast, they will draw lots to see who claims the prize. They believe this will make them all fight harder. As a result, the drow guards either gain a +2 morale bonus to all attack rolls, weapon damage, and saving throws during any given 1d6 round 'interval' or suffer a -2 morale penalty to all attack rolls, weapon damage, and saves during that same interval. At the beginning of each interval, roll 1d20. On a 1-10, they suffer a -2 penalty during the 1d6 round interval, and on a 11-20, they gain a +2 bonus during the 1d6 round interval.

This interval need not be random (if the DM so chooses), but represent the ebb and flow of the battle. If they feel unified, they fight well together. But if they see someone slacking or taking a beating, they suffer as well.

If the panic lever is thrown, the occupants of Room 192 are alerted and prepare to receive visitors at the north door or enemies at the south.

196. OTYUGH PIT

This slime-ridden pit has several rents carved in its thick walls. A veritable river of liquefied filth flows around its edges, spilling through the holes in the walls of the pit to splash below. A roaring sound rises sometimes from the nigh unbreathable, stench-choked air, and flashes of some pale, yellowed flesh can be glimpsed. To the east, two large gates reside, offering escape from this den of waste and foulness.

Encounter: Not as dangerous as it appears at first, the otyugh pit is utilized by the driders and drow for garbage disposal that retains no value whatsoever. Offal, debris, dead enemies, and bits of corpses no longer needed in the driders' experiments (see Region M), are poured into the otyugh pit for the otyugh (hp 150) to consume and dispose of. Those circumnavigating the pit must make a DC 14 Reflex save, or fall into the pit, sustaining 2d6 falling damage.

The otyugh pit was part of the original waste disposal system in this section of the celestials' dungeon. The creature itself, while potentially powerful, is inoffensive to all but the nose, happily devouring whatever is thrown its direction. Due to the nature of the dungeon, the otyugh does not actually need to eat, but it does serve to process the garbage and offal disposed of in the pit.

A peculiarity of the otyugh (unknown to the drow or driders) is that it does not consume living beings; instead, it grasps them with its powerful tentacles and deposits them outside its pit. That is not to say that the otyugh does not consume whatever or whoever falls into its pit; but after a bite or two, the creature recognizes its mistake and removes the offending bit of not-garbage from its presence.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The otyugh does not attack unless it is attacked first. However, it consumes anything that falls into the pit. A single bite, given the creature's size, is also enough to ruin small items made of wood or leather, things that the creature happily consumes. If PCs attack the otyugh, it has sufficient reach at its size to strike at anyone within 5 ft. of the pit, dragging them inside for a few quick bites before throwing them out again.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, the otyugh grabs at characters passing within 5 ft. of its pit. To decrease the challenge, the otyugh tosses anything thrown into its pit back out again without biting it, inflicting 1d6+5 falling damage to a PC.

◆ Otyugh: CR 8; Huge aberration; HD 18d8+57; hp 150; Init -1; Spd 20 ft.; AC 19, touch 7, flat-footed 19; Base Atk +13; Grp +25; Atk +17 melee (2d6+4, tentacle); Full Atk +17 melee (2d6+4, 2 tentacles) and +11 melee (1d6+2, bite); Space/Reach 15 ft./15 ft. Skills and Feats: Hide -1*, Listen +10, Spot +10; Alertness, Great Fortitude, Improved Natural Armor, Improved Natural Attack (tentacle), Lightning Reflexes, Toughness, Weapon Focus (tentacle).

Disease (Ex): Filth fever—bite, Fortitude DC 22, incubation period 1d3 days; damage 1d3 Dex and 1d3 Con. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, an ottyugh must hit with a tentacle attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Skills: An ottyugh has a +8 racial bonus on Hide checks when in its lair, due to its natural coloration.

197. DEAD MEN WALKING

The doors leading into this corridor can be locked from the either side and require a DC 40 Open Lock check to unlock. The door leading to Room Room 199 is certainly locked and the others are locked 50% of the time. The doors are reinforced and sturdy, capable of withstanding intense heat.

⇒ Reinforced Iron Door: 3 in. thick; hardness 10; hp 150; break DC 40; Open Lock DC 40, fire immunity.

This narrow, L-shaped corridor reeks of something vile, unidentifiable. All doors here are heavily-reinforced, faced with some strange, fibrous substance held in place with iron bands. The charnel smell of hot flesh permeates everything and chokes you.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: While the PCs cannot see them (illusions cast on the wall prevent it), there are 4-ft. high vents every 5 ft. of this hallway. These vents cast burning hands as the PCs pass, resetting every 2 rounds. The safest method of traversing this corridor is for everyone to run as fast as they can.

Encounter Condition: Smoke or Stagnant Air

Tactics: The walls radiate strong illusion magic from the permanent image concealing the vents. A DC 18 Will save is required to see past the illusion and notice all the vents.

♣ Hidden Burning Hands Trap: CR 4; magic device; proximity trigger (alarm); automatic reset (2 round delay); spell effect (burning hands, 5th-level wizard, 5d4 fire, DC 11 Reflex save half damage); spell effect (permanent image, DC 16 Will save disbelief); Search DC 26; Disable Device DC 26. Searching for the vents requires the PCs to first disbelieve the illusion making them appear as walls.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 4*

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, remove the delay from the burning hands trap. To decrease the challenge, increase the distance between the vents to 10 ft.

198. THE LAIR OF ANGUISH

The ceiling in this Room is 50 ft. high.

This long hall, perhaps once given to great meetings or feast, is now desecrated, its floors strewn with the cinders of once impressive furniture, the remains spattered with clots of vile black-gray ooze and grime. Carvings of divine figures lay against the walls and in pieces upon the floor, savagely, brutally mangled. Beneath the rubble, once can spy a gnawed bone, often clad in armor or rotted leather. The air here reeks of sulfurous fumes. The ceiling above soars high into the darkness, still held in place by vast beams and supports.

Initial Attitude: Hostile*

Encounter: This unhallowed hall once served as a meeting place for the celestials that guarded the prison complex. 50 ft. high, its bracing and cracked roof stand as testament to the great earthquake that nearly shattered the prison, and as a monument to the original builders' skill.

The doors to the north bear the marks of claws and fire. The doors are barred shut, and the locks fused. PCs may make a DC 28 Knowledge (nature) skill check to realize that Anguish (hp 135) does not possess any of the normal dragon heads associated with chimera. Instead, Anguish's draconic head is that of a maddened bronze dragon.

Because it is one of the sources of the arcane contamination within the Halls, Anguish cannot die unless subjected to the ritual of unmaking found in Rooms 122 through 124. If Anguish is killed by anything less than total destruction (such as disintegrate), he reforms within 1d6 days at full hit points.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Concealment, Echoes 4, Unhallowed 6

Tactics: Creatures approaching Anguish's lair are given fair warning — the halls leading directly to it bear signs of abandonment and the scars of Anguish's battles with the lesser creatures of the prison, as well as its warped twin Madness, scar every surface.

At any given time, there is a 60% chance that Anguish is in his lair. Creatures entering are unlikely to see the chimera at first; it typically conceals itself in the rafters and support beams of the room, all the better to avoid being surprised by Madness.

Anguish is clever enough to wait at least one round before attacking, unless it is seen (Spot check, DC 24). Anguish usually leads its attack by unleashing its breath weapon (a 40 ft. line of lightning) as it hovers. After the initial volley, Anguish attacks utilizing Flyby Attack for its bite, gore and claw attacks, or its breath weapon outside melee range. Anguish continues to attack until its targets have fled to an area it cannot reach, or it has lost 50% of its hit points.

If it loses its prey or is badly wounded, Anguish withdraws to the top of its lair, retaliating with its repulsion breath weapon if attacked. Anguish will not pursue prey that flees within 60 ft. of the lair of its twin, Madness (Room 156).

Treasure: N/A

EL: 13

Scaling: To increase the challenge of the encounter, have Anguish engaged in battle with his 'twin', Madness. PCs should be allowed Listen checks to be forewarned that both are present. To decrease the challenge, Anguish has just returned from a battle and is wounded (–30 hp).

Breath Weapon (Su): Anguish's breath weapon is usable once every 1d4 rounds, and is either: A 40 ft. line of lightning that deals 4d8 points of damage with a Reflex save (DC 22) for half damage or a 20 ft. cone of repulsion gas Will save (DC 22) or do nothing but move away from Anguish for 1d6+2 rounds. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day Anguish can make a normal melee attack to deal +12 damage against a good foe.

Ungivable (Su): Anguish cannot be permanently killed by normal or magical means, save for a ritual found deep within the Halls of Flesh (see Rooms 122 through 124).

Water Breathing (Ex): Anguish can breathe underwater indefinitely and can freely use his breath weapon, spells, and other abilities while submerged.

Skills: Anguish's three heads give it a +2 racial bonus on Spot and Listen checks.

* Anguish is the epitome of chaotic evil. There is nothing more chaotic in the entire dungeon and his failure to understand morals marks him as one dangerous beast. He cannot be reasoned with.

199. RESTIVE AND FURTIVE

The doors to this Room are locked, requiring DC 40 Open Lock checks to unlock.

This small room is flanked by doors on either end, both heavily reinforced. Several crude stone tables are scattered about, surrounded by patched and roughly-carved wooden chairs.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent or Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room represents respite for those manning the sentinel towers and those who are sent to collect samples from Anguish nearby. The droids rarely come here, and when they do, stay but only briefly.

Four drow guards (hp 45, 41, 40, 39) are resting here presently, uninterested in fighting; they only act in self-defense. They are escaping the rigors of duty and would rather be left alone. They've locked the doors, so no one comes looking for them.

Encounter Condition: [Safe]

Tactics: Their Initial Attitude is Indifferent unless they know that the PCs have fought drow in the Region, in which case their Initial Attitude shifts to Unfriendly.

If attacked, the drow fighters retreat towards Room 1103, covering one another while a single drow seeks help.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one droid that is berating the drow fighters for their slovenliness. To decrease the challenge, remove one drow fighter.

Elf Traits: Immunity to sleep spells and effects, and a +2 racial saving throw bonus against enchantment spells or effects.

Light Blindness: Abrupt exposure to bright light (such as sunlight or a daylight spell) blinds drow for 1 round. On subsequent rounds, they are dazzled as long as they remain in the affected area.

Skills: +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks. An elf who merely passes within 5 ft. of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if she were actively looking for it.

1100. CRUEL AMUSEMENT

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 35 Open Lock check to unlock. The door locks automatically when the door closes. A DC 25 Disable Device check stops it from ever locking again, if a PC spends 5 minutes tinkering with it.

This large room is filled with silk sacks, piled high against the walls. The sacks themselves do little to contain the smell of whatever is inside them — a reeking, meaty miasma that seeps into every pore and lingers long in the nostrils. Several stout iron rings were pounded into the floor, where manacles can be secured. Three doors lie to the west, each fitted with an arrangement of gears attached to a lever.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These two antechambers serve as holding areas for prisoners of the droids who were proven 'weak' by vicious and depraved tests. Beyond the three reinforced iron doors lie small cells. When the levers attached to each door are thrown, the outer doors of the cells open, allowing prisoners access to Room 1102 and its resident spider eater.

The lever mechanisms make little noise. As such, there is little chance (15%) that the drow send reinforcements to this Room (from 194 or 195), even during a battle. The sound is simply ascribed to the decaying machinery.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If droids or drow guards are present ('escorting' prisoners into the lair of the spider eater), they strip their prisoners of obvious armor, weapons, spell components and equipment, and forced into the cells in pairs.

Treasure: The silk sacks nearby contain offal from unlucky drow, fallen droids and other, less savory creatures, all used in the making of flesh golems. Harvesting these preserved but disgusting items act as 500 xp and 5,250 gp towards the creation of a flesh golem.

Identifying the contents of the silk sacks requires DC 23 Knowledge (arcana) checks. Success reveals that the items stored within are used for a variety of vile arcane purposes, and that the majority of parts available could be employed to create several flesh golems.

1101. DEADLY CELLS

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 35 Open Lock check to unlock. The door locks automatically when the door closes.

This small room is faced front and back with sturdy iron doors. As the locking mechanism of the door to the east engages, the door to the west swings upwards on rust-clotted hinges, revealing a large chamber beyond... and something in there scuttles. A sound can be heard which combines the rasp of scraping skin on hard stone mingled with a dripping and fluid liquid type movement.

There is a 15% chance of a drow prisoner in a cell. If so, there is a 25% chance of a pair of prisoners. If so read the following.

Hunkered in the darkness, a ragged prisoner waits for death.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There is nothing inherently dangerous about these cells. It is what lies beyond them that presents a hazard.

Cell Door: Hardness 20, hp 120, Break DC 35, Open Lock DC 35.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The door leading to the spider eater's lair (Room 102) opens automatically when the outer door's lock is engaged. Within 1d3 rounds, the door opens fully, giving the creature access the cell. Halting the lair door's upward advance requires either a DC 25 Disable Device check, or a Break check against the door itself.

Those outside the cell have no means to monitor the progress of the door, though it does not unlock if the lair door is jammed or otherwise prevented from closing. A third setting, only available from the lever on the outer door, opens both doors, allowing drow guards to retrieve the paralyzed and implanted victims of the spider eater.

1102. LAIR OF THE SPIDER EATER

This long, wide-ceiling room is lit by a central column, one which bears several mosaic tiles that flicker to life then dim again, casting the room into shadow. And in those shadows something unknown is waiting—moving quickly about the room. This is the source of the scuffling, flowing sound audible from the nearby cells. Vision beyond a few paces is obscured by great, hanging sheets of cobwebs which lend substance to the shadows.

Encounter: This Room is used by the driders to house another of their failed experiments—a mutilated, bestial spider eater (hp 84). The spider eater's wings are torn from its back, allowing drow to corral it easily. The drider sorcerers to the north performed their vile rituals upon the helpless creature, resulting not in the restoration of its wings, but something far more horrible—a dozen spindly, spiked legs sprouting from the bloodied sockets where the wings once sprouted. Months later, when the spider eater began growing at an alarming rate, the driders moved to this Room.

The lair of the spider eater provides the driders with a source of eggs to experiment on and a place to dispose those who have outlived their usefulness.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Concealment

Tactics: The spider eater starts this encounter hidden in the shadows on the ceiling, and spends two rounds "scenting" its prey.

The spider eater is a deadly opponent within the confines of its lair. Thanks to the extra limbs grown from its former wings, the creature may attack from any angle, but prefers to drop onto opponents from above. On the third round, the spider eater selects the weakest opponent and drops onto him from the shadows, initiating a grapple. While it grapples its first victim, the extra limbs fend off attackers, while it stings its chosen prey. If the spider eater's prey resists the paralytic poison, it continues to grapple and sting until the opponent succumbs or the grapple is broken. If its prey proves too boisterous, the spider eater selects another opponent, or retreats to the top of the 60 ft. ceiling to heal.

The walls of the lair are treated with sticky silk produced by the ettercaps, and act as the web spell for purposes of movement. The spider eater is not discomfited by this, having been granted freedom of movement here.

Treasure: Several undiscovered and unfertilized spider eater eggs are present in the Room.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one spider eater. To decrease the challenge, remove the spider eater's freedom of movement.

Skills and Feats: Listen +12, Spot +12; Alertness, Dodge, Weapon Focus (sting).

Implant (Ex): Female spider eaters lay their eggs inside paralyzed creatures of Large or larger size. The young emerge six weeks later, literally devouring the host from inside.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 20, initial damage none, secondary damage paralysis for 1d8+5 weeks. The save DC is Constitution-based. Freedom of Movement (Su): Spider eaters have a continuous freedom of movement ability as the spell (caster level 12th). When the spider eater serves as a mount, this effect does not extend to its rider.

Skills: Spider eaters have a +4 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks. Carrying Capacity: A light load for a spider eater is up to 306 lbs.; a medium load, 307–612 lbs.; and a heavy load, 613–920 pounds.

1103. THE MEETING HALL

The doors to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 35 Open Lock check to unlock. The doors lock automatically when the door closes. The eastern approach to the Room has no door, but no sound travels through Room 168 without anyone noticing.

This room is taller than most in the Halls; a cathedral ceiling rises up into the shadows, lending the room a cavernous air. The floor is rough stone, crudely patched in many places. Two rooms are present, doors closed, off to the west. To the east, a long hallway extends out. Midway through that hallway, stone and iron barricades, reminiscent of siege machinery, block the corridor.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The siege barriers present here are wrought of magically-reinforced iron and stone, and may be rolled away to unblock the hall at 5 ft. per round. Each barrier blocks an area five feet across.

☛ Barrier: Hardness 10, hp 60. Break DC 35.

Drow and drider guards use this Room as a central gathering point when the denizens of the lower Halls attack. It acts as a coordinating area for the drider overlords as they direct their troops. In cases where the drider and drow-controlled areas are not on alert, there are typically six drow guards (hp 32, 31, 30, 29, 29, 28) present, as well as a drider overlord (hp 50). When attacks from the Halls are underway (a frequent and unpleasant occurrence), the forces increase dramatically—two dozen drow guards (hp 33 each) stand ready to be dispatched to the guard posts and choke points that separate the habitable area from the lower Halls, as well as half a dozen driders and the drow captain, Lorath.

The western wings (behind the doors) of this Room contain special items employed only in case of attacks by intruders or the horrors of the lower Halls. The northwestern room contains the alchemical apparatus necessary to create the dust for darkness and death traps (Room 113), drow sleep poison, the potent defoliant that the driders and drow use to control the Green Death (Room 167) and a variety of other mundane concoctions. The southwestern room contains eight crystal spheres enchanted with telepathic bond which allow the guard force to communicate more effectively over a great distance. Over time, the spheres' magic has weakened. They are unreliable now, but no one is willing to complain to the driders that they need to be recharged. In times of desperation, a sphere is issued to a drider overlord and its unit of drow guards, while a mastersphere is kept in the meeting hall, held by the senior drider on watch or Lorath (Room 1103).

The eastern wings house two to four drow guards each to defend against enemies. Approaching the meeting hall requires PCs to make Hide and Move Silently checks opposed by a Listen or Spot check by the guard force, depending on the situation. The guard force receives a +2 circumstance bonus to these checks, unless otherwise noted.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The drider and drow are a disciplined force. Ever watchful for threats emerging from the lower Halls, they are also charged with capturing intruders—the drider sorcerers are generally on the look out for an adventurer or errant celestial to use in their inhuman experiments. If the guard force encounters intruders, they fight to capture them alive, making an exception only in the case of elves, who, according to protocol, may be killed outright.

The guard force are typically armed with a combination of polearms such as glaives and longswords, as well as maces and longswords; all treated with an alchemically-strengthened version of drow sleep poison. As well, all members of the guard force wear alchemically-treated armor that renders them resistant to fire-based attacks. In combat with PCs, the drow guards dispatch four drow warriors to attack while the remainder of the force engages the PCs in a delaying action, keeping them at bay with tanglefoot bags and alchemist's fire. The unlucky PC is subject to attacks by two drow guards who inflict subdual damage. The remaining drow guards make use of the 'aid another' action, reducing the penalty to subdue to -2.

When a PC falls, the drow and driders immediately call for a cessation of hostilities, using the fallen PC as a hostage. In cases where surrender is refused, or the PCs successfully resist the poisoned weapons, the drow strike to kill; the drider sorcerers can still make good use of a corpse.

Treasure: The northwestern chamber contains a masterwork alchemist's laboratory, as well as six acid flasks, six tanglefoot bags, and six vials of alchemist's fire. The southwestern chamber contains three suits of alchemically-treated masterwork studded leather armor (fire resistance 10), as well as the crystal spheres.

EL: 8, or 12 if the guards are on alert

Scaling: The increase the challenge of this encounter, place the drow guard on alert and increase the circumstance bonus to their Listen and Spot checks to +4. To decrease the challenge, remove one drow guard from each location.

LORATH

The captain of the drow guard force is the driders' deadliest foe, and takes pains to keep his true intentions a secret. Lorath (Room 1103) is a massive drow male with a peculiar deformity — a third muscular arm sprouts from his left side. When on duty, Lorath dresses in a drow chain shirt and carries a large shield on his lower left arm, freeing both his "normal" arms for attack.

Lorath is the epitome of drow psychology — devious, self-centered and vicious. He plots with the dark naga Siglinde (Room 131), bartering items other drow have stolen from the driders in exchange for her promises of magical aid. The arrangement has gone on for quite some time, but Lorath is becoming increasingly suspicious that Siglinde has a hidden agenda of her own.

Lorath puts on a gruff demeanor when dealing with those who can be of aid to the drow cause. But beneath the facade, he plans for the moment when the individual's usefulness is at an end. He fervently believes the drow goddess will cure his deformity when the drow are led back to the surface and their homes. As a rule, Lorath trusts no other, save for his lieutenants stationed in Room 1117. The drow captain possesses a twisted sense of humor to match his other sensibilities, thinking nothing of devising a cruel jest at the expense of driders simply for his own amusement.

Lorath does have a weakness — his brother, Arioch (Room 168). Transformed by the drider spellcasters into one of their own, the drow captain's brother awaits those who traverse the Paths of the Gauntlet. Lorath seeks to end his brother's suffering. PCs befriending Lorath, might be tasked to 'rescue' his brother from enslavement by the drider. As the transformation cannot be reversed, this 'rescue' amounts to assassination — of which Lorath is well aware.

CRYSTAL SPHERES

6 in. in diameter, these crimson spheres are enchanted with a permanent telepathic bond, and are issued to the drider overlords of drow guards in Room 1103. The magic of the crystal spheres has faded over time, rendering them unreliable. Using a crystal sphere requires a DC 25 Spellcraft check, or a DC 20 Use Magic Device check. The user must concentrate for 1d4+1 rounds to contact another sphere from the set. If the user is interrupted or disturbed in any way during the required time, they must succeed at a DC 20 Concentration check or be forced to start anew. Each of the eyes spheres can be used for a total of 30 minutes in a given 24 hour period, however every 10 minutes the user must succeed at a DC 18 Fortitude save or become nauseated.

The sole exception is the master eye, identifiable by its slightly larger size (eight in. diameter) and stronger aura of Divination magic. The master eye may be used indefinitely, though its utility is limited by the dwindling energies of its sister spheres.

1104. GUARDPOST

This small room is rather unremarkable, save for two features: a lone, dark-skinned guard dressed in red-tinged leathers, dozing, leaning against a halberd, and a malformed doorway to the north.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Very little trouble unfolds near the ettercap workshops, and the guards on duty are typically assigned to this Room by Lorath, following a visit to the temple in Room 1125. The drow guard (hp 41) is actually asleep, having indulged in a bit of the sacred poison recently, and suffers a -2 penalty to attack, damage and saves (for 4d6 rounds) if he does wake.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The drowsy guard does not offer resistance if the PCs strike quickly. However, he carries a bone whistle. If he survives an attack, the guard takes a full retreat action down the hall towards Room 1105, blowing the whistle to summon guards from Room 1103. 2d6 guards arrive in 1d3+1 rounds.

Treasure: A DC 18 Appraise check or DC 20 Heal check reveals that the bone whistle is carved from the fingerbone of a humanoid and is worth about 1 gp.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a one drow guard and reduce the penalty suffered from the sacred poison to -1. To decrease the challenge, give the PCs an extra round to act before the drow guard summons help.

1105. ETTERCAP WORKSHOP, FINAL ASSEMBLY

This square chamber is replete with workbenches, tools, and the echoes of labor. High, chattering squeals emanate from the hunch-backed beings hard at work. Nothing devised here could possibly be benign. One or two of the hunchbacked things look up with blank eyes set above wicked mandibles before returning to concentrate on their infernal labors.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This Room is the final assembly area for the mechanical and magical traps protecting the drider-controlled sections of the Halls from intruders. The ettercaps (hp 35, 33, 31) are exceptionally intelligent, employing their talent for trapmaking on behalf of their masters. A single drow overseer (hp 21) watches over the malformed creatures, and is in league with Lorath, the drow captain of the guard.

The overseer is usually found in this room, where the delicate work is done, requiring the most intensive supervision. While the ettercaps industriously assemble traps, the overseer wanders from workbench to workbench, officiously pointing out "problems" and otherwise attempting to justify his comfortable position. While he is in league with Lorath, the rebel drow captain, Lorath is well aware of the overseer's capabilities (or lack thereof), and has assigned him to the workshops to keep him out of trouble.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The drow overseer and the ettercaps present are entirely unprepared for confrontation. When combat breaks out, the overseer gladly sacrifices the ettercap laborers to save his own hide, retreating to Room 1107 and calling a patrol of six drow warriors.

The ettercaps first entangle their opponents in webbing before attacking. Unless their webs are set ablaze, the ettercaps attack from multiple directions, coordinating attacks so an entangled opponent has little opportunity to counterstrike before the poison from the creatures' mandibles takes effect. If the webs are set ablaze, the ettercaps abandon them, fleeing towards Room 1107 to await reinforcements. They are blindly loyal, otherwise retreating only when reduced to 5 hp or less.

Treasure: Two sets of masterwork trapmaking tools can be recovered, along with 100 ft. of strong silk rope; the rope, made of ettercap webbing, is highly flammable.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two ettercaps. To decrease the challenge, have the ettercaps surrender when reduces to 50% hit points.

An entangled creature can escape with a DC 13 Escape Artist check or burst the web with a DC 17 Strength check. The check DCs are Constitution-based, and the Strength check DC includes a +4 racial bonus. The web has 6 hit points, hardness 0, and takes double damage from fire.

Ettercaps can also create sheets of sticky webbing from 5 to 60 ft. square. They usually position these to snare flying creatures but can also try to trap prey on the ground. Attempts to escape or burst the webbing receive a +5 bonus if the trapped creature has something to walk on or grab while pulling free. 1106. ETTERCAP WORKSHOPS, ENCHANTMENT

This room is somewhat different from the previous room. Runes symbolizing power are etched upon the walls and floor, forming several working circles. Along one wall are a pair of workbenches, where two ettercaps hunch over their delicate tasks. In the opposite corner crouches a drider, mandibles wiggling over a metal contraption.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This Room is the enchantment area for the magical traps protecting the drider-controlled sections of the Halls from intruders. The ettercaps (hp 34, 32) are exceptionally intelligent, spending their time here perfecting and preparing components for enchantment. Meanwhile, a drider crafter (hp 60) with no talent for war-magics spends most of his time enchanting trap components.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The crafter and the ettercaps present are unprepared for any sort of confrontation, unless the overseer from Room 1105 has alerted them. If the overseer is killed before he can flee, allow the workers in this room a DC 15 Listen check to hear the sounds of combat in Room 1105. If alerted, the crafter casts invisibility upon himself and scuttles back to Room 1107 to await reinforcements. Once safely in Room 1107, he secures the door with arcane lock.

The ettercaps entangle their opponents in webbing before attacking. Unless their webs are set ablaze, the ettercaps attack from multiple directions, coordinating attacks so an entangled opponent has little opportunity to counterstrike before the poison from the creatures' mandibles takes effect. If the webs are set ablaze, the ettercaps abandon them, fleeing towards Room 1107 to await reinforcements. They are almost blindly loyal, otherwise retreating only when reduced to 5 hp or less.

Treasure: Two sets of masterwork trapmaking tools, the drider's spell components, and 100 ft. ft. of strong silk rope may be recovered from this room; the rope, made of webbing, is highly flammable.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two ettercaps. To decrease the challenge, have the ettercaps surrender when reduces to 50% hit points.

1107. ETTERCAP WORKSHOPS, THE FORGE

Built into the far wall of this cubical chamber is a forge, expertly tended by one of the misshapen, hunchbacked arachnids so prevalent in this area. Yet another ettercap pounds red-hot metal on a black iron anvil, and well away from the forge, a third works at a carpenter's bench.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This Room is where raw materials are processed into components for the magical and mechanical traps protecting the drider-controlled sections of the Halls from intruders. The ettercaps (hp 35, 32, 30) are exceptionally intelligent. Relatively speaking, the ettercaps work industriously to create finished components out of raw materials.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The ettercaps present are unprepared for any sort of confrontation, unless the overseer from Room 1105 or the drider crafter from Room 1106 has alerted them. If the overseer and crafter are killed before they can flee, allow the workers in this room a DC 25 Listen check to hear the sounds of combat in Room 1105, and a DC 20 Listen check when combat arrives in Room 1106.

If the overseer and crafter are both killed, but the ettercaps are alerted, they attempt to bar the door with bar iron stock. Once the door is breached, if the overseer and/or the crafter are still alive, the ettercaps fight to the death to protect their masters. Otherwise, they attempt to flee back out through the outer workshops, and if prevented from flight, surrender.

If forced to fight, the ettercaps first entangle their opponents in webbing. Unless their webs are set ablaze, the ettercaps attack from multiple directions, coordinating attacks so an entangled opponent has little opportunity to counterstrike before the poison from the creatures' mandibles takes effect. If the webs are set ablaze, the ettercaps abandon them, fleeing outward toward Room 1105. They are blindly loyal, otherwise retreating only when reduced to 5 hp or less.

Treasure: Two sets of masterwork trapmaking tools are recoverable, as well as 50 pounds of bar iron stock.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, double the number of ettercaps. To decrease the challenge, the ettercaps put up only a token resistance before surrendering.

1108 THROUGH 1114. DRIDER SHRINE COMPLEX

The drider temple complex is, with the possible exception of the area surrounding Madness' lair, the most vile and disgusting in Region I. The driders, spurning a goddess that reviled and enslaved them, and subsequently having no true deity to worship, have turned to the degenerate worship of abomination itself. Their temple is a cacophonous paean to filth, a haven of aberrations and a spiritual fortress of most desperate unholiness.

The drider kneels at the altar of abomination as they force their drow slaves to the worship in this same way. Any drow that resists, or worse, suffers in the fangs of the driders. The driders love nothing more than to "convert" their chattel, and if they render the drow a mass of tissue, so much the better.

Due to the belief on the part of the driders that the drow find the shrine anything but sacred, drow guards are not usually found within the complex. Drider sorcerers take it in turn to guard the sanctum, but of late, they have been relying more and more on its unholy aura and the filth that has collected in order to keep intruders away. The troubles caused by Madness and Anguish have occupied more of their time, and their main concern is population growth.

Any drow who might be found in this area are unwilling worshippers and potential drider victims. They do not look upon intruders as rescuers, however; intruders are a means for them to purchase their safety for another hour or so. Further, drow who have gone mad from the shrine's torments are friendless, and is likely to turn upon intruder, drow, and drider alike.

1108. THE ROOM OF RUIN

This is less a room and more of a cave, though in one corner the remnants of the first chamber are evident, peeking up through layers of hard-packed dirt and crusted with sheets of sticky white filament. To the north, the room steadily rises upwards, becoming a nearly vertical path before disappearing into a large hole in the wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The original purpose of this room is lost, destroyed by the massive earthquake that freed the prisoners of the celestials. Now the room serves as the entrance to the drider tunnels to the north. The majority of this room is beneath the floor level of the Halls, and is uncomfortably hot. As the entrance to the drider tunnels is naturally used mostly by driders, little accommodation is made for those not possessing the ability to walk on the walls. A DC 20 Climb check is required to scale the wall and attain the entrance to the warrens beyond.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The sticky webbing used to shore up this chamber acts as an entanglement spell, and requires a DC 16 Reflex save to avoid becoming snared. Driders or those wearing a harness of driderkind or belt of the drider can freely navigate the webs without penalties.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

1109. DEAD END

This tiny room has no decorative elements, and is angled unpleasantly to one side. Weapon shards litter the floor and a layer of dust suggests no one has been here in a while.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Once used to store weapons, this Room has fallen off the map. The dust should be a fair indication that no one visits this Room, making this a safe hiding place.

If the PCs use this Room as a base of operations to explore north into Region M, there is a 5% chance each time they come in and out of the Room that a random drow guard spots them. Whether or not this guard is loyal to the driders or Lorath (Room I103), is up to the DM.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: The door can be locked from the inside, should the PCs succeed at a DC 35 Open Lock check. However, any drider key opens it and there is a 5% chance that a drow lieutenant has a separate key specific to this door. However, it is unlikely anyone will enter or examine this Room.

Treasure: There is nothing of value, but the PCs can easily find enough wood to build a few fires. A vent in the ceiling (two inches wide) allows smoke to rise up and out of the dungeon.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

1110. SHRINE CELL

This claustrophobic room is filthy. The entrance is barred by a steel portcullis, through which can be witnessed the foul rituals the driders revel in.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This small Room encrusted with the filth of the shrine to aberration is nothing more than a holding cell for intruders caught defiling the temple. At present it is empty, but the remains of past "guests" can be found in various corners.

Encounter Condition: Diseased (cackle fever) 16

Tactics: PCs who spend more than eight hours confined in this Room are likely to contract cackle fever, which is carried in the offal encrusting the cell. The driders do nothing to see that the disease is eradicated, for they benefit from the damage it does to its victims' wits and will.

Treasure: A signet ring, with an inscription on the inside (written in Undercommon) — Valor — can be found in a corner of the cell, still attached to a decomposing hand.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

1111. NAVE OF THE SHRINE

This room is large, and studded with ancient columns of celestial creatures that are now defiled. Foul effluvia coat the walls, and between each pair of columns is the barest glint of metal. Moaning emanates from the end of the hall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The drow are brought to the nave of the shrine to indoctrinate them into the worship of twisted flesh. PCs who have time to examine the temple proper notice that several sets of strong manacles are set into the floor; these are used to secure recalcitrant drow during worship. The especially perceptive (Spot check, DC 22) notice that several of the manacle sets are crusted in blood.

When the PCs arrive, there is a single pitiful victim locked inside the manacles, barely dead; the drow's face appears melted and boiled. However, the mutilation cannot disguise the rictus of terror upon its face. He is so near death, the PCs can only ease the pain of his suffering with cure spells. Hit points cannot be restored at this point.

The floor of the nave is itself discolored and fouled in places; covered in ribbons of filth.

Encounter Condition: Desecration 6, Negative Energy, Stagnant Air

Tactics: The driders have constructed a particularly sinister trap to protect their sanctum. Pressure plates have been installed in the floor, which cause gravity to reverse in the room. Intruders are tumbled 30 ft. up to the ceiling, triggering a black tentacles spell and entangling them on the ceiling for the driders to deal with at their leisure. The trap further triggers an alarm in Room I112, summoning the two drider sorcerers there. Safe routes through the room are marked by the collections of filth on the floor and walls; the driders are well aware that most creatures do not share in their worship of aberrations offal.

♦ Ceiling Entangle Trap: CR 9; magic device; location trigger (pressure plates); automatic reset; spell effect (reverse gravity, 13th-level wizard, 3d6 fall [upon hitting the ceiling of the 30-ft.-high room], then 3d6 fall [upon falling 30 ft. to the floor when the spell ends or when escaping entangle], DC 20 Reflex save avoids damage); spell effect (black tentacles, 13th-level wizard, DC 20 Reflex save avoids entangle); spell effect (alarm, Room I112); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the height of the Room to 60 ft. (causing 6d6 falling damage). To decrease the challenge, reduce all the save and skill DCs of the ceiling entangle trap by 4.

1112. SHRINE TO ABERRATION

Everything about this room screams of inappropriateness. From the curved ceiling and walls melding into warped columns rising from the symbols scrawled in blood on the floor, to the twisted, malformed thing set atop a pile of random rubble that squirms sickeningly at one end of the room, everything here is offensive.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Once a chapel, this Room now serves the evil desires of the driders that conquered the northern Halls. This temple is raised not to a specific god, but instead to the ideal of aberration, the perversion of life itself. It is the center of worship for the driders, whose prayers are meant to gain power from the darkness and give them protection from the horrors to the south. It is this practice that prevents them from regaining the goddess' favor and that keeps them further successes.

The vile jelly that serves as the altar to abomination was the original drider to enter the dungeon. During Mahir's magically-induced cataclysm, this simple drone came into contact with the creature known as Madness, and was reduced to the pitiful state it lives in now, preserved by the flows of positive energy coursing through the Halls. It is at this thing that the driders intend their worship, and with good reason — the altered venom glands of the once-drider produce a poison similar to that employed by the drow priestess Shalara, a venom that induces horrific vision and obscene insights. Those who partake of the venom too often are driven mad by the sights they witness.

The drider consume the jelly. Their victims are not so lucky — their faces are forced by the driders into the pestilent mass, where the venom is squeezed into their skin, eyes and mouth. The effect of the venom, combined with the vile touch of the altar, breaks the wills of the driders' victims.

Encounter Condition: Diseased (cackle fever) 16, Negative Energy, Unhallowed 4

Tactics: There are always two drider sorcerers (hp 50, 48) present. The sorcerers are considered to have Spot and Listen checks of 22 to detect intruders. If interlopers are detected, the driders hide, one using invisibility sphere to cloak its companion, who uses disguise self to appear as a drow slave. The driders' tactics once intruders are inside the shrine vary, depending on the party composition — obvious fighters are the subject of deep slumber or slow, while rogues and sorcerers are targeted with touch of idiosyncrasy through spectral hand and ray of exhaustion. The driders employ their superior reach to best advantage, closing to just beyond where opponents can retaliate, striking if at all possible from the walls and ceiling. Injured driders employ vampiric touch once the PCs draw close.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one drider sorcerer. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Listen and Spot checks of the driders to 15.

1113. THE NAVE OF THE TEMPLE

This chamber is spattered with blood, dried flesh and other less than savory substances. To one side is a low basin containing thick, coppery fluid; to the northeast stretches a crude tunnel.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room is used by the driders to 'cleanse' themselves of any taint acquired during their daily duties. The basin is kept filled with the blood flowing from the fount in Room 1130, and is considered unholy water.

Encounter Condition: Desecration 2, Negative Energy, Unhallowed 2

Tactics: Allow the PCs DC 20 Knowledge (religion) checks or DC 18 Craft (herbalism) checks to notice that while it is unholy water in the basin, it is harmful to both the living and the unliving. It does not harm driders, but it does harm drow.

Treasure: Eight vials of unholy water may be drawn from the basin.

1114. HOTOUSE

The floor of this room is covered in soft, fragrant sod. Fungus sprouts from the loam in neat squares and rows, obviously attended to by someone. The air here is hot, moist, close.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This fungus garden is maintained by the drow for use by the driders in their experiments. Any of a number of exotic poisons can be made from the fungus and mushrooms found here. One can also mix up medicinal poultices and unguents with these ingredients.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: A DC 18 Craft (poisons) check to identifies the components used for marking poisons, while a DC 18 Craft (herbalism) or DC 23 Knowledge (nature) check identifies the medicinal poultices.

1115 THROUGH 1136. THE DARKER SHADOW

Since their defeat at the hands of their former slaves, the drider, the drow have held sacred within their deepest hidden halls and rooms a single purpose — for hate's sake, they will kill the driders. It is this single goal, this one overriding concern that drives nearly every plot and scheme the drow secretly hatch. The drow who are not broken and made into true slaves by the driders are part of a sizeable conspiracy against their spider-like masters, each waiting for the day they will see drider blood spilled in the Halls of Flesh.

The drow maintain a conspiratorial structure born of necessity, given the close confines of the Halls of Flesh. The slaves of the driders are at the bottom of this dark hierarchy, not trusted by the other drow and yet cared for, after a fashion; one does not abandon family, after all. Beyond the slaves are the lay warriors, fighters answerable to the drow captain Lorath's (Room 1103) lieutenants. The lieutenants themselves are all fighters, some with rogue levels, fanatically loyal to Lorath himself. At the very top of the conspiracy against the driders is Lorath himself, advised and aided by the drow elder Muhaimin (Room 1185) and the priestess Shalara (Room 1125). Each level receives its orders from a single member of the level above it, and so forth. The drow maintain this to ensure that their security is maintained and that their members remain unknown to the driders.

The drow rooms themselves that are utilized by the drow as a base of operations are guarded by an intricate network of spells, traps and guards. Unlike traps found in the Halls of Flesh or in drider-controlled areas, the devices scattered about the drow-controlled areas are universally deadly, remorselessly placed killing machines meant to safeguard their masters.

PCs captured by the drow are offered a simple choice — aid the drow or face execution. The drow feel they have little time for diplomacy, though some negotiation can certainly take place. PCs that betray or lie to the drow are killed out of hand if they are caught. Strangely, the drow consider this a sign of respect — far better that another being be killed and its soul freed than to suffer a hideous transformation at the hands of the driders.

The drow of the Halls of Flesh are a lawful sort, terrifyingly sane and rational in their actions. Their leader, Lorath, knows that the Eight Strikes Fang, a weapon perhaps capable of slaying Madness (Room 158) and Anguish (Room 198), is nearly within his grasp. Lorath does not yet realize that the drow people's only ally in the Halls, Siglinde (Room 131), plans to betray him for her own ends. He suspects, but nothing more. If the PCs are capable of providing proof of her treachery, Lorath will accept this and accord the PCs slightly more respect.

Given enough aid to the drow, the PCs can expect weaponry, directions and even aid in return, so long as it all serves the purpose of overthrowing the driders. PCs should always remain aware that as a people, and especially in the Halls of Flesh, the drow subscribe to practices and a philosophy that is evil by any standard of the surface world. For the drow, such ideals are simply a way of life, unquestioned.

1115. NORTHERN PROMENADE

This room has seen more than its fair share of abuse. The carvings on the once proud walls have acquired a patina of dust from the cracked ceiling. Doors leading out of the room are set in every wall.

1116. HIDDEN WEAPONS CACHE

The secret door leading to Room 1116 can be found with a DC 30 Search check. A single onyx stone, three ft. from the floor can be pressed to reveal a swivelling secret door. The door is weighted to close behind the PCs after they enter.

From the other side, A DC 20 Search check reveals a piece of obsidian that, when depressed, opens the secret door again.

This dark chamber houses weapons of all kinds, neatly racked, kept oiled, glimmering with menace waiting to be unleashed upon their victims.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is sequestered by the drow, unknown to their drider masters. Used infrequently, it awaits the day that the drow captain Lorath (Room 1103) orders every drider throat slit.

To discourage drider intrusion, a series of non-magical traps are hidden around the Room. No alarms are set and the drow rebels trust the combination of lethal traps and the Room's hidden locale are enough to keep this cache a secret.

The traps here are arrayed three-dimensionally — the first trap is armed by opening a door and triggered by a pressure plate, opening a spiked pit in the floor, 10-ft. by 10-ft. wide. The second trap lies along the right-hand wall where there is a scythe swinging front to back. The third trap strikes from above, firing poisoned darts at the PCs. The fourth mirrors the second trap, attacking from the left with another scythe, this one slicing back to front.

Each trap fires one at a time, in successive rounds and (with the exception of the pit), targets everyone in the corridor leading to main chamber.

◆ Spiked Pit Trap (Floor): CR 4; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids, 60 ft. deep (6d6, fall); pit spikes (Atk +10 melee, 1d4 spikes per target for 1d4+5 each); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20.

◆ Wall Scythe Trap (Right-Hand Wall): CR 4; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; Atk +18 melee (2d4+8/x4, scythe); Search DC 21; Disable Device DC 18

◆ Wall Scythe Trap (Left-Hand Wall): CR 4; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; Atk +22 melee (2d4+8/x4, scythe); Search DC 21; Disable Device DC 18

These traps reset in 5 rounds (including the pit trap, which closes), ready to cut the PCs down as they exit. 50 lbs. of pressure opens the pit trap again, but most likely hits whoever is at the bottom of the trap.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: PCs who have previously encountered Lorath's cache (Room 1119) receive a +2 circumstance bonus to Search and Disable Device checks when dealing with the traps upon the weapons cache.

Treasure: In the final chamber of this Room lies a cache of weapons and equipment that Lorath has been hoarding. It is not locked and the PCs have their choice of items. The cache contains six suits of +2 fire resistance studded leather armor, six +1 aberrationbane rapiers and three daggers of venom.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a silent alarm leading to the barracks in Room 1115 that alerts Lorath's men when the door is opened. To decrease the challenge, reduce trap DCs by 2.

1117. LINKED BARRACKS

This room has been long-neglected; the ceiling is cracked and the ancient celestial motifs on the walls have been vandalized. Doors are set into each wall, and beyond the door to the west comes the faint murmur of voices.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: These two Rooms are linked by a single hallway and the doors between the two are typically left open, so the drow can move back and forth without impediment. There is a 15% chance the doors between are closed.

The large central hallway echoes sound effectively and the drow guards in either Room gain a +4 circumstance bonus to all Listen checks made to hear noise in the adjoining Room. This echo works against the PCs, imposing a -4 circumstance penalty to their Listen checks while outside (approaching) the Room.

The western barracks house four drow guards (hp 60, 51, 50, 48) and the eastern barracks house another four (hp 60, 51, 48, 47). No one is in charge, but they have been left with orders to watch the lower Halls and delay them until reinforcements arrive. Since the secret door to the south is locked on this side, the drow spend the majority of their time watching the halls to the north.

As such, they are more heavily armed and better trained than their compatriots in other Rooms. The guards are not entirely unreasonable, however. An appropriate use of Bluff or Diplomacy can enter them into a quiet dialogue with the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4

Tactics: The guards are well-trained fighters, and with the aid of the cloaker are confident in their ability to deal with threats. The drider, unable to argue about the effectiveness of well-equipped fighters, have given the drow here superior weapons and armor, as well as a stockpile of alchemical spheres and items.

If attacked, the guards spread out in pairs, each pair selecting a single target. Meanwhile, the cloaker employs its shadow shifting and moaning abilities against foes. As is typical for these drow, one fighter engages an enemy while the other employs the 'aid another' action or Bluffs foes into becoming flat-footed. PC intruders are rarely killed; the drow employ a concentrated sleep poison and prefer to subdue rather than kill. If possible, only half the drow guards engages foes while their comrades throw alchemist's fire, acid, and tanglefoot bags.

Intruders rendered to 0 hp or unconscious by Nonlethal damage are bound and relieved of weapons and armor to await the arrival of Lorath and interrogation. One guard is skilled in the use of the Heal skill, and stabilizes dying foes as soon as combat ceases.

Treasure: Items found here include the +1 shocking burst rapiers, studded leather of fire resistance +2, 16 vials of alchemist's fire, 16 vials of acid, 8 tanglefoot bags, and 12 burned out ioun stones used by the drow and cloaker for gambling money.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a drow guard for every two PCs or an elite drow fighter. To decrease the challenge, remove two drow guards and reduce the change of the cloaker's presence to 35%.

Spell-Like Abilities: 1/day—dancing lights, darkness, faerie fire. Caster level 6th.

Light Blindness: Abrupt exposure to bright light (such as sunlight or a daylight spell) blinds drow for 1 round. On subsequent rounds, they are dazzled as long as they remain in the affected area.

Skills: +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks. An elf who merely passes within 5 feet of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if she were actively looking for it.

Possessions: +2 fire resistance studded leather, +1 shock rapier, heavy crossbow, bolts (12), acid (2), alchemist's fire (2), tanglefoot bag.

✦ Cloaker: CR 5; Large aberration; HD 6d8+18; hp 45; Init +7; Spd 10 ft., fly 40 ft. Skills and Feats: Hide +8, Listen +13, Move Silently +12, Spot +13; Alertness, Combat Reflexes, Improved Initiative.

Moan (Ex): A cloaker can emit a dangerous subsonic moan as a standard action. By changing the frequency, the cloaker can cause one of four effects. Cloakers are immune to these sonic, mind-affecting attacks. Unless otherwise specified, a creature that successfully saves against one of these effects cannot be affected by the same moan effect from the same cloaker for 24 hours. All save DCs for moan effects are Charisma-based.

Unnerve: Anyone within a 60-ft. spread automatically takes a -2 penalty on attack and damage rolls. Those forced to hear the moan for more than 6 consecutive rounds must succeed on a DC 15 Will save or enter a trance, unable to attack or defend themselves until the moaning stops.

Fear: Anyone within a 30-ft. spread must succeed on a DC 15 Will save or become panicked for 2 rounds.

Nausea: Anyone in a 30-ft. cone must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or be overcome by nausea and weakness. Affected characters fall prone and become nauseated for 1d4+1 rounds.

Stupor: A single creature within 30 ft. of the cloaker must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or be affected as though by a hold monster spell for 5 rounds. Even after a successful save, the creature must repeat the save if the cloaker uses this effect again.

Engulf (Ex): A cloaker can try to wrap a Medium or smaller creature in its body as a standard action. The cloaker attempts a grapple that does not provoke an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and bites the engulfed victim with a +4 bonus on its attack roll. It can still use its whiplike tail to strike at other targets.

Attacks that hit an engulfing cloaker deal half their damage to the monster and half to the trapped victim.

Shadow Shift (Su): A cloaker can manipulate shadows. This ability is effective only in shadowy areas and has three possible effects.

Obscure Vision: The cloaker gains concealment (20% miss chance) for 1d4 rounds.

1119. DOOR OF LORATH

This room is dusty from disuse, closed in and stifling. One wall is roughened and cracked, the results of a tremor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room contains a hidden door to a cache of deadly poisons, architectural sketches and magical weapons that the drow captain Lorath plans to use at the appropriate time to overthrow the driders who control this Region. However, the Room looks plain. In fact, the PCs should be suspicious of how clean the Room is.

Opening the hidden door is difficult for anyone but Lorath, as the catch to the door requires the use of three hands.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Locating Lorath's secret door is difficult; the drow captain has had several decades to camouflage the portal, and to collect the scrolls necessary to mask the door with illusions. Nondetection masks the door's magical aura and a DC 35 Search check is necessary to locate the hand marks required to open the door. If the PCs have been told by Lorath or a lieutenant what to look for, they gain a +4 competence bonus to this and all subsequent skill checks.

Opening the hidden door requires three hands, roughly equal in size to Lorath's own, placed in three separate locations. Once the hands are in place, the topmost hand print must be pressed in and rotated counter-clockwise, then released. The topmost hand print, as it might be guessed, is perfectly placed for Lorath's own malformed third limb.

Allow the PCs to tinker with the combination, but in the end a DC 30 Escape Artist or DC 28 Disable Device check is needed to open the hidden door. One check is allowed every 15 minutes. But PCs cannot try more than five times without a full day's rest (as frustration sets in).

Patient PCs or scholarly types may substitute their Will save bonus for Escape Artist or Disable Device to open the hidden door. This method takes 2d6 x 10 minutes, but can be tried up to three times in one day before rest is required.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have a drow guard visit the Room after 30 minutes. To decrease the challenge, cut the times above in half.

1119. LORATH'S CACHE

A chamber lies at the end of a long, shadowy hallway. Visible from the entrance created by opening a hidden door, a large table is barely visible, and above it a rack holding small cylinders of some sort.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Lorath's hidden cache is the drow captain's most closely-guarded secret, and one of the reasons he wears a ring of mind shielding. Within this benign chamber, and beyond a close hall guarded by lethal traps, is a collection of weapons, vile poisons and, most importantly, architectural plans and a nearly-complete map of the Region.

A rack of vials is bolted to one wall, each vial containing the most lethal poisons that Lorath could steal or manufacture. A second rack holds masterwork daggers and swords, ready to be enchanted by Siglinde (Room 131). Lastly, there is a table containing an accurate map of the Halls of Flesh and the environs to the North, perhaps the only one in the Region. The map includes markings indicating where the drow have hidden doors unknown to the driders — Room 1122 and the far northeastern portion of the region as well as the hidden passage near Room 1136 leading out of the prison complex.

To ensure privacy and security, Lorath spent several years constructing a series of deadly traps in the hallway that leads to his hidden cache of vile weapons. Like many of the traps constructed elsewhere in the region, Lorath has ensured that the traps are built to deal with foes who have the capabilities in all three dimensions. Many of the enchantments comprising the traps were provided to Lorath by Siglinde, thus the traps are an eerie reflection of those found in Mahir's hidden cache (Room 136 through 142.)

The first trap is laid along the floor, against intruders that arrive on foot. Triggered by a simple but well-hidden pressure plate, the device sprays a magically enhanced goo that duplicates the effect of web for the initial round it is used. After that, the web's touch becomes acidic and anyone touching the web — entangled or not — suffers 2d4 acid damage every round they remain in contact. The web dissolves of its own accord in 3d6 rounds.

The second trap is set upon the ceiling, and combines hold monster with a jet of choking volcanic steam that duplicates scorching ray, inflicting 4d6 fire damage.

The final trap springs from the western wall. Here, imagination has given way to brutal practicality — intruders expecting a magical trap face a mechanical one instead. Spears erupt from the wall while a spiked gate slams down to finish off those who survive the initial assault. As is the drow way, all of the various points and edges are poisoned.

Unlike Room 1116, these traps trigger when a PC walks passed the location trigger or over the pressure plate. They reset manually, however, so escape is easier for the PCs.

♣ Acid Web Trap: CR 5; spell; location trigger; manual reset; spell effects (acid arrow, 2d4 acid damage), spell effect (web, Reflex DC 16 to avoid entanglement); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 29.

♣ Hold Monster and Scorching Ray Trap: CR 5; spell; location trigger; manual reset; spell effects (hold monster, Will save DC 18; scorching ray, 4d6 fire damage, +10 Ranged, 2 rays); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 29.

♣ Poison Spears: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; Atk +16 melee (1d8+4 plus poison, spear); multiple targets (closest target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); poison (Medium monstrous spider venom, DC 12 Fortitude save resists, 1d4 Str/1d4 Str); Search DC 17; Disable Device DC 21.

♣ Spiked Gate: CR 6; mechanical; location trigger; repair reset; Atk +20 melee (6d6, spikes); multiple targets (all targets in a 10-ft.-by-10-ft. area); poison (Medium monstrous spider venom, DC 12 Fortitude save resists, 1d4 Str/1d4 Str; Search DC 24; Disable Device DC 20.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: PCs who have previously encountered Lorath's cache (Room 1116) receive a +2 circumstance bonus to Search and Disable Device checks when dealing with the traps upon the weapons cache.

Treasure: Hidden in a cache at the back of the Room are twelve vials poison (2 dragon bile, 2 burnt othur fumes, 6 deathblade and 2 purple worm poison), six masterwork silvered daggers and six masterwork silvered longswords, architectural plans, and map marked with secret entrance information.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DCs of all the trap by +2. To decrease the challenge, remove the spiked gate trap.

1120. PROMENADE

This walls of the promenade are in better condition than others, granting guards in adjacent rooms a +4 circumstance bonus to their Listen checks to detect intruders. The blood that flows here can be followed back to room 1138.

This room has fallen into disrepair. Dust covers everything, even the iron-banded doors leading east and west. From the north, a shallow, upward-sloping trough carved into the floor is filled with blood that flows sluggishly into a basin set into the center of the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Circumstantially, the earthquake that nearly destroyed the prison did not damage this Room, nor did the magical cataclysm unleashed by Mahir's failed experiments cause any irreparable harm.

Cunningly constructed by the Halls' original celestial builders, the stones used to line this promenade are particularly good at amplifying sound, to better detect invisible escapees. Now it serves the rebel drow as a means of detecting nosy driders or errant dungeon delvers.

The effects of all spells with the sonic descriptor, and items such as thunderstones, are doubled in this room.

Tactics: There is a 50% chance of drow guards in this Room. If so, there are four to six (1d3+3) present (hp 40 each). They do not attempt to fully engage the PCs, but instead lead them away from the nearby temple and into areas controlled by the driders, where the PCs either captured or killed.

Treasure: N/A

EL: Varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two drow guards. To decrease the challenge, reduce the chance of an encounter by 25%.

Light Blindness: Abrupt exposure to bright light (such as sunlight or a daylight spell) blinds drow for 1 round. On subsequent rounds, they are dazzled as long as they remain in the affected area.

Skills: +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks. An elf who merely passes within 5 feet of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if she were actively looking for it.

Possessions: +2 fire resistance studded leather, +1 shock rapier, heavy crossbow, bolts (12), acid (2), alchemist's fire (2), tanglefoot bag.

1122. GATEWAY TO THE CONSPIRATORS

This small room, barely bigger than a large closet, reeks of the decay from the barracks to the south. The air is unpleasantly hot and stifling, causing sweat to spring out on the skin of even the hardest visitor. One wall steams and hisses, the stone seeming to have once melted and run like wax, waves of heat still radiating from it.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Beyond the hidden door lies the concealed headquarters of the drow conspiracy against their drider masters. As such, the door leading inside is hellishly difficult to locate; a DC 35 Search check is required to locate the hidden catch behind a scalding rock that can open the door. As most drow are equipped with fire resistant armor, the worst they have to fear while operating the catch is a minor burn.

A PC touching any part of the northern wall (save for the hidden catch) suffers 2d6 points of fire damage. While using Search checks for the hidden catch, a DC 15 Reflex check is needed to avoid touching the scalding stone.

The catch is located beneath one of the smaller loose stones in the melted rock. Pressing it inward and twisting counterclockwise twice opens the door. Pressing the catch in and moving it either clockwise or counterclockwise once opens the door, but also arms the trap at the end of the hallway in Room 1123.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 5, Extreme Heat

Tactics: Aside from the threat of the scalding stone catch, the hidden door here is also enchanted with variants of hallucinatory terrain and illusory wall. Upon operating the catch, the PCs are confronted with a daunting illusion — the corridors beyond glow like white-hot rivulets of molten stone running down the walls to pool upon the floor. The few stable flagstones appear ready to sink into the blazing mire. A DC 24 Will save negates these illusions, and only if the PC has good reason to disbelieve the illusion.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the fire damage to 4d6 and the DC of the Reflex save by +4. To decrease the challenge, reduce fire damage to 1d6+1 and the DC of the Reflex save DC by –2.

1123. THE GAUNTLET

If either door to this Room remains open for more than 1 round, the trap in Room 1123 resets.

This hallway ends in a T-shaped intersection where the stones steam and shimmer with just barely-contained heat. Several sections of floor are unstable or discolored.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is designed by the drow to waylay intruders in their inner sanctum. The stones must be followed in a certain pattern, lest the trap be triggered.

A DC 22 Spot check reveals that there is a pattern to the stones on the floor. Examining the stones from afar reveals that certain ones have been carefully laid, and a DC 22 Decipher Script check or the ability to read Undercommon shows the stones spelling out the name of the drow goddess. Following the name of the goddess allows safe passage; failure to do so sounds an alarm in Room 1125 and arms the trap in the northeast. Likewise, clever PCs who think to use the ceiling to bypass the pressure plates are in for a rude surprise — the ceiling tiles are trapped as well, and bypassing the pattern on the floor via the walls or roof also arms the nearby trap.

The trap itself is vicious. If triggered, any creatures that come within its range are first sprayed with a fusillade of darts bearing a mixture of drow sleep poison and teronav root, resulting in paralysis and unconsciousness. The following round an acid fog trap triggers, using the pressure of the mountain's lava core to push hot acid through the ceiling vents.

1121. FILTHY BARRACKS

This room is disgustingly dirty — what were once barracks beds are now collapsed and rotting, the straw that filled their crude mattresses leaking out in slimy profusion from the rotted ticking. Other than the door you entered by, the only other way out of the room is a rusted iron door to the north.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The drow guards deliberately keep this former barracks room disgustingly filthy; all the better to fool their drider masters. The "rusted" northern door leads to Room 1122 and the secret portal and passage beyond which lies the conspirators' headquarters and the entrance to region J. It is sealed by an arcane lock, and only Lorath or his lieutenants may open it without magical means.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Over time, fungal spores have accumulated in the rotting bedding laid near the northern exit to the room. These spores act as an inhaled poison (Fort DC 18, 1d4 Dex/1d6 Con damage) if the mattresses are disturbed, either by stepping on them or searching through them. Opening the door to Room 1151 causes the hinges to squeal loudly unless proper precautions are taken to prevent this.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, the name of the drow goddess is spelled backwards, increasing the DC of the Decipher Script check by +4, and those who wish to cross must do so with heads bowed, or trigger a second fusillade of darts as they cross. To decrease the challenge, leave the ceiling trapped, but allow inventive characters to use to walls to bypass the trapped stones.

1124. ANTECHAMBER TO THE TEMPLE

This oddly-shaped room is redolent with the thick scent of exotic incense rising from small iron plates in the corners. A small wooden rack holds several light robes on pegs, with several pegs left bare. Next to the door leading to the chamber beyond is a plain stone pedestal, upon which rests an ornate urn of religious significance. It is etched carefully with interlocking images of a goddess, and a simple copper wash basin bearing wine.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This antechamber serves as a place for devout drow to cleanse themselves ritually before entering Room 1125, the Temple to their dark goddess. The urn contains a powder derived from a variety of venomous creatures; ones the drow goddess favors for "treachery," including spiders, snakes and scorpions.

To cleanse himself, a drow pilgrim first dips a hand into the basin of wine, then into the powder. The alcohol reacts with the sacred poison within the urn, resulting in a hallucinatory experience used in drow religious rituals. Determining the nature of the urn and basin requires either experimentation or a DC 22 Knowledge (religion) check. A non-drow that performs the ritual must make a DC 28 Fortitude save or suffer from the effects of the sacred poison, which acts as a confusion effect for 1d6 hours.

The robes on the nearby pegs are entirely nonmagical in nature, and offer little in the way of concealment. Donning one is considered a mortal insult by the drow, and results in the offender's death by flaying and slow poisoning.

The drow are universally hostile to intruders who interrupt their sacred rituals, and Diplomacy may only be used to reduce their attitude to Unfriendly. Shalara (Room 1125), the temple priestess, knows all of the drow present in Region I personally, and Bluff checks have their DC increased by +5. Shalara is fanatically devoted to her goddess, enough so that she has convinced Lorath (Room 1103) that only the power of the prison and celestials has cut the drow off from her infernal grace. Outsiders may be tolerated if Shalara is convinced by a DC 35 Diplomacy check or Lorath's word is given. Shalara does not tolerate infidels in her presence or the goddess's presence for very long, however; she first tries to convert PCs to her goddess or, failing that, quietly administers oil of taggit and arsenic to dispose of them.

Tactics: Drow preparing to enter the temple are likely to be caught by surprise, unless alerted by the trap in Room 1123. In any case, when intruders are detected, the drow capture opponents alive. If Shalara is present in the antechamber, she uses her supporting spells on other drow, retreating to the Temple only if her comrades are slain.

If Lorath is present, the drow captain demands one of the PCs, if possible, be handed over for torture. The PC is not immediately harmed, but instead taken into the temple, dosed with sacred poison and subjected to ritual torture lasting several hours. The ritual torture inflicts 1d6 temporary Constitution and Wisdom damage. The PCs are then forcibly removed from the Temple area by the drow under threat of death if they return or betray the location of the temple to the driders.

1125. TEMPLE

This chamber's walls are carefully faced with some black stone, polished to a mirror shine. The chamber itself is spherical with iron, silver and gold worked into the crevices between the black stones to form an intricate, hypnotic pattern. Like the antechamber, the air here is thick with clouds of exotic incense. In places, the floor near the center of the room is crusted with faint patches of dried fluid, silently intimating the dark deeds performed here.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The incense in this room is a powerful hallucinogen, meant to work in tandem with the 'sacred poison'. PCs staying here for more than a few rounds must make DC 18 Fortitude saves or suffer confusion. A cure poison or lesser restoration negates this effect.

The temple is the domain of Shalara (hp 40), a servitor of the drow goddess, and she jealously guards the power it gives her. The existence of the Temple is utterly unknown to the driders, who would destroy it and slaughter all its adherents if they did. The only time outsiders are welcome here is when Lorath or Shalara has them brought in for a session of slow, painful torture.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Fighting is unlikely in the confines of the Temple, given the potent incense and secrecy under which it is kept. But if combat is unavoidable, Shalara summons six drow fighters (hp 51, 50, 50, 50, 48, 47) from Room 1117 to support her.

Treasure: N/AEL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, Shalara may enchant the vapors in the temple as a move action to act as phantasmal killer. To decrease the challenge, remove two drow temple guards.

Skills: +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks. An elf who merely passes within 5 feet of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if she were actively looking for it.

1126. SHALARA'S QUARTERS

These small rooms have been draped in rotting finery, though every effort seems to have been made to make them comfortable. Silks drape the walls, darkly stained, and thick rugs of the same cover the floors. One spot seems particularly thick, likely kept as a sleeping area, and crude religious items are kept carefully arranged, along with a small cache of feminine clothing.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: These small alcoves serve as quarters for the single drow priestess, Shalara. As with the temple chamber in Room 1125, Shalara brooks no intrusions here; to do so provokes the drow priestess' wrath. Only Lorath himself has entered the priestess' home and lived to tell the tale.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Shalara immediately calls for guards if intruders are found in her rooms, using her spells to trap the interlopers before they are killed.

Treasure: N/AEL: varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, the religious icons are coated with a virulent contact poison (DC 21 Fortitude save, damage paralysis, 2d4 Dex), detectable with a DC 25 Search check. To decrease the challenge, Shalara is in the throes of religious ecstasy in 1125, and has no chance of being present.

1127. ECTHELON'S CELL

This prison is devoid of even the most basic commodities. Its lone inhabitant, a mutilated half-humanoid, half spider thing asleep upon the floor. It's obvious that the appendages of the creature have been ripped away and flame applied to seal the deep wounds.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This cell holds Ecthelon (hp 21), a drider captured by Lorath's men. Ecthelon has been cruelly tortured and several of his legs were severed to prevent escape. Thanks to the positive energy properties within the Halls, the tormented drider isn't in the position to die any time soon.

If the PCs are able to win Ecthelon's trust, he can provide them with information on the drow and drider within the Halls, though he does not know anything about the secrets that Lorath (Room 1103) keeps. The drider is an excellent listener, however, and knows that Lorath plots with someone named Siglinde (Room 131) to bring about the downfall of the driders, as well as that Siglinde is a powerful spellcaster who provides the drow with most of the secret magic they wield.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 5

Tactics: Ecthelon is incapable of fighting or casting spells from inside her cell. Once release, she casts spells as a 6th-level sorcerer.

Treasure: N/AEL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DCs of Diplomacy checks by 5, or add two drow guards. To decrease the challenge, change Ecthelon's Initial Attitude to Indifferent.

Skills: A drider has a +4 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks. It has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on a Climb check, even if rushed or threatened.

1128. BEEM'S CELL

This cell is kept in complete darkness where even the brightest lights fail to banish the shadows. It is in terrible condition — the walls are webbed with cracks, the stone floor is uneven. Several small piles of rubble are present here... and was that a scratching sound just now...?

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Identical to the cells where Lorath (Room 1103) keeps 'guests', this Room is where Beem (hp 20), an homunculus, resides. Beem is a chatty sort, and happily taunts PCs who have been captured by the drow captain. Beem has not managed to escape during the long years of its incarceration, and with its pet spellcaster dead or escaped to elsewhere in the dungeon, now contents itself with tormenting the guards and the occasional prisoner.

Encounter Condition: Negative Energy

Tactics: Beem is as cruel and vicious as its fiendish creator, and takes delight in tormenting Lorath's helpless captives. He knows little of what happens outside its cell, though it cruelly lies to lure victims into a false air of camaraderie.

Treasure: Beem possesses a +1 dagger blade, (no hilt) which he occasionally uses to defend itself or to attack those capable of entering the small warren of tunnels between its cell and the 'guest' quarters.

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, Beem waits until several characters are asleep, then uses his poison to drug the PC keeping watch. Once his victim is asleep, Beem performs a coup de grace, then moves on to other PCs. To decrease the challenge, Beem has lost his dagger, and must rely on poison (and a rock) to defend himself.

✦ Beem, Homunculus: CR 1; Tiny construct; HD 2d10; hp 20; Init +2; Spd 20 ft., fly 50 ft. Skills and Feats: Hide +14, Listen +4, Spot +4; Lightning Reflexes.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 13, initial damage sleep for 1 minute, secondary damage sleep for another 5d6 minutes. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +2 racial bonus.

1129. 'GUEST' QUARTERS

The door to this Room is open.

This dank room has but a single advantage — it is minus the stench of rooms nearby and is mercifully only slightly fetid. A few silk threads are scattered across the floor for bedding. The only exit is a thick stone iron door with a finger-width gap beneath it.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These cells are used by Lorath (Room 1103) to detain those he wishes kept alive and those who might prove useful in his machinations against the driders. Like the slave hold, they are outfitted with sleeping mats woven from rough spider silk. A single guard (hp 53) is stationed outside to ensure prisoners remain quiet, but has taken to resting on the mat inside, since no one is around at the moment.

Those who are subjected to Lorath's 'hospitality' find that, beyond a single gesture made for their comfort, they are, for all intents and purposes, jailed. The doors are wrought of iron and bear an extremely reliable and difficult locking mechanism which was originally intended to hold homunculi familiars of fiendish spellcasters. A DC 35 Open Locks check may be made to silently open the well-oiled lock. If speed becomes an issue, a DC 28 Open Locks check opens the lock, with failure automatically jamming the lock until it is repaired from the outside. This also alerts the guards that someone is inside.

The walls retain their former enchantment, and radiate an antimagic field. A DC 30 Search check reveals several small holes, enough to allow a Tiny or smaller creature passage. These tunnels are used by the homunculus Beem to spy on Lorath's prisoners.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Escaping PCs force the guard to call for aid, which arrives in 3d4 rounds from Room 1131. The guard is considered to have a +5 competence bonus to Listen checks when listening for escape attempts.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the guard's Listen check bonus to +8. To decrease the challenge, lower the Listen check bonus to +3 and reduce the DC of the lock by –2.

1130. THE FOUNTAINHEAD

A coppery sanguine scent fills this room, rising from a swirling, shallow depression in the rough floor. Blood. It flows down into this room from beneath the ceiling, traveling into the pool and drains away through downward sloping troughs in the floor to the north, west and south.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room, set above a good portion of this section, allows blood to flow from the small Room to the east into rooms 1120, 1131 and 1137. Originally, the room stored holy water to vent into those same Rooms in case of an escape attempt by the former prisoners. During the earthquake that caused this section to be abandoned, the celestial charged with creating the holy water and blessing it was trapped by fallen rubble and lava flow. Unable to signal for help or escape, the celestial remained trapped for many years, until the arrival of the drider and drow. Its ultimate fate was hotly debated for some time, a debate cut short by the second cataclysm unleashed by the sorcerer Mahir.

Following the takeover of the Halls of Flesh by the driders' bloody revolution, the trapped celestial was put to another use. Preserved by spells, the celestial was rendered mindless and corrupted to their unholy ends. Dark rituals were performed over several years, until the celestial and the stone became one. In the end, the celestial's heart was pierced, allowing its tainted blood to flow into the troughs carved into the floor.

This blood flow allows the most obviously twisted among the driders to partake of foulness as part of their prayers to honor aberration and corruption.

The Fountainhead serves another purpose, unknown to its drider masters — the drow led by the priestess Shalara and the drow captain Lorath plot to poison the blood of the Fountainhead, and through it, the drider that come to sip from it as part of their rituals.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 8, Desecration 10, Distracting Noises 10, Distracting Visions 10, Haunted, Unhallowed 10

Tactics: After the PCs spend 30 minutes in this Room, roll for a Random Encounter.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

1131. FALLBACK POSITION

This room is crowded with the necessities for barricading it from intruders — stout iron and stone barriers are set into tracks on the floor, and heavy iron bars may be dropped across the southern door at a moment's notice. A bowl-shaped depression in the center of the room is filled from a trough crudely carved into the floor coming from the east.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room is designed as a fallback position for the barracks in Room 1117, to the south, as well as a pass through for drow rebels delivering messages and supplies to and from Room 1134.

The barriers on the floor may be moved into position 5 ft. from the southern door by two Medium creatures of 10 Strength or more. Each barricade is an iron cage filled with stone blocks, giving it Hardness 10, hp 225, and a Break DC of 40. The bars that may be dropped across the southern door increase its Break DC by 10 and its effective hit points by 50.

This Room is always manned, even in times of relative quiet, and the drow involved are always among Lorath's peers. Driders are told that the position is assaulted by Madness, who strikes from Room 156, and pains are taken to maintain the illusion. So far the ruse has worked, allowing the drow to continue using the Room both as a fallback position if the barracks in 1117 are lost and as a means of relaying material and messages without the notice of their drider masters.

Encounter Condition: [Smoke]

Tactics: Four drow guards (hp 53, 51, 50, 48) are always on duty in this room, and in cases where Room 1117 has fallen or is under attack, the complement of drow there are present as well. Intruders who are not obviously aberrations or driders are, perhaps to their surprise, challenged and told to lay down their weapons. If the intruders attack, the drow move forward with their barricades, allowing them to Bull Rush opponents with a +4 circumstance bonus while maintaining the ability to strike from total cover. When attacking, the drow employ polearms against their foes, exploiting the reach capabilities of the weapons to their fullest. Retreating foes may well find themselves trapped as the drow fighters lock the door behind them. The goal, in the case of intruders such as the PCs, is not to kill but rather to wound and disable; Lorath is always ready to exploit new allies (or captives) if he can.

Treasure: Three vials of acid, three vials of alchemist's fire, plus the drow possessions are available.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one drow guard for every 2 PCs. To decrease the challenge, the drow do not have time to set their barricades, and must fight normally.

Light Blindness: Abrupt exposure to bright light (such as sunlight or a daylight spell) blinds drow for 1 round. On subsequent rounds, they are dazzled as long as they remain in the affected area.

Skills: +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks. An elf who merely passes within 5 feet of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if she were actively looking for it.

Possessions: Chain shirt, light steel shield, masterwork longsword, dagger (2).

1132. ABUSED ANTECHAMBER

This small room reeks of foul air and dust left to fester in the darkness. It does not seem to have seen any traffic for quite some time. The door to the south provides the only trace of movement upon the filthy floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This antechamber is given the appearance neglect by the drow in order to conceal their movements between the choke point in Room 1131 and the slave quarters in Room 1134. A small stone enchanted with the prestidigitation spell 'scatters' a large amount of dust on the floor, as well as creating a musty, foul odor. PCs that see through the illusion, realize this Room is heavily trafficked.

Locating the secret door is difficult, thanks to the same enchanted stone makes the Room appear abandoned. A DC 30 Search check locates the enchanted stone. It must be removed before the secret door may be opened. The door itself is crafted so it slides into the wall on hidden springs, and must be manually closed after it is passed through. Once located, the door's locking mechanism may be bypassed with a DC 25 Open Lock check.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The PCs may take the stone with them, but without identify (to uncover its command word) or a DC 35 Use Magic Device check, there is no way to control the image projects.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

1133. HIDDEN CORRIDOR

This long room stinks of rot and decay, a sharp odor assaulting the senses and obscuring the vision. It is hot as well, vapor issuing from cracks on the floor, walls and ceiling. The corridor slopes downward, growing hotter as it descends.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This volcanic crack allows passage from Room 1132 to Room 1134, and is used by the drow slaves to deliver messages without the knowledge of their drider masters. A runic plate inscribed with the alarm spell silently alerts the guards in Room 1132 that someone is using the passage. Locating the runic plate requires a DC 28 Search check, and a DC 18 Spellcraft check identifies the simple magical device.

Remaining in the passage is dangerous to the unwary — the vapors from the lava far below, mixing with pockets of trapped water, have turned the air of the passage into a toxic miasma. For every round beyond the third that a creature is present in the passage, a DC 17 Fortitude save must be made, or the victim suffers 1 point of temporary Constitution damage. The vapors also provide total concealment beyond 5 ft.

The passage is cunningly crafted to mislead intruders. Relying on simple tricks of architecture, those uninitiated in navigating the passage are likely to find themselves led not to the slave quarters, but to the southwards corridor instead, leading to a dead-end. The corridor is trapped with a simple pressure plate, triggering a rock fall to trap intruders in the passage, an occurrence easily explained by the unstable structure of the corridor itself. Navigating the corridor without directions from Lorath or a member of his cadre requires a DC 15 Survival check; failure indicates that the character has chosen the incorrect corridor, to find themselves on the receiving end of the trap.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The southern corridor is rigged with a simple pressure plate and rock fall combination. Obscured by the vapors in the passage, this simple trap is designed to spell the doom of the unwary, as the air grows steadily worse for creatures trapped by the rock fall.

1134. SLAVEHOLD

This was a courtyard, once. Now it is divided into a quartet of rooms, each with its own iron door, likely scavenged from elsewhere. The walls of the rooms are stone, held together with thick sheets of a dull white substance. To the north, a passage opens up, rising up into darkness.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: These four rooms are where the driders house the drow slaves (hp 10 each) tasked to support the guards that are garrisoned in the northern Halls. Unlike their fighting brethren, these are simple workers and unlikely to engage in combat unless ordered to do so by Lorath (or another one of his lieutenants).

The Rooms here hold sleeping mats for the most part wrought of thick spider silk produced by the ettercaps, as well as a few personal items. A pair of drow guards patrol the area, but are very lax in their examinations or headcounts of slaves unless a drider is present; in such cases, every effort is made to preserve the appearance of propriety.

Workers trusted by Lorath are housed in the southwestern room of the slave hold, so that they can use the hidden tunnel to Room I115 to deliver messages or items. The tunnel itself is not hidden, per se; instead, the drow slaves dump their waste into the tunnel mouth, making it an unlikely place for their masters to venture. Contingencies are in place if the driders deign to enter the tunnel, however: Lorath has provided the trustees with a trap that fills the room with a stinking cloud effect when a drider enters the tunnel.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The drow slaves are ill-equipped and not trained to fight. They turn their efforts toward avoiding punishment by their drider masters, with a few supporting Lorath (Room I103). In turn, the drow captain has provided for his kinsmen. The trap requires that a drow slave manually trigger it, and it must be disarmed in the same way. The stinking cloud fills the entire room within a single round, and the tunnel leading to Room I115 by the end of the next round.

♣ Stinking Cloud Trap: CR 5; magic device; manual trigger; manual reset; spell effect (stinking cloud, 10th-level sorcerer, DC 17 Fort save negates); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one drow guard that Lorath has seeded the slavehold. To decrease the challenge, remove the stinking cloud trap.

♣ Drow Slaves, Com 4: CR 4; Medium humanoid (drow elf); HD 4d4; hp 10; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 11, touch 11, flat-footed 10; Base Atk +2; Grp +2; Atk +2 melee (1d6, club); Full Atk +2 melee (1d6, club); SA Spell-like abilities; SQ Darkvision 120 ft., elven traits, light blindness, spell resistance 15; AL NE; SV Fort +1, Ref +2, Will +0; Str 10, Dex 12, Con 11, Int 12, Wis 10, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Craft (any one) +8, Profession (any one) +7, Spot +9; Dodge, Endurance.

Light Blindness: Abrupt exposure to bright light (such as sunlight or a daylight spell) blinds drow for 1 round. On subsequent rounds, they are dazzled as long as they remain in the affected area.

Skills: +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks. An elf who merely passes within 5 feet of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if she were actively looking for it.

1135. CHARNEL PIT

One side of this room is hacked away, the stones of the wall removed to reveal a wide hole. The hole glows with a dull crimson and orange light, radiating heat, making the room unbearable to set foot in. The heat has baked the smell of death into the walls. The room reeks of decayed and scorched flesh, as well as other, less than savory smells.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is utilized by the driders and the drow to neatly dispose of failed experiments and those who fall in either battle or to the cruelty of the driders. Little ceremony is required in the disposal of the se war dead; they are simply pushed through the hole and dropped into a fissure of lava flow 60 ft. below.

If a PC somehow ends up in the disposal hole and chute, a DC 18 Reflex save must be made to maintain their grip, or suffer 4d6 falling damage and 8d6 fire damage every round until extracted from the flow. This lava is unlike the lava in Room X1 and therefore deals real damage.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

1136. WANDERING HALLS

These rooms and passages appear to be abandoned. While the occasional footprint or something smaller mars the black dust upon the floor, the entire area gives off a general impression of disuse and disrepair. Even the sound of footsteps provokes an ominous creaking in the walls and ceiling.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room's appearance is deceiving. Using the small prestidigitation stones given to him by Siglinde (Room I31), the drow captain Lorath (Room I103) makes the Room appear disheveled and haunted, ensuring the driders do not venture into this Section of the Halls. Several of the stones (as well as a stone bearing ghost sound and another bearing nondetection) have been scattered about, hidden amidst the rubble and debris. Locating the stones via detect magic is useless, as they are masked by nondetection. A DC 40 Search check turns up 1d3 stones that look different... somehow.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 8, Echoes 5

Tactics: The drow rely on the magical stones to conceal their activities in this Room. Feel free to use the three stones to whatever creative enterprise imaginable.

Treasure: Six stones enchanted with ghost sound (2), nondetection (2) and prestidigitation (2).

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

1137. HOLLOWED HALL

The southern end of this Room is enchanted with silence and mirror image to give the appearance of being entirely collapsed to those who approach from the hallway leading from Room 1130.

This small meeting hall hosts the fallout of age and disaster. A large hole has opened along the northern wall; it slopes upwards and is surrounded by small chunks of rubble.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Lorath (Room 1103) keeps six drow slaves (hp 32, 32, 32, 31, 31, 30) in this room to maintain its utility. The slaves are also charged with the keeping of another of Siglinde's (Room 131) stones, enchanted with a specialized, silent alarm to alert the dark naga when Lorath desires a meeting.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: These drow slaves are not fighters, and assume any who venture here are doing so under the authorization of Lorath. The sole exception are droids, who are immediately set upon by Lorath's slaves in a frenzied attempt to murder the intruders. The slaves are not skilled in combat, but if forced to fight, fight until death.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, either Siglinde (Room 131) and two cloaker bodyguards are present, or Lorath (Room 1103) and his cadre are present. To decrease the challenge, remove two drow slaves.

❖ Drow Slaves, Com 4: CR 3; Medium humanoid (drow elf); HD 4d4; hp 10; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 11, touch 11, flat-footed 10; Base Atk +2; Grp +2; Atk +2 melee (1d6, club); Full Atk +2 melee (1d6, club); SA Spell-like abilities; SQ Darkvision 120 ft., elven traits, light blindness, spell resistance 15; AL NE; SV Fort +1, Ref +2, Will +0; Str 10, Dex 12, Con 11, Int 12, Wis 10, Cha 8.

Skills: +2 racial bonus on Listen, Search, and Spot checks. An elf who merely passes within 5 ft. of a secret or concealed door is entitled to a Search check to notice it as if she were actively looking for it.

1138. THE PASSAGE BEYOND

This wide corridor is twisted and its floor cracked, as if a cruel chill once grasped it and twisted, hard. It dips in the center, then rises, forming a natural ramp that is guarded by a several dark-skinned humanoids dressed in chainmail, armed with slim, exotic-looking swords and functional-looking polearms.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This broken Room leads northwards, beyond Region I, towards the greatest secret of Lorath and the drow — a hidden headquarters complex (Region M). As such, no outsider is allowed to pass unless in the direct presence of Lorath, who must speak the appropriate pass phrases before he is allowed to venture beyond.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Tasked with protecting the passages that lead to the hidden nerve center of the rebellious drow, these drow guards (hp 53, 51, 50, 48) take their job extremely seriously. In combat, three of the guards engage intruders while the fourth calls for reinforcements from the North (see Map M). Once reinforcements answer the guard's call, signaled by a low, ominous horn blast, the fourth guard engages intruders, using his light crossbow to fire into melee.

While fighting, the guards switch duties in order to maximize their effectiveness. Two, armed with polearms, use their superior reach to harass opponents while the third moves to neutralize any obvious spellcasters in the party. The third guard is always supported by the fourth, who uses occasional cover fire.

Reinforcements, when they arrive, include six drow guards, evenly split between ranged combatants and pikemen. The reinforcements follow the same attack patterning as the four guards who are normally on duty — pikemen provide harassing attacks and use the 'aid another' action while ranged attackers pepper opponents with missile fire.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two drow guards. To decrease the challenge, replace the drow guards' fighter levels with warrior levels.

REGION I. THE PYREFAUST

The Pyrefaust is home to both chaotic and fire-borne creatures. Mostly, comprised of igneous rock, the Region hosts azers, fire giants, salamanders, trolls, wyverns, and even an efreeti. These creatures have carved out niches, using volcanic rock structures as territorial markers. The great red dragon Tyrus presides over the inhabitants of the Pyrefaust through a powerful aura of fear that permeates every inch of the structure. This is a Region characterized by absolute fear — Tyrus' will, the law of the Pyrefaust.

THE PYREFAUST'S CREATION

The tale of the Pyrefaust begins with the final days of the prison's creation, when the celestials took to the task of imprisoning the red dragon Tyrus, the Devourer of Kingdoms. Tyrus' deeds are infamous and the chronicle of legend, possibly etched into the history books of many the tales of bards. Thousands fell under his reign of terror for centuries before the power of the celestials finally subdued him.

The celestials originally decided to destroy Tyrus, but the god of chaos declared that the dragon's execution would spark a war in heaven; that he would do everything in his power to avenge his 'son.' To avoid a conflict, the celestials struck a bargain with the god of chaos, promising to imprison Tyrus, and in return, the god of chaos would surrender his other children to be entombed as Tyrus' caretakers.

With this accord, a mighty thunderclap echoed from the Heavens. The celestials shattered the crust of the realm with tremendous force; an earthquake shook the land. The god of chaos cast his children into the great dungeon of the celestials, encasing them in magma. The molten rock cooled into stone, and the Pyrefaust was forged. Or so the story is told to children...

TYRUS, DEVOURER OF KINGDOMS

Tyrus is one of the most feared entities in the dungeon and certainly the most powerful in the region. As a young wyrmling, Tyrus craved control over the lands of the celestials. His remorseless hunger for annihilation legendary; his one pleasure in life — to destroy.

Tyrus' lust for devastation was rewarded by the deities of the abyss, who gave him unmatched power. His violence far too debauched, it would take centuries before his siege ground to a halt and the celestials imprisoned Tyrus behind magical walls of ice. And so the legend goes. Tyrus' sleep would last 10,000 lifetimes; one for each kingdom he destroyed.

But then the great earthquakes came, shaking the dungeon's foundation and shattering a portion of the glacial barrier... and the beast woke from its sleep. As the walls of the dungeon waned, Tyrus' power grew.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE PYREFAUST

Many fire creatures have made their home in the Pyrefaust, forming a diverse ecosystem. The Pyrefaust consists of a series of niches, or "rings." Each ring of the Pyrefaust is a community of creatures and at the center of each ring lies inexplicable power that draws the creatures to protect it. This power is believed to be the awakening of Tyrus' and each race draws upon his evil in a different way.

This uncontrollable drive makes the inhabitants territorial and they rarely leave their ring. Such territorialism fuels hostility and impels each ring to clearly mark its territory. Territorial markers are usually large basalt structures, magma-carved basins, lava flows, and blood strewn paintings. Whatever iconography works.

Interaction is rare, but when it happens, it revolves around alignment, disposition, and hierarchy. Some rings exhibit mutualism, while others are less cooperative. Altogether, there are nine rings, based on locations where magic is weak and Tyrus' evil is strong.

A PLACE OF DESPAIR

Anyone entering the Pyrefaust is overcome with an impossible sense of dread; Tyrus's presence is that overreaching. It is important that the DM sustain the concept of fear in the Pyrefaust. The PCs should be afraid to proceed through the Pyrefaust. Since this Region's theme is despair, the PCs are always shaken while they remain in Region J. If they become shaken again, they become frightened and so on. There is no cure for this, save Tyrus' death. The Pyrefaust is unsafe and this should be reinforced by the tone, whether descriptive or imposed through game mechanics.

THE FIRST AND SECOND RINGS OF THE PYREFAUST

The first two Rings are composed of snake-like dwellers — salamanders and behirs. The two groups are separated by a variety of traps and natural barriers created by the celestials. In the First Ring of the Pyrefaust, the salamanders have built a hierarchical society. Flamebrother salamanders are the most common salamander, and their patrols desuade and then attack any who enter the Pyrefaust. The flamebrother salamanders are led by a contingent of noble salamanders. The biggest threat to the salamanders is the behir colony in the Second Ring, that periodically attacks flamebrother salamanders. To mark the edge of their territory, the salamanders have erected large igneous rocks with snake-like sigils burnt into the stone.

The behirs inhabit the Second Ring of Pyrefaust. The climate in the Pyrefaust is not particularly to the behirs' liking, nor is the idea that a red dragon is their master. They despise dragonkind and isolate themselves rather than co-exist with such creatures. Thus, the behirs shun contact with others. They maintain a close guard on their chaos diamond and any creatures entering their realm are consumed.

THE THIRD, FOURTH, AND FIFTH RINGS OF THE PYREFAUST

The Third Ring of the Pyrefaust is located in the river of lava. Fire giants make their home on the lave river shore. They have created a militaristic society on the banks of the magma flow. The fire giants are led by Queen Gæhennox who wears a greater circlet of persuasion. The giants protect their stronghold by heating boulders in pools of lava near the river's edge and bombarding invaders.

Within the river itself live the nomadic magmin, who wander the basin of the lava river. They worship Tyrus and spend their days trying to catch a glimpse of the dragon. Once per day, the magmin pray to Tyrus, beseeching him to smite the fire giants. Despite Tyrus' inability to respond, the magmin continue to worship. They are among the least relevant beasts in the Region and the fire giants show them little respect.

The Fourth and Fifth Rings of the Pyrefaust are similar in structure. The Fourth Ring is occupied by trolls who were once imprisoned on the island. Living safely inside their walls, the fire giants sieged the island, conquered the trolls, and seized their ancestral relic (a ring of fire immunity), forcing them into the dungeon proper. Unable to fight the fiery power of the giants, the distraught trolls retreated into the Fourth Ring.

Here, they found the efreeti — Baltazzar the Uncaring — imprisoned in a ~~lantern~~ ^{term}. A troll accidentally freed the ~~efreeti~~ ^{efreeti}, who in turn granted their ~~wishes~~ ^{wishes} and become their general in a campaign against the fire giants. Now, the trolls, protected from the giants' fire, wage war.

The inhabitants of the Fifth Ring — azers — dislike the fire giants. Smaller than their enormous counterparts, the azers were initially enslaved by the giants to mine for gems. Those who didn't dig were put to work in the giants' forges. There was little the azers could do to defend themselves until a self-proclaimed prophet drove the giants back.

Terr'kaal, an ogre mage, with but a single word from his holy body and the prescence of his icy blade, commanded the fire giants back, freeing the azers from the giants' tyranny. In return, Terr'kaal became their guardian, protector, savior, and leader. He treats the azers well and takes what gemstones he needs for his ritual. In addition, he asks (but does not demand), that azers attend daily service to honor his god.

While outsiders instantly notice that Terr'kaal has a hidden agenda, to the azers he is benevolent and unworthy of suspicion. In truth, Terr'kaal's goal is not only vile, but perhaps the most destructive in the Region. Terr'kaal has all the items he needs for his ritual — gems, two special potions of fireball (normally fireball cannot be cast into a potion, but these are used in a very specific manner), a cloak of etherealness, and two willing sacrifices. Once complete, Terr'kaal will become divine living fire, capable of almost anything.

THE SIXTH AND SEVENTH RINGS OF THE PYREFAUST

Rast swarms occupy the Sixth Ring. Ferocious creatures that mob their prey, rasts attack any creature that dares come into their Section. The rasts serve their Brood Queen, protecting her and her nest above all other things. They are driven by an unseen force and the primal fear of the Region. They scour other rings for blood to feed the nest and to grow their "empire."

The Seventh Ring is a complicated network of reinforced cages that house fiendish wyverns; descendants of the god of chaos. When the earthquake disrupted the Pyrefaust, the Seventh Ring of the Pyrefaust remained unaffected. Thus, most of the wyverns remained in their respective cells. Easily the simplest and most direct of the rings, recent events have opened a few of the cages and the creatures of the Region sense a waking danger in these Rooms.

THE EIGHTH AND NINTH RINGS OF THE PYREFAUST

The enigmatic Eighth Ring of the Pyrefaust exists throughout the Region, accessible only through secret chambers. Its reclusive inhabitants rarely interact with others. The Eighth Ring is known amongst the Pyrefaust's inhabitants as the 'Hidden Ring' and can be entered only by solving a series of riddles strewn throughout the Pyrefaust.

Finally, the Ninth Ring is the icy prison of the red dragon Tyrus. Though its entrance is hidden, the presence of the Ninth Ring is felt throughout the Region. The Ninth Ring is a deep cave, buried under ice that can only be reached by going to Region N and travelling south again through a special tunnel. Inside, Tyrus is held prisoner by the icy walls and powerful magic of his tomb.

J1 THROUGH J9. THE FIRST RING OF THE PYREFAUST: THE KINGDOM OF THE KRSERS

The First Ring of the Pyrefaust houses fire salamanders. Hordes of flamebrothers patrol the catacombs and roam the outskirts of the First Ring, expelling invaders who cross their territorial markers at the basalt gate (Room J1, on the north end) and the deep chasm (Room J9, on the south end). Flamebrother salamanders do not negotiate with any creature that crosses these boundaries uninvited, attacking ferociously.

The fire salamanders are ruled by noble salamanders and the lowest rank is the 'flamebrother'. The flamebrother salamanders are guards of low social standing. Flamebrothers rise in salamander society only by proving their worth as guardians of the community.

If a flamebrother salamander performs a worthy deed in defense of the nobles, he is promoted to the rank of "Kre-Kser", "Lesser Lord", and begins commanding patrols. Kre-Ksers are distinguished from flamebrother salamanders by the steel lockets they wear around their necks. Each of these lockets contains a single silver scale from the noble salamander that promoted them to Kre-Kser.

The nobles that rule the fire salamanders in the Pyrefaust are called the Kser. Kser are distinguished from other salamanders by a silver patch of scales on their forehead. The Kser are the oldest and wisest of the fire salamanders. The Kser consist of three noble lords — Kser Ssaren, Kser Igenis, and Kser Catais. Kser Ssaren is the strongest of the salamander nobles, relying on brute strength to dispatch opponents. Kser Igenis is the most cunning of the lords. He has a sound tactical sense, and negotiates before attacking. Kser Catais is the weakest of the three lords. Kser Catais avoids conflict entirely, allowing the other lords to deal with physical problems.

J1. GATE OF THE PYREFAUST

You approach an ancient basalt arch covered in lichen. The arch is flanked by two stone braziers, and has no doors. On the sides of the arch, underneath the moist lichen, an inscription in both Common and Giant reads:

"My eye is the path of the forsaken
My ears are pyres of woe
My mouth descends into the flames of madness
The elements of time do not wear on the fires of the Pyrefaust
Abandon all hope upon passing this gate."

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There is a massive basalt arch at the entrance of this encounter. The basalt arch has a curse. The gate has a hidden portcullis that snaps shut on the PCs if they enter without disarming it.

• Portcullis Trap: CR 2; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; Atk +15 melee (4d6); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20. Note: Damage applies only to those underneath the portcullis. Portcullis blocks passageway.

Encounter Condition: Fear 20

Tactics: If a PC passes under the arch, the portcullis drops, sealing the passageway. Disarming the trap allows the PCs to pass through unharmed, but does not prevent the portcullis from sealing them in.

If the PCs disarm the trap, the portcullis still drops behind them, but only when all of the PCs have passed through, and it loses a melee strike.

Treasure: Searching near the pyres (Search check, DC 10), the PCs find a skeletal hand with a gold-braided ring on its index finger. The ring is a ring of feather fall. This piece of treasure cannot be reached once the portcullis trap has been triggered.

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add +5 to the Search DC. To decrease the challenge, subtract –5 from the Search DC.

J2. THE ENTRANCE TO DESPAIR

A portcullis drops from the over-hang, sealing you inside the inferno. The room is dimly lit, and you hear hissing. A pack of black-scaled fire salamanders searches a pile of bone shards in the center of the room, their hawkish faces rifling for salvage. The sound of the snapping bones echoes through the dark room.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Four flamebrother salamanders (hp 26 each) are huddled in the southeast corner of the Room. The salamanders do not notice the PCs immediately because they are rummaging through a pile of bones.

The secret door on the southern wall can be found on a DC 25 Search check. It leads to a small nook, where the salamanders have placed 31 gp worth of trinkets in a sack. The other secret door can be found with a DC 15 Search check, once the PCs know what they are looking for.

Encounter Condition: Draffy, Echoes 2

Tactics: If the flamebrothers are alerted to the PCs' presence, they move into a defensive formation. The flamebrothers do not negotiate or let the PCs approach. If the PCs come near them, two flamebrothers throw short spears. If the PCs flee, the flamebrothers give chase.

If the PCs climb over the northeast pile of rocks, allow a DC 30 Climb check. If successful, they arrive at the banks of the lava flow (Room J15).

Treasure: Each flamebrother salamander carries a finely carved spear, worth about 10 gp to a weapon collector.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add +10 hit points to each flamebrother salamander. To decrease the challenge, have each flamebrother salamander wounded (–5 hit points).

• Flamebrother Salamander: CR 3; Small outsider (extraplanar, fire); HD 4d8+8; hp 26; Init +1; Spd 15 ft.; AC 24, touch 12, flat-footed 23; Base Atk +4; Crp +1; Atk +6 melee (1d6+1/×3 plus 1d6 fire, spear); Full Atk +6 melee (1d6+1/×3 plus 1d6 fire, spear) and +4 melee (1d4 plus 1d6 fire, tail slap); SA Constrict 1d4 plus 1d6 fire, heat, improved grab; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., immunity to fire, vulnerability to cold; AL NE; SV Fort +6, Ref +5, Will +6; Str 12, Dex 13, Con 14, Int 14, Wis 15, Cha 13.

Skills and Feats: Craft (blacksmithing) +8, Hide +12, Listen +11, Move Silently +6, Spot +11; Alertness, Multiattack.

Constrict (Ex): A salamander deals automatic tail slap damage (including fire damage) with a successful grapple check. A noble salamander can constrict multiple creatures simultaneously, provided they are all at least two sizes smaller than it.

Heat (Ex): A salamander generates so much heat that its mere touch deals additional fire damage. Salamanders' metallic weapons also conduct this heat.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a salamander must hit a creature of up to one size larger than itself with its tail slap attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Skills: Salamanders have a +4 racial bonus on Craft (blacksmithing) checks.

Feats: Salamanders have the Multiattack feat even though they do not have the requisite three natural weapons.

J3. SENTRIES OF THE NEST

A pack of salamanders guards a room littered with bone shards. The largest sentry turns to you and hisses in Common "Leave!"

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The sentry of salamanders consists of five flamebrother salamanders (hp 12 each) and one average salamander (hp 28) all wielding steel spears. If the PCs proceed into the Room, the salamanders attack immediately, forcing them out.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: The salamanders take a hexagonal formation, led by the average salamander at the north-most position. The two flamebrothers further from the PCs throw their spears before the average salamander attacks, using tail slaps and uses his spear to defend against the PCs. This tactic increases his AC by +2 against melee strikes and decreases his AC by -2 when being attacked by spells or ranged weapons.

If the average salamander is defeated, the flamebrothers regroup, blocking the southern door. They defend this entrance to the death.

Treasure: The flamebrothers carry 2d6 gp each. The average salamander wears leather bracers and carries 31 gp in a small purse on its belt.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change two of the flamebrother salamanders into average salamanders. To decrease the challenge, remove two flamebrother salamanders.

J4. MOLT

If the PCs fought the salamanders in J3, allow the Kre-Kser salamanders in this room DC 20 Listen checks to prepare for the PCs before they arrive. Otherwise, read the following.

The smell of slime fills your nostrils. Grotesque molded scales litter the stone floor and translucent salamander husks trail across the room. Three larger salamanders in the back of the room wriggle free from their old skins. Each wears a steel locket around its neck.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Three Kre-Kser salamanders (hp 88 each) equipped with ornate steel longswords are shedding their old skins as the PCs enter. As a result, the two salamanders are bound by their husks and unable to engage the PCs until the skin is shed. If one of the Kre-Kser salamanders spots the PCs, it struggles to shed the remaining skin (a process that takes 1d3 rounds). The salamanders observe every movement the PCs make, hissing when a PC comes too close to a shedding salamander. The salamanders continue to shed as the Kre-Kser salamanders watch the PCs carefully.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: The salamanders become Hostile if the PCs approach. Allow the first salamander to escape in 1 round, while the others must roll for duration. It takes another move action to grab its +1 longsword. If the PCs have clumsily made their way into this Room, the salamander is ready, but either way uses the reach of its weapon to keep enemies at bay.

While trapped in their skins, the salamanders are considered flat-footed and incur a -2 circumstance penalty to all Dexterity checks.

If the PCs address the Kre-Kser salamanders, they are Unfriendly, but receptive. They listen to the PCs, even giving directions if necessary, but reinforce the need for the PCs to leave the salamander nest immediately. They gladly escort the PCs to the edge of this Section, even if they have already slain the salamanders in Rooms J1, J2, and J3.

If combat occurs, the Kre-Kser salamanders constrict the PCs and use their longswords to defend against melee attacks. This tactic increases their AC by +2 when attacked by melee strikes and decreases their AC by -2 when attacked by ranged attacks.

Treasure: The salamanders carry steel lockets, containing the scale from the Ksers. It can be traded for information or favors to another salamander. These lockets are virtually priceless to salamanders and the owner of the locket would owe a great boon to whomever returned it.

EL: 11

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one Kre-Kser salamander. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

J5. A NEST OF VIPERS

The stench of slime and mold assaults you as the door opens. Across the room, spears clang off of stone as silhouettes chase something. Salamanders converge on the northeast corner of the room towards a small-winged creature. A red pseudodragon is cornered by five flamebrother salamanders. The gruesome half-serpentine creatures hiss as they close in on a small, winged lizard. As the salamanders prepare to strike the small intruder, it squawks "Help!"

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The five flamebrother salamanders (hp 26 each) are unaware of the PCs, their focus directed at killing the pseudodragon, Fyrsil (hp 16). The pseudodragon notices the PCs immediately, and reacts by taunting the salamanders. This should give the PCs the element of surprise. The pseudodragon is trapped in the northeast corner of the room and the flamebrother salamanders have their backs turned away from the two entrances.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: If the flamebrother salamanders are engaged in combat, they are considered 'surprised' and have to spend an action to reassemble into a defensive formation. If the PCs sneak past the occupied flamebrother salamanders, allow each a Listen check (–5 to oppose the PCs.) If the PCs try to negotiate with the flamebrother salamanders, they can be persuaded to be peaceful if the PCs take the pseudodragon and immediately leave the nesting area.

If combat occurs, the flamebrother salamanders heat their weapons to do extra damage. The flamebrothers do not throw their spears at the PCs. If a flamebrother salamander is reduced to 6 hit points or fewer, it uses its tail attack rather than the spear.

The pseudodragon adheres itself as a familiar to a sorcerer PC, if rescued. The entity is named Fyrsil and becomes a voice of exposition as the Pyrefaust progresses. Fyrsil aides the PCs with small bits of information wherever appropriate throughout the Pyrefaust. See sidebar "Fyrsil, the Pseudodragon".

Treasure: The flamebrother salamanders are carrying 5 gp each and their spears.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge level of this encounter, add +10 hit points to each flamebrother salamander. To decrease the challenge, each salamander begins wounded (–10 hit points)

J6. FLAMEBROTHER SALAMANDER STUCK IN TAR

The sour odor of mold and slime is overlaid by the bittersweet scent of oil. The floor is blackened by tar, and your boots stick to the floor. The basalt walls are covered with dried vines and a salamander stuck in the center of the room, balanced on a basalt sill.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: A flamebrother salamander (hp 10) appears to be trapped on a protruding sill of rock. He hisses violently at the PCs, repeatedly warning them not to approach him. The flamebrother is actually poised to set off a trap. The tar and oil covering the Room do not allow the flamebrother to move without igniting the entire area. The encounter is considered a fire floor trap.

♣ Floor Fire Trap: CR 5; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (fire trap, 1d4+7 fire, 7th-level wizard, DC 16 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: The salamander does not advance on the PCs or trigger the trap without being provoked. If the PCs threaten or advance to the exit, the salamander jumps off the sill and ignites the room. After igniting the trap, the flamebrother salamander flees to J7 unharmed.

The salamander can be negotiated with. If the PCs try to negotiate (DC 25 Diplomacy check), the PCs can convince the salamander not to ignite the room by bribing him with one of the Kre-Kser salamander's lockets.

The PCs cannot disable this trap without killing the flamebrother salamander. If the salamander is killed in a single strike, he does not ignite the trap.

If the PCs cross the floor without caution, allow a DC 25 Sense Motive check. A successful check reveals that the salamander is there on purpose to ignite the room with his fire attack when provoked.

The Ssrin is an amulet which allows the salamanders to communicate with their god. It was stolen, along with several gemstones, by azer marauders. Kser Igenis offers the PCs whatever they wish (except their spear) if they retrieve the amulet. If the PCs accept, Kser Igenis describes the amulet (which Terr'kaal has).

If the PCs agree to Kser Igneis's request, the Ksers allow the PCs to leave their court unharmed. If not, Kser Ssaren continues to threaten them until they leave or engage the Ksers in combat.

If combat occurs, the Ksers take a defensive formation, protecting Kser Igenis at the center rear. Kser Catais engages them first, followed by Kser Ssaren, and finally by Kser Igenis. If Kser Ssaren is defeated, the other two Ksers flee to the north exit of the Room.

J7. DEN OF LORDS

A light ahead beckons you down a volcanic tunnel. The room ahead is composed of red volcanic rock, giving a crimson hue to three shadows on the south wall. One of the shadows holds a longspear and wears a headdress. A hissing, followed by a raspy voice, sternly asks, "Who dares challenge the court of the Ksers?!" Three salamanders are coiled on a raised granite bed. They are dressed in breastplates with a silver diamond insignia in the center, matching the sparkling silver scales on their brows. The one in the center wears a black headdress and holds a gleaming longspear. He addresses you in Common, hissing, "What purpose do you have in the court of the Ksers?"

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The PCs have found the court of the noble Kser salamanders. The three Ksers sit in a single row on a granite bed with Kser Ssaren (hp 112) in the center. Kser Ssaren has a stern demeanor and speaks in imperatives. At his right hand sits Kser Igenis (hp 94), quietly observing the PCs. Kser Catais (hp 99) snickers wildly, picking his teeth with his spear blade. Each wears a breastplate and holds a longspear, save for Kser Ssaren (who holds a +3 flaming burst longspear). Kser Ssaren wears a black headdress decorated with salamander scales.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs speak with the Ksers, allow a DC 30 Diplomacy check. If successful, Kser Ssaren orders the PCs to exit his kingdom lest he personally dispatch them. Kser Igenis interrupts Ssaren, whispering "It is possible that these sub-creatures can be useful to us..." (Allow PCs a DC 30 Listen check to overhear this.) Ssaren glares at the PCs, but allows Kser Igenis to address them. Kser Igenis explains that the azers have stolen an amulet called the Ssrin that is crucial to the Kser.

FYRSIL, THE PSEUDODRAGON

Fyrsil is a red-brown pseudodragon that was trapped in the Pyrefaust long ago when the celestials sealed off the prison; the celestials mistook him for a red wyrm. Unlike most of the inhabitants of the Pyrefaust, Fyrsil is Neutral Good and seeks the companionship of others who despise cruelty. If the PCs rescue Fyrsil from the salamanders, he asks them to help him escape the Pyrefaust. In return, Fyrsil accompanies the PCs, providing information about the area.

Like most pseudodragons, Fyrsil communicates telepathically and vocalizes only animal sounds. Fyrsil addresses his peers with genuine humbleness. However, Fyrsil can become demanding when he's mistreated. If the PCs are uncaring or rude to Fyrsil, he leaves them to experience the wrath of the Pyrefaust on their own.

J8. PIT TRAP

The earth is broken up in this area. At the base of a crevasse, a branch of the magma river crawls lazily by. The northern side of the room is cut off completely from the southern side.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The PCs flee into this Room from the pursuing lava in J9. They encounter a 15-foot-wide pit, 5 feet into this section. The Pyrefaust cracked during the earthquake and filled with magma from the river.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

Tactics: If the PCs arrived from J8, the lava from the previous trap is creeping up behind them. It takes 2 rounds before the lava from the previous Room pushes the PCs to the edge of the pit trap.

If the PCs try to jump the gorge, they need a DC 20 Jump check.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of the Jump check by +5. To decrease the challenge, reduce the DC of the Jump check by -4.

J9. THE FLOW

This room is desolate save for a massive salamander statue in the corner. There is no vegetation or molted skin anywhere. The ground is made of volcanic cinders laid over harder rock, and the walls are dark with scorch marks. Steam rises from cracks. The statue has a gold amulet around its neck, light flickering off it. There is an inscription on the base of statue — "Kser Igenis, Protector of Boundaries".

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The sigil on the statue is a 15th-level magical ward that protects this boundary from invaders. As the PCs set foot in the Room, the walls crumble. Magma seeps in, forcing the PCs to find an exit quickly.

◆ Built-to-Collapse Wall/Lava Trap: CR 6; mechanical; proximity trigger; manual reset; Atk +20 melee (8d6 pieces of stone); multiple targets in a 20 ft. by 20 ft. area; Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 30. Note: After the wall collapses, the PCs have 4 rounds before the Room fills with lava.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

Tactics: When the PCs enter the Room, the wall collapses and magma seeps in. This ward cannot be disabled or removed. The Room floods with lava in four rounds. The PCs can safely exit the Room in three rounds, with a successful DC 20 Reflex save.

If the PCs attempt to retrieve the amulet, they have one round until it is consumed by the magma seeping in behind it. Allow a DC 30 Reflex save for the PC retrieving the amulet. If unsuccessful, he takes 4d6 fire damage and loses one round to run from the lava.

If the magma catches an escaping PC, allow a Reflex check (DC 25) for half damage. The lava does 4d6 fire damage to any PC that comes in contact with it. The lava pursues them into Room J9.

Treasure: The amulet on the statue is worth 250 gp and can be traded to azers for information or favors.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Disable Device DC of the lava trap by +5. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Disable Device DC of the lava trap by -5.

THE SECOND RING OF THE PYREFAUST: THE ISOLATED BEHIRS

The Second Ring of the Pyrefaust is controlled by behirs. Since they despise all dragonkind, nothing displeases them more than being ruled by Tyrus. The behirs have sealed off and trapped every possible entrance to the catacombs. Furthermore, the behirs conceal themselves in pits and under piles of ash. Isolation is the only objective of the behirs; they simply wish to be left alone.

The climate in the Pyrefaust does not favor the behirs, either, but they refuse to leave. To provide relief from the heat, the behirs have flooded their Section with whatever water they can find. As such, the Second Ring is extremely humid and has up to 3 ft. of standing water in places. Because of this, the behirs' lightning breath doubles in range.

Behirs in the Second Ring have little societal structure, resorting to outright anarchy at times. Behirs dislike all creatures in the Pyrefaust, even other behirs, marking their territory with snake-like sigils, warning all trespassers to stay clear. A chaos diamond, is held by the strongest of the behirs, Nrangrok. He keeps the diamond in his feeding pit (Room J16), and guards it against everyone, including other behirs.

19 A behir patrols for invading salamanders.

J10. SHOCKING PATH

The air in this section becomes heavier as the humidity rises. Beads of water accumulate on your armor. You enter an area where the walls are streaming with water. As you look down, you see a thin film of moisture across the granite floor. There are three doors in this room: one leading to the south, one leading to the east, and one to the north.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There is an electrified floor trap in this Room. It is safeguard. Should the PCs trigger it, allow the behir in Room J12 DC 20 Listen checks to overhear it.

♦ Electrified Floor: CR 8; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; Atk +20 melee (12d6 electricity, DC 20 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (30 ft. by 30 ft. section of floor); Search DC 33; Disable Device DC 33.

Encounter Condition: Hazardous Footing 16, Poor Footing 6

Tactics: If the PCs pause and listen (DC 20 Listen check), they hear the sound of cracking rock to the south and something moving through water to the east.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of all skill checks by +4. To decrease the challenge, reduce the DC of all skill checks by -4.

J11. SINKHOLE

The ground is weak. The room echoes with the sound of shifting rock. The floor at the center of the room has buckled. Moldy water runs down the walls and trickles towards the depression. The humidity makes your armor stick uncomfortably to your clothes. There is a pedestal against the southern wall; an exceptionally crafted longsword rests atop it.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The center of the floor is very unstable. When any weight beyond 50 lbs. is put on it, the floor crumbles and the Room becomes a giant sinkhole, creating a pit trap.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs cross the floor, the pit trap's location trigger trips. Allow a DC 25 Listen check if the PCs cross the floor without caution. A successful skill check reveals that the running water sounds like it is falling.

The PCs cannot avoid triggering the pit trap after they remove the short sword from the pedestal. The short sword rests on a pressure plate, which instantly triggers the floor's collapse when the sword is lifted from it.

Treasure: The longsword glows in the PCs hand. Runes light with intense with and red light that weren't on the blade before. This magical blade is a +3 flaming longsword, that takes 2d6 hours to attune to the user. During this time, the sword confers only a +1 bonus. So long as the PC only uses this weapon, for the next 2d6 hours, the weapon becomes "his" and acts as a normal +3 flaming longsword.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Search and Disable Device DCs of the well-camouflaged pit trap by +10. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Search and Disable Device DCs of the well-camouflaged pit trap by -5.

J12. LURKING BEHIR

The standing water on the floor increases as you move through the cavern, until you are in a waist-high pool of water. Suddenly, you detect movement through the water. The steam rising from the water impairs your vision. Then, the dim lighting casts a massive shadow over you as a huge behir rears its head.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: A behir (hp 108) lies in a pool of water, tracking the PCs from the moment they enter the pool. As the PCs enter the Room, the behir rises up from the water and stares them down. Though not violent, the behir is not opposed to killing trespassers.

Encounter Condition: Darkness, Flooded

Tactics: If the PCs address the behir, have them make a Diplomacy check (-5 circumstance penalty). Upon a successful check, the behir tells them that it is a bit tired, so if they turn around and don't bother it again, it will not expend the energy to kill them. If the check is unsuccessful or the PCs do not take the behir's offer, the behir tries to swallow the nearest PC.

If the PCs attack the behir, the behir uses its breath weapon to send a wave of electricity into the pool. As water is an excellent conductor, the PCs suffer a -4 circumstance to the Reflex save (in addition to any penalties they suffer for movement). The breath weapon travels through the water and instantly hits anyone standing in the pool (including the immune behir). Every time the behir uses its electrical attack, it can damage the PCs from anywhere in the Room.

Treasure: Rummaging through the water turns up skeletal remains. On one of the skeletons, the PCs find 200 gp, a full helm, and padded armor (which has been ruined by the soaking).

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the hit point of the behir to 125. To decrease the challenge, reduce the hit point total of the behir to 90.

Skills and Feats: Climb +16, Hide +5, Listen +4, Spot +4, Survival +2; Alertness, Cleave, Power Attack, Track.

Breath Weapon (Su): 20-foot line, once every 10 rounds, damage 7d6 electricity, Reflex DC 19 half. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Constrict (Ex): A behir deals 2d8+8 points of damage with a successful grapple check. It can make six rake attacks against a grappled foe as well.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a behir must hit a creature of any size with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can attempt to constrict the opponent or swallow the opponent in the following round.

Rake (Ex): Six claws, attack bonus +15 melee, damage 1d4+4.

Swallow Whole (Ex): A behir can try to swallow a grabbed Medium or smaller opponent by making a successful grapple check.

A behir that swallows an opponent can use its Cleave feat to bite and grab another opponent.

A swallowed creature takes 2d8+8 points of bludgeoning damage and 8 points of acid damage per round from the behir's gizzard. A swallowed creature can cut its way out by using a light slashing or piercing weapon to deal 25 points of damage to the gizzard (AC 15). Once the creature exits, muscular action closes the hole; another swallowed opponent must cut its own way out.

A behir's gizzard can hold 2 Medium, 8 Small, 32 Tiny, or 128 Diminutive or smaller opponents.

Skills: Behirs have a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened.

J13. CROSSROADS

There is carbon-scoring along the walls and the basalt floor crackles, as a soft 'snapping' sound comes from behind an iron door. Gold coins lay strewn across the floor, reflecting what little light enters the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There are six piles of gold on the floor. One of the piles is placed directly over a large snake-like inscription, carved into the middle of the floor. While its not obvious what it does, the sigil rests on a 5-ft. by 5-ft. pressure plate of a summon monster IV trap that triggers when the sigil is examined too closely.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

Tactics: If the PCs trigger the trap, combat is inevitable. The trap summons three fire elementals (hp 60 each), which attack the PCs immediately. They move rapidly through the Room and with no distinct attack pattern.

Treasure: The piles of gold total 364 gp.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three fire elementals. To decrease the challenge, the fire elementals are confused.

◆ Fire Elemental: CR 5; Large elemental (fire, extraplanar); HD 8d8+24; hp 60; Init +9; Spd 50 ft.; AC 18, touch 14, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +6; Grp +12; Atk +10 melee (2d6+2 plus 2d6 fire, slam); Full Atk +10 melee (2d6+2 plus 2d6 fire, 2 slams); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Burn; SQ Damage reduction 5/—, darkvision 60 ft., elemental traits, immunity to fire, vulnerability to cold; AL CN; SV Fort +5, Ref +11, Will +2; Str 14, Dex 21, Con 16, Int 6, Wis 11, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Listen +5, Spot +6; Dodge, Improved Initiative², Mobility, Spring Attack, Weapon Finesse².

Burn (Ex): A fire elemental's slam attack deals bludgeoning damage plus fire damage from the elemental's flaming body. Those hit by a fire elemental's slam attack also must succeed on a DC 17 Reflex save or catch on fire. The flame burns for 1d4 rounds. A burning creature can take a move action to put out the flame. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Creatures hitting a fire elemental with natural weapons or unarmed attacks take fire damage as though hit by the elemental's attack, and also catch on fire unless they succeed on a Reflex save.

J14. TREASURED SECRETS

The door to this Room is locked and trapped. A DC 35 Open Lock check unlocks the door, but tampering with the door or lock causes the summon monster IV trap in Room J13 to trigger. If already triggered, it resets.

A blast of cold air hits you. A bewildering contrast, considering the environment. The cold steam evaporates into dew and then clings to your face. The room is well-kept except for the ruined stacks of books on the east wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The celestials made the climate of this Room perfect for storing books and scrolls, but the heat from beyond the door has caused the paper to molt. Everything is worthless. PCs are welcome to dig through it, however, searching for clues.

Encounter Condition: Fog 10

Tactics: If the PCs reset the trap by opening the door to this Room, they can trigger the fire elemental trap again.

Treasure: If the PCs succeed at a DC 40 Search check, they find a three arcane scrolls — scroll of shadow conjuration, scroll of waves of fatigue, scroll of water breathing — and one divine scroll — scroll of heal.

J15. BLACK BLOOD OF THE EARTH

Use this Encounter for the entire western edge of the lava flow.

The lava bubbles, swiftly cutting through the landscape. Across the lava you see a series of caves and broken earth. An island rests in the center of the lava and what appears to be a 20-foot tall statue of an angel stands on the eastern bank.

If the PCs are actually in Room J15, add the following.

The stone walls are blackened from fire. The floor is featureless save for cracks between the flagstones and bones are fused to the rock wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bones in the wall are nothing more than demons and celestials who died in the first wave of fire that poured into the dungeon. They died in their footsteps as the powerful magma burst through the prison.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat, [Haunted], Negative Energy

Tactics: If the PCs stay for too long, they begin to hear the voices of the dead and the moans of their eternal destruction.

J16. THE BEHIR CHAMPION

A very large, multi-legged lizard is tossed to the ground, shaking the earth. Two others are locked in combat. The two mammoths constrict each other; meanwhile, the downed creature circles to its feet and returns for more. The two smaller lizards — still 15 ft. long — seem to be coordinating their attack on the larger one. The pre-occupied combatants seem completely unaware of your presence.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Two behirs (hp 94 each) are fighting a gargantuan behir (hp 175). The gargantuan behir, Nrangrok, holds a chaos diamond, in one of his twelve legs. The behirs are battling over the a giant diamond as a show of dominance. Initially, the behirs are too engrossed in fighting each other to notice the PCs. However, the DM should allow the behirs Listen checks with a -5 circumstance penalty. If successful, the behirs immediately disengage and turn their attention to the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: If the PCs are undetected by the behirs, they can transverse the Room confrontation. If the PCs are unseen and attack the behirs, they gain a surprise round. If the behirs detect the PCs, Nrangrok immediately attacks, grappling and swallowing the nearest PC. The other two behirs wait for Nrangrok to fall, and attack only if attacked by the PCs.

Once Nrangrok falls, he drops the chaos diamond and the other two behirs pounce on it. Any PCs that obstruct a behir from seizing the chaos diamond are attacked with the behir's breath weapon. The behirs fight viciously until they seize the chaos diamond or die trying.

Treasure: The chaos diamond grants the wielder the following spell-like abilities — 3/day—confusion (lesser), magic circle against law, word of chaos, and cloak of chaos. In order to use the power of the chaos diamond, the possessor must "defeat" it in a challenge of wills. The PCs must succeed at a Will save opposed by the chaos diamond's Will save bonus of +15. Such a challenge of wills takes 4 hours of uninterrupted concentration, (with the Will save made at the end of this meditative state).

If the PC fails, he cannot try again for 1d12 months. If successful, he gains the above abilities (so long as he carries the 10 lb. diamond) and may use the Will save of the diamond in place of his own, once per day.

THE THIRD RING OF THE PYREFAUST: THE FIRE CULYS

The most unusual Section of the Pyrefaust is the Third Ring. An area of extremes, it housing both the tallest creatures (the fire giants) and the smallest (the magmin). Both societies have developed bizarre religious practices as a way of coping with their imprisonment.

The magmin are enthralled by Tyrus, worshipping him as master of the Pyrefaust. The magmin live in the magma flow. Once per day, they can be seen worshipping along the shores of the lava. Their clerical leader raises a necklace of fireballs type IV into the air as a symbolic offering to Tyrus. At the end of the ceremony, the magmin return to bask in the magma until the next day. Sometimes, they swim up the lava to Region N, but few return, so this is practice is not common.

The fire giants are ruled by a militaristic fanatic named Queen Grehennox, also known as the "Steel Queen". Her speeches, enhanced by her greater circle of persuasion, have convinced the fire giants that steel is crucial to their salvation and their weapons shall one day lead to freedom from Tyrus' dominating fear.

Grehennox (fanatically) believes that all creatures of the Pyrefaust should be subject to her steel. Often, she sends units of fire giants into other Section of the Pyrefaust to subjugate the inhabitants. These military campaigns have targeted the azers, troll, and even the magmin. As a result, these races abhor the fire giants.

J17. THE CULT OF TYRUS

A swarm of magmin swim along the lava banks. The magmin bow in prayer, facing a the north end of the magma. Suddenly, you hear a rumbling like an earthquake and then magmin cheer. To the north, a bridge crosses the vast river of lava.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The PCs have caught the magmin engaged in their daily worship of their god, Tyrus. PCs may make a DC 25 Move Silently check in order to pass through the Room without alerting the magmin to their presence. No Hide check is required, as the magmin are caught in the rapture of their worship. If the PCs fail, twenty-five magmin (hp 20 each) are alerted to their presence. They converge upon the PCs, swarming and flanking. Clever PC are allowed a DC 40 Bluff or Diplomacy check to convince the magmin that they, too, worship Tyrus (if they think of this). If the PCs are successful, the magmin allow their new brothers to proceed on their way unmolested.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Extreme Heat

Tactics: The magmin swarm the PCs with no tactics, attempting to pull them down through sheer force of numbers. There should be no fewer than five magmin attacking each PC per round. They keep emerging from the lava river until the PCs are forced to flee. For every magmin that is wounded or killed, four magmin emerge from the lava. The wisest course of action for the PCs is to flee toward the bridge.

If the PCs stay and fight, a total of 100 magmin eventually emerge from the lava (the whole of their community). A battle this size can certainly be seen from Rooms J18, J19, and J21.

The magmins concentrate on flushing the PCs toward the lava. If the PCs retreat, the magmin impede their escape with a wall of "soldiers". If the PCs head toward the bridge, the magmin herd them along.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 15⁺

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the hit points of each magmin by +10. To decrease the challenge, have only two magmins emerge from the lava for every magmin killed.

Combustion (Ex): Anyone a magmin touches must succeed on a DC 12 Reflex save or take an extra 1d8 points of fire damage as clothes ignite or armor becomes searing hot. The damage continues for another 1d4+2 rounds after the magmin's last successful attack. Magmins can also ignite flammable materials with a touch. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Fiery Aura (Ex): Anyone within 20 feet of a magmin must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or take 1d6 points of heat damage per round from the intense heat. The save DC is Constitution-based. To represent the intense heat of the magmin in groups, increase the DC by +1 for every additional magmin within 20 ft. of the PC, rather than require 25 separate Fort saves.

Melt Weapons (Ex): Any metal weapon that strikes a magmin must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or melt away into slag. The save DC is Constitution-based.

J18. CROSSING THE RIVER/BRIDGE

Ahead, an old stone bridge crosses the river of lava, connecting to the other side via the island in the river.

If the PCs are fleeing Room J17, read the following.

Behind you, you can see magmin flowing out of the river by the dozens, as if the river itself were chasing you. Your only option is to attempt to cross the black granite bridge towards the other half of the Pyrefaust.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The solid granite bridge that crosses the lava river is in good condition. If the PCs are fleeing the hostile magmin from Room J17, they are chased by a mob of 2d20 magmin (hp 20 each) to the bridge. Ahead of the PCs, towards the other end of the bridge, two fire giants (Room J21) heat boulders in an effort to protect their territory from any who cross.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat, Poor Footing 6

Tactics: The horde chases the PCs half-way across the bridge. If the magmins catch the PCs, they swarm them and pull the PCs into the lava.

Once the PCs cross the bridge and leave the island, the fire giants at Room J21 launch volleys of heated rock. Allow the PCs DC 20 Spot checks to see the oncoming boulders, 1 round before they strike. Otherwise, they are caught flat-footed. Any boulders that miss the PCs make contact with the bridge 50% of the time.

Treasure: If the PCs kill all the magmins, they can search the ruins on this island. A DC 35 Search check reveals a ring of iron kings pressed under rocks. Some digging pries the ring of five keys loose, each cut with a unique celestial rune on the surface. While the keys are for doors that no longer exist in the dungeon, the DM may allow the PCs to use them in situations where a door normally couldn't be opened.

EL: Varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the hit points of each magmin by +10. To decrease the challenge, have only 2d10 magmin chase them across the bridge.

J19. THE FIRE GIANT FORGE

It is incredibly hot in this section; your armor begins to absorb the heat. Your ears ring with the loud clanging of steel. Piles of newly-forged weapons litter the middle of the cavern. Three bronze-skinned giants stand over massive anvils. Focused on their work, the mammoth humanoids pound heated iron with enormous mallets.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: There are three fire giants (hp 142 each) at work on the forge. The giants craft weapons and armor for their Queen's military conquests, stacking them in piles. Toiling over their forges, the fire giants are too busy to take immediate notice of the PCs. Allow the fire giants Listen checks, suffering a -5 circumstance penalty from the noise. If successful, the giants glance at the PCs and then continue working.

If a PC speaks Giant, allow a Diplomacy check at a -5 circumstance penalty. If successful, the giants tell them what the weapons are for and that the trolls are going to invade them soon. After the giant explains this, he recommends the PCs leave their territory before their Queen (Room J20) finds them. The fire giants otherwise ignore the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

Tactics: If the PCs continue passed the forge without confronting the giants, the PCs can travel freely without danger of combat. If the PCs rummage through the weapons, the fire giants stop what they are doing and scold them, giving them 2 rounds before they attack.

If combat occurs, the fire giants attack the PCs, fighting until the PCs leave the forging area, or until one side or the other is dead. They are metalsmiths and not warriors, so their knowledge of tactics is limited. They know pushing the PCs into the lava works wonders.

Treasure: In one of the piles of weaponry, the PCs find a mithril helm and a masterwork chain shirt.

EL: 13

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one fire giant. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

J20. THE THRONE

A passageway leads toward a light. The cave walls are engraved with images of giants battling trolls. There is a striking image of a female giant, her boot heel on the head of a demon. Further down the hallway, loud footsteps echo. Beyond the passage, is a barbaric throne room. At the southern end of the cavern, three fire giants stand around an enormous granite table in front of a throne. The throne is flanked by two piles of rocks and a pool of magma flowing from a granite fountain on one side. On the throne is a female giant, dressed in black robes with polished slate broaches, a circlet on her brow. Speaking in Giant, the three address her aggressively as she struggles to feign interest. The giants point at a parchment on the table. Behind the throne are six leashed and weary flaming humanoids.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: There are three fire giants (hp 142 each) standing at a table examining a map. In the throne behind the giants is Grehennox (hp 142), the fire giant queen, with her six leashed azers (hp 25 each) milling around behind the throne. The Queen wears a greater circlet of persuasion and is surrounded with a charismatic aura. PCs who speak Giant can understand the conversation between the giants and their leader; they are discussing tactics against the troll army and ways to subdue the trolls' leader, Baltazzar.

The giants do not mention that Baltazzar (Room J30) is an efreeti.

The Queen has a look of utter boredom as she spins a dagger in her left hand. The chained azers behind her are restless and starved. The fire giants don't notice the PCs unless they approach the Queen, but the azers get a Listen check to see if they notice them. If they hear the PCs, the azers begin to tug at their master's leash and foam at the mouth. Grehennox quickly tugs on the azers' choke chain to calm them. The throne room has only one passageway.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 6, Extreme Heat, Fearless

Tactics: If the PCs leave without confronting the giants, they can sneak through this Room without danger of combat. Allow the PCs DC 15 Move Silently checks to avoid being detected.

If the PCs approach the giants, allow a Diplomacy check at a -5 circumstance penalty (-2 if one of the PCs speaks Giant). If successful, the giants converse with the PCs. The fire giants around the table are unfriendly, but Grehennox reacts warmly in an attempt to gain allies, offering them a quest at the appropriate pause.

She explains that Baltazzar the Uncaring and his troll armies have plagued her people with ice storms from the Fourth Ring. She offers them each 2,500 gp and a mithril breastplate to kill him. If the PCs accept, the fire giants go back to devising a scheme for conquering the trolls' land. If they decline, the Queen directs her giants to slay the PCs.

The fire giants attack the PCs using great swords. They work their way through the ranks, killing the strongest men before attacking spellcasters. Wizards are subdued, rather than killed, as it is believed they would make excellent slaves. The Queen unleashes her azers on round 3. They attack randomly, and grappling their chosen targets and biting them. If all of the giants and the azers are defeated, Grehennox tries to reach peace agreements, attacking the PCs if this fails.

Treasure: The map on the table shows the layout of the Third and Fourth Rings. The map is labeled in Giant. A DC 40 Search check reveals a fire resistant bag in the lava pool filled with over 4,500 gp, a blackened silver ring (fit for a giant, 50 gp), 2d20 gems taken from the azer (worth 5d20 × 100 gp each) a bead of force, and a gray ioun stone.

Sneak Attack: Grehennox's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the rogue flanks her target. This extra damage is 1d6. Should Grehennox score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Ranged attacks count as sneak attacks if the target is within 30 ft.

Possessions: +1 chain shirt, +2 short sword, +2 dagger, greater circlet of persuasion (+5, 1/day—enthral), gauntlets of ogre power, *ring of fire immunity (while useless to her, Grehennox keeps it from the trolls).

J21. TREBUCHET GIANTS

Your armor scorches your skin. An inset north of the bridge promises refuge from the blazing heat. Peering around the volcanic rock, you see two fire giants close to a pile of rocks and a volcanic geyser. The giants are tossing rocks at the magmin on the bridge to the south.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Two fire giants (hp 142 each) are boulder-tossing for sport. Unaware of the PCs, the giants heat their boulders and take turns tossing them at the bridge. Allow the giants Listen or Spot checks at a -4 circumstance penalty. If the giants hear or see the PCs approaching, they change their contest from strength to accuracy.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4, Extreme Heat

Tactics: If the PCs are spotted by the giants, combat is unavoidable. The giants heat their rocks to a blazing temperature in the volcanic geyser and hurl the boulders at the PCs. In melee, the giant uses the boulder as a bludgeoning weapon. The heated boulder causes both bludgeoning and fire damage. The fire giants fight until they have less than 20 hit points, then retreat toward Room J19 to find reinforcements.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 17

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one additional fire giant. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

J22. CAVE-IN

As you move through this cavern, a fire giant spots you. With a diabolical grin on his blackened face, the giant bashes his club into the ceiling. The ceiling crumbles above you.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: There is one fire giant (hp 142) with a greatsword here. As the PCs enter the Room, the fire giant smashes the east wall, causing a cave-in. After the PCs are buried under rubble, the fire giant attacks.

☛ Collapsing Wall Trap: CR 6; mechanical; manual trigger; manual reset; Atk +20 melee (8d6 pieces of stone); multiple targets in a 20 ft. by 20 ft. area; Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 30;

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat, Poor Footing 5, Hazardous Footing 18

Tactics: The trap triggers immediately upon entering the Room, unless the PCs surprise the fire giant. Allow the PCs DC 24 Reflex saves to avoid the falling rocks, applying any penalties for being caught unaware. Once the trap is triggered, it cannot be reset.

Pinned down, the PCs are at a disadvantage. The fire giant gains a +2 circumstance bonus to attack rolls and AC while fighting the PCs on uneven ground. He is unaffected by the Poor Footing, but must still make saves against the Hazardous Footing.

The fire giant fights until he is reduced to 35 hit points or less, at which point he flees to Room J21.

Treasure: The fire giants carries 3d8 azer gemstones (see Room J39).

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of the collapsing wall trap to 12d6 and increase the DC of the Reflex save by +4. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the collapsing wall trap to 6d6 and reduce the DC of the Reflex save by -4.

J23. THE FIRE GIANT SMELTING POT

The heat here is scalding, and your armor burns your skin. Along the walls, you see massive iron ore boulders embedded in the porous stone. A pot is suspended over a magma pool, and a fire giant is heaving iron ore from a pile into the cauldron.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: In the center of the Room, one fire giant (hp 142) tosses hundred-pound pieces of iron into a smelting pot. The giant is oblivious to the PCs, suffering a -6 circumstance penalty to his Listen checks. If the giant hears the PCs shuffling around in the Room, he hurls a piece of ore at them.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

Tactics: If the fire giant becomes aware of the PCs, combat is inevitable. The giant hurls iron ore, each chunk dealing 8d6 points of damage. He has enough iron to throw 2d6 pieces of ore.

If a PC engages the fire giant in melee combat, he swings the iron ore as a bludgeoning weapon, dealing 6d6 damage. The smelting giant fights until he has 70 hit points or less, then retreats to Room J19 to muster reinforcements.

Treasure: The giant is carrying 103 gp and a massive pick axe.

Iron Bar Throwing (Ex): The range increment is 30 ft.

J24. THE IRON ORE DEPOSITORY

Chunks of unrefined iron ore are stacked in this alcove. A golden-skinned fire giant toils to sort the ore into stacks. The clanging of ore echoes throughout the cavern.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: One fire giant (hp 142) sorts and stacks large pieces of ore. However, he is too busy piling ore to take notice of the PCs, suffering a -4 circumstance penalty to his Listen and Spot checks. He avoids combat, if possible, attacking the PCs only if they attack him.

Encounter Condition: Fearless, Extreme Heat

Tactics: If combat is inevitable, the giant hurls iron ore at the PCs. The ore deals 8d6 points of damage and he has enough for 2d6 attacks, but settles disagreements before it gets this far. If reduced to 40 hit points or less, there is no way to end hostilities peacefully and he fights to the death.

J25. THE FIRE GIANT PRISONER ALCOVE

A whipcrack shatters the silence. A fire giant harnesses three fiery dwarf servants to a sled piled with ore. Struggling to move the sled, an azer collapses, and the fire giant lashes him into unconsciousness. Once the azer is rendered useless, the giant removes him from the harness, and exhorts the remaining azers to move the sled.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The PCs encounter a fire giant taskmaster (hp 164) attaching three azers (hp 15 each) to a sled. As the PCs enter the Room the fire giant has already beaten one of the azers unconscious. The other two are too terrified to work. The giant does not initially notice the PCs, but allow him a Listen check at a -3 circumstance penalty. If he becomes aware of the PCs, the giant decides to refill his sled with the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

Tactics: Negotiation with the fire giant is not an option. He fights to subdue the PCs, hoping to show off his new slaves. He deals non-lethal combat damage, using his whip to ensnare the PCs. Once the PC is entangled, the giant reels in his victim to knock him unconscious.

If combat grows deadly (i.e. he's reduced to 90 hit points or less), the fire giant fights to the death, convinced the PCs aren't worth the trouble.

During combat, the azers remove their harnesses to make an escape. After 3 rounds, the azers successfully flee. If the PCs approach, the azers run in a panic. The azers' sole motive is to escape their captors and avoid contact with the PCs. A trapped azer fights like a cornered animal.

Treasure: The fire giant carries 340 gp and there are several large pieces of iron ore on the sled which can be crafted into weapons.

J26. THE HIDDEN DROP OFF

Heading north, you find a passageway out of the fire giants' domain. The climate is cooler here, a relief after the heat. The ground is covered with light volcanic debris. Ashes line the corridor walls as do pieces of wood.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The giants have protected this passageway to the north by digging a pit and covering it with light rubble and thin pieces of wood. The rubble and wood supports less than 100 lbs. in combined weight, collapsing whenever a PC or monster steps on in it.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

Tactics: Allow the fire giant in Room J25 a DC 25 Listen check if a PC falls through this trap. He arrives 1d3+1 rounds later to investigate.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the depth of the well-camouflaged pit trap to 140 ft. To decrease the challenge, allow a DC 35 Spot check to notice the well-camouflaged pit trap.

J27. INTERSECTION OF PITS

At the border of the fire giants' domain is an open chamber. From the northern corridor, thunderous marching footsteps echo while a sparkling light emanates from the east. The illuminations create a spectrum of reddish colors on the floor.

Initial Attitude: Extreme Heat

Encounter: The fire giants have placed a false floor over this intersection of terrain. Thin wooden planks cover a 50-ft. by 50-ft. section of floor. The planks support less than 100 lbs. in combined weight and collapses whenever a PC or monster steps on in it.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 6

Tactics: All of the monsters in the surrounding area know about the trap. Allow everyone within 100 ft. a DC 25 Listen check to overhear the commotion.

J28. ROOM OF FLAMES I

In each corner of this room rests a statue, sculpted as if it were wild fire. Each shape is skillfully varied as if it were an artistic coup de grace.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A statue carved into the shape of live fire sits in each of four corners. Each of the gleeful shapes elementals is trapped with proximity triggers by the efreeti. If anyone approaches within 5 ft. of a statue, an incendiary cloud trap triggers.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

Tactics: After a statue triggers, there is a 25% chance (per statue) that it triggers as well. Whether this is a defect of the statues or not, is open for debate. PCs spotting one trap, can spot them all.

Behind the statue in the northwest corner is a secret door. Opening this secret door requires the PCs to cast a fire spell (of any kind) on the statue. This disables the trap for that statue and causes the statue to slide forward 5 ft., so the PCs can squeeze through. Large creatures must succeed at a DC 20 Escape Artist check to squeeze through, while larger creatures cannot fit at all.

THE FOURTH RING OF THE PYREFAUST: THE OSTRACIZED UNITE

A troll army gathers in the Fourth Ring of the Pyrefaust. Without a leader and bereft of their treasure, stolen by the fire giants, the trolls hide in these brass catacombs.

The ravenous trolls rummaged through the corridors and one came across a jeweled lantern hidden in the cobwebs. Fedjik the troll immediately pried it open, freeing an efreeti — Baltazzar the Uncaring, long ago sealed there by the Celestials.

Dazed by the sudden burst of flame emitted by the lantern, Fedjik attempted to flee. Baltazzar grabbed the arm of his emancipator and held him aloft. As the efreeti stared the bewildered troll in the eye, Fedjik mumbled in broken Common, "No kill. No kill. Fedjik seek magic. Hate giants." A great flash of light followed, then a ring of fire. The trolls, terrified of fire, cowered from Baltazzar, who promised them salvation from the fire lords.

Baltazzar was free to wreak havoc on the Pyrefaust with an army of trolls behind him. To further appease his hosts, the warmongering efreeti unleashed his magic on the fire giants. The trolls revere Baltazzar, a powerful entity who protects and leads them, while Baltazzar uses the trolls as pawns to conquer the other Rings of the Pyrefaust.

1	The PCs hear distant chanting echoing throughout the area. Those who speak Giant can decipher the chanting: the trolls are praising "the war bringer."

3	The corridor walls are crudely painted with images depicting trolls eating huge feasts and killing fire giants under the gaze of a pair of fiery eyes. Fear 18.

J30. TROLL MOB AND EFREETI GENERAL

A pit trap lies in the passageway leading to Room J30 from the south.

At the bottom of the pit is another trap, which triggers when the first PC lands on it.

♣ Polymorph: CR 6; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (polymorph, 12th-level wizard, target is polymorphed into gray ooze); Search DC N/A; Disable Device DC 40.

Standing at the corners of the southern passage are two trolls (hp 84 each), on watch for intruders. If the PCs have a light source or have been talking loudly, the trolls are prepared and have alerted the rest of the creatures in Room J30. If the PCs fall into the trap, the troll bring the fight the hallway.

The cavern walls turn to dull brass as you proceed towards a network of catacombs. Off in the distance, you can see the gleam of what appears to be a bonfire. As you draw nearer to the burning pyre, you pass two fire giant skulls on pikes. Suddenly, the ground shakes and you hear ferocious cries. Several shadowy monoliths gather around the pyre and you see an gold-skinned humanoid grow in the middle of the mob. A demon, bathed in his own personal fire, is revealed from behind the masses, larger then the pack of snarling trolls he commands. The gang of trolls raised their giant spiked clubs. The demon commands, "Consume the trespassers. Break their bones upon the earth and make them pay. Mercy is for the weak."

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: There are twelve trolls here (hp 84 each) and one efreeti, Baltazzar the Uncaring (hp 65). The efreeti appears abnormally large (20 ft. high), using his change size ability. He hovers behind the group of trolls, who are in a blind rage, spurning them on with his speech. Either Baltazzar intends to attack the fire giants now or this is a daily event.

Allow PCs a DC 25 Knowledge (nature) or Survival check to notice the trolls are sitting (unusually) close to the fire in the center of the Room. If the PCs are spotted, the trolls charge, attacking fearlessly. They are always in a state of ready to defend their territory.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4, Fearless

Tactics: Baltazzar has imbued the trolls (through wishes) with increased natural armor, minor resistance against fire, maximum hit points, sharpened claws, improved regeneration, and spell resistance. This development makes more effective in battle than typical trolls and altered the war with the fire giants significantly.

In battle, the trolls flail wildly with spiked clubs. Every time a troll misses with its club, it leaves it behind and uses its claws instead. They use their numbers as an advantage, swarming the PCs in a chaotic fervor, while Baltazzar fights from a distance.

When half the trolls fall, Baltazzar unleashes a volley of pyrotechnics on the PCs. After the blast of pyrotechnics, he uses heat (ex) to increase his attack damage and engages the PCs in melee combat. Baltazzar does not engage them toe to toe and turns to gaseous form, fleeing to Room J31 if pressured. If he dies, he collapses into ash piles and his spirit returns to the lantern in Room J33.

This is an important battle at the heart of the Section. If the trolls fall, a great deal of tension between the rings fades. Baltazzar's power has always appeared more than it truly is. His immortality and ability to grant wishes, is his one true power.

Treasure: Baltazzar drops all his possessions when he dies.

EL: 14

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two trolls. To decrease the challenge, remove two.

The save DC is Charisma-based. This is the equivalent of a 2nd-level spell.

Heat (Ex): An efreeti's red-hot body deals 1d6 points of extra fire damage whenever it hits in melee, or in each round it maintains a hold when grappling.

Plane Shift (Sp): A genie can enter any of the elemental planes, the Astral Plane, or the Material Plane. This ability transports the genie and up to eight other creatures, provided they all link hands with the genie. It is otherwise similar to the spell of the same name (caster level 13th).

J31. SINISTER DEALINGS

This closet is empty. From top to bottom, edge to edge, there isn't even a speck of dust.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The Room is an illusion. This chamber is a sanctum for Baltazar who placed a powerful illusion here, making the Room appear empty. Even when the trolls (all except Fedjik) enter the Room, it appears empty to them.

It however is filled with rugs, pillows, plates of food, and anything else that Baltazar has deemed a "necessity". While he does not tell Fedjik what to wish, for he does hint, with leading questions — "Would master like an invisible room?" — making sure the master troll provides the Room with everything it needs. Months of wishes have resulted in a powerful illusion that hides this lush chamber.

A DC 40 Will save is needed to see through the illusion. So powerful is it, in fact, that whenever Baltazar or Fedjik enter, they too disappear. PCs chasing after either one, find a dank, empty closet.

Of course, this invisibility lasts only as long as they remain hidden. If they attack the PCs, the illusion no longer protects them, but does protect the Room.

Encounter Condition: Positive Energy, [Safe], Spell Resistance 20

Tactics: Unless the PCs uncover the illusion, there isn't much to do here. If Baltazar is hiding from the PCs, he remains in this Room until fully healed, usually after drinking one of dozens of cure potions.

Treasure: Baltazar and Fedjik keep 50 potions of various makes in hidden niches throughout the Room. Anything else the DM can think of can also be stored here.

J32. BRASS ARMORY

This room is home a beautiful collection of brass weapons. It appears to be the troll's armory. Three trolls emerge, growling in Common, "Get out! Baltazar's armory!" One raises and swings his spiked club.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Three trolls (hp 84 each) guard the Room. One of the trolls is armed with a spiked club, but the other two are weaponless. The trolls do not negotiate with PCs; Baltazar has ordered them to expel or kill all trespassers.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: Combat ensues immediately upon the PCs entering the room. A troll swings his club at the nearest PC, forcing the PCs to move back towards the entrance. The other two trolls pounce on the nearest PCs, attempting to grapple them and rend their flesh.

When the troll with the spiked club misses an attack, the club is caught on the ground where the troll missed. When this happens, the troll must spend a full-round action freeing his club. All trolls in this room fight till the death and without fear.

Treasure: The armory contains a brass helm, 3 brass swords, 1 brass shield, 2 brass breastplates, and a full-plate of brass armor. Additionally, the troll with the spiked club carries 24 gp.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the size of the trolls to Huge (hp 82 each). To decrease the challenge, the trolls start wounded (-20 hit points each).

J33. EFREETI'S QUARTERS

The gritty interior of the dungeon turns into a brass-inlaid paradise. The entire room is crafted of gold and bronze. The room's grandeur is straight from legend. Light shimmers on the lavishly decorated walls and silk pillows. Along the northern wall is a gold-covered cushion beneath a painting of a beautiful brass city. Atop the cushion is a jeweled lantern. Two trolls flank the cushion, clearly protecting it. One is armored and wields a broadsword. The other carries a spiked club.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Two trolls guard Baltazar's private quarters. The troll that wears armor is Fedjik (hp 102). Fedjik that freed Baltazar from captivity and was granted three days of wishes before the others. He was subsequently made master of the trolls. He is powerful, as a result.

The other troll guard (hp 84) carries a spiked club. The trolls are initially unaware of the PCs, but if the PCs openly approach, the trolls attempt to kill them. Baltazar has ordered the trolls to expel or kill all who enter his chambers uninvited.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: If the trolls spot the PCs, they attack. There is no negotiation.

In combat, Fedjik bravely charges the nearest PC. He swipes at the PC with two attacks — his longsword in his left hand followed by his right claw. If he grows frustrated by the fight, he discards his weapon and rends the nearest PC. Once he begins fighting with both claws, he turns into a feral beast and loses any protection gained from fighting with the other troll. Fedjik is immune to fear and attacks until he dies.

The troll with the spiked club protects Fedjik's flank, striking any PCs trying to gain a positional advantage. This makes Fedjik immune to sneak attacks. When the troll with the spiked club dies, Fedjik's advantage is nullified. If Fedjik dies, the other troll flees, scouring the halls for reinforcements.

Treasure: A locked chest can be found under one of the many piles of rugs. The chest is guarded by five fire traps. One is on the lock, on each on the hinges, one on the lid and another inside on the lantern. Baltazar's love of fire should be obvious by now. Inside the PCs find over 1,000 gp (in gold and silver) and an arabian style lantern. More specifically it is Baltazar's Lantern which functions exactly as a djinni's lamp.

♣ Fire Trap: CR 6; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (fire trap, 1d4+12 fire, 12th-level wizard, DC 16 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

Lastly, the PCs find a ruby that radiates conjuration magic. The gem acts as a brazier of commanding fire elementals with three differences. One, the gem can be activated only once per day and requires the wielder to place the gem inside a fire (of any kind). Two, it summons a neutral evil, greater fire elemental. Three, it stores and summons the same elemental repeatedly. If reduced to 0 hit points, the elemental returns to the gem.

and heals damage at a rate of 1 point per round, 2 if the gem is placed in fire. The gem radiates evil, however, as it touches a piece of the fire plane best left alone.

Once inside the gem, the fire elemental cannot be released unless summoned. However, there is a 1% chance each day (at sunrise), that the fire elemental escapes of its own accord. If it breaks out, the fire elemental is free of the gem's power until it reaches 0 hit points again.

J34. SCORCHED EARTH

Piles of burnt skeletons surround a crater in the center of the room. The crater has a layer of ash around its base and streams of volcanic rock cooled to its sides.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The crust of the Pyrefaust shakes as the PCs step into this area. From the center of the crater, a pyroclast erupts in front of the PCs. Blazing magma shoots out of a crater and rains on the PCs 1d4 rounds after they enter the Room. The magma fills the air with intense heat and targets every PC in the Room with 4d6+4 fire damage. A DC 16 Reflex save halves this damage. If the door closes shut behind the PCs, increase the DC to 20.

Encounter Condition: Fire, Hazardous Footing 10, Tremors 16

Tactics: Should the azer or magmin every wish to raid the trolls from within, they can push up through this lava flow. If they can find it from under the earth's core. Fire giants would never fit.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of the Reflex save by +5. To decrease the challenge, allow the PCs 2d4 rounds before the magma vents from the crater.

THE FIFTH RING OF THE PYREFAUST: THE GREAT MINE OF TERR'KAAL

The Fifth Ring of the Pyrefaust is an azer mining encampment. The intense heat of the Pyrefaust causes diamonds, emeralds, and sapphires to form in abundance. The azers store the gems they mine in vacant prison cells throughout the Fifth Ring.

The azers are led by the diabolical ogre mage Terr'kaal. Terr'kaal became the leader of the azers by smiting the fire giants, who raided the azers' encampment for slaves in the early days of the Dungeon. The great sorcerer regularly terrorizes the fire giants in revenge for the atrocities they have committed on the azers. Once every twenty days, Terr'kaal sends a swarm of locusts into the giants' food supplies. Though the ogre mage is a boon to the azers, Terr'kaal serves a darker entity.

In the early days of the Dungeon, Tyrus appeared to Terr'kaal during the ogre mage's meditations and seduced him with the promise of freedom. Terr'kaal succumbed to Tyrus's charm spell, and the charmed ogre mage was commanded to destroy the glacial seal keeping Tyrus on the Great Plateau.

Fortunately, the ice cap kept the ogre mage away from his master. When the earthquake shattered the Dungeon's walls, Terr'kaal was given the opportunity to finally see Tyrus. There, on the plateau, Terr'kaal was given a scroll that recorded a ritual designed to melt the glacial tomb. The ritual required a vast array of precious gems, which were unavailable to Terr'kaal at the time.

The secret doors in this Section can only be opened by casting fire spells onto the surface. While this deals no damage (the receptacles are specifically designed for this), the door will not open by any other means. The wall descends into the earth, in most cases, and allows entry. Secret doors can be found with a DC 30 Search check (revealing a fiery hand print), but can only be opened with a fire spell. Azers open these secret doors by merely touching the walls with their fiery palm.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	The ground beneath the PCs enlarges, as a pyroclast erupts, dealing 4d6+4 fire damage. Allow the PCs DC 18 Reflex saves to have this damage.
2	A small tremor rocks the surface. The ground swells and steam rises from cracks in the stone. Extreme Heat, Tremors 20.
3	An explosive of fire erupts, echoing through the halls. Screams follow, signs that someone has hit a vein of fire while digging.
4–16	Nothing
17	A gang of four azer miners on their way to work in the mines. 4d6 rounds later, four azer miners come from the other direction, leaving work.
18	A pack of four rasts dragging the body of a dead azer back to their lair.
20	Four trolls search for azers to ambush. They stalk the PCs instead. Ambush.

J35. THE FIRST LINE OF DEFENSE

The fiery climate subsides somewhat as you pass through a door into a passageway. At the east end of the room you hear feet shuffling, the darkness obscures your vision.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Four azer flameguards (hp 70 each) protect the east end of the Room from intruders. They are armed with warhammers and surround the eastern door in a half-circle. These sentries protect the edges of the azers' domain and bear a red handprint on their backs. The marking is a blessing from the ogre mage, Terr'kaal, and all of his servants have this mark.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness, Fearless

Tactics: If the PCs converse with the azers (and succeed at a Diplomacy check), the azers explain they are servants of the "Exalted Terr'kaal" and none shall enter his domain without permission. They then point their spears and tell the PCs to "leave at once." If the PCs do not leave (or provoke the azers), combat is inevitable.

Three of the azers use their spears to back the PCs away from the eastern door. A fourth azer races to Room J36 to find help. After 2d4 rounds, the azer returns with 10 more azer guards armed with spears.

Treasure: Each of the azers carries 3 gemstones and spears. The gemstones are worth 15 gp each.

J36. ROOM OF FLAMES 3

The door to this Room is marked with red paint, in Ignan, warning others of a trap inside. The writing is simple, not rushed and looks pretty.

In every corner of this room rests a statue, sculpted as if from live flames. Each shape is different, revealing the sculptor's skill. On the floor, a line or chalk and soot has been drawn around the center of the Room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A statue carved into the shape of fire sits in each of four corners. Each of the gleeful shapes elementals is trapped with proximity triggers by the efreeti. None of the inhabitants have learned how to disarm the traps so they leave them alone. If anyone approaches within 5 ft. of a statue, an incendiary cloud trap triggers.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

Tactics: After a statue triggers, there is a 25% chance (per statue) that it triggers as well. Whether this is a defect of the statues or not, is open for debate. PCs spotting one trap, can spot them all.

Behind the statue in the northwest corner is a secret door. Opening this secret door requires the PCs to cast a fire spell (of any kind) on the statue. This disables the trap for that statue and causes the statue to slide forward 5 ft., so the PCs can squeeze through. Large creatures must succeed at a DC 20 Escape Artist check to squeeze through, while larger creatures cannot fit at all.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 11

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the save DCs of the incendiary cloud trap by +5. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Search DC of the incendiary cloud trap by -5.

J37. THE UNBINDING HEROES I

The door on the south wall of this Room is locked and cannot be opened from either side. No door handle exists and no seams are evident.

This large antechamber is desolate save for four statues of celestial animals in opposing corners. One of the statues depicts a great lion rearing on its hind legs. Its counterpart, in an opposing corner, is also a lion celestial, but this lion lies flat on its stomach with its paws extended. The other two statues are of dragons in similar poses of sleep and attack.

If the PCs have not yet encountered Serratine (Room V6), read the following.

A gust collects in the center of the room in a shimmering entity. A woman hovers in front of you, wrapped in satin robes. Her features bear marks of grief, and her hair dances in the wind. She looks at you, "Help me, great heroes! Help me escape this terrible curse! Only you can save me from the dragon by turning the lion's wrath on its slumber." After uttering this baffling phrase, the weeping spirit dissipates into the air.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The ghost that appears to the PCs is actually a projected image of Serratine, the Dark Seductress. She is trying to get the PCs to unlock her crypt (Room V1) by having them solve a series of riddles created by the Celestials which keep her tomb sealed.

Encounter Condition: Haunted

Tactics: There are four statues of celestial creatures, each in a different pose. If the PCs succeed at a DC 25 Search check, they notice that the statues are relatively light and movable. Upon further inspection, the PCs find that the statues are on rotating pedestals.

If the PCs rotate the 'attacking' lion to face the 'resting' dragon, they hear a siren's song in the west (coming from Room V1). This magical effect persists for 5 rounds and alerts any creatures within 300 ft. of the statue. They are well aware of what it is, and if Hostile, prepare to ambush who is coming.

After 5 rounds of singing the door on the southern wall unlocks and opens.

J38. STATUE OF SERRATINE I

You enter an old chamber unlocked by the celestial statues. The air is cold and dry in this section, and the putrescence of the sealed room is nauseating. In the center of the secret chamber stands a statue of the woman whose spirit spoke to you. Though a well-crafted reproduction, the statue fails to capture the pure beauty of her spirit.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There is a statue of Serratine in each of these Rooms. A switch at the base of the statue in the third Room is in the upright position. This switch can be found with a DC 40 Search check. Otherwise detect magic reveals strong abjuration coming from the base of the statue.

If anyone other than a lawful good PC touches the switch, roll on the following chart to see the effect. There is no save. Caster level 20th.

1-3	If the creature touching the switch is undead, it casts heal . If the creature touching the switch is living, it casts harm .
4-8	Chain lightning
9-12	Dictum
15-19	Insanity
20	Paralysis, 2d6 hours

A DC 40 Search check reveals the trap and a DC 50 Disable Device check disables the trap for 2d6 rounds.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air*

Tactics: This switch is one of five that unseals Serratine's crypt at Room V1. Once all of the five switches beneath the statues of Serratine are pulled into the 'down' position, a mithril orb (see Room J39) placed in the outstretched hands of the statue opens the crypt.

The other statues are in Rooms J46, J47, J49, and J53.

J39. AZER MINES

The drab corridor opens up into a glittering cavern. Hundreds of gemstones peek out of the basalt walls. This room is a mining encampment. The mine is well lit by stone braziers and equipment is strewn about. Beneath the lip of the mine, four fiery dwarves chip away at the gems in the basalt walls. On the surface of the mine, you see twelve of them hauling gemstones towards the north corridor in small carts.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Twelve azer miners (hp 47 each) haul two carts away from the mine shaft that descends beneath the floor. The azers are unaware of the PCs' presence due to their focus on their work, suffering a -6 circumstance penalty to any Listen or Spot checks. If the PCs are noticed, the azer yells "Intruder!" The twelve azers instantly cease their work and attack. Four azers inside the mine do not see the PCs and the clanging of their mallets temporarily deafens them.

Encounter Condition: Cover (soft), Fearless, Hazardous Footing 17, Poor Footing 6

Tactics: If combat starts, the azers swarm the PCs. The twelve azers divide into two groups of six. Each group mobs a single PC, attacking spellcasters first. The four azers in the mine retreat to Room J45 to summon the ogre mage Terr'kaal, if they hear the battle above (DC 25 Listen check, modified by explosive spells, etc.).

If they retreat for help, they arrive 7 rounds later with 15 azer guards from Room J45. The azer guards use the same 'swarming' tactics employed by the others.

Treasure: The mine is full of half-excavated precious stones. PCs can extract 3 gemstones, worth 150 to 250 gp each, per hour. If the PCs venture into the mine, allow for a DC 30 Search check. One of the knapsacks contains a polished mithril orb. The mithril orb was stolen from the statue of the celestial at Room V1 and claimed by a miner. He carries it with him everywhere he goes.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 5 azers (hp 11 each) to the encounter. To decrease the challenge, remove five azers from the encounter.

Possessions: Masterwork chainmail, masterwork warhammer, javelin (3).

J40. THE UNBINDING HEROES II

Inside this antechamber stand four statues of animals, in opposing corners. The creatures the statues depict are a phoenix with its wings extended, a phoenix with its wings at its sides, a boar in full charge, and a boar asleep. A chill comes through the room, heralding the appearance of a spirit. Her satin robes flow in the cold breeze, robes which do nothing to dim her beauty. Tears glitter as she weeps. "Help, there is not much time left. You must direct the boar's advance to stop the flight of the phoenix." Without warning, the spirit fades into nothingness.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The ghost that appears to the PCs is a projected image of Serratine, the Dark Seductress. She is trying to get the PCs to unlock her crypt (Room V1) by having them solve a series of riddles created by the Celestials which keep her tomb sealed.

Encounter Condition: Haunted

Tactics: There are four statues of celestial creatures, each in a different pose. If the PCs succeed at a DC 25 Search check, they notice that the statues are relatively light and movable. Upon further inspection, the PCs find that the statues are on rotating pedestals.

If the PCs move the 'charging' boar to a position where it is facing the 'flying' phoenix, they hear the singing of a siren in the west (coming from Room V1). This magical effect persists for 5 rounds and alerts any creatures within 300 ft. of the statue. They are well aware of what it is, and if Hostile, prepare to ambush who is coming.

After 5 rounds of singing the door on the northern wall unlocks and opens.

J41. AZER MINING EQUIPMENT STORAGE

You enter a room lined with racks of mining equipment. Grimy shovels, picks, axes, and ladders are all stored on hooks here. In the middle of the room, you see a few beaten sleds and worn carts. The silence of the storage room is broken by the sound of trowels falling near the back of the room. Three azers emerge from the clutter, wielding mining tools menacingly. One of the azers steps forward and says "This is the kingdom of the Exalted Terr'kaal, intruders. Go back to your giant lands or die." The azer shakes his shovel menacingly at you.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room is covered in azer mining equipment. Shovels, drills, axes, trowels, and other mining tools are either hung up on the walls or piled on the ground. The cluttered Room is difficult to maneuver in.

There is a 50% chance when the PCs enter, that three minors from Room J39 are here, putting away shovels and picks. The azers threatens the PCs, intent on forcing them out of the Room. They do not want to fight, but the PCs aren't supposed to be here.

A successful Diplomacy check calms them down, but the azers tell the PCs if the others find them here, there will be trouble. If the PCs do not leave the Room, the azers' Attitude changes to Hostile and combat cannot be avoided.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: In combat, the azers swing their crude weapons madly. They are not warriors and fight with very little organization. If they suffer any damage at all, they run to Room J39 for reinforcements. It takes 2 rounds to reach Room J39 and another 2d3 rounds to return with help.

Treasure: There are 14 shovels, 14 pick axes, 44 burlap knapsacks, two drills, four hand carts, 400 ft. of rope, and twelve loose (chipped) gemstones in this Room. The azers carry 3 rubies each worth 50 gp apiece.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two azers. To decrease the challenge, reduce the chance of an encounter to 25%.

J42. THE GEMSTONE MOUNTAIN

You barely pry open two tightly sealed iron double doors. Light reflects off the gemstones in this room. Mounds of rubies, sapphires, emeralds, and diamonds fill the room to the ceiling. It is a rogue's paradise, with piles of treasure everywhere. You quickly scan the room; there is not a soul near the treasure.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This is the azers' gemstone storage chamber. The site is dizzying. It is unclear why the azer dig, perhaps some preternatural cause, but they are efficient and organized, separating the gems into eight hills, each with thousands of gems in each. Azers haul carts of precious stones mined in Room J39 into this Room and unload them.

The gemstones have an alarm spell cast on them by Terr'kaal (Room J45), which triggers when the gems are touched by any non-azer. The alarm spell signals Terr'kaal who sends 20 azers from Room J45 to attack the trespassers in 1d6+2 rounds.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The azer guards are armed with warhammers, blocking the doorway to the chamber. They 'Heat' their warhammers to scalding temperatures and fight in lines. If the PCs take flight, the azers do not follow beyond the entrance.

Treasure: The PCs can collect 3d6 gems per round. The gemstones are worth 50 to 150 gp each. They are particularly useful in making magic items with fire resistance. 200 gp worth of these gems cut the gp cost of any fire resistance magic item in half.

J43. A BURST OF LAVA

A wave of oppressive heat hits the PCs as they approach this Room. They should be aware of the Extreme Heat before entering.

Metal armor heats to scalding temperatures as you proceed into a darkened room. In the middle of the cavern, piles of ash surround a crater. The layer of ash surrounds its base of cooled magma. Trails of cooled volcanic rock creep into the corners of the room. Suddenly, the cavern begins to shake. A small puff of ash is ejected from the center of the crater and lava begins to flow to the surface.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is extremely hot. Signs of digging can be seen throughout the Room, but the lack of recent activity suggests that the azers left. While they are immune to heat, vents of scaling magma do not produce precious stones. As a result, there is nothing to find here, other than an abandoned mine staff.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat⁺

J44. VOLCANIC

A wave of oppressive heat hits the PCs as they approach this Room. They should be aware of the Extreme Heat before entering.

A small foothill protrudes from the surface. The hill is smooth and curved on the surface, trickles of magma curling down the sides. There is a dusting of ashes around its base, resembling tarnished snow marred with lamp oil. The surface of the hill cracks, as crimson magma pours from the sides of the hill.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A crack of magma has pushed up from beneath stone. Cracked flagstones litter the floor. The intense heat is unbearable for most. However, the passage way to Region K lies to the east, providing PCs with an exit from the pyrefaust. The azers have sealed off this Room and given up on digging here.

After 2d6 rounds, the core releases a torrent of fire and molten lava. The PCs suffer 8d6+8 fire damage and are allowed DC 20 Reflex saves for half damage. Should the PCs remain, the lava erupts again every 1d6 minutes. The DM is free to make the heat and fire as extreme as possible.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat⁺⁺

Tactics: The base DC for the Fortitude save against extreme heat is increased by +10 in this Room. Feel free to add a few dead creatures that crawled into the Room and withered from the heat.

This Room is the start of larger problem for the occupants of the dungeon. The azers, having dug too far, have copied their hubris of the derro who brought the ceiling down in Regions K and L. By digging too deep and cracking into the fiery core of the earth, the azer have started a chain reaction that cannot be averted.

Unless the PCs can find a way to undo the churning power of the magma undertow, the Eastern portion of this Region will be consumed in about 2 months. A crack will form, ripping from Room J44 through J35, J27, and finally to the lava river.

J45. TERR'KAAL'S LAIR

A great hallway, lit by braziers, is filled with columns and flying buttresses, raising the basalt ceiling to the heavens. Two dozen fiery dwarves kneel before a twenty-foot tall statue of a red dragon. From statue's base an ogre emerges, dressed in a ceremonial robe.

As the ogre dazzles his servants with the display, four of the dwarves rise and go behind the statue. They emerge seconds later, carrying two cauldrons. One of the cauldrons has boiling hot magma steaming from the lip. The other cauldron is brim-full of rubies, sapphires, and a shimmering cloak. The two place the cauldrons in front of the mage. Raising his hands into the air, the ogre recites a ritual in hoarse unpleasant consonants. Plunging his left hand into the cauldrons, the ogre grimaces as the magma consumes his flesh — yet he continues to chant.

Suddenly, wind shoots through the hallway. Without warning, flame bursts from the statue's jaws and the ogre bellows; his eyes roll back in his head as a flame forms in the center of the hall.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The PCs have entered the lair of Tyrus's servant, Terr'kaal (hp 116, –20 from the ritual), as he recites the final verses of a greater flamebond ritual given to him by the ancient red dragon in a dream. The flame in the center of the Room grows steadily until it is 30 ft. tall. Terr'kaal then feeds a special potion of fireball to two azers and all three step into the fire. Once the ritual is completed, Terr'kaal becomes a divine elder fire elemental (hp 288), minus the extraplanar subtype. While a fire elemental he maintains his spells and spell-like abilities, plus all of his Special Qualities. If necessary, he attacks the PCs in this new form.

Twenty-three azer byrns (hp 47 each) watch Terr'kaal perform this ritual, two of them knowing they must give their lives to complete it. Once the ritual is finished, Terr'kaal walks to Room J39, J43, or J44 and dives into the lava. From there he swims under the earth to the lava river and then up to Region N where he can follow the tunnel back to Room J72. Once inside the dragon's prison, he self-immolates and destroys the ice with divine fire.

Despite being enthralled with the ogre's ritual, four azers in the back of the Room actively watch for intruders. Allow the azers Spot checks at a –4 circumstance penalty (due to the distraction of the ritual). If successful, they alert the rest of the worshippers, who swarm the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 8, Echoes 8, Fearless

Tactics: If the azers are alerted to the PCs' presence, combat begins. The azers attack in groups of seven, striking with their warhammers until the PCs are defeated or the azers die. Terr'kaal continues his ritual as the azers engage the PCs. If combat between the PCs and the PCs lasts for more than 15 rounds, the ogre mage successfully finishes the ritual, killing the two closest azer and turning him into a large fire elemental. A violent wave of fire follows, dealing 15d6 fire damage to everything in the Pyrefaust (no save). Once he takes elemental form, he moves only 10 ft. per round. It takes him 2 hours to make the long trek to Room J72.

If the azers are defeated in less than 15 rounds, Terr'kaal and the last two azers flee. The ogre mage casts darkness and then delayed blast fireball, before polymorphing one of the azers into a young red dragon. He then sets it loose on the PCs, using wall of fire and other spells to keep the PCs at bay, so he can finish the ritual. If Terr'kaal is forced into melee, he uses a +2 icy burst great sword one-handed along with powerful inflict spells.

If Terr'kaal is reduced to 20 hit points or less, he takes gaseous form and retreats, passing through walls to Room J71. If Terr'kaal dies, the statue of the dragon collapses. PCs under the statue may make a DC 16 Reflex save to avoid the falling pieces, or suffer 3d8 bludgeoning damage.

The secret door on the northwest corner of the Room is typical of the Section and opens when magical fire is cast on the door.

Treasure: Each azer carries 3 gemstones. The cauldron by the statue of Tyrus is filled with 656 gemstones worth 25 to 100 gp each. Terr'kaal also carries the Ssrin (the amulet stolen from the salamanders, which allows him to speak draconic), 34 gemstones, and 1343 gp.

There is a secret door on the north wall of this Room. The door can only be found on a DC 40 Search check (which reveals an opening in the wall, just larger than a human fist) and can only be opened by suffering the trap. The secret door and trap are complicated.

Inside the opening is a series of grooves, each about the size of a finger. Clever PCs should realize this is a grip. If a PC slides his hand into the opening, his hand is immediately attracted to the positive energy radiating from the grib. A DC 24 Will save resists. If touched, the grip detects alignment and acts as an axiomatic weapon. If the PC survives, he is allowed a DC 30 Disable Device check each round to turn the grip in the right position and line up the grooves. If he fails, the grip activates shocking grasp (5d4 electricity, no save) every round until he succeeds. The PC may pull away with a DC 24 Will save, gaining a +1 for every previously failed Will save. The real trick here is that the PC must do this by touch. Anyone wearing gauntlets suffers a -15 circumstance penalty to the Disable Device check and suffers an additional +5 points of electricity damage whenever the shocking grasp triggers.

From the inside, the secret door can only be opened by the switch in Room J53.

This unlit room smells of sulphur. A breeze swirls through the room, however, dispersing the odor. To the south are two dark alcoves, one deeper than the other. At the far end of the deeper alcove to the south-east is an ebon statue. The statue depicts a humanoid with his face half exposed beneath the cowl.

A circle is etched into the surface of the ground, with an odd jaundice-colored powder dusting the edges. The ring is about twenty feet in diameter. Suddenly, the wind picks up. The air travels around the room as a female spirit appears before you. She is draped in satin and she weeps, "I am stranded amongst horrible creatures in the pyramid by the river of fire! Help, I cannot survive much longer. Release me by casting the dark one into the ring of fire. Hurry, my hope runs thin."

Initial Attitude: N/A, Hostile

Encounter: A single statue stands in the far dark alcove to the south-east. The ebony statue is actually made of slate and depicts a cloaked figure. A DC 20 Craft (alchemy) check reveals the mysterious powder is a sulfur and phosphorus compound, which ignites easily. A DC 40 Craft (alchemy) check reveals that the powder, once lit, burns for 100 years.

The spirit is a projected image of Serratine. The evil temptress seeks to trick the PCs into opening her crypt (Room V1).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: A DC 20 Search check reveals that the statue is incredibly light and easily moveable. With a DC 16 Strength check, the PCs can haul the statue anywhere in the Room. Failing the Strength check, the statue drops. If dropped, the statue shatters like glass.

If the PCs move the cloaked figure into the center of the circle and then light the phosphorus compound in the etching, the ring ignites and melts the shadowy statue. The fire is smokeless.

All four doors leading out of this Room (to Rooms J51, J52, J53, and J54) unlock at once, releasing the rast guardians inside J51, J52, and J54. They ambush the PCs, almost at once, fighting to push them from the Room. Once engaged, two attack the front, drawing attention from the other two rasts, who flank the PCs.

If a PC is killed, the rast immediately pounces and drains the PC's blood. If the PCs flee, the rasts chase them to the edge of the Region.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 13

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the rasts begin combat invisible. To decrease the challenge, have the doors open one round at a time, so the rasts cannot flank the PCs as well.

✦ Godrast, Celestial Rast: CR 9; Huge outsider (extraplanar, fire); HD 12d8+88; hp 184; Init +3; Spd 5 ft., fly 60 ft.; AC 16, touch 7, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +12; Grp +30; Atk +31 melee (1d8+10, claw) or +31 melee (2d8+15, bite); Full Atk +31 melee (1d8+10, 4 claws) or +31 melee (2d8+15, bite); SA Paralyzing gaze, improved grab, blood drain, smite evil; SQ Damage reduction 10/magic, darkvision 60 ft., flight, immunity to fire, resistance to acid, cold and electricity 10, spell resistance 18, vulnerability to cold; AL NG; SV Fort +13, Ref +9, Will +9; Str 30, Dex 8, Con 21, Int 3, Wis 13, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Hide +9, Listen +17, Move Silently +17, Spot +17; Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes, Toughness, Weapon Focus (bite), Weapon Focus (claw).

Blood Drain (Ex): A rast drains blood from a grabbed opponent, dealing 1 point of Constitution damage each round it maintains the hold.

Flight (Su): A rast can cease or resume flight as a free action. A rast that loses this ability falls and can perform only a single action (either a move action or an attack action) each round.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a rast must hit with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

Paralyzing Gaze (Su): Paralysis for 1d6 rounds, 30 feet. Fortitude DC 17 negates. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Smite Evil (Su): Once a day the godrast can make a normal melee attack to deal +13 damage to an evil foe.

J51. RASTS OF UNUSUAL SIZE I

The door to this Room is locked and can only be opened by solving the statue puzzle in Room J50.

Skeletal shards cover the floor and crackle as you carefully cross the floor. The bones are stripped of flesh.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A celestial rast (hp 184) guards this Room, waiting for the moment the door opens. It attacks the PCs in Room J50, without hesitation. It works with the other rasts, quickly overcoming its enemies. Due to the state of mind of the others, this one is effectively the leader.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Fearless, Positive Energy

Tactics: Bred for fighting, this rast is fearless. It fights with the intensity unmatched by others of its kind.

Treasure: Buried in the floor is a magical stone that fills the Room with intense Positive Energy. It cannot be dispelled and acts like repulsion (20th-level caster) against evil creatures. It would take months of digging to get at it.

EL: See Room J50.

Scaling: See Room J50.

J52. RASTS OF UNUSUAL SIZE II

The door to this Room is locked and can only be opened by solving the statue puzzle in Room J50.

Skeletal shards cover the floor, crackling as you carefully cross the floor. The bones are stripped completely clean.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A celestial rast (hp 184) guards this Room, waiting for the the door to open. It attacks the PCs in Room J50, without hesitation.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Fearless, Positive Energy

Tactics: While bred to be the leader, it is somewhat passive. It does not fight with the same fervor as the others and runs for aid, should it be reduced to 50 hit points or less. When it gets to Room J56, there is a 50% chance that the rasts there tear it to pieces.

Treasure: Buried in the floor is a magical stone that fills the Room with intense Positive Energy. It cannot be dispelled and acts like repulsion (20th-level caster) against chaotic creatures.

EL: See Room J50.

Scaling: See Room J50.

J53. STATUE OF SERRATINE V

The door to this Room is locked and can only be opened by solving the statue puzzle in Room J50.

The air is stale, the smell of mold overwhelming. In the middle of the room, covered in lichen, is a statue of a celestial woman. Blood stains the walls with a bacchanalian mood.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There is a statue of Serratine in this Room. A switch at the base of the statue is in the upright position. This switch can be found with a DC 40 Search check. Otherwise detect magic reveals strong abjuration coming from the base of the statue.

If anyone other than a lawful good PC touches the switch, roll on the following chart to see the effect. There is no save. Caster level 20th.

1-3	If the creature touching the switch is undead, it casts heal . If the creature touching the switch is living, it casts harm .
4-8	Chain lightning
9-12	Dictum
15-19	Insanity
20	Paralysis, 2d6 hours

A DC 40 Search check reveals the trap and a DC 50 Disable Device check disables the trap for 2d6 rounds.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: This switch is one of five that unseals Serratine's crypt at Room V1. Once all of the five switches beneath the statues of Serratine are pulled into the 'down' position, a mithril orb (see Room J39) placed in the outstretched hands of the statue opens the crypt.

The other statues are in Rooms J38, J46, J47, and J49.

When this switch is placed in the down position, the secret door in Room J50 unlocks, opens, and the trap is disabled.

J54. RASTS OF UNUSUAL SIZE III

The door to this Room is locked and can be opened by solving the statue puzzle in Room J50.

Skeletal shards cover the floor, crackling as you cross the room. The bones are stripped completely clean of flesh. The smell of decay fills the air and the room reeks with evil. The door on the north wall looks as though it has been chewed through from the inside.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Two huge celestial rasts (hp 184) guard this Room, waiting for the moment the door opens. They attack the PCs in Room J50, without hesitation. However, these rasts have been corrupted by the Room and do not possess the same frame of mind as the others.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Fearless, Negative Energy

Tactics: These rasts are mindless. Though they look and act like their counterparts, they are in fact immune to mind-affecting magic, having been exposed to the negative energy of the Room for two long. One of them appears to have recently hurt itself, the scars still healing.

Treasure: Buried in the floor is a magical stone that once filled the Room with intense Positive Energy. It however has morphed and now spreads evil through its taint. It cannot be dispelled and acts like repulsion (20th-level caster) lawful creatures.

EL: See Room J50.

Scaling: See Room J50.

J55. THE UNBINDING HEROES IV

The heat in this cavern is intense. At the east end of the room, an alcove hides a statue of a warrior maiden brandishing a sword in the air, her face twisted into battle cry. A corresponding alcove across the room is empty.

After a few moments, steam rises and takes female shape. The woman's locks tatter in the rising steam. The beauty of the spirit is unparalleled. She cries, "I have no time. I am trapped. You must restore the balance." The spirit lingers, but as the steam rises to the top of the cavern, she vanishes.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: As the characters enter this room, Serratine, the Dark Seductress, appears before them. She is baiting the PCs into unlocking her crypt (Room V1) by having them solve a series of riddles created by the celestials who entomb her.

Encounter Condition: Fog 15

Tactics: If the PCs search the statue, they find that it, like others in the "Unbinding Heroes" sections, is on a rotating plinth. Unlike the other statues, if the PCs inspect this one closely enough (DC 30 Search check), they discover that it merely rests on the plinth rather than being attached. If the PCs succeed at a DC 24 Strength check (most likely working together), they can drag the statue off of the pedestal and haul it across the room to stand in the empty niche.

Once completed, a misty image appears to them, showing the location of the mithril orb (most likely in Room J39), but it could be anywhere the DM wishes. If the PCs possess it, they see themselves.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

J56. FREE RANGE RASTS

There is a 50% chance (per Room) that these doors are open.

Skeletons lay scattered across the floor. A half-chewed troll corpse drops from the ceiling and lands amid the bodies, scattering the bones. Three large fanged spiders drop from the ceiling and crawl through the air in your direction.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Two rasts (hp 166, 141) drop onto the PCs. Having been free for so long, they have lost their sense of right and wrong and attack anything that moves, marking their territory with the dead. There are two rasts in each Room and they fight together until a PC drops, at which point the larger of the two takes the kill.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment, Fearless, Flooded*

Tactics: The rasts ambush the PCs, striking as quickly as possible. They are supreme hunters and have grown used to killing things quickly. If the PCs prove to be a challenge, this spurs them on and they gain the benefit of rage. They are near-mad rasts, however, and gain a +4 bonus to fear saves, but suffer a -2 to all other Will saves.

Treasure: Amid the debris on the floor are dozens of gems from azers, and a few discarded weapons. The gems are worth 15 to 50 gp each.

EL: 13

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one rast. To decrease the challenge, reduce the hit points of each rast by -30.

J57. SWARM OF RASTS

Before the PCs open any of the doors to Room J57, allow the rasts inside Listen checks to hear them coming. Upon reaching the center point of the hallway, the doors burst open and the rasts swarm.

Otherwise, read the following.

The floor is covered with bones and strands of spider silk ~~grape~~ the walls. The ceiling is over 60 feet high and rubble make the floor difficult to stand on. A wolf spider trickles down a web into your line of vision. Suddenly, a few pebbles fall from the ceiling as the sound of skittering feet climb the walls.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment, Cover, Fearless, Hazardous Footing 17, Poor Footing 3

Encounter: The PC find themselves the target of a clever ambush. Between the three Rooms, there are fifteen rasts (hp 25 each), that drop down on the PCs from above. Tunnels have been dug into the ceilings and walls above the outside hallway, allowing them to move quickly from one Room to the other.

The rasts drop from the ceiling and float down, angling their bodies in an effort to land directly on top of the PCs. Attacking in numbers, the rasts bury the PCs as ants engulf a bread crumb.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The rasts swarm the PCs, immediately grappling the largest (and obviously healthiest) one. They then use blood drain to reduce their prey. The rasts are fearless and unpredictable. If possible, they swarm in threes and fours, using their numbers to whittle down the PCs' strength. If the PCs flee, the rasts chase them to the edge of the Section.

Treasure: PCs searching the tunnels 40 ft. above the floor, find the dead bodies of dozens of creatures, in various states of decomposition. They are wrapped in a thin webbing that is easy to break. Among the remains are dozens of azer gems and mundane items. A DC 30 Search check unearths a small coffer filled with potions — five potions of cure moderate wounds, three potions of endure elements, two potions of owl's wisdom, one potion of resist energy (fire) 20, and two potions of lesser restoration. Each potion is labeled and stoppered with wax. All are the same color.

Flight (Su): A rast can cease or resume flight as a free action. A rast that loses this ability falls and can perform only a single action (either a move action or an attack action) each round.

J58. RAST COURT OF BLOOD

The secret door leading to the antechamber of this Room can be found with a DC 30 Search check. However, it can only be opened spreading blood on a small sigils on the face of the wall. The rasts merely spit blood to open it, however.

The stench is overwhelming here. The clicking of dozens of legs fills the air. In the southeast corner of the room, several fanged cluster around a shadowy corridor. Tucked into the corners red eggs, covered in a thin membrane of dried blood.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The PCs have entered the nesting warren of the rast queen (hp 151). She is a celestial rast (like those in Room J50), but lays the eggs of regular rasts. She is tougher than the other celestial rasts, and slightly larger than the males guardians in this Room. She has a larger head, but one fewer set of legs. She is surrounded by a horde of eighteen rasts (hp 25 each). The Room is humid, causing the PCs to stick inside their armor and suffering -2 Dexterity while in the Room.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Fear 18, Fearless

Tactics: If the rasts notice the PCs, they swarm, driving them out of this secret Room. If the PCs flee, the rasts give chase to the secret door.

The rasts swarm in multiples of six and the queen only gets involved if her eggs are threatened or the PCs kill all the rasts she flies into the air and uses her paralyzing gaze on the nearest PC. If successful, she slashes with her claws, grapples, and then uses her blood drain ability.

J59. INVISIBLE PENDULUM

This desolate section is narrow, but with a high ceiling. The air in this room swirls with a soft breeze. There are gold pieces scattered across the floor, in a path to the door across the room from you. In the center of the room there are two identical short hallways or deep alcoves, one on the north end of the room and one on the south end of the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: An invisible pendulum swings back and forth between the north and south alcoves. The pendulum is imbued with greater invisibility and silence. The only indication of the pendulum is the breeze it causes as it swings back and forth. Most likely, the PC is caught flat-footed when it hits.

✱ Invisible Pendulum Trap: CR 6; mechanical device; timed trigger; automatic reset; Atk +20 melee (1d12+8/x3, greataxe); spell effect (greater invisibility); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 38.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The invisible pendulum trap attacks the first PC that comes into contact with it. If the PCs do not move quickly, more can be hit by it however. It remains invisible indefinitely. If the PCs cast greater dispel magic on the Room, the pendulum becomes visible for 2d6 rounds. If they cast detect magic, they can see a moving aura of moderate illusion.

THE SEVENTH RING OF THE PYREFAUST: THE TOMB OF WYVERNS

The Seventh Ring of the Pyrefaust is a network of reinforced granite cages imprisoning half-fiend wyverns. These beasts were born from a single angry thought, brought upon the world by the god of retribution. In an instant they descended and destroyed hundreds of cities and creatures. In their haste, the celestials killed most and imprisoned the rest. These wyverns are all that remain from that single malevolent moment, imprisoned with these cages.

When the earthquake cracked the walls of the Pyrefaust, the granite cages of the Seventh Ring remained intact, due to the powerful energy holding them in place. Buried with the wyverns, the celestials placed an unholy item born from the same evil — an +3 anarchic vicious lance.

3	The echoing crack of a whip fills the cavern.
4	Steam and noxious vapors suddenly vent from a nearby crack. The PCs must make DC 16 Reflex saves or suffer 3d6 fire damage.
5	A small tremor rocks the surface of the Pyrefaust. The ground expands and a small amount of magma seeps out. Though not harmless, it makes crossing the floor difficult.
6–18	Nothing
19	Baltazar's fire elemental (Room J68) is loose and looking for prey. It stalks the PCs and waits for the right moment to strike. Ambush.
20	A wyvern has somehow gotten loose and attacks the nearest thing it can find.

J60. INTERSECTION OF FIRE

A brazier of fire rest at the intersection of these mammoth hallways. The fire crackles, as the dancing flames cast a hazy light across the intersection. Growls, hissing noises, echo from every direction.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The brazier in the center of the hallway has been magically trapped by the efreeti to the south to keep any freed wyverns from crossing into the trolls' territory. The efreeti believes that the wyverns in are unintelligent and attracted to light sources, so he set a large brazier in the center of the crossroads with a flame strike trap.

♣ Flame Strike Trap: CR 10; magical device; proximity trigger (alarm); automatic reset; spell effect (flame strike, 9d6 fire, 9th-level cleric, DC 17 Reflex save half damage; Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30).

Encounter Condition: [Deep Darkness], Drafty

Tactics: If the PCs come within 3 ft. of the brazier, the trap triggers. If PCs disarm the trap, the brazier immediately extinguishes, creating a Deep Darkness Encounter Condition for all adjoining Rooms.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of the flame strike trap to 13d6. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Reflex save DC of the flame strike trap to 14.

J61. CAGED WYVERNS

If the PCs lifted the lever in Room J64, the bars are down and two of the wyverns are gone.

The secret door on the northeast wall can be opened from either side with a DC 30 Search check. It rotates on a central pintle and opens when a special stone is pressed and released at the 4 ft. mark.

Thick metal bars run from ceiling to floor. This mammoth room is cut in two, with four massive winged beasts on one side. Like bulls, they hiss and one rams its head repeatedly into the steel bars.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Four gargantuan half-fiend wyverns (hp 243 each) are contained in a cage and unable to engage in combat. They often fight one another, when bored and the scars on their bodies are the proof. As a result, their damage reduction has increased by +5. One of the wyverns continuously rams itself against the steel bars. If the PCs linger, the wyvern eventually renders itself unconscious after 3d4 rams. The less aggressive wyverns continues to watch the PCs from the back of the cage.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: If the switch at Room J64 is down, this cage stands open and the wyvern is not here. If the wyvern is still caged and a PC is within 10 ft. of the bars, the wyvern strikes with its tail. If struck, allow the PC a DC 20 Reflex save for half damage.

J62. THE SLEEPING LIZARD

If the PCs lifted the lever in Room J63, the bars are down and two of the wyverns are gone.

The secret door on the northeast wall can be opened from either side with a DC 30 Search check. It rotates on a central pintle and opens when a special stone is pressed and released at the 4 ft. mark.

A single wyvern rests peacefully near a gold coffer in the back of the cage. As you draw nearer, the wyvern raises its head, bewilderment in its eyes. After staring at you for a few seconds, the wyvern directs its gaze towards the coffer.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: There is one half-fiend wyvern (hp 189) held in the cage. The wyvern is aware of the PCs, but not inclined to investigate their arrival. The wyvern is under a powerful deep slumber spell induced by the coffer he possesses.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the switch at Room J64 is down, this cage stands open, but the wyvern is still asleep. If the wyvern is still caged and a PC is within 10 ft. of the bars, the wyvern strikes with its tail. If struck, allow the PC a DC 20 Reflex save for half damage.

If the PCs attack the PCs, it is considered shaken and is caught flat-footed the first round of combat. It does not put up much of a fight and exposing its flank from time to time, hoping the PCs will end its misery.

Treasure: The gold coffer is a cursed magic item, that the wyvern covets. While all it does is cast deep slumber continuously on anyone touching it, the wyvern seeks the warm embrace of death and this is the next best thing.

PCs touching the coffer must succeed at a DC 16 Will save or be drawn to put it in their pack. Cursed, the items stays with the PC until an appropriate spell is cast to cut his tie to the item.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, remove the bars. To decrease the challenge, remove the wyvern.

J63. UNLOCKING SWITCH I

There are six bloody footprints leading from inside the Room to the hallway, stopping just 6 ft. from the door to this Room. Allow the PCs a DC 20 Spot check (modified by light) to notice.

A row of bars, running floor to ceiling, divides this room in two. However, two of the bars are missing, leaving an opening to the second half of the room. Bloody footprints mark the floor, however, leading from the center of the room out. In the center of the back wall is a heavy lever.

Encounter: A switch in the back wall controls the wyvern cage bars. Flipping the switch to 'down' lowers the bars into the floor, releasing the wyverns from their cages in Rooms J62 and J66. If the switch is returned to the 'up' position, the bars raise from the floor, closing up again.

The celestials have trapped the floor here, to ensure the wyverns are not released. However, it only triggers when an evil creature crosses the floor.

J64. UNLOCKING SWITCH II

The sound of bone crashing into metal echoes from the room to the north. A row of bars, running ceiling to floor, cuts this room in two. Two of the bars appear are spread apart as if by some great force. The far corner has collapsed in, with earth and rubble breaking through into the room. In the center of the back wall is a heavy lever.

J65. DINING WYVERN

If the PCs lifted the lever in Room J64, the bars are down and the wyvern is gone.

The secret door on the north wall can be opened from either side with a DC 30 Search check. It rotates on a central pintle and opens when a special stone is pressed and released at the 4 ft. mark.

The ceiling soars above 30 feet in height and giant bars run floor to ceiling. Flying buttresses support the cracked ceiling. In the back of the room, a mammoth wyvern gnaws on an oversized femur. The wyvern looks up at you, lets out a deep-throated roar, and returns to the bone.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: A gargantuan half-fiend wyvern (hp 288) chews a leg bone at the back of the cell. The wyvern seems content to strip the femur clean and doesn't take much interest in the PCs. The howl let out by the wyvern was a warning to leave him alone to dine. If the PCs linger, the wyvern becomes annoyed by their presence and takes a tail swipe at the closest PC.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness, Fearless

Tactics: If the switch at Room J64 is down, this cage stands open and the wyvern is not here. If the wyvern is still caged and a PC is within 10 ft. of the bars, the wyvern strikes with its tail. If struck, allow the PC a DC 20 Reflex save for half damage.

This enormous series of bars, cuts this room into four sections. Peering into the void, you see nothing. As you step closer to the bars, a deep hissing echoes from the gloom. Suddenly, a gargantuan wyvern charges toward the bars from out of nowhere.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is cut into four separate "cages." Each holds a wyvern (hp 243) that paces in its cell. They have all agitated one another with a recent show of strength and the beasts seek to release their aggression.

Encounter Condition: [Ambush], Fear 14, Fearless

Tactics: If the switch at Room J63 is down, these cages stand open and two of the wyverns are not here. The two remaining ambush the PCs and strike to kill. They both pounce on the same PC and fight for dominance. If the cannot both attack the same PC, the attack the closest two.

If the wyverns are still caged and a PC is within 10 ft. of the bars, the wyverns strike with their tails. If struck, allow the PC a DC 20 Reflex save for half damage.

J67. PIT OF DARKNESS

The two granite doors here have been wedged open. Beyond them an expansive holding cell is engulfed in darkness, its ceiling lost in the gloom. There appears to be a steep drop at the edge of the cell, its bottom also concealed by the darkness.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The floor of this Room fell into darkness years ago during one of the earthquakes. The Room is dangerous and the floor could break again at any moment. While the pit is only 100 ft. deep, it is lined with dead wyverns and rubble, making the bottom harmful to land on.

J66. TRAPPED WYVERN

If the PCs lifted the lever in Room J63, the bars are down and two of the wyverns are gone.

The secret door on the northeast wall can be opened from either side with a DC 30 Search check. It rotates on a central pintle and opens when a special stone is pressed and released at the 4 ft. mark.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness, Hazardous Footing 20, Poor Footing 4, Tremors 16

Tactics: Every round the PCs remain in this Room, have each of them make a DC 20 Reflex save. Failure indicates a portion of the floor beneath the PC's feet has cracked, sending him falling into the darkness, onto the bony floor of the pit.

♣ Bone-Strewn Pit Trap: CR 8; mechanical; location trigger, manual reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 100 ft. deep (10d6, fall); pit spikes (Atk +20 melee, 2d4 spikes per target for 1d6+3 each); Search DC N/A; Disable Device DC N/A.

Treasure: An azer fell to his death while looking for a safe place to count his stolen gems. He and his gemstones are on the floor of the pit. There are 17 gemstones in all (worth 25 to 50 gp each), scattered across the floor. But, searching in the darkness probably isn't worth the trouble.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the depth of the bone-strewn pit trap to 130 ft. To decrease the challenge, reduce the depth of the bone-strewn pit trap to 70 ft.

J68. DEAD WYVERN

The door to this Room is scored from fire. The door is slightly ajar and the PCs can smell burnt flesh coming from inside the Room.

If the PCs have used the gem of commanding fire elementals from Room J31 this Room is empty.

The smell of burnt flesh fills your nose as the door opens. Inside the room are bars blocking your way, cutting off the rest of the room. Jagged scorch marks on the walls and a smoldering from the eastern end of the room, indicate fire. Seconds later, the explosion of fire, just beyond the wall fills the room with heat.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Although the PCs cannot see it, a wyvern lies dead, the victim of a battle with a rampaging fire elemental (hp 178). The beast pushed its way through the bars. One of Baltazar's pets, the beast was let loose a few weeks ago and made quick work of the sleeping wyvern in this cage. It is vile and destructive, a pawn from Baltazar's home plane.

Able to squeeze between the bars, the fire elemental attacks the PCs as soon as he notices there is company.

Encounter Condition: Cover, Extreme Heat, Fearless

Tactics: The fire elemental attacks without warning. While the PCs have a few rounds before it strikes, they cannot see it. Once it senses the PCs are around the corner, it pushes through the bars (a move action to move from one side to the other), it attacks the closest PC. It is a force of energy with little to no restraint. It attacks feverishly, lashing out every round.

If the fire elemental dies, it returns to the fiery gem in Room J31 (or wherever the gem is now).

Treasure: If the PCs squeeze through the bars (requiring a DC 30 Escape Artist check for Medium PCs and a DC 20 check for Small PCs), they find the skeletal remains of a wyvern, apparently cooked by the elemental for quite some time. Inside its gullet, is a key to Room K56.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one fire elemental. To decrease the challenge, reduce the hit points of the fire elemental by -50.

♣ Greater Fire Elemental: CR 9; Huge elemental (fire, extraplanar); HD 21d8+84; hp 178; Init +12; Spd 60 ft.; AC 24, touch 16, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +15; Grp +28; Atk +22 melee (2d8+5 plus 2d8 fire, slam); +22 melee (2d8+5 plus 2d8 fire, 2 slams); Space/Reach 15 ft./15 ft.; SA Burn; SQ Damage reduction 10/—, darkvision 60 ft., elemental traits, immunity to fire, vulnerability to cold; AL NE; SV Fort +11, Ref +20, Will +9; Str 20, Dex 27, Con 18, Int 6, Wis 11, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Listen +14, Spot +14; Alertness, Blind-Fight, Combat Reflexes, Dodge, Improved Initiative, Iron Will, Mobility, Spring Attack, Weapon FinesseB, Weapon Focus (slam).

J69. FIRE IN THE HOLE

Written on the doors, in Celestial, are the words, "The death of fire lies within." A DC 30 Decipher Script check allows the PCs to read the text.

The large double doors leading to this Room are locked and trapped. Each door has its own fire trap (placed here by the celestials) and each door is locked separately. A DC 40 Open Lock check unlocks the door, but does not disable the trap. The trap triggers as soon as someone touches the door or tampers with the lock.

♣ Fire Trap: CR 11; spell trigger; automatic reset; multiple traps (three simultaneous fire traps); spell effect (fire trap, 1d4+17 fire, 17th-level wizard, DC 16 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29. Note: This trap is really three CR 5 fire trap that fire simultaneously, using the same trigger and reset. Typically fire traps cannot be cast together on a single item.

The secret door on the eastern wall can be opened by finding a trigger on the angelic statue. A DC 35 Search check reveals a niche above the hilt of the statue's scabbarded sword. If a lawful good PC puts a piece of silver into the niche, the statue rotates and allows the PCs entry into the Room. PCs succeeding at a DC 25 Craft (alchemy) check identify trace bits of silver on the niche.

Without silver, a DC 40 Open Lock check is needed to bypass the niche and open the secret door. The secret door remains open for 4d6 rounds. While the door is open, all the traps in the Room are disarmed. Opening it from the inside requires the PCs defeat the trap below.

A giant hall opens before you as a gust of air rushes passed you into the room. A giant granite brazier rests against the far wall. Alcoves set into the north wall and another in the south wall hide statues of angels. The statues stand at the ready, like guardians. The vaulted ceiling disappears into the darkness above.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Once the PCs enter the Room, the double doors close behind them and two gates fall in front of the doors, blocking the PCs in. The traps reset on the door and the gate gleams with obvious mystical writing (they too are trapped). Written on the inside of the doors, in Celestial, are the words, "The breath of flame blocks your path. Salvation lies in its destruction."

The gates require a DC 50 Strength check to pry open, but trigger a complex ward placed upon them. Otherwise, the only way to open the gate and doors is to release all of the air in the chamber, an act that happens in one of two ways.

The PCs can allow the braziers to burn out all of the Room. This process takes 2 hours and leads to the PCs suffering the effects of Smoke after 105 minutes (so long as they stay low to the ground). Once the air is completely gone, the brazier's light fades, and the secret door on the east wall swivels open and remains open for 4d6 rounds. Once open, the brazier comes alight again as the Room fills with air.

Alternately, the PCs can trigger the three fireball traps on the statues that fill the Room with blue fire and consume all of the air. This is equally deadly, however. But more direct.

The fireball traps are easily located, but it is unlikely the PCs will think of these methods to escape. In either case, the secret door opens as soon as the air is gone from the Room.

♣ Gate Ward Trap: CR 14; spell trigger; no reset; automatic reset; multiple traps (one glyph of warding blast, one bestow curse trap, and one symbol of weakness); spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 18th-level cleric, 9d8 cold, DC 18 Reflex save half damage); spell effect (bestow curse, 18th-level cleric, -6 Constitution, DC 17 Will save negates); spell effect (symbol of weakness, 18th-level cleric, 3d6 Strength damage, DC 21 Fortitude save negates); multiple targets (everyone within 90 ft.); Search DC 15; Disable Device DC 40. Note: This trap is really one CR 4 trap that creates a bestow curse, a CR 5 trap creates a glyph of warding, and a CR 8 symbol of weakness. In addition, the trap increases the ranges of all spell effects to 90 ft.

Encounter Condition: [Drafty], [Smoke], [Stagnant Air]

Tactics: While the PCs plan an escape, allow them time to explore the Room. They have 2 hours before they run out of air, less if they are very active or start small fires, etc.

Treasure: The entire Room radiates magic. DC 25 Spellcraft checks are needed to isolate and locate the various magical auras throughout (gates, statues, etc.). If the PCs succeed at a DC 30 Spellcraft check while examining the floor behind the southern statue, a moderate transmutation, a strong conjuration, and a moderate abjuration aura radiate from under the stone.

A DC 40 Search check reveals a loose stone in the alcove behind the southern statue where the floor and wall meet. The PCs gain a +10 competence bonus to this check, if they know where to look. Prying the stone from the wall requires a DC 30 Disable Device check, DC 35 Open Lock check, or a DC 24 Strength check.

Inside the wall is a small, slender wooden box, 6 in. wide, 2 in. tall and 2 in. deep. Finely crafted by celestial hands and inlaid with ivory, the box is very valuable, worth over 1,000 gp to collectors who appreciate fine work. If anyone other than a lawful good PC touches the box, he suffers damage as if attacked by an axiomatic holy weapon.

Inside the box, laying on a bed of thick felt, rest three rings. The rings are a ring of regeneration, a greater ring of energy resistance (fire), and a ring of evasion.

EL: 16

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of the fireball traps to 10d6 each or add a sepia snake sigil to the gate ward trap. To decrease the challenge, remove the bestow curse from the gate ward trap.

J70. FIRE WOMAN

The hallway and two circular chambers make up one Room. The following information is for the entire area.

When the PCs enter one of the circular chambers, read the following.

The stone statue of an angel faces south. It grips a two-handed sword, pointing down, the hilt held against its chest. The eyes of the statue look directly at the southern door. There is an overwhelming calm in the room that cannot be explain; nonetheless, you feel energized.

When the PCs enter the hallway, read the following.

The hallway is dark and narrow. Depressed pressure plates in the corridors appear to be triggers for ancient traps and the smell of charred moss pervades the hall. Beyond that, it seems safe and clear of trouble.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Inside the Room is antipathy that targets both chaotic and evil creatures (effectively five different alignments). The effect reduces the Dexterity of said creatures by -8, instead of the normal -4. In addition, the majority of creatures in the Region avoid this Room.

The back hall is likewise protected, providing a safe haven for PCs.

The true power of this Room stems from the statues, which are in fact, celestials encased in stone. The angels had themselves permanently "fused" with the Region, in the hopes that their eternal "lawful goodness" would somehow keep the place safe. As the centuries wore on, however, their energy subsided and the rift in Room J67 tore through their immobile defenses. As a result, only these two chambers and the back hall are protected. In a few years, only the hallway will be safe.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness, Deep Silence, Positive Energy, [Safe]

Tactics: The PCs can do a number of good things for the Region. By casting break enchantment three times on each statue, the angels are freed. Freedom or stone to flesh cast once also frees them. Short of that, only a miracle or wish can free the angels. If freed, the astral deva thanks the PCs and begins the task of restoring the Region. If updated on the dragon Tyrus, the angels join the PCs in fight, but do not leave the Region for any other Region. "They have work to do," is their motto.

If the PCs lock the doors to the Room, requiring a DC 35 Open Lock check or somehow bar the door, the Room is considered Safe and the likelihood of an encounter with her drops to once every 10 hours.

Treasure: If the PCs search the back hall, they easily find a handful of azer gemstones worth 25 to 50 gp each.

EL: N/A

Scaling: The DM can replace an astral deva with a trumped archon if he wishes, or (to increase the challenge to the Region) a hound archon.

J71. PRISONERS OF FATE

A thin sheet of ice covers the floor. In the northwest corner, rubble has collapsed through the stone. To the south, the statue of a demon stands on a pedestal, its face twisted with rage.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: In some macabre and not so lawful good plan, the celestials used the bones of ice devils to build this Room and Room J72. The fire beast that was imprisoned here, however, died decades ago and now the Room is filled with the haunted and vile memories of gelugon.

The statue to the south is actually an ice demon, trapped in perpetual ice. If the statue is destroyed, the ice melts and the Room's vile energies dissipate. Destroying the statue, however, is not easy.

First, the PCs must melt the ice, which frees the gelugon. Then, they must fight and destroy the confused and shaken ice devil (hp 196). The ice is vulnerable to fire, but to date, no one has tried to melt it due to the other conditions of the Room.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 9, Distracting Visions 10, Fear 22, Haunted

Tactics: Because of the foul manner in which the Room was conceived, a perverse karma has caused the devils' aura to permeate the floor and walls. Just standing in the Room is unnerving for PCs and lawful good PCs become nauseated (no save) after 1 minute. Every 5 rounds, the Room unleashes one of the following effects as a 16th-level caster.

1d20	Effect
1-4	Cone of cold
5	Contagion
6-9	Freezing sphere
10-12	Ice storm
13-16	Slow
17-20	Wall of ice

Treasure: Searching through the rubble on the northwest corner of the Room, the PCs can easily find a robe of scintillating colors. A DC 40 Search check reveals a ring of invisibility, which, is itself, invisible. This Search check is done by touch, not sight, so PCs do not gain vision bonuses to the check. The ring, cursed by the Room, cannot be removed once worn, unless the wearer dies.

EL: 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, allow the ice devil to be released through more mundane means, like a single fire spell or by reducing the hardness to 5. To decrease the challenge, reduce the frequency of random effects to once every 8 rounds.

THE NINTH RING OF THE PYREFAUST: THE LAIR OF THE ANCIENT DRAGON

On the Great Plateau of the Pyrefaust, above the ever-flowing river of magma, the majestic Ancient Dragon watches over his territory. The Ninth Ring of the Pyrefaust is the tomb of Tyrus, Devourer of Kingdoms. The Ninth Ring contains the plateau which overlooks the entire Pyrefaust. Tyrus lives on top of the plateau, encapsulated in a magically-sustained glacial wall beyond the rocky lip of the formation. With his movement restricted to the plateau, Tyrus occupies himself by enthralling his minions.

Until the recent earthquake, Tyrus was completely trapped in the ice barrier the Celestials had created. The Earthquake cracked a portion of the wall, allowing Tyrus to charm new servants in the Pyrefaust. Through this crack, his entranced minions could personally contact their master. This opening allowed Tyrus to entrance the ogre mage Terr'kaal into casting a great fire ritual to melt the glacial wall. Tyrus gains strength by the day, enthralling servants throughout the Pyrefaust. Soon he will have the entire Pyrefaust in his grasp.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

There are no random encounters in the Ninth Ring.

J72. THE ICE PRISON OF THE ANCIENT DEVOURER

As you creep through the tunnel, you feel an icy chill. The floor is frozen, your footing uncertain. The tunnel narrows as you progress, ice building up on the walls, until it ends at a large crack in a glacial wall. The crack is large enough for a small troll to squeeze through, leaving ample room for you to enter. Beyond the crack, pyres cast dark orange lights through the iced-over walls.

You emerge from the crack in the wall onto a plateau almost entirely covered in ice save for a few barren places towards the south. Suddenly, you hear movement, as if someone were dragging two monoliths across chain mail. The dragging sounds are followed by a ghastly snort, and a cloud of smoke rises from the center of the room.

There, a gargantuan red dragon slumbers in a pile of gold pieces and fine-crafted items. The thought of his pyroclastic breath dissuades you from approaching.

However, all hope is not lost. The red dragon is sleeping and seems unaware of your presence. To the south there is an unlit antechamber to the cavern. To the north, you see another large crack in the glacial wall, about 9 feet tall and 6 feet wide, which seems to lead out of the Pyrefaust into a different part of the Dungeon.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The 'sleeping dragon' in the center of the room is actually a major image of Tyrus, as he lies in wait at the dark southern end of the cavern. He is trying to lure the PCs into the Room, knowing that they will ambush a "sleeping" dragon.

The gold is not an illusion, but only half of the gold in the cavern. Additionally, the gold has an alarm spell cast upon it. When the gold is touched, the red dragon Tyrus (hp 603) is fully alerted to the presence of the PCs, attacking them from the shadows when they least expect it.

Encounter Conditions: Ambush

Tactics: If the PCs elect to take the passage to the north, they avoid combat with Tyrus. The north passage leads back through the glacial wall and out of the Pyrefaust. If the PCs touch the gold or attempt to attack the image of Tyrus, the mirror image disappears, and the real red dragon unleashes mass inflict light wounds on the greedy PCs.

Once combat with Tyrus is inevitable, the dragon casts mirror image upon himself. Tyrus then hovers 30 ft. off the ground with his mirror images and casts magic missiles on the PCs. Tyrus attacks the PCs as a flying 15th-level sorcerer would, hovering at a distance from his opponents and using his complement wizard spells. When he loses half of his hit points, Tyrus descends to the ground and stays grounded. While on the ground, Tyrus assaults the PCs with his breath weapon. If a PC attempts a melee strike on the dragon, Tyrus uses his crush attack to damage the PC. If a PC strikes from Tyrus's flank, the dragon uses his tail sweep to flush the PC forward.

If a PC casts a spell on Tyrus, the dragon responds with greater dispel magic. After the dragon dispels the spell, he retaliates by using word of chaos on the caster.

If Tyrus has fewer than 50 hit points remaining, he casts mass suggestion on the PCs, suggesting that they climb the glacial wall of the plateau and dive into the magma flow because "it is too cold on this plateau." If he succeeds, the PCs must try to climb the walls (Climb check, DC 20). Upon a successful check, the suggested PC climbs the wall. If a PC is at the top of the plateau, about to fling himself the lava river, allow him a final Will save (DC 25). If he is unsuccessful, the PC jumps to his death in the lava river. The killed PC cannot be resurrected.

If Tyrus is killed, the glacial prison melts. The excess water runs off the lip of the plateau and down into the lava river. The evaporating water creates a fog over the Pyrefaust. From this point on in the Dungeon, all remaining encounters in the Pyrefaust are considered to have a Fog encounter condition. The melting glacier fully reveals the exit to the north.

Treasure: Tyrus's lair contains 187,978 gp in various denominations and piles. There are also 345 gemstones, 18 dwarven breastplates, a gemstone of fortification, and twelve huge longswords strewn throughout the Room. Lastly, the dragon possess a false mithril orb, that if placed on the statue in Room VI, shatters and explodes like five beads of force all at once.

173 THROUGH 186. TRAPPED STATUES

Though not a ring, the statues lining the hallways of this Region comprise their own "Section" and require a separate set of rules. While no Random Encounter chart exists for this "Section", refer to the Random Encounters for those outlying rooms.

Each statue is a terrifying angel in a different pose, trapped to injure those who tamper with them. The gems in their eyes are their power source. While the trigger may still exist, the statues are powerless without the gems.

While designed to cast hold person and similar non-lethal spells, years of neglect have altered the initial intent. Lightning bolts, fireballs, and other powerful magic now pours forth from their caustic cores. Unable to turn them off, most inhabitants avoid them completely or send smaller creatures out to trigger them, so they can sneak by while the trap resets.

DISABLE DEVICE

The only way to shut off these traps is to remove the gems. Doing so is not easy. For starters, the PCs must succeed at two DC 50 Disable Device checks (one for each gem). Even if the PC is successful, the trap triggers one last time as the gem falls from the statue's head. If the PC fails the check by more than 10, the trap triggers twice and the PC suffers a -4 to any Reflex save to avoid damage due to his proximity. Lastly, if the PC fails this check by more than 30, he suffers the effect listed above, and is then turned to stone (no save), becoming a permanent fixture.

If the PCs do not remove the gems, but succeed at the required Disable Device check to bypass the trap, the trap does not trigger for 1d4 hours, at which point it automatically resets.

USING TYRUS'S SPELLS

Tyrus does not rush into combat, nor face down 20 opponents at once, nor allow PCs to sneak attack or trick him. He controls the pace of the battle and takes advantage of his enemies' mistakes. To set the pace of this encounter, take time with Tyrus's actions and fluster the PC by forcing them to finish their actions quickly, in less than a minute. Being in the presence of a dragon should unnerve the PCs; being in Tyrus's presence should make them cry for mercy.

When combat ensues, Tyrus has already cast mage armor, protection from energy (cold), mirror image, and spell immunity — lightning bolt, magic missile, vampire touch. Mirror image is cast soon after to disrupt PC attacks.

If the PCs come out strong, Tyrus drops insanity and prismatic spray on spellcasters and other PCs showing off their power. Anyone displaying extreme strength or wielding powerful magic items is hit with feeblemind. If the PCs stand too close together, Tyrus casts two or three chain lightnings until the PCs get the hint.

Mind fog is used on clerics and druids and baleful polymorph turns bards and rogues into mice and wingless sparrows. If the PCs insist on getting too close, fire shield changes their minds, and crushing despair is a great spell late in combat for fighters too stupid to leave the area.

Lower level spells — bear's endurance, blindness/deafness, touch of idiocy, and so on — are reserved for when a wizard gets too close or when Tyrus is out of other spells. Tyrus sees wizards as a threat to his power and targets them first.

If the PCs haven't suffered enough, Tyrus snatches one up in a claw and devours him right in front of the party. Should they beg for mercy, he makes sure the wizards are killed and/or the spellbooks destroyed before he considers letting them go. Fighters and rogues are enlisted as lieutenants, if they don't get uppity. Clerics and paladins seeking mercy are forced to renounce their faith (in front of Tyrus) or be destroyed. Sorcerers and druids are enlisted as familiars.

DENOUEMENT: THE FALL OF THE MASTER

With one final burst of fire, the ancient red dragon topples onto the cavern floor. His fall shakes the plateau, cracking the ice cap above his tomb. He gasps for a final breath, and then the cavern is still. Tyrus, the Devourer of Kingdoms, has been slain.

Above you, the thick glacial wall shatters like a mirror cast to the ground. Chunks of ice melt in midair and fall to the surface of the plateau. Gallons of water crack the rocky lip of the plateau. A waterfall forms, descending into the river of lava to evaporate instantly as it hits the scorching magma. A cloud of steam shrouds the Pyrefaust in thick fog. The inferno is calm, the fires quenched by the melting waters. Tyrus has been destroyed, his control over the Pyrefaust broken.

SECRET DOORS

Not all the statues in this "Section" are traps. Part of the original design was to create a series of obvious traps, so less-obvious secret doors could be used by the celestials to move quickly through the prison. Some of the statues bear the same markings, gems, or poses to discourage would be intruders. However, each secret door has its own unique way of opening.

J73. ANGELIC TRAP

Two statues stand at the north and east corners of the hall. Each, a celestial standing guard is a spear and shield. The sigil of an eagle is in relief on the shield and breastplates of these bronze statues.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A pressure plate in the floor leads to a hold monster trap that emanates from both statues, making the magic more powerful.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The magic from this trap is pure arcane fire. Fire immunity or resistance is powerless against it and PCs with bonuses to saving throws against fire damage are not protected against this trap. The fire cannot combust clothing or other flammable items.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Will save DC of the hold monster trap by 4. To decrease the challenge, replace the hold monster trap with a charm person trap.

J74. SECRET DOOR

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: An angelic statue (like many others in the Region) stands at the end of the hallway and hides a secret door. The other two are trapped and trigger if examined (see below). If the PCs succeed at a DC 35 Search check, they find a bas relief of a star inside a star on the back of the shield. A PC must lie on the ground to actually see the star.

If a lawful good PC touches the star the secret door opens automatically. Otherwise, a PC must succeed at two consecutive DC 30 Disable Device checks to rotate the inner star clockwise and the outer star counter clockwise.

A DC 40 Search check reveals nail clippings (from rast that use this spindly claws to open the door) on the floor around the statue.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: When the PCs open the secret door, the statue spins on its axis, opening the hallways behind it. The PCs can now squeeze (one at a time), through the narrow passage. This secret door cannot be opened from the other side.

It remains open for 5 rounds before closing.

Treasure: Eighteen gemstones of various sizes are scattered on the floor, around the statue. They are worth 15 to 50 gp each.

J75. SECRET DOOR

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: An angelic statue (like many others in the Region) stands at the end of the hallway and hides a secret door. If the PCs succeed at a DC 35 Search check, they find a groove under the shield of the angel. If the PCs cast mage hand or any similar "push" spell on the groove, it opens the secret door.

Alternately, a PC can use thief tools to move a latch inside the groove. Only the thinnest tool works. A DC 40 Open Lock releases the latch and opens the secret door. A failed check by more than 10, causes the tool to bend and become worthless.

A DC 40 Search check reveals nail clippings (from rast that use this spindly claws to open the door) on the floor around the statue.

Terr'kaal's statue has a stream of hot air emitting from the secret door behind it, which the PCs notice with a DC 35 Search check. If the PCs cast a fire spell onto the statue, the statue rotates, revealing the hallway beyond.

J78. FIRE FOR EFFECT

This encounter occurs somewhere between the northern and southern locations indicated on the map.

A haze in the air stings your eyes. A statue in the walkway ahead glares across the front of a niche with its own statue. These angry basalt angels have red gems for eyes, with a third gem in the center of their foreheads. Beneath their gazes, a behir looks confused. It watches the statues and is unaware of your approach.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: An aggressive behir (hp 94) chased an azer through the hallways only to find itself trapped between the statues. While (luckily) the trap has not triggered, the behir moves as slowly as possible to avoid being struck by the fire that is sure to issue forth. If anyone else steps on the pressure plate in front of the statues, spreading fire is triggered from both statues.

♣ Spreading Fire Trap: CR 7; magical device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (fireball, scorching ray, 11th-level wizard, 11d6 fire to nearest target plus 5d6 fire to up to eleven secondary targets, DC 19 Reflex save for half damage); Search DC 31; Disable Device DC 31.

Encounter Condition: Fog 10

Tactics: If anyone moves onto the plate in front of one of the statues' eyes, or forces the behir to move more than 5 ft. in a single round, the spreading fire trap triggers. Each statue is set to go off, so crossfire cuts through the corridor, linking the four statues with rays of fire. This is considered four separate trap effects triggering at one time. Unless someone else stands on the pressure plate, the behir is the primary target of two of the traps, and any PCs within the four statues suffers damage as secondary targets.

The behir does not wish to die, but knows its fate is fixed. If the PCs approach within 15 ft., allow it a Listen or Spot check. If outnumbered, it charges away from the PCs, hoping to take some of them in the wake of the spell's effect.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 11

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, give the behir +30 hit points and have it automatically save against the fire damage of the trap. To decrease the challenge, have the trap already triggered, with the behir's dead body on the pressure plate. Only 100 lbs. or more triggers the plates again.

♣ Behir: CR 8; Huge magical beast; HD 9d10+45; hp 94; Init +1; Spd 40 ft., climb 15 ft.; AC 20, touch 9, flat-footed 19; Base Atk +9; Crp +15; Atk +15 melee (2d4+12, bite); Full Atk +15 melee (2d4+12, bite); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft.; SA Breath weapon, constrict 2d8+8, improved grab, rake 1d4+4, swallow whole; SQ Can't be tripped, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to electricity, low-light vision, scent; AL N; SV Fort +11, Ref +7, Will +5; Str 26, Dex 13, Con 21, Int 7, Wis 14, Cha 12.

Breath Weapon (Su): 20-ft. line, once every 10 rounds, damage 7d6 electricity, Reflex DC 19 half. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Constrict (Ex): A behir deals 2d8+8 points of damage with a successful grapple check. It can make six rake attacks against a grappled foe as well.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a behir must hit a creature of any size with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can attempt to constrict the opponent or swallow the opponent in the following round.

Rake (Ex): Six claws, attack bonus +15 melee, damage 1d4+4.

Swallow Whole (Ex): A behir can try to swallow a grabbed Medium or smaller opponent by making a successful grapple check.

A behir that swallows an opponent can use its Cleave feat to bite and grab another opponent.

A swallowed creature takes 2d8+8 points of bludgeoning damage and 8 points of acid damage per round from the behir's gizzard. A swallowed creature can cut its way out by using a light slashing or piercing weapon to deal 25 points of damage to the gizzard (AC 15). Once the creature exits, muscular action closes the hole; another swallowed opponent must cut its own way out.

A behir's gizzard can hold 2 Medium, 8 Small, 32 Tiny, or 128 Diminutive or smaller opponents.

Skills: Behirs have a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened.

J79. ANGELIC COMMAND

On the floor lies the body of a smoldering dwarf. It looks as though he died recently. A hiss emanates from the floor... or perhaps the walls.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Unlike the other trapped statues in the Region, this one does nothing more than raise an audible alarm. The trap triggers as soon as any movement happens within line of sight of the statue (usually 20 to 120 ft., depending on lighting).

♣ Alarm Trap: CR 1; magic device; visual trigger (true seeing); automatic reset; spell effect (alarm, 16th-level wizard); Search DC 40; Disable Device DC 35.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 4

Tactics: Creatures in the Region have no way to turn off the alarm, but practically every creature within 120 ft. can hear it go off. They are so used to the azer's triggering it, that creatures come to investigate 25% of the time (indicating a Random Encounter).

J80. A DOOMED FIRE DWARF

On the floor lies the body of a smoldering dwarf. It looks as though he recently died, succumbing to fire damage. A hiss emanates from the floor... or perhaps the walls.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: If the PCs are paying attention, they'll notice the dwarf is actually an azer, a creature normally resistant to fire. Therefore, whatever killed him (a delayed blast fireball trap) creates pure arcane fire that supercedes normal fire resistance. This, compounded with the fact that it triggers from a visual cue, makes it a very deadly trap. The hissing the PCs hear is the delayed blast fireball trap resetting itself.

The PCs have 2d6 rounds before the trap triggers again.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 4

Tactics: The magic from this trap is pure arcane fire. Fire immunity or resistance does not work against it and PCs with bonuses to saving throws against fire damage are not protected against this trap.

Treasure: The azer carried six gems worth 185 gp altogether.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Reflex save DC of the delayed blast fireball trap by 4. To decrease the challenge, replace the delayed blast fireball trap with a fireball trap.

J81. ANGELIC THUNDER

Two blackened bronze statues rest in the corners of this hall. Over eight feet tall, they have suffered some wear. Claw marks dig into the bronze and the faces are gouged and torched.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A greater shout trap goes off when a PC steps on a pressure plate before the two statues. The DM should roll randomly to see if the PCs step on the 2 ft. by 2 ft. flagstone set in the floor.

♣ Greater Shout Trap: CR 9; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (greater shout, 16th-level cleric, 16d6 sonic, stunned 1 round, deafened 6d6 rounds, DC 21 Fortitude save half damage, negate stun); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32.

Encounter Condition: [Deep Silence]

Tactics: Because the greater shout from this trap emanates from two different directions, the save DC of the trap is and the duration of the deafening are increased. Afterwards the Room is filled with a zone of silence for 1 hour.

The blackened marks are from the rast who fly passed these traps with ease.

J82. FAKE TREASURE, FIRE TRAP

A pair of heroically-posed angelic statues face one another, each bearing a removable spear and shield. Behind them, golden tabards hang from silver rods. Age has done little to diminish these items.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A delayed blast fireball goes off 5 rounds after anyone moves the shield or spear on either statue, or attempts to remove the fire-proof tabard. The delay gives the PCs the impression that they've succeeded in not triggering a trap.

Although the items appear to be portable, none of the weapons, shields, or tabards can be removed.

♣ [Divine] Delayed Blast Fireball Trap: CR 7; magic device; touch trigger (5 round delay); automatic reset; spell effect (delayed blast fireball, 16th-level wizard, 16d6 fire, DC 17 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 4

Tactics: The magic from this trap is pure arcane fire. Fire immunity or resistance does not work against it and PCs with bonuses to saving throws against fire damage are not protected against this trap.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Reflex save DC of the delayed blast fireball trap by 4. To decrease the challenge, replace the delayed blast fireball trap with a fireball trap.

J83. INERT ANGELS

An angelic statue stands on an ornate pedestal. One arm raised high, spear in hand, its empty eyes look to the heavens. A sigil on its chest is marred by years of abuse.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was once a trapped statue, but now that its gems are gone, the statue is lifeless. Clever PCs should notice that statues without gems do not trigger traps.

J84. ANGELIC WIND

An angelic statue stands atop an ornate pedestal. One arm brandishes a sword, while the other holds a horn. Its eyes are diamonds, shimmering, reflecting light from the hallway.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A whirlwind is set off when the pressure plate in front of the statue has more than 50 lbs. on it. Once triggered the cyclone lasts for 15 rounds. If the PCs are not careful, they can be pushed out of the corridor and into the lava to the north.

♣ Whirlwind Trap: CR 8; magical device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (whirlwind, 15th-level cleric, 3d6 bludgeoning (1d8 per round, thereafter), DC 18 Reflex save negates, 15 rounds); Search DC 33; Disable Device DC 33.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The blast immediately deals damage to Large or smaller creatures and pushing Medium or smaller creatures 60 ft. per round, up to 200 ft., possibly depositing the PCs in the lava flow.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Reflex save DC of the whirlwind trap by 4. To decrease the challenge, replace the whirlwind trap with a shout trap.

J85. ANGELIC LIGHTNING

A pair of haunting angels, wings spread, crouch on smooth stone pedestals, their gazes glinting mercilessly. As you draw closer, the temperature drops dramatically. At the intersection lie the charred remains of an azer.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These two lightning bolt traps are set off when a pressure plate (at the intersection) has more than 50 lbs. on it. The pressure plate triggers multiple lightning bolts coming from the eyes of the statues.

⚡ Lightning Bolt Trap: CR 10; magical device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (lightning bolt, 10th-level wizard, 10d6 electricity, DC 14 Reflex save for half damage); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28. This trap triggers four times before resetting.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The first two blasts are immediate and unavoidable if the trap is unknowingly triggered. The third and fourth lightning bolts trigger 2 rounds later. Allow a DC 20 Listen check; if successful, the PCs hear the crackling of the lightning a few moments before the statue fires again. Allow the alerted PCs a +4 circumstance bonus to their Reflex saves.

Treasure: The slain azer lies on top of a lump of gold that was once 36 gp, but is now slagged together.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Search and Disable Device DCs of the lightning bolt trap by 5. To decrease the challenge, reduce the DCs by -5.

J86. ANGELIC DECAY

A pair of angelic statues stand together, crumbled and worthless.

THE EIGHTH RING OF THE PYREFAUST: THE HIDDEN RING

When the Pyrefaust was forged, a secret chamber was created to house special "guests." Since the climate of the Pyrefaust was inhospitable to its guests some 4,000+ years ago (perhaps ice demons and undead were housed here), the ensuing fires that came so many years later provided a natural barrier for anything buried beneath the dungeon. This tomb would forever hold unspeakable beasts — demons, undead, and worse. Things that plagued the waking world were buried under the stone prison, in a place even the most stern inevitables deemed punishment. However, events unfolded that the celestials could not foresee, forcing them to house one of their own — a dark seductress, named Serratine.

Serratine was once a celestial. Beautiful, she was the most physically perfect amongst the heavenly beings. If the angels could harbor jealousy, they would certainly envy her. But few would know her love. Serratine had given her heart to a pit fiend, named Kator. Unbeknownst to the celestial world, she planned for her true love's escape.

Unfortunately, the celestials became wise to her rouse. Suspecting her of secretly harboring feelings for a devil (an heretical act), Cyrlebrai (Room G5) followed her and when his suspicions were confirmed, he struck, casting Serratine into this tomb and Kator into the deepest hole in the prison.

Centuries passed and the dungeon changed. What was once a prison above, become the home to all manner of fiery beasts. And as the years rolled on, Serratine's soul was twisted and her beauty faded into the unholy beast she swore to fight against. The most beautiful angel in the heavens was no more and in its place, the vampire Serratine plots a come back.

V1. GATEWAY TO THE HIDDEN RING

A low-lying ziggurat rests near the banks of the lava flow. The structure is crumbling, the bottom covered in volcanic residue. At the peak of the ziggurat, the statue of a female celestial with outstretched arms beckons you. The outstretched hands of this once beautiful granite maiden are cupped, as if something once rested there. A plaque at the base almost hurried text engraved in the Celestial tongue.

If the PCs decipher the plague, read the following.

"Five to unbind,
One to complete,
My beloved children,
Rise to their feet."

Upon reading the baffling poetry, the engraving melts off of the plaque and runs down the side of the charred stone, before hissing into steam.

The text returns in one hour.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The ziggurat is the top of the entrance to the Hidden Ring of the Pyrefaust. The outstretching celestial is actually the embodiment of a vampire sealed in the ziggurat; Serratine (Room V8). The statue once held a mithril orb that has since become the property of the azers. If the PCs retrieve it and unlock the five unbinding riddles (Rooms J38, J46, J47, J49, and J53) and place the mithril orb in statue's hands, the statue slides open, revealing a stairs leading down into the earth. Otherwise, only brute strength can open the ziggurat.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 5, Desecration 4, Extreme Heat, Stagnant Air, Unhallowed 6

Tactics: The PCs may break into the top of the ziggurat without fulfilling the requirements of the tomb's seal, by succeeding at a DC 75 Strength check. Nothing short of epic strength or the might of a dragon can open this tomb. However, the ziggurat has a celestial ward cast upon it making it resistant to all spells.

If the PCs attack the statue, it has a hardness of 50 and 1000 hit points.

However, if the PCs fulfill all of the requirements to open the prison (answering the riddles, finding the mithril orb), the statue silently slides away to reveal a granite staircase below. At which point, read the following.

The stench of decay assaults you, stings your eyes with the smell of death and something worse. The darkness below calls out with irresistible allure as if the heavens opened her arms and whispered your name.

Whether the PCs descend the staircase or not, the statue returns to its resting place and closes the tomb shut in 1d6+1 rounds.

V2. THE ENTRANCE OF THE CRYPT

The sulfuric light on the staircase matches the jaundiced lichen on the walls. Echoing corridors branch off to the north and south. On the east wall, a relief portrays celestials and demons locked in battle. At the bottom of the relief, there is a depiction of a fallen celestial. As you spot the bas-relief, you hear a soft voice. "At last, my heroes have come to save me! Come quickly, I am trapped by fiends..."

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bas-relief is trapped with a mass charm monster spell. If the PCs touch the relief or state at the markings for more than 5 rounds, the trap triggers.

♣ Mass Charm Monster Trap: CR 8; magical trap; proximity trigger (3 ft. section of wall); spell effect (mass charm monster, 16th-level wizard, DC 23 Will save negates); Search DC 30; Disable Device N/A

Encounter Condition: Darkness

Tactics: The engravings are a distraction to allow the tomb to seal itself shut without interrupting. Allow PCs DC 25 Reflex saves to escape the tomb if they successfully evaded the mass charm monster trap.

If a PC tries to wedge the tomb door open with an object, the tomb's massive stone door destroys it and allow a DC 35 Strength check if a PC tries to physically hold the door open himself. If the PC succeeds, he holds the door open for 1d4 rounds. If he fails, the door pushes him back into the Room (50% of the time) and outside the tomb (50% of the time). Once the door is sealed, only a wish can re-open the tomb.

Once the PCs have entered the tomb, Serratine senses their presence and begins luring them to her.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the save DC of the hold monster trap by +5. To decrease the challenge, allow the PCs DC 25 Spot checks to notice the hold monster trap.

V3. HALLWAY OF CRYPTS I

In the midst of the hallway are three granite sarcophagi. Each sarcophagi is eight feet long and three feet wide. The soft voice speaks again. "You may calm down. There is no purpose in further ruses. Come in, my heroes. It is not often I receive visitors. I am so lonely in this dreadful place. Come visit me and share conversation with an old soul."

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Each of the sarcophagi held a vampire spawn, that now resides with Serratine. Each sarcophagus is closed, however, and requires a DC 25 Strength check to open. Once a sarcophagus is open, there is a 25% chance of an energy drain trap protecting it, triggering.

♣ Energy Drain Trap: CR 10; magic device; visual trigger (true seeing); automatic reset; Atk +8 ranged touch; spell effect (energy drain, 17th-level wizard, 2d4 negative levels for 24 hours, DC 23 Fortitude save negates); Search DC 34; Disable Device DC 34.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness

Tactics: If an undead creature attempts to open the sarcophagus it is struck with 2d4 "positive" levels, most likely killing it.

Treasure: The first two sarcophagi contain dirt and rags. The last sarcophagus in the row contains dust, a masterwork long sword, a suit of elven chain, and 430 gp worth of jewels and gems.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, place a vampire spawn in each sarcophagus. To decrease the challenge, remove the energy drain trap and the treasure.

V4. HALLWAY OF CRYPTS II

The arching ceiling makes the tomb seem gargantuan. Three lidless sarcophagi line the hall. The stench of death is unmistakable and whispers echo from the walls.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Each of the sarcophagi once held vampire spawn, but the lids were destroyed when the powerful spawn inside burst out. Unlike Room V3, these are not trapped.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness, Echoes 6, Unhallowed 5

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The first and last sarcophagi in the row of three contains dirt, mold, and rags. The middle sarcophagus contains gaudy gems and jewelry worth 132 gp.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

V5. THE STILL CRYPT

The hallway opens into a spacious portion of the catacombs. The light that guided you into this tomb has faded. Six granite sarcophagi are barely visible, their lids removed. To the east of the sarcophagi, the darkness consumes the far wall. Suddenly, the soft voice you heard when you entered returns. "Do not be afraid, revered guests. My children are safe with me."

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There are six empty sarcophagi in the center of the crypt. Each held a vampire spawn at one time, but now they are in Room V8, serving Serrattine. Each sarcophagus is closed and requires a DC 30 Strength check to open. Once a sarcophagus is open, there is a 25% chance of an energy drain trap protecting it, triggering.

• Energy Drain Trap: CR 10; magic device; visual trigger (true seeing); automatic reset; Atk +8 ranged touch; spell effect (energy drain, 17th-level wizard, 2d4 negative levels for 24 hours, DC 23 Fortitude save negates); Search DC 34; Disable Device DC 34.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness, Fear 20, Negative Energy

Tactics: There is a pallor of fear hanging in the Room and PCs that remain, must make a Will save every minute.

Treasure: The first, second, fourth, and sixth sarcophagi in the row of six holds dirt, mold, and rags. The third sarcophagus holds a ring of improved invisibility. The fifth sarcophagus in this row holds 42 gp.

V6. LOVER'S QUARREL

This alcove is lit by candles and torches on a ledge. An open sarcophagus sits in the center of the room. The sarcophagus is oddly shaped and large in comparison to others you have encountered. There is no relief carved on its exterior, but jagged letters can be made out on the lid. The stench of decay fills your nostrils.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The coffin is meant for Serrattine's former demon lover who betrayed her, resulting in her exile to the depths of the Pyrefaust. Serrattine etched the Celestial word for 'lover' on the lid of the sarcophagus to ensure that it was reserved for his body alone. Other than the odd engraving, the sarcophagus possesses no extraordinary qualities.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The candles are in gold holders worth approximately 5 gp each

EL: N/A

V7. THE UNDISTURBED CRYPT OF THE DEMON

Off to the south end of the hallway, you find an alcove with a lit shrine. The rear wall of the alcove has a relief of an efreeti carved in the stone. There is an open sarcophagus here, its massive stone lid propped up against the southeast wall. The sarcophagus is empty. Looking into the sarcophagus, you see two rats frozen solid in blocks of ice. Near the rodents is a brass ring.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The sarcophagus is meant for the remains of Cyrlebrai, should the PCs retrieve him. Serrattine has reserved a special sarcophagus for his eternal rest. The sarcophagus is trapped with a freezing sphere that she intends to trigger once his remains are placed inside.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The trap only triggers on Serrattine's command. Should a fight between she and the PCs spill into this Room, she triggers the sphere as a free action.

Treasure: The brass ring is worth 2 gp.

EL: N/A

V8. THE TOMB OF THE SEDUCTRESS

At the far end of the room is an alcove. Suddenly, candles in the back of the alcove ignite. The burst of light reveals a divine woman sitting atop a granite sarcophagus. She is draped in cloth, relaxing on top of the tomb with a bare leg hanging over the side. Her hair complements her skin and lips. All around are obviously sad attendants in black attire.

She smiles at you, and beckons, whispering, "What took you so long? You may call me Serrattine. Please, take a seat." The beautiful creature smiles at you as she runs her index finger down her forearm.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This is the keeper of the Hidden Ring, the fallen celestial vampire Serrattine (hp 92). The Dark Seductress knew of the PCs' presence as soon as they unsealed her crypt, and guided them to this alcove so she could meet and use them. She waits for them with twelve vampire spawn (hp 29 each), who stand about like servants around a queen.

Serrattine is receptive to the PCs because she plans to enthrall them. Serrattine explains her history as she perceives it, telling the PCs that she was once the most desired Celestial in the Realm. Serrattine was beloved, but she fell in love with a celestial named Kator. Their romance was legendary, but Kator became jealous of her suitors and lobbied the Celestials to cast her from the heavens. Thus, Serrattine was cursed and banished to confinement in the Pyrefaust.

Serrattine expands upon the horrors she has had to endure. Trying to gain sympathy she expands her story, using every chance to gain their sympathy, flirting even with male PCs. Her words are riddled with temptations. Allow her to use Diplomacy to seduce weak-willed PCs.

After Serratine finishes her story about her affair with Kator, allow the PCs a Sense Motive check opposed by Serratine's Bluff check. If successful, the PCs notice that Serratine is lying about the reason for her entombment. In truth, Serratine was seduced by a demon while in the presence of the Celestials. The demon infected Serratine's thoughts and turned her against the Celestials. She and her demon lover were then cast into the Pyrefaust.

Serratine asks the PCs to avenge her. She asks PCs to slay the celestial that betrayed her and to bring his remains back to the crypt so she can entomb them forever without possibility of resurrection. Serratine offers them a ring of three wishes as compensation for their efforts. If the PCs refuse, she casts charm person (with the Still Spell and Silent Spell metamagic feats) and suggestion on the leader, to encourage them. If this fails, the PCs worthless become worthless to her and her spawn attack.

Encounter Condition: Desecration 2, Deep Darkness, Negative Energy, Unhallowed 8

Tactics: If the PCs accept her quest, Serratine offers them to secret to unlocking the crypt. While she cannot leave or open the crypt, the ring of three wishes can if the PCs use one of the wishes (a fair price to pay for the treasure). What the PCs do not know, is that she used up one of the wishes already. Effectively, only one wish remains after the PCs use the ring to open the crypt.

She tells them, once Cyrlabrai is destroyed the enchantment holding the tomb closed fades (this is a lie). She knows that there is NO escape from this prison and she hopes to add the PCs and the remains of Cyrlabrai to her cadre of undead. Their only escape at this point, would be to use the final wish.

If Serratine's charm spells are unsuccessful, she no longer negotiates with the PCs. Combat begins with Serratine's eyes turning from blue to burning yellow, and she exclaims, "You shall be consumed with a vile unrest, grotesque mortal!" Here spawn attack, while she draws back into the shadows.

Serratine casts invisibility on herself, then haste. While invisible, her spawn attack the PCs and keep them occupied while she prepares for their death. She weaves through the PCs, draining them with her bite and touch and using dominate on the most weak-willed of the group. Once visible, Serratine flies to the top of the alcove's ceiling (30 ft.), and casts crushing despair. If successful, Serratine descends upon the closest affected PC and grapples him intent on using her blood drain ability.

If Serratine is reduced to 35 hit points or less, she frenzies, fighting madly for her life. If defeated, her flesh melts off her perfect body and turns black. Her blood streams onto the floor of the crypt, seeking out her spawn. Any surviving vampire spawn wither to nothingness when they come in contact with the black ooze. The ooze then rises up into the sarcophagus and seals again, waiting another 100 years for her to rise. Once she is sealed inside, it cannot be opened again short of a miracle or wish.

Treasure: In Serratine's ashes, the PCs find a ring of three wishes. While she could never open the tomb with it, the PCs can use it to open the crypt door and escape the tomb. Only two wishes remain and opening the tomb requires the PCs expend at least one wish.

EL: 18

REGION K. THE SHALLOWS

Prison cells and traps intended to contain demonic beings once sprawled across this Region, but derro excavations cracked this portion of the dungeon's roof and flooded this Region and Region L with murky water. Only pockets of structures remain beneath this Region's shallow wash, surrounded by dungeon debris and perished demonic prisoners.

During the centuries following the flood, this sediment corrupted the lake as well as the beings swept into the Region (many of whom were originally benign, but have since grown paranoid, and in some cases openly hostile).

Eventually, curious and migratory monsters crept into the dungeon through the mountainous lake caverns, adding to this Region's population. Some were killed or fell victim to the Region's remaining traps, but others flourished. Two rose to power, dominating all others with sheer force or lurking terror.

A covey of hags has taken up residence in the north, in a narrow stretch of partially collapsed dungeon rooms abutting the undead tomb in Region O. These vicious creatures plot to seize control of the Region for themselves, hoping to kill all opposition and enslave all others. Utilizing a wide variety of terror tactics, the hags are feared by nearly all the Region's denizens, who view them as a great lingering evil from before the Wash.

Thorodin, an adult green dragon, lairs in the Region's central moors, lording over all territory within view and preying mercilessly upon any who creep out from the dark waters or the few remaining dungeon corridors. The beast has long since grown too large to leave this place, and — content with its surroundings — remains the fulcrum of "old power" in the Region. He views everything herein as his property, and all creatures herein as his playthings, to be exploited for his cruel pleasure as he sees fit.

Caught between these dark forces are two outposts of displaced aquatic races, both living in the cool western waters near the entrances to Region J. This lake's northern waters are home to a school of merfolk, whose naturally defensive and mischievous personalities now manifest as intense distrust for all outsiders. Though not aggressive, the merfolk can easily be pushed to violence if their people are threatened. They are concerned foremost with their own lives, viewing their water home as a prison they must defend if they are to survive.

To the south, the lake bed rises nearly to the surface, and portions of the original dungeon complex spike out of the sediment. These shallow water chambers are home to a small community of fiercely provincial tritons, who view the structures as their final home. Prone to headstrong outbursts, the tritons do everything in their power to keep outsiders at bay, fighting to the death to control their dwellings.

As the PCs arrive in this Region, its delicate balance of power is waiting to be upset, sparking open conflict. Recent events are responsible for renewed friction between the Region's factions, and the PCs can take advantage of one or more of these situations to thin out the herd. Alternately, the PCs may simply align themselves with one or more factions, choosing to sculpt the Region's ecology — and earn a little respect and loot — before they move on.

If the politics of evil are not the PCs' speed, the party may venture into the prison's original cells to the south, or into the deeper waters to the east, where classic dungeon-crawling dangers may be found.

K1 THROUGH K10. THE HAG DEN

This Section belongs to the hags. Though it is relatively small, it is a fortress of dire traps and dangerous foes. From Room K8 the hag covey plots this Region's ultimate domination, and they've already set their eyes on their first and greatest obstacle: Thorodin the green dragon (Room K36). The hags are not stupid, however, and know that the wyrm could — and would — easily kill them if given the chance. So for now, the covey focuses its efforts on gathering information about Thorodin and acquiring power to use against him.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS FOR THE HAG DEN

1d20	Encounter
1	A psychic 'tug' pulls the PCs toward the crystal of vile attraction (see Room K1 and the sidebar on page 543).
2	A chill wind breezes past the PCs (the invisible hags toying with the new intruders in "their domain"). Drafty.
3–10	Nothing.
11–14	A Medium ravid slips out of the scenery and lurks near the PCs' feet for 1d4 rounds before attacking.
15–18	A patrol of four merrow — working for the hags — ambushes the PCs. They retreat if reduced to 10 hp or less. The hags observe the exchange through a hag's eye one of the merrow wears on a necklace. Ambush.
19	The hag covey arrives, sweeping through the area in flight (see Room K7 for details). All three grapple a single PC and carry him back to their lair (Room K8).
20	The hag covey arrives, sneaking up on the PCs while invisible (see Room K7 for details). They fight only until they have sustained a total of 20 hp of damage between them, then flee toward their lair (Room K8).

K1. KILLING SHORE

This encounter occurs above the surface.

Special Note: If Thorodin, the green dragon, is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this area without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

To the south, this subterranean lakeshore narrows sharply, stretching beyond your line of sight into the darkness. To the east, the ruins of this portion of the dungeon reappear, the shoreline giving way to collapsed granite masonry. Here, a trodden patch of pulverized stone indicates that others have approached from the north. At the shore's edge, three sets of skeletal remains — only two of them human — lie prone, their hands clawing at one spot of sand. Each skeleton's equipment is pitted from years of lakeshore exposure. A strange sense of exhilaration swims through you as you survey the scene.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The remains were once animated skeletons, lured to the lakeshore from Region N by a crystal of vile attraction buried 3 ft. beneath the sand in this Room. The skeletons dug their way into this Region but their path has collapsed, though the PCs may locate it with a successful DC 30 Survival check. No amount of digging clears this passage back to Region N.

Unfortunately for the skeletons and the PCs, this location is a hunting ground for a water naga (Room K11) that has become predatory after spending decades in the lake's corrupted water. Its lair is a cave 40 ft. directly below the lake's edge. The water naga was also drawn here by the crystal of vile attraction, though it has yet to figure this out.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment

Tactics: The water naga casts alarm on the skeletons every morning, and receives a mental warning when anyone approaches within 25 ft. of them (no password deactivates this spell). Thereafter, it casts nondetection and resistance, then swims to just below the lake's surface, where it casts clairaudience/clairvoyance and/or detect undead to determine its next course of action.

Against undead targets, the naga uses disrupt undead and acid arrow. Against all other targets, it casts bull's strength and black tentacles, followed by ghost sound and mage hand to lure the targets to shore, where it grapples them and drags them to its underwater lair. If these tactics fail, the naga relies on daze, ray of enfeeblement, ray of frost, obscuring mist, and hideous laughter, in that order, exiting the water and engaging prey when it is confident it can win the battle.

If reduced to 25 hp or less, the naga retreats to Room K11 to nurse its wounds. If the PCs follow it there, it fights to the death.

Treasure: Treasure accumulated by the water naga is described in Room K11. The PCs may dig up the crystal of vile attraction in 5 minutes, but they must know what they are digging for and where. The armor scraps, pocked shields, and other bits of equipment on the skeletons are worthless.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 2 sorcerer levels to the water naga. To decrease the challenge, have the naga begin this encounter wounded (–20 hp).

check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

Only the easternmost third of what was once a large, strangely shaped chamber remains here, the stone floor buried in places by large chunks of granite masonry from the 25-ft. ceiling. The rest of the chamber now opens directly onto the shore of a wide and dark lake, the floor breaking away at the edge of a deep plunge into the murky water. To the east, a 12-ft. marble archway opens into a narrow shadowed corridor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was once a northern guard post defending against a demonic prison outbreak. As the northern half of this prison block contained some of the most powerful demons, the celestial guards imbued this Room with a vast array of magical properties to protect and heal them, and to alert them if any demons escaped their cells. All but one of these properties was destroyed during the flood.

The arch radiates positive energy and good alignment. If any character or creature of evil alignment steps through the arch, it emits a flash of bright light. Within 20 ft. of the arch, this light operates like a sunburst spell cast by an 18th-level wizard. This also alerts every creature in Rooms K1, K13 through K41, K43 through K46, and K53 to the PCs' presence. The light remains only during the round the trap is activated; thereafter, this Room (and the Region) once again fall into darkness, unless stated otherwise.

◆ Sunburst Trap: CR 8; magical; proximity trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (sunburst 18th-level caster, 6d6/18d6 to undead, plus blindness within 20 ft., DC 18 Ref save for half, avoid blindness); Search N/A; Disable Device N/A.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness

Tactics: Thorodin (Room K36) recognizes the light for what it is — an alert that someone or something has ventured out onto the shoreline. He takes flight and sails to this Room, arriving in 1d4+1 rounds. If the PCs or any other characters or creatures are visible when Thorodin arrives, he hovers over them and attempts to snatch them in his claws, mauling them to death and dropping them into the northern lake waters. If no targets are visible, Thorodin flies counterclockwise around the lake at $\frac{1}{2}$ his standard speed (75 ft. per round), looking for other prey, then returns to his lair.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, double the damage from the sunburst trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the sunburst trap's damage to 3d6 points within 10 ft.

THE CRYSTAL OF VILE ATTRACTION

This cursed item appears to be a 3-in. shard of rock crystal. A successful DC 20 Appraise check estimates its value at around 50 gp. It is cool to the touch and radiates strong magic of no specific school. The crystal attracts creatures within 100 ft., inciting a sense of euphoria in those of neutral and good alignments and irritating those of evil alignments. A sense of direction accompanies these feelings, which increase as the creature approaches. Those within 50 ft. must make a DC 15 Will save or be compelled to approach. This DC rises to 20 within 25 ft. Anyone within 10 ft. of the crystal must make a DC 25 Will save or be compelled to take possession of it by any means, up to and including fighting friends and allies. Burying the crystal subdues its effect, reducing each of its ranges by $\frac{1}{2}$, rounded down.

Within the World's Largest Dungeon, the crystal of vile attraction has one additional effect — whenever the DM rolls a Random Encounter, he adds +2 to the result of his encounter table roll (with all results higher than 20 becoming 20).

K2. ALARM ARCH

This encounter occurs above the surface.

Special Note: If Thorodin, the green dragon, is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this area without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). K3. MOSAIC ROOM

This encounter occurs above the surface.

Special Note: If Thorodin, the green dragon, is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this area without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

This room was once fully tiled in attractive mosaic patterns, but its southeastern corner and part of the hallway leading east have collapsed. These parts of the room open onto a dense bog that extends over 100 ft. into the distance. Several yards of muck extend onto the mosaics, obscuring all but one enormous image of a tusked boar's head upon the northern floor and a wide depiction of a fanged viper on the northern wall. The black shadow of another image that once adorned the eastern wall is largely lost to time and the destruction that ravaged this area.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This room was custom-built to hold a demon of particular interest to the celestials. The demon, who played a pivotal part in an ancient war against the celestials, was obsessed with architectural art — so much so that he was compelled to touch it whenever possible. Each of the mosaics here was set to trigger a trap when approached or touched, an eternal torture for the demon in question.

Encounter Condition: Flooded (southern half only)

Tactics: All but three of the mosaic-traps have been destroyed. A spear trap is embedded in the boar mosaic, and is triggered by anyone walking over the northern half of the floor. This trap's "spear" looks like a giant boar's tusk, and impales anyone hit by the trap to the room's ceiling for 1 hour, after which it retracts into the floor. The tusk has a hardness of 10 and 10 hit points, and may be forcefully retracted with a successful DC 20 Strength check. Each attempt to break or retract the tusk inflicts an additional 1d8 damage to anyone impaled upon it. This trap is disabled by unhinging a spring 6 in. beneath the floor.

♦ Spear Trap: CR 6; magical; location trigger; automatic reset; +20 ranged (3d8/x3 crit); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30.

A poison gas trap is embedded in the viper mosaic, and is triggered by anyone passing within 5 ft. of the northern wall. This trap is disabled by threading an extended thief's tool into the masonry, poking a hole into the back of the gas cell. This leaks the gas into an air pocket elsewhere in the dungeon.

♦ Poison Gas Trap: CR 8; magical; proximity trigger; automatic reset; no attack roll necessary — DC Fortitude save, 2d6 Con/2d6 Con; Search DC 35; Disable Device DC 35. This poison is magical in nature and cannot be transferred from the wall onto any other object.

A telekinesis trap is embedded in the unadorned ceiling, and is triggered by anyone passing through without touching any surface (e.g. by levitating). When triggered, this trap hurls the victim toward the southern wall. Since the trap that was embedded in the southern wall has been destroyed, the victim sails into the bog, landing in Room K25. If the victim attempts to catch himself on the wall before he sails out into the bog, he must make a successful DC 18 Reflex save. If the victim sails into the bog, he suffers 2d6 damage, which may be reduced by $\frac{1}{2}$ (rounded down) with a successful DC 18 Reflex save.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add filth and debris to all surfaces, increasing the DCs of all Search checks made to locate the traps by 3. To decrease the challenge, add several corpses on the floor, providing a warning of the traps.

K4. RAVID NEST

This encounter occurs above the surface.

Special Note: If Thorodin, the green dragon, is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this area without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

The corridor extends an extra 5 ft. into the northern stone at this juncture, which is open onto the bog. The northern extension contains the remains of an ancient fireplace used to warm those stationed in this room long, long ago. Several wisps of flame dance over the soil heaped within what's left of this chamber.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This is the lair of a pair of ravid (hp 16 each) subjugated and used as an early warning system by the hags in Room K8. When the PCs arrive, one ravid lurks inside the northern wall, in the fireplace's chimney, and the other is wandering the Region, but is assumed to be nearby if fighting begins.

Encounter Condition: Positive Energy

Tactics: Though on edge (due to the corrupted silt in this Region), the ravids do not attack on sight. They are not fully trained, largely because the hags have not dedicated enough time to the process. The ravids only observe the PCs unless they attack, disturb the rubble, or open the eastern door (in which case they react on instinct, animating one object to attack the PCs each round). Each time a ravid animates an object in this room, roll 1d20. With a result of 1–4, the animated object is a ring of shooting stars, which directs spark shower in a random direction.

The first ravid uses its positive energy lash first and follows up with standard melee attacks. Its mate arrives 1d6 rounds into the combat, after which the creatures attempt to flank the PC who has inflicted the most damage against either of them.

If either ravid is reduced to 15 hp or less, both flee toward Room K7.

Treasure: The wisps of flame are caused by a ring of shooting stars chained to the floor and buried in the rubble. The hags left this item here so it would create a field of Positive Energy that the ravids would find comfortable. If the PCs root around in the rubble on the floor, they find the ring with a successful DC 25 Search check.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the ring of shooting stars automatically activate during the first round of combat and have the second ravid arrive after 1d4 rounds. To decrease the challenge, remove 6 animated objects.

♦ Ravid: CR 8; large outsider (extraplanar); HD 9d8+27; hp 58; Init +3; Spd 20 ft., fly 60 ft. (perfect); AC 26, touch 8, flat-footed 26; Base Atk +9; Grp +18; Atk+14 melee (2d6+5 plus positive energy, tail slap) or +14 melee touch (positive energy, tail touch); Full Atk+14 melee (2d6+5 plus positive energy, tail slap) and +12 melee (1d6+2 plus positive energy, claw); or +14 melee touch (positive energy, tail touch) and +12 melee touch (positive energy, claw touch); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA animate objects, positive energy lash; SQ darkvision 60 ft., flight, immunity to fire; AL N; SV Fort +9, Ref +7, Will +7; Str 21, Dex 8, Con 17, Int 7, Wis 12, Cha 14.

Skills and Feats: Escape Artist +10, Hide +7, Survival +12, Listen +12, Move Silently +10, Spot +12, Survival +12, Use Rope +0 (+2 with bindings); Improved Initiative, Improved Natural Attack (tail slap), Lightning Reflexes, Multiattack.

Animate Objects (Su): Once per round, a random object within 20 feet of a ravid animates as though by the spell animate objects (caster level 20th). These objects defend the ravid to the best of their ability, but the ravid isn't intelligent enough to employ elaborate tactics with them.

Flight (Su): A ravid can cease or resume flight as a free action. A ravid that loses this ability falls and can perform only a single action (either a move action or an attack action) each round.

Positive Energy Lash (Su): A ravid can make a touch attack or hit with a claw or tail slap attack to infuse a target with positive energy. The energy produces an unpleasant tingle in living creatures, and against undead foes (even incorporeal ones) it deals 2d10 points of damage.

Note: A ravid has the Multiattack feat even though it does not have the requisite three natural weapons.

K5. THE SHACKLED WYRM

Special Note: Thorodin should be able to see into this room, but the thick vine curtain keeps it hidden, blended with the broken dungeon wall. The green dragon makes no Spot checks when the PCs are located here.

Sheltered behind a tall curtain of thick vines, this shattered room was once an audience chamber, with broken staircases leading up to cracked and in some cases fallen balconies and observation platforms. The ceiling reaches 60 ft. in places, covered in creeping vines invading from the bog to the south. Strangely, the rubble in the room has been gathered into a flat pile at the center of the floor — a pile that seems to have been compacted by a great weight at some point.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: With a successful DC 25 Survival check, PCs with the Track feat recognize the scent of a dragon in this room. Lightspar, a young adult bronze dragon (hp 189), lairs here against her will. The hags subdued her shortly after the flood when she was very young, stealing her first clutch of eggs and bartering them to the driders in Region M for one of their monstrosities, which subsequently became Anguish and Madness. The hags bound Lightspar to this room with a permanent dominate monster ritual (from a staff of domination) — initially to keep her at bay, but she was eventually to become another trained guardian.

Believing that her children could not survive without her, and suffering from a bizarre form of cabin fever after centuries in the same room, Lightspar has gone mad, believing the hags to be her sisters-in-human-form. Eventually, she took a form similar to that of her captors — a form she is now trapped in due to a second hag ritual. In her madness, Lightspar also twisted standard draconic behavior. With no access to treasure, for instance, she gathers the room's rubble and piles it up in a bed upon which she sleeps.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: In addition to trapping Lightspar in human form, the hags' second ritual releases her when anyone enters this room. When the PCs arrive, Lightspar is curled up on a balcony 40 ft. above the western entrance. Her transformation shatters the balcony, and anyone entering from the west suffers 1d6 damage from falling masonry. Each affected character may make a DC 20 Reflex save to reduce this damage by half.

Unfamiliar with her draconic form for many decades, Lightspar collapses onto the floor, inflicting an additional 6d6 damage to each character in the room. Each affected character may make a DC 22 Reflex save to reduce this damage to half.

Lightspar assumes the party are intruders sent by the green dragon Thorodin to kill her, or to kill her "sisters," and attacks with impunity. She is out of practice as a dragon, however, and fails to muster her breath weapon 50% of the time, suffers a -6 competence penalty to attack rolls when hovering, and cannot remember her spells.

The PCs may recognize that the dragon is insane (however, having never met a bronze dragon, they have no frame of reference). Should they show mercy, not attacking her for 2 consecutive rounds, or should they take any submissive or comforting action and succeed with a DC 40

Diplomacy check, Lightspar relents, falling back onto her haunches to hear them out. She is depressed, and desperate to find her children, which in her mind have yet to hatch. The hags have convinced her that the green dragon Thorodin stole her eggs to hatch as lieutenants in his "unholy army." Lightspar often stands at the vine curtain, watching the green dragon upon its boggy mount and plotting how to destroy him. "Perhaps," she says to the PCs, "we can help each other..."

Lightspar proposes that the PCs kill Thorodin, or at the very least slip into his lair and steal back her eggs. In exchange, she offers to introduce them to her sisters, "champions of this far-reaching realm." If the PCs inquire further about Lightspar's sisters, she claims they are questing for a way to free her, and will return soon. She describes them as three enchanting dragonesses who travel in human form — female adventurers of unearthly beauty (which is how her deranged mind sees them).

The PCs may ask to make a Sense Motive check during this conversation. With success against a DC 23, they know that Lightspar is not entirely sane, but they cannot tell which parts of her story are accurate. With success against a DC 38, they know that Lightspar is unstable, her story not wholly true, and her need for companionship entirely unhealthy for a beast of her stature. Increase these DCs by +5 or +10 if the PCs have little or no frame of reference to base their opinions on. The PCs may only make this check if they specifically ask to make it.

Treasure: Lightspar wears a hag's eye strung on a chain around her neck. So long as the PCs keep this item, the hags in Room K8 know where they are at all times. If the PCs destroy this item, the PCs hear a distant shriek from the east as each hag suffers 1d10 damage, and Bile the green hag is struck blind for the next 24 hours.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, remove the penalties listed under Tactics. To decrease the challenge, increase the chance that Lightspar's breath weapon fails to 75%.

Skills and Feats: Disguise +13, Hide +7, Knowledge (nature) +23, Listen +25, Move Silently +10, Perform (sing) +12, Search +23, Spot +25, Survival +23, Swim +27; Alertness, Endurance, Flyby Attack, Improved Initiative, Improved Natural Attack (bite), Improved Natural Attack (claw), Multiattack.

Blindsense (Ex): Dragons can pinpoint creatures within a distance of 60 feet. Opponents the dragon can't actually see still have total concealment against the dragon.

Breath Weapon (Su): Lightspar has two types of breath weapon, a 80 ft. line of lightning, 10d6 electrical damage DC 23 Reflex save for half, and a 40 ft. cone of repulsion gas. Creatures within the cone must succeed on a DC 23 Will save or be compelled to do nothing but move away from the dragon for 1d6+5 rounds. This is a mind-affecting compulsion enchantment effect. Due to her state of mind, her breath weapons fail 50% of the time.

Confinement (Su): Lightspar is confined by a powerful ritual that prevented her from moving more than 60 ft. from the northern door from this room.

Frightful Presence (Ex): Lightspar can unsettle foes with her mere presence in her natural form. The ability takes effect automatically whenever the dragon attacks, charges, or flies overhead. Creatures within a radius of 150 feet are subject to the effect if they have fewer HD than the dragon. A potentially affected creature that succeeds on a DC 23 Will save remains immune to that dragon's frightful presence for 24 hours. On a failure, creatures with 4 or less HD become panicked for 4d6 rounds and those with 5 or more HD become shaken for 4d6 rounds. Dragons ignore the frightful presence of other dragons.

Keen Senses (Ex): A dragon sees four times as well a human in shadowy illumination and twice as well in normal light. It also has darkvision out to 120 feet.

Water Breathing (Ex): Lightspar can breathe underwater indefinitely and can freely use its breath weapon, spells, and other abilities while submerged.

Alternate Form (Su): Lightspar can assume any animal or humanoid form of Medium size or smaller as a standard action three times per day. This ability functions as a polymorph spell cast on itself at its caster level, except that the dragon does not regain hit points for changing form and can only assume the form of an animal or humanoid. The dragon can remain in its animal or humanoid form until it chooses to assume a new one or return to its natural form.

Inactive (Ex): Years of inactivity have rendered Lightspar's wings almost useless. When hovering, she suffers a -6 competence penalty to her attack rolls and Reflex saves.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—Speak with animals.

Spells: If Lightspar were freed from her confinement and her depression, she would again be able to cast spells as a 5th level sorcerer.

* Lightspar's mental abilities have been degraded by her confinement. Should she be freed, she would recover in 3d20 years.

K6. NECROJADE PRISON

Each door to this room is magically sealed, requiring a DC 30 Use Magic Device check to unlock. Opening each door requires the PCs to read a complex series of runes surrounding it, and utter the words displayed in reverse order.

As you finish reading the rune-phrases aloud, a deep rumble comes from beyond the heavy door. Moments later, you hear a hollow stone collision and a hissing sound. The door swings open, every edge grinding against the long-sealed frame. Beyond is a spherical room filled to a depth of 3 ft. with a slow-moving haze of green-black gas. Four thick seams on the walls bisect the room from floor to ceiling, a pair of manacles mounted into the ceiling point at which they converge at right angles. Below the manacles is a suit of golden armor around a pile of bones.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: With a successful DC 25 Spot check, the PCs notice that the bones are chipped, splintered, and in some cases broken, as if struck repeatedly and from many different angles by a heavy, dull blade. They notice this automatically if they inspect the bones up close.

Also, as the PCs enter the room, they find the floor to be flat, even though they can see the bottom of the sphere beneath them. If they investigate this further, they discover a flat plane of transparent force hovering 1 ft. above the sphere's lowest point, and a 1-in. gap between the force-floor and the walls on all sides. (This allows the seams to spin around the room's edges, though the PCs shouldn't know this yet.)

This Room was once prison to a powerful zombie lord, and still contains traps specifically designed to prevent its escape. The gas is a powerful poison called necrojade, which is heavier than air (the reason it settles to the floor).

The cell contains two traps, each designed to play upon the zombie lord's insatiable hunger and plodding mobility. First, the manacles are enchanted to recognize ambulatory visitors, and attempt to grapple the first PC to approach within 10 ft. of them (including any PC reaching for the armor or searching the floor near the remains).

Second, the "seams" along the Room's vertical axes are a spinning blade trap. They begin slowly revolving in opposite directions around the Room's edge when the manacles animate, and quickly pick up speed. Any PC leaving the Room once the blades are in motion must make a DC 25 Jump check or suffer 1d10 damage and be pushed back into the Room. Anyone leaning on the walls automatically suffers this damage.

The blades do not stop spinning until 100 years after the manacles become inert, so the PCs are unlikely to wait out this trap. Further, since the necrojade applies a progressively higher penalty to Jump checks, the longer the PCs remain in the room, the less chance they have to escape.

♣ Troll Manacle Trap: CR 5; magical; proximity trigger; +20 melee (2d6/x2 plus 1d8 acid); Search DC 20; Disable Device N/A. Note: The manacles have a Strength score of 20 and always attempt to grapple the target, inflicting their melee damage with any successful hit. While the manacles pin a target, they inflict no damage upon him. Further, the manacles have a hardness of 10 and 10 hit points, and regenerate 1 point of hardness and 3 hit points per round. Any attack upon the manacles inflicts full damage upon any character shackled in them.

Treasure: The armor is gold-washed half plate engraved with a royal signet. Also, if they search the floor and make a successful DC 25 Search check, they find a matching helmet. Together, the helmet and armor are worth 2,000 gp to a collector.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, fill the Room with gas, preventing the PCs from noticing the armor, bones, etc. Further, have the poison gas spill out of the Room when any door is opened, forcing all PCs within 10 ft. of the door to save against the necrojade poison before they take any other action. To decrease the challenge, withhold the gas until the PCs trigger the cell's defenses.

NECROJADE POISON

The celestials designed this poison late in the dungeon's construction (well after Region O was complete), and could only implement it in Room K6 as part of an elaborate trap to hold the rampaging remains of a religious leader who fell to undead legions.

Necrojade poison seeps through the skin into the bones. When it seeps into undead remains, it increases their weight until the creature can no longer move. Necrojade cannot destroy undead; it merely immobilizes them. Coincidentally, the poison has the same effect against living beings.

Fortunately, the celestials conceived the poison to be repelled by all things holy, most notably themselves. The gas withdraws 3 in. away from any holy objects or blessed characters, parting to let them pass through it untouched. Even characters of lawful good alignment are moderately protected, gaining a +4 sacred bonus on Fortitude saves made to resist the poison.

PCs infected with necrojade poison may ignore its effects for 1 hour after he is targeted with a prayer, cure serious wounds, hallow, healing circle, holy aura, holy word, mass heal, or miracle spell or spell effect.

♣ Necrojade Poison — Contact, Fort save DC 20, initial/secondary damage 1d6 Con. For every 4 points of Con damage inflicted, the victim suffers a -5 ft. speed penalty and a -2 circumstance penalty with all skills affected by an armor check penalty. Further, so long as the victim remains in contact with the poison, he must make a Fort save once per hour to avoid once again suffering the poison's secondary damage.

Any living being killed by necrojade poison becomes a wight.

K7. THE MOANING POOLS

This encounter occurs above the surface.

You reach an intersection, another doorway facing you from each compass point. A shimmering veil of fluid ripples in each doorway, including the one you just opened. A low, mournful moan is coming from one of the doorways.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: No amount of concentration discerns more information about the moaning — all the PCs can tell is that it's coming from all four exit portals. This is true even after the PCs enter the room.

Entering the room through the veil has no effect upon the PCs, nor does it disorient them. They merely pass through what appears to be a thin layer of glistening liquid (it's actually a magical effect — it doesn't feel wet, nor does it dampen the PCs or their clothes).

This room is the outermost defense for the hags' lair (Room K8), but contains no monsters or traps. Instead, each of its doorways magically alters anyone who exits through it.

If a PC exits through the north portal, he is made invisible for 1d4 minutes. If a PC exits through the south portal, he is granted the benefits of the fly spell as cast by a 3rd-level sorcerer for 1d4 minutes. If a PC exits through the east portal, nothing happens. If a PC exits through the west portal, the hags immediately become aware of his approach toward their lair. Once a PC exits this room through any portal, he may not re-enter the room for 10 minutes (the fluid-veil acts as an impenetrable barrier during this time).

The hags exit their lair through whatever portal best suits their current needs or mood.

The entire covey is required to fuel the veils' magic. If one or more of the hags is killed, the veils disappear and this room no longer has any effect upon passers-through.

K8. HAG COVEY LAIR

This encounter occurs above the surface.

Beyond a short corridor, this room opens up considerably, showing clear signs of recent excavation. While the floor remains level, the walls are rough, as if dug out several feet from their original perimeter. In the enlarged chamber are four tall stone obelisks, each towering 20 ft. high, surrounding the room's central point. Around the obelisks are low tables and high shelves cluttered with books, jewelry, clothes, dolls, and other amusements, all caked in pus and blood. Above, the ceiling extends out of sight, the walls tapering off in a dome-like fashion. At the dome's lowest edges, the rugged stone walls gives way to patches of irregular grey-pink fungus. You feel something move somewhere in the room, the ground trembling beneath its weight.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The hags plotting to take over this Region lair in this twisted sanctuary. Modeled on a little girl's playroom, this chamber contains all the hags' trophies, ranging from cherished but valueless heirlooms from their pre-dungeon travels to items stolen from the Region's other inhabitants or made to mock them. Every 15 minutes the PCs spend searching the tables and shelves, roll on the following table to determine what they find (no Search check is required to find these things).

1d20

Trophy

1-2

A shelf stacked high with rotting eyeballs.

3-4

A table where someone was brutally killed and their body removed. Bizarre ritualistic symbols were etched in the blood before it dried.

5-6

A wall upon which many rope dolls hang, several of them with fish tails, one a dragon, all mangled or disfigured. The PCs are allowed a DC 15 Intelligence check. If successful, they identify several creatures they have previously encountered elsewhere in the Region.

7-8

A shelf of thick, heavy books (each weighing 3 lb.). All are written in Common. Each entry describes the final moments of a merrow who ventured out into the bogs, looking for something (that is not identified). The entries are written in first-person, even though they all describe the grisly deaths of the merrow involved. (The hags wrote these entries as they observed the merrows' actions through hags' eyes.)

9-12

The PCs think they see something beneath the slime, but it's just a trick of the light.

13-14

A table covered with a bloody sheet. Beneath the sheet is a huge pile of sparkling gems — which abruptly collapses in all directions and skitters into the corners of the room, vanishing through tiny holes dug in the stone. The fleeing "gems" leave behind the skeletal remains of a merfolk corpse, the bones scoured of flesh and pitted from tiny bite marks. (The "gems" are in fact a strange insect indigenous to this Region of the dungeon — see Room K74).

15-16

An armoire in which many pieces of jewelry are hung or placed with loving care. None of the pieces has been moved in centuries, and all that keeps them intact is the slime; once removed, they crack to pieces or crumble to dust.

17-18

A pitch-black rocking horse painted to look like it's bleeding from several deep side wounds. If the PCs look closely, they see the "toys" eyes move about frantically, consumed with fear. (This is actually a nightmare pony frozen in place by ritual magic and hammered onto a wooden rocking frame. The nightmare is cognizant of its surroundings, and has been for the 192 years since its capture.)

19-20

The necklace of choking (see the sidebar on page 549), lying on the floor in front of one of the stone obelisks.

The hags' most prized trophies are trapped in the "fungus" on the ceiling. Each time the hags kidnap and kill one of this Region's inhabitants, they bring the body back here and mount it into the fungus, which is becoming a grotesque fresco of corpses. The fungus holds them in place, but any disturbance greater than poking them causes 1d4 to fall away from the ceiling to land with dull, squishy thuds upon the stone floor or splay in horrifying positions over the obelisks, tables, and shelves.

When the PCs enter this room, the trembling they feel is the heavy gait of a merrow (aquatic ogre) mage (hp 39). Unless they immediately declare that they are all attempting to Move Silently, the merrow notices them and casts invisibility on himself. The next time he can act, he remembers the hags' orders and casts darkness over the center 20 ft. of the room, which encompasses the inward face of each stone obelisk.

These obelisks are the hags' resting places, where they recuperate after each foray into the Region. Each of the obelisks is hollow and filled with the same mixture of pus and blood that covers everything else in this room. Looting an obelisk requires a successful DC 30 Use Magic Device check. The PC must place both hands upon the obelisk's surface and utter the word "sleep" in pidgin Common/Giant. Alternately, a PC may strike the obelisk to break it open. This requires a successful DC 20 Strength check or reducing the obelisk to 1/2 its full hp (rounded down), at which point the obelisk cracks open, spilling its contents into the center of the room. Each obelisk has a hardness of 8 and 30 hit points.

While a hag floats in one of the obelisks, she recovers hit points, spells, and temporary ability damage at twice the standard rate, and recovers permanent ability damage as if it is temporary ability damage. The obelisks support and heal the hags, and if any other being enters one, the fluid acts like acid, inflicting 1d6 points of damage per round of immersion (in addition to the effects of drowning).

Encounter Condition: Unhallowed 2

Tactics: After casting invisibility and darkness, the merrow mage leaps into the patch of darkness between the obelisks. If any hags remain alive, they are sleeping in the obelisks, and are awakened by the merrow mage's landing. They can see out of the obelisks in any direction (as if the stone were transparent) and cast spells before leaving their hiding places. Jointly, they cast animate dead twice upon the ceiling, and unless they've been encountered elsewhere in the Region within the last 12 hours, each casts expeditious retreat as well.

Bane (hp 76), the annis hag, casts mage armor, cat's grace, blur, and displacement, in that order. If Bane believes she will be able to attack a PC during the round when she leaves the obelisk, she casts true strike as well.

Bile (hp 80), the green hag, casts invisibility, minor globe of invulnerability, protection from good, resistance, and shield. If Bile has time, she casts mage hands to fling objects at the PCs before leaving her obelisk.

Malice (hp 29), the sea hag, has no spells to cast, and simply waits until her sisters leave their obelisks.

As one of this covey's powers, the hags are mentally aware of each others positions and actions within 100 ft., and those which complete spellcasting early wait for the others to finish so they can all exit the obelisks at the same time. Those with extra time hold off casting short-duration spells until the last possible moment.

If a PC moves to an adjacent square next to one of the obelisks, the hag within may drop out of hiding early, gaining an attack of opportunity (per the DM's discretion). A hag only attempts this if the potential benefits outweigh the spell effects she and her sisters could otherwise gain by hiding, and only if she is reasonably certain the move won't result in grievous injury to her or one of her sisters.

Once the hags leave the obelisks, they attempt to remain hidden within the darkness, coming together to cast animate dead on the corpses plastered to the ceiling and force cage around the merrow mage and any melee opponent (as much to ensure the merrow doesn't run as to keep the PC occupied). Thereafter, the hags split up, attacking the PCs in their own unique fashions.

Bane, the annis hag, casts vampiric touch and engages the PCs directly, attacking every other round so long as she can regain cover or slip out of sight in-between. When this becomes impossible, she leaps directly into the fray, striving to keep the PCs away from her sisters.

Bile, the green hag, levitates above the combat, casting magic circle against good, hold person, scare, and dispel magic as appropriate. If she runs out of spells to cast, she levitates to the ceiling and dislodges 1d4 corpses over the combat during each round, inflicting a -4 circumstance penalty upon the attack rolls, skill checks, and Reflex saves of any characters—including the merrow mage or Bile's sisters—in a square underneath a falling corpse or in any adjacent square.

Malice, the sea hag, sneaks about the room, attempting to get the drop on one or more PCs with her horrific appearance and evil eye abilities, then falls back and casts magic missile before finally engaging in melee combat.

Bane fights to the death. Bile and Malice fight until they are reduced to 15 hp each, at which point they flee to Room K7, where they pass through the southern mirror portal. Thereafter, they may only be encountered randomly.

The merrow mage remains within the darkness until it dissipates, until 3 rounds pass during which he cannot attack any targets from a position within the darkness (even with spells), or until the combat ends. If reduced to 10 hp or less he attempts to flee, incurring the wrath of the nearest hag, who spends one round trying to kill him before turning her attention back to the PCs.

Finally, as the corpses upon the ceiling awaken and stir, they break free of their sticky fungus bonds, dropping to the floor and suffering 6 hp of damage each (describe these wounds for flavor—some corpses break fragile limbs, while others' torsos explode). Despite these injuries, the creatures rise and shamble toward the PCs (more as a distraction than a serious threat).

This encounter should either be the blow-out conclusion to a major plot threat within this Region, or an unexpected—and potentially devastating—slam-bang combat fest that leaves the PCs wondering what they got themselves into.

Treasure: Beyond the necklace of choking (which can be found by searching the Room), the only treasure to be found here is the ring of darkvision worn by the merrow mage, although he doesn't know what it does. Unfortunately, this ring is fitted for a Large creature and does not resize for the PCs. With a week in a major city, the PCs could spend 1,000 gp to have the ring "fixed" by a magic craftsman.

If the PCs succeed at a DC 50 Search check, they find a staff of domination in the muck and mire, buried so Lightspar would never see it.

EL: 14

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one merrow mage. To decrease the challenge, remove the merrow mage.

Hag Eye: A hag eye is a magic gem created by a covey. It appears to be nothing more than a semiprecious stone, but a gem of seeing or other such effect reveals it as a disembodied eye. Often, a hag eye is worn as a ring, brooch, or other adornment. Any of the three hags who created the hag eye can see through it whenever they wish, so long as it is on the same plane of existence as the hag. A hag eye has hardness 5 and 10 hit points. Destroying a hag eye deals 1d10 points of damage to each member of the covey and causes the one who sustained the greatest damage to be blinded for 24 hours.

Single Actions Only (Ex): Zombies have poor reflexes and can perform only a single move action or attack action each round. A zombie can move up to its speed and attack in the same round, but only if it attempts a charge.

NECKLACE OF CHOKING

The hags created this necklace from several strands of coral collected from the corrupted reef (Room K17). It is attractive, and a successful Appraise check (DC 15) estimates its value at between 90 and 110 gp. The necklace tightens to fit snugly around its wearer's neck. Every so often the wearer feels it writhe, as if it's slowly crawling around his neck, like a worm eating its own head. At any time, when the word "blue" is spoken in Common, the necklace begins constricting around the wearer's neck, strangling him per the standard drowning rules. This process continues until the necklace is removed or the word "pink" is spoken in Common.

The necklace has a hardness of 2, 15 hit points, and a Break DC of 20.

K9. GRAY RENDER'S LAIR

This encounter occurs above the surface.

Splashes of azure show through thick coats of mud and ash upon the walls of this long room. In the northwestern corner, above a pile of moss and rotting seaweed, something glitters in the room's scant light. Beside it, something moves — something big. As your hands dart to your sheaths, bows, and spell pouches, a hulking figure rises from the shadows. Nearly 9 ft. tall, it lumbers with the weight of a giant as it approaches a pyramid of boulders piled several feet away.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A gray render (hp 125) bonded with the hag covey in Room K8, years ago. When the render met Bane the annis hag, she grappled it to a standstill, a feat which forged a strong bond between them. Thereafter, the render left the hags small trophies, such as sea cat entrails and pretty rocks (like a cat leaving a dead bird). Recognizing the render's potential, the hags encouraged it to lair here and charged it with protecting the southern entrance to their lair (Room K28).

Encounter Condition: Fearless, Poor Footing 4

Tactics: Whenever the render encounters something new, his first impulse is to smash it against the ground to see what happens. His first action here, however, is to lob a boulder and see what happens. Thereafter, he grabs a recently uprooted bog tree up off the ground and charges the PCs, swinging at them at the end of his movement. Finally, he alternates between smashing at the PCs with his club and attempting to grab one of the intruders so he can throw them against a nearby wall.

The gray render is extremely loyal to the hags and fights every combat as if their lives depend upon on him.

Treasure: Two of the boulders are quartz geodes with a value of 300 gp each to a jeweler. Unfortunately, each weighs 100 lbs. For each full day the PCs spend digging into the walls, they find another geode with the same value and weight.

Additionally, the gray render wears a hag's eye on a necklace, a gift from the covey. The render cherishes this item, and lashes out at any who touch or steal it. Unknown to him, the covey observes all of his actions through the gift — and all of the PCs' actions as well, so long as they keep the item in their possession.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the hit points of the gray render to 170 and have it rage on round two. To decrease the challenge, reduce the gray render's Initiative check to 1.

✦ Gray Render: CR 8; Large magical beast; HD 10d10+70; hp 125; Init +0; Spd 30 ft.; AC 19, touch 9, flat-footed 19; Base Atk +10; Grp +20; Atk +15 melee (2d6+6, bite) or +15 melee (2d8+9, greatclub) or +9 ranged (2d6+6, thrown boulder); Full Atk +15 melee (2d6+6, bite) and +10 melee (1d6+3, 2 claws); or +15 melee (2d6+6, bite) and +10 melee (2d8+3, club); or +9 ranged (2d6+6, thrown boulder); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Improved grab, rend 2d6+9; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., low-light vision, scent; AL N; SV Fort +14, Ref +7, Will +4; Str 23, Dex 10, Con 24, Int 3, Wis 12, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Hide +2, Spot +10, Survival +3; Cleave, Power Attack, Improved Bull Rush, Track.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a gray render must hit with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

Rend (Ex): A gray render that wins a grapple check after a successful bite attack establishes a hold, latching onto the opponent's body and tearing the flesh. This attack automatically deals 2d6+9 points of damage.

Skills and Feats: Gray renders have a +4 racial bonus on Spot checks due to their six keen eyes.

K10. MUGRUTS

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 20 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

You arrive at a narrow shoreline wedged between the collapsed dungeon edge to the north and a vast, still underground lake to the south. To the southwest, the shoreline gives way to a bog patch, and to the northeast, it opens up as a sprawling beach and eventually as an icy plain before several distant caverns. Here, the lake's rolling waves sweep over the swampy land's edge, where shallow muck hillocks peek up between channels of cool water and mire, blanketed in rotting seaweed, meager bushes, and wild, low grass. Upon these hillocks, four waterlogged-looking ogres argue.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The aquatic ogres (merrow) are too involved in their argument to notice the PCs at first, and should the PCs leave immediately, they are in no danger of being followed. Should they stay and listen to the argument, however, they must succeed at Hide checks to avoid being noticed.

The PCs pick up the argument mid-sentence. Two merrow are doing the fighting with the other two looking on, wide smiles on their toothy, elongated faces. If the PCs understand Giant, they make out the following exchange.

"...mugrut! That one mine!" The first merrow points out toward a longspire moving through the water about 40 ft. from shore, pointing straight up toward the high cavern roof.

"You mugrut, and throw bad, too! That one mine!" The second merrow also points as the spear leaps up out of the water, imbedded in the back of a howling lacedon. The second merrow doesn't wait before stressing his point further, hovering close to the first: "MINE!"

"You hit ghoul?" the first merrow jokes. "You miss Kraken!"

The third and fourth merrow chuckle, drawing the attention of both the others.

"What funny?" the second merrow asks, the first pounding his fist into his palm.

The third and fourth merrow slowly back away, raising their hands and shaking them as if to say, "nothing".

The first two merrow slowly look to each other and smile, then yell, "Mugruts!" They grab one of the other two merrow by his wrists and ankles and start swinging him back and forth toward the lake. The grappled merrow mews until they let go. He sails out over the slow waves and crashes into the water, disappearing beneath the waves. A few seconds later, he breaks the surface, flailing and gurgling, and begins swimming back to shore.

The first two merrow turn toward the fourth, who has fallen back toward the northern rock face...

The PCs can interrupt this scene anytime they like, and unless they linger and either ignore or fail their Hide checks, the merrow don't notice them until the scene's end (at which point they scream "Intruders!", grab their longspears, and charge the PCs). The PCs may simply leave any time before the scene ends, or they may interrupt it, gaining a surprise round against the merrow.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4, Fearless, Submerged

Tactics: There are four merrow (hp 47 each) in all. Once the merrow notice the PCs, they grab longspears from a row of weapons leaning against the rock face and attack. They never throw their spears. Fearing the hags' wrath, the merrow fight the PCs to the death. The third merrow arrives at the shore two rounds later, grabs a longspire, and joins the fray.

Treasure: These merrow work for the hags, but are far from favored, and therefore possess nothing of importance or value.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the merrow notice the PCs before they throw the third merrow into the lake. To decrease the challenge, have the argument evolve into a fistfight that reduces each merrow's starting hit points to 20.

K11 THROUGH K24. THE WESTERN LAKE

The flood hit the northern half of this lake Section the hardest, burying or destroying nearly all of the original prison structure and leaving behind little more than a bed of pulverized stone. The gentle waves created by the slight temperature fluctuations in this Section have shifted this bed, creating a number of wide, shallow coves. Within these coves lives a downtrodden community of wayward merfolk who were swept up in the flood and have been trapped here ever since.

These merfolk were sent to the mountain lake above the dungeon to receive a lillend named Sissefiss, who was foretold by the merfolk civilization to arrive there as an avatar of their god Eadro. The merfolk were to escort Sissefiss back to their ocean cities, where she was to guide their people into a new age of enlightenment. Things went horribly awry. Not only have the merfolk been separated from their people for hundreds of years, but they have lost their charge, and their faith.

Several years ago, the green dragon Thorodin captured Sissefiss when she surfaced for a breath of air. Intrigued by the talkative, strange-thinking sea creature, Thorodin didn't kill Sissefiss, but imprisoned her in a magical cage behind his lair (in Room K40). The merfolk have fallen into despair, relying entirely on fate and the will of their divinity to save them.

Only one retains the will to fight — the cleric Vash, who secretly communes with Sissefiss through her mephrit familiar, Ebb. Vash keeps the truth of Sissefiss' indignant condition to himself, lest the other merfolk swim off to their doom to rescue her or lose their faith altogether. If the PCs encounter Vash randomly or in his sanctuary (Room K15), he enlists them to return Sissefiss, an act he believes will renew the merfolk's spirit and give them fresh faith that Eadro will one day lead them back home.

The southern half of this Section was submerged by the flood, but vestiges of its original floorplan are still visible in the shallow water. These partial structures are occupied by a tribe of tritons, who rode the flood into this Region on purpose, seeking to explore new territory. They now find themselves trapped just like the merfolk, victims of the green dragon Thorodin (Room K36), who has unknowingly become their cultural nemesis, the "Eternal Enemy" they must one day defeat to liberate the Region from tyranny.

The tritons are far more organized than the merfolk. They plant traps along the bog shelf (in Rooms K34, K37, and K39), hoping to weaken or distract the dragon, or eliminate some of his underlings. They build weapons from the coral, shells, and other natural resources left behind after the flood (including many remnants harvested from the original dungeon rooms they now inhabit). Most recently, they have sent investigators into the southern dungeon Rooms, hoping to find new allies against the dragon.

The tritons recognize that they and the merfolk are in much the same position. They have tried to communicate with their northern neighbors, but with the merfolk skittish about the Region's other denizens, and because the merfolk brought with them a pride of aggressive sea cats, the tritons keep their distance. If the two races are to work together, the merfolk must make the first move, and that can only happen with Sissefiss back in their ranks.

Unfortunately for both colonies, the corrupted sediment and water only intensifies their distrust and aggressiveness, threatening to ignite their anger before it can be channeled.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	The PCs briefly feel a psychic 'tug' toward the crystal of vile attraction (see Room K1 and the sidebar on page 543).
2	The PCs unknowingly pass over the crushed and buried remains of a former demon prisoner. Without realizing it, they grow more impatient and argumentative with one another. For 1d4 hours, they suffer -1d6 Charisma each.
3	Ebb (Room K15), swims alongside the PCs for 1d6 minutes. If the PCs have encountered him before (and especially if they have refused to help the merfolk cleric Vash), he sarcastically berates them for their cowardice. Otherwise, he annoys the PCs until they follow him back to Room K15.
4-5	The PCs spot a merfolk male at the edge of their vision. He holds his position for 1 round, then swims away at maximum speed, heading for the sea cat caves (Room K14). If the PCs follow, the sea cats attack.
6-14	Nothing
	◆ Globe of Cold Trap: CR 6; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; 20 ft. radius hemisphere frozen solid (5d6 + drowning, even with water breathing); DC 19 Reflex save avoids; Search DC 27; Disable Device N/A.
16-17	The PCs spot two male tritons at the edge of their vision. They hold their position for 1 round, then swim to investigate the PC. Their attitude is Unfriendly, but can easily be shifted if the PCs don't openly wield weapons, and let the tritons dominate the discussion. If the tritons' attitude is improved to Friendly or higher, they lead the PCs back to their colony (Room K22), where they treat them as potential allies against the green dragon. If their attitude is worsened to Hostile, they attack.
18	A water naga, considering the PCs a threat, attacks from Ambush using the tactics described in Room K11.
19	The hag covey arrives, sweeping through the area in flight (see Room K7 for details). All three attempt to grapple a single PC and carry him back to their lair (Room K8).
20	The hag covey arrives, sneaking up on the PCs while invisible (see Room K7 for details). They fight only until they have sustained a total of 20 hp of damage between them, then flee toward their lair (Room K8).

K11. WATER NAGA LAIR

The depth of this encounter is 40 ft. below the surface.

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

A narrow cavern extends into the lake bed's sheer northern face, only large enough for two humans to enter side by side. You can't make out anything in the dark waters, yet you're overcome with a strange blend of excitement and dread.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is the lair of a water naga (64 hp), which was drawn to the lake by the crystal of vile attraction, a cursed magic item that attracts PCs and creatures of all alignments (see page 543). The naga doesn't expect anyone to breach its lair, having terrorized the lake's other northern inhabitants for many years. If the PCs enter the cave without a light source, and succeed with Move Silently checks, they gain a surprise round against the naga.

Encounter Condition: Fearless, Submerged

Tactics: Against undead targets, the naga uses disrupt undead and acid arrow. Against all other targets, it casts ray of enfeeblement, followed by acid arrow and bull's strength, after which it engages the intruders in melee combat. The naga sense of territorialism is heightened by the corrupted silt throughout this Region, so it refuses to fall back or listen to reason.

Treasure: The bodies of two victims may be found at the back of the cave. Between them, they possess 632 gp and a dagger +1 (+2 vs. undead).

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 2 sorcerer levels to the water naga. To decrease the challenge, reduce the hit points of the water naga by -10.

Skills: A water naga has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

* Casts as Sor 8 due to its innate abilities.

K12. ABANDONED CAVE

The depth of this encounter is 15 ft. below the surface.

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 20 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

15 ft. below the lake's surface, a cave leads deep into the collapsed rock face, ending in what appears to be an empty 30 ft. by 30 ft. stone room. An stale but breathable air pocket is trapped in the chamber's top 3 ft., but the area is otherwise unremarkable. All evidence of its occupants has long since been washed away, and no doors are visible in the chamber's walls.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is empty. It features no exits, secret or otherwise, and all its contents were long ago flushed out into the lake. The merfolk considered using it, but with the naga lair so close (Room K11), they remained in the coves, where they could outmaneuver the beast.

Encounter Condition: Submerged

Tactics: After the PCs spend 30 minutes in this Room, roll a Random Encounter.

K13. SUBMERGED DUNGEON DOOR

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 15 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

An original dungeon door faces out of a shallow depression within the rock face at this location. The door is locked, requiring a DC 25 Open Lock check to unlock. Air was sealed in the room beyond when the chamber shifted during the flood, so the PCs must make a successful DC 20 Strength check to force the door open.

As you force the dungeon door open, large pockets of trapped air rushes out into the lake, bubbling to the surface. The crumbling corridor beyond the door lies at a 45-degree angle down into the rock face, leading into darkness. As you swim inside, a flash of crackling electricity explodes deep below you, instantly spreading through the water and jolting you.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Each PC suffers 6d6 electricity damage, immediately. Any PC making a successful DC 20 Spot check notices during the flash that the corridor opens up after 40 ft., entering a larger chamber below. If the PC's Spot check result is 20 or higher, he's sure he saw something moving within the room. The room below was originally located at K13's position on the map, but the flood uprooted it from the rest of the dungeon. It dropped under the wash and slid north, underneath the dungeon corridors between Rooms K2 and K3. Somehow, all the room's doors were forced shut and stayed air tight during the chaos.

This Room was a storage chamber, but when this part of the dungeon grew crowded, the celestials improvised, reinforcing the doors and chaining a retriever demon to the floor. The creature's bonds broke during the flood, but it found all the exits but the upward corridor blocked by collapsed dirt and dungeon debris — and try as it might, it couldn't wedge itself through the upward corridor's 10 ft. × 10 ft. space.

Encounter Condition: Fearless, Submerged

Tactics: When the PCs open the submerged door, water rushes down the upward corridor and into the Room. Startled, the retriever unleashes a ray of electricity (the flash and charge that damages the PCs). Thereafter, the creature plays dead (as spiders do when dropped into water). The retriever keeps up its ruse for 10 rounds, until attacked, or until one or more PCs enter an adjacent square, at which point it attempts to surprise the PCs with a ray of cold.

The retriever's fire and petrification rays don't work underwater. Its cold ray affects not only the target but any characters adjacent to the target, and its electricity ray affects everyone in the room (except the retriever itself, which is immune to the effects of all its rays).

The retriever fights to the death.

Treasure: The chains that held the retriever in place before the flood are celestial creations called chains of vulnerability (see the sidebar on page 553). With a successful DC 25 Craft (stonemasonry) check or DC 40 Disable Device check, the PCs can remove these chains intact.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 2 HD to the retriever. To decrease the challenge, start the retriever in the chains of vulnerability, which inflict a –2 circumstance penalty with all attack rolls and Reflex saves. Further, the chains make the creature vulnerable to subdual damage, and it begins the combat wounded (having suffered 25 points of subdual damage from the initial electrical charge).

✦ Retriever: CR 10; Huge construct (extraplanar); HD 10d10+80; hp 135; Init +3; Spd 50 ft.; AC 21, touch 11, flat-footed 18; Base Atk +7; Grp +25; Atk +15 melee (2d6+10, claw) and +8 ranged touch (eye ray); Full Atk +15 melee (2d6+10, 4 claws) and +10 melee (1d8+5, bite) and +8 ranged touch (eye ray); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft.; SA Eye rays, find target, improved grab; SQ Construct traits, darkvision 60 ft., fast healing 5, low-light vision; AL CE; SV Fort +3, Ref +6, Will +3; Str 31, Dex 17, Con —, Int —, Wis 11, Cha 1.

Skills and Feats: —

Eye Rays (Su): A retriever's eyes can produce four different magical rays with a range of 100 feet. Each round, it can fire one ray as a free action. A particular ray is usable only once every 4 rounds. A retriever can fire an eye ray in the same round that it makes physical attacks. The save DC for all rays is 18. The save DC is Dexterity-based.

The four eye effects are:

Fire—deals 12d6 points of fire damage to the target (Reflex half).

Cold—deals 12d6 points of cold damage to the target (Reflex half).

Petrification—The target must succeed on a Fortitude save or turn to stone permanently.

Find Target (Sp): When ordered to find an item or a creature, a retriever does so unerringly, as though guided by discern location.

The being giving the order must have seen (or must have an item belonging to) the creature to be found, or must have touched the object to be located. This ability is the equivalent of an 8th-level spell.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a retriever must hit with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and grips the opponent fast in its mouth. This is the method by which it usually "retrieves" things.

CHAINS OF VULNERABILITY

This celestial-made magic item looks like a set of 4 ordinary steel chains, each 6 ft. in length and ending in a simple clasp. Each of the chains has a hardness of 10, 40 hit points, and a Break DC of 40. If even one of the chains is broken, the item loses all magical properties.

A character or creature must be rendered immobile using these chains to suffer their effect. While rendered immobile, the captive loses its immunity to critical hits, subdual damage, ability damage, and death from massive damage, if any.

K14. SEA CAT LAIR

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

A cave extends several feet into the rock face and then suddenly dips down at almost a 90-degree angle, vanishing into the dark.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: When the merfolk arrived, they were accompanied by a school of sea cats. Only two remain — the rest staying behind in Region L — and the merfolk chose to lair these guardians between their most critical member, the cleric Vash (Room K15), and the most dangerous predator in this part of the lake, the water naga in Room K11.

The cave extends down another 60 ft. before opening up into a small, smooth-walled chamber where the sea cats sleep. The floor is warm to the touch — a result of volcanic activity beneath this part of the dungeon — and the sea cats relax here when not needed by the merfolk.

The sea cats have very sensitive hearing. With a successful Listen check they notice combat in any adjacent Room, even if asleep. When alerted to combat anywhere in the lake, the sea cats swim to see if the merfolk are in danger. Regardless of what is happening, the sea cats attack all but the merfolk on sight (including the PCs).

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat, Fearless, Submerged

Tactics: Sensitive to the Region's corruption, the predatory sea cats are now prone to wild fits of rage. They not only attack the PCs on sight, but suffer from form of barbarian rage at all times. The lions attack with every action until no enemies are left alive.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the hit points of each sea cat to 69 and increase the Will save bonus of each sea cat by an additional to +5. To decrease the challenge, reduce the hit points of each sea cat to 51 and the Will save bonus of each sea cat to +3, but increase the sea cats' AC to 18.

✦ Sea Cat: CR 4; Large magical beast; HD 6d10+18; hp 51; Init +1; Spd 10 ft., swim 40 ft.; AC 18, touch 10, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +6; Grp +14; Atk +9 melee (1d6+4, claw); Full Atk +9 melee (1d6+4, 2 claws) and +4 melee (1d8+2, bite); SA Rend 2d6+6; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., hold breath, low-light vision, scent; AL N; SV Fort +8, Ref +6, Will +5; Str 19, Dex 12, Con 13, Int 2, Wis 13, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Listen +8, Spot +7, Swim +12; Alertness, Endurance, Iron Will.

Hold Breath (Ex): A sea cat can hold its breath for a number of rounds equal to 6 — its Constitution score before it risks drowning.

Rend (Ex): A sea cat that hits with both claw attacks latches onto the opponent's body and tears the flesh. This automatically deals an extra 2d6+6 points of damage.

Skills: A sea cat has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

K15. MERFOLK TEMPLE

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

Several feet into a cave, the PCs find a sturdy dungeon door leading to a basement room that was swept away during the flood. The door is still functional, and secured with a poison needle trap. The door is locked, requiring a DC 40 Open Lock check to unlock. Unless the PCs disable the poison needle trap first, however, any Open Lock check — successful or not — triggers it.

☛ Poison Needle Trap: CR 3; mechanical; touch trigger; repair reset; Atk +20 melee (1 plus poison, needle); poison (small centipede poison, DC 11 Fortitude save resists (poison only), 1d2 Dex/1d2 Dex); Search DC 22; Disable Device DC 35. Note: This trap is disabled by removing the needles narrow holes set into the mechanism.

Beyond the trapped door is a small square chamber containing a makeshift altar delicately crafted from coral and shells, decorated with seaweed and kelp. As you approach, a small winged man with tiny horns and a smooth, featureless body drops down into your field of view. He holds a ball of smoldering fluid in his right hand, but keeps it at his side. He looks over your shoulder and utters something in a gurgling tongue. Behind you, an aged merman approaches from deeper lake waters.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The merfolk cleric Vash (hp 38) prays for guidance here, where he also hides Ebb (hp 19), Sissefiss' water mephit familiar. Only Sissefiss and Vash know about Ebb, whom the merfolk elders never mentioned. Sissefiss claims he is part of her, an appendage without which she is lessened, and that he is therefore part of Eadro the merfolk god. Whether this is true or merely Sissefiss' exploitation of the merfolk's beliefs is beyond the scope of this dungeon, but may act as a springboard for greater adventure if the PCs choose to escort Sissefiss and the merfolk back to their people.

Encounter Condition: Safe, Submerged

Tactics: Vash is fiercely protective of Ebb, not only because he is important to Sissefiss, but also because the mephit can communicate with the lillend. If the PCs threaten Ebb, the attitude of both Vash and the mephit immediately shift to Hostile (though neither attacks except in self-defense).

Neither Vash nor Ebb are combatants, and unless the PCs are few and injured, they assume the PCs can defeat them in combat. They try to talk their way out of the situation, convincing the PCs that they're not a threat and that the party should just continue on its way. All the while, Ebb attempts to slip past the party, out into the lake, where he and Vash can escape if they must.

During the conversation, Vash is extremely nervous, but respectful. Ebb displays a sarcastic wit, joking about the PCs, their condition, their gear, their known history in the Region, and anything else he finds humorous.

If the creatures' attitude is improved to Friendly or higher, if the PCs arrive with other merfolk they've befriended, or if the PCs mention helping the merfolk or slaying the dragon, Vash and Ebb perk up, pressing the party for information and feeling them out to see if they can recruit them as allies in the struggle against Thorodin.

If the PCs agree to help against Thorodin, or if they have already slain him, Vash escorts them to Room K16, where he introduces them as "heroes to be" and formally accepts them into the cause. From this point on, Vash agrees to use any of his spells to assist the PCs during their time in the dungeon, and lets them rest in his temple as well. Further, when the party goes to fight Thorodin, Vash grants them custody of Ebb, who can communicate with his mistress and coordinate her rescue. Until the PCs rescue Sissefiss or leave the Region, Ebb fights with them, but never risks his life unless it is to save his mistress.

If combat erupts, Vash and Ebb flee to Room K16, where the merfolk make their last stand.

Skills: A merfolk has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

☛ Ebb (familiar of the lillend Sissefiss), Water Mephit: CR *: Small outsider (extraplanar, water); HD [7]; hp 19; Init +0; Spd 30 ft., fly 40 ft. (average), swim 30 ft.; AC 20, touch 11, flat-footed 20; Base Atk +7; Grp +8; Atk Claw +10 melee (1d3+2); Full Atk 2 claws +10 melee (1d3+2); SA Breath weapon, deliver touch, spell-like abilities, summon mephit; SQ Alertness, damage reduction 5/magic, darkvision 60 ft., empathic link, fast healing 2, improved evasion, share spells; AL CG; SV Fort +6, Ref +5, Will +5; Str 14, Dex 10, Con 13, Int 8, Wis 11, Cha 15.

Skills and Feats: Bluff +8, Diplomacy +5, Disguise +2 (+4 acting), Escape Artist +6, Hide +11, Listen +7, Move Silently +6, Spot +6, Swim +10, Use Rope +0 (+2 with bindings); Power Attack, Toughness.

Alertness (Ex): While Ebb is within arm's reach, Sissefiss gains the Alertness feat.

Breath Weapon (Su): A mephit can use its breath weapon once every 1d4 rounds as a standard action. 15-foot cone of caustic liquid, damage 1d8 acid, Reflex DC 13 half. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Deliver Touch Spells (Su): Ebb can deliver touch spells for Sissefiss. If Sissefiss and Ebb are in contact at the time Sissefiss casts a touch spell, she can designate his familiar as the "toucher." The familiar can then deliver the touch spell just as the master could. As usual, if Sissefiss casts another spell before the touch is delivered, the touch spell dissipates.

Empathic Link (Su): Sissefiss has an empathic link with Ebb out to a distance of up to 1 mile. Sissefiss cannot see through the familiar's eyes, but they can communicate empathically. Because of the limited nature of the link, only general emotional content can be communicated.

Because of this empathic link, Sissefiss has the same connection to an item or place that her familiar does.

Fast Healing (Ex): Mephits heal 2 points of damage each round, provided they are still alive and certain other conditions are met. A water mephit heals only if it is exposed to rain or submerged up to its waist in water.

Improved Evasion (Ex): When subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, a familiar takes no damage if it makes a successful saving throw and half damage even if the saving throw fails.

Share Spells: At the Sissefiss' option, she may have any spell (but not any spell-like ability) she casts on herself also affect Ebb. Ebb must be within 5 feet at the time of casting to receive the benefit.

If the spell or effect has a duration other than instantaneous, it stops affecting Ebb if it moves farther than 5 feet away and will not affect the familiar again even if it returns to the master before the duration expires. Additionally, Sissefiss may cast a spell with a target of "You" on Ebb (as a touch range spell) instead of on herself.

Sissefiss and Ebb can share spells even if the spells normally do not affect creatures of the familiar's type.

Spell-Like Abilities: Once per hour a water mephit can hurl an acidic blob that functions like acid arrow spell (caster level 3rd). Once per day it can create a mass of smelly fog that duplicates the effect of a stinking cloud spell (DC 15, caster level 6th). The save DC is Charisma-based.

Summon Mephit (Sp): Once per day, a mephit can attempt to summon another mephit of the same variety, much as though casting a summon monster spell, but with only a 25% chance of success. Roll d%: On a failure, no creature answers the summons that day. A mephit that has just been summoned cannot use its own summon ability for 1 hour. This ability is the equivalent of a 2nd-level spell.

Skills: A water mephit has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

K16. MERFOLK COLONY

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 20 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

The lake's desolate expanse is broken here by a dim cove, the lip of which is lined with criss-crossed spikes dug into the sand. The shadows within the cove shift and swirl, as if a school of large fish has taken up residence.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This central cove is home to the surviving merfolk originally charged with escorting the lillend Sissefiss to their faraway home waters (hp 25 each). Only 5 warriors remain (hp 25 each), the other 3 having been killed by Thorodin when he attacked their original outpost to the south (Room K18). These warriors live with the weight of their misfortune, believing all hope lost. Vash, their cleric, tries to keep their spirits up, with little success. The warriors miss their homeland and the feel of the sun's warmth. None of them says it, but they are waiting to die.

The cove features no merfolk comforts, all of which were lost when Thorodin attacked Room K18. Beyond the temple at Room K15, all that remains of the merfolk's link with their people are several minor pieces of jewelry that the warriors protect with their lives. These items are worthless to the PCs and on the open market.

Encounter Condition: Submerged

Tactics: The line of criss-crossed spears along the cove's edge is a spear snare trap designed to snare intruders. When the PCs arrive, the merfolk grab their weapons and fall in line. Though they expected the green dragon, they are not surprised that outsiders have chosen to raid their last home instead.

♦ Spear Snare Trap: CR 1; mechanical; proximity trigger; manual reset; no attack roll necessary (1d8 + entangled); DC 16 Reflex save avoids; Search DC N/A; Disable Device DC 15. Note: This trap is disabled by slowly releasing the pressure behind each spear and severing the tension lines.

Unless the PCs immediately lower their weapons, raise their hands, or make similarly non-threatening gestures, four of the warriors attack, trying to drive the party from the cove. The fifth warrior swims toward Room K14 to summon the merfolk's sea cat guardians.

Any conversation is curt. The merfolk assume the PCs are a threat and demand that they leave. All skill checks made to improve the merfolk's attitude suffer a -4 circumstance penalty. If the merfolk's attitude is somehow improved to Friendly or higher, they hesitantly welcome the PCs into their home, sharing stories until Vash returns 1d4 hours later. At this time, the conversation turns to explaining the merfolk's plight — possibly including a trip to the former colony site (Room K18) — and recruiting the PCs to fight against the dragon (Room K15). This also happens if Vash accompanies the PCs when they arrive.

If the PCs have already slain the dragon, they are received as heroes. Though their demeanor remains sullen (because they are trapped so far from home), they smile and do their best to offer the PCs a warm welcome and pleasant stay. They escort the PCs to any lake location, and are even open to the idea of traveling out of the dungeon if Sissefiss has returned and the PCs offer to help them find their way home.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four merfolk warriors. To decrease the challenge, remove all five merfolk warriors and change this Room to a second site pillaged by Thorodin. In this case, Vash is the last merfolk left to save Sissefiss (see Room K15 for details).

♦ Merfolk War 4: CR 2; Medium humanoid (aquatic); HD 4d8+8; hp 26; Init +1; Spd 5 ft., swim 50 ft.; AC 15, touch 11, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +4; Grp +5; Atk +5 melee (1d8+1/x3, spear) or +5 ranged (1d10/19–20, heavy crossbow); Full Atk +5 melee (1d8+1/x3, spear) or +5 ranged (1d10/19–20, heavy crossbow); SA —; SQ Amphibious, low-light vision; AL N; SV Fort +6, Ref +2, Will +0; Str 13, Dex 13, Con 15, Int 10, Wis 9, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Listen +4, Spot +4, Swim +11; Alertness.

Amphibious (Ex): Merfolk can breathe both air and water, although they rarely travel more than a few feet from the water's edge.

Skills: A merfolk has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

K17. CORRUPTED REEF

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 15 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

This stretch of lake bed sports a coral reef, upon which long-stalked white plants sway back and forth like drunken tavern patrons. The scene is remarkable, a pleasant reminder of the wilderness beyond this endless dungeon.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Like the coral beds to the south (Room K24), this location has been exploited by this Region's denizens, though not for the same reasons. Here, the lake bed's corrupted silt has crept into the coral and plants, infecting them with a malevolent spirit.

For every 10 minutes the PCs spend harvesting materials in this Room, they gain 1 lb. of coral or plant stalk they can use to create weapons, armor, and other items. These materials may only be used to create cursed items, but when used to do so, reduce the cost and time required to create the item is reduced to $\frac{1}{2}$ standard (rounded down).

The materials do not grant a bonus with Craft skill checks made to create cursed items. A skilled hand is still required to make use of the materials' special properties.

Encounter Condition: Negative Energy, Submerged

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Other than the potential for harvesting cursed materials, this Room contains nothing of interest. Selling the cursed materials requires a successful Bluff check opposed by the trader's Sense Motive skill, and garners a base return of 200 gp per lb. sold.

K18. ABANDONED MERFOLK COLONY

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 20 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). The lake bed below you is scoured clean, the sand crystallized into beautiful but jagged layers. Plants around the scarred ground are lush, but all life has been burned away in the scoured zone. The lake bed has been uprooted — before or after the acidic attack you can't be certain — torn up and cast about with unbridled fury.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Once this was a shallow cove dotted with attractive lake bed plants and low, flat rocks upon which the merfolk rested. Before the coming of Thorodin, the merfolk tried to make the best of their circumstances, adapting the lake bed as best they could to their native sea floor back home. They sculpted the lake's plant life into breathtaking works of natural elegance. They taught the lesser water creatures to sing. They brought grace to the Region.

Thorodin's initial attack was devastating. The dragon plunged into the lake at the center of the merfolk activity, swallowing one of the merfolk whole and mustering an acidic maelstrom that dissolved every leaf. Two more merfolk fell to the dragon's vicious attacks as the colony fell back, disappearing into the caves at the lake's edge. But the true loss was delayed, as Thorodin spotted the prize he would seize weeks later — the lillend Sissefiss.

The merfolk rarely return here, unable to bear the haunting memories of that day. If they grow attached to the PCs, they might bring them here to illustrate the atrocities committed against them by the dragon, and to convince the party to work against the beast.

K19. TANAA'RYL VEIN

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

The tritons salvaged a door from the pieces of dungeon buried in the lake bed and installed it here to protect their find. The door is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock or DC 18 Strength check to pry up. Once it is pried up, a DC 20 (28 for the person holding it open) Escape Artist check to slip through.

The back end of this shallow cave is dug out, a narrow one-man tunnel winding deep into the rock. The tunnel is lit up ahead, as if a fire burned in the water...

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The PCs must enter the tunnel in single file, even if one or more of them are Small. The tunnel leads 20 ft. into the rock, then dips down for 5 ft. before opening into a 30 ft. \times 30 ft. mine where the tritons harvest a mineral they call tanaa'ryl.

The tritons discovered this mineral many months ago while scouting the lake bed for resources to use in an eventual attack against Thorodin. tanaa'ryl is compressed demon bone, corrupt but incredibly versatile, strong, and magical. The tritons have created weapons and armor from this mineral, using a forge they built in a southern cave (Room K21). These have proven amazingly useful in the tritons' forays into the southern dungeon Rooms, but have a number of side effects.

The tritons are aware of tanaa'ryl's negative properties, and avoid using their armor and weapons unless they must. They do not mention the mineral's properties. Even if the tritons' attitude is improved to Helpful and they agree to part with one or more of their tanaa'ryl arms, they never talk about the items' side effects.

Encounter Condition: Haunted, Submerged

Tactics: If the PCs linger in this Room for 10 minutes or more, there is a progressively higher chance that a triton scout patrol checks in on the vein. After 10 minutes, and for every 10 minutes the PCs remain in this Room thereafter, roll 1d20. With a result of 1 + 1 per 10-minute increment beyond the first, a scouting patrol of 2 tritons (hp 26 each) arrives. These tritons attack intruders on sight.

Treasure: The PCs may harvest tanaa'ryl from this location on their own. For every hour they spend harvesting materials in this Room, they gain 1 lb. of tanaa'ryl they can use to create weapons, armor, and other items. tanaa'ryl is extremely hard to forge. The PCs cannot forge it while in the dungeon, and outside the dungeon must dedicate twice the standard cost and time to creating items with it. Selling the tanaa'ryl requires a successful Bluff check opposed by the trader's Sense Motive skill (to convince him it's not cursed), and garners a base return of 500 gp per lb. sold.

K20. TRITON SCOUTS

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 15 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

A rock outcropping juts out over the lake bed, casting a dark shadow on the space below. Two figures huddle there, crouching on a slight lip in the rock face. Both wear heavy cloaks of interwoven seaweed and coral-sheathed shortwords. Crossbows hang at their belts and tridents lean behind them. The figures eye the lake waters warily, as if guarding something.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Two triton scouts (hp 26 each) guard this location at all times, partly to ensure Thorodin doesn't ambush their colony and partly to maintain the traps set along the eastern shore (Rooms K34, K37, and K39).

Encounter Condition: Submerged

Tactics: The scouts hold their position for 1 round, then swim to investigate the party. Their initial attitude is Unfriendly, but can easily be shifted if the PCs don't openly draw or wield weapons, and if the party lets the tritons dominate the discussion. In this case, the PCs gain a +2 circumstance bonus with skill checks made to adjust the tritons' attitude. This bonus increases to +4 if the PCs have previously killed one or more of Thorodin's toadies (see Room K36).

If the tritons' attitude is improved to Friendly or higher, they lead the PCs back to their colony (Room K22), where they argue for the party to be treated as potential allies against the green dragon. This grants the PCs a +4 circumstance bonus when making skill checks to adjust the attitude of the tritons at that location (offsetting the -4 circumstance penalty they would otherwise suffer there).

If the tritons' attitude is worsened to Hostile, they attack, relying on their crossbows and tridents until they are reduced to 10 hp or less. At that point, the tritons draw their tanaa'ryl shortwords and attempt to fall back to the colony (Room K22).

The swords' flickering light automatically draws Thorodin's attention if he is within line of sight to this area. He flies here at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round), diving into the water without slowing down. The tritons and the PCs are caught up in his wake, tumbling through the water

TANAA'RYL ITEMS

The mineral tanaa'ryl glows with subdued hellfire. All items made from it look like glass containing tendrils of smoldering embers. This can be an effective tool, granting a +2 circumstance bonus with Intimidate checks made during combat. Unfortunately, unless the item is sheathed or covered by at least 1 in. of shrouding material, it also gives away its position — and the position of its wielder — within line of sight in all directions. No skill check is required to see a character holding an exposed tanaa'ryl item in the open, even if that character makes a skill check or uses an ability to conceal his position.

Tanaa'ryl courses with the memories of the demons from which it is harvested. At the end of each day during which a character uses a tanaa'ryl item, he must make a Will save (DC 20) or suffer 1 point of temporary Wisdom damage. As the character's Wisdom score drops, the demonic forces within the tanaa'ryl slowly take hold, until he becomes a slave to them.

If the character's Wisdom drops to 9 or below, he begins dreaming through the eyes of the demon from which the tanaa'ryl was harvested, reliving its worst horrors. During this time, he recovers only $\frac{1}{2}$ the standard hit points and spells during each full night of rest (rounded up).

If the character's Wisdom drops to 5 or below, he becomes prone to fits of violence when stressed. During combat, when the character argues, and when he performs any action that the DM deems to be taxing, the character must make a successful Will save (DC 15). If he fails he slips into a fit, losing 1d4 rounds to incoherent ranting, during which he utters several phrases in Abyssal (whether he knows the language or not). During each round of this fit, the character must make another Will save (DC 15) or lash out with whatever weapon he holds at the nearest living being within 10 ft., whether the being is an ally or not. If the character carries no weapon, he lashes out with his fists. If no living being is located within 10 ft., the character strikes out at thin air.

Tanaa'ryl may not reduce a character's Wisdom below 1, but if the character's Wisdom drops to 1, one of the demons from which the tanaa'ryl was harvested seizes control of his body (and the character potentially becomes an NPC, per the DM's discretion). From this point on, the character recovers Wisdom as standard, even when he uses tanaa'ryl items (indeed, he becomes obsessed with tanaa'ryl items, collecting them whenever possible and refusing to part with them under any circumstances).

A character consumed with tanaa'ryl possession may only be saved by moving him at least 100 ft. away from all tanaa'ryl, at which point he falls into a coma and his Wisdom score drops by 1 per day he remains away from the mineral. When the character's Wisdom drops to 1, he wakes in control of his own actions and begins recovering Wisdom as standard. Once his Wisdom is fully recovered, he is thereafter immune to tanaa'ryl's effects.

In Room K19, the triton blacksmith Wroe forges shortwords, spearheads, and chainmail vests from tanaa'ryl, which may be found throughout this Region. These arms possess the following qualities.

Tanaa'ryl shortwords are identical to standard shortwords, except that their critical range is increased by 1 (to 18–20/x2). When a critical is scored with a tanaa'ryl shortword, the weapon is briefly engulfed with hellfire that may spread to the target per the standard fire rules. This hellfire does not injure the shortword's wielder. If sold on the open market, a tanaa'ryl shortword has a base value of 1,000 gp.

Tanaa'ryl-tipped spears are identical to standard longspears, except that their critical range is increased by 1 (to 19–20/x3). When a critical is scored with a tanaa'ryl-tipped spear, the weapon's head is briefly engulfed with hellfire that may spread to the target per the standard fire rules. This hellfire does not injure the spear's wielder. If sold on the open market, a tanaa'ryl-tipped spear has a base value of 500 gp.

Tanaa'ryl chainmail is identical to standard chainmail, except that it absorbs additional damage from the first critical scored against its wearer during each combat. The weapon's base damage is still applied, but the critical multiplier is not. When tanaa'ryl chainmail absorbs a critical hit, it is briefly engulfed with hellfire that may spread to the attacker per the standard fire rules. This hellfire does not injure the armor's wearer. If sold on the open market, a vest of tanaa'ryl chainmail has a base value of 1,500 gp.

for 4 rounds. Thereafter, the DM sets new locations for each triton and PC in relation to the dragon. Unless two or more PCs are somehow physically linked (e.g. with rope), the DM should feel no obligation to place them together.

The encounter then continues with the dragon trying to snatch the tanaa'ryl-armed tritons and return to Room K40 with them. The dragon ignores all others unless attacked, in which case he bats the offenders away with his claws, or — if he suffers more than 25 hit points in damage — uses his breath weapon to cover his withdrawal. If the PCs attempt to save the tritons from Thorodin, the dragon engages them, fighting them until he is reduced to 175 hp, at which point he withdraws to his lair (Room K36).

Believing the dragon has finally come to destroy their colony, all the tritons in Rooms K19 through K24 converge on the location at maximum speed. They arrive in staggered groups beginning the round following the dragon's departure, at which point the encounter resolves per the guidelines under Room K22.

K21. TRITON FORGE

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

The tritons salvaged a door from the pieces of dungeon buried in the lake bed and installed it here to protect their find. The door is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock or DC 18 Strength check to pry up. Once it is pried up, a DC 20 (28 for the person holding it open) Escape Artist check to slip through.

As you open the makeshift lakeside door, a wave of warm water escapes past you. Beyond, a small cave leads several feet into the rock and a few feet up to a pool within another chamber. You surface slowly to remain hidden, finding a pocket of stale air within an oblong chamber outfitted as a blacksmith's workshop. A scarred and stooped triton missing one eye and several fingers labors over an anvil, hammering a shortsword into shape. It could be a trick of your eyes, but it looks like the heart of the sword metal burns with unholy fire.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Wroe, a triton (hp 28) who spent many years among humans, lives and works in this warm cavern. He learned the trade of blacksmith many years ago, and uses these skills to forge weapons and armor for his people. His most recent — and some say obsessively passionate — project involves the tanaa'ryl mineral discovered in a cave to the north (Room K19).

Finding tanaa'ryl fascinating, Wroe has created many valued items for the colony (Room K22), but he is slowly losing himself in the process. He has been suffering from awful nightmares for weeks now, and periodically flies into rages, during which he blacks out. When he wakes, he finds his tools scattered about the room and embedded in the walls. Recently, he found the tanaa'ryl cauldron tipped over; the molten metal having cooled mere inches from where he collapsed.

Wroe is terrified of what is happening, but more afraid that it will spread to the other tritons. He no longer accepts visitors, leaving all newly created weapons in the cave outside. He hasn't returned to the colony in... days or weeks, he can't be sure.

Wroe is surprised to find someone in his home, and initially seeks to defend himself with a white-hot tanaa'ryl shortsword. If the PCs remain at a distance and do not raise their weapons, Wroe's curiosity gets the better of him and he starts asking them questions: Who are they? Why are they here? Have they come to steal his tanaa'ryl?

Since he never leaves this Room, Wroe is unaware of recent events. He doesn't know the PCs by reputation if they've slain Thorodin, nor does he have any idea that Thorodin might have captured one or more tritons (see Room K20). All he's interested in is determining whether the PCs are a threat.

During the conversation, the PCs may be able to determine that Wroe is not entirely well. With a successful Sense Motive check, they notice he seems distracted, unable to focus on them or the situation at hand. If their skill check result is +10 higher than the opposed check, they pinpoint the sword as the point of his obsession.

If Wroe's attitude is improved to Indifferent or better, he lets his guard down and goes back to work, carrying on any conversation the PCs wish. Talk about the mineral clearly makes him nervous, and if the PCs ask more than a few cursory questions about it, touch any of it, or ask to take any of it with them, he flies into a tanaa'ryl-induced rage, briefly taking on the personality of the sneering quasit Hygge, who was imprisoned in this Region before the flood. While tapping this personality, Wroe asks many questions about the Region, what has happened to the prison and the celestials, and who now wields power in the Region. Wroe recovers from the fit after several minutes, collapsing into a slumber that lasts several hours.

This Room contains an anvil, a cauldron of molten tanaa'ryl metal, a forge (the chute of which vanishes into the dungeon rock, channeled to some distant room), and a rack of makeshift blacksmithing tools salvaged from the southern dungeon rooms or made from coral and other lake resources. Tipping the cauldron requires a successful DC 20 Strength check, and inflicts 6d6 fire damage within a 15 ft. cone.

Encounter Condition: Haunted, Submerged

Tactics: If the PCs linger in this Room for 10 minutes or more, there is a progressively higher chance that a triton scout patrol checks in on the forge. At 10 minutes, and for every 10 minutes the PCs remain in this Room thereafter, roll 1d20. With a result of 1 + 1 per 10-minute increment beyond the first, a scouting patrol of 2 tritons (hp 26 each) arrives to ensure the forge is secure. Unless Wroe intervenes, these tritons attack intruders on sight.

Treasure: Other than Wroe's supply of molten tanaa'ryl (10 lbs.), this Room contains nothing of interest. Unfortunately, only Wroe knows how to use this forge, which is built using a variety of magical and masterwork shortcuts he refuses to describe.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 1 triton to the scouting patrol. To decrease the challenge, remove 1 triton.

K22. TRITON COLONY

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here—and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 20 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

Nestled in a shallow recess at the edge of the southern lake bed, a submerged portion of the original dungeon is still intact, below 30 ft. of dim water. The structure shows signs of recent activity, as if something has claimed it as a lair.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Predisposed to live in sea castles and other defensible structures, the tritons have set up their colony within the largest section of dungeon remaining on the lake bed. On the surface, this section consists of four chambers opening onto a central north-south corridor, two on either side. The northernmost chambers on either side are guard posts, each containing 1 triton (hp 26 each). The southernmost chambers on either side are empty, intentionally cleared in case the tritons need to use them as defensive positions.

A staircase at the corridor's southern end leads to an empty basement chamber with three doors. Each door is locked, requiring a successful DC 30 Open Lock check to open. The leftmost chamber is a barracks containing the remaining six tritons (hp 26 each). Other than the kelp mats upon which the tritons sleep, this chamber is empty.

The rightmost chamber is a makeshift workshop where the tritons design and construct the traps that are used along the bog's western shore (at Rooms K34, K37, and K39). Other than four craftsmen's hammers and piles of wood, stone, coral, and woven seaweed rope, this chamber is empty.

The center chamber is a makeshift training room where the tritons think up and practice attack and retreat patterns for use against the green dragon Thorodin. It holds a large dragon-shaped training dummy made from coral and scavenged furniture, tied together with woven seaweed rope. The dummy is riddled with crossbow bolts and has been repeatedly stabbed with tridents, especially in and around the underbelly and neck.

Standard wooden dungeon doors lead into all three basement chambers, but they are waterlogged and easy to break. All doors except the one leading into the barracks are locked, and each requires a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock or a DC 16 Strength check to break down.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Cover, [Fearless], Submerged

Tactics: The triton guards posted in the surface chambers observe the surrounding lake waters through cracks in the structure, and gain a +4 circumstance bonus with all opposed Spot checks made to determine awareness. They automatically succeed with all unopposed checks made to notice the PCs' arrival.

All of the tritons carry 'ink bombs,' small orbs of sewn seaweed containing ink harvested from jellyfish. Once a triton guard notices intruders, he drops an ink bomb through a crack in his guard post's floor, alerting the tritons in the barracks that there's trouble. The triton guards wait to engage the intruders until they're attacked or the other tritons arrive in 1d4+1 rounds (whichever comes first). Thereafter, the tritons work as a unit, moving into positions that allow as many of them to flank or ambush the intruders as possible. All tritons who cannot flank or ambush take cover and fire at the PCs with their crossbows.

Assuming the worst, the tritons ignore everything the PCs say, unless one of them refuses to attack for 1 full round and succeeds with a DC 30 Diplomacy check. In this case, the tritons become curious, all but one taking a ready action targeting the closest PC with an attack. The remaining tritons demand the PCs explain their intrusion. Unless the PCs tell the tritons that the party is here to help or save them, and unless one of the PCs succeeds with a second Diplomacy check, the tritons attack again, this time fighting to the death.

Convincing the tritons to listen is only the first step — if the PCs wish to ally with the tritons, they must also prove themselves, either by convincing the creatures that they're genuine or by demonstrating their competence. The first option requires that the PCs adjust the creatures' attitude to Friendly or higher. This is difficult, given the colony's fatalistic outlook, and all skill checks made to adjust the tritons' attitude suffer a –4 penalty.

The second option requires that the PCs show the tritons that they can be of use against the dragon. They can accomplish this by building three traps for use in on the bog's western shore (each requiring a DC 20 Craft (trapmaking) check), by venturing into the southern dungeon Rooms and returning a group of missing tritons, or by returning with the corpse of one of Thorodin's toadies (Room K36). Accomplishing any of these tasks improves the tritons' attitude to Helpful and convinces the colony to support the PCs' actions (which, according to all, "are clearly steps toward felling the great wyrm!").

Of course, if the PCs have already slain Thorodin, they are welcomed upon their arrival as fellow warriors of the highest caliber. The tritons even tour the lake with them — including the surface — showing off their "new allies" (whether the PCs suggest an alliance or not). However, each time the tritons recount the dragon's demise, it is with greater and greater pride in their own accomplishment, and by several days after the PCs' departure, the colony has left them out of the tale altogether.

K23. TRITON ARMORY

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 15 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

The tritons salvaged a door from the pieces of dungeon buried in the lake bed and installed it here to protect their find. The door is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock or DC 18 Strength check to pry up. Once it is pried up, a DC 20 (28 for the person holding it open) Escape Artist check to slip through.

Several feet into a rough, narrow tunnel, you emerge into a squat cave. Weapon racks line the right wall, empty save for two sheathed shortswords, and two heavy vests hang on the left wall, covered by rotting cloaks.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The tritons store their small collection of tanaa'ryl arms here. To protect them, Wroe installed a trap that is triggered whenever someone picks any item off a rack or hook without replacing it with an item of equal weight (within 1/4 lb. heavier or lighter). When triggered, this trap releases jets of molten tanaa'ryl into the room through tiny holes in the ceiling. The resulting tanaa'ryl 'pillars' are harmful to the touch when fluid, and extremely difficult to break when they cool.

♣ Molten Tanaa'ryl Trap: CR 4; magical; location trigger; manual reset; no attack roll necessary (2d6 per round for 2 rounds + tanaa'ryl effects); DC 20 Reflex save avoids; Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 25. Note: For 2 rounds, the tanaa'ryl 'pillars' are fluid, inflicting 2d6 damage and coating the victim. Until another character makes a successful DC 14 Strength check to remove the tanaa'ryl (and several layers of the victim's skin), the victim suffers the standard effects of 'wielding' tanaa'ryl (see the sidebar on page 557). Removing the tanaa'ryl inflicts an additional 1d6 damage. After 2 rounds, the tanaa'ryl 'pillars' cool and harden, each becoming a bar with a hardness of 12, 25 wound points, and no Break DC. The PCs must successfully get through 8 of these bars before they can leave this Room (which likely takes longer than 10 minutes, allowing a chance that a triton scouting party will return to inspect the armory). Note: This trap is disabled by upsetting the weight scales within the wall, convincing the trap that the triggers within the Room always push against the proper pressure.

Encounter Condition: Submerged

Tactics: If the PCs linger in this Room for 10 minutes or more, there is a progressively higher chance that a triton scout patrol checks in on the armory. At 10 minutes, and for every 10 minutes the PCs remain in this Room thereafter, roll 1d20. Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. At the lake's southern edge, the waters wash up against the floors of two rooms that have been ripped open. To the north, they open up to more robust depths. The waters here are filled with spires, spindles, jagged stars, and other unusual rock formations in a dazzling array of colors. The lake bed is covered in a thin layer of coral which seems to have recently been torn up by humanoid hands.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The tritons harvest the coral to use in construction both martial and civil. They also mount raids of the southern dungeon rooms through the open chambers to the south (Rooms K50 and K51).

K25 THROUGH K42. THE BOGLANDS

One would expect this Section to be a hotbed of activity, being the most convenient land passage across the Region. Since the green dragon Thorodin moved in, however, it's become a wasteland. The Region's inhabitants are terrified that any trip across the boglands will draw the wyrm's ire. Thus, the majority of the encounters herein involve the dragon, animals, or scenery. Random encounters are handled separately for the boglands north and south of the central channel. While Thorodin lords over both, the hags' hold over the northern half of this Section alter what the PCs might find there.

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from anywhere in the boglands — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Section, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 15 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round). These effects are applied in addition to the effects of each Room the PCs enter while in this Section.

Additionally, Thorodin makes a Listen check once per round to notice any combat happening within this Section.

1	The PCs briefly feel a psychic 'tug' toward the crystal of vile attraction (see Room K1 and the sidebar on page 543).
2	A chill wind breezes past the PCs (the invisible hags toying with the new intruders in "their domain"). Drafty.
3–13	Nothing
14–15	A ravid slips out of the scenery and lurks near the PCs' feet before attacking (1d4 rounds later).
16–18	A patrol of four merrow, working for the hags, stumbles onto the PCs. The hags observe the exchange through a hag's eye one of the merrow wears on a necklace wrapped around his forehead. Ambush.
19	The hag covey arrives, sweeping through the area in flight (see Room K7 for details). All three attempt to grapple a single PC and carry him back to their lair (Room K8).
20	The hag covey arrives, sneaking up on the PCs while invisible (see Room K7 for details). They fight only until they have sustained a total of 20 hp of damage between them, then flee toward their lair (Room K8).

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS (ROOMS K32 THROUGH K42)

1d20	Encounter
1	The PCs set off an audible alarm cast by Thorodin, which triggers a whispering wind uttering "Who dares?" in draconic. Thorodin moves to the PCs' location at ½ his standard ground speed (20 ft.), then leaps onto the largest group of PCs he can pin using his crush attack. He engages the remaining PCs with tactics described in Room K36.
2	The PCs find a gilded statue lying upon the ground. When touched, the bust recites a 1-hour speech in Celestial at normal speaking volume (and with a pompous tone). The speech describes the difference between simply being and truly existing, and operates like fascinate (17th-level bard). While the bust speaks, add +4 to all Random Encounter rolls within 30 ft.
3–10	Nothing
11–12	The PCs stumble upon a trap hidden beneath the bog, increasing the DCs of skill checks made to find or disable it.
	◆ Spiked Pit Trap: CR 6; mechanical; location trigger, manual reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 100 ft. deep (10d6, fall); pit spikes (Atk +10 melee, 1d4 spikes per target for 1d4+5 each); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30.
13–14	Three Medium constrictor snakes live within the 30 ft. x 30 ft. area in the PCs path. The snakes move beneath the bog's surface, gaining a +10 circumstance bonus with all Hide checks made before they attack.
15–17	One of Thorodin's toadies stumbles onto the party. He tries to Hide as long as possible, observing the PCs to learn why they are here and what they intend to do. Then he attempts to flee and report his findings to his master in Room K36.
18–19	All three of Thorodin's toadies attempt to ambush the PCs and take them back to their master in Room K36.
20	Thorodin (Room K36) arrives, leaping onto the largest group of PCs he can pin using his crush attack, then engaging the remainder of the party per the tactics described under Room K36.

K25. MERFOLK OUTCASTS

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 15 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

As you slog through the boglands, something slithers past your leg — something big and scaly. The waters ripple around you for a moment in erratic patterns. You are not alone.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Several months ago, these merfolk rejected the lillend Sissefiss as Eadro's avatar, claiming that if she were such, she would have seen the merfolk away from this accursed dungeon long ago. Outcast by the colony, these heretics retreated to the lake's shoreline, where two of them encountered Glug, a locathah toadie working for the green dragon Thorodin.

Assuming the merfolk to be little challenge, Glug attacked, but the remaining two merfolk blindsided the creature, allowing the others to overpower and capture him. The merfolk harshly interrogated Glug for hours, asking him about the surrounding Regions. The merfolk were especially interested in the eastern lake, which they hoped would eventually lead out to sea, permitting their escape.

Unfortunately, the interrogation was interrupted when Thorodin sailed overhead, looking for his missing servant. The merfolk fell back into the bog, narrowly escaping the dragon's wrath, and have since taken to living under the boglands' surface at all times except when they must come up for air or to stage an ambush. They seek to capture Thorodin's toadies, hoping to gain more information before they make the trek through the eastern waters.

If the PCs improve the merfolk outcasts' attitude to Friendly or better, the merfolk explain their background and their hope to eventually flee the dungeon. They may also have limited information about adjacent Regions (DM's discretion).

Unfortunately, no amount of diplomacy reunites the outcasts with their colony. According to the lake-livers, the outcasts' words can never be forgiven. The merfolk will accept the outcasts' help during a fight against Thorodin, but even after that, they refuse to accept them back into their ranks. Even Sissefiss cannot convince the merfolk to change their minds.

Encounter Condition: Bog, Concealment

Tactics: Four merfolk outcasts (hp 6) recognize the PCs as a superior force and attack only in self-defense. They linger near the PCs until they leave this Room, primarily out of curiosity. If forced into violence, the merfolk fight until wounded, at which point the surrender.

Treasure: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two merfolk outcasts. To decrease the challenge, have the merfolk refuse to attack the PCs under any circumstances (though they might still attract the dragon or other boglands predators if they make enough noise).

Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 15 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). A spire of obsidian rock juts crazily out of the bog here, pointing up toward the heavens. Its surface is covered in worn characters and symbols that you can't make out from a distance. As you approach, a chill passes through you, as if you've passed an invisible line of some kind.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The PCs may assume the pillar is evil, but its appearance is actually due to the corrupted bog's influence, not its original design. The pillar is a remaining part of the original dungeon, a node of celestial power that repels evil. Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 15 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

A low hillock rises up out of the bog, a dense concentration of mushy vegetation from which you might be able to get a better look to the south, or hide from the area's predators.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This hillock is the gravesite of several merrow the hags killed as an example when they came to the Region. Eventually, the corrupted bog sediment and the seeping evil of the nearby hags granted the hillock vegetation semi-coherence as a tendriculos (hp 94) and breathed angry unlfe into the merrow bodies, awakening them as zombies (hp 29 each).

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Bog, Negative Energy

Tactics: The tendriculos remains still until the PCs climb up onto the hillock, stop to rest or hide next to it, or turn to leave, at which point it rises up, revealing the zombies beneath it. All shamle toward the PCs, seeking to kill them and drag them under the tendriculos with the undead merrow. Any PCs unfortunate enough to suffer this fate rise as zombies in 4d6 weeks.

The tendriculos and all zombies created in this Room will fight to the death rather than be separated. They fight all intruders to the death.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 2 zombie merrow. To decrease the challenge, have the zombie merrow awaken from a vile "sleep" before attacking, losing the chance to move or attack during the first 2 rounds of the combat.

☛ Tendriculos: CR 6; Huge plant; HD 9d8+54; hp 94; Init –1; Spd 20 ft.;

AC 16, touch 7, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +6; Grp +23; Atk +13 melee (2d8+9, bite) and +8 melee (1d6+4, 2 tendrils); Full Atk +13 melee (2d8+9, bite) and +8 melee (1d6+4, 2 tendrils); Space/Reach 15 ft./15 ft.; SA Improved grab, paralysis, swallow whole; SQ Low-light vision, plant traits, regeneration 10; SV Fort +12, Ref +2, Will +4; Str 28, Dex 9, Con 22, Int 3, Wis 8, Cha 3.

Skills and Feats: Hide +9, Listen +1, Move Silently +1, Spot +1; Alertness, Iron Will, Power Attack, Stealthy.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a tendriculos must hit a creature at least one size smaller than itself with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can try to swallow the opponent in the following round. A tendriculos can also use its improved grab ability on a tendril attack. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold, picks up the opponent, and transfers it to the mouth as a free action, automatically dealing bite damage.

Swallow Whole/Paralysis (Ex): A tendriculos can try to swallow a grabbed opponent by making a successful grapple check. Once inside the plant's mass, the opponent must succeed on a DC 20 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 3d6 rounds by the tendriculos's digestive juices, taking 2d6 points of acid damage per round. A new save is required each round inside the plant. The save DC is Constitution-based. A swallowed creature that avoids paralysis can climb out of the mass with a successful grapple check. This returns it to the plant's maw, where another successful grapple check is needed to get free. A swallowed creature can also cut its way out by using a light slashing or piercing weapon to deal 25 points of damage to the tendriculos's interior (AC 14). Once the creature exits, the plant's regenerative capacity closes the hole; another swallowed opponent must cut its own way out. A Huge tendriculos's interior can hold 2 Large, 8 Medium, 32 Small, 128 Tiny, or 512 Diminutive or smaller opponents.

Regeneration (Ex): Bludgeoning weapons and acid deal normal damage to a tendriculos. A tendriculos that loses part of its body mass can regrow it in 1d6 minutes. Holding the severed portion against the mass enables it to reattach instantly.

☛ Merrow Zombie: CR 2; Large undead; HD 8d12+3; hp 29; Init -2; Spd 30 ft. (can't run), Swim 40 ft; AC 15, touch 7, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +4; Grp +14; Atk +9 melee (1d8+9, long spear) or +9 melee (1d8+6, slam); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA —; SQ single actions only, damage reduction 5/slashing, darkvision 60 ft., undead traits; AL NE; SV Fort +2, Ref +0, Will +6; Str 23, Dex 6, Con —, Int —, Wis 10, Cha 1.

Skills and Feats: Toughness.

Single Actions Only (Ex): Zombies have poor reflexes and can perform only a single move action or attack action each round. A zombie can move up to its speed and attack in the same round, but only if it attempts a charge.

K29. GRAY RENDER GATE

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 15 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

The soppy bog seeps into your boots and stains your trousers. The bog extends far to the west and a short distance to the south before plunging into the subterranean lakes created by the catastrophe that rocked this part of the dungeon. To the north, as always, is the high, wrecked dungeon wall, reduced to rubble at the swamp's edge. One section of rubble appears to have been created after the disaster.

Initial Attitude: N/A (potentially Hostile)

Encounter: This location is the south entrance to the hag's lair, and is protected by a gray render that bonded with the covey many years ago (see Room K9 for details). Each time the PCs approach within line of sight to this location, there is a 1 in 6 chance that the render is here, guarding the entrance.

Since guarding the entrance is a tedious job, the render is easily distracted. Should the PCs attempt to trick the render to gain surprise, they gain a +2 circumstance bonus with any related skill check.

The render placed three large boulders in front of the corridor leading north to Room K7. Moving each boulder requires a successful DC 20 Strength check. Moving one boulder opens the entryway for any character of Small size or smaller, while moving two boulders opens the entryway for Medium characters and moving all three opens it for Large characters.

Encounter Condition: Bog

Tactics: Whenever the render encounters something new, his first impulse is to smash it against the ground to see what happens. His first action here, however, is to lob a boulder at the PCs, making a +3 ranged attack that inflicts 2d6+6 damage if it hits. Thereafter, he spends 1 round uprooting a bog tree, then charges the PCs, swinging at them at the end of his movement. Finally, he alternates between smashing at the PCs with his "club" and attempting to grab one of the intruders so he can throw them against a nearby wall.

The gray render is extremely loyal to the hags and fights every combat as if their lives depend upon his victory. He fights to the death.

Treasure: The gray render wears a hag's eye on a necklace, a gift from the covey. The render cherishes this item, and lashes out at any who attempt to touch or steal it. Unknown to him, the covey observes all of his actions through the gift — and all of the PCs' actions as well, so long as they keep the item in their possession.

EL: N/A (potentially 8)

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 2 levels of barbarian to the gray render. To decrease the challenge, reduce the gray render's initiative roll to 1.

K29. BRIGHT LIGHTS, DEEP FOLLY

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 10 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

As you slog through an area of ankle-deep mud, three yellow globes of glowing energy wink into sight before you. They converge and swirl in a maddening circle over your heads, then cluster to the south.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The globes are indeed three will o'wisps (hp 42 each), but the PCs probably don't expect them to be helpful. The will o'wisps show the only path through the bog in this area, not out of kindness, but to induce fright in those who travel through this Room. The wisps are just smart enough to recognize that most travelers mistrust them, so they hope to play upon that preconception by showing the safe path and expecting to be disregarded.

If the PCs follow the will o'wisps' movements through this area, they encounter no pitfalls and the will o'wisps leave them be thereafter (recognizing the PCs as their cunning equals). Otherwise, there is a 75% chance that each PC falls into a patch of quicksand during each round of movement.

Encounter Condition: Bog, [Submerged]

Tactics: When one or more PCs become mired in the quicksand, the will o'wisps attack, focusing their efforts on those not caught within the quicksand to ensure they cannot aid their companions. The creatures retreat when their hit points are reduced to 20 or less.

PCs in quicksand must make a DC 20 Swim check every round to simply tread water in place, or a DC 15 Swim check to move 5 ft. in whatever direction is desired. If a trapped character fails this check by 5 or more, he sinks below the surface and begins to drown whenever he can no longer hold his breath.

PCs below the surface of a bog may swim back to the surface with a successful Swim check (DC 15, +1 per consecutive round of being under the surface).

Pulling out a character trapped in quicksand can be difficult. A rescuer needs a branch, spear haft, rope, or similar tool that enables him to reach the victim with one end of it. Then he must make a DC 18 Strength check to successfully pull the victim, and the victim must make a DC 14 Strength check to hold onto the branch, pole, or rope. If the victim fails to hold on, he must make a DC 15 Swim check immediately to stay above the surface. If both checks succeed, the victim is pulled 5 ft. closer to safety.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one will o'wisp. To decrease the challenge, remove one will o'wisp.

✦ Will-O'-Wisp: CR 6; Small aberration (air); HD 9d8; hp 42; Init +13; Spd Fly 50 ft. (perfect); AC 29, touch 29, flat-footed 20; Base Atk +6; Grp -3; Atk +16 melee touch (2d8 electricity, shock); Full Atk +16 melee touch (2d8 electricity, shock); SA —; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., immunity to magic, natural invisibility; AL CE; SV Fort +3, Ref +12, Will +9; Str 1, Dex 29, Con 10, Int 15, Wis 16, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Bluff +13, Diplomacy +3, Disguise +1 (+3 acting), Intimidate +3, Listen +17, Search +14, Spot +17, Survival +3 (+5 following tracks); Alertness, Blind-Fight, Dodge, Improved Initiative, Weapon Finesse.

Immunity to Magic (Ex): A will-o'-wisp is immune to most spells or spell-like abilities that allow spell resistance, except magic missile and maze.

Natural Invisibility (Ex): A startled or frightened will-o'-wisp can extinguish its glow, effectively becoming invisible as the spell.

K30. SINKHOLES

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 15 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

Gentle waves wash through this portion of the bog, carrying through from the wide, deep eastern lake. The scene is tranquil, given its surroundings.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This treacherous area contains dozens of sinkholes where the soggy ground is gradually slipping into the depths to the east and south. Should any character run through this area, or move into it without checking the ground first, he immediately falls into one of these sinkholes.

Between 5 ft. and 20 ft. below the surface, the sinkholes are connected, leading out beneath the unstable ground to the eastern lake. Three giant crocodiles (hp 59 each) live in this submerged layer of the bog, surfacing through the sinkholes to attack the PCs as they make their way across the bog. The PCs must make Balance checks each round while in combat in this location as well, but the DC rises to 25.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Bog, Poor Footing 18

Tactics: When any crocodile manages to grab a character, it drags him down through a sinkhole, trying to pin him in the water layer below the bog. Even if a character dragged to this layer manages to escape the crocodile, he must move an additional 15 ft. within the water layer before he can begin his ascent through a sinkhole. Further, he suffers a -4 circumstance penalty with all Swim checks until he surfaces again.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one crocodile and increase their Hide checks by +4. To decrease the challenge, reduce all Balance check DCs by -5.

✦ Giant Crocodile: CR 4; Huge animal; HD 7d8+28; hp 59; Init +1; Spd 20 ft., swim 30 ft.; AC 16, touch 9, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +5; Grp +21; Atk +11 melee (2d8+12, bite) or +11 melee (1d12+12, tail slap); Full Atk +11 melee (2d8+12, bite) or +11 melee (1d12+12 tail slap); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft.; SA Improved grab; SQ Hold breath, low-light vision; AL N; SV Fort +9, Ref +6, Will +3; Str 27, Dex 12, Con 19, Int 1, Wis 12, Cha 2.

Skills and Feats: Hide +1*, Listen +5, Spot +5, Swim +16; Alertness, Endurance, Skill Focus (Hide).

K31. CHUUL LAIR

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 15 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

Ripples dance across the surface of this waist-deep quagmire, where the fog seems to maliciously wrap around everything, slowly enveloping all in sight. A shallow pool spreads out before you, offering the prospect of washing the mud from your limbs for at least a few minutes.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The deep pool is home to an isolationist chuul (hp 109) that attacks any PCs who invade its secluded haven. Unless the PCs spot it first, the creature allows the lake's minute current to push it toward the party, attempting to remain still and look like a patch of bogland until the last possible moment.

Encounter Condition: Bog

Tactics: The chuul drags any paralyzed victims into the pool, dropping them to the soggy floor 15 ft. below, where they begin to drown.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add the Ambush (darkness) and Encounter Conditions. To decrease the challenge, wound the chuul during a recent fight with the green dragon (-30 hp).

✦ Chuul: CR 7; Large aberration (aquatic); HD 11d8+44; hp 109; Init +7; Spd 30 ft., swim 20 ft.; AC 22, touch 12, flat-footed 19; Base Atk +8; Grp +17; Atk +12 melee (2d6+5, claw); Full Atk +12 melee (2d6+5, 2 claws); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Constrict 3d6+5, improved grab, paralytic tentacles; SQ Amphibious, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to poison; AL CE; SV Fort +7, Ref +6, Will +9; Str 20, Dex 16, Con 18, Int 10, Wis 14, Cha 5.

Constrict (Ex): On a successful grapple check, a chuul deals 3d6+5 points of damage.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a chuul must hit with a claw attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict or on its next turn transfer a grabbed opponent to its tentacles.

Paralytic Tentacles (Ex): A chuul can transfer grabbed victims from a claw to its tentacles as a move action. The tentacles grapple with the same strength as the claw but deal no damage. However, they exude a paralytic secretion. Anyone held in the tentacles must succeed on a DC 19 Fortitude save each round on the chuul's turn or be paralyzed for 6 rounds. The save DC is Constitution-based. While held in the tentacles, paralyzed or not, a victim automatically takes 1d8+2 points of damage each round from the creature's mandibles.

Amphibious (Ex): Although chuuls are aquatic, they can survive indefinitely on land.

Skills and Feats: A chuul has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

K32. LAKE CHANNEL

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 10 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

A thick fog bank shields this narrow channel of cool water cutting through the warm boglands.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A heavy mist slowly traverses this channel, headed to the western lake from its birthplace in the deeper waters of Region L. It is an unnatural fog, it rests upon the water and never dissipates. When it reaches this Room, it swirls and begins the long journey around the bog again.

Encounter Condition: Fog 20, Submerged

Tactics: The fog is a manifestation of all that is wrong with the Region. Negative emotions and hatred fuel it and fear attracts it. Merely passing through it fills non-aquatic creatures with dread.

Should the PCs come in contact with the mist, they suffer the effects of chill touch, confusion, crushing despair, and suggestion (DC 20) all at once. PCs are targeted with each effect for 1d4 rounds, before growing used to it or so jaded it no longer affects them. Either way, if they successfully save against these effects, they are immune to them for 24 hours.

The mist cannot be harmed, but spells such as repulsion and protection from evil grant bonuses to the save. It is a supernatural phenomenon and cannot be harmed. The actual effect of the suggestion is left to the DM.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add feeblemind and waves of exhaustion to the mist. To decrease the challenge, allow the PCs to turn the mist as if it were undead.

K33. THE WAILING WILLOW

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC equal to the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

A tall willow tree stands at the southern edge of a deep fog bank, its branches swaying gently through the wafting air. A treasure chest is wedged in between the tree's roots, barely visible through a thick layer of mud.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The willow tree is an illusion caused by the thick fog. In reality, the tree is a roper (hp 85) using the fog to lure prey into its preferred attack range (20 ft.).

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Bog, Fog 20

Tactics: The roper waits until at least two PCs are within 20 ft., then whips its branch-strands out toward them. If it manages to attach at least two strands to PCs, it drags them toward its position, assuming the others will follow to save their friends. Otherwise, it rips its roots up out of the bog and begins lurching toward the PCs, following them during the following hour (after which time it returns to this location).

The green dragon ignores the roper, knowing that it can't hurt him and trusting its methods to keep his lair safe from intruders through the channel fog bank.

Treasure: The treasure chest contains four pitted and useless swords, three pitted and useless daggers, and one +1 copper dagger, as well as three sets of pitted and useless chainmail. An oval citrine stone, worth 50 gp, is embedded in the chest's lid and may be removed with a successful DC 16 Strength check.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, provide the roper with an additional offensive weapon, a gift from the corrupted land — its strands exude an corrosive oil, inflicting 1d8 points of acid damage per strand per round they are in contact with a target. To decrease the challenge, have any ranger, druid, or other character who spends most of his time in the wilderness make a DC 28 Spot check to detect the roper before it attacks.

Roper: CR 12; Large magical beast; HD 10d10+30; hp 85; Init +5; Spd 10 ft.; AC 24, touch 10, flat-footed 23; Base Atk +10; Grp +18; Atk +11 ranged touch (drag, strand) or +13 melee (2d6+6, bite); Full Atk +11 ranged touch (drag, 6 strands) and +13 melee (2d6+6, bite); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft. (50 ft. with strand); SA Drag, strands, weakness; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., immunity to electricity, low-light vision, resistance to cold 10, spell resistance 30, vulnerability to fire; AL CE; SV Fort +10, Ref +8, Will +8; Str 19, Dex 13, Con 17, Int 12, Wis 16, Cha 12.

Alertness, Improved Initiative, Iron Will, Weapon Focus (strand).

Drag (Ex): If a roper hits with a strand attack, the strand latches onto the opponent's body. This deals no damage but drags the stuck opponent 10 feet closer each subsequent round (provoking no attack of opportunity) unless that creature breaks free, which requires a DC 23 Escape Artist check or a DC 19 Strength check. The check DCs are Strength-based, and the Escape Artist DC includes a +4 racial bonus. A roper can draw in a creature within 10 feet of itself and bite with a +4 attack bonus in the same round. A strand has 10 hit points and can be attacked by making a successful sunder attempt. However, attacking a roper's strand does not provoke an attack of opportunity. If the strand is currently attached to a target, the roper takes a -4 penalty on its opposed attack roll to resist the sunder attempt. Severing a strand deals no damage to a roper.

Strands (Ex): Most encounters with a roper begin when it fires strong, sticky strands. The creature can have up to six strands at once, and they can strike up to 50 feet away (no range increment). If a strand is severed, the roper can extrude a new one on its next turn as a free action.

Weakness (Ex): A roper's strands can sap an opponent's strength. Anyone grabbed by a strand must succeed on a DC 18 Fortitude save or take 2d8 points of Strength damage. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Skills: * Ropers have a +8 racial bonus on Hide checks in stony or icy areas.

K34. DRAGON SPIKE

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC equal to the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

A large lake extends to the west, beyond a patch of heavy surface moss and seaweed. The foliage is oddly grouped, and an unfortunate firefly seems to have become trapped beneath one large section of it. The insect doesn't move, though it could be faking death or preserving energy until it spots a way out of the water.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The tritons of the western lake collected this foliage here to conceal one of their blacksmith's latest contraptions — a spear trap utilizing ammunition made from tanaatyl, or crushed demon bone.

This mineral burns with unholy fire, giving the impression of a "firefly" in the water through a patch of foliage that has drifted open. Any PC who studies the firefly from a distance may make a DC 25 Search check to realize that the insect is really a fire burning beneath the bog's surface. If three or more PCs investigate the foliage up close, they trigger the traps unless they specifically declare they are watching for them (in which case they may make Search checks to notice them as standard).

Once triggered, each of the traps launches a tanaa'ryl-tipped spear in a high arc toward the green dragon's lair (Room K36). If any PCs in this Room are Large size or larger, the spears target them before continuing on to the dragon's lair. If Thorodin is present, each spear that didn't hit a character targets him at the end of its trip across the bog.

Whether any spears hit the dragon or not, he charges across the boglands toward this Room, intent upon killing anyone located here. Only if the PCs immediately take cover, and successfully make Hide checks opposed by the dragon's Search skill, do they avoid being attacked. Even then, the dragon continues his search for another minute before leaving.

Encounter Condition: Bog

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: For each trap the PCs successfully disable, they gain 1 tanaa'ryl-tipped spear.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, aim the traps lower than expected, so they fire at Medium characters as well. To decrease the challenge, allow Thorodin to make a DC 25 Spot check to notice the attack upon his lair.

K35. THE FINAL RESTING PLACE OF ALNYE THE BRAVE

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC equal to the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

An 8-ft. tall outcropping of obsidian juts out across the swamp's surface, pointing at a near-horizontal angle over the shoreline toward the eastern depths. A slight, skeletal figure draped in ruined leather armor and carrying a rotting satchel lies in the bizarre rock's shadow. The figure's right arm is outstretched toward the uprooted stone, as if the poor soul had been trying to touch it before he died, and somehow became frozen in place when he perished.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The skeletal figure is the corpse of an elven adventurer who, after swimming out of the horrific depths of Region L, came ashore to find a ferocious green dragon cutting off his only avenue of escape. The obsidian rock was once a pillar identical to the one in Room K26, a node of celestial power that repelled evil. The green dragon Thorodin grew tired of the constant, irritating song in his mind and tracked it here, battering the pillar until it tipped over and the song stopped. The power within the node exploded outward, injuring Thorodin and driving him away for a time. This explosion also froze the elven adventurer Alnye in place as he reached for the pillar. Lost in a hallucinatory dream during the final moments of his life, Alnye believed the pillar to be an ancient holy monument within his home village. He carried this blissful image into his afterlife.

There is no combat to be had here, no traps to avoid, no puzzles to solve. The Room exists as a reminder that others travel the dungeon, and to point toward the node in Room K26 as a source of aid (or harm, if the PCs are cynical).

Encounter Condition: Bog

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Most treasure the elf carried with him was long ago stolen by Thorodin's toadies or other brave souls exploring this area. All that remains is a scroll of water breathing, which has become soaked through and stuck to the inside lining of the elf's satchel. A successful DC 30 Search check is required to find this item, which has a 50% chance of failing when used due to misread, soggy script.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

K36. THORODIN THE PILLAGER

The depth of this encounter is at or above the surface.

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently present, the PCs can see him — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC equal to the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party minus 4). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

The centerpiece of the southern boglands is an enormous green dragon, stretched out across the swamp like a basking, over-fed gnoil. Surrounding his slumbering form are the carcasses of several merrow, their bodies ravaged by mighty teeth and claws. Some of the remains hang upon stout willow trees that have survived the dragon's movements, while others poke up through the slow-shifting mist, barely visible in the muck. As you pick through the bog, your foot comes down on something hard and round.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Thorodin (hp 299) considers this Region his and freely hunts its inhabitants for sport and to collect the few belongings he likes as part of his scattered hoard. He is an omnipresent, oppressive terror to every creature living here, a fact he relishes and now works to support whenever possible. Consequently, he attacks all intruders within his lair on sight.

A lonely creature, Thorodin leaves select victims alive and offers them the chance to become his toadies. Currently he has three such servants — all locathah. He sends these beasts out into this and the surrounding Regions to explore, collect treasure, and bring back amusements for him to play with — until he grows bored and kills them (if they're alive) or adds them to his hoard (otherwise).

Thorodin was unaware that the hags wanted him dead until recently, when his favored toadie, Glug, snuck into the merrow beach (Room K10), where he overheard the minions talking about their mistresses' plans. The dragon is unconcerned with the hags, presuming that any attack they mount will fail. Mildly intrigued with this development, he feigns sleep a great deal, hoping to lure his new enemies out of hiding. (This is what he's doing when the PCs arrive, unless the DM alters this encounter and its description).

Should the PCs kill Thorodin, they are acclaimed as champions by all the Region's civilized inhabitants, including the beleaguered merfolk and the nihilistically military tritons in the eastern lake. Within 1d6 hours after the PCs leave, however, the hags exert their influence, moving the Room K28's gray render (hp 125) and Room K10's merrow (hp 26 each) into this Room to seize control of the fallen wyrm's holdings. If possible, they capture the lillend Sissefiss (Room K40), using her as leverage to convince the merfolk to attack the tritons.

hoping the two forces kill each other off. After consolidating their expanded territory, the hags begin scheming ways to push their perimeter out even further, using the insane bronze dragon Lightspar (Room K5) and all other resources at their disposal to do so.

Should the PCs linger after they kill Thorodin, the hags mount an attack within 24 hours, hoping to take advantage of the PCs' weakened states. This likely leads to a blow-out final battle across the bogs, with the hags, merrow, the gray tender, and Lightspar on one side and the PCs on the other (supported by the merfolk, tritons, and their allies at dramatically appropriate moments, per the DM's discretion).

Other effects of killing Thorodin are described in this Region's other encounter descriptions.

Encounter Condition: Bog

Tactics: Though Thorodin cannot make Spot checks while feigning sleep, he makes active Listen checks every 10 minutes. Assuming that anything he hears is a hag attack, he waits until he's sure the intruders are located on the southern boglands before attacking. His first action is to rear up and leap toward the intruders, hoping to crush two or more of them beneath his bulk. Throughout the combat, Thorodin uses this tactic whenever he thinks he can crush two or more enemies at once.

Thereafter, the dragon attacks the enemy within his melee reach who has inflicted the greatest amount of damage upon him so far during the combat. Once the enemies pinned beneath him stop squirming for 1 full round, he assumes they're dead and takes flight, hovering over enemies and attacking them with his standard melee options (bite, claws, and tail slap).

Thorodin's spells are largely useless in combat. He tends to use them upon his toadies before he sends them out to explore the dungeon.

Treasure: Thorodin's hoard consists of 1,000 gp (nearly all the gold owned by the Region's inhabitants), 1 set of tanaa'ryl chainmail, 1 tanaa'ryl shortsword, a ring of water breathing, and 3 hag's eyes (collected from hag minions the dragon or his toadies killed). Unable to make a suitable pile from this meager treasure, Thorodin simply pushes it together as best he can, only to scatter it around whenever he moves through the bog. The PCs can't simply pick and choose what they want — at least not initially. For every minute they spend in this Room, they may make a cooperative DC 30 Search check to find 1d100 gp and one item, until all gold and items are found.

EL: 14

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the toadies — upon whom Thorodin has already cast enlarge, magic weapon, and resistance — attack immediately. To reduce the challenge, remove the locathah toadies. Alternately, have Thorodin be flying or stalking one of the lake Sections, to return in 1d4 rounds.

Thorodin casts as a 5th-level sorcerer.

Note: Thorodin's power is much different than a typical green dragon of his size. He isn't the true threat of the Region, anyway. If the PCs lay him and the inhabitants of the Region see this, the hags will most surely attack while the PCs are weak.

K37. DRAGON SNARE

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC equal to the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at ½ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

The bog is strangely still to the south, along the shoreline abutting the western lake, as if something enormous waits just beneath the waters...

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Something does wait beneath the waters to the south: one of the triton blacksmith's latest contraptions, a giant net trap designed to snap closed over a 25 ft. × 25 ft. area to the north.

◆ Huge Snare Trap: CR 1; mechanical; manual or proximity trigger; manual reset; +10 melee (PCs in a 20-ft. square are grappled by net (Str 16 if they fail a DC 12 Reflex save); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20. Note: This trap is disabled by simply cutting all fifteen tension lines along the snare's edge.

Encounter Condition: Bog

Tactics: The trap is inactive at present, but may be made ready by two or more characters making a successful DC 20 Craft (trapmaking) check. This check requires 10 minutes to perform. When active, the trap is triggered by three or more PCs standing at the numbered location on the map.

The tritons hope to use this trap to gain the element of surprise over the green dragon Thorodin when they finally take the offensive. Unfortunately, the trap has a faulty design and uses substandard materials. If the PCs ally themselves with the tritons, they may improve upon the design with a successful DC 25 Craft (trapmaking) check. This raises the net's grapple Strength to 20 and the Reflex save DC to 16 — still not enough to be effective against the dragon, though it might slow him down early in combat.

K38. LIZARD LAIR

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC equal to the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

Barren rocks rise from the moor, sloping down into the eastern lakeshore. Strange clicks come from the cracks between the rocks and several slender blue lizards emerge from the shadows, tiny horns jutting up through the scales on their heads. As the curious creatures scurry toward you, the skin on your arms begins to tingle.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The rocks are home to a clutch of sixteen shocker lizards (hp 26 each). They are not aggressive, but defend their home if they have to. They, however, are really good at hiding and gain an additional +4 racial bonus to Hide checks in this bog. The DM may wish to make the variable (1d6 each), to reflect that not all of them have learned to hide from Thorodin equally well.

Encounter Condition: Bog, Total Concealment (while the lizards are hidden within the rocks)

Tactics: The lizards usually click a few times to drive visitors away, and if this doesn't work, they close to within 5 ft. and administer stunning shocks. If the PCs still refuse to leave, or retaliate, the lizards flee into the cracks between the rocks and pelt the PCs with lethal shocks.

Treasure: Anything of valuable to the shocker lizards has been taken or lost over the years. A few gold coin scraps can be found with a DC 35 Search check.

EL: 11

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DCs of all Reflex saves made to reduce electricity damage by 4 (unless the target is somehow dry and standing on the rocks). To decrease the challenge, remove four shocker lizards.

◆ Shocker Lizard: CR 3; Small magical beast; HD 4d10+4; hp 26; Init +6; Spd 40 ft., climb 20 ft., swim 20 ft.; AC 16, touch 13, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +4; Grp +0; Atk +5 melee (1d4, bite); Full Atk +5 melee (1d4, bite); Space/Reach 5 ft./5 ft.; SA lethal shock, stunning shock; SQ darkvision 60 ft., electricity sense, immunity to electricity, low-light vision; AL N; SV Fort +5, Ref +6, Will +2; Str 10, Dex 15, Con 13, Int 2, Wis 12, Cha 6.

Skills and Feats: Climb +11, Hide +11, Jump +8, Listen +4, Spot +5, Swim +10; Ability Focus (stunning shock), Improved Initiative.

Lethal Shock (Su): Whenever two or more shocker lizards are within 20 feet of each other, they can work together to create a lethal shock. This effect has a radius of 20 feet, centered on any one contributing lizard. The shock deals 2d8 points of electricity damage for each lizard contributing to it, to a maximum of 12d8. A Reflex save (DC 10 + number of lizards contributing) reduces the damage by half.

Stunning Shock (Su): Once per round, a shocker lizard can deliver an electrical shock to a single opponent within 5 feet. This attack deals 2d8 points of nonlethal damage to living opponents (Reflex DC 15 half). The save DC is Constitution-based.

Skills: Shocker lizards have a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks due to their coloration. Shocker lizards have a +2 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks. Shocker lizards use their Dexterity modifier instead of their Strength modifier for Climb and Jump checks. A shocker lizard has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on a Climb check, even if rushed or threatened. A shocker lizard has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

K39. DRAGON STRIKE

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 10 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

The southwestern edge of the bog laps onto a patch of remaining dungeon floor, which extends around the lake and leads to several hallways and doorways farther to the south. The stone floor is wet with lake water, and recent footprints are visible moving from there to a line of collapsed ruins leading directly east.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The tritons of the western lake made these prints while setting up a new trap to use against the green dragon Thorodin — a jet of molten tanaa'ryl buried in the collapsed southern wall, aimed north. The jet is set to go off when anything passes within 20 ft. of the southern wall at a height of 10 to 15 ft. Should any PC be located within this position (possibly due to a levitation spell, or because he climbs up onto the collapsed southern wall to investigate), the trap goes off.

◆ Tanaa'ryl Jet Trap: CR 3; magical; location trigger; manual reset; +10 ranged (2d6 per round for 2 rounds + tanaa'ryl effects); DC 20 Reflex save avoids; Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 25. Note: For 2 rounds, the tanaa'ryl 'pillars' are fluid, inflicting 2d6 damage and coating the victim. Until another character makes a successful DC 10 Strength check to remove the tanaa'ryl (and several layers of the victim's skin), the victim suffers the standard effects of 'wielding' tanaa'ryl (see the sidebar on page 557). Removing the tanaa'ryl inflicts an additional 1d6 damage. After 2 rounds, the tanaa'ryl 'pillars' cool and harden, becoming a shell over the character's skin. This shell provides no armor benefits, and requires a successful DC 15 Strength check to remove, inflicting an additional 1d6+3 damage in the process. Note: This trap is disabled by directing the magical apparatus slightly out of sync with the holes in the rock face, causing the tanaa'ryl to splash and cool harmlessly within the wall.

Encounter Condition: Bog

Tactics: Once triggered, the trap automatically draws Thorodin's attention. The dragon moves across the boglands toward this Room at $\frac{1}{2}$ his standard ground speed (20 ft.), attacking any who dare venture this close to his pet in Room K40.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, aim the traps lower than expected, so they fire at Medium PCs as well. To decrease the challenge, allow Thorodin to make a DC 25 Spot check to notice the attack upon his lair.

K40. THE CAGED AVATAR

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 10 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

The collapsed dungeon rock at the bog's southern edge has been gouged out by tremendous claws, creating an alcove that has been converted into a resplendent if humiliating prison. In front of the alcove is a moss-covered lump the size of a crouching human. Within the alcove is a giant cage made of gold- and silver-plated iron, imprisoning a brooding bird-woman with the long, feathered tail of an otherworldly serpent. Though her beauty is caked in sweat and grime, you are instantly smitten. She is a goddess. Within her cage is an artist's easel, and an impressive gallery of her work decorates the alcove's walls. As you arrive, she is playing an ethereal flute piece that raises your spirits for the first time in the many weeks you've spent within this endless dungeon. She stops playing and lowers the flute to her lap, regarding you with a combination of curiosity and disdain.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The creature within the cage is the lillend Sissefiss (45 hp), whom the merfolk in the western lake believe to be an avatar of their god Eadro. The green dragon Thorodin captured Sissefiss several years ago while patrolling "his territory," and gouged out the alcove to create a suitable home for her. Thorodin chose this location well, having discovered months before that the mossy lump here is in fact an altar left behind by the dungeon's creators, a holy relic that radiates a permanent antimagic field 50 ft. in all directions. This prevented Sissefiss from using her natural abilities to escape the cage or summon help.

Thorodin ordered his minions to create a gilded cage and collect instruments and art tools with which his pet might occupy herself. At first he was merely curious about her, and concerned that she remain sane, but the many paintings and songs she has created during her stay have captured his heart, and he has come to prize her above all other treasures within his hoard. Thorodin visits Sissefiss at least once a day, urging her to speak with him; she never does. She plays and paints for him as an escape, a way to keep him distracted so she need not converse with her despised captor.

As the PCs arrive at the alcove, Sissefiss assumes they are more of Thorodin's minions, come to "make her more comfortable" or trick her into letting down her defenses. She rains caustic words upon them, her rage scarcely contained, and takes every opportunity to humiliate them. Deep down, she hopes her verbal lashing will incite the PCs' wrath, prompting them to let her out of the cage, or come in after her. Either way, she believes that once the cage door is open, the antimagic field will end and she will be able to use her spells and other abilities to escape.

The PCs suffer a –8 circumstance penalty with all skill checks made to improve Sissefiss' attitude. If they manage to improve her attitude to Indifferent, she hears them out, giving them a chance to explain their case, after which they may make skill checks to further improve her attitude without this penalty. The only other ways to convince Sissefiss that of the party's intention to help are to free her and allow her to escape to the western lake, or to attack the dragon within her line of sight (from her cage she can see everything that happens in Room K36).

If the PCs secure Sissefiss' goodwill, she cooperates with any action that doesn't send her into combat against the dragon before she speaks with the merfolk. After speaking with the merfolk, her rage overcomes her fear and she calls for them to rise up against the dragon. If the PCs think to visit the tritons with her, her powers of persuasion grant them a +4 circumstance bonus with all skill checks made to improve the tritons' attitude or convince them to join forces with the merfolk against the dragon. If the PCs wish, Sissefiss can become the linchpin in a cooperative offensive against the dragon, leading the charge alongside the party.

The only way to restore magical ability within the alcove is to desecrate the moss-covered altar. Finding the altar in the first place requires a successful DC 25 Search check. Thereafter, a successful DC 20 Knowledge (religion) check identifies it as a dedication to the god of order. The celestials used the altar to help contain demons' magical abilities, but Thorodin has perverted its purpose. In order to stop the antimagic field, the PCs will have to go a step further, committing an act that borders on evil — they must destroy the altar. They can accomplish this in a variety of ways. They can physically destroy the altar (which has a hardness of 10 and 200 hit points), they can attack it with unholy water (which inflicts 1d20 points of damage per vial, ignoring hardness), or they can attack it with tanaa'ryl weapons (which ignore the first 5 points of hardness with each successful hit).

When the altar's hit points are reduced to 0, it explodes, casting a powerful wall of concussive force across the Region. Every character and creature not protected by a physical barrier at least 1 ft. thick suffers 1d10 subdual damage and is knocked prone unless they make a successful DC 20 Fortitude save. Thereafter, the antimagic field vanishes. Of course, Thorodin also knows that something is wrong and heads to the alcove at top speed.

Encounter Condition: Bog

Tactics: Once freed from her cage, Sissefiss attempts to use her distracting spells and abilities to keep the PCs and others at bay, saving hallucatory terrain to use when she approaches the western lake. She casts this spell to extend any pursuers' view of the bog's edge out over the water, likely causing them to fall into the lake mid-stride and giving her valuable rounds to escape toward the merfolk colony.

Unless the PCs destroy the antimagic field beforehand, Sissefiss can't use any spells even after she escapes. She simply flies toward the lake, using her melee attacks only in self-defense.

If Thorodin notices the PCs at the alcove, he assumes they are trying to steal his prize and reacts with every option in his arsenal to destroy them as quickly and painfully as possible. He uses only combat attacks, abilities, and spells, in order of highest potential damage to the largest number of enemies.

Treasure: It's unlikely that the PCs will be able to carry the gilded cage out of the dungeon, as it weighs 1,000 lbs., but if they somehow manage to do so, it can be melted down and sold for 5,000 gp. The instruments within Sissefiss' cage are unremarkable, but each of her paintings is worth 1d6 × 100 gp. Each painting is approximately 3 ft. × 4 ft. and weighs 8 lbs.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two lizard-folk guards who have left their people in the southern dungeons to serve the green dragon Thorodin. Upon sighting the PCs, one of these creatures engages the PCs while the other runs north to alert Thorodin. To decrease the challenge, have Sissefiss believe the PCs to be rescuers when they arrive, eliminating conflict between her and the party unless they intentionally anger her.

K41. TOADIE LAIR

Special Note: Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 15 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

This partial dungeon room opens onto a wide, deep lake to the east. It is around the corner from a large bog to the west, and many humanoid footprints slop back and forth from that direction. A pile of wet seaweed lies on the floor in the corner, below two makeshift hammocks and next to a stack of discarded egg shells. One bunk is covered in shed scales and smells of rancid fish. Whatever lives here cares little for keeping it tidy.

Initial Attitude: Hostile (if any toadies are present)

Encounter: Thorodin's toadies would prefer to dwell in the bog, which they all find more pleasant than hard dungeon floor, but the dragon sends them away except when giving them orders. Still, they must remain within easy summoning distance, so they live here, just out of his sight.

Sheele sleeps on the seaweed pile on the floor. The eggshells are the remains of his last meal, stolen from the chuul's clutch in Room K31.

When the PCs arrive, roll 1d20 to determine which toadies are present, as follows:

1d20	Toadies Present
1–15	None
16–18	Pif only
19	Sheele and Pif
20	All three — Glug, Sheele, and Pif

If the PCs sweep the Room for items of interest and make a successful DC 30 Search check, they find a loose stone at the foot of the seaweed pile. Beneath it is a hollowed out area where the toadies store their extra weapons and the few items they assumed were too unimpressive to add to Thorodin's hoard.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If present, the toadies attempt to take on the PCs themselves, hoping not to have to run to Thorodin to solve their problems. If any of them drops to 4 or fewer hit points, they all flee into the bog, screaming for the dragon's help.

Treasure: The hollow at the base of Sheele's seaweed bed contains 1 light crossbow, 12 crossbow bolts, a set of thieves' tools, 76 sp, 14 cp, a flawed blue quartz gem (4 gp), and the carapace of a dead gemsect (Room K74), which looks to be worth 200 gp, but is in fact worthless. A crumbling book lies on top of the small collection, wrapped in a filthy blanket. The book was once covered in slime, but has been lovingly wiped clean and warmed to preserve the pages. The book is written in Draconic and contains the spells geas/quest, legend lore, and veil.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add +3 to the result of the roll to determine which toadies are present. To decrease the challenge, subtract –2 from this roll.

K42. THE GRAPPLING WALL

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

A tunnel leads into the collapsed rock to the west, through what appear to be the remains of a collection of impressive statues, all of famed celestial warriors. The statues are broken to bits, and now look like a pile of petrified limbs and torsos buried by history.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The statues are magical guardian traps that retain their power despite being dismembered. As the PCs approach within 10 ft. of the tunnel leading west toward the bog, along the wall on either side, the trap activates and the limbs begin moving. They try to grapple the nearest PCs and drag them into the rubble, inflicting melee damage until the victim is dead. One hour after a victim stops moving, the traps let go, dropping the victims' corpses to the floor.

♣ Grappling Statue Trap: CR 5; magical; proximity trigger; automatic reset; +12 melee (1d3+5 plus grapple); Search DC 20; Disable Device N/A. Note: The statues each possess a Strength score of 20, a hardness of 8, 30 hit points, and no Break DC.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the statues' Strength scores to 25. To reduce the challenge of this encounter, allow a DC 20 Reflex save to leap out of the statues' reach when they begin to move.

K43 THROUGH K45. THE ABYSSAL EDGE

The eastern lake extends into Regions H, L, and P, and is the dungeon's largest body of water. Like the western lake, it's infested with the compacted evil crushed or swept aside during the flood, and this evil permeates everything herein. Within this Region, the lake's edge belongs entirely to one creature, a mutated water spider which lairs along the southwestern shoreline (Room K68) and hunts here, in Room K45. This creature is ferocious and long ago drove away all competition within the Section. Other challenges remain, however, waiting to send the PCs to a watery grave.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1–4	A corpse floats by, unrecognizable after being caught directly in a wide spray of highly corrosive acid. (This is a victim of the water spider — see Room K45).
5–17	Nothing
18	The hag covey arrives, sweeping through the area in flight (see Room K7 for details). All three attempt to grapple a single PC and carry him back to their lair (Room K8).
19	The hag covey arrives, sneaking up on the PCs while invisible (see Room K7 for details). They fight only until they have sustained a total of 20 hp of damage between them, then flee toward their lair (Room K8).
20	Thorodin (hp 230) arrives, hovering over the PCs and performing melee attacks until his hit points drop to 199 or below, at which point he tries to snatch up a PC and fly back to his lair (Room K36).

K43. THE WELL OF LAST RESORT

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 10 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

Fifteen feet below the surface is an irregular circle of darkness. It doesn't move, nor approach, but every moment you observe it, you feel a sense of euphoria, as if you're drifting on air. The dungeon falls away around you, and your troubles vanish into the depths...

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The circle is a well leading down 100 ft. to a chamber that was swallowed into the earth during the flood. The celestials built the trap that plunged the chamber into the earth, knowing that if they ever lost control of this chamber, nothing else would matter. They hoped that if they had to activate the trap, burying the chamber 100 ft. down in a well of magical protection would contain the vile influence of its occupant.

The sunken chamber contains the remains of a powerful demon lord named Vizeed (hp 174), whose researches into new planes of existence revealed cracks between the known realms. These cracks were seemingly empty, but attracted life energy (i.e. character levels), draining them into oblivion. From the moment Vizeed first observed the cracks, he became a conduit for them, sucking the life energy out of all with whom he came into contact. With the energy went experience and memory — those entirely consumed slipped out of history as if they had never existed. Only Vizeed remembered them.

The celestials were aware of the cracks but never investigated them for fear of unleashing them upon the world. When Vizeed's partial victims came to their attention, they hunted him down, eventually trapping him within a magical prison chamber. Upon this prison's completion, they transferred the chamber here. Never did they open the chamber, nor attempt to interact with the demon lord — they were content to let him die in his new home.

Yet Vizeed did not die. He outlived all but his youngest and most powerful jailers, and when the flood came and his chamber was dropped into the earth — into a magical containment apparatus the celestials called the Well of Last Resort — he tried to escape. The Well's magic contained him, and the effort of fighting against it eventually forced him into a deep slumber, in which he remains to this day.

The Well's uppermost end is a 1,000-lb. cover stone displaying a variety of master-level arcane sigils. The stone was constructed to survive any possible attack or catastrophe, and while it has remained largely intact all these centuries, the celestials didn't take into consideration the simple effects of erosion. Over time, the lake water has worn down the sigils to the point that minute amounts of Vizeed's power seep through in a vertical column, up to the water's surface. Now, any character who swims within 25 ft. of this location is affected by a level-drain trap.

Encounter Condition: Submerged

Tactics: If the PCs swim to the lake bed to investigate, they find the cover stone, which may not be moved, but may be broken with enough effort. The stone has a hardness of 10 and 1,000 hit points. If the PCs break the stone, the Well's magical properties fail and Vizeed awakens, ready to stalk the world anew. He leaves the Well and thanks his rescuers, claiming to be a celestial who was trapped in the flood, using his spells and abilities to support his lie. He asks to travel with the PCs until they leave the dungeon, after which he will report the horrible outcome of their grand project. If the PCs refuse or see through his ruse, he tele-

ports to the northern boglands and heads north from there. Per the DM's discretion, the party may encounter him again once they are sufficient level to combat him. Vizeed abhors violence, but relishes the gradual decline of those with whom he travels. The DM can use him to spectacular effect by altering future Rooms to contain their former occupants, or the occupants of other rooms, who have fallen victim to Vizeed's terrible presence.

♦ Energy Drain Trap: CR 12; magic device; visual trigger (true seeing); automatic reset; always hits; spell effect (energy drain, 17th-level wizard, 2d4 negative levels for 24 hours, DC 23 Fortitude save negates); Search DC N/A; Disable Device DC N/A. Note: All living beings must make another Will save each hour they remain within the trap's area of effect or suffer the trap's standard effects. Any being whose level is reduced to level 0 or less by this trap ceases to exist — though his previous actions still happened, no one except Vizeed remembers him and he may never be resurrected.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 15

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Will save DC of the drain trap by +5. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, reduce the Will save DC of the drain trap by -5.

▲ Vizeed, Greater Glabrezu: CR 13; Huge outsider (chaotic, extraplanar, evil); HD 12d8+120; hp 174; Init +0; Spd 40 ft.; AC 27, touch 8, flat-footed 27; Base Atk +12; Grp +30; Atk +20 melee (2d8+10, pincers); Full Atk +20 melee (2d8+10, 2 pincers) and +18 melee (1d6+5, 2 claws) and +18 melee (1d8+5, bite); Space/Reach 15 ft./15 ft.; SA Improved grab, spell-like abilities, summon demon; SQ Damage reduction 10/good, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to electricity and poison, resistance to acid 10, cold 10, and fire 10, spell resistance 21, telepathy 100 ft., true seeing; AL CE; SV Fort +18, Ref +8, Will +11; Str 31, Dex 10, Con 31, Int 16, Wis 16, Cha 20.

Skills and Feats: Bluff +22, Concentration +25, Diplomacy +9, Disguise +5 (+7 acting), Intimidate +24, Knowledge (any two) +18, Listen +26, Move Silently +18, Search +18, Sense Motive +18, Spellcraft +18, Spot +26, Survival +3 (+5 following tracks); Cleave, Great Cleave, Multiattack, Persuasive, Power Attack.

Draining Aura (Su): Anyone within 20 ft. of Vizeed suffers 3 negative levels as long as they are within that area, these negative levels last for 1d6+1 minutes after leaving the area. A successful DC 21 Fortitude save reduces this to 1 negative level. Only one drain from this aura (the highest) may be in effect on someone at any one time. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a glabrezu must hit a Medium or smaller opponent with a pincer attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—chaos hammer (DC 19), polymorph self, dispel magic, mirror image, reverse gravity (DC 22), greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), unholy blight (DC 19); 1/day—power word stun. Caster level 14th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Once per month, Vizeed can fulfill a wish for a mortal humanoid. The demon can use this ability to offer a mortal whatever he or she desires—but unless the wish is used to create pain and suffering in the world, the glabrezu demands either terrible evil acts or great sacrifice as compensation.

Summon Demon (Sp): Once per day a Vizeed can summon 4d10 dretches or 1d2 vrock with a 50% chance of success, or another glabrezu with a 20% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 4th-level spell. However, Vizeed prefers to be alone and only summons other demons as a last resort.

True Seeing (Su): Vizeed continuously uses true seeing as the spell (caster level 14th).

Skills: Glabrezu have a +8 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

K44. THE MARINER'S PASSION

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 20 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

The water here takes on a faint green tint, seemingly drifting up from the lake bed far below. Through the cloud, you're pretty sure you can make out the silhouette of a wrecked sea vessel upon the lake bed.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The ship is a shallow-water vessel named the Mariner's Passion, which smuggled monsters out of the mountains above for sale in distant lands. The ship was caught up in the flood, sucked into the dungeon, and dragged along the lake bed to this location. Much of its hull and many of its occupants were left behind to the east, though its most secure inner cargo hold remained intact until its final collapse. The hold's occupants — a dozen digesters — were killed during the flood. Their rotting bodies sank into the lake bed and combined with the crushed remains of the demon prisoners to spawn a waterborne contagion called waxman's disease.

Waxman's disease causes the victim's flesh, muscle, veins, and other soft parts to partially dissolve, drooping like wax over low heat and allowed to cool. Though the victim's flesh recovers some of its elasticity, it remains forever spongy, reducing bodily strength and appearance.

♦ Waxman's Disease—Contact, Fortitude DC 20, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d4 Con and 1d4 Cha ($\frac{1}{2}$ is permanent, rounded down).

Encounter Condition: Diseased (waxman's disease) 20, Submerged
Tactics: N/A

Treasure: With a successful Search check, the PCs find the captain's quarters, within which is a safe requiring a successful DC 20 Open Lock check to access. Inside are the spoils of the ship's last voyage: 100 pp.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, make all of the disease's damage permanent. To decrease the challenge, make only $\frac{1}{4}$ of the disease's damage permanent (rounded down).

K45. THE SHADOW IN THE WAVES

Special Note: If the PCs are at or above the lake's surface and Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. The first time these conditions apply while the PCs are not trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they continue to apply, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

A faint green illumination permeates the water beneath you, where a number of attractive glowing fish weave between large stone structures leaning in odd directions. From the east, a shadow creeps through the scene, cutting off your view of the attractive lake bottom. Something big is moving beneath you. The water starts to wash outward from your location as the form rises to the surface.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: These waters are home to the second most powerful creature in the Region, a Gargantuan water spider (hp 132) that has been severely mutated by the corrupted lake bed. With barbed legs, a hardened hide, and a vicious acid spray attack, this beast is a formidable foe that feeds upon creatures of any race who wander into its territory.

While the fish in this Room glow, they are harmless and have no other special properties. Likewise, the stone structures below are insignificant ruins destroyed by the flood, and of no interest.

Encounter Condition: Fear 20, Submerged

Tactics: The creature recognizes movement within its territory and swims into position beneath it, rising suddenly to attack with its acid spray. It follows up by biting each PC in order of proximity, then leaving them to drift to their sizzling death while it attends to the others. When all the intruders drift motionless, the water spider begins collecting and depositing them in its lair (Room K68). If any PCs resist after being bitten, the spider rakes them repeatedly with its barbed legs until their bodies are destroyed.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Fortitude save to resist the water spider's poison to 35. To decrease the challenge, remove the water spider's acid spray attack.

♦ Mutant Gargantuan Water Spider: CR 9; Gargantuan vermin (aquatic, amphibious); HD 16d8+64; hp 132; Init +3; Spd 30 ft., climb 20 ft., swim 50 ft.; AC 19, touch 9, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +12; Grp +31; Atk Bite +15 melee (2d8+10 plus poison); Full Atk +15 melee (2d8+10 plus poison) and +10 melee (1d12+6, barbed forelegs); Space/Reach 20 ft./15 ft.; SA acid spray, poison; SQ Damage reduction 4/—, darkvision 60 ft., tremorsense 60 ft., vermin traits; AL N, SV Fort +12, Ref +8, Will +5; Str 25, Dex 17, Con 19, Int —, Wis 10, Cha 2.

Skills and Feats: Climb +14, Hide –5, Jump +7, Move Silently +0, Spot +4.

Acid Spray (Ex): Free action, can only be used every 1d4+2 rounds, 40 ft. cone, 4d6+4 acid damage, Reflex save (DC 22) for half. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Poison (Ex): A monstrous spider has a poisonous bite, Fortitude save DC 30, inflicts 2d6 Strength initial and secondary damage. The save DC is Constitution-based. Includes a +8 racial bonus.

K46 THROUGH K74. THE SOUTHERN DUNGEON

Some of this Region's original dungeon rooms survived the flood, though circumstance and events since have flushed all but a few occupants and monsters from their confines. Further, while the flood didn't sweep through these chambers, the quake caused by its passing collapsed many of the rooms that once dotted this Section. These extra rooms are not shown on the map for this Region, and are left to the DM to devise should the PCs start digging.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS FOR THE SOUTHERN DUNGEON

1d20	Encounter
1	The PCs briefly feel a psychic 'tug' toward the crystal of vile attraction (see Room K1 and the sidebar on page 543).
2	The PCs hear the distant howl of a wolf from the east. (This is the barghest lairing in Room K69.)
3–4	A strange series of glyphs emerges from the walls, ceiling, and floor for 10 ft. in all directions of the PCs' current location. Activated by something the PCs said or did when they appeared (per the DM's discretion), these glyphs are written in Celestial, and describe something about the location as it was when the dungeon prison was whole (again, per the DM's discretion). The glyphs should not relate to the PCs' current situation unless the DM wishes to give them a hint, or provide a red herring. The glyphs remain active for 1 minute, during which time they glow with the intensity of a torch. There are countless ways to activate countless series of glyphs, following celestial logic, not human reason. Thus, the PCs should not be able to trigger additional glyphs unless the DM wishes them to.
5–15	Nothing
16–18	The ceiling is unstable in this area and collapses upon the PCs as they move through.
	◆ Collapsing Ceiling Trap: CR 6; mechanical; location trigger; no reset; multiple targets within a 20 ft. × 20 ft. area (8d6 + pinned); DC 22 Reflex save avoids; Search DC 15; Disable Device DC N/A. DC 25 Craft (stonemasonry) check repairs.
19	The hag covey arrives, sweeping through the area in flight (see Room K7 for details). All three attempt to grapple a single PC and carry him back to their lair (Room K8).
20	The hag covey arrives, sneaking up on the PCs while invisible (see Room K7 for details). They fight only until they have sustained a total of 20 hp of damage between them, then flee toward their lair (Room K8).

K46. KILLED AT SHORE

This encounter occurs above the surface.

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

A former adventuring party lies on the shore of a subterranean lake, their packs missing and their clothes ripped apart by inhuman hands. The bodies seem to have been defiled with torches or brands, as if their murders had been personal.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The murders were anything but personal and the fire sores were not made with brands or torches. A group of thoqqua (hp 16 each) dwell in the rock face above the bodies, attracted by the presence of the tanaa'ryl in Room K19 (though they don't realize this and haven't found the strange mineral deposit yet).

The bodies are indeed those of a former adventuring party who entered this location from the west, only to be attacked by the thoqqua from behind (a fate the PCs are likely to suffer unless they enter the Region backwards). After the party died, their bodies were ransacked by the servants of a powerful green dragon living in the boglands to the east (see Rooms K36 and K41 for details).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The thoqqua spring out of small holes burned into the rock face when the PCs exit the western tunnel into this Room. Acting entirely on instinct, they fight to the death.

Treasure: Frightened away by the thoqqua before they could search around the bodies, the toadies left behind 2 potions of water breathing, which rolled free of the party's packs when they were killed.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 4 thoqqua. To decrease the challenge, remove 4 thoqqua.

◆ Thoqqua: CR 2; Medium elemental (earth, extraplanar, fire); HD 3d8+3; hp 16; Init +1; Spd 30 ft., burrow 20 ft.; AC 18, touch 11, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +2; Grp +4; Atk +4 melee (1d6+3 plus 2d6 fire, slam); Full Atk +4 melee (1d6+3 plus 2d6 fire, slam); SA Heat, burn; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., elemental traits, immunity to fire, tremorsense 60 ft., vulnerability to cold; AL N; SV Fort +4, Ref +2, Will +2; Str 15, Dex 13, Con 13, Int 6, Wis 12, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Listen +5, Move Silently +3, Survival +3; Alertness, Track

Heat (Ex): Merely touching or being touched by a thoqqua automatically deals 2d6 fire damage.

Burn (Ex): When a thoqqua hits with its slam attack, the opponent must succeed on a DC 12 Reflex save or catch fire. The save DC is Constitution-based. The flame burns for 1d4 rounds if not extinguished sooner. A burning creature can use a full-round action to put out the flame.

K47. HUNTING MIST

This encounter occurs above the surface.

Acrid green mist fills this entire room, concealing all interior details.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The mist operates like a permanent acid fog spell. It rises through cracks in the floor (from what demonic source the PCs can only guess). The Room is also home to a belker (hp 55) who finds the acidic mist homelike and comforting. The belker is immune to the acid, but most likely the PCs are not.

Encounter Condition: Concealment (total), Fog 5

Tactics: The belker benefits from total concealment unless the PCs somehow part or drive off the mist (with a gust of wind spell, for example). The Room refills with mist in 1d4+2 rounds, even if the PCs attempt to cover the cracks in the floor (there are hundreds of cracks, most of which are not easily visible).

If the belker is attacked directly, it takes smoke form and flees into the cracks in the floor. If the PCs wait it out, attempt to remove or part the mist, or cover the cracks in the floor, the belker attacks, seeing them as a threat to its happy existence. Otherwise, it simply watches them, attempting to remain hidden.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the belker use a solid smoke-hand to slam the door shut to trap and attack the PCs, whether they provoke it or not. To decrease the challenge, allow the PCs a DC 18 Fortitude save to resist the acid mist's effects each round.

☛ Belker: CR 7; Large elemental (air, extraplanar); HD 10d8+10; hp 55; Init +5; Spd 30 ft., fly 50 ft. (perfect); AC 22, touch 14, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +7; Grp +13; Atk +11 melee (1d6+2, wing); Full Atk +11 melee (1d6+2, 2 wings) and +9 melee (1d4+1, bite) and +9 melee (1d3+1, 2 claws); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Smoke claws; SQ Acid immunity, darkvision 60 ft., elemental traits, smoke form; AL NE; SV Fort +4, Ref +11, Will +3; Str 14, Dex 21, Con 13, Int 6, Wis 11, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Listen +9, Move Silently +11, Spot +9; Alertness, Dodge, Multiattack, Weapon Finesse.

Smoke Claws (Ex): A belker in smoke form (see below) can engulf opponents by moving on top of them. It fills the air around one Medium or smaller opponent without provoking an attack of opportunity. The target must succeed on a DC 16 Fortitude save or inhale part of the creature. The save DC is Constitution-based. Smoke inside the victim solidifies into a claw and begins to rip at the surrounding organs, dealing 3d4 points of damage per round. An affected creature can attempt another Fortitude save each subsequent round to cough out the semi-vaporous menace.

Smoke Form (Su): Most of the time a belker is more or less solid, but at will it can assume smoke form. It can switch forms once per round as a free action and can spend up to 20 rounds per day in smoke form. A belker in smoke form can fly at a speed of 50 feet (perfect). The ability is otherwise similar to a gaseous form spell (caster level 7th).
Skills: Belkers have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

K48. IMMACULATE GUARD POST

This encounter occurs above the surface.

The doors to this Room are locked, each requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock.

This room's floor of green marble is flecked with gold. A sparkling mirror hangs on the east wall and a bed hovers 2 ft. off the ground against the west wall. A single steel door is visible in the opposite wall, a crystal key in its lock. The room is immaculately clean, as if existing apart from the rest of this devastated dungeon.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was once a celestial guard post and resting quarters. The bed grants the benefits of the positive energy encounter condition to any single character who sleeps in it (only 1 character may sleep in the bed at any time). The mirror was once a scrying surface for celestials looking in on prisoners, but lost its power when the celestials linked to it were overthrown and killed.

The Room benefits from a permanent unseen servant whose only instructions are to keep everything spotless. As the PCs move through the Room, they may make DC 30 Spot checks. With success, they notice that their tracks and any debris or marks they leave behind gradually vanish behind them.

Encounter Condition: Positive energy (bed only)

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The steel door may be opened by turning the key currently in the lock. This triggers no traps or ill effects. The small closet beyond contains a celestial weapons rack. This device is invisible, seemingly suspending items in mid-air within the closet. The only item still hanging upon the rack is a greatsword +1 (+2 vs. demons). Unfortunately for any character who wields this weapon, any creature originally imprisoned in the dungeon under the celestial's stewardship associates this weapon with its awful incarceration and focuses all its attacks upon him exclusively.

K49. DRENCHED TRITON SCOUTS

The southern door leading into this chamber has been smashed in and now hangs off its hinges in splintered ruin. Several feet north of it are the bodies of two tritons, their bodies still drenched, presumably from diving nearby.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The tritons were a scouting party from the colony in the western lake (Room K22), who were sent to find allies and resources to use against the green dragon Thorodin. Their quest ended here, when they fell victim to four gray oozes (hp 61 each) formed from the same abyssal pit that spawned the belker in Room K47.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The gray oozes are digesting the tritons' bodies and belongings when the PCs enter the room, and go still until the newcomers approach closer (thus the water in the read-aloud text). When the PCs approach within 10 ft., the oozes spill across the floor to wrap around their feet. Unless stopped, the oozes creep up the party's bodies until they block off their air passages, inflicting drowning damage in addition to their standard attacks.

Treasure: Anything of value in this Room, and anything the tritons brought into the Room with them, has been at least partially digested by the gray oozes.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one gray ooze that clings to the ceiling until the other oozes attack, then falls onto a targeted PC's head, blocking his airway during the first round of combat. [Ambush]. To decrease the challenge, have the oozes attack as soon as the PCs enter, not bothering to lie in wait until the PCs approach.

☛ Gray Ooze: CR 5; Medium ooze; HD 6d10+30; hp 62; Init -5; Spd 10 ft.; AC 5, touch 5, flat-footed 5; Base Atk +4; Grp +5; Atk +5 melee (1d6+1 plus 1d6 acid, slam); Full Atk +5 melee (1d6+1 plus 1d6 acid, slam); SA Acid, constrict 1d6+1 plus 1d6 acid, improved grab; SQ Blindsight 60 ft., immunity to cold and fire, ooze traits, transparent; AL N; SV Fort +6, Ref -4, Will -4; Str 12, Dex 1, Con 21, Int —, Wis 1, Cha 1.

Skills and Feats: —

Acid (Ex): A gray ooze secretes a digestive acid that quickly dissolves organic material and metal, but not stone. Any melee hit or constrict attack deals acid damage. Armor or clothing dissolves and becomes useless immediately unless it succeeds on a DC 16 Reflex save. A metal or wooden weapon that strikes a gray ooze also dissolves immediately unless it succeeds on a DC 16 Reflex save. The save DCs are Constitution-based.

The ooze's acidic touch deals 16 points of damage per round to wooden or metal objects, but the ooze must remain in contact with the object for 1 full round to deal this damage.

Constrict (Ex): A gray ooze deals automatic slam and acid damage with a successful grapple check. The opponent's clothing and armor take a -4 penalty on Reflex saves against the acid.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a gray ooze must hit with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Blindsight (Ex): An ooze's entire body is a primitive sensory organ that can ascertain prey by scent and vibration within 60 feet.

Transparent (Ex): A gray ooze is hard to identify, even under ideal conditions, and it takes a DC 15 Spot check to notice one. Creatures who fail to notice a gray ooze and walk into it are automatically hit with a melee attack for slam and acid damage.

K50. TRITON CAMP #2

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 25 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

The northeastern corner of this chamber has fallen into a shallow lake, and gentle waves lap at the remaining stone floor. Someone or something has recently climbed from the lake up into this chamber, and left through the southern door, which stands slightly ajar.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was used as a way station by the triton scouts sent to investigate the southern dungeon by their colony (Room K22). After investigating Rooms K51 and K54 (and realizing they could not easily pass through the latter), the tritons took the southern hallway toward Room K49. Other than the footprints leading to the southern hallway, it contains nothing of interest.

Once in the southern hallway, the PCs may make a DC 25 Track check to determine that two tritons made their way west down the corridor and have not returned.

K52. THE CRYSTAL PITS

This encounter occurs on or above the surface.

Two large pits stretch across the full north-south width of this obsidian-lined chamber. Shards of glass or crystal are wedged into the edge of each pit, and countless claw marks are visible in the stone just below.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room once served as a prison and a trap. Crystal caps covered each of the 40-ft. deep eastern pits, neutralizing the spells and abilities of the powerful demons they imprisoned. As a safety measure, if either crystal cap were compromised, an enormous obelisk resting on its side at the eastern end of the Room rolled the length of the floor, crushing anything not within the pit.

The earthquake that tore much of the dungeon asunder also shattered the crystal caps, freeing the demon prisoners. The obelisk roller trap remains active, and is triggered by any movement through either of the crystal caps' original positions. The PCs may only notice the Room's eastern wall is in fact a giant obelisk with a successful DC 28 Search check.

Additionally, whenever the obelisk trap is triggered, a crushing wall trap slams shut over the Room's entrance. This second trap only harms those standing in the entrance, but prevents anyone within from leaving unless they make a successful Strength check (DC 40). Up to 8 characters may cooperate to make this Strength check.

• Obelisk-Roller Trap: CR 6; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; always hits (10d6 crushing); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 31. Note: The obelisk is as long as the Room is wide, and nothing and no one outside the pits can escape its approach. It moves 30 ft. at the start of each round. Note: This trap is disabled by wedging a Large or larger weapon on either side of the obelisk when it isn't in motion.

• Crushing Wall Trap: CR 8; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset (after 1 hour); no attack roll necessary (20d6 crushing); DC 25 Reflex save avoids; Search DC 33; Disable Device DC 33. Note: This trap is disabled by placing supports with a minimum hardness of 8 within the Room's doorway.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a standard 40-ft. spiked pit trap in each of the pits. To decrease the challenge, have the obelisk jam during its first round of movement, traversing only half the Room's length.

K53. THE WARNING GROUNDS

Special Note: If Thorodin is currently at his lair (Room K36), the PCs can see him from here — and vice-versa. Each time the PCs enter this Room without trying to hide, and for every 10 minutes they spend here, Thorodin makes a Spot check (DC 20 + the lowest Hide skill bonus in the party). If the PCs try to hide, Thorodin's Spot check is opposed by the PCs' Hide skills, as standard. With success, he notices the PCs and moves to attack them at $\frac{1}{2}$ flight speed (75 ft. per round).

A tall spike dug into this long stretch of shoreline props up the remains of a human-sized black-skinned beast. What looks like they were once wings have been ripped from its body. Its twisted frame is covered in cuts and bruises, and the left side of his chest has collapsed under some incredibly forceful strike. A fierce electrical burn runs across his right shoulder and up its neck, searing his face. One eye is missing, melted from the socket.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This pitiful creature is [was] a harpy. Days ago, she was ambushed and blindsided by Thorodin and left for dead. The electrical burns are the result of Thorodin's shocking grasp spell. Like a child catching a butterfly, Thorodin tortured the harpy for hours, seeing what it was made of, ripping off its wings and spiking it in the mud.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: A successful DC 30 Knowledge (nature) check identifies the creature as a harpy, with horns and thick skin. Gasping for breath and waiting to die, the harpy whispers in a lilting voice to whomever will listen.

A weak, croaking voice speaks through bubbles of blood. "The green-skin... he is... he is ambitious and cruel. Strike him down and you shall be gods... among..."

At this point the harpy dies. No amount of first aid or magic brings her back.

Treasure: Around the neck of harpy is an amulet of nondetection. Blackened by the Thorodin's acid is fused to the skin. It does not radiate magic, but a DC 30 Appraise check reveals that it is valuable (1,500 gp or more), if for nothing else, the rare black emerald in the center (something else Thorodin missed). The PCs may never realize what the necklace is, by anyone carrying it or wearing it gains its benefit.

The amulet is not perfect. Damaged long ago, it failed to protect the harpy as well as it should have. Each day, there is a 5% chance that the amulet doesn't work for 24 hours. While the PC wearing the item will never know this, the DM should secretly check everyday at midnight.

K54. PRISON CHECKPOINT

This encounter occurs on or above the surface. All doors leading into this room are propped open.

The stone walls of this large chamber are mostly covered in corroded copper metal panels. More copper panels have been wrenched free and lie upon the floor, which sports several charred skeletons. Some of the skeletons are clad in chainmail or leather, while others wear no armor at all.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The copper panels within this Room are part of a simple trap designed to injure living beings while leaving constructs such as the inevitables and their golem minions unharmed. The trap targets anyone touching or passing between the copper plates.

The skeletons are the remains of elves from Region H that entered from the southeast. Although elves are notably alert creatures, the trap here was too much for them and they fell victim to the Room's defenses, but not before ripping free a few of the panels. This has reduced the trap's effectiveness, but only slightly. More work is required to fully disable it.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Each of the 20 copper panels is 2 ft. x 2 ft., weighs 3 lbs, and is worth 100 cp. The bodies carry typical adventuring gear, but nothing magical beyond three potions of cure light wounds. The DM is welcome to add any mundane items such as arrows, that the PCs might need.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the lightning bolt trap attack from 2 different locations each time it's triggered. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Disable Device DC of the lightning bolt trap by -10.

♦ Lightning Bolt Trap: CR 9; magic; device; proximity trigger (alarm); automatic reset; spell effect (empowered maximized lightning bolt, 15th-level wizard, 60 + 5d6 electricity, DC 18 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 15; Disable Device DC 35. Note: This trap is disabled by prying the copper panels from the wall without coming into direct contact with them.

K55. UNSTABLE GUARD POST

The passageway opens up as it makes a right-angle turn, forming a small room filled with wisps of mist. A cabinet on the western wall holds many weapons.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was once a guard post, but it's become a hazard. The mist rises from several fissures along the southern wall, where noxious gases filter up from a small gas pocket 60 ft. below. If anyone steps into this chamber, the floor collapses, plunging the cabinet and any entering PCs into the source of the gas.

♦ Pit Trap: CR 3; mechanical, location trigger; manual reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 60 ft. deep (6d6, fall); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC N/A.

♦ Poison Gas—Inhaled, Fortitude DC 15, initial damage unconscious, secondary damage 1d6 Con. Note: All victims must make another successful Fort save every five minutes they remain within the pit or suffer this poison's secondary damage.

Encounter Condition: Drafty

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The cabinet contains four spears, four longswords, four daggers, and three small steel shields. All are standard weapons with no magical qualities. There is a 15% chance per item it is masterwork.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the corridors on both sides collapse out to 10 ft., potentially sending cautious PCs into the pit as well. To decrease the challenge, allow the PCs a DC 30 Spot check to notice a number of cracks and fissures in the floor as they enter.

K56. REFUGE

All doors to this Room are locked and barred, each requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock and/or a DC 22 Strength check to open.

Five hulking beasts stand hunched and waterlogged. They hover and stand guard over four battered elves shackled to the north wall. The elves have light-blue skin and webbed fingers. Three of them have their jaws broken and the other's leg has been removed. The beasts look ready to deliver killing blows.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The five creatures are merrow guards (hp 55, 49, 47, 44, 44), who captured the elves and don't know what to do with them. Instead, they've been having fun with their "toys" and decided to beat on them a little. Most likely, the aquatic elves will be given to Thorodin as an offering, but at the moment they are too enraptured with their abuse to think that far ahead.

The aquatic elves (bp 8, 6, -1, -4) are near death. Messengers from Region L, they were trying to reach the tritons, when these five merrow ambushed them and dragged them inside. Two of the aquatic elves are near death. Unless the PCs hurry, they will surely die.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The merrow most likely hear the PCs coming, but allowed them DC 20 Listen checks to see if they are surprised. Once combat begins, the merrow realize that more offerings to Thorodin might be better. They attack the PCs instantly, still pumped from the previous fight with the aquatic elves.

They charge the PCs head on and use their brute strength to overpower the PCs. The leader takes on the strongest PC, while the others spread out and find a kill of their own. If they outnumber the PCs, then two share the weakest PC for an easy kill!

Treasure: The merrow placed a pile of weapons and gear in the corner after they captured the aquatic elves. They have yet to sort it, so the PCs have about 50 lbs. of wet gear to sort through. Beyond a few arrows and swords, there are three scrolls — blade barrier, control water, and remove curse — in a waterproof scrollcase.

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two merrow. To decrease the challenge, have the strongest aquatic elf get loose during the fight and attack a merrow from behind.

K57. CHAIN CELL

This encounter occurs on or above the surface.

The thick stone door to this dusty chamber is covered in glyphs, and stands slightly ajar. Inside the room, many thick chains hang upon the wall and ceiling. The chains are covered in gristle and dried black blood.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The glyphs read, "Gatarana, whose strength comes from the earth," which can be deciphered with a successful DC 25 Decipher Script check.

This was once the cell of a powerful creature that died during the flood. The cell's enchantments remain active. When anyone enters, the 20-ft. chains animate, attempting to grapple the intruder's limbs. When two or more chains successfully grapple the character, they pull toward their respective walls, suspending and immobilizing the victim in the center of the room. The chains continue to pull at the victim's limbs thereafter, and since the cell was designed to imprison superhumanly strong creatures, the victims may eventually die. Indeed, the blood and gristle within the room are the remains of those caught and ripped apart.

The room contains 8 enchanted chains, and can therefore suspend and immobilize up to 4 characters.

K58. FIRE CELL

The door to this chamber is a slab of granite covered in glyphs. A silver chain stretches from a hook on the door a few inches off the ground to the door immediately across the hallway. The floor between the doors is charred and shattered. Through a 2-ft.-wide hole in the door, you glimpse six sets of shattered manacles hanging upon the wall. Scorch marks cover the chamber's interior walls near the manacles.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The glyphs read, "Stenarri, creature of fire," which can be deciphered with a successful DC 25 Decipher Script check.

This was once the cell of a powerful fire demon. It is magically linked to the cell across the corridor (Room K61). The cell's enchantments remain active. When the temperature of one room rises, the chain draws heat from the warmer room into the cooler room, keeping the temperatures of both constant.

When Stenarri was still imprisoned in this cell, this heat siphon weakened it and prevented its escape. Likewise, heat forced into the ice demon Ahbonet's cell weakened that creature (see Room K61). During the earthquake, the magical link between these Rooms was broken for several minutes, allowing the prisoners to escape into the hallway, where they fought to the death. The demons' remains have since dissolved between the corridor stones, though a successful DC 24 Search check finds the bizarre stains left behind.

Within this Room, all fire damage is reduced to ½ standard (rounded down), and if any fires erupt or enter this Room, their temperature is siphoned to Room K61 at the rate of 1 degree Fahrenheit per round. This slow rate of transfer prevents fire-based damage from transferring to occupants of Room K61.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

K60. WATER CELL

This encounter occurs on or above the surface.

The door is barred from the outside, requiring one move-equivalent action to open.

The door to this chamber is a slab of granite covered in glyphs. Just beyond the door rests a silvery veil, perhaps the edge of a magical field of some kind. The chamber is barren but clean. Its walls and floor are unadorned, while its ceiling is pierced by scores of 1-in. diameter holes, all somehow closed or blocked.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The glyphs read, "Rifidar, creature of air," which can be deciphered with a successful DC 25 Decipher Script check.

This was once the cell of a powerful air demon, which escaped during the earthquake that broke open the dungeon. The magical field in this room is a modified and permanent wall of force. Anything may enter the Room except for free-flowing liquids. While a person may step through without difficulty, the flask of water upon his belt may not. Anyone attempting to force a container of liquid into Room, bursts the container. If a wet character enters, he finds himself suddenly dry, the liquid sheered off his skin and out of his clothes and hair and dropped to the floor outside.

At the start of the round following anyone's entry into the room, the ceiling bores open, releasing a flood of water into the chamber at a rate of 3 ft. per round. The wall of force keeps the water from spilling out into the corridor, ensuring the room will eventually fill to the ceiling. During the first two rounds of flooding, any occupant of the room must make a DC 16 Strength check to pull through the wall of force and exit into the corridor. Following the second round of flooding, any character within the room must make a successful DC 15 Swim check or DC 20 Strength check to move more than 5 ft.

At the end of the third round of flooding, when the chamber is completely flooded, the temperature suddenly drops, freezing the water and inflicting 6d6 points of cold damage upon each character within the room. Thereafter, each character begins suffocating and must make a successful DC 35 Strength check to leave the Room.

The door to this chamber is a slab of granite covered in glyphs. A silver chain stretches from a hook on the door a few inches off the ground to the door immediately across the hallway. Through a 2-ft.-wide hole in the door, you glimpse two sets of shattered manacles hanging upon the wall. The chamber is otherwise empty and unremarkable.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The glyphs read, "Ahbonet, creature of ice," which can be deciphered with a successful DC 25 Decipher Script check.

This was once the cell of a powerful ice demon, and is magically linked to the cell across the corridor (Room K58). The cell's enchantments remain active. When the temperature of one room rises, the chain draws heat from the warmer room into the cooler room, keeping the temperatures of both constant.

Decades ago, when Ahbonet was still imprisoned in this cell, this cold siphon weakened it and prevented its escape. Likewise, cold forced into the fire demon Stenarri's cell weakened that creature (see Room K58). During the earthquake, the magical link between these rooms was broken for several minutes, allowing the prisoners to escape into the hallway, where they fought to the death. The demons' remains have since dissolved between the corridor stones, though a successful DC 20 Search check finds the bizarre stains left behind.

Within this room, all cold damage is reduced to 1/2 standard (rounded down), and if any ice or other sources of cold are created or enter this room, their temperature is siphoned to Room K61 at the rate of 1 degree Fahrenheit per round. K64. CHAINS OF REMORSE

The north door to this room is broken open from the inside. The south and east doors to this room are magically sealed, each requiring a DC 30 Use Magic Device check to unlock. Opening a magically sealed door requires the PCs to stand with their backs against the door and mutter a standard dispel evil spell backward.

A passageway curves away from you to the left and right, the walls gleaming with a highly metallic sheen like polished mirrors. As you move through the passageway, your images reflect back and forth between the walls dozens of times, each time slipping a little further away from your true appearance.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This enchanted corridor targets anyone who enters with a confusion spell as cast by a 15th-level sorcerer. If this causes any PC to attack the nearest creature and the PC is adjacent to a mirrored wall, he attacks the mirror. The mirrors have a hardness of 50 and 100 hit points per 5-ft. length, and are unlikely to be damaged by any attack the PCs can muster. When the damage of any attack is absorbed completely by the mirror's hardness, the attacker suffers the damage instead.

Each door leading out of the corridor — except the one to the west that leads into the central area — is affected by a permanent sequester spell as cast by a 15th-level sorcerer. Anyone who moves along the mirrored outer wall with one hand upon it quickly discovers the hidden doors.

The door leading to the central area is unlocked but trapped. When anyone opens it, a powerful gust of wind pulls them through the doorway and into the central area — a 200-ft. shaft ending in a bed of wicked, twisting spikes. Fortunately, many chains extend across the shaft at three different intervals, giving the victim a few chances to catch himself before he is skewered at the bottom. Each set of chains leads to the manacled remains of a demon or devil suspended within the shaft.

These creatures — demons and devils the celestials viewed as so evil that they deserved an eternity of suffering — were incarcerated here as the ultimate punishment. The shaft is affected by a permanent clairvoyance/clairaudience spell as cast by a 20th-level sorcerer. Anyone within experiences random scenes of carnage from the victim's perspective. These scenes are all real, snapshots taken from a thousand Planes and realms across reality. Some of them defy explanation; others are grisly beyond anything the Prime Material Plane has to offer. The scenes play out over the shaft's surface, preventing those within from looking away by any means other than closing their eyes (and even then, they can still hear and feel them, and therefore still suffer their full effects).

The scenes begin to play out at the start of the round after the gust of wind trap is triggered, and remain active so long as any character remains alive in the shaft. While exposed to the scenes, a character is staggered and shaken, which further complicates the long trip back up the shaft (assuming, of course, the fall didn't disable him in the first place).

The shaft's walls are sheer and feature no hand- or footholds, preventing use of the Climb skill to scale them. The only way out of the shaft is through the use of natural or magical levitation or flight, or an ingenious use of another spell or item, per the DM's discretion.

The shaft plays one final trick upon its occupants — it acts as a one-way portal from each scene displayed, should the victims or creatures involved succeed with a Spot check (DC 30) and use a full-round move to leap through. This portal opens randomly, once per scene, and remains open for 1 round only. The DM may use this contrivance to introduce new PCs to a reduced party, or introduce a new high-level party to the middle of the dungeon first.

Note: During his fall, a PC may make a DC 16 Reflex save to catch himself on one of the chains stretching across the shaft. With success, he catches himself 20 ft. below, suffering 2d6 falling damage in the process. With failure, he may make a second Reflex save (DC 25) to catch himself on one of the chains 30 ft. deeper, suffering 5d6 falling damage in the process. With failure, he may make one last Reflex save (DC 35) to catch himself on one of the chains 30 ft. deeper, suffering 8d6 falling damage in the process. If he fails this final Reflex save, he suffers the trap's full damage.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Recently, a minor kyton devil named Skatakanata attempted to rescue one of the shaft's prisoners, an bone devil named Bakaranan. He arrived too late, and has since moved on to Region L.

Treasure: The remains at the bottom of the shaft jointly hold a wand of cure moderate wounds with 12 uses remaining, a dozen well-cut moonstone gems worth 65 gp each, 143 gp, and 59 sp.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DC of the Fortitude save to resist the wind trap's effects to 20. To decrease the challenge, remove the spikes from the pit trap.

K65. UNSTABLE CELL

This encounter occurs on or above the surface.

Both secret doors leading to this corridor can be found by the PCs with a DC 25 Search check. Opening each door requires the PCs to flip the doors on a horizontal axis before opening them. Additionally, the door to this room is locked, requiring a DC 25 Open Lock check to unlock.

A steel-bound door covered in a series of glyphs remains shut along the corridor's southern wall. It appears quite sturdy, but a finger-thick crack reveals the room's interior — metallic plates around the skeletal form of an enormous bull lie in the center of the bare stone room beyond.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The glyphs read, "Baphon, lesser denizen of the blighted realms," which can be deciphered with a successful DC 25 Decipher Script check.

This was once the cell of a half-fiend greater gorgon, and was built to withstand the beast's powerful charges. Originally, each wall, the floor, and the ceiling each had a hardness of 15, 100 hit points, and no Break DC. Since the earthquake, however, the Room's walls have been weakened and no longer fully support the unharmed ceiling. Two rounds after the cell's door is opened, the walls collapse under the ceiling's weight, trapping any characters within under magically dense rubble.

♦ Collapsing Ceiling Trap: CR 5; mechanical; touch trigger (attached); no reset; Atk +20 melee (8d6, stone blocks); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, catch the gorgon's final breath between the stones in the weakened walls. When the walls collapse, the gas is released and everyone must make a DC 20 Fortitude save or be turned to stone. To decrease the challenge, allow each PC a DC 30 Spot check to notice the walls' instability.

K66. ETERNAL CHARM

Both secret doors leading to this corridor can be found by the PCs with a DC 30 Search check. Opening each door requires the PCs to flip the doors on a horizontal axis before opening them. Additionally, the door to this room is locked, requiring a DC 25 Open Lock check to unlock.

The only occupant of this cell is a 6-ft. statue of a beautiful woman with wide feathered wings. The statue is captured in a pose of fright, recoiling from the door.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The glyphs read, "Gayenen, whose eternal charms were her undoing," which can be deciphered with a successful DC 25 Decipher Script check.

This Room once served as the holding cell for an erinyes devil, but she perished long ago, when the half-fiend gorgon in Room K65 first broke free (thus prompting that cell's current design). When Gayenen attempted to use charm monster on the gorgon, it resisted and breathed into her cell, petrifying her forever. With such a fitting outcome, the celestials decided to leave Gayenen within her cell as a museum piece.

K67. SCORPION CELL

Both doors to this Room are locked, requiring a DC 35 Open Lock check to unlock.

Beyond a long corridor lined with thick spears angled north, you find a stout portcullis blocking the way into a large, tall chamber. Within, an enormous skeleton hangs in chains above a pile of rotted flesh. You think you can hear an irregular clicking sound.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This was once the cell of a twisted devil unclassified by the celestials (for that matter, no creature remotely like it was encountered before or since). The mass of mouths and legs was suspended within this 60-ft. tall chamber and surrounded by simple physical defenses, largely because the celestials had no idea how to contend with it, and partially because they knew it responded to physical pain.

Many centuries later, the devil died, but lacking information about its life cycle, the celestials left it to rot. Eventually, the creature's flesh sloughed off its bones and collapsed to the chamber's floor, where most of it remains today, decaying at an impossibly slow rate.

In time, the earthquake brought many outside creatures into the dungeon, including a monstrous scorpion (hp 104) that made its nest in the enormous flesh pile. The flesh pile accelerated and expanded the scorpion's growth, until it reached its current Huge proportions — too large to leave the room in one piece.

Encounter Condition: Fear 18, Fearless, Negative Energy, Stagnant Air, Unhallowed 2

Tactics: The scorpion clings to the southern wall, 20 ft. above the entrance. When the first approaches the flesh pile some 20 ft. inside the Room, or when someone notices the scorpion, it leaps to the floor in front of the door and engages the intruders in melee. It focuses its attacks on the nearest character, using its claw attacks to immobilize him before it stings him. The creature moves on after each sting, sure that the current victim is dead (even though he might not realize it yet).

The scorpion fights to the death, its mind a delirious haze of violence imparted by the lingering essence of the cell's original occupant. It is immune to the Fear and Negative Energy in the Room.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Fortitude save DC of the monstrous scorpion's poison by +12. To decrease the challenge, reduce the creature's vision to 30 ft.

♦ Monstrous Scorpion, Huge: CR 7; Huge vermin; HD 10d8+30; hp 104; Init +0; Spd 50 ft.; AC 20, touch 8, flat-footed 20; Base Atk +7; Grp +21; Atk +11 melee (1d8+6, claw); Full Atk +11 melee (1d8+6, 2 claws) and +6 melee (2d4+3 plus poison, sting); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft.; SA Constrict 1d8+6, improved grab, poison; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., tremorsense 60 ft., vermin traits; AL N; SV Fort +10, Ref +3, Will +3; Str 23, Dex 10, Con 16, Int —, Wis 10, Cha 2.

Skills and Feats: Climb +10, Hide -4, Spot +4.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a monstrous scorpion must hit with a claw attack. A monstrous scorpion can use either its Strength modifier or Dexterity modifier for grapple checks, whichever is better.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 14, initial and secondary damage 1d6 Con. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Skills: A monstrous scorpion has a +4 racial bonus on Climb, Hide, and Spot checks.

K68. WATER SPIDER'S LAIR

This encounter occurs on or above the surface.

Weak waves wash along this loose grit and gravel shoreline from the vast subterranean lake to the east. Central along the shore is a giant mound of red-stained sand 10 ft. high.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The mound is the lair of a monstrous water spider hunting in the eastern lake (Room K45). It contains the bodies of the water spider's victims, one of which is still alive.

If the PCs attempt to climb the mound, they discover that it gives under their weight, and their legs become caught on something buried in it. For each round spent digging into the mound, the PCs discover the body of one victim. The mound contains 10 bodies; roll 1d10 to determine when the live body is found.

The survivor is a lizardman named Sslore (hp 24), who sneaks away from his people in Room K71 to take swims in the eastern lake. With his help, the PCs can circumvent the trap in Room K72, and automatically improve the attitude of the lizardfolk beyond, but only if they perform a successful DC 25 Heal check upon him first.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: For every minute the PCs spend in this location, there is a 10% chance that the water spider notices them moving about in its lair and returns to attack them.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

▲ SSlor, Lizardfolk Ftr 3: CR 4; Medium humanoid (reptilian); HD 2d8+2 + 3d10+3; hp 24*; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 16, touch 11, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +4; Grp +6; Atk Claw +6 melee (1d4+2) or +7 melee (1d10+3, greatclub) or +4 ranged (1d6+2, javelin); Full Atk +6 melee (1d4+1, 2 claws) and +4 melee (1d4+1, bite) or +7 melee (1d10+3, greatclub) or +4 ranged (1d6+2, javelin); SA —; SQ Hold breath; AL N; SV Fort +4, Ref +4, Will +1; Str 14, Dex 13, Con 13, Int 10, Wis 10, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Balance +4, Jump +14, Swim +14; Dodge, Mobility, Multiattack, Weapon Focus (great club).

Hold Breath: A lizardfolk can hold its breath for a number of rounds equal to four times its Constitution score before it risks drowning.

Skills: Because of their tails, lizardfolk have a +4 racial bonus on Jump, Swim, and Balance checks.

A barghest advances in HD by consuming corpses in this fashion. For every three suitable corpses a barghest devours, it gains 1 Hit Die, and its Strength, Constitution, and natural armor increase by +1. Its attack bonus and saves improve as normal for an outsider of its HD, and it gains skill points, feats, and ability score improvements normally.

The barghest only advances by consuming the corpses of creatures whose HD or levels are equal to or greater than its own current total. A barghest that reaches 9 HD through feeding immediately becomes a greater barghest.

Change Shape (Su): A barghest can assume the shape of a goblin or a wolf as a standard action. In goblin form, a barghest cannot use its natural weapons but can wield weapons and wear armor. In wolf form, a barghest loses its claw attacks but retains its bite attack.

Pass Without Trace (Ex): A barghest in wolf form can use pass without trace (as the spell) as a free action.

K69. BARGHEST LAIR

This encounter occurs on or above the surface.

The body of a merfolk is sprawled across the rocks at the base of this high collapsed wall. His gray skin is withered like rotting jerky, and he smells of feral sweat.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A pair of barghests (hp 33 each) recently moved north along this shore from Region E, and stumbled across a survivor of the thoqua attacks in Room K46. How they made it this far is anyone's guess, but far from the political machinations of their brethren, they need only worry about the Thorodin, who they've successfully avoided for months.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The barghests lurk in the rocks above the body when the PCs arrive. They use project image to make it appear that they are approaching from the southern shore, then leap when the PCs are facing away. The barghests flee to the south when either is reduced to 14 or less hit points.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the barghests with greater barghests. To decrease the challenge, out four potions of cure light wounds in a sack under the merfolk.

☛ Barghest: CR 4; Medium outsider (evil, extraplanar, lawful, shapechanger); HD 6d8+8; hp 36, 34, 30; Init +6; Spd 30 ft.; AC 18, touch 12, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +6; Grp +9; Atk +9 melee (1d6+3, bite); Full Atk +9 melee (1d6+3, bite) and +4 melee (1d4+1, 2 claws); SA Spell-like abilities, feed; SQ Change shape, damage reduction 5/magic, darkvision 60 ft., scent; AL LE; SV Fort +6, Ref +7, Will +7; Str 17, Dex 15, Con 13, Int 14, Wis 14, Cha 14.

Feed (Su): When a barghest slays a humanoid opponent, it can feed on the corpse, devouring both flesh and life force, as a full-round action. Feeding destroys the victim's body and prevents any form of raising or resurrection that requires part of the corpse. There is a 50% chance that a wish, miracle, or true resurrection spell can restore a devoured victim to life. Check once for each destroyed creature. If the check fails, the creature cannot be brought back to life by mortal magic.

K70. GOLEM POST

Ten statues of proud warriors stand shoulder to shoulder along each side of this chamber. Every warrior wears an abbreviated loincloth, is armed with a spear, and carries a shield bearing a unique emblem. A 20-ft.-wide banner covers the western wall, bearing an emerald insignia of a rearing bear, and an empty white marble fountain sits in each of the chamber's corners. Each statue bears the head of a hound or eagle.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These statues bear the marks of the celestials who built this prison. An honor guard, dedicated to exacting lawful good tenets, was model for these priceless golems that have now fallen into disuse. They no longer function and nothing short of a miracle or wish can restore them.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 2, Positive Energy

Tactics: This is an excellent place for the PCs to stop and rest for a while, before moving on.

K71. LIZARDFOLK REFUGE

The standard door to the north is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. The secret door to the east can be found by the PCs with a DC 28 Search check. Opening the secret door requires the PCs to toggle a nearby foot pedal disguised as a loose stone.

Once a meeting hall or throne room, this chamber contains a 20-ft. high dais to the east, upon which rests an elaborate seat reached by a long flight of winding steps. Seven pillars in the center of the chamber each support another, smaller seat accessible via a short flight of steps. On all sides, platforms extend from the walls at various heights, supported and reached by steep ladders. None of the pillars or platforms rises above the eastern dais. The chamber's walls are a continuous fresco of swirling energy, giving the impression of being in the center of a gale-force windstorm.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This Room once hosted the highest ranking celestials whenever decisions had to be made. Today, it's a refuge for a tribe of lizardfolk who were driven from the boglands by Thorodin. The creatures have yet to find a new home, and protect this sanctuary with as much passion as they can muster (for a dungeon chamber).

If the PCs saved Sslore from the water spider lair (Room K68), and accompany him here, the lizardfolk's Initial Attitude becomes Friendly and they share basic information about Thorodin and the boglands. Despite good relations, the lizardfolk will not join the PCs or help them fight other forces, including Thorodin. The lizardfolk wish only to find a new home and reestablish their lost culture.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Twelve lizardfolk (hp 30 each) sleep on the platforms and pillars, and their leader, Hassssless (hp 44), sleeps on the dais. When anyone enters the refuge, the lizardfolk remain in these prone positions, hoping intruders will move on quickly. Should anyone climb any stair or ladder within the chamber, the lizardfolk leap down, seeking to kill them quickly. If any enemies remain standing after 2 rounds of combat, the lizardfolk retreat through the secret door to the east, hoping to use their trap in Room K72 to foil any pursuit.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the Initial Attitude of the lizardfolk to Hostile. To decrease the challenge, remove four lizardfolk.

♣ Hassssless, Lizardfolk Brb 5: CR 4; Medium humanoid (reptilian); HD 2d8+4 + 5d12+10; hp 61; Init +0; Spd 30 ft.; AC 15, touch 10, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +6; Grp +10; Atk Claw +10 melee (1d4+4) or +12 melee (1d12+7/×3, +1 greataxe) or +6 ranged (1d6+4, javelin); Full Atk +10 melee (1d4+4, 2 claws) and +8 melee (1d4+2, bite) or +12/+7 melee (1d12+7/×3, +1 greataxe) or +6 ranged (1d6+4, javelin); SA Rage 2/day; SQ Hold breath, improved uncanny dodge, trap sense +1, uncanny dodge; AL N; SV Fort +6, Ref +4, Will +1; Str 18, Dex 11, Con 15, Int 10, Wis 10, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Balance +4, Jump +14, Listen +8, Swim +14, Spot +2, Survival +8; Alertness, Multiattack, Power Attack.

Hold Breath: A lizardfolk can hold its breath for a number of rounds equal to four times its Constitution score before it risks drowning.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Hassssless retains his Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) even if he is caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker. However, he still loses his Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized.

Trap Sense (Ex): Hassssless gains a +1 bonus on Reflex saves made to avoid traps and a +1 dodge bonus to AC against attacks made by traps.
