AN INTRODUCTION TO THE WORLD'S LARGEST DUNGEON

HISTORY

Millennia ago, the celestials built a great dungeon. Within it, the celestials erected mammoth walls, locks, doors, and traps. It warded off those who would enter, but also walled in those who would escape: it was a dungeon larger than any ever known. Within it the celestials imprisoned hellish undead, demonic beasts, and fiendish monstrosities.

It was a perfect construction. Before the first dwarf would ever be born to sculpt stone, angels and celestials carved a work of art that no one would ever see. Perfect in every detail, it would stand inviolate for thousands of years. But none can say why the gods ordered demons and liches to be entombed and not destroyed. And in time, the gods would rue their mercy.

Centuries passed and the tomb stood unchanged. The champions who protected humanity from the liches and hezrou and pit fiends stood vigilant guard, ready to spend eternity in honor of the gods. But time passed over the celestials. The world forgot its heroes. Even the heavens turned a blind eye to the angels, inevitables, and guardians serving out their destiny entombed in the earth.

No one is sure how much time passed; history has forgotten the quest of the celestial heroes. One thing is certain: the earth is an unforgiving mistress and her power cannot be held back.

An earthquake cracked the foundation of the dungeon. The rift spread for miles, nearly ripping the dungeon in two. Into the rift flowed magma, but it did not boil the occupants of the dungeon. The temperature rose beneath the earth, and the cold home of the unliving became capable of sustaining life.

It was not long before the derro came. They made their homes among the rocks and tombs. Many of the traps set throughout the dungeon had been triggered, and creatures that the celestials had sworn to entomb eternally had escaped. In time, more subterranean creatures would make their homes in the rock. All the while, celestials contained the truest evils in the heart of this prison.

Then another earthquake pushed jagged earth through the dungeon floor, destroying a large portion of its foundation. Driders and drow dug beneath the rock and rubble to make their homes. The same earthquake tore a hole in the ceiling, and flying beasts like the arrowhawk and belker perched on the highest plateaus of their underground sanctuary.

As the dungeon's population grew, so did the celestials' fear that mankind would be destroyed by its inhabitants. Two titans made the long journey to the mountains and stood guard at the entrance and exit to the tombs, in eternal vigil.

Time passed. Few monsters made the climb down from the surface or pushed up from below. Only the strongest made a home in the debris of the prison. Eventually, more derro came, bringing other diggers with them. When they required more room, the derro dug deeper.

The burrowing derro caused a massive landslide, bringing thousands of pounds of earth and millions of gallons of water crashing in. Hundreds of derro and duergar died and the survivors moved deeper into the dungeon. Enlisting every manner of enslavable race, the derro crossed a giant chasm and started digging again.

Within the last hundred years, the dungeon has seen unprecedented activity. Every manner of creature lives in the dungeon. An elder treant and its elven entourage have made a refuge in the westernmost portion, while the undead have remained entombed at the northernmost point since the dungeon's creation. The core of the dungeon (Regions F and G) show the greatest sign of conflict, with angels and devils waging a war that must end poorly. Lastly, the exit has seen a change of power that will stymie heroes who think they're "almost done."

The World's Largest Dungeon represents years of adventuring. Do not tread lightly, but raise your swords high.

FACTS ABOUT THE DUNGEON

The dungeon is in a mountainous region and has been buried for countless years. It can have any number of entrances, but for ease of play, we have provided only one. If the DM desires to add more, they should be well hidden or even guarded by the creatures protecting their portion of the dungeon (kobolds near the front, winter wolves along the cold northeast section, and so on).

Because the northern reaches of the World's Largest Dungeon have access to the surface world, it should be in a remote area, lest adventurers know all along it is here. Page 8 lists a number of ways for the PCs to "stumble" upon the Dungeon, but ultimately, what draws the PCs to the Dungeon is for the DM to decide.

A chasm filled with magma (consisting solely of mephits) pushes through the earth beneath the Dungeon. It must have a beginning and end point, but the DM may simply insist that it remains under the earth, pushing up under a lake or sea bed, warming the ocean currents.

The monsters in the Dungeon do not have children. There are no locations with baby orcs or yuan-ti eggs. If this does not mesh with your vision of a harmonious dungeon, we apologize now. Killing children, whatever their race, faction, or identification, is not heroic.

What you are reading is the product of one line developer, almost 20 writers, and over 100 years of imagination and gameplay. We made it fun first and useful second. Logic was a byproduct of our stubbornness, but was always subordinate to the first two laws.

We hope you enjoy the read.

ECOLOGY

Taken at face value, a dungeon housing over 1,000 monsters is going to need a food source other than “the titan just eats the elves.” In all honesty, we don’t expect this adventure to be run from beginning to end. While it has been designed to be just that — the world’s largest dungeon — and it has a logical reason for being here, such an undertaking would break even the bravest DM and players.

Therefore, it is our contention that lichen, dire rats, goblins, and dire boars make for an excellent food chain. In the lower levels of the Dungeon, goblins hunt the dire rats and eat them, and someone eats the goblins. Who? That’s up to you. As for the higher levels of the Dungeon, drop in a farm of dire boars and you’re all set. Like all pigs, they’ll eat whatever slop you serve them, and chances are dire boars taste just as good as their real-world counterparts.

If you need more explanation beyond that, here are a few “magical” answers to help quell your need for realism.

- Underground springs of water provide all manner of sustenance.
- Time moves slowly here, so when most creatures do eat, it nourishes them longer.
- Because of the presence of the celestials, no one needs to eat. That’s why it’s such a hospitable place for monsters: there is less competition over resources.
- Races trade with the fey. In exchange for not wiping them out, the nymphs and dryads provide edible lichen and other food. After all, if you eat a treant today, you’ll be hungry tomorrow, and then what?
- At high enough levels, clerics can make food from nothing. Certainly a goblin shaman could summon a plate of grubs for his followers.
- The steam mephits provide magical sustenance to all who stand on the rocks of the Dungeon. (We don’t know how that works, exactly.)
- Certain races, like the driders, are experimenting with creature crossbreeding. Maybe chaos beasts or free-range chuul are tasty.
- Cut the Dungeon into bite-size morsels and run it as separate lairs, each with its own passage to the outside.
- Perhaps intelligent monsters are more nutritious...

EVERY MONSTER?

What?

Now you’re probably wondering how we could say that on the back of the package and not follow through on the inside. Isn’t that lying? Before you call your congressman, let us explain. Everything is in here, but not the way you’re thinking.

For instance, we have chromatic dragons and a metallic dragon, but not a blue or white dragon. We have a sphinx, but not every variety of sphinx; we thought the androsphinx satisfied the category and we moved on. We have most of the dire animals, but not all of them. Where we could, we used every part of the buffalo, so to speak.

Guardinals are just too cool to ignore and most demons and devils need to appear en masse, not just in cameos. We kept less interesting or useful monsters under wraps, so we could use the extra room to give the more important underground beasts (derro, drow, orcs, etc.) a unique look and feel. We especially hope you like what we did with the aberrations and undead, which are among our favorites.

Whenever possible, we mixed templates with monsters in interesting ways. An advanced elder treant is the focal point of nearly a square mile of the Dungeon, and one wild elf is a half-fiend, because we’d never seen one. (One writer begged for a fiendish, half-dragon lycanthropic digester, just to see the stats.)

You’ll also notice the lack of animals and vermin. Animals and vermin are not monsters. While a crow could certainly find its way into the dungeon to eat a dead rat, and each corpse attracts its swarm of ants, they do not belong in a dungeon.

In the end, we wanted to give you something you’d never seen before, but we also wanted it to be useful. Fanatic completism took a back seat to making the Dungeon fun and useful.

LAYOUT AND DESIGN

The Dungeon was built to jail undead and demons, not to be comfortable. There are no barracks, kitchens, or anything resembling “living” quarters. Humanoids and other carpetbagger creatures have made do with what they’ve found here. Makeshift barracks do not afford the comforts of home. The PCs won’t find a logical pattern here.

After a few weeks of exploring, the PCs may start coming to their own conclusions about the Dungeon. If not, they can always run into the lantern archon.

LANTERN ARCHON(S)

One of the PCs’ best friends are the helpful lantern archons that may appear throughout the Dungeon. These celestials were assigned to know everything about their own dungeon sections, and some have survived to the present day. Each lantern archon knows why its Region of the Dungeon was created, but is ignorant of conditions on other maps. These archons are a great way to dole out information to the PCs.

Lantern archons can be found anywhere the DM likes. They know many things they shouldn’t, like PC names, recent plunder, total dead in the area, and so on. They are not there to tell the PCs what lies beyond a door, but rather to point them to the Dungeon’s major plots. Their original purpose was to watchdog the Regions, but since the earthquake, each archon has grown sullen (and perhaps a little lonely), taking on a personality of its own.

All of the lantern archons believe that Region O is the only exit to the Dungeon and that Barcellus (Room O59), a titan loyal to the celestials, guards it. They do not know that Barcellus has been replaced. See Region O for more details.

Feel free to give each archon a unique voice. Alternately, ignore them altogether and have the PCs “find” their way into the mess.

THE DUNGEON ENVIRONMENT: SCALE

The maps were initially designed to be 5-ft. by 5-ft. squares. However, this can easily be modified to 10 ft. by 10 ft. In fact, we recommend it. Doing so requires the DM to visualize some of the Rooms differently, but none of this reduces the playability or fun of the Dungeon. Adaptability is the key.

You may, if you wish, even increase the scale to 15 ft. or 20 ft. squares.

THE DUNGEON ENVIRONMENT: SIGHT

A key thing to keep in mind is that the Dungeon is completely dark. Except where noted, there are no sources of light anywhere inside the Dungeon. This environment does not present a problem for most creatures, which rely on darkvision or blindvision to find their way.

Of course, while darkvision or blindvision allows the creatures to see, there are distance limits to such vision that come into play in some cases — a creature with darkvision 90 ft. can have a significant advantage over one with darkvision 60 ft.

Because of this, unless the party is composed entirely of races that have darkvision (commonly dwarves and half-orcs), they must rely on light sources to find their way. Aside from illumination problems (torches burn out, light spells end), having to rely on light sources presents a huge handicap to moving in Sections where other creatures can see in the dark. Outside, a torch can literally be seen from miles away on a moonless night. Inside a dungeon, low ceilings and tight corridors reduce torch visibility to 100 ft. or so. Nonetheless, any attempts at stealth, including surprise, are ruined by a simple candle as a watchful creature is likely to spot the light source long before it becomes visible. Nothing attracts unwanted attention in darkness like a source of light.

Regions H, K, L, M, the eastern edge of N, and O all have slightly different lighting conditions. Higher ceilings, holes in the mountain tops, and other conditions make these Regions different from the claustrophobic tunnels of the remaining dungeon. Review these chapters and make sure the PCs understand just how high the ceilings are.

THE DUNGEON ENVIRONMENT: SOUND

Sound doesn't travel as far as the PCs might expect. While the Dungeon is not soundproof, the walls were made very thick to muffle the screams of the demons inside their cells. Wards were added to soften the annoying, persistent echoes. Years of neglect have caused these wards to warp, creating an unplanned new effect: sound is unpredictable.

This means a lot to clever DMs. If the PCs are being extra quiet, perhaps a single breath gets funneled down a quarter-mile of corridor, alerting everyone of their presence. Or an epic battle in a Room two doors away goes unheard. Echoes from the farthest reaches of the Dungeon could be heard at the entryway, and the PCs' footfalls could go unheard by someone right in front or behind them.

Don't be afraid to use this to your advantage or to help low-level PCs sneak past larger adversaries. It is important to note the Regions H, K, L, and O do not follow standard rules regarding magic, wards, and — in this case — sound. Feel free to apply these concepts as you see fit (see Encounter Conditions, page 10 and 830).

THE DUNGEON ENVIRONMENT: TRAPS

While most of the original magical traps have long since failed or been destroyed when the creatures imprisoned here escaped, the celestials maintained a number of other traps up until their departure to Regions E and G. Although they are usually in areas of strategic importance, such as at an important junction or guarding a supply cache, traps can occasionally be found in unexpected places.

Many traps were designed only to paralyze the undead and demonic forces that could not be destroyed. Others produce cold and/or fire depending on whether they were designed to kill devils or undead. Acid and sonic traps were effective as well, bringing many creatures to their knees. However, because of the nature of the undead and demonic beasts, someone always had defenses against something. As a result, a variety of traps were made, many of them magically capable of resetting themselves.

Over the centuries, many creatures have stumbled through these corridors, tripping glyphs, spells, and fire traps. The hardest ones to spot have been tripped, and some never reset. The ones that have a marking were circumnavigated once the first hobgoblin was turned into a rat or doused with flaming oil. The easiest ones to spot have been avoided.

That said, traps can be anywhere the DM wants to put them. While corridor traps have a tendency to slow down game play, a project of this type requires them to some degree. Be merciful and give PCs a chance to spot them. Doors, columns, and secret panels could be trapped. Anything that a demon might try to move to get out of a dungeon could be trapped. But feel free to add all manner of non-lethal traps whenever the whim strikes.

THE DUNGEON ENVIRONMENT: OTHER

Because the original builders had little need for creature comforts, the Dungeon has little in the way of furniture or standard dungeon decor.

These Regions are geologically unstable. While an actual collapse is not going to occur while the PCs are in the area, occasional rumbles and tremors are common, and can be anything from a minor nuisance to a real hazard (see Random Encounters for more information).

INTERIOR DOORS AND WALLS

STANDARD DOORS

Unless stated otherwise in the Room or area text, a standard dungeon door conforms to the following rules.

1. If there is no description of the door, it is closed, but unlocked.
2. It is made of wood and bound with iron.

≡ Iron Door: 3 in. thick; hardness 10; hp 90; break DC 32; Open Lock DC 30.

3. It opens in one direction only and has pull rings on both sides, allowing it to be pulled open or pulled closed. All doors push open into the Rooms from the hallway or from the previous Room, unless otherwise noted. In case of a conflict, the decision is up to the DM.
4. Although heavy, it is well anchored on common hinges and can be opened by any creature of Small size or larger simply by leaning on it. Any door can be pushed, but they may only be pulled by a creature able to grasp the ring. Creatures of Tiny size or smaller do not have the mass to pull the door open even if they have the strength.
5. It is neutrally hinged and does not swing open or closed on its own; a closed door stays closed and an open door stays open unless someone, or something, shuts it.
6. It has roughly a half-inch gap between the bottom of the door and the floor, allowing for air, light, noise, and smells to escape. Most prison/vault doors are sealed completely.

SECRET DOORS

Unless stated otherwise in the text, a secret door conforms to the following rules.

1. If there is no description of the door, it is closed.
2. It is made of stone, or whatever material the wall is made of.

3. It pivots on a vertical axis by being pushed on one or the other end. Because they are much heavier than standard dungeon doors, secret doors require a successful DC 12 Strength check to push open or closed, and the following special size modifiers apply: Colossal +16, Gargantuan +12, Huge +8, Large +4, Medium +0, Small -4. Creatures of Tiny size or smaller do not have the mass to push open a secret door, no matter how strong they are. In addition to these modifiers, any creature that is on more than two legs or is otherwise exceptionally stable gains a +4 modifier.

4. Unless noted, discovering it requires a DC 20 Search check. In more advanced Regions this number may be as high as 30 or 35, per the DM's discretion.

5. Unless noted, it has no locking mechanisms and thus cannot be locked, nor does it have a return mechanism. Secret doors remain open if opened, or closed if closed.

- It is six feet high by seven feet wide. When fully open (the door is completely perpendicular to the wall) there is a total of two feet worth of maneuvering space between the secret door and the wall. This is large enough for a single creature of Medium size to squeeze through on either side simultaneously; creatures of Large size or larger normally cannot fit through such a space (although whether they actually can or not is ultimately the DM's call and depends on the physical characteristics of the creature; an Escape Artist check may be in order). The door sits one foot off the ground on a threshold to allow for the pivot, a fact that also makes it more difficult to detect. Keep in mind that when opened, there is a threshold one foot high that creatures must step over in order to pass through.
- It is built to very tight tolerances, although there is a slight gap at the top and bottom through which noise or air might pass. Because of the thickness of the secret door, this gap is not large enough to allow light through.
- Pushing it open causes the stone to scrape slightly and makes the same amount of noise as a person in medium armor trying to walk silently (DC 5 Listen check to detect the noise).

THE SIMPLE ANSWER

Unless otherwise stated, all walls are stone and all doors are iron.

⇒ Iron Door: 3 in. thick; hardness 10; hp 90; break DC 32; Open Lock DC 30.

Due to the nature of the Dungeon, even a small section of broken stone causes no lasting damage to the superstructure. Only a force on par with a cataclysmic earthquake can damage the foundation.

LOCKED DOORS

A number of doors in the Dungeon are locked. This makes the Open Lock skill very handy. In fact, PCs shouldn't enter this dungeon without a rogue and a masterwork set of thieves' tools (lockpicks). That said, there are a number of things the PCs should be aware of.

There are generally 20 tools in a given lockpick set. For each lockpick that is damaged or lost, the PC suffers a -2 circumstance penalty to his Open Lock check. Thieves' tools are generally so delicate that only a DC 25 or 20 Craft (blacksmith or locksmith) check can fix them. Usually, a rogue just buys new tools. In The World's Largest Dungeon, that might not be an option.

CEILINGS

The dungeon ceiling is sometimes as low as 10 ft. and sometimes as high as 50 ft. or more. Originally we detailed ceiling height, but cut it for space, opting instead to include more useful details (like tactics). The DM may decide how tall each Room is, or roll once per Region, Section, or Room to determine the ceiling height.

If you need details, consider rolling for each Room.

1d20	Height
1-5	10 ft.
6-10	15 ft.
11-14	20 ft.
15-16	25 ft.
17	30 ft.
18	40 ft.
19	50 ft.
20	2d6 × 10 ft., or 1d20 × 5 ft.

Outside the "dungeon" proper, where the stonework becomes dug-out earth and the Regions are more cavernous, the ceilings rise as high as four miles in places.

TELEPORTATION AND EXTRADIMENSIONAL TRAVEL

The walls of a prison are useless when its inhabitants can just phase out of existence and reappear on any plane they wish. The celestials therefore surrounded the prison with a null field, negating all extradimensional travel and teleportation. Any magic that allows the PCs or creatures to "jump" from place to place is negated. In fact, as a result of this design, creatures that have teleported in have found they cannot escape.

Since the earthquakes pockets have developed throughout the complex where the null field has weakened disappeared completely. The text explains exactly where, but Regions H, K, L and O are the weakest in this regard. Additionally, some maps, such as A, E, F, and N, have teleportation built into their design. The maze-like nature of Regions E and F make the random teleporters that much more devastating.

The DM may decide that creatures like barghests, shadows, blink dogs, and so on have limited range of motion on the ethereal or shadow planes, but they can never escape the prison altogether. Spells like dimension door, if allowed, only work to line of sight or 100 ft. (whichever is less).

Bags of holding, portable holes, and the like lose their link temporarily with the dimension in question. Stored items cannot be accessed, and items added fill the bag as though it were a normal item.

TREASURE

The celestials did not build this dungeon with trinkets in mind. Most anything the PCs find will be items that monsters brought with them, or items that a demon or devil died with. In such an instance, the item would have been scooped up by someone (hobgoblin, etc.) and taken back to his lair.

EXPERIENCE POINTS

Most DMs and PCs aren't going to like this, but it was inevitable. If the PCs earn XP at the "normal" rate, they'll be 8th level before they leave the first map. In order to keep this adventure challenging, we had to ignore that.

It is our intention that PCs advance only twice per map. The progression allows them to reach 20th level or so by the time they reach the end of the Dungeon and provides enough challenges to keep things interesting. We can't enforce this; no one is going to be at the table watching you hand out XP. 3rd Edition's greatest strength is a single XP progression for all classes, allowing DMs to advance the PCs to the next "bump" at will.

Map A is designed for levels 1 to 3, Map B for levels 3 to 5, and so on. A chart is provided on page 9, showing where advancement should take place.

SOME LOGIC ABOUT XP

Interestingly enough, experience points are supposed to represent things learned by overcoming a foe or trap. But once you've defeated your 20th orc, what more can you learn from killing orcs? DMs that wish to apply this logic to handing out XP may want to cut XP rewards in half each time the PCs kill a creature they've killed before. This should provide DMs and PCs with the necessary "realism" without sacrificing playability.

If the PCs still don't like this logic, hand out XP for the Encounter Level (EL) and not the CR of every individual monster.

A SILVER LINING

If this dungeon is NOT run from beginning to end as one epic campaign, and merely cut into 16 separate dungeons for use in separate campaigns, then feel free to hand out whatever XP you like.

GETTING IN

How the PCs find the Dungeon is ultimately up to you. Since it's been hidden for centuries, discovering the Dungeon is an impressive feat. However, the PCs should not be aware of the scope of the Dungeon, at first, being drawn in by something simple, only later to learn the density of the World's Largest Dungeon.

Here are a number of ways to get things started, but feel free to make up whatever you like.

1d20*	Reason
1	Glory. Is there any other reason?
2	A holy order — knowing of the Dungeon's presence — built a monastery over it. Waiting for the "sign bearers/chosen ones" to arrive, they invite the PCs in. It has remained a secret, until now.
3	The PCs, having chased a creature into the Dungeon, are now trapped and must make their way out.
4	One of the PCs falls through a sinkhole into Room A1 and the party must jump in to save him (it's deeper than their rope allows them to climb).
5	The PCs, ordered on a mission by a church, guild, king, etc., gather their belongings and begin the longest journey of their lives. They are in the dark about what lies ahead and only a few wizards know the truth.
6	Rumors of a great artifact attract one or all of the PCs.
7	Rumors of gold, jewels, and treasure attract one or all of the PCs.
8	Omens, prophecies, and the superstitions of the peasantry point to something evil stirring beneath the earth. "North of here, you'll find it... brewing its demon seed. It's evil. More evil than you can imagine, my friend. Saw it with my own two eyes. I did."
9	The PCs (or a particular PC) are summoned by their deity to complete an important quest. The deity is unclear on the details, but a journey north to an abandoned cave and a visit with a titan are required.
10	The PCs (or a particular PC) are summoned by their deity to complete an important quest. The deity summoning the PCs is actually a angel, solar, or marut needing help. It speaks to the PCs in visions, drawing them to aid it.
11	The PCs (or a particular PC) are summoned by their deity to complete an important quest. The deity summoning the PCs is actually a demon imprisoned in the Dungeon, craving freedom. It speaks to the PCs in visions, drawing them to free it.
12	Hunted, the PCs take refuge in a cave to wait out their attackers. However, once inside, they discover the Dungeon (Room A1).
13	The PCs wait out a storm in a nearby cave. Once inside, they discover the Dungeon (Room A1).
14	Creatures from Region A escape to the surface (somehow) creating havoc and mayhem wherever they go. The PCs are sent to investigate.
15	An inexplicable earthquake rips apart a city. Magical divinations point to the source, miles north under a mountain foretold by seers as a place of destruction.
16	A lost relative or friend went missing recently, and the PCs are sent to investigate.
17	One of the PCs inherits a piece of land located above the Dungeon.
18	Dead guardians of the Dungeon, unquiet since they failed in their duties, haunt the land. Their "bodies" lie in desecrated soil, so their spirits approach the PCs, asking them to put their remains to rest. This works well if there is a sympathetic cleric in the group.

19	"Um... It's like a dungeon and stuff, ya know? So let's, like, go check it out."
20	The gods and celestials can see all of time at once. They knew the fate of man long before his birth on this world. They knew that champions would come to the aid of the celestials even before they built a single dungeon wall. They knew the day would come when mankind would "grow up," and the truest challenge of their right to self-govern would be overcoming the horrors that lie within the World's Largest Dungeon.

* Or just pick one.

 This is the reason the designer chose. The PCs are fated to enter the Dungeon, overcome its foes, and free their world from the tyranny of evil.

Alternately, if the players know that you bought this book, tell them to equip themselves for a long journey and pick a mission from the list below.

1d20*	Reason
1	Glory.
2	Treasure.
3	Glory and treasure.
4	A punishment.
5	A tournament.
6	Church or holy mission.
7	A rescue mission goes horribly wrong.
8	The death of the titan marks the end of an age. Now it's the time for heroes. The doors are open. What are you waiting for?
9	Throw the PCs a curve ball. Take them through Module B2, and have the rubble in Room 51 lead to Room A1 of the World's Largest Dungeon.
10	It's time to save the day!
11	You just spent a bundle on this book and you're going to play it, whether the PCs like dungeon crawls or not! Experience Points, man. Experience Points!
12	It's what the Knights of the Dinner Table ™ would do.
13	It's what Igor ™ would do. It must be mine!
14	Because if the World's Largest Dungeon was in your backyard, you'd grab a shovel, throw on some armor, and pack a lunch. You just started college and you need something to do for the next 4 years.
15	There's always room for Orcs ™!
16	We know you've discovered girls and beer, but c'mon... one last adventure.
17	Peter Adkinson™ says so.
18	When you're done gaming, the World's Largest Life ™ starts, and pretend is much more fun.

* Or just pick one.

QUICK AND DIRTY PERCENTILE

Since 20 times 5 equals 100, any percentile can easily be figured on a 1d20. Simply round the percentage to the nearest 5 or 10, divide by 5, and roll that number or less on a 1d20. This is a fast and easy calculation that you can do in your head.

While this book lists all percentiles as 10%, 35%, 60% and so on, it is designed for DMs to use 1d20 and multiply the roll by 5 (to keep the game moving). On page 832, you'll find a chart, just in case.

BASIC OVERVIEW

Each map (or Region) has its own theme. Divided by obstacles, territorial markings, secret doors and so on, these Regions can be divided into separate adventures or linked into one grand campaign. While each chapter explains its role, this is a short overview of each section.

Region A. Orcs, kobolds, and extraplanar creatures fight for territorial control. At the heart of the conflict is a wererat bent on controlling the whole Region. This introduction suggests to the PCs that this is not a typical adventure. Levels 1 to 3.

Region B. A series of traps guard a fractured goblin empire. Hobgoblins, bugbears, blink dogs, and a false king. Levels 4 to 6.

Region C. Almost as chaotic as it is ordered, Region C unites many classic dungeoneering themes: traps, puzzles, and unique monsters. Region C is also a dead end, and unless the PCs recover the special key in Room C105, their trip here will go for naught. A black dragon trapped inside the maze and an ancient spectre make up two of the Region's finales. Levels 7 to 9.

Region D. One of the most important plots of the entire complex, the derro are the source of most problems in this dungeon. Now a xill and his minions have enslaved dwarves, duergar, derro, grimlocks, and all manner of burrowing creatures to free an entombed evil. Levels 14 to 18.

Region E. One of a handful of celestial outposts in the Dungeon, the inevitables and guardinals struggle for "authority" while monsters from Region I and the southernmost portions of Region E break down their defenses. A number of creatures in this Region (insects, shadows, etc.) reduce the PCs' ability scores with their poisonous/draining attacks. Clerics will need spells like minor restoration to survive the journey. Levels 4 to 6.

Region F. The most complex maze in the Dungeon, this Region is controlled by three opposing minotaur tribes, each being played against the other by a manipulative rakshasa-medusa team. Randomly teleporting gates make this Region nearly impossible to map. Levels 7 to 9.

Region G. The heart of the Dungeon, and the most important struggle to save the PCs' world from extinction, Region G is the location of the final battle between the angels and demons. Levels 9 to 11.

Region H. Elf guardians and dedicated fey stand vigil around the "first tree," fallen into the Dungeon a few centuries ago. This is the most roleplaying-intensive Region, and the PCs can affect the Dungeon on a much different level than the high fantasy epic conclusions of Regions D, G, and N. Levels 11 to 13.

Region I. Tied to Region M, this Region is home to all the aberrations and "things that should not be." Concerned that the creatures could escape into Region E and, the inevitables built wards to keep them in, but the tide of war slowly slips in the PCs direction. Levels 7 to 9.

Region J. Based on dungeon crawls of old, this Region has puzzles, trapped statues, and tribes of monsters living elbow-to-elbow. With a nearly impossible finale, the Region will have PCs visiting again and again. Levels 13 to 15.

Regions K and L. These two Regions are intricately linked. Another by-product of the derro dig, this lake and adjoining swamp are the result of the landslide that dropped the two-mile-high ceiling into the Dungeon. Levels 11 to 13 and 13 to 15.

Region M. Tied to Region I, M is the most conflicted of the maps. Drider masters perform horrible experiments on their drow slaves, tossing the aberrant remains into Region I. An exit to the mountain peaks above the Dungeon promises escape for those who can fly, but the cloud giants and flying beasts that control this Region have their own plans. Levels 9 to 12.

Region N. The largest and most impenetrable part of the Dungeon, the Tomb of the Unliving houses a three-front war between a lich, a mummy lord, and ghost. Millennia of war have sculpted the landscape of this tomb, but none of these beasts have yet succeeded in releasing the terrible World Eater. Levels 14 to 18.

Region O. The climax to the Dungeon holds yet another twist. While the PCs may or may not know about the titan guarding the exit, the frost giants have enslaved the Region's occupants and taken control of the exit. They are not pushovers and PCs thinking the undead were the final piece of the puzzle are in for a rude awakening. Because the PCs can race to the end, this Region covers Levels 16 to 20.

READING THE ENCOUNTERS

Each encounter — all 1,612 of them — is written in the same format. Each opens with the number and name of the Room followed by pertinent information on running the encounter.

If there is specific information about the door or entrance to the Room that DMs should be aware of before the PCs enter, it can be found before the Read Aloud Text. Additionally, if there is a trap or something of note before the door, it is mentioned here. Some encounters happen in hallways, so be alert for them.

Read Aloud Text. It is recommended that the DM paraphrase or relay this information in his own voice, rather than read it aloud verbatim. This text relays to the players what they see, hear, and sense about the environment.

Initial Attitude. Attitudes for NPCs and monsters are Hostile, Unfriendly, Indifferent, Friendly, and Helpful. Few in this dungeon are Helpful. The Player's Handbook™ explains how to use the Diplomacy skill to sway attitudes, should the PCs choose to negotiate rather than fight. Hostile attitudes are hard to change, and monsters that are assigned to guard duty rarely change their minds about attacking.

Encounter. This is the meat of each Room, and includes the Room's history, details of the environment, monsters, traps, and so on. If a Room is completely empty, there is still a short description to give the DM something to improvise. If a monster or NPC is present, its hit points are listed. If the encounter refers to creatures from another part of the Dungeon, it lists the Room they are from.

Encounter Condition. This is a special section. Written in shorthand, these notes point the DM to the chart on page 10 and 830, explaining exactly how to conduct the battle. Not every encounter has a special condition, but feel free to add them to taste.

Sometimes Encounter Conditions exist for encounters that are not violent. Details are still provided should a fight break out, or should the PCs try to sleep in a haunted chamber.

Tactics. Sometimes generic, other times specific, the tactics of a given monster are explained here. Sometimes the Tactics section helps a DM understand the contents of the Room, how to open a secret door, or what the best course of action is. Tactics is a catch-all when the Encounter and Treasure sections don't fit.

NOMENCLATURE

There are a few keywords that we used to make reading this a little easier.

Map. There are 16 full-color 22-inch by 17-inch maps in this dungeon. They can be cut into smaller lairs for individual adventures, or brought together into one campaign.

Random Encounter. Every Section of the Dungeon has its own Random Encounter chart. These are usually rolled every hour, but they can be altered to taste.

Region. An entire Map is called a Region. There are 15 Regions to the Dungeon, with Region N being twice the size of the others. Each Region has its own chapter in this book. While Region and Map are nearly synonymous, they are not interchangeable terms.

Room. The thing the PCs are standing in. It can be a 10 ft. by 10 ft. cube. Or, it can be a 100 ft. wide cavern. So long as there is an encounter there, it's a Room. Every Room is numbered. If it isn't numbered, it's not a Room.

Section. The territory that the monsters/creatures/NPCs live in. "Rooms K11 through K24," for instance, is a Section of the Dungeon. Some rules affect an entire Section, or certain Random Encounters may occur only in that Section. A Section comprises many Rooms and should not be confused with a Region.

Treasure. Be careful not to read this aloud until the PCs have taken time to search the Room. Because there are over 1,500 Rooms in the Dungeon, no matter how much or how little treasure we assigned, it was going to be the wrong amount. Carefully weigh whether or not the PCs need another +1 longsword; would the campaign be better served with a potion of cure light wounds instead? Don't be afraid to give out less treasure at the start of a Region, anticipating greater rewards at the end.

EL. This is the encounter level, here only to help DMs quickly grasp the difficulty of the encounter. If you're giving out XP, you can use this instead of each individual monster's CR.

Scaling. Each encounter with a monster or trap includes tips on how to make the encounter easier or harder. The DM should feel free to ignore this section, or embellish each encounter as he sees fit.

The DM is always free to increase DCs. If the PCs succeed at every Diplomacy, Hide, Listen, Search, Spot, or Swim check, the game can grow stagnant. Increasing the DC is as simple as saying "the stonework is very dense" (a -6 circumstance penalty to all Listen checks), or "the pervading darkness and low ceilings make it hard to see" (Spot checks are more difficult beyond 30 ft. or so).

This book is a great big toolbox, and you are the craftsman.

✦ Stat Block. An NPC or monster stat block appears in this font and follows each Encounter in which a monster of that type is present. We understand that in doing this, there is a duplication of effort, but the more important issue was being complete and thorough.

Stat blocks are presented in 3.5 format. Any time the stat block is different from the information printed in the Monster Manual™, the stat block is correct. Even though they might look similar, stat blocks often vary from one another in terms of weapons, hit points, and even special qualities. Read them carefully. An iron golem, for instance, might have a magical attack that it normally wouldn't have. Many encounters have been designed with these changes in mind. Ignoring them robs the adventure of crucial flavor.

The final line of a stat block is Possessions, which details items when the Atk and AC of the creature is not thorough enough. It is occasionally omitted for space reasons. If a Possessions line is missing, but Atk lists a longsword, assume that the NPC carries a longsword.

ICONS

The following shortcut icons identify traps, doors, NPCs, and monsters quickly. If a monster has a name, it's an NPC, even if it's still an orc.

✦ Monster.

▲ NPC.

⚡ Trap.

ENCOUNTER CONDITIONS

Some encounters have special conditions or rules that make it harder for the PCs to defeat the monsters. Bear in mind that the monsters don't want to die; they will do everything in their power to stay alive. They fight from vantage points; they ambush the PCs when they aren't looking; they use numbers to their advantage; and they flee or surrender when death is imminent.

None of the monsters in this dungeon are stupid. Be prepared to kick the PCs around a little until they learn this. And if that doesn't work, add a few Encounter Conditions of your own.

Encounter Conditions listed in [brackets] are not automatic. Some are optional, while others are contingent upon something in the encounter. Read the Encounter thoroughly to note the difference.

Ambush: The monsters gain a +4 circumstance bonus to all Hide and Move Silently skill checks prior to Initiative.

Ambush (darkness): In addition to Ambush, the monsters attack all light sources at first from a distance and then attack the PCs from darkness, taking advantage of their darkvision. Darkness is explained fully in the Dungeon Master's Guide™.

Bog: Like Flooded (see below), a bog prohibits movement and makes a creature's high Dexterity useless. Strength, not speed, saves you in these situations. Every creature's Dexterity modifier is reduced by -3. If this reduces the Dexterity bonus to 0 or less, the creature is considered flat-footed. In addition, movement is halved (minimum 5 ft.) and no one can take a free 5-foot step. Torches have a 50% chance of guttering out in the damp air. If a PC falls into the bog, his torch automatically goes out.

Concealment: The monsters in the Room gain the benefits of concealment (hiding in shadows, etc.), unless they are adjacent to a PC. Concealment confers a miss chance of 20% on any successful attack against the monster or NPC.

Concealment (total): The monsters in the Room gain the benefits of total concealment (hiding in shadows, etc.), unless they are adjacent to a PC. Total concealment confers a miss chance of 50% on any successful attack against the monster or NPC.

Cover: The monsters in this Room maintain cover (they push over a table, stand behind barrels, etc.), unless they are adjacent to a PC. Cover grants a number of benefits per the Player's Handbook™, including bonuses on Reflex saves, Hide checks, and AC.

Cover (soft): As Cover, but soft cover provides no bonus to Reflex saves.

Cursed X: Something isn't right about this Room. Its inhabitants are slightly unhinged or its walls seem to sag with an undefinable sadness. The longer PCs spend in this Room, the harder it is for them to leave. Increase the DC of all Willpower saves by X while in this Room. Monsters or PCs already suffering from madness do not suffer this penalty.

Deep Darkness: This Room is cast in perpetual magical darkness that cannot be dispelled. Torches and lanterns give off 1/2 their normal light and magical light requires a Concentration check (DC 15 + spell level) or it is extinguished.

Deep Silence: This Room is cast in perpetual magical silence that cannot be dispelled. Listen checks are altogether impossible, and spellcasters cannot cast spells requiring a Verbal component.

Desecration X: This encounter takes place in a desecrated Room. X is the turn resistance all undead gain against turn attempts.

Diseased (Name) X: For every minute the PCs spend in this Room, they must succeed at a DC X Fortitude save or contract the named disease. Even diseases that normally are only contracted through ingestion or injury can be contracted in this Room.

Distracting Noises X: There are noises in the darkness that cannot be explained. Nonetheless, they can affect the wandering minds of PCs. Similar to Echoes, this Room also affects Willpower and Reflex saves, by imposing a penalty equal to X. In addition, Concentration and Listen checks suffer a penalty equal to X. Like Haunted (see below), rest is nearly impossible here.

Distracting Visions X: Something is waiting in the darkness, or the shadows play strangely on the walls. While in this Room, the PCs suffer a penalty to their Initiative checks equal to X. In addition, all Attacks of Opportunity suffer a penalty to the attack roll equal to X. Like Haunted (see below), rest is nearly impossible here.

Draffy: Lanterns (other than hooded lanterns), and torches have a 50% of being extinguished, casting the PCs into darkness. Darkness is explained fully in the Dungeon Master's Guide™.

Echoes X: A great deal of noise and distraction increases the DC of all Listen checks by X.

Extreme Cold: Anyone remaining in this Room for more than 1 minute begins to suffer the effects of cold, per the Dungeon Master's Guide™. Casting spells in the cold is difficult: teeth chatter and fingers shake. For every spell cast in this Room, the caster must succeed at a Concentration check (DC 10 + spell level) or the spell is lost. The cold can be magical or natural. DMs can increase or decrease the severity of the cold by requiring Fortitude saves more or less often.

Extreme Heat: Anyone remaining in this Room for more than 1 minute, begins to suffer the effects of heat, per the Dungeon Master's Guide™. PCs in medium or heavy armor cannot take a charge action in extreme heat. The heat can be magical or otherwise.

Fear X: An inexplicable pallor of evil permeates this Room. PCs that fail at a Willpower save (DC equal to X) are shaken until they leave the Room, plus Xd6 minutes afterwards. Shaken PCs suffer a -2 morale penalty to all attack rolls, saving throws, skill checks, and ability checks.

Fearless: The monsters and NPCs here cannot be intimidated or cajoled, and do not back down from any fights. Undead cannot be turned. Instead, they suffer damage equal to the character level of the cleric on a successful turn attempt.

Flooded: These Rooms have become flooded by a high water table or some magical effect. Every creature's Dexterity bonus is reduced by -2. If this reduces the Dexterity bonus to 0 or less, the creature is considered flat-footed. In addition, movement is halved (minimum 5 ft.) and no one can take a free 5-foot step. Torches have a 50% chance of guttering out in the damp air. If a PC falls into the water, his torch automatically goes out.

Fog X: Fog reduces visibility in the Room (except darkvision) to X ft. Creatures up to X ft. away have concealment (20%). Beyond that, creatures have total concealment (50%).

Hallowed X: This Room is holy. Clerics (and paladins) gain a bonus to all Charisma-based skill checks (including turn attempts), equal to X, but suffer a penalty of -X on rebuke attempts.

Haunted: Rest is impossible. Spells cannot be memorized, meditation doesn't work, and the benefits of natural healing are cut in half.

Hazardous Footing X: The floor is covered in debris, rocks, glass, or sharp objects, or otherwise impedes movement. PCs moving faster than 1/2 speed across Hazardous Footing must succeed at a DC X Reflex save or fall to the ground suffering 1d4+1 points of damage from the debris. No one can take a free 5-foot step on Hazardous Footing. Tiny or smaller creatures gain a +6 competence bonus on this save.

Invisible: For some magical reason, the monsters in the Room gain the benefits of invisibility, until they perform an action (attacking, casting a spell, etc.) that removes this benefit. In addition to its other benefits, invisibility works as Total Concealment, conferring a miss chance of 50% on any successful attack against the monster or NPC.

Poor Footing X: All monsters and PCs suffer a penalty to their base attack equal to X unless they succeed at a Reflex save (DC 10 + X).

Positive Energy: PCs heal 1 hit point per hour in this Room. Undead suffer 1 hit point of damage per minute in this Room.

Safe: This Room is generally safe and might be a good place to rest. Reduce the chance of an encounter here to 1/6th the normal rate of Random Encounters for the Section (e.g. if Random Encounters are rolled every hour, they are rolled every 6 hours in this Room).

Smoke: The air in this Room is thick with an unbreathable smoke, either from magic use or a recent fire. A character who breathes smoke must make a Fortitude save each round (DC 15, +1 per previous check) or spend that round choking and coughing. A character who chokes for 2 consecutive rounds takes 1d6 points of nonlethal damage. Many creatures that do not breathe (demons, outsiders, etc.) use Smoke to their advantage.

Spell Resistance X: This Room is guarded by wards and spells that dispel all magic cast within it. Treat all occupants as having Spell Resistance equal to X. This does not stack with a creature's inherent Spell Resistance, but instead replaces it, if X is greater. In many cases, the creature living in the Room is unaffected by the Spell Resistance when casting at the PCs.

Stagnant Air: The air in this Room is nearly unbreathable, either from rot, decay, or the stench of a rank beast. A character who breathes stagnant air must make a Fortitude save each round (DC 15, +1 per previous check) or spend that round choking and coughing. A character who chokes for 2 consecutive rounds becomes nauseated. Many creatures that do not breathe (demons, outsiders, etc.) use Stagnant Air to their advantage.

Submerged: The Room is completely underwater and the PCs must swim across it. The PCs must have some way to breathe water to remain in this Room, or they will begin to drown.

Tremors X: A tremor shakes the Dungeon, dropping stones on the PCs. PCs must succeed at a DC X Reflex save or suffer 2d6 points of damage at a random point in the Encounter.

Unhallowed X: This Room is unholy. Clerics (and paladins) suffer a penalty to all Charisma-based skill checks (including turn attempts) equal to X, but gain a +X bonus to rebuke attempts.

SKILLS

Here are a list of skills that we generally believe you'll need high marks in to survive this dungeon.

Balance, Concentration (if you're a spellcaster), Decipher Script, Diplomacy, Disable Device (easily the most important skill), Heal, Hide, Intimidate, Jump, Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock (the second most important skill), Search, Speak Language (Undercommon, Goblin, Draconic, and Celestial are a good start), Spellcraft, Spot, Survival, Swim (depending on the route they take), Tumble, and Use Rope.

- Craft (blacksmith, etc.). For repairing damaged weapons and armor during the party's 2 year stint underground.
- Handle Animal. For staring down wolves, taming stray pets, and dealing with DMs.
- Sense Motive. Goblins lie, but it's important for PCs to know how much is truth and how much is imagination.
- Use Magic Device. Maybe not necessary, but it helps.

Skills like Disguise, Forgery, Gather Information, Perform, Profession, Ride, and Sleight of Hand are more suited for the World's Largest City™ and have little to no use in this product. Encourage new PCs to avoid wasting points in these.

Because nobody's heard of the World's Largest Dungeon until now, bardic lore isn't going to help much. "No, I don't know any songs about demon princes banished to the Abyss for slaying everything living fire elf. I've never even heard of fire elves. Can I just sing my song now, please?"

SPELLBOOKS

Because the PCs are going to be underground for about 2 game years, with no way of returning to the surface, it's difficult for wizards to justify spells "appearing" in their spellbooks. Sorcerers, druids, and clerics all draw their power from a less tangible source, but a wizard has no new sources of magic. Because this may upset those wanting to play spellcasters, there are a number of ways to help wizards through this.

There are plenty of scrolls scattered throughout every Region (and plenty of room for the DM to drop them into the Dungeon as he sees fit). When these scrolls are discovered, the wizard can merely place the spells in his spellbook rather than "waste" them in combat. This ensures that wizards always have something, but wholly determines what they can and cannot learn.

Alternately, the DM can allow wizards to start with a full spellbook (as a 20th-level wizard), forcing the fledgling wizard to choose all his spells ahead of time. This is challenging, but can also put a wizard who is unprepared for specific challenges at a huge disadvantage. DMs should choose half of the spells for a spellbook of this nature.

If a wizard gains access to a divine (or bardic) spell that also appears on the arcane spell list, the DM may allow the wizard to learn that spell. If the wizard studies the spell from a divine spellcaster, add +5 to the DC check to learn it. Increase the modifier by +2 per spell level difference between the lists. If the wizard wants to learn a spell that's 3rd level for a cleric but 2nd level for a wizard, increase the DC by +7. No matter what, the wizard can learn only those spells that appear on his spell list.

Finally, the DM can simply allow the PC to choose whichever spells he likes as he goes up in level. This is the least exciting method, but gives PCs the greatest spread of options.

Ultimately, whatever the DM decides is law.

One last thing, spells like entangle and web are devastatingly powerful in a dungeon. We've made sure the bad guys don't have them. DMs should do the same with the PCs.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Random encounters are a staple of dungeon adventuring. Without them, DMs would be unable to justify the random attack of an orc (in a previously cleared Room) while the PCs search for treasure or bed down for the night. Such encounters add a great deal of realism to the dangers of dungeoneering and give the DM room to customize his dungeon.

Random Encounters are, by nature, random, and tend to unbalance game-play against the PCs by draining their hit points, magic, and other resources. While it's important to challenge the PCs every once in a while, it's more important to engage them on a level that doesn't leave them hobbling away from every fight. No matter what the dice say, spread out random encounters so the PCs aren't waking up every morning with knives at their throats.

In addition, while every Region has an interval for Random Encounters (every hour, 30 minutes, 6 rounds, etc.), if the PCs are standing still, the likelihood of someone coming to get them is severely reduced. While some Rooms are "Safe", others are off the beaten path, whether part of an ogre commune or not. Encounters in such areas should occur 1/2 or 1/3 as often, but this is ultimately up to the DM.

Allow opposed Listen/Spot, Hide/Move Silently checks from both the PCs and the creature encountered at the extreme range of vision and hearing before the Encounter takes place. PCs can typically see about 30 ft. underground, 60 ft. with low-light vision or darkvision. Monsters have varying acuteness of sight. Due to the nature of the Dungeon, hearing is difficult to pinpoint. A good rule of thumb is to place the hearing range of a given encounter at 2d6 x 10 ft.

In order to save space, monster stat blocks for Random Encounters are not included. The DM is welcome to sample any monster stat block from the Section whenever a monster is encountered, or use the standard information from the Monster Manual™.

Not every kobold is moving from point A to point B because he's looking for a fight. What if he just got up to get a sandwich? The following chart is useful in determining the "why" of a Random Encounter.

RANDOM ENCOUNTER "CONDITIONS"

1d20	General Condition For Random Encounter
1	The Encounter is aggressive (rage) and attacks the PCs using its best tactical judgement (or lack thereof).
2	The Encounter is catatonic and does not respond to any stimulus.
3	The Encounter is chasing something.
5	The Encounter is desperate, begging the PCs for help.
6	The Encounter is enterprising, willing to aid the PCs in exchange for something else.
7	The Encounter is Friendly.
8	The Encounter is having a Random Encounter of its own, perhaps fighting or parleying with the situation. If trapped, it is trying to get free, offering the PCs information or magical aid in exchange for escape.
9	The Encounter is Hostile.
10	The Encounter is hunting and ambushes the PCs.
11	The Encounter is in a state of shock, wandering aimlessly.
12	The Encounter is Indifferent.
13	The Encounter is injured (less 25% hit points) and is returning home.
14	The Encounter is insane and immediately attacks the PCs.
15	The Encounter is lost.
16	The Encounter is malicious, ready to hurt the PCs when the time is right.
17	The Encounter is panicked and runs from the PCs as fast as possible.
18	The Encounter is running from another Random Encounter.
19	The Encounter is trapped.
20	The Encounter is Unfriendly.

MAKING IT WORK

It's all about the fun. While a great story will always be remembered, a series of great evenings is all we could ever ask from a product of this scope. We encourage DMs to make things challenging, heroic, and epic, but above all, fun. A lot of people put a lot of work into this book, and if you don't gain some kind of enjoyment from it, then we've failed.

And we don't like to fail.

So sit back, relax, and enjoy what will be the best (and longest) gaming experience of your lives.

Before you get going, you'll find an Appendix on page 828, which has all kinds of handy information from the SRD.

MAP ZERO

The following locations do not exist on any map; Rooms Z1 and Z2 happen before the PCs enter the tunnels. Included below is also location Y1, the lava flow that cuts through the Dungeon. Lastly, Rooms W1 through W20 are empty Room descriptions that the DM can swap in throughout the Dungeon as he sees fit. Map V appears on page 541 in Region J.

Z1 THROUGH Z2. A TITAN DIES

Depending on how the PCs find out about the Dungeon, these encounters may not even be necessary. They are provided for convenience, and present important themes for DMs running the entire campaign.

Z1. THE TITAN

As you climb the mountain, rocks and debris slow your ascent. Numerous tracks of different creatures ascend the hillside. The climb levels off as you get closer to the cave mouth. You see a man the size of a galleon lying on the ground at the cave opening. As you get closer, you can see that death has taken him. Despite his obviously decomposed state, the man does not exude the odor of decay.

There are no signs of a struggle. Who was he, and how did he die?

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The body of Breysus, a dead titan, lies at the opening to the world's largest dungeon. For centuries he has stood guard at this doorway, while his brother guarded the other side of the mountain (see Room O59, Map O).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: His Gargantuan +5 halberd and Huge +5 chain shirt are not much use to the PCs. Even if they find a way to carry these items, the magic can only be used by Breysus, and neither the halberd or the chain shirt can be cut down to a smaller size.

In his pockets are a millennium's worth of notes and scribbles, written in an ancient language. The notes weigh a total of 500 lbs. and are strewn about the area, having been rooted through by various creatures bent on finding something of value.

He has no gold, no gems, and nothing else of value.

Should the PCs review the notes, they appear to be in journal form, detailing the thoughts of an ancient creature. Their exact details cannot be ascertained – the language they are written in is long dead. But the notes are a hint that the journey that begins here is not a simple step, but a plummet into darkness.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

Z2. THE TUNNELS

Beyond the body of the titan is a single cave that winds down into the earth.

Should the PCs examine the cave, read further.

The cave is low and shallow, obviously dug by small crude hands. Many footprints mark the dirt, and debris litters every corner. In the back of the cave, a narrow tunnel, poorly lit, leads deeper.

If the PCs investigate the tunnel, allow them to explore further.

The tunnel winds into the mountain, its ceiling some 6 ft. high and 5 ft. wide at the widest. After about 100 ft. or so, the tunnel opens into a larger room, cut from stone and built, rather than dug. It is obvious something lives here.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This tunnel leads to Room A1.

Encounter Condition: Drafty

Y1. EXITS

If you look carefully at the wall maps, you'll see that Maps D, H, L, M, and O all hint at something "beyond". While Maps H, M, and O are designed to be exits, where Maps D and L lead is left to the DM's imagination. It would have been closed-minded to create a dungeon of this magnitude without leaving room for the DM to expand. We could print another book just coming up with ideas of where these maps lead, but in the end, we opted to save space and offer DMs the option of closing the Dungeon off, or allowing PCs to escape through the top. [Alternately, Region H, K, and M are great places for high-level PCs to "get in."]

It is up to the DM to decide whether the PCs can use these exits.

East of Region D. Some of the tunnels running east of the Map are perfect places for new adventures, a whole new campaign to begin, or a route to the surface.

East of Region H. While technically the PCs can "fly" out the top of the Dungeon above this Region, the elves guard their steeds carefully. PCs with the ability to fly can go straight up and out of the Dungeon.

East of Region L. How far to the east the lake extends is up to the DM. Perhaps it's another 100 feet, or perhaps rivulets extend for miles underground to another dungeon entirely.

North and West of Region M. While we haven't defined the Dungeon beyond the borders of the map, the DM can either have the cavern dead end 100 ft. up or have it lead to a series of twisting tunnels leading to another adventure.

North of Region N. The tomb itself is completely walled off, but it's up to the DM how far the caverns around it extend.

Region O. The obvious exit is here. PCs that defeat the frost giant who has taken over the icy home of Barcellus the titan are sure to find the real exit to the Dungeon.

In addition, the ceiling above Regions H, K and L is open... 6 miles up. The PCs can escape from these locations if they are so inclined.

X1. THE LAVA FLOW

The lava flow cutting through the center of the Dungeon is not 100% liquid magma. If it were, it would cook everyone. Instead, it is made up of magma and steam mephits, dancing together in an eternal struggle for dominance. Their relationship is symbiotic, and there will always be an equal number of each.

X1. LAVA FLOW

The following location is the lava flow cutting through the center of all the maps. It is described here for ease of reference. This description fits the lava flow in every Region.

The flow of molten rock meanders to the southeast, consuming all it touches. Bubbling up from the flaming river are occasional pockets of scalding steam, shrieking and moaning, disrupting the earth's quiet. Though the flow is indeed hot, it is bearable, and when you watch the floating bits of rock flare into flame, you can see multitudes of small imp-like creatures playing in the stream, tossing balls of flaming slag at the dancing clouds playing on the fiery river's surface.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: After the earthquake shattered the Dungeon's foundation, opening a rift extending for miles, something strange happened. A small stream of liquid rock slowly filled the chasm created by the quake. It wore away the caves that underlay the Dungeon's foundation, collapsing enormous sections the magma below, and further widening the gorge. As the lava filled the bottom of the rift, it stranded many denizens on small rock islands amidst a sea of fire. Understandably, the temperature rose. Though the heat warmed the complex, it was somehow survivable. No toxic fumes wafted from the flow's surface, just steam as water from the tiny cracks and fissures poured into the burning river, creating patches of semi-solid rock on its surface. Stranger still, the creatures in the Dungeon could approach its shores without suffering from the extreme temperatures. Because of its unusual properties, the complex could sustain all forms of life.

Of course, there is nothing natural about this dungeon, and the odd properties of the flow surprised no long-time inhabitants of this place. In time, it became clear why the molten rock did not fill the caves with poisonous fumes and lethal temperatures. The force of the earthquake had interacted with the Dungeon's magical properties to tear open a permanent gate to two of the Inner Planes: Earth and Fire. Liquid fire and a river of earth poured out of the gate, and when the streams crossed they created the magma.

On the Elemental Plane of Fire, the tear attracted a lot of attention. The native magma and steam mephits investigated the gate and watched where the liquid fire blended with the flowing earth to create a river of magma. Like moths to a flame, the magma and steam mephits and a few fire mephits passed through the portal to play in the magma stream. To their horror, they discovered the gate was one-way, trapping them in the cold caverns of the massive complex. Worse, they could not warn the other mephits who spilled through the gate, trapping more and more of their kind until the chasm filled.

Hordes of mephits came through the tear, but they found the frigid Dungeon inhospitable. The mephits gathered in and around the lava flow, with steam mephits lurking near the surface and magma mephits swimming through it. These outsiders absorbed the heat emitted by the molten rock. The steam mephits, thriving in such environments, contained the toxins, so the poisons did not pollute the air.

Now the mephits rarely leave the security of the lava, allowing other creatures, including the PCs, the chance for survival. The mephits have been here so long, they are no longer interested in getting back to the Elemental Plane of Fire and are content to spend their days mindlessly basking in the heat. They do not communicate with other creatures and attack only if some fool falls in.

Fortunately, the effects of the mephits on the lava reduce the severity posed by this environmental hazard. Falling into this lava flow does not deal the normal 20d6 points of damage. Instead, the lava deals only 6d6 points of damage to unprotected characters each round, insulated as they are by the mephits who swim through it. Victims are still subject to drowning rules as described in the DMG. In addition, a swarm of magma and steam mephits attacks any victim who falls into the flow. The number of mephits attacking each round varies as the flow carries them onward. Each round 1d10+5 magma mephits attack submerged PCs, or 1d6+3 steam mephits and 1d6+3 magma mephits attack PCs floating on the surface.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

Tactics: The flow does not go in a single direction. It bounces back and forth, swirling through the Dungeon core. This should intrigue the PCs, as it is unusual behavior for lava.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, double the number of mephits that can attack the PCs. To decrease the challenge, have them arrive every other round.

SUMMON MONSTER X

It's bound to happen. A PC realizes that nothing in this dungeon ever leaves. The magic of the prison holds it on this plane. "I can spend 14 days summoning badgers for the big battle, right?"

We don't feel good about the answer DMs are going to give the PCs on this one, but here goes. PCs can't have access to summoning spells. It's game-breaking. We can't eliminate conjuration magic entirely, even though by the backstory of the Dungeon it shouldn't work at all.

We're sorry. There's no logical way around it, unless the DM says the magic is so weak the spells dissipate on their own. But that still raises questions about why the other creatures that were summoned here can't leave.

Alternately, we recommend this. Once the magic of summon monster xvii wears off, who's to say that monster is still under the wizard's control? This should not be an excuse to summon monsters to kill them for XP, but if that helpful summoned fiendish badger turns on the wizard in two rounds, that wizard may plan his spellcasting a bit more carefully.

DEMONIC SUMMONING

Demons and devils still retain their demon summoning abilities. But if they can summon other demons and devils, why haven't they summoned more to them to help break out of their cells?

Demons are unpredictable. They don't follow orders well and no one needs sixteen lemures hanging around and screwing up the master plan. Additionally, there is limited space in these cells, and summoning another demon into your Room is just stupid. Demons are already elbow to elbow in some cases. And while demons feed on chaos, one could guess that after 4,000 years of being trapped inside a dungeon cell next to "Bob the Eternal Jerk," summoning "Rob the Endless Moron" won't change the scenery much.

Most of the devils are trapped in Region D where there is no more room. Also, the devils in the Dungeon have an attitude problem. They often don't work well with others and know that another devil of equal or slightly lower power is going rival him or her in no time. Finally, imps are kind of useless in high-powered Regions of the Dungeon; summoning one as a scout would be like delivering a free pizza to your neighbor.

DRUIDS

If you think wizards have it bad in the Dungeon, imagine communing with nature. With the exception of Regions H, K, and L (and maybe Region O), there isn't much for druids to do. Sure they can cast barkskin and have limited healing powers, but what are the odds of finding an animal companion underground?

We could dance around the point, but instead we recommend that DMs simply ban druid PCs. After all, it's called the World's Largest Dungeon. You knew the score when you bought it. We won't apologize for its shortage of picnic areas. The final, however, decision rests in your hands.

Living creatures that fail their saves are tormented by burned skin and seared eyes unless they have immunity to fire or are otherwise protected. This effect imposes a -4 penalty to AC and a -2 penalty on attack rolls for 3 rounds. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Spell-Like Abilities: Once per hour, a magma mephit can use shapechange to take the form of a pool of lava 3 feet in diameter and 6 inches deep. The mephit's damage reduction improves to 20/magic when in this form. The mephit can't attack while in lava form but can use other spell-like abilities. It can move at a speed of 10 feet, but it can't run. In this form the mephit can pass through small holes or narrow openings, even mere cracks. The pool's touch ignites flammable materials such as paper, straw, or dry wood.

Once per day a magma mephit can use pyrotechnics (DC 14). It can use itself as the fire source without harm. Caster level 6th. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Fast Healing (Ex): A magma mephit heals only if it is touching magma, lava, or a flame at least as large as a torch.

This effect imposes a -4 penalty to AC and a -2 penalty on attack rolls for 3 rounds. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Spell-Like Abilities: Once per hour a steam mephit can surround itself with a plume of vapor, duplicating the effect of a blur spell (caster level 3rd). Once per day it can create a rainstorm of boiling water that affects a 20-foot-square area. Living creatures caught in the storm take 2d6 points of fire damage (Reflex DC 14 half; caster level 6th). This ability is the equivalent of a 2nd-level spell. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Fast Healing (Ex): A steam mephit heals only if it is touching boiling water or is in a hot, humid area.

W1 THROUGH W20. EMPTY ROOMS

Though not technically a Section, all 20 of these empty Rooms can be used anywhere in the Dungeon and are printed here together for convenience. While nearly every square foot of dungeon has been thoroughly mapped and detailed, every DM will find that he wants just one more detail. These Rooms are here for that reason and should be used at the DM's discretion.

W1. EMPTY ROOM ONE

A thick layer of dust covers the floor, as two toppled pedestals and the shattered fragments of a marble statue of an elf lie in the center of the room. As you watch, the marble head shifts slightly and its eyelids flutter open. It stares at you with startling blue eyes for a moment and then the eyelids close again.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room contains the remains of the victim of an ancient trap. The trap is no longer active and the only thing the elf can do is shift her face slightly.

Encounter Condition: Haunted

Tactics: A spell like stone to flesh changes her back, but her memory is so fragmented she is of no use to the PCs.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

W2. EMPTY ROOM TWO

An inch-thick layer of muck covers the floor of the room and a dozen closed doors dot the exterior walls. Deeply charred runes in an unknown language mar the center of each granite door and geometric mosaics of green, red and yellow tiles fill the area between each door. The ceiling is covered in bronze discs, each six inches wide.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The majority of the doors are false doors. The runes and mosaics were once traps which released streams of acid from the ceiling and fired lightning bolts from the runes, but these traps failed centuries ago.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4

Tactics: There is no way to get these traps working again and short of a DC 40 Disable Device check, it is unlikely the PCs will ever know what the Room was used for.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

W3. EMPTY ROOM THREE

The walls and ceiling of this Room are featureless, but hundreds of metallic chain links lie scattered upon the ground. Enormous anchors and segmented plates jut through the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The prisoner held within this Room died centuries ago. All that is left are the chains which held him, corroded by his evil.

Encounter Condition: Negative Energy

Tactics: The chains radiate faint evil now and the Room is too oppressive to remain in for long.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

W4. EMPTY ROOM FOUR

Scores of motionless gears, cogs, chains and metallic lengths fill this chamber leaving barely enough room for a human to squeeze through it. Silver inscribed etchings in each mechanism crackle with a feeble electrical charge, but the room conveys a sense of frustrated power and intricate design.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The Room once maintained several magical fields, but the mechanism failed centuries ago and the energy dispersed. All that is left is some resonate magical aura that makes creatures nervous and edgy.

Encounter Condition: Fear 15

Tactics: PCs entering this Room are automatically shaken. Should they fail the fear save, they become frightened instead.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

W5. EMPTY ROOM FIVE

Thick cobwebs obscure vision beyond a few inches, but a harsh buzz echoes from the interior of the room. Tiny spiders scatter before your light and disappear into the webs' depths. The stench of rotting meat wafts through the close air of the chamber.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The only thing within the Room is a rotting corpse of a demon killed centuries ago. Its body constantly regenerates damage at the same rate that it decays, maintaining a perverse stasis. The body is home to thousands of flies, beetles and other vermin.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 5, Stagnant Air

Tactics: While not enough insects nest in the corpse to create a swarm, the DM is free to have few rats and insects collaborate on something pest-like anyway.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

W6. EMPTY ROOM SIX

The stench of death pervades this chamber. The air is thick and a fine cloak of dust covers the stone floor. A painting depicting a large woman in elaborate pink robes hangs in the center of the north wall. Under it is a large wooden coffin. Its lid has been smashed open and its wood has rotted. A closer look reveals the skeletal remains of a humanoid inside, buried with his clothes and sword.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The remains are those of an orc male who died ages ago. While it is not obvious what he died from, he was buried with his belongings, suggesting he was a man of importance.

Encounter Condition: Desecration 2

Tactics: Depending on the orc culture of the DM's game world, the orc could have been buried alive, burned and then buried, had his brain stored in a jar nearby, or any of a hundred other burial rituals.

Treasure: The painting portrays an unknown woman. Though not of particularly high quality, it is ancient and thus worth over 100 gp. The clothing is rotted and useless, but the sword is masterwork quality and requires a good cleaning and sharpening. It is possible the orc was buried with a few other items, including (and up to) one minor magic item (not a potion).

W7. EMPTY ROOM SEVEN

This room is devoid of decoration, but its doors are framed by heavy stone structures sculpted with runes in intriguing patterns. These intricate frames are beautifully crafted but otherwise ordinary. The runes are decorative and not of any known language.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: An angel sculptor fashioned the beautiful doorframes of this Room, which housed archon builders when the vast dungeon complex was created.

W8. EMPTY ROOM EIGHT

A large stone desk dominates this otherwise empty room. An elaborate candelabrum of tarnished silver sits on the gray desk. Its three candles dimly illuminate bas-reliefs on the walls representing the grotesque faces of demons, gargoyles, and other terrifying creatures. The carvings are so well done that in the half-light they seem real.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bas-reliefs in this Room were fashioned by the celestial builders of the Dungeon, adding art to the otherwise dismal surroundings. They represent some of the most fearsome creatures originally imprisoned within the vast complex, as seen by an angelic artist.

Encounter Condition: Positive Energy, Safe

Tactics: The place is safe to rest in for about 4 hours, before the PCs find the irresistible urge to move on. Angels are not lazy (idle hands and all that) and only made this Room for short respites.

Treasure: The candelabrum has seven stems and is worth a mere 10 gp if cleaned. The candles are enchanted with light, which can be cast once per day (each), as a 3rd-level wizard.

W9. EMPTY ROOM NINE

The blackened remains of a great tapestry hang in the doorway of this chamber. Beyond the ruined tapestry is a dais bearing a massive throne. Both dais and throne are made from dark gray stone — the same material as the walls of this foreboding place. The walls are darkened by soot and the faint smell of burnt wood lingers in the air.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room once served as a meeting hall for the angel wardens. Under the leadership of their commanders, the angels discussed ways of improving the security of the Dungeon. Demons destroyed the place centuries ago.

Encounter Condition: Unhallowed 2

Tactics: There is an uneasiness to the Room now. Once a holy place, the foul taint of demons can be felt by just standing in the Room.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

W10. EMPTY ROOM TEN

Though the walls of this shockingly clean room are not exactly mirrored, they glimmer with dim reflections. The floor seems as spotless as the walls, and doesn't seem to have accumulated any dust at all.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There is a very large, round, invisible table in the center of the Room, bolted to the floor. In fact, physical inspection of the walls or floor prove the Room isn't quite as clean and spotless as it appeared. Any creature or object that remains in this Room for more than 1 hour turns invisible. The effect is continuous, and cannot be dispelled so long as the creature or object remains inside the Room.

Encounter Condition: Invisibility

Tactics: PCs walking cavalierly through the Room are liable to bang into the table. Small creatures will hit their head and chest, while Medium creatures strike their thighs and waist into the table. This is annoying, but the table doesn't deal damage to the PCs.

As soon as the PCs leave the Room, the effect ends and they can be seen again. PCs of low Wisdom remain invisible for 1d4 minutes per point of Wisdom below 8. In essence, the invisibility is a trick on the mind of the person being affected, not the person viewing them.

Treasure: The table cannot fit through the doors, even if it is unbolted from the floor. Nothing else is in this Room, except for invisible dust and dirt.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

W11. EMPTY ROOM ELEVEN

The pale brown walls, ceiling, and floor are covered with some sort of leathery canvas, though no means of attachment can be seen. The air is stagnant, and the odor of sweat is heavy in this room. A small, dark, irregular circle seems to be painted on the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: At one time, this Room was trapped with an incredibly complex and powerful spell, a last line of defense against a particularly nasty inhabitant of this Region. The only remnant of the trap is the Room itself, made up of the body of the creature that triggered the trap.

Encounter Condition: Fear 15⁺

Tactics: Once the PCs realize the walls were made from the flesh of a living creature, a fear effect is produced, causing them to become nauseated for 1d6 minutes instead of shaken.

Opposite the massive stone door of this hall is a 10-ft. statue of black stone. The effigy represents a humanoid male, thick arms crossed across its massive chest. Though out of place, the statue is surprisingly clean and in good condition. Its pupilless eyes stare eerily at you.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Angel wardens sculpted this statue of a great celestial, now dead. It has remained untouched to this day.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 5

Tactics: Due to its powerful magical aura, monsters avoid this Room. As such, Random Encounters occur half as often here.

W13. EMPTY ROOM THIRTEEN

A small grove of trees surrounds the stone floor of this room, standing amidst snow-covered benches and a stone bowl full of ice. The normal floor tiles of the Dungeon give way to a beautiful wintry landscape. As you look up to see the top of a giant fir tree in the corner, the stone ceiling blocks your view.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The scenic winter wonderland is real, created by an artist of unsurpassed talent, with several sets of marvelous pigments. The trees, though not alive, are real. The snow and ice are real. Anyone can walk among the trees and kick up some snow. There are no magical illusions in this Room, but the walls are painted in such a way to trick the viewer's eye. The PCs believe the Room extends for miles, when in actuality, it ends approximately 10 ft. past the former walls of the Room.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: If the PCs stand in the center of the Room, the optical illusion is perfect. If the DM feels so inclined, creatures from the Region could be resting here, but no one wants to harm anyone because the Room radiates a constant calm emotions effect as a 20th-level caster.

Treasure: Though PCs may find this Room a treasure beyond words, there is nothing of physical value here.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

W14. EMPTY ROOM FOURTEEN

This empty Room is best used if the PCs need to get across it to another door. Otherwise, it will just frustrate them.

A dense fog fills this room, obscuring sight and muffling sounds. Footsteps can be heard walking away from the door through the fog, but beyond that you find yourself completely isolated from the world around you.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: All sound in this Room is magically dampened past 10 ft. This means that PCs venturing more than 10 ft. away from each other lose contact completely until they stumble upon each other again in the fog. The footsteps start and stop every few seconds, and eventually lead PCs to a door out of the Room (possibly the one they came in through). PCs that make a DC 17 Spellcraft or DC 22 Intelligence check realize the sound of the footsteps is illusory.

Encounter Condition: Fog 5, Haunted

Tactics: Feel free to have the footsteps move in random directions. This effect works best in a large Room with at least two doors.

Treasure: Feel free to drop a minor magic item (or three potions) somewhere in the Room, requiring a DC 40 Search check to find and then only if the PCs are within 5 ft. of it.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

W15. EMPTY ROOM FIFTEEN

The interior of this room reeks of rotting flesh, and flies buzz loudly. In the center of the room a pile of charred wood is surrounded by six humanoid corpses. Another corpse lies on its side, partially leaning against the wall opposite the door. All the bodies are in similar states of decay and have been stripped of everything of value.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The corpses are of six goblins that got lost in the Dungeon and finally settled down here to rest before taking up their wandering again. Unfortunately for the goblins the fellow on watch fell asleep and the whole group was killed by other inhabitants of the Dungeon.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the PCs search the bodies, a DC 25 Search check turns up a gold necklace worth 100 gp around the ankle of one of the goblins.

EL: N/A

W16. EMPTY ROOM SIXTEEN

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. In addition, the lock is trapped; choose a trap from Appendix A.

At the center of this room a badly decomposed winged body lays. Its arms, legs and wings cast out to the four winds, the body has obviously been the target of violence since its death. The shreds of fine raiment cover the body, but all weapons, armor, and goods have been removed. Next to the body, writing been scratched in the stone.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was one of the members of the celestial garrison who was slain after the first earthquake. Before he died he carved his last words in the stone floor. In Celestial, they read, "Alsar of the Bright Host. I stood fast against the darkness and now travel into the light. Let you who find my body carry on the fight in my stead." Alsar was slain and his corpse desecrated by the creatures of the Dungeon.

Encounter Condition: Positive Energy

Tactics: Perhaps the Room's contents have been shrouded by illusion or the PCs were destined to find it, but this discovery points out that the Dungeon was once something much different than they thought. If this is their first encounter with the celestials or this information has never been imparted to the PCs, they now have a record of the Dungeon's past.

Treasure: Touching the body of the celestial turns it to dust, but grants the PC +1 Con and +1 Wis permanently. In addition, the PC is granted a vision (as legend lore) of some important event in the history of the Dungeon. Make it vague, but provide a hint that the Dungeon was more than it is now. The celestial also bore a signet ring on his left hand. This signet could prove useful in Region C, E, or G where identification as a "celestial-aligned" being is useful.

The floor of this room is missing. Instead there is a pit of significant depth, at the bottom of which is nothing but spikes and corpses. The walls and ceiling are bare except for a few scratch marks. A foul odor indicates that the bodies have been rotting for some time.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room contains a pit trap that is now stuck in the open position, nothing more than a very deep pit with spikes at the bottom. Some of the local residents use the pit for garbage disposal, particularly for the bodies of their enemies. With a DC 23 Disable Device check the trap can be repaired and the floor restored to the Room.

♣ Broken Pit Trap: CR 8; mechanical; location trigger; cannot reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 100 ft. deep (10d6, fall); pit spikes (Atk +10 melee, 1d4 spikes per target for 1d4+4 each); Search DC N/A; Disable Device DC 23.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: Because residents frequently bring trash here, roll for a Random Encounter after 30 minutes.

W18. EMPTY ROOM EIGHTEEN

Before the PCs open the door, read the following.

This door is abnormally warm. Heat emanates from the room beyond and you can hear the sound of fire and an odd "whooshing" noise after short but irregular intervals.

Once the PCs open the door, read the following.

This entire Room is scarred black. After a few seconds the Room is entirely engulfed in flame, creating a "whoosh" noise as air rushes in to feed the fire. This process repeats frequently, rarely taking longer than half a minute between bursts.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room contains a fireball trap, but the trigger has malfunctioned and now the fireball goes off at random intervals (every 1d6 rounds), destroying anything placed inside. The vent for the fireball trap is set in the ceiling, and the lever to turn it off is on the far wall. If the PCs wish to cross the Room, they must find a way to disable the trap without getting cooked.

The PC disabling the trap must brave the fire to reach the lever. Once he reaches the lever, he must move as quickly as possible to disarm the trap. While a DC 28 Disable Device check disables the trap, this takes 6 rounds. Every point by which the PC exceeds 28 reduces the time needed to disable the trap by 1 round.

♣ Fireball Trap: CR 5; magic device; automatic reset; spell effect (fireball, 8th-level wizard, 8d6 fire, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); Search DC N/A; Disable Device DC 28/33.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Sadly, the fire is an illusion. The PCs should believe on every level that it is real.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, make the fireball trap real. To decrease the challenge, add some element to the Room that makes the trap appear more "fake."

TRACKING

Tracking in the World's Largest Dungeon is a tricky proposition. We certainly don't have a lot "tracks" on the stone floor of the dungeon interior and there are few places where we ask for a Survival check (or Wilderness Lore for the 3.0 crowd) to track anything. But with so much coming and going, we're certain creatures ARE leaving some kind of indication that "Bob Was Here." Therefore, in order to simulate foot-traffic, the DM should provide a general idea of the size of creatures in a Section.

Damp hand prints on a door or a torn piece of clothing stuck to the stonework indicate a lot of movement. Blood points to a recent battle. A desecrated body hints at an undead presence. Mad scrawlings impart that the damned live here. And wood and stone carvings are the remnants of civilized or artistic peoples with a desperate need to create (even in this place).

Whatever the DM wants the PCs to find is great, but a rule of thumb is this. If the PCs succeed at a "tracking" check, they are in effect, gaining an indication that something might be around the corner. This should give them a synergy bonus to their Listen or Spot checks, since they know what they are looking for, but it should not replace real knowledge of a situation. PCs can still be surprised to find 20 orcs around the corner, when they thought they were tracking one goblin and so on.

Always keep the PCs on their toes and make them do the work of actively looking for tracks unless something is so obvious as to warrant a request from the DM.

W19. EMPTY ROOM NINETEEN

The door to this Room has been broken off its hinges.

The door to this room has long ago been splintered, and only a few scraps of wood hang from the hinges. The walls of this room are dominated by large, wooden bookcases lined with scraps of paper, broken bindings, and other remnants of a impressive library. The bookcases have not fared much better. The entire room is ready to collapse.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Once one of the libraries used by the celestial garrison, this Room has been exposed to the damp air of the Dungeon and several species of paper-eating insects for the last few centuries. Now its contents are all but destroyed. Any human contact destroys the surviving books in this Room, but there are few of those to be found. Most of the books in this Room have long ago rotted away.

Encounter Condition: Fog 15

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the PCs succeed at a DC 30 Search check, they find a divine scroll of glyph of warding that has survived the ages.

W20. EMPTY ROOM TWENTY

While no heat radiates off the walls of this Room, the walls are constantly bathed in fire. A ring of red and blue flame coats the walls and floors, turning the stone black.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The wall of fire is an illusion. It produces no heat and cannot harm the PCs. However, if they believe it is real, it deals 2d6+11 fire damage just like a real wall of fire. If the PCs see past the illusion (DC 18 Will save), they see the walls are clean and the fire hasn't touched anything.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Visions 8

Tactics: If the PCs move around the Room, there is a 10% chance each round that they step on a pressure plate that turns the effect off. It is unknown what the designers of the Dungeon intended with this Room.

2d6 rounds after the fire goes off, the walls are showered with sheets of ice and cold. Again, the effect is an illusion, but PCs believing the Room was ringed with fire now believe it is ringed with ice.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the door close when the PCs enter and make the inside of the door look like stone, so finding a way out is more difficult. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the illusory fire to 2d6.

MAP V. THE VAMPIRE TOMB

The only location that exists under the Dungeon is a vampire tomb in Region J. The map and location descriptions for this Section are in the Region J chapter on page 541.

SKILL USE

The rules for take 10 and take 20 have a positive and negative effect on Dungeons and Dragons™. Rather than begin a philosophical debate that results in nothing but upset players and anxiety-ridden DMs, let us say this — the DCs in this dungeon are for DMs who do NOT allow take 10 and take 20 actions in their campaigns. That said, DMs who find PCs are able to open every lock, charm every monster, and beat every Search check without rolling a single die have options.

1. Increase all DCs by +10. Done. If the PCs insist on taking 2 hours to search a Room, make everything impossible to find.
2. Increase the time it takes to take 10 or 20 and increase the frequency of Random Encounters. PCs that stay overnight opening a lock are in for one or six rude awakenings.
3. Rooms with specific Encounter Conditions (Distracting, Echoes, Haunted, Negative Energy, etc.) are no place for intense concentration. PCs insisting on searching in these Rooms are going to suffer penalties to their checks ranging from -1 to -10.
4. Require a Concentration check to take 10 or 20. No one has infinite patience and continuing to look for the proverbial needle in the haystack is going to tax the characters, no matter what the players think.
5. Limit the number of take 10 and 20 actions on a map to three and one (respectively) per Region per PC. This is a fair compromise and confirms for the players the DM is not a tyrant.
6. If the PCs DO find EVERY trap, make the ones they don't find VERY deadly.
7. If the PCs can take 10 or 20, the monsters can start carrying deadlier weapons with better critical hit ranges and multipliers.
8. Eight. Succeeding at everything is boring. Just say No.

REGION A. LONGLTAIL'S DESTINY

STOP!

If you have not read the introduction, go back and do so now. You cannot run this adventure without understanding the foundation of the dungeon. Details on lighting, encounter conditions, doors, and so on all explain how to survive this adventure.

LONGLTAIL

Longtail is a wererat sorcerer with a quick mind, charisma, and great ambitions. Research and the aid of his imp familiar, Achsyxx, Longtail found out about the dungeon, its history, and original purpose.

Through Achsyxx's ability to commune with the infernal powers he learned that there was a long forgotten chapel close to the entryway to the dungeon that held a gateway to an extradimensional space where multitudes of infernal beasts had been trapped. Releasing those beasts, Achsyxx told Longtail, would make the wererat their master and would make a ferocious army available to him. Longtail's destiny was clear.

Longtail's endless charm allowed him to bring together a diverse force of humanoids to accompany him on his quest. Gathered from the disaffected elements of half a dozen tribes; kobolds, troglodytes, orcs, and even an ogre rallied to his side and agreed to make the journey with the half-fiend.

Fueled by the promise of treasure and led by lizardfolk guides, Longtail's force made its way to the dungeon in short order. Entering the long-lost entrance the humanoids began exploring the area, searching for the tomb's fabled wealth. Longtail himself, guided by Achsyxx, led a small expedition into the farthest reaches.

At first the humanoids were eager to exploit their new home, greeting the absence of Longtail as a chance to gather as much treasure as possible while the fiend was gone. But as search party after search party came back empty handed and with tales of barren Rooms filled with nothing but traps, trouble ensued.

It had been Longtail's natural leadership that held the unusual force together and now the remaining humanoids were left to their own devices. Soon, the natural rivalries of the various humanoid groups began to assert themselves. Insults and slights led to shouting and shoving. Suspicions and rumors that one group had found a treasure and was not sharing it with the others led to bitter accusations. Inevitably, armed confrontations and isolated clashes took place and Longtail's force was splintered in two, with the reptilians, composed of the kobolds and their krenshar mounts, troglodytes, and lizardfolk, banding together out of necessity against the more numerous orcs and their ogre enforcer.

The dungeon was divided between the two sides and each side searched, looking for treasure that they would never find. And as their own searches became fruitless each side became convinced that the other side had found something. Spying gave way to full-blown battles as the two factions, spurred on by their frustrations, searched and fought across the length and breadth of the area. In a short time, they forgot about searching for treasure and were concerned only with wiping out their enemies.

During this time the quest of Longtail was ignored by the humanoids, neither side caring any longer what had brought them to the dungeon originally; some even forgot about the half-fiend. They would soon be reminded.

For even as the humanoids fought amongst themselves Longtail led his expedition to the forgotten chapel. There, with the aid of his familiar Achsyxx, he opened the gateway fully intent on becoming what he knew he was destined to be.

But things did not turn out as he planned. While Longtail could control some of the beasts, he could not control all of them, and soon a wave of extraplanar beasts, driven on by the hatred, rushed through the dungeon. Falling on the fighting humanoids, the beasts struck a hammer blow that filled the dungeon with the blood and the screams of Longtail's erstwhile allies. And even as Longtail tried desperately to gain control, Achsyx and the infernal powers smiled.

PLOT HOOKS

The Introduction presents a number of ways to get a party started in the World's Largest Dungeon. A more specific example is suggested by the opening text for this Region with the ambitions of Longtail and the imp Achsyx. Although the exact reasons for the PCs' travel to the dungeon are up to the DM, crossing Longtail's plans makes a handy reason.

In its simplest form this means that the PCs are retained by a third party, such as a church or governmental agent, to stop Longtail's plan to release evil creatures into the world. This is also a handy way to ensure that the PCs are properly equipped before entering the dungeon, with the third party providing important aid, such as perhaps a continual flame item or two.

An alternate idea is that the PCs have had a run-in with Longtail or his humanoid allies before. Perhaps while on their way to the dungeon some of the humanoids raided the PCs village and the PCs are out for revenge.

Either of these two suggestions places the PCs within the dungeon only a short time, perhaps a week or two at most, after the arrival of the humanoids and puts them right in the middle of the action.

The PCs don't even need to be aware of what is going on in the dungeon. If they are in pursuit of a long-lost magic item, or just plain treasure-seekers, they may have motivation enough to enter the dungeon. In this case, the PCs just happen to be unfortunate enough to enter the dungeon shortly after the release of the extraplanar beasts.

There are of course a number of other ideas, but these along with those presented in the Introduction should be enough to get any party started exploring the World's Largest Dungeon.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

The release of the extraplanar beasts has thrown this entire Region into chaos. Whereas before the release of the extraplanar beasts there were clear areas under the influence of a particular group of humanoids, the resulting chaos means that there are no longer any true areas of control. Between the hunting beasts and the scared and lost humanoids there is plenty of motion and confusion in this dungeon. As a result, a party traveling through this Region is just as likely to encounter a reptilian as they are an orc or an extraplanar beast.

Rather than checking at some specific time interval for random encounters, the DM should use this table whenever he or she deems it appropriate. Remember that despite the number of Rooms in this Region, the fact is that there is not a lot of distance between most Rooms and areas, and sound carries well in such an environment. If the action is slow, for instance the PCs are taking their time searching through the rubble in a Room or are being extra cautious as they move down a hall, the events from this table are likely to happen.

Another way to use the chart is to add a random element to the encounters described in the various Rooms. Many of the listed random encounters will add an interesting twist to the otherwise rather standard combat scenarios that are inevitable in a dungeon of this size. After all, the noise of combat is bound to generate some interest.

A final good option for this table is if the PCs return to areas or Rooms where they have already been. Since the dungeon is in constant flux, it is quite likely that something other than the original inhabitants now occupy the Room. A particularly bold DM could also use this table to add the occasional encounter to an otherwise empty Room.

1d20	Random Encounter
1	A loud, guttural scream echoes in the distance.
2	A dead kobold or orc lies in the hallway, recently murdered.
3-8	Nothing
9	Two fiendish darkmantles stalk the dungeon corridors. They have been ostracized from their 'tribe' and seek a new home.
10	Four fiendish stirges, tired of the offal in this dungeon, seek the blood of something warm.
11	A fiendish rat swarm charges toward the PCs, fleeing something in darkness. They spend one round moving passed the PCs dealing damage as they go.
12	A pack of six fiendish dire rats digs its way out of crack in the wall and proceeds to stalk the PCs.
13	A patrol of eight kobold warriors or four orc warriors meander, looking for a place to sack out, in the hopes of avoiding work. They only fight the PCs if no other option is available.
14	Two troglodytes play a game of cards as the PCs round a corner. They use candles for light and have 2d6 cp on the floor to bet with. Echoes 4.
15	A krenshar and its kobold rider scout the halls, returning to Room A69 with news of intruders.
16	The PCs stumble upon a trap. ♦ Razor-Wire Across Hallway: CR 1; mechanical; location trigger; no reset; Atk +10 melee (2d6, wire); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); Search DC 22; Disable Device DC 15.
17	Minor tremor. Dust falls from the ceiling obscuring vision throughout the entire Region. All sight, including darkvision, is obscured beyond 5 ft. Creatures within 5 ft. have concealment (20% miss chance) while creatures farther away have total concealment (50% miss chance, attacker cannot use sight to locate target). Dust remains for 1 round.
18	Tremor. As minor tremor, except creatures in the entire Region must succeed at a DC 10 Reflex save or fall prone. Dust remains for 1d4+1 rounds.
19	Major tremor. As tremor, except creatures in the entire Region must succeed at a DC 12 Reflex save or fall prone. All creatures suffer 1d4 points of bludgeoning damage from the rocks. Dust remains for 2d4+2 rounds.

A1. ENTRANCE

You exit the dark and yes, dank, narrow passageway to emerge onto a worked stone floor. Looking about, you see that you have entered a large square chamber hewn completely from stone. You notice two iron doors, one to your side and the other in front of you. Otherwise there are no other features of interest in the stone.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is the last chance the PCs have to rest and reflect before entering the dungeon. As long as the PCs are in the entrance chamber, nothing else enters it. An inspection of the doors reveals that they are absolutely featureless, devoid of markings, symbols, or even any sign of use. Any of the PCs may open either of the doors by simply placing his or her hand on it and pushing; the door gently glides inward and remains open. Once the last of the PCs is through the doors, they slide back shut.

As you push the door, the edge disappears into a blackness that lies just beyond. You allow the door to open completely and watch as more and more of it is swallowed up in the barrier until only its hinges are visible. Peering cautiously into the darkness for signs of movement, you see nothing. Even your ears can only detect the breathing of your fellow adventurers. The dark space reveals nothing of what lies beyond.

The doorway circumscribes an area that is permanently warded by an opaque magical field. This field prevents all vision, including darkvision and low-light vision, as well as all sound from passing through from one side to the other in either direction. In addition, the magical field has an unusual and permanent force effect that allows creatures and items to enter the dungeon without difficulty but absolutely prevents them from leaving (except for the doors themselves).

If the PCs want to enter the dungeon then they simply must take that leap of faith and step beyond the door. Cautious PCs may stick only a hand or an object through, but they find that when they try to withdraw the hand or object, they cannot because the barrier prevents the return movement. No amount of pulling brings the hand or object back through the barrier, although if enough force is used the object could certainly be broken or the hand severed. Note that this whole episode can be extremely humorous if a PC decides to stick his head through.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: Subtly encourage the PCs to prepare themselves by healing, resting, readying equipment and weapons, etc. prior to having them enter the dungeon if they need it. Nothing bothers them as long as they are in this Room and they can take all the time they need to make sure they are in tip-top shape.

A2 THROUGH A20. ORC STRONGHOLD

Rooms A2 through A20 make up the former orc stronghold within this Region. The orcs chose the Section closest to the entrance for defensive reasons and launched all of their search expeditions from here. Unfortunately, while this portion of the dungeon is defensively strong, these same qualities limited the ability of the orcs to explore the other parts of the dungeon.

As the conflict with the reptilians escalated, the orcs' leader, an orc barbarian named Orghar, decided that it was time to force a decision. Marshalling the orcs, he led them in an all-or-nothing assault on the reptilians throughout the dungeon.

As a result, this Section has been abandoned by the orcs since that time. Although they planned to return here and establish a garrison to guard the entrance once they were victorious, this has not come to pass. With the unexpected release of the extraplanar beasts and the subsequent decimation and fragmentation of not only the orc but also reptilian forces, the Section is wide open to any humanoid survivors that can make it this far.

A2. THE FIRST ROOM

Your torchlight gleams feebly in this complete gloom, lighting up a small Region of what appears to be a large room. Two iron doors, one straight ahead of you and the other to its side, are the only things that break up the unending mass of worked stone. The chill and damp air clings to your body, and you are not the only one feeling it judging by the cough coming out of the darkness.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Three orc warriors (hp 5 each) sit huddled together in the northeastern corner of this Room, one of them trying to stifle another cough. They are a sorry remnant of orc forces that followed Longtail into the dungeon. They look extremely haggard with deep bags over their scar-marked faces and an ashen paleness, warning of their weakened state.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The orcs are fatigued (–2 penalty to Strength and Dexterity, can neither run nor charge) from their recent experiences and are not looking for a fight. Unless the PCs attack them first, the orcs do not attack. The PCs are free to move about the Room — the orcs do not stop them, only watching listlessly. Even if elves or dwarves are with the party, the orcs do no more than half-heartedly bare their teeth in an obviously empty threat.

Any PC succeeding at a DC 15 Sense Motive check realizes that the orcs have simply given up and appear to be waiting for the inevitable. If the PCs ask one of the orcs about what happened to them, the largest of the three appears to ponder the question for a moment and then says "you will see soon enough" in broken Common. The other two laugh at the response, the smallest one stifling his cough. The orcs ignore any further questions returning only half-hearted surly glances.

Any acts of intimidation, bluffing, or diplomacy fail on these tired warriors and no amount of promises, threats, or bribes gets them to care about anyone or anything. No matter what, the orcs do not accompany or aid the PCs in any way. They make their final stand in this Room.

If it comes to combat, the orcs do what they can to defend themselves, but their fatigue and defeatist attitude work against them at this point. They employ no tactics other than a straightforward attack.

If the PCs return to this Room later (at least 30 rounds), the three are dead, killed by fiendish darkmantles.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two more orcs. To decrease the challenge, have the orcs be exhausted (move at half speed, –6 penalty to Strength and Dexterity).

Light Sensitivity (Ex): Orcs are dazzled in bright sunlight or within the radius of a daylight spell.

A3. BODY STORAGE

Even before you opened the door you could smell that something was amiss. Now that it is open, the smell is overwhelming. The source is more than a score of bodies piled up in the room, their flesh rotting away.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These bodies are trophies brought back by the orcs from their conflicts with the reptilians. There are a total of 23 bodies here, 17 kobolds and six troglodytes, in varying states of decay, all of which have been stripped of anything they might have been carrying in life. Examination of the bodies shows their wounds to have been caused by sharp-edged weapons.

The smell of decay is strong enough to require a DC 15 Fortitude save from every living creature that enters the Room. Failing the save causes the creature to be sickened (–2 penalty on attack rolls, weapon damage rolls, saving throws, skill checks, and ability checks) for the duration of their stay in the Room as well as for 1d4 rounds thereafter. Any living creature spending more than a single round in the Room is also subject to catching an airborne variant of filth fever.

♣ Filth Fever—Injury, Fortitude DC 12, incubation period 1d3 days, damage 1d3 Dex, 1d3 Con

The secret door in the eastern wall is a standard secret door (Search check, DC 20) that pivots on a vertical center hinge. The space opened by the door is just wide enough for a creature of medium size or smaller to pass on either side of the door (so up to two medium-size creatures can pass through simultaneously).

A4. ANTECHAMBER

The door to this Room is trapped with burning hands. Anytime a Tiny or larger creature touches the face of the door, the trap is triggered, shooting flames in a cone-shaped burst of 15 ft. from the center of the door.

The secret doors in the eastern and western walls are standard secret doors.

Several piles of moldy sacks sit in each of the four corners of this room, their decaying contents fill the air with a sour smell. There is a door directly across from the one you just opened.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The orc warriors in Room A2 are aware of the trap, but avoid it. If the trap injures or kills any of the PCs while the orcs are in the Room, the orcs break out into grins and chuckle amongst themselves and claim ignorance if confronted.

The contents of the sacks have long since rotted. They defy identification and, in fact, small gray mushrooms and black molds grow on top of the piles. Any PC foolish enough to disturb a sack with the black mold results in it bursting and releasing its mildly poisonous spores into the Room. Picking up any sack causes it to disintegrate and spill its contents on the floor and also releases the spores.

♣ Black Mold (CR 1): If disturbed, a patch of this mold bursts forth with a cloud of poisonous spores. All living creatures within 10 ft. of the mold must make a DC 12 Fortitude save or take 1d3 points of temporary Constitution damage. Another DC 12 Fortitude save is required 1 minute later of those who failed the initial save to avoid taking an additional 1d3 points of temporary Constitution damage. The only way to destroy the mold is with fire or to let it dry out in a warm, dry climate (a process that takes 24 hours).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of the burning hands trap to 2d4 and replace the black mold with yellow mold (see Room A84). To decrease the challenge, allow the trap to be bypassed by PCs using an object of at least 1 ft. in length (most weapons will do) to push open the door and reduce the initial/secondary damage of the black mold to 1 point of temporary Constitution damage each.

A5. MAIN STORAGE

The doors to Rooms A4 and A6 are open.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There are dozens of barrels, crates, and sacks lining the wall extending into the western end of the Room. They are piled up in an organized fashion (to say the least) and most of them have been opened (the barrels have their tops staved in, the crates boards torn away, and the sacks are ripped open, some of their contents spilling onto the ground).

As in Room A4, the sacks are covered in black mold and mushroom colonies. Although the barrels and crates are not so afflicted, the items are stacked so haphazardly that anyone moving a barrel or crate must succeed at a DC 13 Dexterity check or release a cloud of spores from one of the sacks nearby. Moving a sack causes the sack to disintegrate, spilling its contents on the floor and releasing the mold into the air.

If the PCs are bold enough to riffle through the contents anyway, they find that the barrels contain vinegar (still good), the crates contain various rusted mining tools (such as picks and shovels), and the contents of the sacks have been lost to the mold.

♣ Black Mold (CR 1): If disturbed, a patch of this mold bursts forth with a cloud of poisonous spores. All living creatures within 10 ft. of the mold must make a DC 12 Fortitude save or take 1d3 points of temporary Constitution damage. Another DC 12 Fortitude save is required 1 minute later of those who failed the initial save to avoid taking an additional 1d3 points of temporary Constitution damage. The only way to destroy the mold is with fire or to let it dry out in a warm, dry climate (a process that takes 24 hours).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Conducting a careful search of the Room (Search check, DC 26) reveals a small gold ring (20 gp) resting between two barrels. Note that as long as the search does not entail actually moving anything, there is no chance of releasing the black mold.

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of the encounter replace the black mold with yellow mold (see Room A84). To decrease the challenge of the encounter reduce the initial as well as secondary damage to 1 point of temporary Constitution damage each.

A6. TOOL STORAGE

Any Tiny or larger creature that enters the north/south hallway leading to Room A6 triggers an acid arrow trap. The proximity trigger covers the entire hallway to the door, but not beyond it; any creature that remains in the hall after the trap resets triggers the trap again.

Coils of rope, barrels with nails, and open crates with tools are lined up against the walls. Although the air is damp, there is no mold on any of the items.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There are five coils of hempen rope totaling of 500 ft. as well as seven small barrels of rusty nails and enough tools to make a total of 10 sets of stonemason's tools (hammers, chisels, etc.). The hemp rope has been weakened by the damp air (Hardness 0, Hit Point 1) and breaks if subjected to holding more than 100 lbs. of weight.

The secret door in the western wall is a standard secret door and is used to bypass the trap in the hall.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the duration of the acid trap to 4 rounds. To decrease the challenge, the trap only triggers when someone is within 10 ft. of the trap (the first two squares from the north in the hallway) rather than the entire hallway.

A7. FORMER TROGLODYTE QUARTERS

The heavy smell of stale air greets you as you open the door to this large room. Bits of dried grass as well as larger hunks lay all over the floor as if a tornado recently tore through a meadow.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was occupied by a small group of troglodytes who treated it much like their former cave home; they were among the first victims of the orcs when relations among the humanoids went sour. Given their uncivilized nature, they used it not only as their sleeping place but for everything else, although they kept those activities to the southeastern corner.

The smell of body odor along with the remnants of troglodyte stench are eye-wateringly powerful and any living creature that enters the Room must succeed at a DC 12 Fortitude save or become nauseated (unable to attack, cast spells, or do anything else requiring concentration; can only take a single move action per turn) for as long as it is in the Room and for 1d4 rounds after it leaves the Room.

The dried grass bits are remnants of reed mats that the troglodytes used as sleeping mats and were destroyed during the fighting in this Room. A DC 12 Spot check reveals dried drips and small pools of blood in various places about the Room.

The troglodytes were unaware of the standard secret door in the middle of the northern wall, as are the orcs who, although they dragged out the troglodyte bodies, otherwise avoided the Room.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Brave characters may search through the detritus. On a successful DC 14 Search check they uncover one of the following—a shell necklace made of freshwater shells of various sizes on a leather thong (1 gp); a ceremonial dagger (no value); a ceramic idol of a creature that is a cross between a toad and a lizard (no value).

A8. ORC CORPSE

The door to Room A2 is closed. The door to Room A9 is open.

You see an open doorway to your left. The body of an orc, his arm outstretched toward the door you have just come from, lies slumped near the middle of this room. A lone spear, its shaft broken, lays in one of the corners.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This orc was a clansman to the orcs in Room A2 that they abandoned. Attacked by fiendish stirges, he managed to drag himself here in a vain attempt to keep up with his clansmen; his strength ran out just before he got to the door.

If the PCs alert the three orcs in Room A2 that they have found another orc none of the trio responds.

A successful DC 12 Search check of the body reveals several holes in the corpse's neck, arm, and leg where the fiendish stirges successfully attached themselves to the orc. Each hole also has up to eight smaller, rough punctures near it where the pincers of the fiendish sturge found purchase.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Unless the PCs are exceptionally quiet and do not use a light source of any kind, the fiendish darkmantles in Room A9 are alerted to their presence through the open doorway.

A9. DEATH FROM ABOVE

Both doors in this Room are open.

An open door on the opposite wall appears to be the only other way in or out of this otherwise empty room.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Clinging to the ceiling of this Room is a fiendish darkmantle (hp 6). The fiendish darkmantle is hanging by its "foot" in the middle of the ceiling, but has lifted its tentacles up and flattened itself out, spreading its tentacles and taking on the coloration of the stone as it waits for potential prey to move underneath it. A PC that makes a successful DC 25 Spot check notices the unusual lump on the ceiling. If he states that he is specifically looking at the ceiling as he is walking into the Room he gains a +10 circumstance bonus to the check.

The noise of combat attracts a nearby fiendish rat (hp 1) out scouting for its fiendish rat swarm into the doorway from Room A10 to investigate. Given the darkness and commotion in Room A9, the fiendish rat's presence goes completely unnoticed unless a PC states that he is specifically looking for danger in the northern doorway at which time a successful DC 18 Spot check reveals the fiendish rodent.

As long as it is unobserved, the fiendish rat watches the combat to the end and then leaves to report the activity to its fellows in Room A11. If it is spotted, the fiendish rat immediately flees the scene to make its report.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Echoes 5, Fearless

Tactics: This fiendish darkmantle followed the wounded orc hoping it would lead it to its fellows. Since the orc's death it has patiently waited for someone to come by and attacks the moment a PC is fully in the Room, using its darkness ability to cloak itself in shadow (20% miss chance for opponents targeting it; also putting the entire Room as well as both doorways in darkness) and then dropping from the ceiling.

The fiendish darkmantle gains surprise unless it is spotted by the PC as he is walking into the Room. If it has surprise, the fiendish darkmantle uses the surprise round to invoke its darkness and then attacks on the next round. Note that unless the PC has spotted the fiendish darkmantle he still will not know exactly what is happening or where an attack might be coming from.

This fiendish darkmantle fights to the death, even pursuing fleeing PCs.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the fiendish darkmantle hide directly above the doorway increasing the Spot check DC to 30. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, have the PC spot the fiendish darkmantle as it is flying into the Room so that both sides are surprised.

Skills and Feats: Hide +10, Listen +5*, Spot +5*; Improved Initiative.

Darkness (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can cause darkness as the darkness spell (caster level 5th). It most often uses this ability just before attacking.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a fiendish darkmantle must hit a Large or smaller creature with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it attaches to the opponent's head and can constrict.

Constrict (Ex): A fiendish darkmantle deals 1d4+4 points of damage with a successful grapple check.

Blindsight (Ex): A fiendish darkmantle can "see" by emitting high-frequency sounds, inaudible to most other creatures, that allows it to ascertain objects and creatures within 90 ft. A silence spell negates this ability and effectively blinds the fiendish darkmantle.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can make a normal melee attack to deal 1 extra point of damage against a good foe.

Skills: A fiendish darkmantle has a +4 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks. These bonuses are lost if its blindsight is negated. The creature's variable coloration gives it a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks.

❖ Fiendish Rat: CR 1/8; Tiny magical beast (extraplanar); HD 1/4 d8; hp 1; Init +2; Spd 15 ft., climb 15 ft., swim 15 ft.; AC 14, touch 14, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +0; Grp -12; Atk +4 melee (1d3+4 plus disease, bite); +4 melee (1d3+4 plus disease, bite); Space/Reach 2-1/2 ft./0 ft.; SA Disease, smite good; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., low-light vision, resistance to cold and fire 5, spell resistance 5, scent; AL NE; SV Fort +2, Ref +4, Will +1; Str 2, Dex 15, Con 10, Int 3, Wis 12, Cha 2.

Skills and Feats: Balance +10, Climb +12, Hide +14, Move Silently +10, Swim +10; Weapon Finesse

Disease (Ex): Devil Chills—bite, Fortitude DC 10, incubation period 1d4 days, damage 1d4 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based. It requires three successful Fortitude saving throws in a row to recover from devil chills.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish rat can make a normal melee attack to deal 1 extra point of damage against a good foe.

Skills: Rats have a +4 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks, and a +8 racial bonus on Balance, Climb, and Swim checks. A rat can always choose to take 10 on Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened. A rat uses its Dexterity modifier instead of its Strength modifier for Climb and Swim checks. A rat has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

A10. THE WATCHER IN THE DOORWAY

Both doors to this Room are open. The following description omits the presence of the fiendish rat.

Peering through the open doorway you discern for certain that the room is empty. There is an open door on the opposite wall that could be the only exit.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Unless the party defeats the fiendish darkmantle in Room A9 in complete silence and darkness, the fiendish rat is not in this Room, having already made its way to report to its fiendish rat swarm. If the fiendish rat is caught unawares, it flees quickly, avoiding combat at all costs.

Wary PCs succeeding at a DC 19 Listen check while in the Room hear the sound of hundreds of tiny nails scratching on stone as the fiendish rat swarm makes its way to the Room.

One round after the PCs enter this Room the fiendish rat swarm, alerted by its scouting fiendish rat, enters from the north door and attacks.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The fiendish rat swarm (hp 13) washes into the Room like its namesake, attempting to cover as many PCs as possible within its 10-ft. square. Its members fight to the death, pursuing fleeing PCs.

PCs may use a door to block the progress of the fiendish rat swarm. Although the wave is capable of opening unattended doors, its collective members are too weak to open a door held closed by a PC. Faced with such an obstacle, the wave batters against it for 5 rounds and then looks for a way around the obstacle or seeks out more accessible prey.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a second fiendish rat swarm. To decrease the challenge, assume the wave has already been damaged in combat with other creatures and reduce its hit points to one-half and allow it to take up only a 10-ft. by 5-ft. space.

❖ Fiendish Rat Swarm: CR 3; Tiny magical beast (extraplanar, swarm); HD 4d8; hp 13; Init +2; Spd 15 ft., climb 15 ft.; AC 14; touch 14, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +3; Grp —; Atk (1d6 plus disease, swarm); Full Atk (1d6 plus disease, swarm); Space/Reach 10 ft./0 ft.; SA Disease, distraction, smite good; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., half damage from slashing and piercing, low-light vision, resistance to cold and fire 5, spell resistance 5, scent, swarm traits; AL NE; SV Fort +4, Ref +6, Will +2; Str 2, Dex 15, Con 10, Int 3, Wis 12, Cha 2.

Skills and Feats: Balance +10, Climb +10, Hide +14, Listen +6, Spot +7, Swim +10; Alertness, Weapon Finesse.

Swarm: A fiendish rat swarm seeks to surround and attack any prey it encounters. A fiendish rat swarm deals 1d6 points of damage to any creature whose space it occupies at the end of its move.

In order to attack, a single fiendish rat swarm moves into opponents' spaces, which provokes an attack of opportunity. It can occupy the same space as a creature of any size, since it crawls all over its prey, but remains a creature with a 10-ft. space. Fiendish rat swarms never make attacks of opportunity, but they can provoke attacks of opportunity.

Unlike other creatures with a 10-ft. space, a fiendish rat swarm is shapable. It can occupy any four contiguous squares, and it can squeeze through any space large enough to contain one of its members.

Disease (Ex): Devil Chills—bite, Fortitude DC 12, incubation period 1d4 days, damage 1d4 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based. It requires three successful Fortitude saving throws in a row to recover from devil chills.

Distraction (Ex): Any living creature that initiates its turn with a fiendish rat swarm in its square must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or be nauseated for 1 round. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish rat swarm can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (+2) against a good foe.

Skills: A fiendish rat swarm has a +4 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks, and a +8 racial bonus on Balance, Climb, and Swim checks. A fiendish rat swarm can always choose to take 10 on all Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened. A fiendish rat swarm uses its Dexterity modifier instead of its Strength modifier for Climb and Swim checks. A fiendish rat swarm has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

A11. BONES IN THE HALL

Both doors into this hallway are open.

A lone, small skeleton lies in this 10-ft. wide hallway, bits of clothing and leather armor still clinging to its frame. Two open doors, one on either end of the hallway, give no clue as to what lays beyond.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The skeleton is the remains of a kobold captive brought back by an orc patrol and killed by Orghar. He was left here by the orcs as a mascot, and picked clean by the fiendish rat swarm as it made its way through the Room. Carefully examining the skeleton shows hundreds of tiny bite marks on the bones and leather armor. Looking through the open doorway to the north reveals four more open doors (Rooms A12 through A15).

A12. ORC QUARTERS

The door to this Room is open.

Peering through the open door you find out this room is a disaster area. Unpleasant hints of animal waste fill the air and scraps of clothing, bits of wood, and other trash cover the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was one of the Rooms the orcs used as sleeping quarters. What few items of furniture there were, along with the former occupants' clothing, backpacks, and other possessions, have been chewed to pieces by the fiendish rat swarm the PCs encountered in A10. The smell is one of rodent waste with a hint of sulfur that does much to describe the infernal realms that these creatures normally inhabit.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A successful DC 15 Search check allows a PC to visually pick a few items amid the debris — a rusted, normal dagger; a tin drinking cup; a 5-ft. length of chain.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

A13. GNAWERS

The door to this Room is open.

An unpleasant odor greets you before you step through the open door. The smell, combined with the trash-covered floor makes it clear that the rodents' path of destruction went through this area as well.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Two fiendish dire rats (hp 7, 5) that have been following the fiendish rat swarm are in this Room busy sifting through the trash hoping that the wave missed something. So far they have had little success.

More intelligent than their Prime Material counterparts, these fiendish dire rats work as a team. One sifts through the rubbish while the other keeps watch. Unless the PCs are moving without a light source of any kind, they have no chance to surprise these infernal rodents. Assume a Spot check of 24, or 14 if caught unprepared.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Fearless

Tactics: The fiendish dire rats (hp 5) are difficult to surprise given their scent ability; they can detect the presence of a PC within 30 ft. (although they must be within 5 ft. of a PC to detect his exact location). The fiendish dire rat on watch squeaks a warning to his companion as soon as he spots light or hears the movement of the PCs. Both fiendish dire rats hide in the rubbish that fills the Room, requiring a successful DC 18 Spot check to be noticed.

This duo is smart enough to avoid a fight against an obviously much stronger foe. They attack a lone PC or even two, rushing out from ambush to gain surprise if possible. The fiendish dire rats subject a lone PC to flanking attacks if possible.

If more than two PCs enter the Room at the same time, the fiendish dire rats remain hidden, bursting from hiding only when spotted or if a PC gets too close and fleeing out of the Room toward the northeastern portion of the dungeon.

If the fiendish dire rats attack, they fight until reduced to one-half of their hit points or until outnumbered, at which point they flee. If flight is not possible, they fight to the death. The fiendish dire rats pursue fleeing PCs, attacking the rearmost PC and allowing the others to escape.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the number of fiendish dire rats to one per PC. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, add a third fiendish dire rat but have them all fight over a scrap of food when the PCs enter the Room, giving the PCs an element of surprise.

☛ Fiendish Dire Rat: CR 1/3; Small magical beast (extraplanar); HD 1d8+1; hp 7, 5; Init +3; Spd 40 ft., climb 20 ft.; AC 15, touch 14, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +0; Grp -4; Atk +4 melee (1d4 plus disease, bite); Full Atk +4 melee (1d4 plus disease, bite); SA Disease, smite good; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., low-light vision, resistance to cold and fire 5, spell resistance 5, scent; AL LE; SV Fort +3, Ref +5, Will +3; Str 10, Dex 17, Con 12, Int 3, Wis 12, Cha 4.

Disease (Ex): Devil Chills—bite, Fortitude DC 11, incubation period 1d4 days, damage 1d4 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based. It requires three successful Fortitude saving throws in a row to recover from devil chills.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish dire rat can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (maximum of +20) against a good foe.

Skills: Fiendish dire rats have a +8 racial bonus on Swim checks. Fiendish dire rats have a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened.

A14. ORC QUARTERS

The door to this Room is open.

The trash that lays in the hallway and the open door indicate that there is probably little to be found in this room. Once you enter, you see that the remnants of a bed are still evident in one corner of this room, but everything else has been thoroughly destroyed.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was the Room of two orc barbarians and actually contained a bed that one of the pair had scavenged from Room A20. Unfortunately, the fiendish rat swarm has torn the place to bits. The bed is nothing more than a plank on four legs.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: With a successful DC 15 Search check, the PCs notice a small tin box lying under the bed. The box is six inches long, three inches wide, and two inches high. It has a clasp that is held closed by a piece of metal wedged into the ring.

The box is not trapped or otherwise locked. Opening it up reveals that it is lined with black silk and has three indentations to hold vials. Although there are two vials in the box, one of them is broken and its contents have settled into the silk. There is currently only one intact vial in the box, a potion of cure moderate wounds.

A15. CORNERED FIENDISH DARKMANTLES

The door to this Room is open.

Trash is strewn on the floor of this room accompanied by the bitter smell of rodent dung.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is a former orc sleeping area; the fiendish rat swarm cleaned out what little had not already been destroyed.

Clinging to the ceiling of this Room are two fiendish darkmantles (hp 7, 6). Searching for prey, they were caught in these four Rooms when the fiendish rat swarm arrived. Realizing that they were now prey, the duo retreated here to await the rodents' passing. Because of the climbing ability of the wave, the two fiendish darkmantles were forced to the center of the Room. Although the wave has left the area, the duo is remaining in place to be sure the danger has passed.

Note that the two of them are keeping a close watch on the door by constantly emitting their high frequency sounds and are thus almost impossible to surprise.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Darkness

Tactics: These two fiendish darkmantles work as a team in their pursuit of prey. Once they are aware that it is a group of humanoid coming into the Room and not the fiendish rat swarm, one moves to position itself directly above the door while the other moves into the far corner in order to make it harder to Spot them (DC 30 for the one above the door, DC 20 for the one in the far corner; if the PC states that he is specifically looking at the ceiling grant a +10 circumstance bonus to his check to spot the fiendish darkmantles).

The darkmantles surprise the first PC through the door, with the one in the far corner using its surprise round to invoke its darkness ability while the one above the door attacks the PC. Even if the PC spots the fiendish darkmantle on the far wall, the one above the door may still have surprise.

If the duo cannot achieve surprise, the one on the far wall invokes its darkness ability while the other attacks. In all cases the darkmantles keep the combat near the doorway to prevent numerous PCs from flanking them while in turn gaining flanking positions on the PC near the doorway.

If either fiendish darkmantle is reduced to less than one-half their hit points (or is killed) they flee using their darkness ability to help cover their escape. The fiendish darkmantles pursue fleeing PCs, concentrating on the rearmost and letting the others go.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the fiendish darkmantles attack a PC while he is still in the hall, thus limiting his allies' abilities to maneuver around him. To decrease the challenge, have both fiendish darkmantles in the center of the Room's ceiling when the PCs arrive thereby allowing the PCs to spot both of them easily.

❖ Fiendish Darkmantle: CR 1; Small magical beast (extraplanar); HD 1d10+1; hp 7, 6; Init +4; Spd 20 ft., fly 30 ft. Skills and Feats: Hide +10, Listen +5*, Spot +5*; Improved Initiative.

Darkness (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can cause darkness as the darkness spell (caster level 5th). It most often uses this ability just before attacking.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a fiendish darkmantle must hit a Large or smaller creature with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it attaches to the opponent's head and can constrict.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (maximum of +20) against a good foe.

Blindsight (Ex): A fiendish darkmantle can see by emitting high-frequency sounds, inaudible to most other creatures, that allows it to ascertain objects and creatures within 90 ft. A silence spell negates this ability and effectively blinds the fiendish darkmantle.

Skills: A fiendish darkmantle has a +4 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks. These bonuses are lost if its blindsight is negated. The creature's variable coloration gives it a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks.

A16. SOUTHERN HALLWAY ROOM

Both doors in this Room are open.

You can already see the exit of this room, an open door directly across from you, even as you notice that this room appears to be empty.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is empty, save some dust and detritus. However, it is a gateway. The moment the PCs enter this Room, roll Listen and Spot checks every round for the fiendish stirges in Room A18 (fiendish stirges have a +4 to both Listen and Spot; roll as a group). If the PCs are spotted or heard, the fiendish stirges fly down to investigate.

PCs who are capable of seeing through the open doorways into Room A18 (using darkvision or low-light vision with enough light) may make Spot checks (DC 14; adjusted for distance) to see the fiendish stirges. All PCs can attempt Listen checks (DC 19; adjusted for distance, etc.) to hear the agitated fiendish stirges.

A18. NORTHERN HALLWAY ROOM

All three doors in this Room are open.

This room appears to be a junction, with three open doorways leading in different direction. Like the previous two room, it is empty.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: As in Rooms A16 and A17, this Room is completely empty. It served as a junction Room and defense point for the orcs.

If they have not spotted the PCs previously, four fiendish stirges (hp 5) are alternately flying and hopping about the Room obviously agitated. Deciding that this was an excellent spot to wait for potential prey, the four-some has taken up residence here. However, given their alignment, none of the four fiendish stirges trusts any of the others, so they are continuously hopping and flying from door to door and perch to perch trying to prevent one another from being the first to spot potential prey.

Encounter Condition: Concealment

Tactics: When one of the fiendish stirges sees or hears something of interest, it goes to investigate and the others follow. In the case of the PCs moving through A16 and A17 or either of the hallways, roll Listen and Spot checks for the fiendish stirges as the PCs move. On a successful Spot or Listen check, one of the fiendish stirges has either seen the PCs or heard them and flies off to investigate. One round later, two more of the fiendish stirges follow the first and on the third round the last one follows. The lead fiendish stirge attacks the first PC it comes across and the other three join in as soon as they arrive.

Each fiendish stirge fights as an individual and will not cooperate with another fiendish stirge, preferring to seek out its own victim if possible, rather than share.

An individual fiendish stirge will not pursue a fleeing PC as long as there is another PC in the immediate area even if that means sharing the meal.

Although aggressive, the fiendish stirges are also cowards and each one will flee if it is reduced to one-half or fewer of its hit points, abandoning its fellow fiendish stirges to their fate. If two of the four are killed, the remaining two attempt to flee as well.

A satiated fiendish stirge (one that has drained 4 points of Constitution) will fly off down the hallway to the east to find a place to digest its meal.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have all four of the fiendish stirges arrive at the same time. To decrease the challenge of the encounter, have two of the fiendish stirges begin to fight each other rather than the PCs.

✦ Fiendish Stirge: CR 1/2; Tiny magical beast (extraplanar); HD 1d10; hp 5; Init +4; Spd 10 ft., fly 40 ft. Skills and Feats: Hide +14, Listen +4, Spot +4; Alertness, Weapon Finesse

Attach (Ex): If a fiendish stirge hits with a touch attack, it uses its eight pincers to latch onto the opponent's body. An attached fiendish stirge is effectively grappling its prey. The fiendish stirge loses its Dexterity bonus to AC and has an AC of 12, but holds on with great tenacity. Fiendish stirges have a +12 racial bonus on grapple checks (already figured into the Base Attack/Grapple entry above).

An attached fiendish stirge can be struck with a weapon or grappled itself. To remove an attached fiendish stirge through grappling, the opponent must achieve a pin against the fiendish stirge.

Blood Drain (Ex): A fiendish stirge drains blood, dealing 1d4 points of Constitution damage in any round when it begins its turn attached to a victim. Once it has dealt 4 points of Constitution damage, it detaches and flies off to digest the meal. If its victim dies before the fiendish stirge's appetite has been sated, the fiendish stirge detaches and seeks a new target.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish stirge can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (+1) against a good foe.

A19. REFUSE

PCs approaching within 20 ft. of this alcove become aware of the putrid smell. Read the following text when they reach the alcove.

You have traced the smell to its source; a hole in the ground some six inches in diameter sits in the corner. The depth of the hole and the smell betray its function.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The hole is actually a small crack that appeared during a minor earthquake. The hole has become a home for trash, refuse, and disease. Any contact with the surface makes one susceptible to catching filth fever.

A20. ORGHAR'S QUARTERS

The door to this Room is open as is the secret door in the eastern wall.

A table, a stool, and a bed, all intact, sit across from the door. A circle of six stools in the center of the room surrounds a pile of dirt on the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is Orghar's bedroom and headquarters. The Room is almost exactly as he left it when he went to lead the orcs in the final assault against the reptilians.

A hollowed out kobold skull sits on the desk along with a backscratcher carved out of a lizardfolk thighbone. The bed, a plank with four legs, still holds Orghar's blanket and a pillow made from troglodyte skin and stuffed with the hair of orcs his clan has defeated in combat. The six stools were where Orghar would hold his planning meetings while the pile of dirt served as a crude chalkboard to illustrate his plans. In good military fashion, whatever had been drawn on the dirt is obscured.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Orghar hollowed out one of the legs of his bed; a search of the bed reveals this (Search check, DC 25) trick. Inside the leg he stowed seven small pieces of jade (each worth 4d4 × 10 gp). Although he meant to retrieve the jade, Orghar forgot about the gems and has not been back for them.

A21. THE SECRET ROOM

The door to Room A21 is trapped. Pulling the door open releases scything blades located underneath the door. The blades swing out at anyone standing closest to the door (usually the person opening the door; each blade swings into the square directly in front of the door). A hidden bolt near the outside edge of the door can be pushed down to keep the blades in place. The trap is reset when the door is closed.

Spots of blood on the floor outside the door hint to a trap, but in the darkness the PCs may not notice it.

✦ Scything Blade Trap: CR 1; mechanical; touch trigger (opening door); manual reset (closing the door); hidden bolt bypass (Search DC 15); Atk +8 melee (1d8/x3); Search DC 21; Disable Device DC 20.

Several rough tables sit in various places in this room. Poorly constructed chairs are pushed under the tables. Everything is coated with a fine layer of dust.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room has not been occupied in quite some time, somehow being missed through all the years it has stood empty.

Encounter Condition: Drafty, Safe

Treasure: A careful search (Search check, DC 20) reveals a few items that escaped notice over the years. A leather pouch with a deck of playing cards featuring four new suits (sword, fireball, whip, and spider); and a gold ring with an opal inlay (280 gp in value) are hidden behind a few bits of wood.

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a second set of blades that swings out from behind doubling the damage. To decrease the challenge, allow the PCs a DC 26 Spot check because of the blood.

A22 THROUGH A24. PILLAR ROOMS

Rooms A22 to A24 are part of the original construction of this dungeon. Although the dungeon's creators did not require much in the way of comforts, they did create some places to pass the time. This is one of the areas and consists of the three Rooms, each with a different function.

The humanoids all knew of these Rooms but only made any real use of Room A22 for its water supply. They never realized the magical properties of Room A23 and avoided Room A24 due to the uncomfortable silence. Currently, there is only one monster in these Rooms.

A22. WATER PILLARS

The door to this Room is open.

You hear the sound of running water as you approach this room. The sound comes from four pillars, one in each corner of the large room, that have a channel cut into them to allow water to run down.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The running water imposes a -10 circumstance penalty to all Listen check attempts made by any creatures either while in the Room and trying to listen to noise within or outside the Room, or for creatures outside of the Room trying to make out noises from inside the Room.

Before the PCs have a chance to refresh themselves, they must contend with the ogre that is currently catching a rest here.

This Room, along with Rooms A23 and A24, is actually part of the original construction of the dungeon. The water that runs down the pillars is the result of a permanent create water effect that resides in a hole in the top of each pillar. The water flows down a channel cut into the pillar, which actually is somewhat larger at its base than at its top, and ends up in a small 1 diameter and 1-ft. deep pool at the base of the pillar. The system is constantly in balance thanks to the magic and, as long as no more than two gallons of water are taken in any round, no drop in the water flow or in the pool will be noticed.

The original designers of this dungeon invented these pillars because the water lent a meditation-inducing effect; although they did not need the water for survival, the water is perfectly drinkable.

Except for the pillars, this Room is otherwise empty. There were once meditation mats, but they are long, long gone.

Encounter Condition: Drafty or Poor Footing 2

Tactics: Bragdor the ogre is not the brightest of fellows, but even he knows when he is overmatched and the beasts that are crawling all over the dungeon intimidate even him. Of course, he can deal with the humanoids and the PCs are ideal for taking out his frustrations.

Even though he is sitting on the ground and resting his bulk against the northeastern pillar, Bragdor notices any light source moving down the hallway or coming from A23 readily enough and, once he spots it, he readies himself for some sport. Due to the noise of the water falling he is unlikely to hear any creatures before they enter the Room unless they are making a lot of noise (the ogre suffers a -6 circumstance penalty to all Listen checks). Depending on where the light is coming from, he attempts to hide his bulk by hiding behind a pillar (the northwestern pillar if the light comes from the hall or simply standing by the pillar he is resting against if the light is coming from Room A23).

If Bragdor manages to hide, he is actually difficult to Spot in the shadow of the pillar (Spot check, DC 18) until a light shines on him, at which point he is easily seen. Whether he is hidden or not, the moment he spots the first PC the ogre charges, attacking the nearest PC.

Like most ogres, Bragdor is a bully. As long as he feels that he has the advantage over his opponents he gladly bashes them away with his huge club. But if the PCs gain Bragdor's respect, either by reducing him to one-half or fewer of his hit points using physical attacks or by causing at least six points of damage from spell attacks, the ogre changes his tactics. He backs away from his foes toward the most tactically favorable position, using full defense while calling out for parley.

It is up to the PCs whether they accept the parley offer or not. If PCs continue to attack, Bragdor fights his way to one of the doorways and defends himself there, fighting to the death if no other option is available; he only makes the parley offer once. If the PCs accept his parley offer, by lowering their weapons or verbally agreeing to it, Bragdor looks around somewhat insecurely before lowering his club.

The PCs may, if they choose to, talk with the ogre. With his newfound respect for the PCs, he is happy to engage in conversation and even apologizes for any PCs that were injured or killed.

Bragdor is capable of relating the details of the journey to the dungeon, the name of the orc leader (Orghar), the history and state of relations between the orcs and the other humanoids, as well as the sudden appearance of various strange beasts that attacked everyone. The exact details of such a conversation are left to the DM. Given the ogre's rather simple mind, he is incapable of giving specific details on such things as directions (it's all too confusing), or anything beyond simple impressions of the beasts (flying mantles, big rodents, stinging flies).

If asked specifically about Longtail, the ogre has trouble remembering who it was and the PCs may have to jog his memory with a description. Even then, all he can share is that the "rat-man" has been gone for some time. Bragdor cannot make the connection between Longtail's absence and the appearance of the beasts in the dungeon on his own.

Once the PCs and Bragdor are done talking, the PCs may wish to leave. Under no circumstances will he accompany the PCs, stating that it would not be a good idea if he was seen with them because "Orghar might get mad."

A23. PILLARS OF ILLUSION

The doors to this Room are open.

This room is even larger than the previous one and, much like it for all intents and purposes: this room has four large pillars, one in each corner.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The Room appears empty and the pillars are completely non-descript. This is deceiving as the pillars are capable of generating major image effects. This is not evident, however, unless someone casts detect magic on them, at which point they radiate a faint illusion aura.

Creating an image requires a successful DC 18 Concentration check. If successful, the creature can create a major image that acts exactly as the spell, but only in the Room.

These effects are identical to the spell of the same name except that the effect is limited to this Room. A25 THROUGH A36. THE MAZE

The "Maze", as the humanoids call it, is a mystery. Perhaps its maddening design kept prisoners from finding the surface. Whatever its purpose, the tight quarters, countless doors, and winding halls were a perfect reminder of home for the tribe of troglodytes that call it home. Although nominally kin to reptilian forces, the troglodytes largely keep to themselves and explore very little.

Orghar had enough tactical acumen to realize that dozens of orcs could get bogged down in the "Maze" and thus, except for a small force to take Room A25, the orcs avoided the area during their final assault on the reptilians; Orghar planned to deal with the troglodytes later. Although the orcs' surprise attack managed to drive the troglodytes from Room A25, the orcs were themselves soon overrun and forced to retreat into the "Maze" by a large swarm of fiendish darkmantles that Longtail had released, where they all met their fate. Currently the troglodytes hold the eastern Rooms in their grasp, having fought off the fiendish darkmantles in the narrow halls, and await whatever comes next.

Due to the close quarters and the effects of the troglodyte musk, this is a dangerous area for even a well-prepared party, especially near Rooms A31 through A34. Before having the PCs enter, thoroughly study this section of the dungeon.

The doors in the maze portion, that is the doors between hallways, are all open unless otherwise indicated. Doors between hallways can open in either direction; the decision is the DM's. Note that any action that takes place within the hallways of the maze itself will be referenced in the description of the Room that is closest to the action.

A25. PILLAR ROOM

All doors to and from this Room are open.

A giant pillar, some 10 ft. in diameter and rising from floor to ceiling, dominates this room. Defaced images cover every inch of the column leaving no clue as to what they might have once been. Several open doorways lead out of the room, but they were obviously of little use to the orc corpses that litter the floor. Several bodies of reddish, leathery, octopus-like creatures are scattered about, one still attached to an orc's head.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The images of the pillar are beyond recognition, horribly defaced. The seven orcs are remnants of Orghar's strike force that was to take this Room, killed by the swarm of fiendish darkmantles that flooded through the area. They learned too late that the extraplanar beasts are quite capable of opening doors. Examining the orcs shows that all of them have lolling tongues and bulging eyes or broken necks; clearly they were attacked by the fiendish darkmantles.

Currently, six fiendish dire rats (hp 5 each) are rooting through the remains for choice pieces.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Visions

Tactics: Having followed the fiendish darkmantles in the hopes of picking up scraps, these fiendish dire rats are busily gorging themselves. However, given their cautious nature, the fiendish dire rats only have a -2 circumstance penalty to their normal Spot and Listen chances to detect the PCs' approach. Even cautious PCs are likely to be noticed thanks to the fiendish dire rats' scent ability (30 ft. to note presence of creatures, 5 ft. to note exact location) or if they are using light sources.

The moment the PCs are detected, the fiendish dire rats take up a defensive posture, arched backs, hackles up, and hissing, but do not attack unless provoked. They are not interested in the PCs and would rather have the easy meal that is already provided than fight with a new foe. As long as the PCs leave the fiendish dire rats alone, the fiendish dire rats reciprocate, going back to their meals and only occasionally hissing a warning in the PCs' direction. The PCs should recognize the signs of an animal defending its territory, but if not, allow them a DC 12 Knowledge (nature) check or DC 14 Survival check to understand the situation.

The PCs can move about the Room as long as they avoid the fiendish dire rats (the DM determines how close is too close). If a PC gets too close, the fiendish dire rat gives a warning snap of its teeth. If this doesn't stop the PCs, it attacks.

If it comes down to combat, the fiendish dire rats defend their territory, fighting as best they can. Individual fiendish dire rats retreat or flee if reduced to one-half of its hit points or fewer. All the remaining fiendish dire rats retreat if two or more of their number are killed. These beasts do not pursue fleeing PCs, being more than happy feast on the dead orcs.

Treasure: In addition to the arms and armor that are standard equipment for the orcs, PCs can find a few items of interest on the orcs with a successful DC 12 Search check — a small block of hacksilver (a chunk of silver from which pieces are cut to pay for items; worth 37 sp); a gold nose ring (6 gp) threaded through an orc's nostril; a small leather bag with three pieces of lapis lazuli (12 gp each); a set of well-worn ivory knucklebones (3 gp); a silver and gold bracelet with images of dolphins (75 gp); a small, bright golden feather woven into one orc's hair (actually a whip feather token).

Several shovels and picks lay against one corner of the wall. A corpse, an orc by the look of it, lays in the other corner, one of the flying octopuses attached to his head.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Although the PCs may at first assume that the fiendish darkmantle is feeding on the orc, this is not the case. Treasure: Aside from the armor and battleaxe, this orc has a pouch with seven bloodstones (30 gp each). Any PC that takes a moment to examine the dagger, or succeeds at a DC 20 Spot check, notices that it is of fine quality and is, in fact, a masterwork dagger.

A28. THE WHIMPERER IN DARKNESS

An orc corpse lies in the hallway just before the door, another victim of the fiendish darkmantles. If the PCs attempt to open the door, read the following.

Pushing against the door, you sense resistance. When you push a little harder, the door moves slightly before moving back towards you as if something is pushing back from the other side. Was that a whimper you heard?

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The door is being held closed by Turag, an orc that managed to survive the fiendish darkmantle swarm by seeking refuge in this Room even as his fellow orc was being killed right outside the door. He is barricading the door by jamming the point of a kobold spear under the bottom and holding on for dear life.

The PCs can force open the door by succeeding at an opposed Strength check against Turag (the orc gets a +7 circumstance bonus to this check due to his Strength and the leverage the spear provides). Turag whimpers all the while the PCs are trying to open the door.

Once the door is forced open, Turag retreats to the northwestern corner, grasping his battleaxe and trying to look as threatening as possible even though he is shaking with fear. A DC 12 Sense Motive check reveals that the orc is clearly in no mood for conflict.

If the PCs attack Turag, he goes down fighting. If, on the other hand, the PCs make any friendly overtures, the orc falls to his knees, dropping his battleaxe and begins pleading with the PCs to help get him out of there.

Although this exchange should be role-played, the DM can resolve this through a Diplomacy check (normal DC to change attitude from unfriendly to helpful is 40, but the PCs gain a +25 circumstance bonus to their roll because they are not reptilians or extraplanar beasts. If Boyikt (Room A69) and his kobolds are accompanying the PCs, the kobolds attack Turag. Even if the check fails, Turag does nothing more than continue to try and hold off the PCs by looking as threatening as is possible in his current state; he only attacks if he is attacked.

If the PCs agree to help the orc he is incredibly relieved and grateful, throwing himself at his rescuers' feet and in general being subservient. Although he is still an orc, Turag is clever enough to know that, at least at this moment, the PCs are his only way of making it out alive and will do what he can to help them; he plays up the role of the servant to the maximum.

Naturally, this is largely lip service and Turag avoids doing any real work (especially fighting) unless absolutely necessary to defend himself or he is threatened with abandonment or bodily harm. Given his alignment, if Turag finds a situation that he believes will serve him better, such as encountering a larger group of his brethren or finding some other way that would help him get out, he will not hesitate to abandon his benefactors, turning on the PCs if it seems to his advantage.

If the PCs tell him they will not help, Turag accepts the judgment with a shrug and returns morosely to his corner. The orc does not say anything to, or respond to anything from, the PCs from that point on. However, once the PCs leave the Room, Turag stealthily follows them, dogging their steps just out of range of any light sources. He is determined to follow the only chance he has at salvation and, even if caught at his game, does not give it up unless the PCs kill him. If confronted about his actions, he whines and pleads ad nauseum.

Turag can relate the general events of the orc entry into the dungeon and their battles against the reptilians. He has no idea where the beasts hail from; he only knows that his small band of warriors was suddenly attacked by a huge swarm of these leathery, flying, octopus things and that he ended up fleeing to this Room. Once there, Turag took safety (he won't mention the part about barricading it against his fellow orc) and was somehow missed in the excitement.

Turag cannot tell the PCs much of anything about the dungeon itself. Being a simple warrior, he did what he was told and did not bother with the details. The previous combats with the reptilians are a blur of Room-to-Room combat and he has no actual recollection of the routes he took. As a result, Turag can in no way serve as a guide to the PCs because he does not have the knowledge and "everything looks the same anyway," but that doesn't mean he won't claim to be able to if he feels it will secure him some protection.

Asking the orc about Longtail receives the same basic response. He only saw the "rat-man" once or twice and then only when he was talking with Orghar. He has not seen the "rat-man" in some time and has no idea what he might be up to. Turag does not make the connection between Longtail's absence and the appearance of the heasts in the dungeon on his own.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Cover

Tactics: If Turag is attacked by the PCs, he fights to the death as well as he can in his shaken state (-2 penalty on attack rolls, saving throws, skill checks, and ability checks).

If he joins the PCs, Turag stays out of combat, letting the PCs do all the work. He defends himself if attacked, while crying for help. If threatened by the PCs, Turag actively engages in combat to save his own skin, and then only if a PC fights beside him; he will stop the moment he is able. At no time will Turag risk his life to save or help a PC unless he feels the PCs will kill him if he does not.

A29. CASUALTIES

The door to this Room is open.

Close to a dozen orc bodies lie in various places about the room, along with an equal number of the flying octopus creatures. Several chairs and tables are also present, no doubt scattered during the battle.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Once used as a marshalling hall, the Room is presently empty except for the bodies. However, once the PCs have been inside the Room for two rounds, a fiendish rat swarm enters the hallway leading to this Room from the southern door and heads for the Room in search of more prey. If the PCs did not spend less than two rounds in the Room or simply look inside and leave, the wave enters the hallway while the PCs are still in it.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The fiendish rat swarm has been tracking the PCs since picking up their scent in Room A25. Although primarily scavengers, this wave is actively hunting for live flesh.

As the wave enters and rolls down the hall, allow the PCs Listen and Spot checks where appropriate (remember the -5 penalty for being distracted) in order to note its arrival.

The fiendish rat swarm's tactics are straight forward: it sweeps into Room A29 and covers the maximum amount of PCs in its 10-ft. by 10-ft. area. The fiendish rat swarm fights to the death, pursuing fleeing PCs and tracking them by scent if they get out of sight.

If the PCs spot the wave in time, they can push closed the door to A29, using their bodies to block the door and prevent the wave from entering. The wave will batter unsuccessfully against the door for some four rounds before all becomes still. If the PCs open the door at any time thereafter, the wave rushes through, having waited in silence for the PCs to do just that.

Clever PCs might think to look under the door or might succeed at a DC 15 Listen check and notice the wave still waiting outside. In that case, the wave will eventually move off down the hallway to lurk in the shadows at the western end and wait for the PCs to open the door and step out, at which point it rushes down the hallway to attack.

Treasure: Along with the usual orc arms and armor, a careful search of the orc bodies reveals a few spoils with a successful DC 12 Search check — a battleaxe with the runes of the manufacturer engraved in the blade. This is a masterwork battleaxe and is the work of the renowned dwarven weaponsmith, Dorin Steelforge; a hunk of amber (11 gp); a necklace of teeth of various kinds (no value); a length of red silk ribbon tied in an orc's hair (dirty beyond cleansing and thus no value); three silver earrings in one orc's ear (8 gp, 10 gp, and 17 gp respectively); a small ivory carving of a lion (25 gp); a punching dagger embedded in one of the fiendish darkmantles.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the door knocked off its hinges and lying on the floor somewhere so the PCs cannot easily block the entrance. To decrease the challenge, reduce the hit points of the fiendish rat swarm to one-half prior to the start of the encounter and allow it to occupy only a 5-ft. by 10-ft. area.

Swarm: A fiendish rat swarm seeks to surround and attack any prey it encounters. A fiendish rat swarm deals 1d6 points of damage to any creature whose space it occupies at the end of its move.

In order to attack, a single fiendish rat swarm moves into opponents' spaces, which provokes an attack of opportunity. It can occupy the same space as a creature of any size, since it crawls all over its prey, but remains a creature with a 10-ft. space. Fiendish rat swarms never make attacks of opportunity, but they can provoke attacks of opportunity.

Unlike other creatures with a 10-ft. space, a fiendish rat swarm is shapable. It can occupy any four contiguous squares, and it can squeeze through any space large enough to contain one of its members.

Disease (Ex): Devil Chills—bite, Fortitude DC 12, incubation period 1d4 days, damage 1d4 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based. It requires three successful Fortitude saving throws in a row to recover from devil chills.

Distraction (Ex): Any living creature that begins its turn with a fiendish rat swarm in its square must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or be nauseated for 1 round. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish rat swarm can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (+2) against a good foe.

Skills: A fiendish rat swarm has a +4 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks, and a +8 racial bonus on Balance, Climb, and Swim checks. A fiendish rat swarm can always choose to take 10 on all Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened. A fiendish rat swarm uses its Dexterity modifier instead of its Strength modifier for Climb and Swim checks. A fiendish rat swarm has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

A30 THROUGH A38. ANIMAL MUSK

The hallways and Rooms north of Room A30 and west of Rooms A37 and A38 are the home of the troglodytes. PCs that enter the area are automatically sickened (-2 penalty to all attack and weapon damage rolls, saving throws, skill and ability checks) the entire time they are within the area from the strong concentration of troglodyte musk that pervades the area after the fiendish darkmantle attack. In addition, they must succeed at a DC 13 Fortitude save every round they are within the hallways or Rooms A31, A32, A35, and A36. Once a save is failed, the PC is nauseated (unable to attack, cast spells, concentrate on spells, or do anything else requiring attention; only a single move action per turn is possible) for 10 rounds, after which time they continue to be sickened for as long as they are in the area but can no longer be nauseated. Because of the massive concentration of musk, there is no need to roll for reactions to the musk of individual troglodytes while in this area.

As the PCs pass through this area they notice a number of fiendish darkmantle corpses (roughly one every 10 ft.) that the troglodytes killed as they retreated down the hall.

The only way to be rid of the sickening effect is to leave the area (either go south of the Room A29 or east of Room A36) at which point the sickening effect remains for 1d4 rounds before lifting, or to use delay poison (which protects against both the sickening and nauseating effects for as long as the spell lasts).

If Turag (Room A28) is with the party then he does his best to steer the PCs away from this area saying that it is far too dangerous. The orc is aware of the fact that this is the troglodyte home.

A31. A NOT SO TASTY MEAL

The doors to this Room are open.

The bodies of two troglodytes lie on the floor, obviously suffocated to death.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: These troglodytes met their fate as the fiendish darkmantles swept through the area. The fiendish darkmantles are long gone, having pushed on to the western end of the "Maze." Currently, eight fiendish stirges that were following the fiendish darkmantles for just such opportunities are taking advantage of the situation and draining the corpses dry.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises

Tactics: The fiendish stirges are busy feeding and are thus distracted (-5 to all Listen and Spot checks). They do not notice light until it falls on one of them. Although they are feeding, the fiendish stirges are not particularly thrilled with the quality of troglodyte blood and will gladly welcome a chance to feast on something tastier, namely the PCs.

Once the fiendish stirges spot the PCs, they take to the air to attack, spreading their numbers out as evenly as possible.

The fiendish stirges, just as the PCs do, suffer from the troglodyte musk in the area and are sickened (-2 penalty to all attack and weapon damage rolls, saving throws, skill and ability checks).

Although the fiendish stirges are hungry they are not suicidal and any fiendish stirge reduced to one-half its hit points or fewer tries to flee by flying back to Room A30 and from there to the east, gladly leaving its fellows behind. If at any time the odds are even or there are more PCs than fiendish stirges, the remaining fiendish stirges will flee.

Because the fiendish stirges have already been feeding on the troglodyte corpses, they are not as hungry and will only drain 2 points of Constitution before becoming full and flying off to digest their meal.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the fiendish stirges be hungry enough to drain all 4 points of Constitution from a victim. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, have each fiendish stirge be able to drain only 1 point of Constitution from a victim before needing to digest.

✦ Fiendish Stirge: CR 1/2; Tiny magical beast (extraplanar); HD 1d10; hp 5; Init +4; Spd 10 ft., fly 40 ft. Skills and Feats: Hide +14, Listen +4, Spot +4; Alertness, Weapon Finesse⁺

Attach (Ex): If a fiendish stirge hits with a touch attack, it uses its eight pincers to latch onto the opponent's body. An attached fiendish stirge is effectively grappling its prey. The fiendish stirge loses its Dexterity bonus to AC and has an AC of 12, but holds on with great tenacity. Fiendish stirges have a +12 racial bonus on grapple checks (already figured into the Base Attack/Grapple entry above).

An attached fiendish stirge can be struck with a weapon or grappled itself. To remove an attached fiendish stirge through grappling, the opponent must achieve a pin against the fiendish stirge.

Blood Drain (Ex): A fiendish stirge drains blood, dealing 1d4 points of Constitution damage in any round when it begins its turn attached to a victim. Once it has dealt 4 points of Constitution damage, it detaches and flies off to digest the meal. If its victim dies before the fiendish stirge's appetite is sated, the fiendish stirge detaches and seeks a new target.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish stirge can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (+1) against a good foe.

A32. TORTURE CHAMBER

The door to Room A32 is trapped. Pulling the door open releases scything blades located underneath the door. The blades swing out at anyone standing closest to the door (usually the person opening the door; each blade swings into the square directly in front the door). A hidden bolt near the outside edge of the door can be pushed down to keep the blades in place. The trap is reset when the door is closed.

Read the following once the PCs open the secret door.

Several sets of wrist and ankle manacles are chained to the walls. The dried pools of blood below each set only underline what use this room was used for.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as a prison and torture chamber hundreds of years ago, but after the earthquakes broke open the tombs. The blindfolded slaves were brought into this Room through the secret door and, once the secret door was closed, shown that there was no way out. It has escaped discovery until now.

Note that while the hallway is subject to troglodyte musk, the Room itself is free of the odor.

Encounter Condition: Decrepit, Safe

Tactics: Despite the atmosphere, the Room is an excellent place for the PCs to rest.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this trap, have the blades cause 1d8/x3 damage. To decrease the challenge of this trap, make the bypass more readily noticeable (Search check, DC 12).

A33. AMBUSH

The following description covers the hallways and alcoves south of Room A33 including locations A and B and examines the tactics of the troglodytes defending the area. Remember that the PCs, along with any other living non-troglodytes, are sickened (-2 penalty to all attack and weapon damage rolls, saving throws, skill and ability checks) while in this area unless they have somehow managed to take precautions.

Note that all four of the doors in this area are open. Having withstood the initial assault by the fiendish darkmantles, the remaining troglodytes have prepared themselves as best as they can for subsequent attacks by placing six of their number in readiness for any additional threats (two each at locations "B" and one more each in Rooms A31 and A32).

The signs of battle are evident here, as several of the flying octopus creatures have met their end in these hallways.

Initial Attitude: Hostile (Initial) or Indifferent (after PCs retreat)

Encounter: The floor just before the alcoves (location "A") contains over a dozen fiendish darkmantle corpses (the last of the wave that attacked this area) that have had their tentacles and bodies sliced open. The resulting mess of blood and organs makes for a slippery and noisy environment. Any PC attempting to move through the area must succeed at a DC 15 Reflex save the moment he steps into location "A" or slip and fall prone in the bloody mess. Even if the PC keeps himself from slipping, the noise made by moving through the coagulated blood and squishy organs is most likely be heard by the troglodytes hiding at location "B". (If the PCs are attempting to move have the PC or PCs roll their Move Silently checks normally and grant the troglodytes in the alcoves Listen check bonuses of +11 while the troglodytes in Room A31 and A32 receive a total of +4. Note that the Listen check bonuses include the standard troglodyte +3 Listen bonus).

PCs using light sources (except for candles) are automatically detected before they reach location "A".

There are two troglodyte warriors each biding in the darkness in both the eastern and western alcoves (they are at the locations marked with a "B"; both troglodytes occupy a single square). Although they try to blend in as well as they can, the fact is that they have nowhere to hide and are thus easily spotted by anyone who looks into either alcove and succeeds at a DC 8 Spot check. The remaining two are hiding in the doorways of Rooms A31 and A32 respectively, keeping an eye on the hallway from there and are much harder to spot (Spot check, DC 19).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Given the tight quarters in this area, the troglodytes realize the importance of these alcoves. The moment they become aware of movement through location "A", they ready themselves. Due to their desire for surprise, the troglodytes at locations "B" cannot warn their compatriots in the doorways of Rooms A31 and A32 of PCs moving in darkness (those not using light sources but making noise at location "A"); if those two do not hear the PCs themselves then they cannot react during the surprise round. All troglodytes notice any light sources in the hallway.

Unless the PCs have some way of knowing where the troglodytes are, or are especially cautious, the troglodytes have a surprise. The moment a PC enters the square between the two alcoves one of the troglodytes from each alcove takes a 5-ft. step and attacks (its surprise round action) with both troglodytes gaining flanking bonuses. The troglodytes in Rooms A31 and A32 use the surprise round to move down the hall (if they are not aware of the PCs when the troglodytes in the alcove attack then they cannot move until the first normal combat round), one behind the other, and hem the PC in position; they cannot attack until the following round.

Once combat begins, the troglodytes attempt to hold their positions with three engaging the PC caught between the alcoves (the two in the alcoves receiving flanking bonuses) and the other three providing backup for any troglodyte that falls. Although they secrete their musk, the smell is already so bad that it has no further effect on the PCs.

Knowing that they are trapped, every troglodyte fights to the death.

Given recent history, the troglodytes consider anyone that is not a troglodyte an enemy and attack to kill, giving no quarter and asking for none during the initial combat. Any attempt to talk or negotiate while in the ambush falls on deaf ears.

If the PCs retreat, the troglodytes do not pursue them beyond the two alcoves, realizing that they would be giving up a great advantage by doing so. Once they retreat from the area the PCs may wish to parley with the troglodytes. Since the rather desperate troglodytes realize that it was not orcs or beasts attacking them, allow a Diplomacy if the PCs speak draconic (grant a +10 bonus to the PC's attempt if no troglodytes were wounded or killed during the initial ambush).

If Turag (Room A28) is with the PCs and the troglodytes are aware of it, they demand to be allowed to take him as a prisoner in exchange for information. If Turag fought against the troglodytes, there is no chance of parley as the PCs are seen as allies of the orcs.

If parley is successful, the PCs can speak to Yrkak, the troglodyte cleric from Room A34 although they are not allowed to proceed up the hallway past the alcoves. Much like the other humanoids, the troglodytes relate their story but precious little concerning Longtail and his plans, although Yrkak recalls that when he last heard of Longtail the "rat-man" was heading to the east. If the parley fails, the troglodytes leave the PCs alone as long as they do not return but do not otherwise, communicate with them. In no way do the troglodytes join with the PCs. They are busy caring for the wounded at the moment and enjoy their tactically sound position. Once the warriors that can be saved are healthy, the group will attempt to leave the area.

A33. TROGLODYTE LIVING QUARTERS

The door to this Room, as are all the doors in this area, is open.

Several troglodytes lie in a fetal position on reed mats, otherwise this room appears to be empty.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Before the arrival of the PCs there was one troglodyte stationed in the doorway prepared to move down the hall to do battle. There are a total of six dead troglodytes here, having been arranged in the proper burial position by their cleric (see Room A34). There are no other live troglodytes in the Room.

A34. TROGLODYTE LIVING QUARTERS

The door to this Room is open (as are all the doors in this section).

Some badly wounded troglodytes are lying on reed mats.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Before the arrival of the PCs there was one troglodyte stationed in the doorway prepared to move down the hall to do battle.

There are a total of seven wounded troglodytes (hp 5, 3, 3, 2, 0, 0, 0) within this Room. They are casualties of the fiendish darkmantle assault and are being tended to by Yrkak, a troglodyte cleric. Three of the wounded are disabled (negative hit points) and the other four warriors are fatigued (cannot run or charge, -2 penalty to Strength and Dexterity checks) as a result of their recent action and wounds.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Yrkak is busy doing what he can for the wounded warriors and has already used his allotment of spells to fight the fiendish darkmantles. If the PCs manage to fight off the warriors in the hall, Yrkak begins killing the three disabled warriors (taking three rounds to perform the coup de graces), rather than having them fall into enemy hands, while the four wounded warriors do what they can to fight the PCs. Once he has finished with the three disabled warriors, Yrkak joins any remaining warriors in combat. All of them fight to the death.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the wounded troglodytes be fully functional (they are still wounded but not fatigued) and increase their hit point totals by 3 each. A35. OUTER CHAMBER

This standard secret door is locked with a good lock (Open Lock check, DC 30) in the lower left corner of the door (Search check, DC 15). The lock is part of the door and cannot be attacked separately. The door may only be locked or unlocked from the outside. Once the door is unlocked, it may be opened in the normal manner.

As you push open the door, a shriveled and partly clothed skeletal body falls into the passageway.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is the body of an orc soldier, imprisoned in this Room by his fellow soldiers when his madness overtook him. Unable to get out, he eventually starved to death. A broken shortsword lies next to the secret door, its blade snapped.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Propped into the southwestern corner is a repeating light crossbow, a full case of five bolts loaded, and a hooded lantern (no oil).

A36. MAGAZINE

The secret door is trapped to release a swinging block that hits anything within the doorway when the door is pushed open from Room A35. There are actually two such blocks, one for each side the door can be pushed in on, but only one can be triggered at a time due to the construction of the trigger mechanism which relies on the door opening into Room A36 to operate. The hidden bolt bypass for each block is located just inside the door and using it requires that the door be pushed open slowly in order to access the locking mechanism just inside the doorframe. Pushing the door closed resets the trap.

Once the PCs open the door, read the following.

Several weapons as well as barrels and cases sit in a haphazard fashion within this room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter Condition: Drafty, Extreme Cold, Safe

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: There are two light repeating crossbows here along with six loaded magazines. A small barrel of 100 light crossbow bolts balances in one corner. Although there are racks to hold over a score polearms, currently only three spears are here. The cases have all been emptied of their contents.

A small cask of oil (5 gallons) rests on top of the barrel.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of the trap, raise the attack bonus of the trap to +8. To decrease the challenge of this trap reduce the damage done by the stone block to 1d6.

A37 THROUGH A40. THE QUAD

The four large Rooms encompassing A37 to A40 serve as workshops. Although most of the tools are gone (having been taken by any number of humanoid races), the large furnaces and tables are still in place.

Although empty for the most part, the area currently serves as a resting place for several beasts that enjoy the open spaces and feel that the former workshops are an excellent place to build a nest.

A37. TOOLSMITH WORKSHOP

The door to this Room is open and secured with a metal hook that holds the door in place, preventing it from being accidentally closed.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: The five workbenches all show signs of heavy use under their dust. Various tools lay about the workshop, all of them either broken or in poor repair. Currently six fiendish stirges (hp 5) rest on the workbenches digesting their meals.

Encounter Condition: Safe, Soft Cover

Tactics: The fiendish stirges are full and are not interested in pursuing another meal. Their satiated state has made them sleepy (~5 to Listen and Spot checks, lights noticed automatically). As long as the PCs do not enter the Room, the fiendish stirges remain where they are.

If the PCs enter the Room, the fiendish stirges will flap their wings and try to look as big as possible while assuming aggressive postures and calling out loudly (the noise will not be enough to alert the fiendish stirges in the other Rooms). The PCs should recognize the signs of an animal defending its territory, but if not, allow them to make a DC 12 Knowledge (nature) check to understand the situation. As long as the PCs back away, no conflict results.

If the PCs remain in the Room, or attack, the fiendish stirges attempt to fly out of the PCs reach and head for the hallways, flying to either Rooms A38 or A39. If flight is impossible, the fiendish stirges engage in combat. Each fiendish stirge must spend two rounds regurgitating the blood that is already in its system by blowing it through its proboscis before it can attack effectively. Once the process of emptying out its system has started, it cannot be stopped. Once the fiendish stirge has emptied out its system, it can attack normally (drain up to its maximum of 4 points of Constitution).

Treasure: N/A

EL: 1 (due to bloated state)

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, make the fiendish stirges hungry. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, have the fiendish stirges require four rounds to completely regurgitate their previous meal.

♣ Fiendish Stirge: CR 1/2; Tiny magical beast (extraplanar); HD 1d10; hp 5; Init +4; Spd 10 ft., fly 40 ft. Skills and Feats: Hide +14, Listen +4, Spot +4; Alertness, Weapon Finesse

Attach (Ex): If a fiendish stirge hits with a touch attack, it uses its eight pincers to latch onto the opponent's body. An attached fiendish stirge is effectively grappling its prey. The fiendish stirge loses its Dexterity bonus to AC and has an AC of 12, but holds on with great tenacity. Fiendish stirges have a +12 racial bonus on grapple checks (already figured into the Base Attack/Grapple entry above).

An attached fiendish stirge can be struck with a weapon or grappled itself. To remove an attached fiendish stirge through grappling, the opponent must achieve a pin against the fiendish stirge.

Blood Drain (Ex): A fiendish stirge drains blood, dealing 1d4 points of Constitution damage in any round when it begins its turn attached to a victim. Once it has dealt 4 points of Constitution damage, it detaches and flies off to digest the meal. If its victim dies before the fiendish stirge's appetite is sated, the fiendish stirge detaches and seeks a new target.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish stirge can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (+1) against a good foe.

A38. WEAPONSMITH WORKSHOP

The door to this Room is open and secured with a metal spike that has been driven into the ground to prevent the door from being closed. A DC 18 Strength check is required to pull out the spike.

Several large workbenches are arranged in a haphazard fashion in this room. A large furnace sits unlit in the northeastern corner.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: There are a total of eleven workbenches in this Room, all of them dust covered and showing signs of heavy use. The furnace is functional, but unless the PCs have fuel with them, it cannot be fired up. Various tools lay about the Room that if gathered together make a set and a half of artisan tools (weaponsmith).

A39. DESTROYED WORKSHOP

The door to this Room is open and secured with an iron spike that has been driven into the wall to prevent it from being closed. A DC 16 Strength check is required to pull out the spike.

The workbenches in this room have all been destroyed, as has the furnace that sits in the southwestern corner.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Whoever cleaned out this Room destroyed everything with a sledgehammer including the furnace. The mess is just the right place for a sextet of fiendish dire rats (hp 5).

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Concealment, Hazardous Footing 15

Tactics: The fiendish dire rats are rummaging through the morass in the Room trying to put together a nest in the furnace from the choicest bits. Although they are busy, they constantly have one of their number on watch near the door so the PCs will have a tough time sneaking up on them; using light guarantees that they will be spotted.

Unless the PCs can somehow surprise the extraplanar rodents, difficult given the rodents' scent ability (detect PC presence within 30 ft., pinpoint PC within 5 ft.), the fiendish dire rats will hide among the piles of rubble near the furnace and attempt to ambush whatever comes through the door. The rodents are patient enough to wait until a PC comes within 5 ft. of the furnace so that they can use the surprise action to attack from hiding.

If the PCs do not succeed at a DC 18 Spot check, the rats gain surprise and rush out at the closest PC hoping to bring him or her down with a mass attack. Once the surprise round is over, the rodents will spread out to ensure that at least one of their number is attacking a PC. Although they are defending their newly won home, these rodents are not eager to die and will flee if three or more of their number are killed.

Disease (Ex): Devil Chills—bite, Fortitude DC 11, incubation period 1d4 days, damage 1d4 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based. It requires three successful Fortitude saving throws in a row to recover from devil chills.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish dire rat can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (maximum of +20) against a good foe.

Skills: Fiendish dire rats have a +8 racial bonus on Swim checks. Fiendish dire rats have a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened.

A40. DESTROYED LABORATORY

The door to this Room is partly open, hanging by one hinge as the result of the explosion that ripped through this laboratory. The door blocks passage for Medium creatures (although Small creatures can squeeze through), and requires a DC 14 Strength check to open fully.

This room was obviously devastated by an explosion. Scorch marks adorn the walls and whatever furniture once adorned the place is in shards. Here and there you can make out what appears to be part of a table or the leg of a stool, but otherwise the destruction is complete.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was a laboratory that was destroyed during a failed experiment involving fire evocation. The entire laboratory was virtually vaporized and the door was knocked off its hinge.

The entire floor is covered in slivers of wood, chunks of stone, pieces of glass, and bone shards that impose a -10 circumstance penalty to all Move Silently checks. All of the debris is scorched in some manner and the entire place still smells of the smoke that burned many years ago. The remnants of a furnace sit in the northwestern corner, the explosion reducing it to little more than a pile of rubble about the height of a man's knee.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The floor is a huge mess and any attempts to locate anything would require many hours of sweeping and sifting through the trash. The furnace, despite its almost total destruction, is a more promising area to search and any PC that succeeds at a DC 25 Search check finds a short sword that looks almost unmarked by the devastation. This is a +1 short sword that was being prepared to receive further enchantments when the research detonated.

DMs may allow the PCs to place one 1st-level spell into the sword, completing the ritual. However, this requires a DC 16 Spellcraft check to figure out what they were doing, as well as the Craft Magic Arms and Armor feat. It does not cost gp or XP, however to imbue the sword.

A41 THROUGH A45. KOBOLD STRONGHOLD

Rooms A41 through A45 mark the borders of a kobold stronghold. Chosen because the hallway at A45 allowed the krenshars free rein, it was the first target of the orc's last assault. As the battle in this area reached its climax, a wave of extraplanar beasts joined the fray. Even a last-second alliance between the kobolds and orcs could not stop the onslaught. Currently a number of extraplanar beasts are exploring the area, looking for scraps and nesting places.

A41. KOBOLD GUARD POST

The door to this Room is open.

Two dead orcs and three dead kobolds lie in this room amidst an overturned table and a collection stools.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This area was a guardpost for the kobolds that occupied this area. The guards here were tasked with guarding the approach of anything from the "Maze." Breaking through the kobold defenses in Room A45, Orghar sent a squad of orcs through the western tunnel to deal with them. The corpses that lie here are the result of that skirmish.

Currently there are three fiendish dire rats (hp 6) rummaging through the area looking for something to nibble on.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The fiendish dire rats are scavenging in the aftermath of the fiendish darkmantle swarm that washed through the area on its journey west. One or the other of their number is always on lookout and their scent ability means that they detect the presence of PCs at the latest within 30 ft. of the entrance.

Once the PCs are detected, the fiendish dire rats attempt to look as threatening and imposing as possible, but make no move to attack. Obviously, they are bluffing and as long as the PCs do not enter the Room, the rodents do not attack. The PCs should recognize the rodent behavior as a bluff, but if not, allow them to make a DC 12 Knowledge (nature) check to understand the situation. The fiendish dire rats are not interested in combat and if the PCs leave them alone, the fiendish dire rats go on about their business.

If the PCs attack, the fiendish dire rats try to flee back to Room A44 to the fiendish rat swarms that are in that area. Although they fight to the death if necessary, they prefer to look for openings during combat to flee.

Treasure: Other than the standard arms and armor and the table and stools, one of the kobolds has some gold wire (5 gp) wrapped decoratively about his horns. In addition, there is an ordinary dagger driven into the tabletop with an agate in its pommel (15 gp).

A42. KOBOLD LIVING AREA

The door to this Room is open.

A number of orc and kobold bodies lie in this room along with a couple of the flying octopus creatures. Stools, reed mats, and blankets are strewn over the place along with what were probably the personal possessions of the kobolds that made this their home.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The kobolds and orcs fighting in this Room were surprised and overwhelmed by the wave of fiendish darkmantles that rolled through the area and, although they quickly banded together to fight this new enemy, it was too late.

Currently there are five fiendish dire rats busy picking out the choicest morsels to be found among the seven orc and twelve kobold corpses. They are rather agitated and in fact awaiting the inevitable arrival of the fiendish rat swarms from Room A44.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Distracting Noises

Tactics: The fiendish dire rats are anxious to leave the area before the fiendish rat swarms arrive from Room A44 and are hurrying in their search (-5 to Listen and Spot checks), counting on their scent ability to warn them of approaching danger (30 ft. to detect PC, 5 ft. to pinpoint location).

Once the PCs are detected, the fiendish dire rats attempt to bluff the PCs into leaving them alone by looking as threatening as possible (hackles raised, teeth bared, hissing). The PCs should recognize this bluff, but if not, allow them to make a DC 15 Knowledge (nature) check to understand the situation. As long as the PCs leave the fiendish dire rats alone, they will continue on about their business, occasionally looking up and reinforcing their warning.

If the PCs attack, the fiendish dire rats flee through Room A44, leading the PCs past the fiendish rat swarms active there if they are able. If not, they fight and hope to force an opening that will allow them to flee. Only if no other option exists do they fight to the death.

Note that sounds of combat in this Room is eventually noticed by the fiendish rat swarms in Room A44 (roll normal Listen checks with a -10 penalty for the intervening wall) and they rush to investigate the noise, arriving in 3 rounds after succeeding at a Listen check (see Room A44 for details and tactics).

Treasure: Aside from several small stools and a dozen reed mats and blankets, all of which are easily located, the personal possessions of the kobolds have been strewn over the floor and PCs require a thorough search (Search check, DC 20) to locate any of the following items among the general litter and bodies — a kobold-sized flute carved from a small thighbone (2 gp); a set of 26 polished stone playing pieces and game board (4 gp) stolen from a caravan; a tarnished, silver drinking cup with a dwarven inscription stating "Doril's Cup" (5 gp); a set of nine rough carvings made from ivory depicting various swamp denizens (17 gp total value); several of the kobolds are wearing horn coverings made of gold (in the shape of a cylinder and worth 3 gp each; a total of 8); eleven gems of low value (10 gp each) found in the pouches of three kobolds.

Note that searching for treasure can leave the PCs distracted (–5 to Spot and Listen checks) during the arrival of the fiendish rat swarms from Room A44.

A43. KOBOLD CHIEF'S LIVING AREA

The door to this Room is open.

The smell of blood in this room is close to overwhelming. Kobold and orc dead, along with an almost equal number of the flying octopus creatures, lie strewn about the room. A couple of large feline bodies can be identified in one of the corners. A small sea of drying blood coats the floor like a torn carpet.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was Borryn's, the kobold chief, quarters and it was here that the battle between the orcs and kobolds reached its climax with Borryn, his best warriors, and two krenshar battling a score of orcs. Even as both sides inflicted heavy casualties on each other, the fiendish darkmantles fell on them and a three-way battle was joined during which all the humanoids, including Borryn perished, although their hasty alliance managed to inflict some serious casualties on the fiendish darkmantles.

So thick is the blood in this Room that any creature moving across the sticky floor must succeed at a DC 15 Reflex save every move action or fall prone among the blood and bodies (Move Silently checks suffer a –5 circumstance penalty due to the noise made when moving through the sticky blood); PCs who fall into the mess are partially coated with blood and gore. Given the carnage in the place, not even the fiendish dire rats have ventured into the Room.

Because of the massive carnage it is impossible to tell what the Room once contained. A broken table along with seven small stools are scattered throughout the area, as are ten reed mats and attendant blankets. The remaining items, mostly kobold personal items that had been stored in sacks, are scattered about the Room amongst the bodies.

Encounter Condition: Decrepit, Hazardous Footing 14

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The sheer damage done to the area and the sheer mess makes locating any small valuable items a chancy proposition; the bodies still have their usual arms and armaments. Most items are crushed or so drenched in blood that they are almost unrecognizable. Still, determined PCs may search (Search check, DC 25) for the following items — a silver ring set with a moonstone on an orc's hand (105 gp); six sets of the gold kobold horn caps (5 gp per each cap for a total of 60 gp); an electrum earring in a kobold's ear (3 gp); a masterwork spear that lays near Borryn; a blue coral necklace (6 gp) torn from the neck of an orc; a gold pendant in the shape of a tree (25 gp) around a kobold's throat; a pair of fine leather boots (50 gp) on the feet of an orc.

An additional item of interest is a large chest situated in the southwestern corner of the Room that has an orc corpse slumped against it. This was the kobold chieftain's personal chest (Hardness 5, Hit Points 15, Break DC 23) and is locked with an average lock (Open Lock check, DC 25); it is not trapped. It contains a bolt of purple silk (10 square yards; 100 gp), a plain gold circlet (25 gp), five sacks of copper pieces (523 cp total), two sacks of silver pieces (147 sp total), one sack of gold pieces (92 gp total), a small pouch of platinum pieces (17 pp total), and two pouches of gems (21 total gems of 4d4 gp in value).

Note that searching for treasure can leave the PCs distracted (–5 to Spot and Listen checks) during the arrival of the fiendish rat swarms from Room A44.

A44. KRENSHAR STABLES

Both doors to this area are open.

This open area is divided by several walls into smaller individual spaces. It is eerily devoid of bodies given the carnage in other areas.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room was used by the kobolds to stable their krenshar mounts. There are two dead krenshar in this area, one in the northwestern Region and the other in the southeastern Region. The kobold mounts attempted to hold this area in the face of the orc onslaught, but succeeded only in getting killed. Currently there are two fiendish rat swarms in the area as well, feasting on the krenshar remains.

These waves followed a fiendish darkmantle swarm that had been released by Longtail and came to this Room directly from Room A108 via the one-way secret door in the western wall (see Room A108 for a complete description). Although the PCs may well decide to explore the eastern hallway, the nature of the secret door to Room A108 prevents them from entering Longtail's chapel (unless they have the tools to chip through solid rock).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The fiendish rat swarms are busy gnawing on the krenshar (–5 to Spot and Listen checks), but their sense of smell works just fine (detect presence within 30 ft. and pinpoint location within 5 ft.).

Although the corpse is a welcome find to the rodent hordes, the swarms eagerly respond to a chorus of fighting or activity in Rooms A42 and A43.

No matter whether they investigate any noise in those areas, or the PCs stumble upon them as they are feasting on the krenshar, the waves attack in the usual fashion, attempting to cover as many PCs as possible within their 10-ft. square area. Unlike the fiendish dire rats, the fiendish rat swarms will fight to the death and pursue the PCs, relying on scent to track PCs that are out of sight.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one fiendish rat swarm. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, remove one.

◆ Fiendish Rat Swarm: CR 3; Tiny magical beast (extraplanar, swarm); HD 4d8; hp 13; Init +2; Spd 15 ft., climb 15 ft.; AC 14; touch 14, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +3; Grp —; Atk (1d6 plus disease, swarm); Full Atk (1d6 plus disease, swarm); Space/Reach 10 ft./0 ft.; SA Disease, distraction, smite good; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., half damage from slashing and piercing, low-light vision, resistance to cold and fire 5, spell resistance 5, scent, swarm traits; AL NE; SV Fort +4, Ref +6, Will +2; Str 2, Dex 15, Con 10, Int 3, Wis 12, Cha 2.

Skills and Feats: Balance +10, Climb +10, Hide +14, Listen +6, Spot +7, Swim +10; Alertness, Weapon Finesse.

Swarm: A fiendish rat swarm seeks to surround and attack any prey it encounters. A fiendish rat swarm deals 1d6 points of damage to any creature whose space it occupies at the end of its move.

In order to attack, a single fiendish rat swarm moves into opponents' spaces, which provokes an attack of opportunity. It can occupy the same space as a creature of any size, since it crawls all over its prey, but remains a creature with a 10-ft. space. Fiendish rat swarms never make attacks of opportunity, but they can provoke attacks of opportunity.

Unlike other creatures with a 10-foot space, a fiendish rat swarm is shapable. It can occupy any four contiguous squares, and it can squeeze through any space large enough to contain one of its members.

Disease (Ex): Devil Chills—bite, Fortitude DC 12, incubation period 1d4 days, damage 1d4 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based. It requires three successful Fortitude saving throws in a row to recover from devil chills.

Distraction (Ex): Any living creature that begins its turn with a fiendish rat swarm in its square must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or be nauseated for 1 round. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish rat swarm can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (+2) against a good foe.

Skills: A fiendish rat swarm has a +4 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks, and a +8 racial bonus on Balance, Climb, and Swim checks. A fiendish rat swarm can always choose to take 10 on all Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened. A fiendish rat swarm uses its Dexterity modifier instead of its Strength modifier for Climb and Swim checks. A fiendish rat swarm has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

A45. HALLWAY

All the doors in and out of this hallway are open.

The remains of a pile of bodies, two large felines and a pair of kobolds as well as a trio of orcs, are stacked in the center of this hallway.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This area was under constant patrol by two kobolds and krenshar when the orcs attacked. Arriving simultaneously from both the east and west, the orcs surrounded the kobold guards and slaughtered them, sustaining no casualties themselves. The fiendish rat swarms have already visited here and the bodies are nothing more than a few ornaments of flesh clinging to bone.

A46 THROUGH A56. NO ONE'S LAND

Covering Rooms A46 to A56, this area was not claimed by the orcs or reptilians and served as a neutral area while the humanoid alliance still held. The chief reason for this status was that this area is the heart of this Region of the World's Largest Dungeon and is able to access all the other parts of this Region; in order for the various humanoid treasure-seeking groups to be able to go about their business in peace, the area was deemed to be free to everyone. The other reason for this was because of the large number of trapped Rooms and mysterious phenomena in some of the Rooms.

Although some parts of the area saw heavy fighting during the orc attack on the reptilians and the occasional beast is about, large parts of this region have been left alone for a long time and hold a number of secrets, traps, and treasures.

A46. WORKSHOP

The door to this Room is trapped. Draconic writing on the door reads "Danger. Do Not Enter." The warning on the door was placed there by the kobolds who had one of their number killed when the trap in the doorway was triggered.

The doorway is trapped with an automatically resetting burning hands trap. The trap activates the moment any creature opens the door to Room A46. It shoots down from the ceiling in a cone shape, striking the square in front of the door on both sides. Because the vent is built into the archway, this trap is nearly impossible to spot.

Read the following once the PCs open the door.

Although this room is now empty, you can all but guess at its previous purpose. A complete forge sits in one corner. A large workbench along with two stools dominates the center, while there are numerous hooks and nails on the wall indicating a place where tools were once kept. A hallway leads on past this area.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was at one time a workshop. The place was cleaned out, but the forge couldn't be moved. Although covered with dust, the forge is still functional if fuel is found.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: Assuming the PCs survive the trap or bypass it, this is an excellent Room to rest.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this trap, increase the damage to 4d4. To decrease the challenge of this trap, reduce the damage to 1d4.

A47. LABORATORY

Several tables are pushed up along the sides of this room along with a trio of stools.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was a magical laboratory. Unlike the one in Room A40, this one did not sustain any major damage. The valuable equipment was cleaned out, but a couple of items were left behind.

PCs examining the tables can note discoloration and burn marks from the use of various chemicals during the experiments. A DC 12 Search check of the Room reveals a number of piles of glass shards from broken beakers and containers.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises or Haunted

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A PC willing to search (Search check, DC 20) through the glass shards is rewarded with a small, flawed diamond (500 gp).

The first is small metal box, about 4 inches in length, 4 inches in width, and 2 inches in height, that attaches under one of the tables and is found relatively easily with a DC 14 Search check. This box is trapped with a poison blade holding greenblood oil weakened with age. The razor-sharp blade releases when the box is opened, slicing across the box opening and cutting into flesh. A PC that shakes the box hears small objects rattling within. Unfortunately, this box is a red herring and contains only a few pebbles.

♣ Poison Blade Trap: CR 1; mechanical; touch trigger; manual reset; Atk +8 melee (1 plus greenblood oil poison DC 5 Fort save (due to age) 1 Con/1d2 Con); Search DC 22; Disable Device DC 20.

A second hiding place is behind one of the rocks of the furnace. The mechanism is actually a flat piece of rock attached to a metal flap that is lifted to gain access to the space behind; it is revealed by a more difficult DC 18 Search check. This hiding place is also guarded by a spring-loaded punching dagger blade that flies out the moment the rock flap is lifted, punching itself into the face or chest of the person opening the door. The blade is coated with greenblood oil that has lost much of its potency.

♣ Punching Dagger Trap: CR 1; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; Atk +12 ranged (1d4/x3 plus greenblood oil poison, DC 5 Fort save (due to age) 1 Con/1d2 Con, punching dagger); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20. Note: 20-ft. max range.

The final location is the most difficult to find (Search check, DC 28) and is actually a hollow stool leg that contains a wand of acid arrow (17 charges). The wand gives no clue as to its function and identify only reveals the command word (bahris-kyh). If the PCs detect magic, the wand radiates magic, but no school can be discovered.

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, restore the potency of the greenblood oil poison. To reduce the challenge, remove the poison.

A48. COLLAPSING ENERGY FIELD

The door to this area is closed and has draconic writing on it that warns "Danger. Do Not Enter."

A large, shimmering ruby red crystal about the height of a man floats in the center of the chamber some three ft. off the ground.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The ruby red crystal is the remnant of an energy field that once held a minor devil. It lost its primary function when the fiend escaped, but it still has enough energy to be dangerous should any person or object disturb its surface. The kobolds never touched it, knowing there was something dangerous about it.

The shimmering is actually a result of the slow ebbing of the field's energy. Disturbing the energy field's surface in a physical manner, be it through touch, using a pole, throwing a stone, etc., causes the protective field to collapse in on itself and release the remaining energy in a 15 ft. radius all around the ruby. This release causes 2d4 points of force damage to all within the radius. Those caught in the blast can attempt a DC 12 Reflex save to take only half damage. There is no way to disarm the energy field.

Encounter Condition: Drafty, Safe (if the PCs leave the ruby alone)

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the force damage to 4d4. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, reduce the force damage to 1d4 and the radius to 10 ft.

A49. THE LONG HALLWAY

All the doors leading in this hallway are open.

The length of this room extends beyond the edge of your light source. Here lies an orc corpse, there rests a dead kobold, and over there a flying octopus that has had three of its tentacles severed lies limp against the wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The key to controlling this Region lies in controlling this hallway, as it affords access to all the parts of the dungeon, and Orghar made it one of his key objectives when planning the orc assault. Although it was officially neutral, the kobolds realized the significance of this hallways as well and always kept a guard force nearby. Although numerically superior, the orcs had difficulty taking the hallway (due to the presence of the Boyikt, Borryn's brother and a kobold wizard). However, as with the battle in the kobold stronghold (Rooms A41 through A45), the sudden appearance of the extraplanar beasts ended the combat in a way neither side had anticipated.

Numerous humanoid and bestial dead lie in the hallway including orcs, kobolds, a couple of krenshar, fiendish stirges, fiendish darkmantles, and even some fiendish dire rats (exact numbers up to the DM). Otherwise, the hall is strangely empty.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Given the prominence of this place and the numerous paths for access, the DM should roll for Random Encounters while the PCs are in the Room. One roll when the PCs enter and another just before they leave is ideal, although there can certainly be more.

A52. SECRET THRONE ROOM

The door to this Room is open.

This large room has a simple throne carved from stone situated near the eastern end. Bits of chain and iron rings hammered into stone unleash a sense of dread. Otherwise there appears to be nothing of interest here.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: It is unclear who altered this Room and used it for evil, but slaves were tortured here for the viewing pleasure of whosoever sat upon the throne. Sharp-eyed PCs can pick out numerous large rust-red stains on the floor (Spot check, DC 16), the blood of those executed here. The large Room is otherwise empty.

The throne is without features save two red gems cut into the backrest. It has been hewn from a single piece of rock — just the right size for a dwarf or similar-sized creature. Unfortunately, it is also cursed due to the vile deeds that were perpetuated by its owner. Any living creature that touches the throne is subject to the curse and must succeed at a DC 14 Willpower saving throw. If the save fails, the cursed creature is afflicted with confusion, but does not notice the change. If the save is made, the PC is still cursed but aware that something strange has taken place.

The PC is not aware of the curse at first and acts outwardly normal. However, anytime from then on that the PC is in a stressful situation, such as combat or trying to perform a skill check quickly, the confusion surfaces.

1d20	Behavior
1–5	Attack nearest ally (for this purpose, a familiar counts as part of the subject's self).
6–7	Become nauseated (unable to attack, cast spells, concentrate on spells, or do anything else requiring attention. The only action such a creature can take is a single move action per turn).
8–13	Cower (take no actions, –2 penalty to Armor Class and loses his Dexterity bonus).
14–18	Flee away from the area at top possible speed.
19–20	Twitch uncontrollably (–2 penalty on attack rolls, saving throws, skill checks, and ability checks).

The confused condition passes the moment the stressful situation passes. Note that the curse can afflict any number of creatures and can be countered like the spell bestow curse. Otherwise, the curse last for a number of days equal to 30 minus the PC's Wisdom score at the time of the curse.

A53. WESTERN GALLERY

The southern door in the hallway is open. Read the following description once the PCs have moved down the hall and turned west.

A number of skeletons from a range of creatures hang on the walls spaced equally apart, iron spikes visible below their bones.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: After the demons broke out, hundreds of years ago, they took over portions of the dungeon in a mad orgy of violence. For a time, Room A53 served as "gallery of torture." During its time, the walls held the mounted corpses of a number of creatures from drow to duergar and every humanoid in between. Since then time has reduced the corpses to skeletons making it more difficult to identify the individual species of each.

The exact composition of the bodies is up to the DM; any humanoid up to Large size is available. Given the limited encounters that the PCs of levels 1 to 3 have had with humanoids, they probably can't identify the various creatures, although such things as an ogre, an orc, a dwarf, an elf, a halfling, etc. should be familiar.

Although once complete, a number of the skeletons are missing such things as a head, an arm, or a leg, having been taken by the humanoids as souvenirs.

A55. GUARD ROOM

The door to this Room is open.

This room appears empty.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room once served as living quarters for elite guards. What furniture it once had was removed by the orcs. Currently, three fiendish darkmantles (hp 6) are relaxing here. They hang from the ceiling like large stalactites and any PC that looks up at the ceiling should be able to notice (Spot check, DC 15) the creatures.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness

Tactics: The fiendish darkmantles attack the moment they notice the PCs. One of the beasts invokes its darkness ability to cloak the Room while the other two engage the closest PCs.

The fiendish darkmantles fight as long as the PCs are in the Room; they do not follow any fleeing PCs having satisfied their desire for blood for now. Any darkmantle that is reduced to one-half its hit points or fewer abandons its companions and attempts to flee out to the hallway and then east.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the number of fiendish darkmantles to four. To reduce the challenge of this encounter, reduce the number of fiendish darkmantles to two.

Darkness (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can cause darkness as the darkness spell (caster level 5th). It most often uses this ability just before attacking.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a fiendish darkmantle must hit a Large or smaller creature with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it attaches to the opponent's head and can constrict.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can make a normal melee attack to deal 1 extra point of damage against a good foe.

Blindsight (Ex): A fiendish darkmantle can "see" by emitting high-frequency sounds, inaudible to most other creatures, that allows it to ascertain objects and creatures within 90 ft. A silence spell negates this ability and effectively blinds the fiendish darkmantle.

Skills: A fiendish darkmantle has a +4 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks. These bonuses are lost if its blindsight is negated. The creature's variable coloration gives it a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks.

A57 THROUGH A77. EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

Both the reptilians and orcs tended to avoid the area covering Rooms A57 through A77 and the hallways in between. Almost destroyed in the heavy earthquakes that damaged the entire complex, the entire area is unstable. Chunks of the ceiling and dust lay everywhere, making it an easy place to hide in but a difficult place to maneuver through.

When the occasional tremor rumbles through this portion of the complex it causes more dust, dirt, and rocks to fall from the ceiling giving the entire area a sense of imminent annihilation; no creature willingly makes its home here.

That is not to say that there are not currently some residents. Extraplanar scavengers roam the area hoping to find an easy meal. A handful of reptilian refugees also hide in the area, hoping to escape notice.

The unstable and damaged condition of the area creates an interesting tactical situation for the PCs and any creatures that rely on land movement. The rubble that is strewn everywhere hampers movement throughout the entire area; each square moved costs double (although you can still take a 5-ft. step as part of a combat action). The rubble also prevents any land-based charges or running throughout the entire area. Finally, any land-based attempts to Move Silently suffer a -5 circumstance penalty due to the rock and grit underfoot.

Note: Major tremors in this Section have the potential to collapse parts of tunnels, sections of Rooms, block doors, etc. making it even more difficult to move through the area or even get out at all. If a door or passage is blocked by rocks it requires 1d20 minutes to clear the space for Medium creature to squeeze through.

A57. EMPTY ROOM

The door to this Room has been wedged partially open by the earthquake and requires a DC 18 Strength check to force completely open.

Rubble and dust covers the floor of this room anywhere from ankle-to knee-height.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is empty except for the rubble. However, the noise of the door being forced open is likely to be heard by the fiendish darkmantles in Room A58, keeping the PCs from being able to surprise the beasts.

Encounter Condition: Tremors 14

Tactics: Allow the fiendish darkmantles in Room A58 a Listen check at a +15 (includes all bonuses) opposed by the door opener's Move Silently check to see if they notice the PC's entry. If the darkmantles fail, the PCs still have a chance to surprise them.

A58. FIENDISH DARKMANTLES

The earthquake forced the door to this Room off its hinges. It lays on a pile of rubble just inside the doorway.

This rubble-strewn room appears to have an exit; you can make out the top half of a door in the wall across from this doorway.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is empty except for the rubble. A couple of large fiendish darkmantles are taking a break in the Room to hang out among the rocks. They are exceptionally difficult to distinguish in the dust and dirt and boulders. (Spot check, DC 25).

Encounter Condition: Poor Footing 4

Tactics: The fiendish darkmantles know that they are well camouflaged and wait until a PC is within 5 ft. of one of the pair to attack. Unless the PCs are very aware or lucky, the fiendish darkmantles surprise the PCs.

The fiendish darkmantle farthest away from the PCs cloaks the Room in darkness while the other attacks the PC. Note that because of their flying ability, the fiendish darkmantles are not hampered by the terrain and can move normally over the ground (20 ft.) by using a combination of tentacles and quick flaps of their skin; they can fly normally.

The darkmantles are aggressive and take the fight to the PCs, especially as long as the darkness remains. If things begin to take a turn for the worse, such as they are reduced to less than one-half their hit points, the darkmantles attempt a fighting retreat, the second one using darkness to cover their escape.

Due to the dusty conditions in the Room, the combination of darkmantle flight and PC movement stirs up dust making things even more difficult for the PCs (but not the fiendish darkmantles who use blindsight). Increase the missed chance due to concealment by 10% (to a total of 30%) after the first round of combat and for the duration.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter add a third fiendish darkmantle. To decrease the challenge do not increase the concealment (from dust) and assume that fiendish darkmantles' movement on the ground and air is as hampered as that of the PCs (two square cost for every square moved).

✶ Fiendish Darkmantle: CR 2; Small magical beast (extraplanar); HD 2d10+2; hp 13; Init +4; Spd 20 ft., fly 30 ft. (poor); AC 17, touch 11, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +1; Grp +0; Atk +5 melee (1d4+4, slam); Full Atk +5 melee (1d4+4, slam); SA Darkness, improved grab, constrict 1d4+4, smite good; SQ Blindsight 90 ft., resistance to cold and fire 5, spell resistance 6; AL NE; SV Fort +3, Ref +2, Will +0; Str 16, Dex 10, Con 13, Int 3, Wis 10, Cha 10.

Darkness (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can cause darkness as the darkness spell (caster level 5th). It most often uses this ability just before attacking.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a fiendish darkmantle must hit a Large or smaller creature with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it attaches to the opponent's head and can constrict.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can make a normal melee attack to deal 1 extra point of damage against a good foe.

Blindsight (Ex): A fiendish darkmantle can "see" by emitting high-frequency sounds, inaudible to most other creatures, that allows it to ascertain objects and creatures within 90 ft. A silence spell negates this ability and effectively blinds the fiendish darkmantle.

Skills: A fiendish darkmantle has a +4 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks. These bonuses are lost if its blindsight is negated. The creature's variable coloration gives it a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks.

A59. EMPTY ROOM

The earthquake caused the lintel above the door to collapse. As a result, the door requires a DC 20 Strength check to open, which causes the lintel to collapse; like a falling block trap.

Once the door is opened, read the following text.

This small room is filled with rubble and appears to have no other exit.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The Room itself is empty, but once inside provides a safe place for the PCs to rest.

Encounter Condition: Safe, Tremors 10

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Admire the rubble are a few soiled blankets and shards of metal. PCs succeeding at a DC 25 Search check find a torn bag filled with 16 gp and a chipped eye agate (55 gp).

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Search and Disable Device DCs of the falling block trap to 20 and increase the damage to 3d6. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Search and Disable Device DCs to 12 each and reduce the damage to 1d6.

A60 THROUGH A65. CELLS

All of these small cells are identical. The door of each is open and a single description for each is below.

Through the open door you see a small room, perhaps once a cell, perhaps only a closet, relatively clear of rubble.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Due to their narrow construction these former cells have managed to escape the damage suffered by the rest of this area. Although they were emptied out long ago, they are a handy place to be should a tremor occur as they provide complete protection from the debris, if not the dust. The doors to these cells, while open, are fully functional.

A67. STORAGE VAULT

The door to this Room is partially open. Rubble blocks the doorway except for a narrow 1-ft. wide opening.

Peering through the narrow juncture you can see a number of opened chests lined against one wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was once a storage vault for items of minor importance.

A Small creature or smaller can crawl through the opening without a problem. A creature of medium size must succeed at a DC 30 Escape Artist check to pass through the existing opening. A Large creature or larger cannot pass through.

Attempts to widen the opening require caution. A successful DC 15 Knowledge (architecture and engineering) or Profession (mining) check reveals that the entire thing will collapse unless properly shored up and also how to go about doing so. If these skills are not available then treat the threat of collapse as a falling block trap.

Widening the opening properly requires 1d6 hours. Attempts to widen the opening without the benefit of a successful check [Knowledge (architecture and engineering), Profession (mining), or a successful Search check followed by a successful Disable Device check] results in the entire thing collapsing and burying the entire doorway under rubble, causing the damage stated in the trap description above. Ironically, doing so creates an opening large enough for a Medium creature to crawl through near the top of the doorway. The vault itself is in good shape having been well designed. There are a total of 5 chests in the vault, all of them open.

Encounter Condition: [Tremors 18]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: These chests were emptied long ago, except for one that holds a small black silk bundle about 1 ft. long. This bundle contains five metal batons with a continual flame spell placed on the tip. Although not designed as a weapon, they can be used as such in an emergency (treat them as clubs).

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the attack bonus of the falling block trap to +8 and the damage to 3d6. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage to 1d6.

A68. COLLAPSED GUARD POST

The door to this Room is partially open. Rubble blocks the door and a DC 14 Strength check is required to push it open.

Although there has been a partial collapse of the ceiling, which has crushed much of the furniture that was once here, there are still three chairs in one piece.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was a guard post and the furniture was left behind. The chairs are unremarkable, although obviously made for creatures of a shorter build. Although it cannot be seen from the door, there is a weapon rack behind the door, in which sit four spears.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The spears, despite being dusty, are fit for use.

A69. BARRACKS

The door to this Room is open.

Large portions of the floor of this room are strewn with rubble. The numerous cracks in the walls do not suggest much safety. Rows of dark wooden bunk beds, most of them damaged by the rubble, give some clue as to what this area was used for.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: As former barracks this area was emptied of anything of interest when the previous occupants left. The bunk beds are clearly designed for humanoids.

Currently Boyikt (hp 9), the kobold wizard (and brother of the dead kobold leader Bortryn), four kobold warriors (hp 15, 9, 8, 8), and a krenshar (hp 12) occupy the Room. Having escaped the orc assault and the subsequent attacks by the extraplanar beasts now roaming the dungeon, the kobolds have sought refuge in this area in an attempt to find a way out of their present predicament.

Encounter Condition: Concealment. Cover

Tactics: The kobolds always have one of their number along with the krenshar stationed near the door keeping an eye, ear, and nose out on things. PCs using light sources are quickly spotted, and even those moving silently and in darkness cannot escape the krenshar's scent ability. The remaining kobolds have built an impromptu fort by piling stones in the southeast corner of the Room, Regioning off a 10 ft. by 10 ft. Region. This provides a +8 cover bonus to AC and Reflex saves, +10 circumstance bonus to Hide checks, and grants the kobolds improved evasion.

Once the krenshar and/or the kobold guard spot an enemy, the two retreat back to a small blind near the fort gaining a +4 cover bonus to AC and Reflex saves. The kobolds hope that danger passes them by and remain silent. If this does not work, they ambush their enemy with surprise.

While waiting to see what develops, Boyikt prepares magic missile while the remaining kobolds prepare their slings. The kobolds attack with their slings the moment the first PC steps through the door while Boyikt casts his magic missile. The krenshar holds its scare ability in readiness should the PC attempt to advance into the Room.

Once the opening shots have been fired, the combat can go any number of ways. If the PCs wish to shoot it out with distance weapons and spells, they can take advantage of the cover offered by the doorway, the rubble, and the beds. In general this provides a +4 cover bonus to AC and Reflex saves, although it is possible to gain a +8 cover bonus to AC, Reflex saves, and improved evasion by doing such things as turning a bunk bed on its side. If they choose to charge at the fort they find the going across the rubble-strewn floor slowed (the rubble prevents any land-based charges or running) while being subjected to Boyikt's area effect spells. The kobolds continue to fire their slings while the krenshar makes use of its scare ability; the physically smaller kobolds avoid physical combat whenever possible, only using their spears when the krenshar resorts to its natural weapons.

Boyikt holds his spells in reserve for critical moments. He picks off weakened PCs with ray of frost and acid splash, but holds his area of effect spells such as color spray and sleep until he can get maximum effect out of them. One particular combination is to trap creatures in a web and then, while the warriors use their slings, cast flaming sphere at the web.

The well-prepared kobolds are a strong challenge to the PCs and if combat can be avoided it should be. The kobolds are paranoid, afraid of everything that moves and for this reason they attack any non-kobolds that come into the area. However, that does not mean they are unwilling to negotiate. After all, their situation at present is less than comfortable given not only the monsters roaming the dungeon but also the instability of this area. If the PCs choose to negotiate, either before combat starts or even after, Boyikt listens.

Boyikt's attitude is Indifferent for the purpose of resolving any Diplomacy checks concerning a cooperative arrangement once hostilities cease. If Turag (Room A28) is with the PCs, impose a -10 circumstance penalty to the Diplomacy check. Although the exchange should be role-played rather than relying on dice. If the PCs manage to establish rapport with Boyikt then he demands an exchange of information.

Boyikt can relate his experiences concerning the battles with the orcs and the coming of the extraplanar beasts. More importantly, Boyikt believes the beasts are coming from the northeastern Region of the dungeon and he suspects that Longtail is behind the appearance of the creatures, although how precisely that came about is a mystery to him. He can tell the PCs about the secret door to Room A108. The kobolds discovered it while they were securing their area but were unable to open it (let the PCs come to the conclusion that it is a one-way door on their own as Boyikt only knows they could not get the door open).

Although he is free with information, Boyikt has no intention of joining with the PCs to face Longtail. He has a healthy dose of respect for the fiendish wererat sorcerer and has no intention of going to the place where he suspects all those beasts came from. If the PCs say that they are looking for a way out, Boyikt and the kobolds may become convenient allies of the PCs, but only if Turag is not with the party (Boyikt cannot be persuaded to change his mind on that point and, in fact, wants the orc dead before making any deals).

If the kobolds do accompany the PCs they insist on being treated as equals. Of course, Boyikt is smart enough to realize it if the PCs are really heading for a showdown with the wererat (heading east is a strong clue), he and the kobolds part ways from the PCs.

In combat, the kobolds' preferred tactics are to engage from a distance and gang up on opponents whenever possible; fighting alongside the PCs they prefer to let the PCs do the close-quarters fighting while they pepper the opponents with sling stones, rushing in to attack and finish off weakened foes.

Being trained in teamwork, the kobolds work closely with the PCs and coordinate their attacks with them. They help out the PCs to the best of their ability, although always with an eye to their own safety, and expect the same from the PCs. Boyikt is a decent tactician and is especially adept at using his spells to the best effect. However, he will always try to hold a spell or two in reserve (usually sleep and mirror image) just in case the alliance with the PCs goes sour. In a worst case scenario, he uses his scroll of secure shelter to escape the PCs for as long as possible.

Whenever the kobolds are on the move, one kobold warrior and the krenshar take the lead acting as scouts and they suggest the same if they are traveling with the PCs. Once the scouts have spotted something, they sneak back to the remaining kobolds and report the situation. The kobolds prefer to avoid combat when possible and sneak by opponents rather than face them. PCs that insist on fighting everything they see find the kobolds leaving them.

If facing combat, the kobolds set up an ambush in the most favorable location — one that restricts the movement possibilities of their foes while allowing the kobolds to concentrate their missile fire and using the krenshar's scare ability to prevent any enemy rushes at their positions. Because of the krenshar's good movement rate, they use the creature as bait to lure extraplanar beasts into a prepared ambush whenever possible.

Scare (Ex or Su): As a standard action, a krenshar can pull the skin back from its head, revealing the musculature and bony structures of its skull. This alone is usually sufficient to scare away foes (treat as a Bluff check with a +3 bonus).

Combining this scare ability with a loud screech produces an unsettling effect that works like a scare spell from a 3rd-level caster (Will DC 13 partial). A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same krenshar's scare ability for 24 hours. The shriek does not affect other krenshars. This is a supernatural, sonic mind-affecting fear effect. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Skills: Krenshars have a +4 racial bonus on Jump and Move Silently checks.

A70. QUARTERS

The door to this Room is open.

Like the other rooms in this area, rubble covers the floor and spills out into the hallway. A partially collapsed archway across from the door appears to give access to a further room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Rubble almost completely chokes this Room. Medium creatures and smaller can pick their way through, but must use a full-round action to move 5 ft. in any direction, including diagonally. Note that this is not a "5-ft." step and thus provokes attacks of opportunity.

Although this room is covered with dust and rubble like all the others, you can make out images on the walls.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The secret door to A75 is readily identifiable by a line of over a dozen iron spikes that have been driven into the space between the door and the doorsill. The wedged spikes increase the Strength check required to open this door to DC 37, making it all but impossible to do so especially from Room A75. Each spike is wedged in tight and requires a DC 23 Strength check to remove, although having the proper tools (such as a sledgehammer and a pry bar) grants a +8 circumstance bonus to the check.

A75. ASSISTANT QUARTERS

The doors in this Room are open.

The damage in this room seems to be somewhat less than in the others, although there is still a substantial amount of rubble on the floor. A number of skeletal, rust-red rodents scurry away from your light.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This was once a Room for several assistants. Sniffing through the rubble are several score fiendish rats. They are part of a fiendish rat swarm, the remaining members are in Room A76, that is evaluating this area as a likely nesting ground.

The standard secret door to Room A74 is very difficult to open (see Room A74 for details).

Encounter Condition: Fog 10

Tactics: The fiendish rat swarm (hp 16) is spread out over both Rooms as individual members search for their own hiding places in the rubble. The moment the PCs' presence is detected the fiendish rats in Room A75 run to Room A76. Three rounds later, a fiendish rat swarm flows out of Room A76 and attacks the PCs. Note that this process starts the moment the PCs are detected, either through a light source, or through the rodents' scent ability (30 ft. to detect presence, 5 ft. to pinpoint location). Once the fiendish rat swarm is formed, it pursues the PCs mercilessly, fighting until it is destroyed.

♣ Fiendish Rat Swarm: CR 3; Tiny magical beast (extraplanar, swarm); HD 4d8; hp 16; Init +2; Spd 15 ft., climb 15 ft.; AC 14; touch 14, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +3; Grp —; Atk (1d6 plus disease, swarm); Full Atk (1d6 plus disease, swarm); Space/Reach 10 ft./0 ft.; SA Disease, distraction, smite good; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., half damage from slashing and piercing, low-light vision, resistance to cold and fire 5, spell resistance 5, scent, swarm traits; AL NE; SV Fort +4, Ref +6, Will +2; Str 2, Dex 15, Con 10, Int 3, Wis 12, Cha 2.

Skills and Feats: Balance +10, Climb +10, Hide +14, Listen +6, Spot +7, Swim +10; Alertness, Weapon Finesse.

Swarm: A fiendish rat swarm seeks to surround and attack any prey it encounters. A fiendish rat swarm deals 1d6 points of damage to any creature whose space it occupies at the end of its move.

In order to attack, a single fiendish rat swarm moves into opponents' spaces, which provokes an attack of opportunity. It can occupy the same space as a creature of any size, since it crawls all over its prey.

but remains a creature with a 10-ft. space. Fiendish rat swarms never make attacks of opportunity, but they can provoke attacks of opportunity.

Unlike other creatures with a 10-ft. space, a fiendish rat swarm is shapable. It can occupy any four contiguous squares, and it can squeeze through any space large enough to contain one of its members.

Disease (Ex): Devil Chills—bite, Fortitude DC 12, incubation period 1d4 days, damage 1d4 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based. It requires three successful Fortitude saving throws in a row to recover from devil chills.

Distraction (Ex): Any living creature that begins its turn with a fiendish rat swarm in its square must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or be nauseated for 1 round. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish rat swarm can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (+2) against a good foe.

Skills: A fiendish rat swarm has a +4 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks, and a +8 racial bonus on Balance, Climb, and Swim checks. A fiendish rat swarm can always choose to take 10 on all Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened. A fiendish rat swarm uses its Dexterity modifier instead of its Strength modifier for Climb and Swim checks. A fiendish rat swarm has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

A76. ASSISTANT QUARTERS

The door to this Room is open.

This room also seems only slightly damaged. There are still two relatively intact beds and a small table to be seen.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room also housed assistants. It currently has several score fiendish rats roaming through it that, together with the fiendish rats in Room A75, form a complete fiendish rat swarm.

A shift in the wall has made the secret door to Room A77 easier to spot (Search check, DC 15), but also requires a more difficult DC 30 Strength check to open, as it has become wedged in with the wall. Forcing the door open also causes a small portion of the wall to collapse, a fact revealed on a successful DC 15 Knowledge (architecture and engineering) or Profession (mining) check. The wall is impossible to shore up with the tools the PCs have at hand. If these skills are not available then treat the threat of collapse as a collapsing wall trap.

♦ Collapsing Wall: CR 3; mechanical; touch trigger (forcing open secret door); no reset; Atk +12 melee (2d6, stones); multiple targets (all targets in two adjacent 5-ft. squares of the secret door on both sides); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20.

The beds, really just pallets with legs, are rubble-covered and one is cracked. The small table is intact.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: These rodents form a full-strength fiendish rat swarm with their brethren from Room A75. If the PCs somehow enter from Room A77 instead of Room A75, the fiendish rats in this Room rush to A75 and the fiendish rat swarm is formed in that Room within 3 rounds of the detection of the PCs (see Room A75 for more details).

A77. EXPERIMENT ROOM

The door to this Room is open.

This large room shows some signs of deterioration, but looks to be relatively intact. Skeletons of various sizes hang limply from a number of manacles are attached to the wall in various places. More skeletons like on the floor, their legs shackled via a chain to a large iron spike that has been driven into the center of the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was once used to study the effects of magic on anything and everything. The unfortunate would be shackled to the walls or shackled to the spike in the center of the floor and various spells would course through the victim's body. PCs that examine the walls or floor see a number of scorch marks as well as places where the floor is cracked or melted.

The levels of cruelty and evil mounted upon victims in this chamber have left their unfortunate mark here. Any intelligent creature that touches any of the manacles, chains, or the spike in the center of the floor must succeed at a DC 15 Willpower save or fall prey to the emotional remnants that still haunt this Room. Those who save see fleeting images of torture in their minds for one round, but otherwise nothing happens. Those who fail the saving throw are paralyzed (effective Dexterity and Strength scores of 0 and is helpless) for 2d4 rounds as the anguish of those who died in this Room floods through them. The entire experience is so powerful that it leaves the creatures shaken (–2 penalty on attack rolls, saving throws, skill checks, and ability checks) for 1 hour afterwards. Animals and beasts can sense the emotions in this Room and do not willingly enter it.

A shift in the wall has made the secret door to Room A77 easier to spot (Search check, DC 15), but also requires a more difficult DC 30 Strength check to open as it has become wedged in with the wall. Forcing the door open also causes a small portion of the wall to collapse, a fact revealed on a successful DC 15 Knowledge (architecture and engineering) or Profession (mining) check. The wall is impossible to shore up with the tools the PCs have at hand. If these skills are not available then treat the threat of collapse as a collapsing wall trap.

A78 THROUGH A99. THE WIDENING GYRE

The convoluted hallways and strange locations of Rooms A78 through A99 show the celestials dedication to traps within traps within traps. Building corridors where they were not needed, erecting secret doors to areas of no relevance, and planting traps to fill emptiness, they befuddled and confused the prisoners of this dungeon for centuries.

The lack of logic and straightforward access made this Section a prime location for the treasure hunting activities of the humanoids, who braved its twisting corridors and hungry traps in search of the gold promised to them by Longtail. After all, who would build something as convoluted and trap-ridden as this without having something to hide?

It was in this area that the tenuous alliance between the orcs and reptilians faltered as search teams stumbled upon other search teams and neither side could truly tell who had the rights to what Rooms. The situation was not helped by the fact that entire search teams from both sides were wiped out by traps, naturally leading each side to believe that the other had killed them.

Currently the area is home to large numbers of extraplanar beasts that are competing for the right to establish nests in the area. Orghar and a few orc survivors huddle in a small Room, the orc warleader's mind slowly disconnecting from reality. Finally the lizardfolk guides have found temporary shelter here in their search for the way home.

A78. STORAGE CHAMBER

Rotting barrels, moldy crates, and disintegrating sacks with mushrooms growing out of them lay all over this room. A hallway in the center of the opposite wall shows the way out.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There are dozens of small barrels, crates, and sacks piled up with no spirit of organization and most of them have been torn open (the barrels have their tops staved in, the crates boards torn away, and the sacks have been ripped open, some of their contents spilling onto the ground). The humanoids explored this area, but found nothing worth keeping and the hazards of the black mold too dangerous.

Although only the sacks are covered in black mold and mushrooms, the items are stacked so haphazardly that anyone trying to move a barrel or crate must succeed at a DC 15 Reflex save or release a cloud of spores from one of the sacks nearby. Directly attempting to move a sack causes the sack to disintegrate, spilling its contents on the floor and releasing the mold into the air.

If the PCs are bold enough to riffle through the contents anyway, they find that the barrels contain vinegar (still good), the crates contain various rusted mining tools (such as picks and shovels), and the contents of the sacks are now lost to the mold.

♣ Black Mold (CR 1): If disturbed, a patch of this mold bursts forth with a cloud of poisonous spores. All living creatures within 10 ft. of the mold must make a Fortitude save (DC 12) or take 1d4 points of temporary Constitution damage. Another fortitude save (DC 12) is required 1 minute later of those who failed the initial save to avoid taking an additional 1d4 points of temporary Constitution damage. The only way to destroy the mold is with fire or to let it dry out in a warm, dry climate (a process that takes 24 hours).

Encounter Condition: Smoke

Scaling: To increase the challenge of the encounter replace the black mold with yellow mold (see Room A84). To decrease the challenge of the encounter reduce the initial as well as secondary damage to 1 point of temporary Constitution damage each.

A79. STORAGE ROOM

The hallway to Room A78 is trapped with a scorching ray trap that triggers the moment a creature enters the hallway from Room A78.

Once the PCs have moved past the trap, read the following text.

More rotting barrels, moldy crates, and disintegrating sacks greet your eyes.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: If either Turag or Boyikt and his kobolds are with the PCs they can tell the PCs about the trap, having heard of it from other humanoids. Whether they choose to do so is up to them.

As with Room A78, there are dozens of small barrels, crates, and sacks piled up with no rhyme or reason and most of them have been opened (the barrels have their tops staved in, the crates boards torn away, and the sacks have been ripped open, some of their contents spilling onto the ground). The humanoids explored this area, but found nothing worth keeping and the hazards of the black mold too toxic.

AB0. FIENDISH STIRGE NEST

Note to DM. This is a very difficult encounter; even for a 3rd-level party. PCs are encouraged to back down if their numbers dwindle as a result of this fight.

Even before the PCs arrive at the doorway they hear the flapping and calling of the fiendish stirge swarm in this Room. The door to this Room is open and secured with a large iron spike that has been driven into the ground to prevent it from being closed. A DC 18 Strength check is required to pull out the spike.

Four extinguished and broken furnaces, one in each corner of the room, look out onto a floor littered with splintered wood. A large number of the flying bloodsuckers are hopping about the room. In the center of the room, a pale green aura fills an area about 6 inches across.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This area was once a workshop, destroyed years ago. Currently, a large swarm of fiendish stirges has gathered here to make its home among the broken benches and empty furnaces.

Tactics: There are a total of 22 fiendish stirges (hp 5) in this Room making all manner of noise as they hop about, fighting each other for the ideal nesting place amidst the rubble. Due to the cacophony, the fiendish stirges have little chance of succeeding at a Listen check (–10 circumstance penalty) to hear the PCs. Furthermore, their constant squabbling means that they are unlikely to Spot the PCs (–5 circumstance penalty). However, use of a light source gains their attention immediately.

The fiendish stirges here are hyper-aggressive as they fight for dominance amongst themselves. Although they may notice the PCs, the fiendish stirges are not interested in pursuing them outside of the Room so unless the PCs enter the Room, the fiendish stirges leave them alone. However, if the PCs enter the Room, the fiendish stirges attack. The easiest way to handle this is for the DM to divide the Room into quarters and assume that five or six fiendish stirges respond to the PCs whenever they enter one of the quarters while the remainder squabble amongst themselves.

The same method is also used for area effect spells cast by the PCs or their allies. Whether the spell does harm or not, an area effect spell gets a response from the fiendish stirges that are in the area. If a spell covers only one quadrant then only the five or six fiendish stirges within that quadrant respond. If it covers two quadrants, the 10 to 12 fiendish stirges in those quadrants respond. However, unless the spell covers the entire Room, even if cast in the center no more than 10 to 12 fiendish stirges should respond.

Removing the spike and closing the door traps the fiendish stirges in the Room; they can push the door open from the outside by combining efforts, but cannot pull it open from the inside.

No matter how many fiendish stirges attack, they seek out their own individual targets preferring not to share their meal with anyone; the DM should spread the fiendish stirges out among all the available targets as evenly as possible, doubling up only when necessary. Because they are defending their territory, these fiendish stirges fight to the death, pursuing fleeing PCs out of the Room but not out into the hallway.

Treasure: Resting on the floor, in the center of the Room, is a gold ring. It glows pale green and hums softly (if the PCs get near it). It is a ring of warmth, corrupted by the magic of the dungeon. It radiates a small degree of warmth at all times (whether or not its worn) and its presence here makes this Room hospitable. However, should a PC touch the ring, every stirge in the Room senses the disturbance and attacks.

The ring has no negative side effects, other than the glow which cannot be controlled.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, divide the Room in half instead of quarters (meaning 10 to 12 fiendish stirges respond to an invasion of territory or a spell cast into each half). To decrease the challenge of this encounter, have all the fiendish stirges busy digesting and able to drain only 2 points of Constitution instead of the usual 4.

♦ Fiendish Stirge: CR 1/2; Tiny magical beast (extraplanar); HD 1d10; hp 5; Init +4; Spd 10 ft., fly 40 ft. (average); AC 16, touch 16, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +1; Grp –11 (+1 when attached); Atk +7 melee (attach, touch); Full Atk +7 melee (attach, touch); Space/Reach 2–1/2 ft./0 ft.; SA Attach, blood drain, smite good; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., low-light vision, resistance to cold and fire 5, spell resistance 5; AL NE; SV Fort +2, Ref +6, Will +1; Str 3, Dex 19, Con 10, Int 3, Wis 12, Cha 6. Skills and Feats: Hide +14, Listen +4, Spot +4; Alertness, Weapon Finesse.

Attach (Ex): If a fiendish stirge hits with a touch attack, it uses its eight pincers to latch onto the opponent's body. An attached fiendish stirge is effectively grappling its prey. The fiendish stirge loses its Dexterity bonus to AC and has an AC of 12, but holds on with measured tenacity. Fiendish stirges have a +12 racial bonus on grapple checks (already figured into the Base Attack/Grapple entry above).

An attached fiendish stirge can be struck with a weapon or grappled itself. To remove an attached fiendish stirge through grappling, the opponent must achieve a pin against the fiendish stirge.

Blood Drain (Ex): A fiendish stirge drains blood, dealing 1d4 points of Constitution damage in any round when it begins its turn attached to a victim. Once it has dealt 4 points of Constitution damage, it detaches and flies off to digest the meal. If its victim dies before the fiendish stirge's appetite has been sated, the fiendish stirge detaches and seeks a new target.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish stirge can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (maximum of +20) against a good foe.

A81. ORC GUARDS

The door to this Room is open. Two orcs are on continuous duty in the doorway of this Room keeping an eye out on the hallway to the north and the secret door to the west. Both the secret door and the hallway door directly to the north of the doorway to A81 are closed. Read the following description when the PCs enter Room A81 proper.

This large room is empty except for the orcs that occupy it. Although they try to hide it, a number of them are obviously wounded.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Orghar personally led the attack on Room A49 intent on establishing orc control in that vital area. Meeting with surprisingly stiff kobold resistance, the orcs never noticed the emergence of the extraplanar beasts until it was too late. Forced to literally run for their lives, Orghar and his warriors managed to fight their way to these two Rooms incurring horrific losses along the way.

There are a total of nine orcs (hp 21, 14, 14, 13, 13, 12, 12, 11, 10) in this Room, all that remains of Orghar's clan, most of them still injured from the fighting. They take turns standing guard while they wait for Orghar to come to a decision and lead them out of this forsaken place.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Two orcs stand guard near the doorway at all times. One keeps an eye out on the secret door to the west, the other one the northern hallway door. Utterly spooked by the carnage that they witnessed, the moment either of those doors open, the orcs raise an alarm. Because it is unlikely that anything coming through either door can be aware of the orcs, they gain a surprise round.

Once the two guards see what it is that is coming, they take a 5-ft. step and retreat into the Room taking up positions next to the door, readying their surprise action to strike at anything that comes through the door.

It takes the other orcs a moment to react, so they do not act until the round subsequent to the surprise round. At that time a third orc (the 3rd level barbarian) moves to join the two guards. The three orcs leave the square in front of the doorway open and now occupy the other three squares. Although this does not provide them with flanking bonuses, it does subject anything moving into the Room to all three of their attacks. The remaining orcs stand behind the three, ready to step into the breach should one of their clansmen fall. Having nowhere left to go, and with Orghar's mind clearly slipping, they fight to the death to hold this Room, but do not pursue any fleeing creatures past the secret door or the northern hallway door.

The orcs are expecting any number of extraplanar beasts, so the appearance of the PCs is surprising. Since the orcs hold their position within the Room, there is no immediate conflict unless the PCs attack. If they do not, after a few rounds a curious orc sticks a face around the corner and see what is going on.

The PCs can attempt to parley at any time. If they do not start a parley, or attack the orc that sticks his face around the corner, a few moments later the senior orc asks the PCs what they want and parley begins.

Although the orc attitude is initially hostile, it is meant as respect for the extraplanar beasts; the orcs are actually indifferent toward the PCs (it remains that way even if Boyikt and his kobolds and/or Turag are with them). Their goal is to leave the dungeon as quickly as possible, returning back to whence they came, listening to any offers from the PCs. If Turag is with the PCs, he encourages them to make peace with the orcs, hoping to rejoin his brethren and betray the PCs.

If Boyikt is with the PCs, he encourages the PCs to attack along with his troops and finish the orcs off. If the PCs refuse, he baits the orcs, perhaps even casting a spell into the doorway, in an effort to start a fight. However, he does not engage the orcs while they have the tactical advantage. PCs can attempt to defuse the situation as they see fit, but the kobold wizard has a hostile attitude towards any suggestions of an alliance with the orcs. Feel free to assign positive modifiers to attempts at Diplomacy checks with the kobold wizard if the PCs have saved the life of Boyikt or his kobolds. There is no way to convince the kobold wizard to ally with the orcs then either the PCs give up this idea of an alliance with the orcs, or the kobolds leave. If the PCs are foolish enough to try to stop the kobolds, the kobolds fight.

No matter how the parley turns out, the orcs do not attack beyond their door and go no further than to allow the PCs to speak with Orghar (see Room A82).

Light Sensitivity (Ex): Orcs are dazzled in bright sunlight or within the radius of a daylight spell.

Rage (Ex): The Orc Berserker can fly into a rage once per day. In a rage, he temporarily gains a +4 bonus to Strength, a +4 bonus to Constitution, and a +2 morale bonus on Will saves, but he takes a -2 penalty to Armor Class. The increase in Constitution increases the barbarian's hit points by 2 points per level, but these hit points go away at the end of the rage when his Constitution score drops back to normal. The Orc Berserker's fit of rage lasts for 6 rounds. He may prematurely end his rage.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): The berserker can react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to do so. He retains his Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) even if he is caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker. However, he still loses his Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized.

Possessions: Masterwork studded leather armor, masterwork battleaxe.

A82. ORGHAR'S SOLITUDE

The door to this Room is open. Whether the PCs negotiate or fight their way past the orcs in Room A81 to get to this point, the text is the same.

A massively built orc sits cross-legged on the floor staring into space. In the corner of the room, safely out of his reach, sits a fine battleaxe. He does not notice your approach.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This is Orghar, head of the clan of orcs that followed Longtail to the dungeon. Having watched virtually all his clansmen die at the hands of the extraplanar beasts has caused his mind to drift. No longer interested in anything, he spends his time in this Room lost in private reverie. He is morose and expects to die at any moment.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs managed to defeat the orcs in Room A81, Orghar ignores the PCs until they go away or they kill him; he will not defend himself. The clan head welcomes death as the price for his failures. If the PCs have come to parley, the situation is different.

Orghar's reputation within the clan is so great, none of his clansmen have attempted to replace him, even though he has led his clan to its demise and he is effectively mentally ill. They have that much respect for him.

If the PCs are brought before Orghar through having negotiated with the orcs in Room A81, they are introduced to the orc clanhead by the senior of the orcs. However, even the appearance of hated foes in his midst will not stir the orc from his thoughts.

Unless the PCs take charge, this is as far as it goes. Orghar does not make a move nor does he respond to any queries put before him. He is currently living in another reality and the other orcs are lost without their leader.

The only thing that will snap the orc clan head out of his fantasies is if an alliance is discussed between the PCs and the orcs. This is a great possibility as, although they still fear Orghar, the remaining orcs are aware of the hopelessness of their situation. They would have done something about it now except that few are willing to make a decision without Orghar's blessing.

If the PCs suggest an alliance, Orghar suddenly comes to life. Seeing this as a challenge to his power, the clan head dismisses all talk of an alliance and orders his warriors to attack the PCs. How this situation evolves depends on how the PCs have acted and how the orcs perceive them.

If the PCs are obviously injured, or in some way acted inexperienced or unsure, the orcs do as Orghar commands and a full-scale battle to the death begins. If the PCs have the orcs' respect, the warriors stand there unsure of themselves. This vacillation angers Orghar and he rushes to get his battleaxe. Calling up his rage, he attacks the PCs while his warriors stand around and watch. Orghar has no intention of losing the leadership of the clan and fights to the death.

If the PCs kill Orghar, either in the all-out battle or if only he attacks, the remaining orcs propose an alliance with the PCs (calling for parley if need be). The strongest of the remaining orcs suggests that they work together to get out of this dungeon.

While the orcs will work with the PCs and even battle alongside them, they do so with plans of eventually betraying their allies. As long as they fight the beasts, the orcs are highly motivated to do their part, but when facing anything else they mind their own safety and let the PCs carry the brunt of the fighting.

If the PCs reject the idea of an alliance and leave, the orcs let them go without another word. With Orghar dead, they fight amongst themselves to see who leads the clan.

EL: 5 (Orghar only) or 8 (all the orcs)

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have all the orcs be healthy. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, reduce all the orcs to one-half the listed hit points (see Room A81 above).

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Orghar can no longer be flanked. This defense denies a rogue the ability to sneak attack the barbarian by flanking him, unless the attacker has at least four more rogue levels than the target has barbarian levels.

Light Sensitivity (Ex): Orcs are dazzled in bright sunlight or within the radius of a daylight spell.

Rage (Ex): Orghar can fly into a rage twice per day. In a rage, he temporarily gains a +4 bonus to Strength, a +4 bonus to Constitution, and a +2 morale bonus on Will saves, but he takes a –2 penalty to Armor Class. The increase in Constitution increases the barbarian's hit points by 2 points per level, but these hit points go away at the end of the rage when his Constitution score drops back to normal. A83. FIREBALL TRAP

The door to this chamber is closed. The door in the northern hallway is open and trapped.

The hallway is trapped with a resetting fireball trap that is triggered the moment a Tiny or larger creature passes the turn. When the trap is triggered the explosion rolls through the hallway as well, spreading 5 ft. in both directions from the northern door to this hallway (the center square and one square to each side).

Read the following text when the PCs get ready to enter the northern hallway.

The smell of burnt flesh and leather hangs heavy in the air. Five corpses, burned beyond recognition, lie in the corridor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These burned bodies are orcs, a fact that can be ascertained by judging the size of the bodies. The orcs were a search team sent to explore this hallway and perished for their troubles. Although a reptilian search team also approached the hallway, the sight of the dead orcs made them wise to the danger. If Turag and/or Boyikt and his kobolds are with the party they refuse to enter this area until the party has proven that it is safe (and even then they would probably prefer to stand watch in the hall).

The door to Room A38 is closed, but can be opened as normal and is not trapped. Once the door is opened they find that the Room is empty.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat, Smoke

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this trap, do not allow Reflex saving throws for those in the hallway (there is nowhere to dodge to). To decrease the challenge of this trap, make it a burning hands trap that shoots from the western wall (just at the turn) and burns to the doorway causing 4d4 points of damage (DC 11 Reflex save, half damage).

A84. YELLOW MOLD TRAP

The door to this Room is open.

A simple metal box sits atop a plain stone pedestal in the center of this room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The box is laced with cultivated yellow mold that bursts in a 10-ft. cloud when the box top is lifted. All those caught in the cloud of spores must succeed at two DC 15 Fortitude saving throws. Failing the first one causes 1d6 temporary points of Constitution damage. Failing the second causes 2d6 points of temporary Constitution damage. Note that even if a PC succeeds at the first check he or she is still required to make the second save.

◆ Box of Yellow Mold: CR 2; mechanical; touch trigger (opening the box); automatic reset; 10-ft. cloud of poisonous spores (1d6 points of temporary Constitution damage, 2d6 points of temporary Constitution damage one minute later); DC 15 Fortitude save negates (even creatures that make initial save must make second save); Search DC 22; Disable Device DC 16.

The lid of this box is weighted so it always drops back down to close. The trap actually managed to kill a number of humanoids, although a number also survived its attack. If either Turag and/or Boyikt and his kobolds are with the party then either one of them can warn the PCs about the box, having heard about it from a survivor. Whether they choose to do so, especially Turag, is another story.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: This trap's difficulty should not be increased. To decrease the challenge of this trap change the yellow mold to black mold.

A95. SLEEP TRAP

The doors to this Room are open.

A single raised column, five feet high, rests in the center of the room. A clear glass sphere, embedded in the stone, sits atop the column, as soft light cascades over its surface. Resting on the glass sphere and balancing on its tip is an ivory tusk, about nine inches long, and carved with faint, archaic runes. The tusk is shaped as a weapon, complete with pommel.

Two blackened octopi lie on the floor, tentacles splayed.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: There are actually three large fiendish darkmantles (hp 13) in the Room: two on the ground, and one clinging to the ceiling 30 ft. up. It is difficult to see (Spot check, DC 25) unless the PCs look up (+10 circumstance bonus to the Spot check). While exploring, the trio triggered a trap centered on the column. The two fiendish darkmantles on the ground fell victim to a flare and sleep trap that is triggered when anyone touches the tusk [dagger of venom]. The flare fills the Room with a bright flash, blinding everyone, while the sleep trap only affects the PC touching the stone. Whether the PCs successfully save against these trap effects or not, the flare negates the use of darkvision and low-light vision for 1 minute.

◆ Flare Trap: CR 1; magic device; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (flare, 5th-level wizard, all within 20 ft. are dazzled for 1 minute, DC 10 Fort save negates); Search DC 26; Disable Device DC 26.

◆ Sleep Trap: CR 2; magic device; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (sleep, 5th-level wizard, up to 4 HD of creatures fall magically asleep for 5 minutes, DC 11 Will save negates); Search DC 26; Disable Device DC 26.

If Turag and/or Boyikt are with the PCs then either can mention the trap as various search teams encountered it before. Whether they choose to do so is another story.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Concealment

Tactics: Having avoided the sleep trap, the third fiendish darkmantle ponders what to do when the PCs arrive. Should they trigger the trap, it must save again against the flare trap, but does not lose its darkvision. If the PCs do not Spot it, allow it a 20 on its Initiative check to invoke darkness. Although it's intelligent enough to wake the other darkmantles, it does not care enough to bother.

The sleeping fiendish darkmantles awaken in 2d4 rounds. While normal noise does not rouse them, any movement within 5 ft. allows them a DC 25 Listen check and movement into a square where one lies awakens them 50% of the time. Stepping on one awakens it immediately; however, prodding it does not. Once awake, the fiendish darkmantles require a standard action to get their bearings, and then enter combat.

Although aggressive, these fiendish darkmantles do not fight to the death and being reduced to 50% or fewer starting hit points is enough to make any single darkmantle flee. Fleeing darkmantles invoke darkness to aid their escape. If healthy, they pursue fleeing PCs.

Treasure: The dagger of venom on the pedestal radiates Faint necromancy and is evil.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add darkness to the trap that triggers one round after flare. In addition, neither Turag or Boyikt have seen this trap before. To decrease the challenge, remove one fiendish darkmantle.

◆ Fiendish Darkmantle: CR 2; Small magical beast (extraplanar); HD 2d10+2; hp 13; Init +4; Spd 20 ft., fly 30 ft. (poor); AC 17, touch 11, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +1; Grp +0; Atk +5 melee (1d4+4, slam); Full Atk +5 melee (1d4+4, slam); SA Darkness, improved grab, constrict 1d4+4, smite good; SQ Blindsight 90 ft., resistance to cold and fire 5, spell resistance 6; AL NE; SV Fort +3, Ref +2, Will +0; Str 16, Dex 10, Con 13, Int 3, Wis 10, Cha 10.

Darkness (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can cause darkness as the darkness spell (caster level 5th). It most often uses this ability just before attacking.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a fiendish darkmantle must hit a Large or smaller creature with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it attaches to the opponent's head and can constrict.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can make a normal melee attack to deal 1 extra point of damage against a good foe.

Blindsight (Ex): A fiendish darkmantle can "see" by emitting high-frequency sounds, inaudible to most other creatures, that allows it to ascertain objects and creatures within 90 ft. A silence spell negates this ability and effectively blinds the fiendish darkmantle.

Skills: A fiendish darkmantle has a +4 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks. These bonuses are lost if its blindsight is negated. The creature's variable coloration gives it a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks.

A96. REFUSE ROOM

A bubbling mass of garbage covers most the floor area in this room. Here and there the handle of a broken tool or a part of a piece of furniture peeks out from the morass. The smell is unbelievably bad.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This place was a refuse heap and except for a 15-ft. by 10-ft. area in front of the hallway is filled knee high with garbage. The bubbling of the garbage is caused by a three swarms of fiendish rats (hp 14, 13, 12) moving beneath the filth.

The smell is bad enough to require a DC 13 Fortitude save when a PC enters the Room. Failure indicates that the PC is sickened (-2 penalty to attack and weapon damage rolls, saving throws, and ability checks) while within the confines of this Room (the sickened condition lasts 1d4 rounds after exiting the Room).

Any PC spending more than a single round in the Room is also subject to catching an airborne variant of filth fever.

◆ Filth Fever—Injury, Fortitude DC 12, incubation period 1d3 days, damage 1d3 Dex, 1d3 Con

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The fiendish rat swarms are busy rooting through the garbage and have a tough time noticing the PCs (-5 to Listen and Spot checks), especially since the strong garbage smell completely masks the PCs' odor from the rodents' scent ability. Of course once the PCs are noticed, either by the time one of them steps into the Room or the moment light touches the garbage, a general squeaking of alarm will be sent through the Room and the waves rush out to confront the PCs.

The fiendish rat swarms have decided that this huge garbage pile is the ideal place to begin nesting and vigorously defend it, chasing PCs all the way to the secret door in the western wall or to the doors in the southern hallway.

As usual, the waves flow over the PCs, seeking to cover as many PCs as possible in their 10-ft. by 10-ft. area. Note that only one fiendish rat swarm may cause damage to a given PC even if he or she is within the space occupied by two waves; there simply isn't enough space for more mouths to bite.

In addition to the smell and the disease, the garbage signals an additional danger. Over the years it has been outgassing and, given the tepid nature of the air in the dungeon, this gas has been building up. The churning of the fiendish rat swarms has released this gas and it represents a great hazard at this point. Any open flame (such as a torch or spell such as burning hands) that enters the area of the garbage (not the 15-ft. by 10-ft. open space) ignites the gas. This creates a 3d6 fireball that covers the entire Room plus the first 10 ft. of the hallway (Reflex save, DC 18 for half damage).

PCs without the scent ability have trouble distinguishing the smell of gas from the smell of the garbage unless they succeed at a DC 20 Knowledge (nature) check or a DC 17 Wisdom check. Any creature with the scent ability can figure out that gas is present. Note that just because a PC notices the gas does not mean that the fire hazard becomes evident.

Treasure: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter add a fourth fiendish rat swarm and/or increase the damage done by firing the gas to 4d6. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, reduce the number of fiendish rat swarms to two and/or decrease the damage done by the exploding gas to 2d6.

✦ Fiendish Rat Swarm: CR 3; Tiny magical beast (extraplanar, swarm); HD 4d8; hp 14, 13, 12; Init +2; Spd 15 ft., climb 15 ft.; AC 14; touch 14, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +3; Grp —; Atk (1d6 plus disease, swarm); Full Atk (1d6 plus disease, swarm); Space/Reach 10 ft./0 ft.; SA Disease, distraction, smite good; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., half damage from slashing and piercing, low-light vision, resistance to cold and fire 5, spell resistance 5, scent, swarm traits; AL NE; SV Fort +4, Ref +6, Will +2; Str 2, Dex 15, Con 10, Int 3, Wis 12, Cha 2.

Skills and Feats: Balance +10, Climb +10, Hide +14, Listen +6, Spot +7, Swim +10; Alertness, Weapon Finesse.

Swarm: A fiendish rat swarm seeks to surround and attack any prey it encounters. A fiendish rat swarm deals 1d6 points of damage to any creature whose space it occupies at the end of its move.

In order to attack, a single fiendish rat swarm moves into opponents' spaces, which provokes an attack of opportunity. It can occupy the same space as a creature of any size, since it crawls all over its prey, but remains a creature with a 10-ft. space. Fiendish rat swarms never make attacks of opportunity, but they can provoke attacks of opportunity.

Unlike other creatures with a 10-ft. space, a fiendish rat swarm is shapable. It can occupy any four contiguous squares, and it can squeeze through any space large enough to contain one of its members.

Disease (Ex): Devil Chills—bite. Fortitude DC 12, incubation period 1d4 days, damage 1d4 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based. It requires three successful Fortitude saving throws in a row to recover from devil chills.

Distraction (Ex): Any living creature that begins its turn with a fiendish rat swarm in its square must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or be nauseated for 1 round. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish rat swarm can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (+2) against a good foe.

Skills: A fiendish rat swarm has a +4 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks, and a +8 racial bonus on Balance, Climb, and Swim checks. A fiendish rat swarm can always choose to take 10 on all Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened. A fiendish rat swarm uses its Dexterity modifier instead of its Strength modifier for Climb and Swim checks. A fiendish rat swarm has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

A87. ARMS COLLECTION

The door to this Room is trapped.

The door is actually trapped with two traps. The first trap is a scything blade trap. Pushing the door open releases the blade, which is located on the interior wall next to the doorframe so that it swings down and cuts the hand of anyone pushing open the door. A hidden bolt near the top of the door can be slid into place to block the blade from falling. A counterweight closes the door and resets the trap the moment the blade has finished its path of travel.

✦ Scything Blade Trap: CR 1; mechanical; touch trigger (opening door); automatic reset (counterweighted door); hidden bolt bypass (Search DC 15); Atk +8 melee (1d8/x3); Search DC 21; Disable Device DC 20.

The second trap is a lightning bolt trap that triggers whenever a Tiny or larger creature crosses the threshold. The lightning bolt strikes down from the lintel to the floor and can affect only the creature within the doorframe at the time of the triggering.

Once the PCs open the door, read the following.

This large room is home to a number of weapons mounted on the wall. From polearms to swords, from axes to bows, the collection seems to be missing nothing. In addition to the weapons, a number of suits of armor also hang about the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Because of the out of the way location of this Room, any humanoid with the PCs are unable to tell the PCs about the exact nature of the traps, although they can share with them the fact that it is more than likely trapped.

Encounter Condition: Drafty

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The weapons themselves are actually well taken care of and can be put to use immediately. In addition, each weapon has a label attached to it (written in both dwarven and giant) giving the origin and name of the weapon.

The following arms and armors are readily available (each item appears only once).

✦ Greenblood Oil—Injury: Fortitude DC 13, initial damage 1 Con, secondary damage 1d2 Con.

Tailored for a Drow: chain shirt, light shield, rapier, hand crossbow, a vial (single dose) of drow poison hanging from a gold chain that in turn hangs from the chain shirt.

Tailored for a Dwarf: scalemail, heavy shield, waraxe, shortbow

Tailored for a Human: chainmail, medium shield, longsword, light mace

Tailored for a Kobold: leather, spear, sling

Tailored for an Orc: Studded leather armor, falchion, javelin

A88 THROUGH A93. THE LAIR

The rather large chambers from Room A88 to A93 were used as everything from living quarters to slave pens, to workshops. Although the humanoids freely explored these areas, they were considered too large by either side to defend properly and were generally left alone.

The presence of a community is still obvious. The accumulated debris of years of occupation litters the floor (Move Silently checks suffer a -4 circumstance penalty in these Rooms) and the sharp eye can make out nonsense graffiti.

Currently these Rooms are proving an attractive site to a large swarm of fiendish darkmantles; the flying beasts find the open spaces a pleasure to be in. Each member has selected an area and only leaves it to go hunting in the dungeon.

If any of the orcs from Room A81 are with the PCs, they are all too familiar with the area, having retreated through. They gladly and ferociously attack any fiendish darkmantles they encounter.

A88. LAIR ENTRANCE

The doors to this Room are open.

The floor of this large room is covered with debris and dust but otherwise appears empty. A second door opposite the one you entered appears to be the sole means of exit.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Five fiendish darkmantles (hp 6 each) currently occupy this Room, hanging from the ceiling and occasionally flying about the Room enjoying the space. A successful DC 25 Spot check (+10 circumstance bonus if looking directly at ceiling) reveals their unmistakable shapes out from the ceiling.

Once the PCs move further into the Room they notice a couple of orc corpses lying on the floor amidst the debris as well as a dead fiendish darkmantle.

Encounter Condition: Concealment

Tactics: The fiendish darkmantles are in an uneasy truce with each other and keep a wary eye out. The strongest two of the five hold the spaces near the doors while the weaker ones sit near the middle.

Because of this, they do not work as a team and a creature enters, each cloaks itself in darkness and seek to attack the prey, ganging up if there are fewer creatures than fiendish darkmantles.

Although aggressive, these fiendish darkmantles do not fight to the death, an individual retreating or fleeing if reduced to one half or fewer hit points. Retreating or fleeing fiendish darkmantles head for the southern door and to the hallway; they do not enter Room A89 for fear of being attacked in their wounded state by their brethren there.

Keep in mind that if the PCs attempt to close the doors in this Room, the fiendish darkmantles are quite capable of opening them again.

These darkmantles do not respond to the sounds of combat in either Room A89 and Room A90 and instead wait for prey to come to them.

Treasure: A DC 30 Search check reveals a rotted sack filled with 23 small polished gems, each worth about 5 to 10 gp each. They appear to be the treasure of a kobold or small creature who valued them very much. There is no sign of who or what actually owned them, however.

A89. ANCILLARY LAIR

The doors to this Room are open.

The floor of this large room is covered with debris. A door on the opposite wall appears to be the sole way out.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A total of seven fiendish darkmantles (hp 6 each) occupy this Room, hanging from the ceiling and occasionally flying about. A successful DC 20 Spot check (+10 circumstance modifier if looking directly up at the ceiling) reveals the presence of one or more.

A total of four orc corpses and three dead fiendish darkmantles indicate that the orcs retreated through this area.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Cover

Tactics: As with the fiendish darkmantles in Room A88, these seven are rivals and attack as individuals, using darkness on themselves and fighting without teamwork. They fight until reduced to one-half or fewer hit points, at which point they flee to Room A88, preferring their chances there than with their larger brethren in Room A90.

These darkmantles do not respond to the sounds of combat in Room A88 or Room A89 and instead wait for prey to come to them.

Treasure: Ambush (darkness)

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the fiendish darkmantles employ teamwork such as flanking maneuvers and ganging up on a powerful individual. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, remove two or three fiendish darkmantles (they are out hunting).

Darkness (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can cause darkness as the darkness spell (caster level 5th). It most often uses this ability just before attacking.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a fiendish darkmantle must hit a Large or smaller creature with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it attaches to the opponent's head and can constrict.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (maximum of +20) against a good foe.

Blindsight (Ex): A fiendish darkmantle can "see" by emitting high-frequency sounds, inaudible to most other creatures, that allows it to ascertain objects and creatures within 90 ft. A silence spell negates this ability and effectively blinds the fiendish darkmantle.

Skills: A fiendish darkmantle has a +4 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks. These bonuses are lost if its blindsight is negated. The creature's variable coloration gives it a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks.

A90. LARGER HORRORS

The doors to this Room are open.

As with the previous rooms, the floor is covered with debris, all of it smashed beyond recognition. A door directly across from the one you entered appears to be the sole way out.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room serves as a home to five larger fiendish darkmantles (hp 13 each) that alternate between sitting on the ceiling and flying about. A successful DC 20 Spot check (+10 circumstance modifier if looking directly up at the ceiling) reveals the presence of one or more. Because they are larger, they have no trouble moving through Rooms A89 and A88 to hunt in the larger dungeon.

A total of six orc bodies and three fiendish darkmantles sprawl throughout the Room.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Being more mature, these five work as a team. Although they are still rivals, they are intelligent enough to know that teamwork pays and it is in fact this teamwork that allows them to fend off territorial pressure from their even larger cousins in Room A91.

Once the presence of the PCs is detected, the five attack en masse, cloaking themselves in darkness and descending from the ceiling. They swarm about the Room, maximizing the effectiveness of their darkness by trying to maintain as much distance as possible between each other.

As long as there are enough foes, no more than two attack any given target. This provides them with flanking bonuses and also ensures that they are not all in one area and can fall prey to magical area attacks. Once a fiendish darkmantle is grappling with an opponent, its partner flies on to another target, seeking a new partner if possible.

Any of these fiendish darkmantles retreats through Rooms A89 or A91 (whichever is closer) if it is reduced to one-half or fewer of its hit points. They also retreat when their darkness ends and they are outnumbered, preferring to join with their brethren in Room A91.

Unlike their smaller relations in Rooms A88 and A89, these fiendish darkmantles investigate the sounds of combat in Room A89 (–8 to Listen checks, –12 to Spot checks). They do not help out, but instead attempt to poach a kill from those weaker than them.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, allow the fiendish darkmantles to hear the sounds of combat in Room A89 and hide above the doorway, surprising the PCs when they come through. Skills: A fiendish darkmantle has a +4 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks. These bonuses are lost if its blindsight is negated. The creature's variable coloration gives it a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks.

A91. THE STRONG SURVIVE

All the doors to this Room are open.

This is one of the largest rooms you have been in. Although debris covers the floor, several areas of higher traffic are visible from the numerous doors that lead in and out of this room.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is the largest and most centrally located Room in this part of the dungeon and, accordingly, it holds the six of the strongest fiendish darkmantles (hp 20 each) in the entire dungeon.

In addition to nine orc bodies, six fiendish darkmantles, over a dozen fiendish rats, and a dozen fiendish stirges lie among the debris giving some indication of the hostility of these beasts.

Encounter Condition: Concealment

Tactics: These are the most experienced fiendish darkmantles and work well together as a team and have spaced themselves out accordingly. Two lie in wait at the doorway to the northern hall, two sit over the doorway to Room A49, and one each covers the doorways to the hall to Room A90.

This system makes them difficult to find (Spot check, DC 30; +10 circumstance bonus if looking at the ceiling) and usually allows them to gain surprise.

The sextet likes to work in teams, with one member of the team invoking darkness on itself while the other swoops in to attack the likely victim (usually gaining a flanking bonus). Once one of them is grappling the target, the other looks for another victim, calling out for a partner to help it attack.

A92. NO WHERE TO HIDE

The door to this Room is open.

The floor of this L-shaped room is covered with the usual debris, including bone, blood, and broken weapons.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This Room houses four fiendish darkmantles (hp 6 each). Due to the presence of their strong cousins in Room A91, these four are basically trapped. Thus, all four are injured and starving.

Encounter Condition: Fear 12

Tactics: Because they have suffered such abuse and bullying at the hands of the stronger ones, these four have little fighting spirit left. They cling to the ceiling in the eastern corner to make sure they have as much distance between themselves and their stronger brethren and fight weakly amongst themselves. A successful DC 20 Spot check (+10 circumstance bonus if looking at the ceiling) reveals their shapes.

Given their low morale, these four only attack a target they believe is weaker than one of them (anything Small or smaller is considered a potential target). They do not bother with larger prey or with prey that outnumber them. Even the appearance of a small creature does not elicit an immediate attack; they wait to see if something follows.

If the prey appears too powerful, they hide as well as they can, fleeing if attacked. If flight is not possible, they fight while looking for a chance to make an escape; if none presents itself then they fight to the death. If they initiate the attack, an individual flees the moment it suffers a wound, rushing out into Room A91 if it appears the only way it might have a chance to save itself.

Precisely because these four can only escape when their larger counterparts in Room A91 are busy, the sounds of battle (–10 to Listen checks for the fiendish darkmantles) attract their attention. They do not join the battle but use the opportunity to flee the area and make their home elsewhere.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, give each fiendish darkmantle 6 hit points and have them wait directly over the door lintel for any prey. To decrease the challenge, reduce each fiendish darkmantle to a single hit point.

Fiendish Darkmantle: CR 1; Small magical beast (extraplanar); HD 1d10+1; hp 6; Init +4; Spd 20 ft., fly 30 ft. (poor); AC 17, touch 11, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +1; Grp +0; Atk +5 melee (1d4+4, slam); Full Atk +5 melee (1d4+4, slam); SA Darkness, improved grab, constrict 1d4+4, smite good; SQ Blindsight 90 ft., resistance to cold and fire 5, spell resistance 6; AL NE; SV Fort +3, Ref +2, Will +0; Str 16, Dex 10, Con 13, Int 3, Wis 10, Cha 10.

Darkness (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can cause darkness as the darkness spell (caster level 5th). It most often uses this ability just before attacking.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a fiendish darkmantle must hit a Large or smaller creature with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it attaches to the opponent's head and can constrict.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish darkmantle can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (maximum of +20) against a good foe.

Blindsight (Ex): A fiendish darkmantle can "see" by emitting high-frequency sounds, inaudible to most other creatures, that allows it to ascertain objects and creatures within 90 ft. A silence spell negates this ability and effectively blinds the fiendish darkmantle.

Skills: A fiendish darkmantle has a +4 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks. These bonuses are lost if its blindsight is negated. The creature's variable coloration gives it a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks.

Assuming the potential prey comes through only one door, the fiendish darkmantles spread out to the other targets (to avoid area effect spells) and do not invoke darkness unless they need to.

If it is obvious that their prey is too strong (if they seriously wound, incapacitate, or kill one or more fiendish darkmantles with a single attack, or the fiendish darkmantles making initial contact are having a rough time grappling), all six flee, choosing whichever path seems most expedient.

Although the six investigate the noises of combat in other areas, it is unlikely given their location that they hear much. For instance, the hallway to Room A90 heavily mutes sounds from that area even to the fiendish darkmantles hanging above the doors near the hallway causing a –8 circumstance penalty to Listen checks.

A94. ISOLATED ROOM

The door to this Room is open. While the doorway is not trapped, the Room is.

This long room appears quite empty except for the lone chest at the far wall and single orc corpse lying next to it.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: While the door is perfectly safe, and the chest is too, the ceiling above the chest is not. The actual trap is a scorching ray trap that activates the moment a Tiny or larger creature approaches within 5 ft. of the chest.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of the trap add a second scorching ray. To decrease the challenge of the trap, change the scorching ray to a burning hands trap.

A95. EMPTY SLAVE PRISON

The door to this Room is open and the doorway is trapped with a hold person trap. The trap triggers the moment any Tiny or larger creature enters the doorway. The hold person effect only affects the creature in the door. The trap was designed to prevent any slaves from escaping without harming them.

A96. LIGHT AND LIZARDFOLK

The door to this Room is closed and warded with a fire trap. It was placed on the door by Slissth, the lizardfolk druid, and triggers the moment someone other than he or Kalhiss opens the door. The trap is not likely to kill anything, but rather is designed to alert the lizardfolk and give them time to prepare.

♣ Fire Trap: CR 3; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (fire trap, 3rd-level druid, 1d4+3 fire, DC 13 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 27; Disable Device DC 27.

Read the following text once the PCs open the door.

Something scrapes across the ground as you push open the door. To your surprise, you see light within this room, not the flickering light of a torch but a solid, steady light.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: The reason for the scraping noise is a couple of rocks that have been wedged against the door for precisely this purpose. The rocks slow the opening of the door (it takes one full round to open the door after the discharge of the fire trap), and they also provide a warning to the Room's occupants in case the fire trap is somehow bypassed.

The two lizardfolk are the guides that led Longtail's expedition to this dungeon and are resting while weighing their options. Although they had not wanted to enter, they were forced to when the fiendish wererat refused payment until he was assured that this was the place he sought. Once inside they were trapped like all the rest.

The duo initially kept to themselves, living on the fringe of the reptilian settlement as the other humanoids explored the place. When the conflict broke out between the reptilians and orcs, the lizardfolk sided with the reptilians out of necessity. However, they were of limited use given their reliance on light and were fortunate not to be killed. With the appearance of the beasts, the duo sought their escape from this Region as quickly as possible and recently made their way here.

Both lizardfolk wear continual flame pendants that are the lizardfolk's most vital possession; without them they would be unable to navigate their way through the dungeon. Other than the lizardfolk and their gear, the Room is empty.

Encounter Condition: Soft Cover

Tactics: Both Kalhiss and Slissth are sitting across from the doorway and, as soon as they hear sounds in the hall, they prepare themselves. The odds of hearing anything beyond the closed door are slim. (–8 circumstance modifier to the lizardfolk's Listen checks due to the door and distance) but they definitely hear the discharge of the fire trap.

If time permits, Kalhiss readies his bow to fire at the first creature that comes through the door while Slissth casts flaming sphere and rolls it toward the doorway. Slissth stops the flaming sphere in the doorway forcing any creature trying to move into the Room to get past it while Kalhiss fires arrows at any creature that tries. Slissth then invokes flame blade and moves to deal with any creatures that survive the flames and Kalhiss' arrows, leaving the flaming sphere in the doorway. Slissth's animal companion, a medium viper named T'lakiss, sits on Slissth's shoulders the entire time and defends the druid by biting any creature that engages in melee with the lizardfolk druid. Note that Slissth automatically invokes the flaming sphere and sends it to the door before he realizes what is coming through while Kalhiss must wait until he sees a target to fire at.

Once the lizardfolk recognize that it is the PCs and not some humanoids or obviously bestial denizen of the dungeon that opened the door, they hesitate a moment in their attacks. If the PCs attack, the lizardfolk defend themselves, to the death if need be. If the PCs also halt their actions and request a parley or otherwise stand down, the lizardfolk are willing to talk (Slissth keeps the flaming sphere in the doorway just in case).

The lizardfolk know that their chances of surviving in a dungeon environment are slim at best and the appearance of the PCs gives them greater hope. They are quite willing to forge an alliance, assuming that the PCs prove themselves trustworthy. You can use Diplomacy check based on the lizardfolk attitude of Indifferent if you don't want to role-play the exchange. Assign a -10 circumstance penalty to the Diplomacy check if there are other humanoids with the PCs, but even if the result of the check is Unfriendly, the lizardfolk still ally themselves with the PCs, although they cautiously keep their distance.

The lizardfolk are the most reliable allies the PCs can find in this area. They kept themselves out of the fray and thus have made no enemies among any of the humanoids. Furthermore, they prefer to judge their allies on what they do, not what they say or who they are, so that the more the PCs help the lizardfolk, the more they help the PCs. The lizardfolk are intelligent enough to realize it if the PCs are traveling with orcs or kobolds it is out of necessity and not because they share the same outlook on life. Thus it is quite possible that, if and when, the other humanoids turn on the PCs, the lizardfolk stand by them.

Because these two kept their distance from the other humanoids, they know little about the inner workings of the other humanoid groups. They can tell about the journey to the dungeon, but are unaware of the exact purpose that Longtail had in coming to the dungeon, although they both suspect that it was he who released the extraplanar beasts. They cannot pinpoint the wererat's location because they have not seen him, but Kalhiss knows that all the creatures have come from the northeast.

A100 THROUGH A104. THE CHAPEL

Rooms A100 to A104 contain the long-forgotten chapel as well as some ancillary Rooms. The chapel was abandoned ages ago, and because this area is effectively isolated, the humanoids never bothered with it.

Currently Longtail and Achsyxx are still in the chapel, the wererat a victim of his own ambitions. In addition, a fiendish owlbear is rampaging through the area completely out of control.

A100. FIENDISH OWLBEAR RAMPAGE

The door to this Room is open. Before the PCs get too close, they can hear the sounds of combat and bestial shrieks from the Room.

A huge feathered monstrosity with a raptor's head is uttering the horrid shrieks you heard down the hall as it rampages through the room. Fresh blood sticks to its reddish coat and one of the flying octopus creatures is clutched in one claw. At least half a dozen more of the flying octopi are dead on the floor while another, obviously heavily wounded, flies about the room in a panic.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is the latest creature that has stepped through the doorway opened by Longtail. Enraged almost beyond reason, the fiendish owlbear's rampage causes it to kill anything in its path. The darkmantles had the misfortune to be resting here when the fiendish owlbear (hp 52) barged in and killed them. Other than the creatures, this Room is empty.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The fiendish owlbear is enraptured by its bloodlust and is enjoying the destruction of the much weaker fiendish darkmantles, much as it enjoyed the killing of the humanoids in Rooms A101 and A102. It is momentarily distracted by its quest for the last remaining fiendish darkmantle and does not immediately notice the PCs (–5 to Listen and Spot checks and an additional –10 penalty to any Listen checks due to the noise of combat). If the PCs possess a light source, there is no penalty.

Once it has spotted the PCs, it attacks the nearest one, swatting with its claws, biting with its beak, and using its improved grab ability at every opportunity. Due to its damage reduction it has not been seriously hurt or challenged and thinks nothing of the insignificant creatures that come into its field of vision.

Despite its evident rage, however, the fiendish owlbear is not stupid. If an opponent manages to hurt it, either by exceeding the beast's damage reduction or through magic, the fiendish owlbear turns its attention solely toward that individual, without drawing attacks of opportunity. In any case, once hurt it focuses its efforts solely on those that have hurt it and ignores those that haven't. Furthermore, if reduced to one-half of its hit points or fewer, it attempts to escape, bull-rushing and otherwise fighting its way out of the Room and down the hall; it only fights to the death as a last resort.

The moment the fiendish owlbear is distracted, the remaining fiendish darkmantle flees as best it can.

A103. THE LONG-FORGOTTEN CHAPEL

The two doors in the southern wall are closed.

Large plain pillars that reach to the ceiling sit every ten ft. in this room. A swirling oblong vortex of black and red sits against the far wall, pulsing with eldritch energy. A handful of the flying octopi lie on the floor, obviously blasted by something.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is the chapel that Longtail sought. All adornments and decorations were removed when the chapel was abandoned and neglected by practitioners centuries ago. The dead fiendish darkmantles were killed by Longtail.

The swirling vortex is the gateway to an extradimensional space in which the beasts that now roam the dungeon were imprisoned by the dungeon's original architects. Considered a minor nuisance, the creatures that were imprisoned were left to their own devices and forgotten when this area of the dungeon fell into disuse. When the dimensional gateway was closed, the entire thing was closed with a dimensional lock in the shape of a griffon. In order to better guard the dimensional lock the builders made it invisible and placed several non-detection and protective spells about the lock. And so it remained undetected by all those who stumbled upon the chapel throughout the years, until the arrival of Longtail.

But it was not Longtail who originally rediscovered the lock's existence. Rather, as the spells binding and protecting the gateway began to weaken along with those warding the dungeon itself, the lock began to be noticed by a number of extraplanar powers, one of who took an interest in it. This power, an infernal creature of great might, long remembered the dungeon and its original purpose. Sensing the dungeon's weakness, but not wanting to reveal its own knowledge for fear that the holy powers that had come to ignore the dungeon might once again take an interest in it, the infernal power began to communicate with the familiar of a promising young sorcerer.

That familiar was Achsyyx. Easily swaying the little imp with promises of rank within the infernal hierarchy, it was not difficult for the imp to turn his master's mind to exploring the dungeon. And thus Longtail became the unknowing cat's paw of the infernal power, who subtly pulled the strings through Achsyyx.

And so Longtail made his journey to the dungeon and found the long-forgotten chapel. Forcing open the gateway, the wererat prepared to become the master of the beasts it contained. But it wasn't that easy. The beasts of the gateway had their own minds and would not be controlled, instead they burst through the gateway wreaking havoc on everything in sight.

Although the chapel appears empty when the PCs arrive, it is not. An invisible Achsyyx keeps an eye out on the gateway at all times and unless the PCs have some way to be invisible and silent, the imp notes the PCs' presence and empathically communicates this to Longtail.

▮ Gateway: The gateway itself is an opaque, swirling less-powerful but permanent version of the gate spell in that it is strictly a doorway that allows travel between the extradimensional space and cannot be used to call forth specific creatures. It is up to the DM whether the gateway allows travel in both directions (thus allowing the PCs to go into the gateway) or whether it only allows one-way travel (suggested).

Once opened, the gateway remains opened until closed. Since each group of PCs' abilities and resources are different, a number of ways to close the gateway are listed below.

- A successful DC 20 Concentration check by a divine or arcane spellcaster can be used to close the gateway. Each successful check reduces the gateway by one quarter (meaning that it takes four successful Concentration checks to fully close the gateway). This closure restricts the size of creatures that can come through the gateway. At its current fully open state, a creature of up to Large size can come through. Each reduction diminishes the size of creature that can come through by one size category, so that if the gate is ¼ closed, a Medium or smaller creature can come through. ½ closed allows a Small or smaller creature to come through. ¾ closed allows a Tiny or smaller creature to come through. Grant a synergy bonus of +2 if the creature attempting the Concentration check has Knowledge (arcana) of +5 or greater. This same process can also be used to reopen the gateway, setting up a potential duel of Concentration between Longtail and/or Achsyyx against the PCs.
- A successful casting of a targeted dispel magic (DC 18) closes the gateway completely.
- The passage of a creature of the Prime Material plane through the gateway forces it shut (but the creature is trapped within the extradimensional space).

The secret door is a one-way secret door that can be opened only by pushing it open into the hallway; the door cannot be pulled open from the hallway. Unlike standard secret doors, this door is hinged on one side and requires less effort to open via a DC 12 Strength check. When fully open, the door provides 3 ft. of space, enough for a Medium creature in armor to pass through. The doors at the southern end are closed.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Achsyyx is a coward at heart, but has been charged with keeping the gateway open and does so even if it costs its life. It prefers to have Longtail do its dirty work and lets the wererat sorcerer know the PCs are here and then continues watching, waiting to aid its master should he deal with the interlopers.

If the PCs have figured out how to close the gateway and begin doing so before Longtail arrives, Achsyyx interferes. Staying invisible then swooping in to use its stinger and then turning invisible again is its favorite tactic. If he deems it advantageous, he also uses suggestion to distract one of the PCs.

Once Longtail joins the battle (see Room A104), the imp keeps itself out of danger as much as possible and let its master do the work. It concentrates on keeping the gateway open rather than helping its master and, if given a choice between having the gateway remain open and its master die, it chooses the gateway every time.

Once the gateway is closed, it disappears from view. Whether it is permanently destroyed or just hiding invisibly once again is up to the DM.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have a beast or beasts of your choosing step through the gateway and battle the PCs. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, have the beast or beasts attack Longtail and/or Achsyyx.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 13, initial damage 1d4 Dex, secondary damage 2d4 Dex. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +2 racial bonus.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—detect good, detect magic, invisibility (self only); 1/day—suggestion (DC 15). Caster level 6th. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Once per year, Achsyx can use commune to ask one question (inside the dungeon his powers are severely limited). The ability otherwise works as the spell (caster level 12th).

Alternate Form (Su): An imp can assume other forms at will as a standard action. This ability functions as a polymorph spell cast on itself (caster level 12th), except that an imp does not regain hit points for changing form. Achsyx's forms are raven and rat.

Deliver Touch Spells (Su): If the Longtail and Achsyx are in contact at the time Longtail casts a touch spell, he can designate Achsyx as the "toucher." Achsyx can then deliver the touch spell just as Longtail could. As usual, if Longtail casts another spell before the touch is delivered, the touch spell dissipates.

Empathic Link (Su): Longtail has an empathic link with Achsyx out to a distance of up to 1 mile. The master cannot see through the familiar's eyes, but they can communicate empathically. Because of the limited nature of the link, only general emotional content can be communicated.

Because of this empathic link, the master has the same connection to an item or place that his familiar does.

Improved Evasion (Ex): When subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, a familiar takes no damage if it makes a successful saving throw and half damage even if the saving throw fails.

Share Spells: At the Longtail's option, he may have any spell (but not any spell-like ability) he casts on himself also affect his familiar. The familiar must be within 5 feet at the time of casting to receive the benefit.

If the spell or effect has a duration other than instantaneous, it stops affecting the familiar if it moves farther than 5 feet away and will not affect the familiar again even if it returns to the master before the duration expires. Additionally, the master may cast a spell with a target of "You" on his familiar (as a touch range spell) instead of on himself.

A master and his familiar can share spells even if the spells normally do not affect creatures of the familiar's type (magical beast).

A104. LONGTAIL'S ROOM

The door to this Room is open.

A small bedroll, backpack, and a continual flame candleholder are the only furnishings in this otherwise cheerless room.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is Longtail's Room. The wererat spends most of his time here after almost being killed by some fiendish darkmantles that swarmed out of the gateway. Longtail is unhappy about the turn of events and searches for a way to control the beasts coming through the gate. So far, he has not found anything.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: There is virtually no way for Longtail to be surprised by the PCs' arrival in the chapel due to the presence of Achsyx and he moves to confront them as soon as he is properly prepared. The wererat is always in hybrid form.

The moment he knows of the PCs' arrival, Longtail dons his goggles of night and casts expeditious retreat, shield, and eagle's splendor (increasing the DC against his spells by 2) and then moves to either the left or right hall doorway depending on which one the PCs are furthest from.

Once he opens the door, Longtail casts sleep and then attempts to snipe at the remaining PCs using magic missile or further castings of sleep as much as possible, using his superior movement speed to evade closing PCs. If things get too tight, he can use fly and invisibility to buy himself some space.

Although Longtail opened the gateway, the disappointing results have left him less than eager to fight for its possession. As long as things are going his way he is happy to fight it out with the PCs, but if he is reduced to one-half or fewer hit points or obviously outgunned, he retreats out of the chapel by the fastest and safest means possible (expeditious retreat and invisibility are a good combination). He hides from the PCs within the dungeon, waiting for them to leave. He leaves Achsyx to make his own way. Only if escape is impossible or he is about to die does Longtail offer a truce, hoping to leave on his own terms. If even this prospect is dim then he will beg for surrender.

Treasure: Aside from the continual flame candleholder, Longtail has only his equipment.

EL: 7⁺

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, give Longtail fireball or lightning bolt instead of fly. In addition, add a fiendish rat swarm under his command. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, allow Longtail only four unused spell slots per level.

A105 THROUGH A113. LOST ROOMS

Rooms 105 through 113 are a series of Rooms that can only be reached from the main area by using one of three secret doors. Due to this fact, these Rooms escaped the attention of all its inhabitants and remain much as the original builder's left them.

Currently, the Rooms are empty, although several of them still bear magical remnants of their former occupants' flights to freedom. Smart PCs face little danger here as there are no live monsters and any potential pitfalls are quite obvious. The only random encounters that occur in this area are tremors unless the PCs leave a secret door open for the other creatures to come through.

A105. FORGOTTEN ROOM

The door to this Room is closed and trapped with a fireball trap that triggers the moment anyone tries to open the door. When the fireball detonates, it is centered on the door and spreads six squares in either direction (it is only five spaces to the northern hallway door so if that one is closed, add one more square to the east).

- Fireball Trap: CR 4; magic device; touch trigger (alarm); automatic reset; spell effect (fireball, 6th-level sorcerer, 6d6 fire, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

Read the following text once the door is opened.

A lone small skeleton sits on a low stool in front of a makeshift table. A crude cot, nothing more than a plank on four legs, sits nearby. Further in the room you see tables with beakers and a small furnace. A stack of sacks and barrels next to the furnace completes the furnishings. Despite the fact that this is probably the most furnished room you have seen thus far, the items take up very little space in this otherwise good-sized room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The furnace is functional but lacks fuel. The contents of the sacks have long since rotted to the point where they defy identification and there are, in fact, small gray mushrooms and black mold growing on top of the piles. Any PC foolish enough to disturb a sack with the black mold on it causes it to burst and release its mildly poisonous spores. Attempting to pick up any sack causes it to disintegrate and spill its contents all over the floor and also releases the spores. Since the sacks are stored on top of the barrels, it is extremely difficult to move or get at the barrels without disturbing the sacks. If the PCs do manage to open the barrels, they find that whatever was in the barrels has also spoiled beyond recognition (although it has no mold or mushrooms).

- Black Mold (CR 1): If disturbed, a patch of this mold bursts forth with a cloud of poisonous spores. All living creatures within 10 ft. of the mold must make a DC 12 Fortitude save or take 1d4 points of temporary Constitution damage. Another DC 12 Fortitude save is required 1 minute later of those who failed the initial save to avoid taking an additional 1d4 points of temporary Constitution damage. The only way to destroy the mold is with fire or to let it dry out in a warm, dry climate (a process that takes 24 hours).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The skeleton wears a cloak of resistance +1 and from its neck hangs an amulet of health +2. Wiley PCs should be cautious of an amulet of health on a dead body.

On the desk are three rolled-up minor scrolls all penned in different hands (more than enough for a low-level wizard who needs firepower before entering Region E or B). The spells are magic weapon, obscure object, and nondetection; protection from good, silence, and hold person; disguise self, phantom steed, and invisibility sphere.

In addition, there is an open scroll in front of the skeleton with the beginnings of some writing, the ink trailing off.

The alchemical equipment on the tables is complete enough to allow the creation of five items using the Craft (alchemy) feat. Furthermore, six potion vials sit in a holder — endure elements, invisibility, levitate, protection from law, shield, and spider climb.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a scything blade trap to the fireball trap. To decrease the challenge of the encounter, change the fireball trap to a scorching ray trap.

A106. THUNDER CELL

Drawn on the door to this Room is the Celestial rune for 'thunder.' A DC 30 Decipher Script check is required to translate the rune. The door to this Room is locked requiring a DC 25 Open Lock check or an arcane spellcaster to touch the door with a fire-based spell.

A blast of force air expels from the room as the door opens, pushing you to the ground. The room is completely empty, save for a small rune written on a bronze plate in the center of the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The rune on the floor is the same as the one on the door. If any lawful or good PC stands on the plate, a thunder erupts from every corner of the Room. It targets every PC in the Room, but it does not deal damage. Instead, it cleanses the PC of all poisons, ability score damage (but not drain), and heals 2d8+3 points of damage.

If a chaotic or evil PC stands on the plate, every PC suffers 2d8+3 sonic damage. This is pure arcane thunder that bypasses sonic resistance, but not spell resistance.

This effect works once per PC, ever.

Encounter Condition: Fear 14, Hallowed 2, Safe

Tactics: The Fear 14 Encounter Condition does not affect lawful good PCs.

A107. HOLDING PENS

Small cells, barely large enough to fit a person in comfortably, line the length of this room. Empty shackles hang from the wall, magically electrical energy crackling from them still.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was once used to hold smaller and less troublesome demons and devils. Usually, demons and devils were forced to face each other, knowing their ideological differences would drive the two mad and make escape attempts less likely. Powerful dimensional hold monster shackles also helped to keep the creatures in line. The shackles act as dimensional shackles with hold monster (DC 18) cast on them as well.

Encounter Condition: Haunted, Negative Energy, [Safe]

Tactics: If the PCs want to remove the shackles from the wall, they must first succeed at a DC 18 Fortitude save or be held per hold monster. Then they can succeed at a DC 30 Strength check. If both are successful, one pair of shackles is ripped from the wall. Spell resistance does not work against these shackles.

PCs that remain too long in this Room begin to feel the unnerving energy of the demons who spent centuries here. Their aura has permeated the rock and made the Room unliveable. PCs wishing to rest here get no sleep, but avoid the rigors of the dungeon.

A108. COLD CELL

Drawn on the door to this Room is the Celestial rune for 'water.' A DC 30 Decipher Script check is required to translate the rune. The door to this Room is locked requiring a DC 25 Open Lock check or an arcane spellcaster to touch the door with a cold-based spell.

A blast of cold air expels from the room as the door opens. The floor, recessed, holds water about 4 or 5 feet deep. Ice has formed along the tops of the walls and mist hangs just over the lip of the water.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Beneath the water line is a bronze plate with a Celestial rune written on it. The rune on the floor is the same as the one on the door. If any lawful or good PC stands on the plate, a cone of ice erupts from the floor (for 1 full minute), encasing the PC in a solid block of ice, but not dealing damage. Instead, it cleanses the PC of all poisons, ability score damage (but not drain), and heals 2d8+3 points of damage.

In addition, if the PC is lawful good he gains cold resistance 5, permanently.

If a chaotic or evil PC stands on the plate, he suffers 2d8+3 cold damage. This is pure arcane ice that bypasses cold resistance, but not spell resistance.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Cold, Flooded

Tactics: If the PCs go into the water, increase the DC of their Fortitude saves by +5.

Treasure: If the PCs search the water, allow a DC 25 Search check to find pipes of sounding that have become waterlogged. A single casting of make whole or three castings of mending restore the pipes.

A109. FOGGY ROOM

A thick ankle high gray fog covers the entire floor. Occasional bright flashes within the fog are followed by a crackling sound.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This fog is the result of magical energies released when the creature in this Room managed to escape some time ago. The fog covers the entire floor of the Room except for the first square to the west of the doorway. The fog is perfectly stationary and does not spill out into the hallway.

The bright flashes and crackling are the result of the electrical charge that the fog bears (if the DM wants to make it more obvious, have occasional arcs of electricity race across the top of the fog). Any creature moving through the fog takes 1d4 points of damage per round due to the electrical discharges (1d6 points of damage per round if wearing metal armor or otherwise carrying a lot of metal).

Encounter Condition: Fog 5, Poor Footing 2

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of the fog to 1d6 and 1d8. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the fog to 1d3 and 1d4.

A110. FLOATING SPHERES

Dozens of fist-sized spheres of swirling color float gently within the room as if moved by an unfelt breeze.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The spheres are actually the physical embodiment of a gateway akin to the one found in Room A103 formed over time as the wards on that gateway began to fail.

The moment a living creature enters the Room the colorful spheres begin to float toward the center of the Room where they combine with each other and make a larger sphere. It takes four rounds for the spheres to completely form together and create an open gateway with the same properties (including a means to shut it down) as the one in Room A103. On the fifth round something comes through (a fiendish owlbear is suggested, but it could be a number of fiendish darkmantles, fiendish stirges, fiendish dire rats or fiendish rat swarms; the decision is up to the DM).

The gateway requires the presence of a living creature to open completely and if the PCs leave the Room before the gateway can fully form, then the spheres simply burst apart to continue floating. Once opened, however, the gateway remains open until closed by the same method that can close the one in Room A103.

The formation of the gate can only be halted through the absence of a living creature; being composed of pure magic, the spheres' actions cannot otherwise be interfered with. The PCs have no physical means of capturing them (they float right through hands, nets, sacks, etc.) nor do magic weapons or spells affect them.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: Varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the gateway form regardless of whether the PCs remain in the Room or not; if the PCs leave before the gate is fully opened, it still opens and the beast or beasts emerge and begin hunting the PCs. To decrease the challenge of this encounter have the gateway disgorge only a single beast before the spheres of the gateway drift apart again.

A111. TWO PILLARS

Two segmented square pillars, one at either end, dominate this room. Large blades stick out from the spaces between the pillars and pieces of a skeleton lie near the closer one.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The skeleton looks as though it has been cut into little pieces and is beyond identification. The skeleton belongs to an unfortunate drow slave, although he managed to escape, who was killed by the trap in this Room, which then failed to reset.

Each column reaches to the ceiling and the segments are a foot apart and so, in turn, are the blades. Each side of the column has a full set of blades, so the only way past the blades is to squeeze between them or to try and clear a space by pushing the blades back into the spaces (the blades are not as sharp as they used to be and are a bit rusty, but gloves are recommended for this task).

Because of the mechanism of the trap all of the blades move together; it is impossible to push only one blade at a time back into the column. A DC 25 Strength check is required to give enough force on a single blade to rearm the entire mechanism and bring all the blades back into their column. For each additional blade that has force applied to it the Strength check is reduced by 5; up to four creatures can push on the blades at one time (one blade per column side). Each creature must succeed at the appropriate Strength check to do their part, so if four are pushing, each must succeed at a DC 10 Strength check for the blades to be reset. Once reset, the trap cannot be sprung again because its triggering mechanism (Search check, DC 20) is broken.

A blast of hot air expels from the room as the door opens. The room is completely empty, save for a small rune written on a bronze plate in the center of the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The rune on the floor is the same as the one on the door. If any lawful or good PC stands on the plate, a gout of fire erupts from the floor (for 1 full minute), but it does not burn. Instead, it cleanses the PC of all poisons, ability score damage (but not drain), and heals 2d8+3 points of damage.

In addition, if the PC is lawful good he gains fire resistance 5, permanently, so long as he remains on the plate for the entire minute that fire erupts.

If a chaotic or evil PC stands on the plate, he suffers 2d8+3 fire damage. This is pure arcane fire that bypasses fire resistance, but not spell resistance.

A114. PRISON VAULT

Dead orcs litter the floor of this doorless room. However, no stench exists and the bodies show no signs of decomposition. All of a sudden you realize you are having trouble breathing.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The only way to reach this Room is to step on the invisible dimension door in Room A113. The same can be done from A114, but that assumes that one understands the process.

The dimension door effect can transport any creature from Room A113 to Room A114 and vice-versa, provided that the creature once transported steps back out of the space before stepping back in. That is, the moment a creature steps onto the dimension door in the hallway they are transported to the bronze plate inside the vault. They cannot make use of the vault's dimension door effect until they step out of the dimension door space and then step back in.

This should not really provide a challenge for the PCs as long as they do what comes naturally: explore their surroundings. As long as they inspect the walls or otherwise move off the dimension door space, they are free to use it again. But until they do, they are trapped.

The inside of the vault is airtight, a fact that was not a problem for the extraplanar fiends it held, but is a problem for any PCs trapped in here. There is enough air for one Medium creature for 12 rounds. Reduce the air supply appropriately for every additional creature (by one-half if another Medium creature is there, by one-quarter if a Small creature is there, and so on). Although the PCs should have no trouble finding their way back to Room A113, it is possible that they could die.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Dead orcs litter the floor and if the PCs spend 3 rounds searching their bodies, they find three silver daggers with a DC 20 Search check.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, reduce the amount of air in the Room to 9 rounds. To decrease the challenge, allow the PCs to return to Room A113 1d3 rounds later if they don't step off the bronze plate.

The door to this Room is open.

The floor of this room is a mess. Dozens of broken crates and busted barrels, their contents spilled on the floor, mix with the moldy remnants of at least as many sacks to completely cover the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This vault served as a major storage area, but like almost everything else in this portion of the dungeon, was abandoned. The destruction was caused by orcs.

The plate is a permanent invisible dimension door that instantly transports anyone standing on it to Room A114. To his companions, the PC seems to have disappeared suddenly. The effect can be detected with detect magic which reveals an aura of moderate conjuration all about the floor.

REGION B. A GOBLIN EMPIRE?

Designed the unlike other prisons in this dungeon, Region B became known as "the laboratory" where celestials studied prisoners to research the nature of evil and understand how best to keep it in check. While many of the lawful good angels and archons frowned on this practice, the lawful neutral and chaotic good guardians were less reviled. In the end, the angels turned a blind eye to it, and allowed the "harmless" experiments continue.

Like many areas in the dungeon, this Region is a maze of rooms and hallways. It remained unchanged over the centuries and even following the chaos of the first earthquakes. Though inhabitants fled when wards were dispelled, some occupants remain bloodthirsty. And while the Region did not change as drastically as others had, it did not escape unscathed.

The air is dry, dusty and unmoving, not unlike being in a tomb. PCs walking through these claustrophobic hallways, hear strange echoes and moans everywhere, as drafts of hot and cold air cut through the corridors at irregular intervals. It is at once inhospitable and unnerving. Now home to three goblinoid races, as well as various wild beasts, the PCs have more to worry about than mere traps, spooky noises, and unexplainable visions.

The inhabitants of the Region have added to the celestials' magical traps with crude (but effective) traps of their own. Tripwire, scything blades, and pit traps make navigating this Region difficult for low-level PCs. All the while, clever goblinoids hunt the PCs at every turn. If there is one thing the Region is known for, it's this flavor of chaos.

Before the Region's newest visitors arrived, the dungeon contained a distorted hierarchy, where celestials guarded against potential escape from the demons inside and angels stood vigilant against all manner of evil confined within. After the earthquake, all that changed. When the majority of Rooms were emptied and the demons inside the remaining cells no longer had any hope of escape, the Region was abandoned. Many celestials lost their lives in the riots that erupted over the centuries that followed and the decision to seal Region N was made.

And while the angels looked away, creatures migrated to Region B, looking for a new home where order was as common as justice.

Goblinoids arrived en masse, digging through whatever hole they could find, following the derro and drow. However, the northernmost reaches of the dungeon had already been "claimed" and the creatures were quickly pushed south. As the years went by, more and more goblins arrived and migration to Region B became easier.

Once they arrived, camps formed quickly and the goblins skirmished with the bugbears and the bugbears warred with the hobgoblins. They returned to their way of life and fights over territory became as common as goblin tribe name changes.

Hundreds of years of warfare lead to the goblinoids trading control like currency. No single force ever stayed in power for more than a generation (and to goblinoids that's more like 8 years) and the condition of the Region is in a state of flux, no matter what the goblin king (Room B75) says.

For centuries the bugbears have fought a two front war against the goblins and hobgoblins, never allying with either, and always seeking to route the other races from the Region. Their strength and ferocity easily dominated the goblins in battle, and forced the hobgoblins into a remote corner of the region. They learned to use the traps built by the celestials to their own advantage, often luring the less intelligent goblins into them. Only the sheer numbers of goblins and the tactics employed by the hobgoblins prevented the bugbears from totally dominating the Region as the sole goblinoid race.

The hobgoblins, currently the smallest group of goblinoids in the dungeon, try in vain to assert control over the Region. Their tactics and strategies are sound, but with their numbers diminished; they are never able to claim more than a scant portion of the Region. Once they ruled the northeastern portion of the dungeon, but their rule was cut short by the earthquake. The damage done to their domain was staggering, and their ranks decimated as a result. They were forced back towards the center of the dungeon, where they have been trapped between the goblins and bugbears ever since.

The goblins, led by their king Sug'kt in recent years, are by far the most numerous race in the Region. Their sheer numbers have allowed them to hold their ground against the bugbears for centuries. Surprisingly they had few overt clashes with the hobgoblins. The bugbears were a large enough threat that the smaller contingent of hobgoblins often went unnoticed. Over the years a stalemate has emerged, and an uneasy status quo has evolved.

None of the races are content, however. Far from it.

Recently, a force like none before arrived to alter the landscape and bring new order to the Region. If you query the goblins, they tell you — a new god has arrived. A statue of his likeness lies to the east and is nothing less than awe-inspiring. The goblins at last have a champion to smite their oppressors.

So great is the power of this faith in Norendithas Stoneshaper the Quickthinking, Smiter of Foes, that the goblins splintered and even with the goblin king's power, he was unable to unite the fractured tribe. Forming their own brand of culture, the goblins now pay homage to their great god, who graces them with power and terror, promising to rain justice down upon their enemies.

Upon hearing news of this new deity the goblin king became enraged. As his kingdom became entranced with the concept of a goblin god, he sensed his power and influence slipping. A close advisor to the king suggested he embrace the new religion.

The king would have none of it.

With Sug'kt set against the new god, his advisors rose up and imprisoned him for heresy. The superstitious guards led the goblin king away and the charismatic advisor, known as Argliss, assumed the throne, proclaiming himself king and the direct messenger of their god. In one fell swoop, he reunited the troubled people and forged a new religion, one that could be used to create whatever laws he chose, through the will of their new god. And while no one noticed, the new king systematically changed the entire goblin culture in a few brief strokes, bending them in the direction his personal ideals.

The new goblin king was and still is a doppelganger. He wandered into this Region less than a decade ago and was amused by the goblins. While able to hide his form, his brilliant and useful mind made the doppelganger stand out. Soon he became an advisor to the king, and when the opportunity to become more presented itself, he seized it. Despite his brilliant, tactical, and plotting mind, he cannot see all things at once and the truth of this "deity" is not what it seems.

In truth, this deity was nothing more than a wayward hunter, turned to stone by a cockatrice (Room C16). Frightened by this unfamiliar creature, the goblin's eyes went wide and he raised his arms over his head in a meager attempt to protect himself. It was in this pose that he was most unfortunately petrified by the cockatrice. Goblins that followed, misinterpreting the stone goblin's fearful expression, concluded that a new and powerful goblin god was looking down on them; demanding their favor and devotion. How else could they explain this awkward statue?

While the majority of the goblins follow their new god and king, a sizeable minority have broken off and formed a resistance movement. They continued to follow their old religion and despise the new king for usurping the throne. They are not alone in their opposition to the new regime.

The bugbears found themselves on the receiving end of ferocious attacks and canny strategy soon after Argliss claimed the throne. The new goblin king has struck a pact with the hobgoblins that remain, and now they serve the goblin king as instructors, advisors, and enforcers. Using worgs and howlers as mounts, they've created a fast-attack unit like nothing the goblins could even conceive of. With their new allies and tactics and their new god, the goblins have driven back the bugbears, asserting their control over the majority of the Region. Now the goblins under Argliss fight a two front war for the first time in their history. The rebel goblins in the south and the bugbears in the north harass and chip away at Argliss' empire bit by bit, using every bit of cunning and trickery at their disposal. For all their bravado however, the zealous goblins under Argliss are firmly in control of the Region.

Dominated by an iron fist, the goblin empire will not (and cannot) be opposed.

WHAT ELSE

But the Region isn't all goblins and mad religions. In addition to the goblinoids, a number of other beasts call this Region home. Dire wolves, a few undead, and so many traps that the goblins cannot see straight.

More than a few ethereal marauders were trapped in this Region around the time of the earthquake. For the most part they make their home in the northeastern section of the dungeon.

Whether they were brought in by the celestials to curtail the activities of the goblinoids, or they are simply here due to the aftermath of the earthquake, this Region is home to a number of blink dogs. They can be found throughout the dungeon, except for in the domain of the goblin king. Here they are hunted as vermin but the goblins. The blink dogs are mainly found in the northern and northeastern sections of the dungeon.

The most unique creature in the dungeon is the goblin king's mount: a yeth hound. How it came to be trapped in this Region is unknown. Shortly after Argliss' rise to power it arrived and he immediately charged his hobgoblin taskmasters with capturing it and turning it into his personal mount.

While most of the traps were designed to contain and "hold" the inhabitants of the dungeon, some take the form of puzzles that the unwary must solve, lest they suffer at the celestials hands. And if that weren't enough, Argliss has ordered more traps be made to secure his "kingdom."

Lastly, somewhere in the darkness, a halfling adventurer searches for a powerful artifact that has slipped through the goblin king's grasp.

THE HALFLING

Found throughout the Region is a halfling adventurer named Bartleby. It is very likely the PCs will encounter him long before they find Room B28. If they do, this is the Random Encounter text.

BARTLEBY

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Along with the goblinoids and other creatures that inhabit this dungeon, there is a solitary halfling named Bartleby. While the halfling normally is found in Room B28, he is by no means stationary. The PCs have a chance of encountering him anywhere in the dungeon.

How the halfling entered the dungeon is unknown. He is in league with the goblin king, and searches for a mysterious artifact of allegedly great power (see sidebar The Artifact). While the goblins know of the halfling, they don't know much. Any attempt to glean information from a captured goblin reveals that a halfling is in the dungeon and that they assist him if he is attacked. Otherwise they are to leave him alone.

The halfling, Bartleby, is only concerned with his own well being and his quest for the artifact. He is in league with the goblin king solely to garner the protection of the goblins. Once he finds his artifact he will leave the dungeon, presumably by the way he entered.

Encounter Condition: Ambush

Tactics: Bartleby fights as long as he needs to in order to escape. He knows the dungeon very well, and is confident he can lose any attackers as long as he can flee. If the PCs capture him, Bartleby becomes belligerent, hurling insults and curses at the PCs. He does not answer any questions, and attempts to escape at the first possible opportunity.

Treasure: Aside from his possessions, Bartleby has no other treasure.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 2 rogue levels to Bartleby. To decrease the challenge, remove 2 rogue levels.

▲ Bartleby, Halfling Rog 5: CR 5; Small humanoid (halfling); HD 5d6+15; hp 33; Init +5; Spd 20 ft.; AC 18, touch 16, flat-footed 18; Base Atk +3; Grp -1; Atk +9 melee (1d4+1/18-20, rapier) or +9 ranged (1d4/x3, shortbow); Full Atk +9 melee (1d4+1/18-20, rapier) or +9 ranged (1d4/x3, shortbow); SA Sneak Attack +3d6; SQ Evasion, halfling traits, trapfinding, trap sense +1, uncanny dodge; AL NE; SV Fort +5, Ref +10, Will +4; Str 12, Dex 20, Con 17, Int 17, Wis 15, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Appraise +4, Balance +15, Bluff +6, Climb +5, Decipher Script +4, Disable Device +11, Escape Artist +6, Hide +17, Jump +13, Listen +10, Move Silently +15, Open Lock +10, Search +11, Spot +10, Tumble +15, Use Rope +6; Dodge, Weapon Finesse.

Evasion (Ex): If this rogue is exposed to any effect that normally allows him to attempt a Reflex saving throw for half damage, he takes no damage with a successful saving throw.

Trap Sense (Ex): This rogue has an intuitive sense that alerts him to danger from traps, granting a +1 bonus on Reflex saves and a +1 dodge bonus to AC against attacks from traps.

Trapfinding (Ex): This rogue can use the Search skill to locate traps when the task has a DC higher than 20. Finding a non-magical trap has a DC of at least 20, higher if it is well hidden. Finding a magic trap has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it. Rogues can use the Disable Device skill to disarm magic traps. Disabling a magic trap generally has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it. A rogue who beats a trap's DC by 10 or more with a Disable Device check can generally study a trap, figure out how it works, and bypass it (with his PCs) without disarming it.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): This rogue can react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to do so. He retains his Dexterity bonus to AC even when caught flat-footed.

Possessions: Masterwork leather armor, masterwork dagger, masterwork shortbow, 20 masterwork arrows, 50-ft. silk rope, 12 potions of cure light wounds, masterwork thieves tools, bag of holding.

THE KEY

During the chaos which resulted in the years following the second earthquake, the celestials sealed off this portion of the dungeon, locking all the doors leading north. None of the doors that lead to Region F can be opened or unlocked without the aid of a key found in Region C (Room C105 to be exact). The celestials entrusted the key to the lantern archon in Region C, who in turn hid it in a Room full of false keys.

When this fake key is used to unlock any of the doors leading north, a sonic blast trap is triggered. In addition to the damage caused to the PCs, the sound automatically alerts all creatures in adjacent Rooms.

◆ Greater Glyph of Warding (Blast) Trap: CR 7; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (greater glyph of warding [blast], 16th level cleric, 8d8 sonic, DC 21 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 31; Disable Device DC 31.

PCs using the real key are allowed passage to the Region E. Use the following encounter for every door that leads to Region E.

ROOM B0. LOCKED DOOR

This Encounter is not printed on the Map. Instead, anytime a PC attempts to leave the Region through doors to the north, read the following.

Before you stands a door. Bound in iron, and standing over 10 ft. tall it is unlike any doors you've ever seen. The key hole is a giant griffon head, its mouth agape.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This door is locked and cannot be opened by any means short of the key in Room C105. Any attempt to open it with either the wrong key, an Open Lock check, or knock triggers a sonic glyph of warding trap. PCs that attempt to disable the trap find that it resets itself in 1d6 minutes.

◆ Greater Glyph of Warding (Blast) Trap: CR 7; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (greater glyph of warding [blast], 16th level cleric, 8d8 sonic, DC 21 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 31; Disable Device DC 31.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Any attempt to discern the properties of the door results in Strong abjuration, a complex (almost unbeatable) lock, and a magical trap that triggers when the lock is tampered with. The DM is more than welcome to assign DCs to the checks necessary to learn this information, but it is crucial that they learn it nonetheless. Allow them to spend 30 minutes studying the door, and 'take 20' in order to learn this if necessary.

≡ Iron Door: hardness 20, hp 500, Break DC 100*

The PCs should also realize that a key does exist for it (as the tumblers are exact and meticulous) and using the wrong key triggers the trap as well.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: It is not recommended that you increase or decrease the difficulty of this encounter. PCs that persist with this lock are asking for trouble. DMs should not "kill" the PCs with this trap, but instead hint that it can't be bypassed at the moment.

B1 THROUGH B49.

THE ABANDONED HALLS OF THE CELESTIALS

Unlike the other Sections of the Region, this initial expanse is not lorded over by any one particular group. The earthquake damaged this section the least, and the celestials that survive in traps and puzzles make the goblinoids wary about settling here.

Blink dogs and dire wolves have taken advantage of the lack of goblinoids in the area, and many dens are scattered throughout these Rooms. A few packs of howlers prowl the area, though most howlers live in the Wild Caverns (Rooms B119 through B133).

The celestials used this Section to study and document evil. It was a quiet place for the more scholarly angels to note anything unusual about the evil and unholy beasts they guarded. A number of Rooms recorded how demons and devils reacted to traps and puzzles.

In general, the air is musty. As few things live here, the odors of life and death are not as prevalent. While the PCs may not have to worry about encountering a staggering number of monsters, they need to keep their wits sharper than their swords. There is a reason the goblinoids merely patrol this Section — the celestials' traps are daunting and difficult to overcome.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	A strange odor erupts from a vent in the stone work. Stagnant Air.
2	Ear piercing shrieks echo throughout the corridors as a pack of howlers moves through the Section (for 1d6 hours). The PCs must make Will saves each hour, but allow a +2 circumstance bonus because of the range and nature of the stone walls. It is unclear which direction the howls come from.
3–12	Nothing
13	Four blink dogs wander the halls, sniffing for goblins. They are Indifferent to the PCs unless attacked.
14	A bugbear sets up a tripwire. He may or may not notice the PCs. Impose a –2 circumstance penalty to his Listen and Spot checks for 2d8 rounds, at which point he finishes setting up the tripwire.
15	2d4 goblins (half of which ride worgs) patrol the Section, looking for anything to report back to their king. When the PCs are spotted, one rides off for help while the others fight defensively to stop the PCs from getting further into the Region.
16	The PCs stumble upon a trap. Portcullis Trap: CR 1; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; Atk +10 melee (3d6); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20. Note: Damage applies only to those underneath the portcullis. Portcullis blocks passageway. Note: The celestials typically reset the portcullis by casting knock .
17	The PCs stumble upon a trap. Razor-Wire across Hallway: CR 1; mechanical; location trigger; no reset; Atk +10 melee (2d6, wire); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); Search DC 22; Disable Device DC 15.
18	The PCs stumble upon a trap. Immediately roll another encounter after a PC triggers this one. Tripping Chain: CR 2; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; multiple traps (tripping and melee attack); Atk +15 melee touch (trip), Atk +15 melee (2d4+2, spiked chain); Search DC 15; Disable Device DC 18. Note: This trap is really one CR 1 trap that trips and a second CR 1 trap that attacks with a spiked chain. If the tripping attack succeeds, a +4 bonus applies to the spiked chain attack because the opponent is prone.
19	The PCs stumble upon a trap. Burning Hands Trap: CR 3; magic device; proximity trigger (alarm); automatic reset; spell effect (burning hands , 5th-level wizard, 5d4 fire, DC 11 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 26; Disable Device DC 26.

THE ARTIFACT

The (doppelganger) goblin king — Arglist — has lost a powerful artifact. At some point during his rise to power over the goblins, the artifact disappeared. While it is not crucial to his reign, he does not wish for it to fall into the hands of any of his enemies, of which he has plenty, or into the hands of potential rivals to his throne. His new position does not allow him to search of a halfling, Bartleby is more than happy to search for the artifact. He has gained the protection of the dominant faction in the Region and enjoys enormous freedom. He has no plans to turn the artifact over to Arglist however. Anything as powerful as it is not something you give away lightly. Once he has found the artifact Bartleby plans to leave the Region entirely, using his new found power as he sees fit.

What the artifact is, however, is strictly up to the DM. It truly could be something so powerful that whoever has possession of it can rule the Region, or it could be a red herring to draw the PCs' attention away from the real dangers in the Region.

POSSIBLE ARTIFACTS

Clay Golem Manual. The ability to craft golems gives the PCs a powerful tool for navigating the dungeon.

Medallion of Thoughts. Reading the thoughts and intentions of the more deceitful denizens the PCs could prove invaluable to their survival.

Necklace of Adaptation. Eventually the PCs will need to cross the Lake (Region L) and being able to breathe underwater might help.

Phylactery of Undead Turning. Useful for the ghouls and wights found in the later rooms of the dungeon.

Rod of Cancellation. The PCs are not the only group in the dungeon using magical items to aid them. The capacity to remove the power of their opponents' items could be key to their survival.

POSSIBLE LOCATIONS

Room B92, The Maze. With its constant dangers, placing the artifact in the maze makes for a harrowing quest. Due to the goblin's superstitious fears of the maze, a legend has sprung up about a daring thief who fled with the king's treasure into the maze, only to be punished by Norendithas Stoneshaper the Quickthinking, Smiter of Foes. The thief in question is eternally trapped in the maze, with the goblin king's treasure lost in its confusing, dangerous confines.

Room B111, The Killing Grounds. Controlled by the undead of the Region, this room is a natural place for the artifact to have been misplaced. Whoever stole it fled here, only to be assaulted by the wights. It could be hiding in plain sight amongst the refuse in the room, or it could have been buried under the dirt floor. Fighting off the ghouls, as well as the dangers of the room itself, presents a unique challenge to any who seek the artifact here.

Room B136, Norendithas Stoneshaper the Quickthinking, Smiter of Foes' Shrine. Maybe the wayward hunter turned deity stole the artifact from the goblin king. If that's the case it has been sealed in the now holy statue. Even Arglist would be hesitant to desecrate the source of his influence over the goblins in an effort to retrieve the artifact. The zealous nature of the goblins that guard the shrine present unique issues for would-be treasure hunters.

Region C. Perhaps somewhere in Region C, the artifact has slipped through the hands of the goblins and into the clutches of the black dragon, giants, gnolls, or chaotic oozes that roam the corridors.

In the end these are merely suggestions. The artifact can be anything and anywhere, or nothing and nowhere. It is solely up to the DM how he wishes to run the campaign.

B1. ENTRANCEWAY

This corridor is obviously old, but it is in fairly good shape. The air is musty, and a thin layer of dust coats the area. The walls are plain, and free of mold or lichen. It stretches straight ahead for roughly 30 ft. A second hall joins this corridor roughly ten ft. from the entrance, while the corridor itself turns to the left at the end.

Encounter: The hall, while looking non-descript, holds the first of the celestials' traps, as well as a secret entrance to Room B3. A successful DC 20 Search check reveals a stone door, flush with the northern wall. The door is trapped. Opening the door triggers the trap; a large double-bit axe head which swings out towards the hallway. Once the trap is disabled, a DC 20 Open Lock check is enough to open the door and allow the party to enter Room B3.

10 ft. into the room, where it meets the second hall, a pressure-triggered trapdoor awaits. It opens into a 10 ft. wide by 20 ft. deep pit filled with several sharpened spikes. It is triggered as soon as someone steps on the stone floor. Springs hidden under the trapdoor reset the trap once it is triggered. A DC 20 Spot check alerts the PCs that the floor above the pit has a thinner layer of dust than the surrounding area.

◆ Spiked Pit Trap: CR 2; mechanical; touch trigger; automatic reset; DC 20 Reflex saves avoids; 20-ft. deep (2d6, fall); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); pit spikes (Atk +10 melee, 1d4 spikes per target for 1d4+2 each); Search DC 18; Disable Device DC 15

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, make the spiked pit trap 40 ft. deep. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the spiked pit trap to 1d3+1 per spike.

B2. ABANDONED GUARD POST

This room is long and narrow. Toppled benches and tables lie in disarray throughout the space. Weapon racks stand empty in the western corner. Whoever used this room has long since deserted it. The dust is thicker in here than in previous rooms and you kick it up into the air with every step. Several burnt out torches lie on the floor as well and the air has a slight smoky quality to it. Strange carvings line the back wall, and an aged leather hide hangs on the eastern wall.

Encounter: This Room is a former guard post of the bugbears that was abandoned some time ago. The wooden tables and benches are dull brown, and several deep cracks cut along and across the grain of the wood. The dry rot is bad; it crumbles easily if the party picks it up.

Those that speak Dwarven or Goblin easily discern the carvings as goblinoid in origin. The carvings offer no discernable message themselves, but appear to be graffiti left behind to commemorate a mighty battle. References to the 'big stinky ones' and 'mighty G'rrrd' can be made out, but nothing in context. The hide in the corner is defaced in the same way. On top of a simple pattern of circles and crosses, the same scrawling goblinoid writing appears. 'He who growls' and 'victory' are the only bits of information the PCs will be able to glean from the hide, regardless of how much time is spent studying it.

A secret door in the southeast corner can be discovered by a successful DC 20 Search check. The door's lock is jammed and requires a DC 20 Open Lock check to open. This door leads to B4.

Encounter Condition: Haunted

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Wedged between two stones in the corner of the Room is a tarnished and chipped Small silver dagger. It can be found on a DC 20 Search check.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B3. OBSERVATORY

The axe swings lazily in the doorway. Stepping around it you enter a stark chamber. Along the western wall is a table and chair, both built of stone. Along the northern wall rests a large bookcase. Only a few, ancient leather bound books remain on its shelves. Aside from these few furnishings, the chamber is empty.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was built to observe the demonic and devilish prisons of this Region. The celestials crafted it to be as unobtrusive as possible. From here they could freely observe the unholy hordes closely. It has been abandoned for quite some time.

The leather books remaining are quite fragile. Unless the PCs are incredibly careful, the pages crumble while handled. Unless one of the PCs is fluent in Celestial, the text requires a DC 35 Decipher Script check to translate. Even if a PC understands Celestial, the text is in such disarray, another DC 25 Decipher Script check is required to make sense of it.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The few remaining journals, if deciphered, give the PCs a broad sense of the previous inhabitants in this dungeon. They primarily detail the demons and devils that were here 2,000 years ago. If this is the first the PCs have learned of the purpose of the dungeon, allow each person reading the tome a single question.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B4. SECRET ARMORY

The door slides inward, creaking loudly on rusty hinges. The interior is dark, but it is not impossible to see into the room. The walls are lined with racks and racks of simple weapons: spears, clubs and slings. The spearheads are dull, but the dry air has prevented them from rusting. Two large barrels towards the back of the chamber are filled with small rocks, obviously ammunition for the slings. Someone is obviously stockpiling weapons for a prolonged conflict, and they might be back soon.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bugbears that were formerly stationed in Room B2 kept their weapons in this hidden storage Room. The weapons are crude and even a layman can tell they were hastily built.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The Room contains two dozen short spears. The inferior quality of the shortspears decreases their usefulness, however, dealing only 1d6/x2 damage. The two barrels, combined, hold roughly 170 lbs. of gravel suitable for use as bullets for the three dozen slings contained in the armory. The dozen clubs found here are not discernable in any way from other clubs.

EL: N/A

B5. TRAP ROOM

As the PCs approach the door to Room B5, read the following.

The corridor wraps around a square structure in the center of this room. As you walk circumambulate it you notice a large stone door set in the center of the wall's western side. The stone of the door is slightly darker than the walls, and is carved with various indecipherable runes.

The door to this Room is trapped. Opening the door without disarming the trap triggers a large stone block to fall from the ceiling, crushing any who stand within 10 ft. of the door.

♣ Falling Stone Trap: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; +15 melee (6d6); multiple targets (can strike all character in two adjacent specified squares); Reflex save DC 25 avoids; Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 25.

When the PCs enter the Room, read the following.

The room is large and empty apart from a pedestal resting against the far wall. The floor is tiled in dark granite, with a line of polished white marble leading from the door to the pedestal. Upon the pedestal there is a golden idol radiates with two emerald gems for eyes and a pearl set in its belly.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is a particularly difficult encounter and if the PCs are smart, they will leave before it escalates.

The celestials that occupied Room B3 designed this room to test the intelligence of the prisoners. It contains a series of three traps, each slightly more advanced and deadly than the next. The Room itself is 30-ft. wide by 40-ft. long.

The first is the door to the Room. This is the simplest and most straightforward of the traps.

The second trap is built into the floor of the room. The floor tiles are the key to this trap. Each tile is 2-ft. by 2-ft. The obvious path is straight down the middle, following the white marble. Of course any path that obvious must be a trap. The celestials took this into account. To circumvent this trap the PCs must travel down, staying on either side of the path, walking a thin line. The white and black tiles nearest each other represent the only safe paths to the pedestal. The PCs must stay within the 4 ft. wide path created by the joined black and white tiles. If they stray to either side of these paths, the trap triggers, raining metal shards and caltrops on the occupants of the Room from concealed slots in the ceiling.

A DC 25 Search or Disable Device check reveals the nature of the trap and a DC 25 Spot check reveals the paths are slightly more worn than the surrounding tiles.

♣ Raining Shards: CR 6; mechanical; touch trigger; automatic reset; +10 ranged (10d4, and floor is covered in caltrops); Reflex save DC 20 half damage; Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 26.

If the PCs are able to make it to the idol, they must circumvent a third trap to claim the prize. This is a simple pressure plate under the idol. If the PCs do not disable it before they remove the idol, the plate triggers spring loaded poisoned darts hidden behind the eastern wall.

♣ Spring-Loaded Darts: CR 5; mechanical; pressure trigger; automatic reset; +12 ranged (4d3 plus poison, multiple darts); poison (giant wasp poison, DC 18 Fortitude save resists, 1d6 Dex/1d6 Dex); Reflex save DC 20 avoids; Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 22.

Once the PCs have the idol they can safely leave the room.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: As soon as the idol passes beyond the doorway it instantly turns to dust and the traps reset, and the door closes. This was the final test the celestials had — to determine if demons would continually pursue a futile goal.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the spring-loaded darts trap to a fusillade of spears trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the raining shards trap to 6d4.

B6. HALL OF MIRRORS

This large room is filled with mirrors. The floors and walls are covered in mirrors. As soon as you enter, a stone door slams down from the ceiling, sealing the entrance behind you.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is a single huge trap. With every surface covered in mirrors, it is impossible to find a way out. The door the PCs entered through is sealed and is no longer an exit. Only by finding the trap's trigger and disabling it are the PCs be able to leave this Room. If they cannot they are trapped here until they expire.

The trigger is located in the northwestern corner, near the floor. A hair line crack in a mirror is the only hint the PCs have to the trigger's location. The crack is actually the edge of a removable panel that reveals the trigger. Once the PCs disable the trigger, all four doors open.

Encounter Counter: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Search and Disable Device DCs for the hall of mirrors trap by +5. To decrease the challenge, decrease the DCs by -5 or merely have the door open after 24 hours.

B7. WATERFALL

This room is rough in appearance. The walls are pitted and uneven, as if acid smoke eroded the finish. The floor is covered in discs, each two ft. in diameter. The discs sit slightly higher than the floor and wobble slightly.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The discs in this Room are the key to the PCs successfully navigating their way across it. They are designed to shift and are each mounted on a compact spring. The PCs must carefully make their way across the room, which requires a successful DC 20 Balance check. If the PCs stumble, or in any way touch the floor under the discs, the trap triggers. The doors to the room seal and torrents of water gush into the room from slots near the ceiling. The water pours in from both the east and west walls. The PCs have two minutes to disarm the trap or they drown. The trigger for the trap is located on the center of the middle wall and requires a DC 15 Strength check to pull.

♣ Water-Filled Room Trap: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; multiple targets (all targets in a 10-ft.-by-10-ft. room); never miss; onset delay (4 rounds); liquid; Search DC 17; Disable Device DC 23.

Once the trap is disabled the water drains through grates under the discs and both doors to this room open.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the trap to a CR 7 water-filled room trap. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, change the trap to a CR 4 water-filled room trap.

B8. GOLD MINE

The walls of this room are flecked with gold. The roughly square room is filled with mounds of dirt and rubble. Crude picks, shovels and the bones of several small goblinoids lay scattered on the ground. The gold flecks glow and entice you forward.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room, while nearly attractive to greedy PCs, is as much a trap as anything else in the Region. Touching the gold flecks releases poison gas into the Room. As the door seals them in, the PCs have little choice but to disable the trap to survive. As long as the PCs do not touch the gold flecks, the trap does not trigger. There are no flecks on the floor at all.

If the PCs trigger the trap, they have to act swiftly to turn it off. In the middle of the room is a squat stalagmite. A Search check (DC 21) reveals a series of three knobby buttons. A Disable Device check (DC 21) is required to push the buttons in the right sequence to turn off the trap and open the door.

♦ Poison Gas Trap: CR 7; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; gas; multiple targets (all characters in a 20-ft. by 20-ft. room); never miss; onset delay (3 rounds); poison (burnt othur fumes, DC 18 Fortitude save resists, 1 Con drain/3d6 Con); Search DC 21; Disable Device DC 21.

Encounter Condition: [Smoke]

Tactics: Once the trap is disarmed (or if it was never triggered), the PCs are allowed DC 25 Search checks to notice the transparent outline of angel wings on the backwall. Faint and depressed, these grooves are used to open the secret door leading to Room B13. If a good PC touches the grooves by laying his palms flat, the wall rises up and remain opened for 5 rounds.

The secret door cannot be opened from the other side.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the poison gas trap with an insanity mist vapor trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the poison gas trap with an ungod dust vapor trap.

B9. DIRE WOLF DEN

As the PCs approach the Room, read the following.

As you make your way down the hall, you hear heavy breathing coming from behind the door up ahead. The air is dank with a discernable odor as if something were living here.

Once the door is open, read the following.

Your torches have trouble cutting through the darkness in the room, however, and all that you smell is a dank odor that clings to everything. From the shadows a pair of large wolves rush out, fighting — nipping at each other's heels. Their fur is raised as if one were fighting for dominance over the other. Turning and snipping, the two creatures snarl and lunge, attacking wildly.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The PCs have stumbled onto a pair of dire wolves (hp 61, 57), that were trapped in this Room. They have been aggressively playing with one another for some time, but now happily have something new to focus their perkiness on. They attack the PCs on sight, fighting to the death if necessary.

If no one holds the door open, it slams behind the PCs. From the inside the door is locked and requires a DC 20 Open Lock check to escape. The other two doors are not locked, however.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Deep Darkness, Fearless, [Stagnant Air]

Tactics: Light in this Room is reduced to a 5-ft. radius, no matter how powerful the source. This puts PCs without darkvision at a major disadvantage.

The dire wolves have been trapped here for weeks, but do not fight as cohesively as pack animals normally do. They do not flank or aid one another or use any tactics to gain an advantage over an opponent. Instead, they simply choose a target and focus their energies solely on him.

If the PCs stumble around in the dark, they can find the carcasses of four other wolves littered here. Apparently they turned on each other once they were trapped in this Room. The two that survived were the largest and the strongest.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two dire wolves. To decrease the challenge, reduce their hit points by -15 each.

♦ Dire Wolf: CR 3; Large animal; HD 6d8+18; hp 61, 57; Init +2; Spd 50 ft.; AC 14, touch 11, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +4; Grp +15; Atk +11 melee (1d8+10, bite); Full Atk +11 melee (1d8+10, bite); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Trip; SQ Low-light vision, scent; AL N; SV Fort +8, Ref +7, Will +6; Str 25, Dex 15, Con 17, Int 2, Wis 12, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Hide +0, Listen +7, Move Silently +4, Spot +7, Survival +2²; Alertness, Run, Track¹, Weapon Focus (bite).

Trip (Ex): A dire wolf that hits with a bite attack can attempt to trip its opponent (+11 check modifier) as a free action without making a touch attack or provoking an attack of opportunity. If the attempt fails, the opponent cannot react to trip the dire wolf.

Skills: A dire wolf has a +2 racial bonus on Hide, Listen, Move Silently, and Spot checks.

* It also has a +4 racial bonus on Survival checks when tracking by scent.

B10. BUGBEAR REFUGE

As the PCs approach the Room, read the following.

A splintered wooden door blocks the entrance to this room. From behind it you can hear a quarrel in a foul tongue. Something yells and a loud crash reverberates through the halls.

Removing the splintered wooden door without making a noise requires a Move Silently check opposed by bugbear's Listen checks. A DC 14 Strength check is also required to carefully move the door without scrapping it against the stone walls.

If the PCs remain in the hallway for more than 10 rounds, allow the bugbears a second Listen check.

If the PCs make a noise in the hall that a bugbear takes notice of, the arguing coming from inside the Room stops immediately. The bugbears take defensive positions behind makeshift cover and prepare to ambush the PCs as soon as one of the doors is pushed ajar.

If the PCs enter without being noticed, read the following.

Three furry goblinoids point and shout at one another, obviously engaged in a heated debate. The creatures are muscular and brutish, each standing about seven feet tall. Coarse hair covers their bodies and chipped and crooked fangs protrude from their snarling mouths. The largest spits as he screams at the smallest, who apparently isn't backing down.

All around the room, debris and broken wood make the stone floor nearly impossible to see.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Three bugbears (hp 24, 18, 15) have made this Room their refuge, but have been unable to leave for two weeks because of the dire wolves in Room B9. They are stir-crazy now and arguing with each other (in Common) about who cheated at a dice game that obviously isn't being played.

If surprised, allow the middle bugbear a DC 18 Spot check to notice someone entering. The largest and smallest bugbears are automatically surprised if the PCs enter without making any noise.

Encounter Condition: [Ambush], [Cover], Echoes 3, Poor Footing 2

Tactics: If in the encounter takes place in the Room, the bugbears swarm the nearest PC, taking a defensive position until they have a handle on the situation. If the leader drops the other two either surrender (50% chance) or become enraged (as barbarians, 50% chance).

If the encounter takes place in the hall two bugbears engage the PCs, forcing them away from the entrance to the room, while the smallest runs around to the other side of the corridor, to wedge the PCs in.

Treasure: Hidden under the debris in this room is a small strongbox (Search check, DC 25 to locate). The lock is simple and crude, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. When the strongbox is opened, a thin wire running along the hinge pushes down, cracking a vial of acid hidden inside the box. The bugbears normally open the box slowly, preventing the glass from shattering. Allow the PC a DC 20 Listen check. If he succeeds, he hears metal scratching against glass and is allowed a DC 20 Reflex save to stop opening the box before rupturing the vial. If the PC makes no intimation that he's opening the box slowly, do not allow any checks.

If the vial cracks (which is automatic if the rolls fail or the PC is hurried), an alchemical reaction occurs and the acid inside, reacting with the surrounding air, becomes a fog that blankets the square in front of the strongbox.

♣ Acid Gas Trap: CR 3; mechanical device; touch trigger; repair reset; gas; never miss; onset delay (1 round); poison (acid gas, DC 18 Fortitude save resists, 1 Con/1 Con); Search DC 22; Disable Device DC 17.

Inside the chest are 46 sp, 24 gp, a dull pearl set into a gaudy necklace (25 gp), three potions of cure light wounds, and a wand of light (12 charges).

The largest bugbear keeps three keys on a ring on his belt. The first key goes to the strongbox in this Room. The second is for the locked door leading to Room B12. The third is to the inside of the door in Room B9.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one bugbear. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

♣ Bugbear: CR 2; Medium humanoid (goblinoid); HD 3d8+3; hp 24, 18, 15; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 11, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +2; Grp +4; Atk +5 melee (1d8+2, morningstar) or +3 ranged (1d6+2, javelin); Full Atk +5 melee (1d8+2, morningstar) or +3 ranged (1d6+2, javelin); SA —; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., scent; AL CE; SV Fort +2, Ref +4, Will +1; Str 15, Dex 12, Con 13, Int 10, Wis 10, Cha 9.

Skills and Feats: Climb +3, Hide +4, Listen +4, Move Silently +6, Spot +4; Alertness, Weapon Focus (morningstar).

Skills: Bugbears have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

B11. COLD IRON

The granite walls are dull and lifeless and the floor looks slick with ice. In the middle of the room are three pieces of iron, shaped like links in a chain. As you approach, the iron links shift position with an audible groan. They shudder and with a violent screech of metal on metal, finally settle.

If the links are left alone for longer than a minute they twist and shift of their own accord, their screech taking on an accusatory edge.

After the PCs step into the Room, read the following.

The door slams behind you though the sound is well-masked by the iron links clattering in the room.

Attempts to catch the door require a DC 18 Reflex save to grab it and a DC 21 Strength check to wrestle the door open. Any contact with the door before the puzzle is solved, triggers a chill touch at 5th-level (caster).

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Another of the puzzle traps placed by the celestials, this one is obviously a wrought iron riddle to be solved before the door will open.

♣ Iron Links: CR 1; mechanical and magical; location trigger; automatic reset; Search DC — (you cannot miss it); Disable Device DC 20 or Int check DC 21 (to solve the puzzle).

Encounter Condition: Extreme Cold, Fear 12

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the DCs of the iron link by 5 and have it inflict 1d4 cold damage for each failed attempt... To decrease the challenge of this encounter, decrease the trap DCs by 3 and reduce the chill touch effect to a 1st-level caster.

B12. SNAKE PIT

The southern door to this Room is locked and requires a DC 25 Open Lock check to unlock. The door is locked from the inside as well as the outside.

A wide stone ledge is all you have to stand on, as floor of the room drops off twenty ft. into an unknown emptiness below. The floor writhes as dozens of snakes twist amongst sharpened metal spikes.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Having malfunctioned the last time this trap was sprung, it has not been reset. A DC 15 Spot check reveals the goblinoid skeletons scattered beneath the snakes. Unless the PCs can reset the trap, they are forced to maneuver their way around the edge of the ledge with a successful DC 20 Balance check.

On the south wall, the PCs see a small stone switch (Spot check, DC 15). If the PCs successfully strike the switch (AC 15, due to size) with a heavy blunt object (like a hammer) a small bridge springs out from the wall. Alternately, one PC can walk around and merely press the switch with a DC 8 Strength check. If the PCs entered from the south, then this is a no-brainer.

The bridge extends out at floor level and stops 10 ft. short of the ledge. A successful Jump check enables a PC to land on the bridge, but it cannot support more than one PC at a time. If a PC leaps onto the bridge with someone else standing on it, the bridge has a 50% chance of breaking, sending both PCs to the bottom of the pit. If a third PC jumps onto the bridge it automatically breaks.

PCs can attempt to fix the bridge mechanism once they've crossed the Room with a successful DC 25 Disable Device check. If this check fails by more than 10, the ledge malfunctions and retracts by 5 ft.

Once fixed, the bridge extends all the way to the ledge and supports three PCs at a time. From here they can shuffle along the ledge, requiring a DC 15 Balance check to reach the exit in the southeast corner of the room. Since the southern door is locked, a PC must succeed at a DC 18 Balance check while trying to unlock the door. The mechanism is not overly complex, but the difficulty of trying to open the lock as well as maintain balance makes the task difficult.

If the PCs try to pass one another on the ledge, everyone involved must succeed at a Balance check (DC 22, +2 per PC). Failure on any balance check indicates that PC falls. Failure by more than 10 means he takes someone else with him.

There is another, less obvious option, for getting across this Room. 5 ft. below the level of the floor the PCs — with a DC 25 Spot check — can discern a groove running along the wall of the room. Inside this groove is a 6 in. thick floor that extends across the pit, if the PCs can disable the trigger to the trap.

The trigger is located to the left of the entranceway, where the wall and floor would meet if the trap was set. The PCs can find it with a successful DC 25 Spot check. A DC 18 Balance check allows a PC to reach the trigger and two consecutive Disable Device checks (DC 18 and DC 22) are required to reset the trap, and then disable it. Once the floor is back in place the PCs can walk across the Room without fail.

If any PCs fall into the pit, their best course of action is to climb out. Since the walls are rough and provide handholds, the PCs can reach the ledge, easily, successfully reaching the ledge with a DC 20 Climb check.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If any PCs fall into the pit, six medium vipers attack each round. While there are dozens and dozens of snakes, they do not have a true strategy and they tend to lash out at blindly.

♣ Snake Pit: CR 7; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; DC 25 Reflex save avoids; 40 ft. deep (4d6, fall); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); pit spikes (Atk +10 melee, 1d4 spikes for 1d4+5 each); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, remove the bridge. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Search and Disable Device DCs of the snake pit by -4.

Skills and Feats: Balance +11, Climb +11, Hide +12, Listen +5, Spot +5, Swim +7; Weapon Finesse

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude save DC 11, initial and secondary damage 1d6 Con. The save DC is Constitution-based.

B13. WELL OF SLEEP

If the PCs approach from the hallway, read the following.

As you enter this chamber, you see four doors. In the southeast corner of the room is a silver door, its shine nearly blinds you. In the southwest corner of the small antechamber stands a door of dark wood, stained with age. In the northwest corner, is a simple stone door and in the northeast corner, a finely carved stone door catches your eye.

If the PCs entered from Room B8, read the following.

The stone door rises, awaiting your entry. As you enter the Room, the stone door lowers behind you, gracefully.

Once the PCs open the door to Room B13, read the following.

The room is built with polished stone. The yellow hue is as clean as it is even. At the center of the room is a deep hole. A simple wooden frame hangs above the well, and a frayed rope descends into the inky blackness below. Echoes rise from the pit, as you hear scurrying noises and a splash of water.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is an enigma. What the celestials intended for it is known only to its creator, who is dead. It is now the home of a few vermin who climb up and down the wall of the pit. From time to time the goblins come here as well, hoping to catch something to play with.

If the PCs touch the rope, an alarm sounds, alerting the goblins that someone is here. Allow the goblins in Rooms B70 DC 10 Listen checks. If successful, they come running to the commotion in 4d4 rounds, expecting to find bugs and rats.

Encounter Condition: [Ambush], Stagnant Air

Tactics: The goblins swarm into the Room expecting trouble, but instead find the PCs. The goblins suffer a -4 circumstance penalty to their Initiative checks (for 1d4 rounds) upon seeing the PCs. The goblins gang up in pairs, however, and if any PC poses the largest threat, the goblins send their "extras" to deal with him.

When the goblins are dispatched the PCs are free to gather water from the well to replenish their stores, but it needs to be purified before it can be safely drunk. If the PCs drink the water before purifying it, they suffer the effects of arsenic poisoning.

The secret door leading to Room B8 cannot be opened from this side.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the alarm sound when one of the doors opens. To decrease the challenge, the alarm only sounds if the rope is pulled.

B14. OBELISK OF SHAPES

As you enter this chamber, you encounter four doors. In the southeast corner of the room is a silver door, polished to a nearly blinding shine. In the southwest corner of the small antechamber stands a dark wood door, stained with age. In the northwest corner, is a simple stone door and in the northeast corner, a finely carved stone door is the last to catch your eye.

Once the PCs open the door to Room B14, read the following.

The walls of this room are dull gray granite. The floor and ceiling are granite as well, but are highly polished. An obsidian obelisk dominates the center of the room. Carved into the obelisk are various shapes — circles, squares, and triangles among others. The shapes spinning slowly, before gradually picking up speed. Soon they whirl at a phenomenal rate.

After the PCs step into the Room, read the following.

The doors to the room slam shut as the shapes on the obelisk grind to a halt.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Similar to Room B6, this trap keeps the PCs in the room until it is reset. Careful study of the shape patterns (Search check, DC 19) reveals the pattern has changed and must be reset in order to open the door to this room.

To further complicate matters, one shape has jammed. A DC 20 Disable Device check is required to fix this shape before the rest of the shapes can be moved to their original location. Finding the appropriate pattern however, requires a successful DC 22 Intelligence check, a DC 24 Knowledge (the planes) check, a DC 25 Knowledge (arcana) check, a DC 30 Craft (any) check, or a DC 20 Knowledge (mathematics) check.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Search and Disable Device DCs for the obelisk of shapes by +5. To decrease the challenge, reduce the DCs by -5 or merely have the door open after 24 hours.

B15. BLINK DOG DEN

The stone door in the southeastern corner is jammed, requiring a DC 20 Open Lock check unstuck, followed by a DC 12 Strength check.

Musty odors permeate the air here. The floor is littered with bones and scraps of cloth. Near the southwestern corner, in front of a large stone door, are the bodies of three hounds, and a few goblins. Broken spears and ruined shields are strewn about the floor here as well. In the northeastern corner of the room is yet another stone door. This area is free of detritus.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: One of many Rooms that have been taken over as a den by the blink dogs, this Room was recently sacked by a goblin war party. Aside from the remains of the battle, there is little of note in this room.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4, Distracting Visions 4

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Amidst the debris, the PCs can find two wolf teeth, a very small jagged gold tooth (from a goblin), and a severed, desiccated hand.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, the lantern archons are summoned as soon as the PCs enter the Room. To decrease the challenge, allow every PCs to fight the lantern archons and blink dog, but in doing so lose their immunity to fear.

✦ Blink Dog: CR 2; Medium magical beast; HD 4d10; hp 22; Init +3; Spd 40 ft.; AC 16, touch 13, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +4; Grp +4; Atk +4 melee (1d6, bite); Full Atk +4 melee (1d6, bite); Space/Reach 5 ft./5 ft.; SA —; SQ Blink, darkvision 60 ft., dimension door, low-light vision, scent; AL LG; SV Fort +4, Ref +7, Will +4; Str 10, Dex 17, Con 10, Int 10, Wis 13, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Hide +3, Listen +5, Sense Motive +3, Spot +5, Survival +4; Iron Will, Run, Track

Blink (Su): A blink dog can use blink as the spell (caster level 8th), and can evoke or end the effect as a free action.

Dimension Door (Su): A blink dog can teleport, as dimension door (caster level 8th), once per round as a free action. The ability affects only the blink dog, which never appears within a solid object and can act immediately after teleporting.

✦ Lantern Archon: CR 2; Small outsider (archon, extraplanar, good, lawful); HD 1d8; hp 4; Init +4; Spd Fly 60 ft. Skills and Feats: Concentration +4, Diplomacy +4, Knowledge (the planes) +2, Listen +4, Sense Motive +4, Spot +4; Improved Initiative.

Aura of Menace (Su): Will DC 12 negates.

Aura of Menace (Su): A righteous aura surrounds archons that fight or get angry. Any hostile creature within a 20-ft. radius of an archon must succeed on a DC 12 Will save to resist its effects. The save DC is Charisma-based. Those who fail take a –2 penalty on attacks, AC, and saves for 24 hours or until they successfully hit the archon that generated the aura. A creature that has resisted or broken the effect cannot be affected again by the same archon's aura for 24 hours.

Teleport (Su): Archons can use greater teleport at will, as the spell (caster level 14th), except that the creature can transport only itself and up to 50 lbs of objects. Within the confines of this dungeon, the lantern archon can only teleport within line of sight.

Tongues (Su): All archons can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using a tongues spell (caster level 14th). This ability is always active.

B16. HALL OF THE DIVINE

Constructed of blinding white marble walls, and highly polished black granite, this room's southeastern corner is a mess of gears and pulleys. The marble wall has been smashed open and the innards of a complex trap spill out of it. A huge statue of a ferocious angel (obviously female) wielding an ornate spear, dominates the wall. The statue is masterfully crafted, it's almost lifelike and the spear is real, placed into the right hand of the statue.

If the PCs examine the statue, read the following.

At the base of the statue is a plaque that reads, "I shall defend this prison against all manner of evil. I shall die to protect this world from the horrors of the abyss. I shall never waiver. I shall never stop in my quest to liberate the world from the taint of chaos. I shall never concede defeat."

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Ages ago, when the bugbears were far more prominent, they defended this Room against intruders, considering the beautiful statue a herald of what was to come. Little did they know, the angel was actually buried in the Room, her remains used to build the foundation of a shrine to their greatest warrior. When any PCs member steps within 5 ft. of the statue, a fear effect is triggered followed by the summoning of two lantern archons (hp 4 each), coming out of the eyes of the statue.

They immediately determine the alignment of the PCs and if they are predominately non-good or non-lawful, they summon a blink dog (hp 22) to defend the Room.

Encounter Condition: Fear 14⁺, Positive Energy

Tactics: The lantern archons are mindless drones, created by the spirit of the angel who died here. The blink dog is also made of the same celestial energy and does attacks mindlessly. They attack evil PCs first, followed by chaotic neutral, neutral, and finally chaotic good PCs (of questionable character).

Lawful good, lawful neutral, and neutral good PCs cannot harm these creatures. Conversely, lawful good PCs are immune to the fear effect in this room. If any PC moves toward the statue or touch the spear, the blink dog and lantern archons attack him, ignoring alignment.

Treasure: The statue is armed with a +1 axiomatic spear. Lawful good PCs can collect it, if they recite the sacred oath written at the bottom of the status and succeed at a DC 18 Disable Device check. Should the PC ever fail in this oath, the spear disintegrates. Non-lawful good PCs touching the spear suffer 2d6 electricity damage.

B17. TRAPPED BLINK DOGS

As you open the door to this room, a sense of disease comes over you. The room is a plain and square. It is dark, though your torches cut through the gloom easily enough. A musky scent wafts through the air, and you get the distinct impression you are not the only one in this room.

If the PCs enter without being noticed, read the following.

Three yellow brown dogs, nearly identical to the corpses in the other room, lie on the floor sleeping lazily. They haven't noticed you yet, but something is unnerving them. The dogs shiver quietly with fear, whining softly from time to time.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Three blink dogs (hp 20, 15, 13) were driven into this Room by a goblin scouting party a few weeks ago. The Room's aura of fear has paralyzed them, with forcing them to huddle in a corner. If the blink dogs notice the PCs (suffering a -4 on their Listen or Spot checks) they attack immediately, taking out their fearful frustrations. If the door is left open, they escape instead.

If the PCs remain in the doorway for more than 5 rounds, allow the blink dogs a second Spot check. If the PCs make a noise in Room B15 that the blink dogs hear, they attack the PCs as soon as they enter the room. Once they spot the PCs, the blink dogs attack, mistaking the PCs for those who trapped them in the first place.

If killed, the blink dogs fade like mist.

Encounter Condition: Ambush. Fear 16

Tactics: The blink dogs launch themselves at the PCs indiscriminately. Where they would normally attack the PCs individually — concentrating their attacks — they lash out at the closest PC at random. Because of the nature of the dungeon, their blink ability is sporadic and has a 70% chance of failing. If successful, however, they flank the hapless PC.

Blink dogs are lawful good creatures and any rangers or druids in the PCs may adjust their attitudes with Animal Empathy checks. If the PCs calm the blink dogs, the blink dogs leave the Room, but do not become companions to the PCs. This ordeal has left them a little confused and they move on through the dungeon without much direction. If the PCs follow, the blink dogs investigate Room B14 briefly, and then make their way through the rest of the Section.

Treasure: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one blink dog. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

Blink Dog: CR 2; Medium magical beast; HD 4d10; hp 20, 15, 13; Init +3; Spd 40 ft.; AC 16; touch 13, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +4; Grp +4; Atk +4 melee (1d6, bite); Full Atk +4 melee (1d6, bite); Space/Reach 5 ft./5 ft.; SA —; SQ Blink, darkvision 60 ft., dimension door, low-light vision, scent; AL LG; SV Fort +4, Ref +7, Will +4; Str 10, Dex 17, Con 10, Int 10, Wis 13, Cha 11.

Blink (Su): A blink dog can use blink as the spell (caster level 8th), and can evoke or end the effect as a free action.

Dimension Door (Su): A blink dog can teleport, as dimension door (caster level 8th), once per round as a free action. The ability affects only the blink dog, which never appears within a solid object and can act immediately after teleporting.

B18. ROOM OF FIRE

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. When a PC opens the door he is hit with a wave of heat that deals 1d2 points of fire damage. After that, the Extreme Heat condition takes effect if the PCs enter the Room.

This room is hot, close to oppressively so. The walls are constructed of granite with large scorch marks and stains. The corners contain small piles of ash. Against the northern wall a simple pedestal rests, with a scroll case on top.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The oppressive heat is a design of the Room and should be an indication of the inhospitable conditions. While there is no illusion, detect magic reveals Faint illusion magic on the walls and pedestal. This is meant to distract visitors and the DM should play up the illusion's design with vague answers to the PC's questions. Keep them in the Room as long as possible, examining every corner.

1d6 minutes of examination and a DC 40 Spellcraft check reveal that no illusion actually exists and the heat is real.

Encounter Condition: Extreme Heat

Tactics: The scroll case is the only thing of interest in this Room and touching it triggers a fireball trap that engulfs the Room.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the trap to a flame strike trap. To decrease the challenge, change the trap to a burning hands trap.

B19. ROOM OF ROT

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. When a PC opens the door he is hit with a stench of decay that requires a DC 12 Fortitude save, lest the PC become nauseated. After that, the Stagnant Air condition takes effect if the PCs enter the Room.

This room reeks of decay. The smell is overpowering, practically debilitating and the room is cramped. The stone walls are covered in decaying moss and dark stains. Across from the door, a pedestal stands with an ornate scroll case on it. As enticing as the scroll case may seem, the stench threatens to completely overwhelm you.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Similar to Room B18, this Room suffers from an unexplained odor that chokes the PCs as they enter. The stench is actually a design of the Room (or a malfunction of the magical wards), not residue from the trap located on the pedestal. It would be easy to say this Room is an anomaly, but this entire Region plays upon the experimental traps to the point that nothing should shock the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: Aside from the Stagnant Air, the PCs also have to deal with a trap if they wish to remove the scroll case from the room. Removing the case without disarming the trap triggers a noxious vapor that floods the room, poisoning the PCs.

♦ Ungol Dust Vapor Trap: CR 5; mechanical; touch trigger; automatic reset; gas; multiple targets (all targets in a 10-ft. by 10-ft. room); never miss; onset delay (2 rounds); poison (ungol dust, DC 15 Fortitude save resists, 1 Cha/1d6 Cha plus 1 Cha drain); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 16.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the ungol dust vapor trap to a burnt other vapor trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the DC of the Fortitude save of the ungol dust vapor trap by -3.

B20. LIMESTONE CAVERN

As the PCs approach this Room, they can see water trickling out from under the door. The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock.

The entire floor of the room, is submerged. Looking about, you notice the lack of construction here. The walls are unfinished limestone and stalactites hang from the ceiling. Droplets of water fall from the high ceiling, and the walls are slick. Almost floating on the water, resting on a stone, is a gem is set into the wall, pulsating with a bright yellow glow.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The entire floor of this Room is sunken and filled with 4 ft. of water, which is icy cold. A 6 in. lip runs the course of the Room, but standing or walking on it requires a DC 15 Balance check or the PC falls into the water. Falling into the water causes no damage, but it is extremely cold.

Light does not penetrate the water either, but cupping it into one's hand reveals that it is crystal clear. The bottom is uneven and rocky, making it difficult to cross easily.

Encounter Condition: [Extreme Cold], Flooded, Hazardous Footing 15

Tactics: Touching the jewel triggers a lightning bolt trap. Due to the flooded condition of the room, the Reflex save DC has been increased by 4 and the damage increase by +1 per die.

Treasure: The gem is a beautifully cut diamond, worth about 2,000 gp. While it does not radiates magic its casts continual flame and acts as a minor ring energy resistance (cold), so long as the gem is held tightly in one's hand.

It can be safely removed once the trap is disabled.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the lightning bolt trap to a chain lightning trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the DC of Reflex save of the lightning bolt trap by 6.

B21. COLUMNS

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock.

Stone columns run from floor to ceiling. The columns are carved with symbols from an ancient language you can't quite discern, as well as graffiti left behind by the vagabond goblinoid races. The rapid scrawling of goblins and the heavier script of bugbears can be easily made out. The columns in the back of the room are in better condition than the ones closest to the door. The floor of the room is littered with debris and small rocks.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The carvings on the columns depict the story of how the Region was built from the perspective of a scholar. It is a signature (of sorts) by one of the celestial designers. The graffiti covering the columns was created by the goblins and bugbears, and in a way details their history, though it is difficult to read as they often overlap and obscure each other. To ensure the Room remained a testament to their work, the celestial incorporated a trap into the columns. Apparently the goblinoids have not been deterred from spoiling the unique architecture of the columns, trap or no.

The PCs may freely examine the columns, so long as they do not touch them. Unless the PCs discern the nature of the trap and disable it, once a column is touched the trap triggers and the columns collapse on the PCs. The trap once the Room is void of life.

• Collapsing Columns Trap: CR 4; mechanical; touch trigger; automatic reset; Atk +15 melee (6d6, stone blocks); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 24.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs spend 30 minutes searching the debris in this Room, allow each of them a DC 20 Search check to find one of the following — 24 cp in a brown leather bag, a gold ring that radiates illusion but produces no effect, a masterwork silver dagger, a pair of rusted kukri, or a scroll of mending. Once all four items are found all the PCs find are pieces of wood, bone fragments, stones, and fungus.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the collapsing columns trap to a collapsing wall trap. To decrease the challenge, change the collapsing columns trap to a bricks from ceiling trap.

B22. DIRE WOLF DEN

This room is dark, so dark in fact that your torches cannot pierce the gloom. The few things you can make are merely shadows dancing in the corners of your vision. It smells musty, and the stench of decay fills the moist air.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The PCs have stumbled into another dire wolf den. Four dire wolves (hp 39, 35, 33, 30) are on edge due to recent goblin raids, and are prepared for any intruders that enter their den. The wolves gain a +10 circumstance bonus to Listen and Spot checks, attacking the PCs on sight.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Deep Darkness, Fearless

Tactics: The wolves use pack tactics, swarming over one PC at a time. They do not target any PC specifically, attacking whichever one is most accessible. Two of the wolves attempt to flank the target, while the others assault the PC directly. Rangers and druids are unable to sway the wolves with Animal Empathy.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two dire wolves. To decrease the challenge, remove one dire wolf.

B23. THE PIT

A deep, circular pit dominates the center of this room. Leaning over it, you can see nothing but darkness down the treacherous well. The corpse of a bugbear lies against the northern wall, a gleaming battleaxe clutched loosely in its hand. In the other corner of the room, sunk halfway through the floor, is a sword. The echo of the wind gushing through the pit makes an ominous sound as you move cautiously about the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There are two pits in this Room. The first is obvious. The second is located directly beneath the sword; it has become lodged between the two sections of the trap's door. Unless they disable the trap first, any PC that steps within 10 ft. of the sword triggers the trap and they fall down into the pit. A DC 25 climb check is required by any PCs who fall down the pit to escape from it.

• Camouflaged Pit Trap: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 50 ft. deep (5d6, fall); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 17.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The axe near the corpse of the bugbear is a +1 greataxe that always glows with a 5-ft. radius nimbus of light. This light cannot be turned off in any manner. If the PCs manage to recover the sword, it's a masterwork bastard sword, with the name Urthieln engraved in the blade (in Celestial runes).

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of the camouflaged pit trap to 7d6 fall damage. To decrease the challenge, lower the DCs of the camouflaged pit trap by -4.

B24. BLOCKED HALL

You see a collapsed door in the distance. It appears as if a large stone block fell from the ceiling and utterly crushed it. The ceiling, however, looks complete and lacks any distinguishing characteristics. The hallway branches both east and west in front of the door.

Initial Attitude: N/A

The eastern branch of the corridor leads to Room B22. The western branch terminates at a blank wall. A DC 25 Search check reveals a small (3 in. diameter, 3 in. deep) hole in the wall (part of a secret door leading to Room B25) 4 ft. from the floor.

♦ Falling Block Trap: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; Atk +15 (6d6, stone block); multiple targets (can strike all targets in two adjacent specified squares); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 25.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The secret door can only be opened by placing a dowel or iron rod into the hole in the wall and lifting up. No Strength check is required. Without a handle to lift, the PCs must succeed at a DC 22 Strength check to lift the secret door open.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of the falling block trap to 8d6. To decrease the challenge, change the falling block trap to a stone blocks from ceiling trap.

B25. OBSERVATORY

The secret door leading to this Room can only be opened by placing a 3 in. diameter dowel or iron rod into a hole in the wall 4 ft. high and lifting up. No Strength check is required. Without a handle to lift, the PCs must succeed at a DC 22 Strength check to lift the secret door open.

A few nondescript wooden benches circumscribe the room. On the back wall a large map hangs limply. It looks old, though it is in good repair. The map details the layout of this entire section of the dungeon. There is a simple stone door to the south.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was used as an observatory by the celestials. Aside from the map (see treasure below), it contains nothing of much interest or value. The air in the room is dry and fire spreads easily, consuming the benches and map within minutes if the fire cannot be extinguished.

The door to the south leads to Room B26. It is locked, requiring a DC 20 Open Lock check to open. The doorknob is covered in a thin, almost imperceptible layer, of contact poison, which the PCs must also deal with if they wish to open the door.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The map on the back wall is a duplicate of Map B. It can assist the PCs in navigating the dungeon. It is quite old, and easily catches fire if the PCs are not careful. It is also large, measuring 10-ft by 10-ft. The map does not show the location of secret doors, but it does show the location of every room in the dungeon. It is unlabeled.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, raise the DC of the fortitude save of the trap by 5. To decrease the challenge, reduce the poison's damage to 1d6 Con.

B26. OBSERVATORY LIBRARY

As you enter the room you notice it is similar to one of the rooms near the dungeon's entrance. Along the back wall is a stone desk and chair, and a bookcase covers the eastern wall. In this room, however, the bookcase holds volumes of tomes, not just one or two. A sheaf of papers lies on the desk, and the light glints off of something metallic under the chair.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The Room is essentially a mirror of Room B3. The anteroom (Room B25) served as an observation post for the celestials, while this Room was used to catalogue their findings. The catalogued observations are stored on the bookshelf, written on ancient parchment.

Not wishing for their records to fall into the wrong hands, this Room was trapped by the celestial observers. The shiny object under the chair, which appears to be a silver broach, is, in point of fact, the trigger for a fire trap. Any attempt to move the broach triggers the trap, which destroys every book in the room beyond any hope of repair; the flames easily consume the ancient pages. The trap is also triggered if the PCs attempt to remove any of the books from the room without first disabling the trap.

♦ Fire Trap: CR 5; magic device; touch trigger; no reset; spell effect (fire trap, 7th level wizard, 1d4+7, DC 16 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the PCs do not trigger the trap, they are free to take as many books with them as they can carry with them. The books, and the sheaves of paper on the desk, chronicle events of the devils over centuries, though no specific dates are given. To understand the writing, a PC must speak Celestial and make a DC 25 Decipher Script check.

The PCs are free to take the silver broach, which is worth approximately 100 gp, once the trap is disabled. If the trap is triggered, the broach is destroyed in the ensuing flames.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the fire trap to a flame strike trap. To decrease the challenge, change the fire trap to a burning hands trap.

B27. HALL OF VINES

This room is covered in vines, lending it an earthy smell. Beneath plants, you can barely make out a series of strange stones. The room is separated into three square sections and a layer of ash blankets the granite floor tiles. In the center of the room is a thin pedestal with a bright gem affixed to it. The pedestal has strange sigils carved into its base. Though they appear worn down and they cannot be clearly read. The only apparent exit is the door you entered through.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The sigils under the vines, and those carved onto the surface of the pedestal, are glyphs of warding (blast). If the PCs touch any wall, or the gem on the pedestal, they trigger the appropriate ward, which withers the vines and ivy that have accumulated in the room over time. Each wall has its own ward, and each must be disabled individually if the PCs wish to investigate the sigils.

Encounter Condition: [Safe]

Tactics: There is a secret door in the southwestern corner of the Room, that leads to a corridor which leads to Room B29. A DC 25 Search check reveals a small, rough "button" that blends in perfectly with the stone. However, a DC 30 Open Lock check is required to dislodge the button from the surrounding moss and vines, without damaging the mechanism (which is quite delicate) or triggering the glyph.

Once the button is depressed, the wall slides down and into the floor, which also deactivates the glyphs for 2d6 rounds before the secret door closes again, and the traps reset.

Treasure: Once the trap on the pedestal is disabled, the PCs can remove the gem. It is a small sapphire worth approximately 600 gp.

A PC spending an hour deciphering the sigils on the wall is rewarded with a spell (that can be transcribed into a spellbook), if he succeeds at successful DC 23 Spellcraft check. The DM should choose an appropriate 3rd-level arcane spell that the PCs are lacking. Otherwise, the spell is sepa snake sigil.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of the glyph of warding trap to 4d8 acid. To decrease the challenge, change the glyph of warding trap to a fire trap.

If the PCs do not attack Bartleby, he claims the room is empty and has no more secrets to be uncovered and leaves, heading towards Room B38. He wants nothing to do with the PCs and offers no assistance nor will he accept any in return.

Once Bartleby leaves the Room, or has been killed, the PCs can investigate further. Bartleby has destroyed the surface of the walls. The innards of a trap can be seen in the northern wall, but it is obvious that Bartleby has ruined it beyond repair. A DC 40 Disable Device check reveals the trap was once a fire trap, but otherwise it is unidentifiable.

On the southern wall is a secret door that leads to Room B29. It is difficult to spot, requiring a DC 30 Search check to find. Like the secret door in Room B27, a simple button lowers the door into the floor for 2d6 rounds, during which time the trap that used to be in this Room would be disarmed. Despite the damage to the wall, the secret door opens easily.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment, Cover

Tactics: Bartleby attempts to scare off the PCs. He uses alchemical substances (such as acid, alchemical fire, thunderstones) to distract them. If he cannot drive them from the Room he flees deeper into the dungeon. Once in the dungeon, he heads towards Room B38. He knows the dungeon far better than the PCs and easily loses them once free of the Room.

Feel free to play this out, however, with Bartleby heading into trapped Rooms and sneaking through secret doors.

Treasure: Bartleby keeps a bedroll, a small lamp, and a few pots and pans. However, any belongings of value are on his person. If the DM owns Mercenaries™, feel free to give Bartleby a few adventuring goods from there as well.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two rogue levels to Bartleby. To decrease the challenge, remove one rogue level from Bartleby.

▲ Bartleby, Halfling Rog 5: CR 5; Small humanoid (halfling); HD 5d6+15; hp 33; Init +5; Spd 20 ft.; AC 18, touch 16, flat-footed 18; Base Atk +3; Grp -1; Atk +9 melee (1d4+1/18-20, rapier) or +9 ranged (1d4/+3, shortbow); Full Atk +9 melee (1d4+1/18-20, rapier) or +9 ranged (1d4/+3, shortbow); SA Sneak Attack +3d6; SQ Evasion, halfling traits, trapfinding, trap sense +1, uncanny dodge; AL NE; SV Fort +5, Ref +10, Will +4; Str 12, Dex 20, Con 17, Int 17, Wis 15, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Appraise +4, Balance +15, Bluff +6, Climb +5, Decipher Script +4, Disable Device +11, Escape Artist +6, Hide +17, Jump +13, Listen +10, Move Silently +15, Open Lock +10, Search +11, Spot +10, Tumble +15, Use Rope +6; Dodge, Weapon Finesse.

Evasion (Ex): If this rogue is exposed to any effect that normally allows him to attempt a Reflex saving throw for half damage, he takes no damage with a successful saving throw.

Trap Sense (Ex): This rogue has an intuitive sense that alerts him to danger from traps, granting a +1 bonus on Reflex saves and a +1 dodge bonus to AC against attacks from traps.

Trapfinding (Ex): This rogue can use the Search skill to locate traps when the task has a DC higher than 20. Finding a non-magical trap has a DC of at least 20, higher if it is well hidden. Finding a magic trap has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it. Rogues can use the Disable Device skill to disarm magic traps. Disabling a magic trap generally has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it. A rogue who beats a trap's DC by 10 or more with a Disable Device check can generally study a trap, figure out how it works, and bypass it (with his PCs) without disarming it.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): This rogue can react to danger before his senses would normally allow him to do so. He retains his Dexterity bonus to AC even when caught flat-footed.

Possessions: Masterwork leather armor, masterwork dagger, masterwork shortbow, masterwork arrows (20), potion of cure light wounds (12), acid (5), alchemical fire (3), thunderstone, masterwork thieves tools, 50-ft. silk rope, bag of soot, chalk, charcoal, crude maps, and thin leather gloves.

B29. EXCAVATED ROOM

The walls of this room are heavily damaged. Large sections of masonry are scattered all over the floor, and a few blunt pickaxes were left in the rubble. The room is musty; not an inviting place to put it simply.

If the PCs have not killed Bartleby the Halfling, read the following.

From the northwestern corner of the room you hear grunts and scratchings. As you get closer the noises stop, and a raspy, uninviting voice yells out, "Git outta here! This is my claim!"

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Bartleby the Halfling (hp 33) has taken up residence in this Room. If the PCs have encountered him previously, his attitude is indifferent, though he is gruff and suspicious. He presumes the PCs are following him, hoping to find the treasure he seeks before he can find it himself.

If the PCs have not encountered Bartleby before, he questions them intently, trying to determine their purpose in the dungeon. He is elusive with his answers, and does not give his purpose away.

B29. THE ROOM OF WANDS

This room's walls are covered with wands. Each one looks masterfully crafted. You can't see any hooks, so magic must be holding the wands to the wall. The walls behind the wands are covered with a rich, green moss. The floor and ceiling are free of the moss, and are polished blue marble.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Another in a series of maddening traps designed by the celestials, this Room only has one useful wand — a wand of burning hands. The rest of the wands, while nicely crafted, are simple wooden decoys with magic aura cast on them. If the PCs cast detect magic, everything in the Room radiates magic and every strength and type of magic is present. The only true magic item, is the wand of burning hands which is the only one which radiates faint transmutation.

The exact number and type of wands, plus the exact nature of the Spellcraft and Intelligence checks necessary to determine this number are best left to DMs willing to expend that much energy to challenging the PCs. Chances are, if they made it this far into Region B, they aren't touching anything in the Room, anyway.

Any chaotic or evil PC touching a wand other than the wand of burning hands triggers a bestow curse trap.

♣ Bestow Curse Trap: CR 4; magic device; touch trigger (detect chaos); automatic reset; spell effect (bestow curse, 5th level cleric, DC 14 Will save negates); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The northern wall contains a secret door that leads to Room B28. A DC 20 Search check is required to discover the secret door. The door is unlocked and opens easily.

Treasure: The PC can retrieve one wand of burning hands (1 charge).
EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, allow PCs to trigger the trap regardless of alignment. To decrease the challenge, change the bestow curse trap to an acid arrow trap.

B30. GOBLINOID REMAINS

The moment you enter this room you find the remains of seven goblins and three bugbears littering the floor. From what you can discern, two scouting parties encountered each other here and laid waste to one another. Broken clubs and spears are strewn amongst the corpses and the scent of death hangs heavily in the air. A bone-chilling screech suddenly echoes throughout the halls. Something is heading your way.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The scent of death has attracted two vargouilles (hp 11, 7) to this Room, and the PCs have three rounds before they arrive. The PCs can choose to lay in wait for the vargouilles or they can flee. When the vargouilles arrive they notice the PCs instantly (receiving a +10 circumstance bonus to Listen and Spot checks). They attack the PCs on sight, hoping to add to the pile of corpses already in the Room.

Encounter Condition: Cover

Tactics: The vargouilles assault the PCs with diving attacks. They rely heavily on their shriek attack, which can paralyze the PCs. They attack any paralyzed PCs, using their poison and kiss attacks on them.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one vargouille. To decrease the challenge, remove one vargouille.

Skills and Feats: Hide +9, Intimidate +3, Listen +5, Move Silently +5, Spot +5; Weapon Finesse.

Shriek (Su): Instead of biting, a vargouille can open its distended mouth and let out a terrible shriek. Those within 60 ft. (except other vargouilles) who hear the shriek and can clearly see the creature must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or be paralyzed with fear for 2d4 rounds or until the monster attacks them, goes out of range, or leaves their sight. A paralyzed creature is susceptible to the vargouille's kiss (see below). A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same vargouille's shriek for 24 hours. The shriek is a mind-affecting fear effect. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Kiss (Su): A vargouille can kiss a paralyzed target with a successful melee touch attack. An affected opponent must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or begin a terrible transformation that turns the creature into a vargouille within 24 hours (and often much sooner; roll 1d6 separately for each phase of the transformation).

First, over a period of 1d6 hours, all the victim's hair falls out. Within another 1d6 hours thereafter, the ears grow into leathery wings, tentacles sprout on the chin and scalp, and the teeth become long, pointed fangs. During the next 1d6 hours, the victim takes Intelligence drain and Charisma drain equal to 1 point per hour (to a minimum of 3). The transformation is complete 1d6 hours later, when the head breaks free of the body (which promptly dies) and becomes a vargouille. This transformation is interrupted by sunlight, and even a daylight spell can delay death, but to reverse the transformation requires remove disease. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +4 racial bonus.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 12 or be unable to heal the vargouille's bite damage naturally or magically. A neutralize poison or heal spell removes the effect, while delay poison allows magical healing. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

B31. THE ROD IN THE ROCK

A squat stalagmite sits in the center of this coarsely carved room. The atmosphere is dank, but not overwhelming like some of the other rooms in the dungeon. Protruding straight up from the center of the stalactite is a carved staff of stained, dark oak. The top of the staff is fitted with a gleaming steel cap in the shape of an eagle claw.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A quarterstaff is buried in the stalagmite, and it serves as the trigger to the Room's trap. Pulling the staff from the stalactite before the trap is disarmed triggers it, flooding the Room with darts that shoot from recesses in the wall.

♣ Fusillade of Darts: CR 5; mechanical trigger; location trigger; automatic reset; Atk +18 (1d4+1, dart); multiple targets (1d8 darts per target in a 10-ft. by 10-ft. area); Search DC 19, Disable Device DC 25.

If the PCs disarm the trap, they can attempt to remove the quarterstaff from the rock; a DC 20 Strength check is required to free the quarterstaff from its prison. It is easier for rangers or druids to remove the quarterstaff, requiring a DC 18 Strength check from PCs of either class.

Encounter Condition: [Safe]

Tactics: The only door to this Room is a secret door that closes 2d6 rounds after it opens. Opening the door from this side requires a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. This DC increases by +10 if the PCs triggered the trap.

Treasure: The staff is indeed magical. A PC that retrieves it is the proud owner of a +1 defending quarterstaff.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the trap to a spiked blocks from ceiling trap. To decrease the challenge, change the trap to a hail of needles trap.

B32. BLINK DOG DEN

As soon as you step into the room you are met with a chorus of growls. Four golden dogs, fangs bared, stare at you. You have obviously intruded upon their home, and you are not welcome here. Curiously they make no move to attack you, as they wait for you to exit on your own.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The PCs have entered another blink dog den. The blink dogs (hp 35, 31, 28, 23) do not appreciate the PCs' presence and want them out of the Room. They bare their fangs and growl at the PCs. However, due to their nature, the blink dogs do not attack the PCs; they only wish to scare them away.

If the PCs make no move to leave the blink dogs slowly advance on the PCs, hoping to drive them off. If any PCs attack the dogs, they immediately retaliate.

Rangers and druids can make DC 25 Animal Empathy checks to calm the dogs for 2d6 minutes. Success allows the PCs to remain and investigate the Room, though the blink dogs are not obviously happy with the PCs' presence. Failure of this check changes the blink dog's attitude to Hostile; they do not like being manipulated.

There is a secret door on the west wall, leading to Room B31. A successful DC 25 Search check reveals the a hallow stone that can be pried open with a successful DC 25 Open Lock check. Once the hallowed stone is open, the PCs can see a level that must be turned 90 degrees clockwise.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If attacked, the blink dogs launch themselves at the PCs, focusing on the most aggressive PCs first (or in the case of a druid or ranger failing their Animal Empathy check, one of them). They concentrate their attacks, targeting one PC at a time. They use their blink ability to flank the PCs. Because of the nature of the dungeon, their blink ability is sporadic and has a 70% chance of failing. If successful, however, they flank the hapless PC.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one blink dog. To decrease the challenge, remove one blink dog.

Blink Dog: CR 2; Medium magical beast; HD 4d10; hp 35, 31, 28, 23; Init +3; Spd 40 ft.; AC 16, touch 13, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +4; Grp +4; Atk +4 melee (1d6, bite); Full Atk +4 melee (1d6, bite); Space/Reach 5 ft./5 ft.; SA —; SQ Blink, darkvision 60 ft., dimension door, low-light vision, scent; AL LG; SV Fort +4, Ref +7, Will +4; Str 10, Dex 17, Con 10, Int 10, Wis 13, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Hide +3, Listen +5, Sense Motive +3, Spot +5, Survival +4; Iron Will, Run, Track²

Blink (Su): A blink dog can use blink as the spell (caster level 8th), and can evoke or end the effect as a free action.

Dimension Door (Su): A blink dog can teleport, as dimension door (caster level 8th), once per round as a free action. The ability affects only the blink dog, which never appears within a solid object and can act immediately after teleporting.

B33. BUGBEAR STORE ROOM

This is a simple granite room. Along the northern wall is a plain rack, covered with spears and a few clubs. The weapons are too large for goblins, or smaller creatures, so this is most likely a storeroom for the bugbears in the dungeon. The room does not seem to have been visited lately, and the hallway outside is as quiet as a tomb.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bugbears used this Room as a makeshift armory for while. Although they rarely come here now, there are spears and great-clubs stored on weapon racks. To protect their cache, the bugbears have rigged a simple spear trap, which is easy enough to spot. Stepping within 5 ft. of the weapons rack triggers the trap, unless it is first disabled.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The PCs have their choice of four longswords, two great-clubs, one Large warhammer, and one shortbow. Upon inspection, the weapons are simple and sturdy, but hardly special. There is a 5% chance of a weapon being masterwork.

EL: 1

Scaling:

To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the spear trap fire two spears. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the spear trap to 1d6/x2.

B34. SHRINE OF THE WARRIOR

Moss covers the walls and ceiling of the room. Against the eastern wall is a statue of a hobgoblin. The statue holds a gleaming shortsword in its right hand, and a sharp looking axe in its left. The overall pose gives you a sense that this was a mighty warrior, and this is hallowed ground.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: As the statue suggests, this Room was converted into a shrine by the hobgoblins of the dungeon. Since the hobgoblins no longer inhabit this Section, this Room has been abandoned.

While the weapons are fitted snugly into the statue, they can be removed with minimal effort by the PCs. This requires a DC 19 Strength check for each weapon. Any attempt to remove the weapons triggers a deafening alarm. But, with no hobgoblins in the vicinity, no one responds.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 2

Tactics: After the PCs trigger the alarm in this Room, roll for two Random Encounters, spaced 1d8 rounds apart.

Treasure: The axe in the statue's left hand is a +1 battleaxe and the sword in the statue's right hand is a +1 shortsword.

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, after the PCs trigger the alarm, roll for three Random Encounters, spaced 1d6 rounds apart. To decrease the challenge, remove the alarm.

B35. THE PEDESTAL

Brightly polished marble tiles are intricately arrayed on the floor of this room. Dark granite walls and a high limestone ceiling frame it. A large pedestal with a bright red, velvet cushion placed upon it, sits majestically in the center of the floor. The floor surrounding the pedestal is covered with a tile mosaic that depicts a giant snake eating its own tail.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Whatever purpose this Room once served, or what the pedestal held, has been lost. The Room's defenses, however, are still active, and any PCs that touches the pedestal triggers a hail of needles trap.

♣ Hail of Needles: CR 3; mechanical; touch trigger; automatic reset; Atk +20 ranged (2d4); Search DC 22; Disable Device DC 22.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Whatever was on the pedestal is no longer there, and the pedestal contains no secret compartments. Invisible symbols have been drawn on the top of the pedestal, however, but these can only found with detect magic, which reveals a series of arcane marks, laid out in a replicating pattern. A DC 20 Spellcraft check reveals that the sigils hint to a riddle or answer to a riddle. If the PC studies the symbols for 1 hour, requiring a DC 25 Concentration check to maintain detect magic that long, he is allowed a final DC 15 Intelligence check. If successful, the arcane marks explain how to open the secret door leading to Room B55.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the hail of needles trap to a fusillade of darts trap. To decrease the challenge, change the hail of needles trap to a poison needle trap.

B36. WOODEN CAGE

The floor, walls and ceiling of the room are covered with wood paneling. The paneling is smooth and even, but the smell of dry rot permeates the air. There is no discernable damage however. Sitting in the middle of the room is a burlap sack. Gold coins spill out of the top of the sack and litter the floor around it. As you make your way towards the sack, the door behind you slams shut, sealing you in.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Similar to the Hall of Mirrors (Room B6), this Room was designed by the celestials as a test of the prisoner's intelligence. A sack, resting on a giant pressure-sensitive trigger, serves as bait. Anyone that steps within 10 ft. of the sack also steps on the trigger, and the trap activates. Once the trap is activated the door slams shut and it is impossible to re-open without resetting the trap.

The reset mechanism is located behind a wooden panel in the north-eastern corner. The panel needs to be removed carefully in order to reset the trap; if it is not, the PCs have another danger to contend with.

Noxious gases have built up behind the rotting wood and the PCs must take the proper precautions when removing the panel, otherwise they flood the Room with the toxic gas.

♣ Ungol Dust Vapor Trap: CR 5; mechanical; touch trigger; automatic reset; gas; multiple targets (all targets in a 10-ft. by 10-ft. room); never miss; onset delay (2 rounds); poison (ungol dust, DC 15 Fortitude save resists, 1 Cha/1d6 Cha plus 1 Cha drain); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 16.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The sack contains ten vials of holy water, which prisoners would find useless, but the PCs may be able to put to use.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the ungol dust vapor trap to an acid fog trap. To decrease the challenge, lower the DC of the Fortitude save of the ungol dust vapor trap by -2.

B37. TRAPPED HOWLERS

As the PCs approach the door this Room, read the following.

The stone door in front of you doesn't look right. All the other doors you have seen so far have been flush with the surrounding walls. This one, however, looks slightly cocked, as if it has been jammed shut. Loud whining howls pierce through the stone door, flooding the area directly in front of it with a cacophonous noise.

If the PCs put their ear to the door, they hear the moan of the howlers, forcing them to make DC 12 Will saves or lose 1 point of Wisdom.

The door to this Room has been locked and the lock damaged by rough hands. A DC 25 Open Lock check is required to open the door before the PCs can enter.

After the PCs open the door, read the following.

As you open the door the noise grows louder as a pair of beasts jumped from the shadows. The beasts resemble spiny backed hounds, which are hard to make out due to a thick smoke filling the room. But your curiosity is cut short as the beasts lunge your direction.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A party of bugbears has trapped two howlers (hp 42, 38) inside the Room. They also left a fire burning in the center of the Room in the hopes of suffocating the howlers. Sadly, the bugbears do not understand that howlers are not mammals from this plane and thus not subjected to the same laws for breathing.

The howlers have not been trapped for long, but they are nevertheless eager to depart. As soon as the door is opened they rush in, hoping to escape. With the PCs in their way, however, they turn their attention to them, violently taking out their frustrations on the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Smoke

Tactics: The howlers attack the closest PC first, latching on with their jagged teeth. They thrash about, impaling the PC on their quills. These howlers have serrated quills that deal an extra point of damage and require DC 24 Heal checks to remove. The howlers fight ravenously for 2d4 rounds, at which point they get their wits about them and fight with more sensibly, flanking the PCs.

Treasure: Once the PCs have dealt with the howlers they are free to inspect the Room. Aside from scratches on the walls, obviously the work of the trapped howlers, there is nothing of note. The wood in the center of the Room has been smoldering for some time, however, blanketing the contents in ash. Allow the PCs DC 30 Search checks to locate a silver dagger, in the corner of the Room, coated with ash.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one howler. To decrease the challenge, remove one howler.

♣ Howler: CR 3; Large outsider (chaotic, evil, extraplanar); HD 6d8+12; hp 42, 38; Init +7; Spd 60 ft.; AC 17, touch 12, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +6; Grp +15; Atk +10 melee (2d8+5, bite); Full Atk +10 melee (2d8+5, bite) and +5 melee (1d6+3, 1d4 quills); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Quills, howl; SQ Darkvision 60 ft.; SV Fort +7, Ref +8, Will +7; Str 21, Dex 17, Con 15, Int 6, Wis 14, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Climb +14, Hide +8, Listen +13, Move Silently +12, Search +7, Spot +13, Survival +2 (+4 following tracks); Alertness, Combat Reflexes, Improved Initiative.

Quills (Ex): A howler's neck bristles with long quills. While biting, the creature thrashes about, striking with 1d4 of them. An opponent hit by a howler's quill attack must succeed on a DC 16 Reflex save or have the quill break off in his or her flesh. Lodged quills impose a -1 penalty on attacks, saves, and checks per quill. The save DC is Dexterity-based.

Howl (Ex): All beings other than outsiders that hear the creature's howling for an hour or longer are subject to its effect, though it does not help the howler in combat. Anyone within hearing range of a howler for a full hour must succeed on a DC 12 Will save or take 1 point of Wisdom damage. The save DC is Charisma-based. The save must be repeated for each hour of exposure. This is a sonic mind-affecting effect.

Carrying Capacity: A light load for a howler is up to 460 pounds; a medium load, 461–920 pounds; and a heavy load, 921–1,380 pounds. A howler can drag 6,900 pounds.

B39. RUINED OBSERVATORY

The door to this room has been smashed open, its remains strewn about the doorway. The interior is a now familiar sight. The room contains a simple stone desk and chair, and a bookshelf against the back wall. A large pile of books lies in front of the shelf. An ear-piercing whine sounds from within the pile, and you spot a strange looking lizard, with a triangular head, rifling through the refuse.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is identical to the other celestial observatories, the major difference being that something has found it and ruined it. The ethereal marauder (hp 12) chanced upon the Room, and is simply routing through the contents, turning over books and chairs.

The ethereal marauder may not notice the PCs as they enter the room, busily digging through the Room's contents (suffering a -4 circumstance penalty to Listen and Spot checks). If the PCs remain in the Room for more than six rounds, allow the marauder another Listen and/or Spot check.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the ethereal marauder notices the PCs, it becomes startled and attacks. If the PCs attack it before it notices them, the ethereal marauder flees immediately.

The marauder is more startled than hostile. Without the ability to "jaunt", the marauder fights to stay alive. If the combat lasts more than three rounds, the marauder flees, not wishing to deal with the obviously superior PCs.

Treasure: The books in this Room are ruined. While they are obviously journals and text books, they offer no insight into what the celestials had observed from this Room. Allow the PCs a DC 40 Decipher Script check to uncover information about the maze in Room B92. If successful the PCs uncover details about its twisting, impossible passages and the deadly nature of the maze. Despite its dangers, demons trying to escape the prison would run through the maze, quickly losing their bearings.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one ethereal marauder. To decrease the challenge, reduce the ethereal marauder's hit points by -5.

♣ Ethereal Marauder: CR 2; Medium magical beast (extraplanar); HD 2d10; hp 12; Init +5; Spd 40 ft.; AC 14, touch 11, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +2; Grp +4; Atk +4 melee (1d6+3, bite); Full Atk +4 melee (1d6+3, bite); SA —; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., ethereal jaunt; AL N; SV Fort +3, Ref +4, Will +1; Str 14, Dex 12, Con 11, Int 7, Wis 12, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Listen +5, Move Silently +5, Spot +4; Improved Initiative

Ethereal Jaunt (Su): An ethereal marauder cannot shift from the Ethereal Plane to the Material Plane in this dungeon.

B39. HALL OF THE HOBGOBLINS

The door leading to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 25 Open Lock check to unlock it. If the check fails by more than 10, 1d3 tools are jammed in the lock and ruined.

Rotted benches and tables fill this cavernous space. The floor is littered with scraps of cloth and bone, as well as less inviting piles of refuse. Something used this room as a meeting place or base of operations, but it hasn't been used in quite some time. At the back of the hall, against the northern wall, is a large stone throne and dais.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Before the hobgoblins joined forces with their goblin cousins, they made their home here. While they have long since abandoned this Room, some of their belongings, shortspears and clubs scattered amongst the refuse and debris, remain. They also left behind the throne of their chieftain, and it still sits on its dais under a thick layer of dust.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Visions 3

Treasure: Hidden in the throne, behind a secret panel, is a +1 greatclub. A DC 25 Search check is required to find the panel, while a DC 20 Open Lock check opens it. Scattered around the Room are twelve javelins, two spears, six clubs, 14 arrows, and six masterwork arrows.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B40. HALLWAY

If you do not want to alert the PCs to the trap in this hallway, do not read the following.

You find yourself in a simple hallway. The walls and floor are smooth, and nothing is very out of the ordinary. Something prickles at the base of your neck however, as things may not be exactly as they appear. At the far end of the hallway you can hear a dull, roaring sound, like howling wind.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A well-camouflaged pit lies in wait for any PCs traversing this expanse of hallway. If the PCs travel more than halfway through the hall, they trigger the trap, falling into the 50-ft. deep pit.

◆ Camouflaged Wide-Mouth Pit Trap: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 50 ft. deep (5d6, fall); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5 ft. squares); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 17.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 10

Tactics: At the east end of the hallway is a spotless Room. On the west end is an open door leading to Room B41.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the trap to a well camouflaged pit trap. To decrease the challenge, change the trap to a spiked pit trap.

B41. HOWLER DEN

The door to this Room is open.

If the PCs fell in the pit in Room B40, then the howlers hear them coming and are not surprised; taking cover in the Room. Otherwise, consider the howlers' Listen checks 23 for the purposes of the PCs sneaking up on them.

As you approach the open door, a deep growl escalates from inside. Something lives here.

Peeking your head in, you see three hounds, with fibrous quills on their backs.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The PCs have entered a howler den, although (fortunately) the entire pack is not to be seen. There are normally as many as ten pack members, but presently there are only three howlers (hp 44, 38, 33). As soon as the PCs enter, the howlers unleash their mighty howls, wasting no time forcing the PCs from their sanctum.

Encounter Condition: Fearless, [Safe]

Tactics: The howlers attack as a pack, lashing out at the nearest PC and dragging him to the ground. If a PC presents himself as the biggest threat, the howlers deal with him first. The howlers bite the PCs, latching on with their jagged teeth. Once engaged, they use their quills to entangle their opponents.

Every 1d3 hours, 1d3+1 howlers return to the den. This continues until ten howlers have returned. If the PCs kill all the howlers, the Room is considered Safe and no further howler Random Encounters occur in this Section.

Treasure: A small nest lies in the corner, against a stone that is slightly warmer than the others. In the nest are the remains of an elf skeleton that stumbled into this lair some 5 years ago. The bones have been thoroughly gnawed on and the finger bones lay about the nest. A golden ring can be found in the nest with a DC 20 Search check. The ring is worth only about 25 gp, but has the name Ellinorith written on it. Ellinorith is an elven deserter and should the PCs mention the ring or his name to the elves in Region H, they confer that he got what was coming to him.

If the PCs investigate the stone, allow a DC 25 Disable Device check to pull one of the bricks from the wall. A thin piece of metal works, but shimmying it between the mortar takes some time. Once removed, the PCs find a piece of amber that gives off heat in a 5-ft. radius. The heat is around 110 degrees and is perfect for putting under a blanket or in the bottom of a pot to heat water. The amber never stops radiating heat.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one howler. To decrease the challenge, remove one howler.

✦ Howler: CR 3; Large outsider (chaotic, evil, extraplanar); HD 6d8+12; hp 44, 38, 33; Init +7; Spd 60 ft.; AC 17, touch 12, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +6; Grp +15; Atk +10 melee (2d8+5, bite); Full Atk +10 melee (2d8+5, bite) and +5 melee (1d6+2, 1d4 quills); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Quills, howl; SQ Darkvision 60 ft.; SV Fort +7, Ref +8, Will +7; Str 21, Dex 17, Con 15, Int 6, Wis 14, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Climb +14, Hide +8, Listen +13, Move Silently +12, Search +7, Spot +13, Survival +2 (+4 following tracks); Alertness, Combat Reflexes, Improved Initiative.

Quills (Ex): A howler's neck bristles with long quills. While biting, the creature thrashes about, striking with 1d4 of them. An opponent hit by a howler's quill attack must succeed on a DC 16 Reflex save or have the quill break off in his or her flesh. Lodged quills impose a -1 penalty on attacks, saves, and checks per quill. The save DC is Dexterity-based.

Howl (Ex): All beings other than outsiders that hear the creature's howling for an hour or longer are subject to its effect, though it does not help the howler in combat. Anyone within hearing range of a howler for a full hour must succeed on a DC 12 Will save or take 1 point of Wisdom damage. The save DC is Charisma-based. The save must be repeated for each hour of exposure. This is a sonic mind-affecting effect.

Carrying Capacity: A light load for a howler is up to 460 pounds; a medium load, 461–920 pounds; and a heavy load, 921–1,380 pounds. A howler can drag 6,900 pounds.

B42. WELL OF HEALING

The room looks much like the others in this expanse of the dungeon, but the floor is littered with rubble and rocks. At the back of the room is a simple stone well. The rope attached to the well's frame extends straight down, and is taut.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The well contains a small treasure and the Room is designed to prevent anyone from retrieving it. The rubble on the floor shows the aftermath of the trap, and it is the only clue the PCs have regarding the nature of the Room.

The trap is triggered when the handle on the well is turned. Triggering the trap unleashes stone blocks from the ceiling, which fall down on the PCs. The trigger is located in the well itself; a discolored stone on the backside of the well marks the trigger's location.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Once the trap is disarmed, the PCs may haul up the bucket attached to the bottom of the rope. There is no water in the bucket (as there is no water at the bottom of the well), but it does contain three vials of shimmering blue liquid.

Smart PCs should realize that this is a great place to store supplies. Someone, perhaps Bartleby (Room B28), figured out the trap and placed the vials here for future use. The PCs should feel confident that few people know how to get passed the trap and can thus store items here safely.

If the PCs store anything in the bucket, there is an 85% chance the items are here when they return. For each week that passes, roll again for this items.

Treasure: In the bucket are three vials; each is a potion of cure light wounds.

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the stone block from ceiling trap to a falling block trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the stone block from ceiling trap to 2d6.

B43. THE MASHER

The floor in this room is scuffed and heavily scratched. Aside from that, it is empty, framed by unmarked granite walls. Off towards your right is a simple wooden door leading to another room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: While the Room is empty, it is not without its perils. The walls conceal poisoned spikes that only trigger when the door to the adjoining Room is opened. Once triggered the spikes spring out of the northern and southern walls, and the northern wall slowly moves toward the other. In addition, the doors to the south shut and lock, requiring DC 35 Open Lock checks to open.

If the PCs trigger the trap it is still possible to reset it while it is moving, but the trap's DCs are increased by 10 while it is active.

When the PCs disable the trap they can enter the adjoining room to the east, which contains the remains of a few elves who died in here. The DM should feel free to give them a full compliment of equipment though. The Encounter Condition of the small Room is Negative Energy and Stagnant Air.

Encounter Condition: [Negative Energy], [Stagnant Air]

Tactics: Once the walls press together, there is a 3 ft. gap from one to the other. They remain pressed together for 1 hour, during which time the PCs must make Fortitude saves (DC 10, +1 per previous save) every 10 minutes or lean against the poisoned wall spikes (suffering damage each time).

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the trap's damage to 1d10+4 plus poison. To decrease the challenge, decrease the trap's damage to 1d6 plus poison.

B44. DEAD WORGs

This large room is nearly empty. The walls are black and gray, and very clean. However, three massive blood-covered wolves lay over the corpses of two dead dogs. Blood mats their hair and stains their mouths. Their skin is black and much of their hair has been singed off. The heavy smell of burnt flesh fills the air.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The PCs have stumbled upon a trapped Room that worgs and dogs were fighting in before triggering the burning hands trap. The trap is very potent, but with the dead bodies in the Room, easy to spot. However, if the PCs stumble upon the trigger without being careful, they suffer the same fate as these worgs.

◆ Maximized Burning Hands Trap: CR 5; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (burning hands, 5th level wizard, 20 fire, DC 13 Reflex save half); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

Encounter Condition: [Safe], Smoke

Tactics: The trigger for this trap is a single small stone set in the floor 6 ft. from the door, shaped like any other in the Room. Careful PCs can easily avoid and disable it.

The corpses are three worgs and two blink dogs that fought in this Room, before one of them tripped the burning hands trap, killing them all.

If the PCs clear the air of smoke, avoid the trigger (or disable it), and bar the door, the Room is considered Safe.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, remove the dead bodies and add an empty backpack in the center of the Room as a lure. To decrease the challenge, replace the maximized burning hands trap with a burning hands trap.

B45. THE GOLDEN IDOL

This large room is lined with bright, shiny steel. Light bounces off the steel in every direction, blinding you. On columns throughout the room are ledges lined with lit candles. In the center of the room, on a simple wooden table, is a golden idol. The statue is about three ft. tall, ornately carved, and resembles a beautiful angel, holding aloft a torch. The room gives off a peaceful feeling, as if it was a shrine at some point.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The idol is a tribute from one celestial to another; it honors the celestial's sacrifices in constructing and defending the dungeon complex, though this is not readily apparent to the PCs. Inscribed on its base is a message (in Celestial). "In darkness, I bring light, never straying from my path."

Unless the PC disarm it, removing the idol from the table triggers a lightning bolt trap, centered on the table, striking every person in the Room. In addition to taking damage, anyone struck by the trap must succeed at a DC 18 Balance check or be knocked prone. Prone PCs have a 50% chance of being targeted by a stray lightning bolt, which deals 4d6+4 points of damage. The save DC of a lightning bolt while prone is increased by +4.

The PCs must disable the trap if they wish to remove the idol from the Room.

◆ Lightning Bolt Trap: CR 6; magic device; proximity trigger (alarm); automatic reset; spell effect (lightning bolt, 10th-level wizard, 10d6+10 electricity, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 28, Disable Device DC 28.

The steel lining of the walls enhances the potency of the lightning bolt, allowing it to bounce around the Room. The extra damage has been figured into the trap already. Lawful good PCs are immune to the damage of this trap.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 5, Positive Energy, [Safe]

Tactics: If the PCs extinguish all of the candles in the Room, the torch on the statue lights up, casting a daylight. This is true anytime the statue is taken into a dark Room. This effect cannot be controlled and only turns off when there is a light source nearby.

This Room has an undoubtedly mysterious air to it. The DM should feel free to add whatever elements are lacking to keep the PCs in this Room, examining every nook and cranny. If the PCs never disturb the idol, the Room is considered Safe.

Treasure: The golden idol wears about 50 lbs., and is worth approximately 1,000 gold pieces.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the lightning bolt trap to a cham lightning trap and increase the damage by +1 per die. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the lightning bolt to 6d6 and the stray bolts to 2d6.

B46. BUGBEAR FOREWORD POST

A crude map of the dungeon, written in rough, goblinoid script, hangs on the southern wall. It marks the locations of various rooms, and the rune for goblin is repeated over and over on its surface. Standing in the center of the room are three tall goblinoids, with sharp fangs and heavy coats of fur. They are armed and angry, roaring with a defiant battle cry.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The PCs have stumbled upon a secret staging area of the bugbears, hidden among the trap infested Rooms of this Section. Safe from their goblin enemies, they plan their attacks from here. This Room provides easy passage to an expanse of unclaimed Rooms (B1 through B45), but also to the last remaining bugbear stronghold (Rooms B52 through B68).

The Room is currently occupied by three bugbears (hp 18, 16, 15). If the PCs make any sound opening the door the bugbears gain a +4 circumstance bonus to their Listen and Spot checks. If the PCs go unnoticed allow the bugbears a second Spot roll after five rounds, unless the PCs ambush them. If the bugbears notice the PCs, they become incensed by the intrusion and attack.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 2

Tactics: Caught off guard, the bugbears assault the PCs with ferocious attacks. The bugbears work individually, attacking the PC closest to them. While it is possible to parlay during battle, the bugbears are more concerned with silencing anyone that would report this Room back to Argliss (Room B75).

Treasure: While there is no treasure, per se, the map drawn on the wall can easily be copied onto parchment, giving the PCs a much needed help navigating the Region. A door near Room B6, to the north is circled and marked (in Goblin), "Knead Kee."

If the PCs spend an hour transferring the map to paper, give them a +1d3 circumstance bonus each time they make a Hide, Listen, Move Silently, Open Lock, Spot, or Search check anywhere in the Region. This map lacks Rooms B55, B57, and B59 through B62. PCs that have the map from Room B25 notice this after spending 2 hours comparing the two maps; or in 1 hour if they succeed at a DC 25 Knowledge (dungeoneering) check.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one bugbear. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

☛ Bugbear: CR 2; Medium humanoid (goblinoid); HD 3d8+3; hp 18, 16, 15; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 11, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +2; Grp +4; Atk +5 melee (1d8+2, morningstar) or +3 ranged (1d6+2, javelin); Full Atk +5 melee (1d8+2, morningstar) or +3 ranged (1d6+2, javelin); SA —; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., scent; AL CE; SV Fort +2, Ref +4, Will +1; Str 15, Dex 12, Con 13, Int 10, Wis 10, Cha 9.

Skills and Feats: Climb +3, Hide +4, Listen +4, Move Silently +6, Spot +4; Alertness, Weapon Focus (morningstar).

Skills: Bugbears have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

B47. CHAMBER OF ECHOES

Sounds echo from the walls of this vacant room. A series of noises follow giving the impression that footsteps are simply more unnatural sounds originating from the room. Human wailing surrounds you. Hanging from the ceiling is a rusty sword tied with a length of rotting rope.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The sword is a trigger for a ghoul touch trap. If the PCs find a way to remove the sword and replace its weight with something else on the rope, they can disable the trap. Otherwise, the trap triggers as soon as the PCs lower the sword from the rope.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 4, Echoes 10

Tactics: No sounds actually originate from this Room, but instead are amplified from other Regions in the dungeon. This Room has become a nexus for noise and the PCs are actually hearing conversations and battles going on in Regions E, G, I, and N.

Treasure: The sword is a masterwork longsword, that needs to be cleaned and sharpened, but otherwise has survived the ravages of age. The word "sanctify" is written along the blade in Celestial.

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the ghoul touch trap to a compacting room trap. To decrease the challenge, change the ghoul touch trap to an inflict light wounds trap.

B48. RIDDLE ROOM

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to open.

Along the western wall of this room is an immense red tapestry, covered in silver and black arcane sigils. The cloth is silk, and in perfect condition as if untouched by the passage of time. On the floor are a series of misplaced white stones, mixed with red bricks and onyx plates. On the south wall is a strange diagram showing the layout of the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is a complex puzzle requiring the PCs to make some intelligent decisions. In order to reach the tapestry, the PCs must successfully navigate the tiles. The diagram on the wall is wrong, designed to encourage interlopers to mix the order in which they stand on the tiles. PCs succeeding at a DC 20 Intelligence check or DC 15 Decipher Script check are able to read the notes and decipher them accordingly.

According to the diagram, the PCs must step on the tiles in the order White, Red, Black, Red, Black, White, Red, Black, Black, White. This of course is wrong and only if the PCs succeed at a DC 30 Decipher Script check or a DC 28 Disable Device check can they determine the pattern is illogical and (based on their knowledge of traps) a trick. While this does not help them determine the actual order, they know the diagram is incorrect.

In actuality, it doesn't matter what color they first stand on, but once a tile is touched, only that tile can be stepped on (by that PC) from that point on. Reaching each stone of that color (without touching any other stone) requires a DC 15 Balance check, unless the PC chose the red brick which are narrower and require DC 19 Balance checks.

If a PC takes the shortest route, he can clear the Room in six "jumps", reaching the tapestry on the other side. Longer routes take up to ten jumps, but all of them lead to a single 3-ft. wide bronze plate in the floor. The plate, which is below the tapestry, is safe for the PCs to stand on, no matter what color tile they chose.

Encounter Condition: [Poor Footing 3]

Tactics: If the PCs step on the wrong tile, they suffer a small discharge of energy from the tile based on the color of a tile. Stepping on a black tile out of turn causes the PC to suffer 1 point of temporary Dexterity damage (no save).

Stepping on a red tile out of turn, reduces the PC's speed by 5 ft. (no save). This lost speed is recovered at a rate of 5 ft. per day, like temporary ability score damage).

Stepping on a white tile out of turn, deals 1d4+3 fire damage (no save).

Treasure: Although it radiates no magic of any kind, if the tapestry is pulled from wall and wrapped around a humanoid, it forms into a +2 ghost touch breastplate, which permanently fuses to the wielder's body (no save). It does not prohibit sleep and is otherwise 1/2 the weight of a normal breastplate. Short of a break enchantment or similar spell, the armor cannot be removed. Wizards and rogues grabbing the tapestry too soon are in for a rude awakening.

If the PC wearing the armor is reduce to -10 hit points, the armor fades into a red mist and reappears on this wall as a tapestry again.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, introduce a fourth color (amber stones), which cause the PC to suffer 1 point of Charisma damage (no save) when stepped on. To decrease the challenge, remove the diagram (red herring) from the wall.

B49 THROUGH B68.

THE BUGBEAR ENCAMPMENTS

For centuries the bugbears dominated the other goblinoids in the Region. Neither the goblins nor the hobgoblins could match the ferocious attacks and cunning tactics of the bugbears. Where once their domain was extensive, the alliance of the goblins and remaining hobgoblins, coupled with the new zealous outlook the goblins wield, has driven the bugbears back to these few rooms in the western section of the Region.

During their reign of dominance, the bugbears spent a fair amount of time dismantling many of the celestials' traps. They took advantage of the damage the earthquake did to the Region. A few of the more complex traps were left standing, as the bugbears could simply not fathom how to disable them. The destroyed traps have been replaced by simpler ones of the bugbears' design, which they can reset and modify as they see fit.

The intimate knowledge and ever-changing array of traps have kept the bugbears safe in this domain, their final refuge. The tactics and numbers of their enemies may thwart them in the rest of the Region, but here on their home turf, they control the field and eagerly look forward to the day the goblin empire topples and they can reclaim their former greatness.

It is possible, however unlikely, for the PCs to gain the trust of the bugbears and ally themselves with them against the goblin and hobgoblins. This is quite difficult to accomplish as the bugbears view the PCs as yet another faction vying for power in the Region. If the PCs are able to gain the trust of the bugbears, they gain allies who know the Region very well and have the power to make the PCs' trek through the Region much easier. The simplest way to gain the bugbear's trust is to show them the bodies of slain goblins. Deeds, not words, have the best chance of swaying the bugbears here.

There are surprisingly few bugbears in these encampments. Many are off on sorties against the goblin empire. The few that remain plan new raids and repair the traps they have laid for the goblins.

If the bugbears believe the PCs are allied with the goblins however they will not give the PCs any chance to prove otherwise.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Roll for a Random Encounter once per hour. No Random Encounter occur in (or around) the secret chambers of Rooms B49 through B51.

1d20	Encounter
1	This section of the dungeon is unnerving. It could be the air, or the shadows, or the way the sound plays off the walls, but something about this area is disturbing. Haunted.
2	The sound of heavy footfalls echoes throughout the dungeon. A group of bugbears are out hunting goblins, or anything else invading their space. The PCs succeed at three DC 20 Move Silently checks for three consecutive rounds. If they fail any of the checks, they encounter the bugbears, as if a 19 had been rolled on this table.
3-12	Nothing
13	The PCs have stumbled upon a trap. ♦ Stone Blocks from Ceiling: CR 3; mechanical; location trigger; repair reset; Atk +10 melee (4d6, stone blocks); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 20.
14	A pack of 1d4+2 worgs wanders the dungeon. They are not hunting the PCs, and have only a 25% chance of noticing the PCs. If the PCs do not wish to confront the worgs, they must succeed at a DC 20 Move Silently check to avoid being noticed.
15	A pair of bugbears are resetting a scything blade trap. They have a 50% chance of spotting the PCs before the PCs notice them. The PCs notice the bugbears with a DC 20 Spot check. Ambush.
16	The PCs have stumbled upon a trap. ♦ Falling Block Trap: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; Atk +15 (6d6, stone block); multiple targets (can strike all targets in two adjacent specified squares); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 25.
17	A group of three ethereal marauders turn the corner and face the PCs. They are startled by the PCs' presence. They have a 50% chance of fleeing outright. Otherwise they are Unfriendly to the PCs unless attacked.
18	The PCs chance upon a violent skirmish between the bugbears and goblins down the hall. 3d6 goblins are engaged in furious combat with 2d4+1 bugbears. One of the goblins spots the PCs and both groups strike out and turn their attention to the PCs.
19	The noises of the PCs have attracted the attention of a nearby bugbear patrol. Impose a -2 penalty on the PCs' Spot or Listen checks to notice the bugbears before they attack. The party is made up of 2d4+1 bugbears armed with short spears and swords. Aughkin (Room B62) leads the patrol.
20	Bartleby the Halfling (Room B29) is inspecting a portion of the wall here. He seems intent on his work, and doesn't look up as the PCs arrive. Bartleby suffers a -4 circumstance penalty to his Listen and Spot checks for five rounds.

B49. SANCTUM

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 35 Open Locks check to open.

This hidden room is in good repair. A simple desk and chair, and a large oak bookcase are the only furnishings. The desk is empty, but a number of small bottles are scattered over the shelves of the bookcase.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bugbears never discovered the secret door in Room B51. As a result, they do not know this place exists, leaving it free from their stench. Surprisingly there are no traps or enchantments here and a DC 20 Search check reveals the Room is free of danger.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: Used a sanctum, years ago, the Room is a perfect hiding place for the PCs. If the PCs spend 4 hours resting, they recover hit points as if they had rested for a full day and can memorize spells as if they had rested for 8 hours.

B50. SECRET CHAMBER

As the PCs near the secret door on the eastern wall of Room B50, read the following.

A sliver of light spills out into the hallway from a crack in the wall. Soft grunting sounds can be heard from behind the wall.

A sliver of yellow light spills out into the hallway from a crack in the wall. Grunting sounds can be heard from behind it.

Finding the secret door requires a DC 20 Search check and a DC 20 Disable Device check to slide it open. A small, rough stone doubles as a handle, allowing the PCs to simply lift the door open. The secret door on the western wall is jammed and requires a DC 14 Strength check in addition to the Disable Device check.

As the PCs enter the Room, read the following.

An oddly-shaped room opens. In the middle of the room, set into the northern wall, is a stone door. The room contains no furnishings other than a stack of four strongboxes, one on top of the other. Wherever the sound was coming from is gone for now.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is more of a causeway, used by the celestials to shuffle about behind the scenes. There is nothing here to explore (except the strongboxes), but opening the doors could prove a challenge to the PCs.

This Room contains three hidden doors. Whichever one the PCs came through stays open for 2d6 rounds before closing. After that, they can easily find and open the door again.

The door on the northeastern wall leads to Room B49 and requires a DC 30 Search check to find and a DC 30 Open Lock check to open. The same is true of opening it from the other side. This secret door remains open for 1d6 rounds.

The secret door on the southeastern wall leads to a long corridor and the secret door on the western wall open into a north-south corridor (that leads to either Room B52 or B53). Finding either secret door requires a DC 20 Search check and a DC 20 Disable Device check to slide it open. A small, rough stone double as a handle, allowing the PCs to merely lift the door open.

The secret door on the western wall can easily be found from the inside, but requires a DC 14 Strength check to open in addition to the Disable Device check.

The door to the north is locked (from both sides) and requires a DC 28 Open Lock check to open. The small interior chamber leads to another, similar locked door that is also locked on both sides.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 6, Safe

Tactics: The sounds the PCs heard was the dungeon playing tricks on their ears. There is no one here, but when the doors are closed and the PCs stand just outside it seems like there is.

Treasure: All four boxes are equally weighted and none make any sound when shook. The third strongbox, however, is the only one with anything in it. All four are locked.

In the third box, strapped to the inside of the lid, are five potions — cure light wounds, magic weapon (oil), mage armor, protection from evil, and sanctuary.

B51. PRIVATE STUDY

The door leading to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 35 Open Locks check to open.

This is a simply furnished room, with a small cot and a table. A tattered pillow and blanket rest on the cot, and both reek of mold and mildew. Upon the table is a shiny, gold ring and a hefty book.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Before the doppelganger Argliss took over the goblin empire, he made this Room his home. Well-hidden, it proved a solid base of operations to fall back to. While he spent years living here, he never returned after becoming king. Knowing his journal was safe, he left the Room as is, hoping one day to trap something with his ruse.

The ring on the table is rigged to a fire trap that is designed to consume the book and harm those who would trespass. The fire trap is carefully placed and disabling the trap is far more difficult than it seems.

♣ Fire Trap: CR 6; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (fire trap, 7th-level wizard, 1d4+7 fire, DC 16 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 34.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: If the PCs disable the trap on the ring (a hefty task), the ring and the book are theirs. The book is Argliss' journal. It details his encounters with the halfling Bartleby (Room B28). The doppelganger is quite upset with the loss of the artifact Bartleby seeks. Bartleby is allowed to keep any other artifacts he finds in the Region as payment, provided the artifact is returned to Argliss.

While it does not say anywhere in the journal that Argliss is a doppelganger, it does allude to strange circumstances where he is not always a goblin. Allow the PCs a DC 20 Decipher Script check or a DC 25 Gather Information check to deduce he is a barghest. If they succeed at a DC 26 Decipher Script check or a DC 31 Gather Information check, they realize he is not a barghest, but a doppelganger. The DM should make these checks secretly, so the PCs don't know whose information to trust.

Treasure: The last page of the journal is a scroll of fire trap. The ring radiates Strong transmutation magic and appears to be a ring of chameleon power if the PCs cast identify on it. It is actually a cursed ring of inescapable location (like the amulet) with several side effects. First, it causes the wearer to automatically be scryed when a spellcaster is looking for him (no check is made). In addition, the wearer can never turn invisible, no matter the strength of the spell. It also causes the wearer to be constantly under the effect of a zone of truth and his alignment can be detected by any paladin or lawful good cleric without a spell. Lastly, while the wearer's alignment does not change, he cannot violate any lawful good tenets, including killing innocents, betraying a trust, or deceiving a fellow man. While he doesn't have to always behave "lawful good," he does have to monitor is more obvious actions. This powerful magic item was here when Arglliss moved in and he never put it on, for fear of the celestial's games.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Search DC of the fire trap by +5. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Disable Device DC of the fire trap by -5.

B52. STRAY DIRE WOLF

You hear a low, deep growl as you approach an open chamber ahead. A wandering dire wolf stalks the hallways, its hackles raised. It snarls at you, baring its fangs menacingly from the darkness ahead.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A lone dire wolf (hp 50) roams the hallways, apparently lost. It has been here for some time and grows more agitated as the hours roll on. When the PCs enter the Room, the wolf attacks.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Fearless

Tactics: This dire wolf is fast and agile. Having roamed these halls for sometime, it is worked up. The dire wolf gains the benefit of Improved Initiative and Mobility even though it lacks these feats.

In combat, it attacks the closest PC, and continues attacking until it is subdued or the PCs are dead. It trips PCs on each attack, moving onto the next PC, once one is down. If two PCs are down at the same time, it takes a round to bite a prone PC before moving on. Animal Empathy checks to calm the dire wolf suffer a -5 circumstance penalty.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the water-filled room trap to a flooding room trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the DC of the Disable Device and Search checks by -5.

B54. THE BUGBEAR PACK LEADERS' HALL

This massive room is furnished with hides and skulls, trophies of a more prosperous time for the bugbears. The walls are rough, and covered in crude runes and hairline cracks. The floor is stained badly, and scraps of bone litter it. In the middle of the room is a squat, wide table with a large map placed on it. Around the room are four bugbears. The largest snarls at you and reaches for his club.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Unless the PCs have spoken with Aughkin (Room B62) the three bugbears (hp 21, 18, 16) in this Room attack the PCs without hesitation. If the PCs have spoken with Aughkin, the bugbears Initial Attitude is Unfriendly instead and they do not attack the PCs.

While the bugbears' attitude is Unfriendly, the PCs can negotiate with them, deferring to their leader, Sharpfang (hp 25). Sharpfang is particularly ornery and pays the barest amount of lip service to Aughkin's "presumed" status within the encampment. He humors the PCs to increase his own stature and gain respect from his fellow bugbears.

His knowledge is limited to the goblin and bugbear war. Sharpfang does not give the PCs any insights about traps and what to expect in the dungeons. A DC 15 Sense Motive check reveals that Sharpfang does not care if the PCs fall victim to the traps in the dungeon or not. He could give the PCs valuable information, but he chooses not to.

Sharpfang and his raiding party created the map on the table. It details the bugbear encampment and the goblin empire (Rooms B52 through B91). While it is marked with various dots and splotches, the placement is incomprehensible to the PCs. Only Sharpfang is sure what the markings mean, and he refuses to tell the PCs anything about them.

If the PCs call him on this refusal to help, Sharpfang gets angry. If the PCs continue the push the issue he attacks.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: Sharpfang attacks the strongest PC, while his subordinates watch his flank, striking any PCs who get near him.

Skills: Bugbears have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

B53. THE RESERVOIR

Towards the back of this large room is a low, circular well. The well's placement is reminiscent of a town square fountain. The principle difference is that the well has no discernable bottom. In front of the well is a small sack with gems spilling out of it.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bugbears use this Room to dispose of captured goblins and other creatures, having placed the gems here to lure goblin patrols. Lifting the sack triggers the pressure sensitive plate underneath.

▲ Water-Filled Room Trap: CR 4; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; multiple targets (all targets in 10-ft. by 10-ft. room); never miss; onset delay (5 rounds); liquid; Search DC 17; Disable Device DC 23.

B55. A BLACK PEARL?

The secret door leading to this has not been found in centuries. The PCs must succeed at a DC 40 Search check to find this secret door. It is completely flush with the stone and even if they know its there, they only gain a +4 competence bonus to locate a groove in the wall. If successful, they pry open a 4-ft. wide door that allows access to the Room.

This room is cramped due to a large pedestal that takes up the center of the room. The top of the pedestal is covered in black velvet. Nestled in the center of the velvet is a single, flat black stone. Oddly, there is no dust in the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: If the PCs aren't paranoid about the traps in this Region, they haven't tried hard enough. Chances are they believe the stone is trapped, seeing it resting on a pedestal, unguarded. In fact, it isn't. The PCs merely need to walk up and lift the stone from the pedestal. But they don't have to know that.

Encounter Condition: [Drafty]

Tactics: If the door to this Room is left ajar, it creates a draft, that sweeps through, threatening to blow out torches.

Treasure: The pearl on the pedestal is actually a bead of force. While it does not possess the resilient sphere ability of a normal bead of force, it does deal 8d8 holy damage on impact.

B56. THE BUGBEAR'S WORKSHOP

A large workbench stretches along the northern wall. Tools lie haphazardly on top of, and underneath it. Shelves lying against the western wall contain scraps of iron and brass and copper. Off in a corner of the room are piles of leather and rope.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Whether it is a new spear or a piece of a deadly trap, if the bugbears need it they make it in this Room. The tools are handmade and crude, but they serve their purpose. The bugbears are not master craftsmen by any means, but they do good work and their cunning in devising traps has served them well.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 2

Tactics: If the PCs succeed at DC 25 Listen checks, they hear grunts coming from the other side of the wall. While the secret door here is not obvious, there is enough of a gap for sound to come through. The secret door leads to Room B57 and requires a DC 25 Search check to find. It does not appear on the map in Room B25 and therefore the PCs do not get a bonus to find it.

If the PCs make a great deal of noise, allow the bugbears in Room B57 Listen checks to notice them.

Treasure: The workshop contains scraps of iron, brass and copper as well as multiple shavings of wood. There is also a small pile of leather and rope. The tools themselves are worthless, simple things made for large hands.

B57. THE BUGBEAR'S ARMORY

This room serves as the armory. Aside from the various weapons that adorn the racks and shelves in this room, you can't help but notice a group of surly goblinoids, seven ft. tall, and covered in fur. They are sorting through scrounged debris and piles of stones, as they look up to see you.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Unlike the majority of Rooms in their domain, the armory of the bugbears is not abandoned. Three bugbears (hp 24, 17, 15) have just returned from a patrol and are sorting through some of the supplies they've scrounged (rope, wood, etc.). They do not take kindly to intrusions, especially in one of their hidden caches.

If they do not hear or see the PCs coming, they are surprised, but ready for battle nonetheless.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The bugbears attack the closest PCs, and stay in a tight group. They use their size to their advantage and do everything they can to push the fight into the hall. Weak PCs are easy targets and the bugbears hurl whatever they can find at pesky spellcasters who launch spells from the back of the party.

Treasure: The armory contains a dozen short spears, three longswords, six short swords, eight greatclubs, and an assortment of rope, stones, wire, wood, and anything else they could manage to scrounge.

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two bugbears. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

B58. SUPPLY ROOM

Empty barrels and empty shelves fill this room; a supply depot, in serious need of supplies by all appearances. Only scraps of iron and leather, and a few sticks, are currently in stock.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bugbears store spare parts for their traps, as well as additional supplies for making weapons here. The current lack of supplies indicates how bad off the bugbears currently are in their campaign against the goblins.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The supply room contains scraps of iron and leather, as well as a few bundles of short sticks that could possibly be used for spears.

EL: N/A

B59. SLEEPING QUARTERS

Various animal hides and blankets cover the floor. You get the impression this is a communal sleeping room for the remaining bugbears. The room feels safe and secure, and you can understand why the bugbears chose it. Fortunately for you, it is deserted at present.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bugbears, when not out raiding, retreat here to rest. They have claimed a great number of safe rooms in their small domain, and use them to their advantage. Other than the animal hides covering the floor, this Room is empty.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The animal hides on the floor could possibly be used for barter, or the PCs own personal use. Aside from those the room hold no treasure.

B60. ENTRANCEWAY TO THE INNER SANCTUM

The secret door can be found by the PCs with a DC 25 Search check. While the door is secret, it is also locked. Opening the secret door requires a DC 30 Open Lock check be placed in a small catch in the wall. Alternatively, the PCs can use Aughkin's (Room B62) key, which requires them to encounter him as a Random Encounter.

Fine, almost powdery, rubble litters the floor of this room. Along the west wall are three separate doors. Based on the contents, its safe to assume this is a store room for the inhabitants of the dungeon.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bugbears have utilized the resources left behind by the celestials well. They survive the vicious goblin attacks mainly because their guerrilla tactics and cunning make them hard to find. The lock on the secret door makes it more difficult still even for knowing goblins to enter. The bugbears private quarters are located off of this Room.

Even with the protection of a secret entrance, the bugbears take no chances. The rubble strewn about the floor of this Room should tip off the PCs to another bugbear trap.

Encounter Condition: Hazardous Footing 14

Tactics: If the PCs make too much noise here, roll for a Random Encounter.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of stone blocks from ceiling trap to 5d8. To decrease the challenge, change the stone blocks from ceiling trap to a bricks from ceiling trap.

B61. THE HEALER

This room seems out of place. While other rooms in this stretch of the dungeon are either wide, empty halls or small, cramped cells, this room is ... cozy. A large goblinoid sits placidly in the center of the room, adding to the overall strangeness of the scene. His hair is white, perhaps from age, and his manner is calm and unobtrusive.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This bugbear, known only as Healer (hp 24), is quiet and serene, and imposing. Standing a full 7 ft. high, Healer is white-haired and appears very wise. The Healer is not typical of the bugbears by any means. He has lived long enough to understand that war between the goblinoid tribes is unnecessary, but an irrefutable fact of their heritage. He has resigned himself to seclusion.

He could care less about the PCs' presence, but helps them out — giving them medicinal herbs to heal their wounds — if asked. The Healer does not "waste" magical healing on the PCs, unless the PCs have proven themselves to be stoic allies of the bugbears first. He reserves his magic for his comrades, unsure of when the goblins could attack next.

The PCs can ask Healer about the bugbears, he answers their questions to the best of his abilities. He is tired of the war and simply wishes to be left undisturbed in his sanctuary. If the PCs are in the Room for more than one hour, the Healer starts to get agitated and his attitude shifts from Indifferent to Unfriendly.

The Healer never attacks the PCs first. If the PCs attack him, however, he will do his best to subdue the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 2, Safe

Tactics: The Healer calls upon his deity to protect him from the PCs, alternating between casting spells and attacking the nearest PC with his +1 morningstar. He casts entropic shield before a fight breaks out and calm emotions once things get heated.

Treasure: The medicine herbs Healer carries heal 1d4+1 points of damage each and he has a enough medicine to make make 2d12 doses for the PCs.

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two bugbears. To decrease the challenge, remove one cleric level from Healer.

▲ Healer, Bugbear Clr 3: CR 3; Medium humanoid (goblinoid); HD 3d8+3 + 3d8+3; hp 36; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 11, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +4; Grp +6; Atk +8 melee (1d8+3, +1 morningstar); Full Atk +8 melee (1d8+3, +1 morningstar); SA Spells, turn/rebuke undead; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., scent; AL N; SV Fort +5, Ref +5, Will +6; Str 14, Dex 12, Con 13, Int 12, Wis 14, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Climb +3, Diplomacy +2, Heal +7, Hide +4, Listen +4, Knowledge (nature) +4, Knowledge (religion) +4, Move Silently +6, Spot +4; Alertness, Brew Potion, Weapon Focus (morningstar).

Typical Cleric Spells Prepared (4/4/3, save DC 12 + spell level): 0—detect magic, detect poison, light, resistance; 1st—comprehend language, entropic shield, sanctuary; 2nd—calm emotions, cure moderate wounds; 3rd—hold person.

Skills: Bugbears have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

Possessions: Masterwork studded leather armor, +1 morningstar, potion of cure light wounds, masterwork healer's kit.

B62. THE RETIRED PACK LEADER

Cramped and reeking of rotten meat, this small room is dominated by an aging goblinoid. Even seated, you can tell he is well over seven feet tall and a mass of fibrous muscles waiting to snap. His hair is gray and mottled, and deep scars line the bugbear's face, chest and hands.

If the PCs do not surprise the bugbear, add the following.

Staring at you from his perch, his one good eye searches deeply, curious about you. He seems to be having the same trouble reading you as you have reading him.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The creature in this Room is a bugbear named Aughkin (hp 55). He is old and of no use in raiding parties. However he has lived a long time, an indication of intelligence to this bugbear tribe. The others keep him here and rely on his wisdom and stories of past adventures to help plan bolder raids into the goblin expanses. While he would rather be in the thick of a raiding party, he is content to guide the younger bugbears to victory over the accursed goblins. He does not advise in matters he considers suicide, and whether the true leader or not, still treats his "men" with the dignity and respect due soldiers.

With a DC 25 Diplomacy check, the PCs can convince Aughkin they are not here to harm him or the bugbears. Aughkin and Healer (Room B61) are willing to hear the PCs out and perhaps reach an agreement, but this requires roleplaying, not die rolling and ultimately is the decision of the DM. Should they reach an accord, word spreads amongst the bugbears that the PCs can be trusted and the two groups should work together.

If attacked, or enraged, Aughkin attacks the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: Aughkin would rather not fight, but he is not afraid of death. He has become a good advisor by thinking before he acts. If forced into battle, Aughkin does not hesitate, however. He launches himself at the PCs with a ferocity rarely seen in bugbears half his age. He gains the benefit of rage, despite not being a barbarian, and tackles the nearest PC he can find. If he gets a PC on the ground, Aughkin grabs ahold of the PC's neck and threatens to snap it if the others do not back off. Because of the size of Aughkin's hands, he deals 1d4+1 damage while grappling and is considered Large, even though he's a Medium creature.

Treasure: Aughkin does not keep anything in his chambers that does not serve him in warfare. Clothing and magical aid are given to his men and for himself, he's kept a simple +1 dagger. If the PCs spend 30 minutes searching the Room, allow them to find an old journal (written in Goblin) that tells of his younger days as a soldier and his recent years as a leader, unwilling to jeopardize his men.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two bugbears. To decrease the challenge, remove two fighter levels from Aughkin.

▲ Aughkin, Bugbear Ftr 5: CR 6*; Medium humanoid (goblinoid); HD 3d8 + 5d10; hp 41; Init +4; Spd 30 ft.; AC 13, touch 10, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +7; Grp +8; Atk +10 melee (1d4+2/19–20, +1 dagger); Full Atk +10 melee (1d4+2/19–20, +1 dagger); SA —; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., scent; AL CE; SV Fort +5, Ref +4, Will +4; Str 12, Dex 10, Con 10, Int 12, Wis 14, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Climb +4, Craft (whittling) +9, Hide +4, Listen +7, Move Silently +6, Perform (storytelling) +7, Spot +6; Alertness, Improved Initiative, Iron Will, Skill Focus (perform [storytelling]), Weapon Focus (dagger), Weapon Specialization (dagger).

Skills: Bugbears have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

Possessions: +1 dagger, whittling stick.

* Aughkin's age and lack of equipment make him CR 6 instead of CR 7.

B63. GOTCHA!

Stark, this room is nearly identical to the many rooms in the dungeon. The one feature that distinguishes it however is an intricate pattern of tiles on the floor. The tiles are covered in layer of dust however, and it is difficult to discern anything specific about them. Hanging on the wall, across from you, is a finely crafted spear.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bugbears like to capture the occasional goblin, as they sometimes prove to be reliable sources of information. While the rest of the traps the bugbears have laid out in their domain are lethal, this Room is not. Any goblins captured in this Room are brought to Room B53 for interrogation.

The tiles on the floor are the trap's trigger; an alternating black and white pattern (like a checker board). PCs stepping on black tiles trigger a large net trap, while stepping on white tiles is safe. To disable the trap the PCs must find a specific black tile in the southwest corner of the Room where the trap's reset is located. Finding the tile is easy enough, requiring a DC 20 Search check. However, lifting the tile and disarming the trap is another issue entirely. There are a series of twelve buttons, in three different colors (black, red, white) that must be depressed in a specific order. A successful DC 20 Disable Device indicates that the buttons must be pressed in pairs. Failure on this check indicates that the colors are directly related to the tiles on the floor.

A second DC 23 Disable Device check indicates that the buttons must be pressed in order — red, black, white. Failure on this check indicates the order is black, white, red.

Lastly, the PCs are allowed a third Disable Device check (this time at a DC 26) to determine the exact pairs that need to be depressed. Obviously, if the PCs fail this check, they choose the wrong pair.

If a button is ever pressed out of order (or pressed in correspondence to the incorrect pair), the PC triggers a trap based on the color. The black button triggers ghoulish touch, the red button triggers burning hands, and the white button shocking grasp.

▲ Large Net Trap: CR 3; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; Atk +5 melee (see note); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20/23/26. Note: Characters in a 10-ft. square are grappled by net (Str 18) if they fail a DC 14 Reflex save.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: PCs succeeding at a DC 20 Disable Device check realize that the mechanism for protecting the large net is more complicated than the net itself, hinting that at one time the trap was more than just a net. Once the trap is disabled, the Room is safe until the bugbears reset it (in 2d6 hours).

It is recommended that the DM make the Disable Device checks in private, lest the PCs get wise to the trap's function.

Treasure: The spear is a masterwork spear, but nothing more. It is the bait by which all goblins are tricked into entering this Room. PCs that lifted the special black tile are allowed DC 25 Spot checks. Those who succeed realize that the buttons are built into a locking hinge that hide a compartment underneath. If they successfully disable all three traps, they can lift the mechanism (requiring a DC 25 Open Lock check) to find a pair of magical daggers. One of the daggers is a +2 good outsiderbane daggers, while the other is a +2 feybane dagger.

DMs running strictly good campaigns are encouraged to change these to daggers to a +2 lawful outsiderbane dagger and a +2 chaotic outsiderbane dagger, lest the PCs be stuck with daggers they'll never use.

EL: 3, 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the large net trap to a camouflaged pit trap. To decrease the challenge, change the large net trap to a portcullis trap.

B64. A LONG WAY DOWN

This simple chamber is quite nondescript, except for a pair of high quality longswords abandoned in the center of the room. Two gems, in the opposite wall stare back at you, like a pair of red eyes.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Like Room B63, the bugbears set up a simple pit trap to snare goblin scouts. The longswords have been left to lure the unsuspecting goblins into a trap. If that doesn't work, the gems in the wall will.

The floor beneath the longswords (5-ft. by 5-ft. square) can only support 10 lbs. before it opens, dropping the victim(s) into the pit below. A locking mechanism is located behind a panel in the eastern wall. Once the switch is flipped, the doors to the pit do not open and the PCs can travel across the Room safely.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The gems are only painted glass, designed to lure goblins across the Room. They cannot be removed from the wall, short of a DC 40 Disable Device check. If removed, the bugbears replace them in 1d3 days. This trap is either an indication that bugbears aren't very inventive or that goblins aren't hard to trick.

Treasure: The two spears are masterwork longswords, which the PCs are free to take once they have circumvented the trap. The gems are worthless glass.

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the depth of the pit trap by 20 ft. To decrease the challenge, reduce depth of the pit trap by 20 ft.

B65. STORAGE

The door to this Room is locked. A DC 30 Open Lock check is required to unlock this door. The smell of death (inside) is evident before the PCs open the door.

As soon as you open the door, the smell of death assaults you. This small room has a small pile of dead goblins, who are rotting. Flies and maggots fill the air, escaping passed and into the open air. Stacked along the walls are all manner of wood beams, spikes, polearms, and tripwires.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is filled with the tools and equipment for making traps (not to mention a half-dozen dead goblins). It looks as though it is regularly used, but how the bugbears endure the stench is another story.

Encounter Condition: Diseased (mind fire) 12, Stagnant Air

Tactics: While mind fire is normally inhaled, if the PCs avoid touching the goblins, they gain a +2 to the Fortitude save to resist the mind fire. Make this save (in secret) 10 minutes after the PCs exit the Room.

Treasure: If the PCs have the stomach for it, they can search the dead bodies, finding a total of 36 sp, 14 cp, a key to the door in Room B80, and a potion of jump.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B66. BUGBEAR HIDEOUT

Unless the PCs succeed at a DC 30 Move Silently check while opening the lock, read the following.

If the PCs succeed in picking the lock quietly, read the following.

This Room is enormous. The vaulted ceiling and painted walls make this Room appear larger than life. Pacing about the room, sharpening weapons, and sifting through crates are eight tall, grizzly goblinoids covered in mottled fur, their jagged teeth exposed. They do not notice you, keeping to their activities.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly or Hostile

Encounter: Eight bugbears (hp 18) are using this Room to plan a raid on the goblins. Normally, they are mobilized, moving about the halls, but these bugbears have a plan up their sleeve. They intend to gather their strength together, sneak through the maze (Room B92), and attack the sleeping goblin army from behind. By striking from the far end of the goblin empire, they hope to distract the main arm of the army and send a smaller force to kill the goblin king.

If the bugbears do not notice the PCs, they continue planning their attack. However, every round that goes by, allow one of them a Spot check to notice the PCs. If the PCs watch for too long, the bugbears assume they are spies and attack. If the PCs approach peacefully, however, there is an opportunity to work with the bugbears. Allow the PCs to role-play through the situation or use Diplomacy to diffuse the hostilities.

If attacked, or enraged, Aughkin attacks the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: If the PCs try to strike a bargain the bugbears, Oskin (the largest of the eight) listens to what the PCs have to say and if he trusts them, invites them to help on the raid, asking them to attack from the north while they use the maze to disguise their approach.

In combat, the bugbears fight to silence the PCs. Two rush to block the door, while the rest flank the PCs. Oskin directs the battle for two rounds before attacking the largest PC. They are tireless fighters and have no qualms about killing the PCs.

Treasure: All of the bugbears carry masterwork weapons and are prepared for battle. Oskin carries two potions of cure light wounds and a potion of bull's strength.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two bugbears. To decrease the challenge, remove two.

☛ Bugbear: CR 2; Medium humanoid (goblinoid); HD 3d8+3; hp 18; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 11, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +2; Grp +4; Atk +6 melee (1d8+2, morningstar) or +4 ranged (1d6+2, javelin); Full Atk +6 melee (1d8+2, morningstar) or +4 ranged (1d6+2, javelin); SA —; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., scent; AL CE; SV Fort +2, Ref +4, Will +1; Str 15, Dex 12, Con 13, Int 10, Wis 10, Cha 9.

Skills and Feats: Climb +3, Hide +4, Listen +4, Move Silently +6, Spot +4; Alertness, Weapon Focus (morningstar).

Skills: Bugbears have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

B67. THE LAST LINE OF DEFENSE

This room is large, and appears empty, but something about it bristles and is menacing. There are no signs of the goblins occupying this room, so it must still be in the domain of the bugbears. Why they have chosen to leave it empty is a mystery however.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bugbears have littered this Room with as many traps as possible. If the goblins seek to take their final hidden refuge (Room B68), the bugbears plan on exacting a heavy toll.

Scattered around the Room are six different traps, each placed in such a way that the PCs cannot avoid them all if they move between the door on the western and northeastern walls. The DM is free to trigger as many or as few of the following traps as he likes. The basic arrow and spear traps occur three times throughout the Room and the dart traps occur twice.

☛ Fusillade of Darts: CR 1; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; Atk +10 ranged (1d4+1, dart); multiple targets (fires 1d4 darts at each target in two adjacent 5-ft. squares); Search DC 14; Disable Device DC 20.

☛ Spear Trap: CR 1; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; Atk +12 ranged (1d8/×3, spear); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20. Note: 200-ft. max range, target determined randomly from those in its path.

☛ Swinging Block Trap: CR 1; mechanical; touch trigger; manual reset; Atk +5 melee (4d6, stone block); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The object of this Room is to introduce the PCs to the traps of the Region. The bugbears are not likely to invite strangers in and this Room is designed to encourage PCs to find another way in. Getting to Room B68, the PCs find it a dead-end and now have to move across the Room again. Unless 1d4 hours have passed since they moved through this Room, the bugbears have not reset this trap.

Unlike other trapped Rooms in this Section, there are no dead goblins here. If the PCs enter this Room from the secret door to the south, it is not as important to "hurt" the PCs with this Room, since they are more than aware of the Region's dangers. It is recommended the PCs feel discouraged, but not killed by this Room.

The door to the South leads to a secret door, that requires a DC 22 Search check to locate. The secret door is locked, but a simple DC 25 Open Lock check allows the PCs to spin the door open on its central axis.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, allow two traps to go off at the same time. To decrease the challenge, have each trap occur only once.

B68. REFUGE

Lined with empty supply racks, this room feels safe and secure. Currently there is nothing in the room aside from the empty shelves.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: If the goblins ever overrun the bugbear encampments, the bugbears plan to fall back to this Room. Guarded by the traps in Room B67, they can wage a war of attrition against the goblins to the very end. They know that if things become this dire that they are doomed, but they plan on taking as many goblins as they can with them.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: If the PCs admit to the bugbears that they have entered the refuge shifts their Attitude one step closer to Hostile. Once Hostile, the bugbears attack the PCs on sight in all future encounters - having spread the word.

Treasure: There are a few daggers, arrows, and the like, but nothing of value. Allow the PCs to resupply up to 1d20 arrows, bolts, darts, and 1d6 spears.

B69 THROUGH B90. THE HOLY GOBLIN EMPIRE

These rooms encompass the might of the goblin empire that has recently been forged by their new king, Argliiss (see sidebar The Goblin King) in the name of their new god.

Musty smells and dampness unknown in the rest of the dungeon fill the air here. The traps laid by the celestials still work, and the goblins learned long ago to avoid the rooms that contain them.

From these rooms the goblins have unleashed a vicious war of conquest and retribution against the bugbears and rebel goblin faction. Had the hobgoblins not accepted the offer to join Argliiss, no doubt they too would feel the goblins' wrath.

If the PCs have allied themselves with the bugbears (Rooms B51-B68), they will have a difficult time concealing their activities from the goblins. The goblins are highly suspicious of newcomers and attack any on sight. Only a command from their king stays their hand. Argliiss does not give the PCs free passage if he has any reason to believe that the PCs has allied themselves with any group other than his fledgling empire.

Bugbears occasionally enter the goblin empire to wreck havoc. If the PCs have allied themselves with the bugbears and do not assist them here, word gets back and any inroads the PCs have with the bugbears are shattered.

16	A group of three bugbear raiders are returning to camp. If the PCs are allied with the bugbears, the patrol's Attitude is Indifferent. Otherwise, they are Hostile and attack the PCs.
17	A lone bugbear is lost in the goblin warrens. It stumbles upon the PCs, almost by accident. Ambush.
18	1d4+1 hobgoblins (half mounted on worgs) and 2d6 goblins hunt a retreating band of bugbears. If the PCs are allied with the goblins, the patrol's Attitude is Indifferent. Otherwise, they are Hostile and attack the PCs.
19	Argliiss (Room B75), mounted on a yeth hound, and 1d4+1 hobgoblins and 2d6+2 goblins inspect the Section. Argliiss is investigating rumors of strange visitors or a bugbear raid (DM's choice).
20	The halfling Bartleby hurries through the hall. He has just come from a visit with the Goblin King. While he is allied with the goblins, he does not like them, and he moves through the halls deftly, receiving a +5 circumstance bonus to his Move Silently checks.

B69. THE SENTRIES

Most likely, the goblins spot the PCs long before they do. If for some reason, they do not and sneak up on the patrol, read the following.

The hallway stretches before you, a group of goblins stands guard. They are strangely well organized, and well equipped. Each carries a short spear and buckler, methodically patrolling the hallway moving about 10 ft. in each direction.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A patrol has been stationed here to prevent bugbears from entering the empire by the most obvious route. Due to their darkvision, they can see enemies coming and due to the darkness of the halls, they are more than likely to see PC torches. As a result, the six goblins (hp 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 4) – who rotate their patrol with the goblins in Room B70 – prepare to ambush the PCs, sending for reinforcements while they wait inside the various nearby hiding places.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Cover

Tactics: As soon as the goblins spot the PCs, they take up defensive positions in the nearby halls, while the smallest two run to Room B70 for reinforcements. Depending on how the PCs approach, they either wait for the PCs to pass (coming from the west) or head straight there (coming from the south or east). It takes 1 round to reach Room B70 and 1d3+1 rounds for the goblins inside to get their gear together.

These goblins have been trained by the hobgoblins. Instead of swarming the PCs, they form up into a ranks, four goblins abreast. They advance on the PCs stabbing the closest with their spears. The goblins hold their bucklers facing forward, offering more protection (+1 competence bonus to AC) to the goblin on their left. The goblins allow the PCs to rush them, fighting better close in. In addition, due to their training and how they carry their spears, they have learned to use Improved Sunder and Power Attack, despite having only a 12 Strength.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, give the goblins total cover for the first 3 rounds of combat. To decrease the challenge, have reinforcements arrive in 2d3+1 rounds.

TACTICS OF THE HOLY GOBLIN EMPIRE

Under the guidance of the hobgoblins, the goblin forces loyal to Arglist the Goblin King are quite formidable. They wield short spears and wooden bucklers, attacking foes in well-coordinated phalanx maneuvers. They advance on their enemies with the cold precision that has been drilled into them by their hobgoblin taskmasters.

The hobgoblins, for their part, have formed an effective cavalry unit. Mounted on trained worgs, the hobgoblins dart in and out of their foes, flanking them with rapid attacks. The bugbears and rebel goblins have not had success against these new tactics. The lightning attacks of the hobgoblins, coupled with the relentless attacks of the foot soldiers have proved to be an effective combination.

B70. FORWARD OUTPOST

If the goblins did not assist the patrol in Room B69, read the following.

This long room is an outpost for goblin patrols. Nearly a dozen goblins mill about, going through their grind of cleaning weapons and so on.

If the goblins did assist the patrol in Room B69, read the following.

This long room is an outpost for the goblins. The goblin reinforcements spilled out of this room, leaving nothing behind. A few hides are laid out in precise rows for sleeping. Now empty weapon racks rest against the western wall of the room. These aren't typical chaotic goblins. They are a well-disciplined.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: If the ten goblins (hp 9, 8, 6, 6, 6, 6, 5, 5, 4, 3) in this Room did not assist the goblin patrol in Room B69, they are present. They gather their equipment (requiring a move action) and attack the PCs.

If the goblins did assist the patrol, then this Room is empty.

Encounter Condition: Cover (soft)

Tactics: These goblins have been trained by the hobgoblins. Instead of swarming the PCs, they form up into ranks, four goblins abreast, two rows deep. The smallest two goblins escape through the north door, to get reinforcements from Rooms B71, B72, and B73. Alternately, they throw javelins from the rear ranks.

They advance on the PCs stabbing the closest PCs with their spears. They hold their bucklers facing forward, offering more protection (+1 training bonus to AC) to the goblin on their left. The goblins allow the PCs to rush them, fighting most effectively in close proximity. In addition, due to their training and how they carry their spears, they have learned to use Improved Sunder and Power Attack, despite having only a 12 Strength.

This is not an easy encounter, but should be an indication to the PCs that this Section is not easy. These goblins are not push overs and the point is to show them quickly that challenging the goblins maybe harder than they thought (which is why the bugbears have trouble fighting them).

Treasure: There are 1d20 javelins and 1d6 spears that survive the battle in this Room. If the PCs did not fight the goblins here, double the number of weapons found. In addition, there are four additional suits of leather armor (goblin).

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have Haglar Quickwhip (Room B71) arrives 1d3+1 rounds later (without the goblins retrieving him). To decrease the challenge, remove four goblins.

B71. HAGLAR QUICKWHIP

The door opens slowly. The air reeks of unpleasant odors, but the room itself is laid out neatly. A simple cot is placed against the southern wall, while a desk with various maps and notes sits near the western wall.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Haglar Quickwhip (hp 57) is the taskmaster for the forward outpost. He also is in charge of the small gaol in Rooms B72 and B73. He is a formidable opponent and a tireless leader. He trains the goblins constantly. He drives the strong to be strong and the weak to grow up or move on. He has no patience for those who cannot keep up. Even while the patrols sleep, Haglar trains, does push-ups, and generally stays alert. He's the quintessential single-minded elite warrior.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment, Echoes 2, Fearless

Tactics: If Haglar hears the PCs coming, he prepares for an ambush, attacking from the shadows. Haglar stays out of reach of melee combat, deftly using his whip to both attack and drive back the PCs. He maneuvers around the Room as best as he can, despite the limited space. Since he is not above hurting those weaker than him, a spellcaster foolish enough to expose himself, is an easy target.

If forced into melee combat, he disarms the nearest PC and uses their weapon or a scimitar from his back scabbard (which he wields with two hands). Haglar does not call for help until he's reduced to 20 hit points or less, at which point the patrols in Rooms B69 and B70 are allowed Listen checks to see if they hear him. Due to the nature of the walls in this Room, the goblins suffer a -3 circumstance penalty to their Listen checks.

Treasure: On the desk are notes and maps referring to various enemy patrols in this Section. The notes are written in a scrawling hand, and a DC 25 Decipher Script check is necessary to make any sense of them.

If deciphered, the notes mention an increase in bugbear raids, as well as an ill-fated raid by rebel goblins. The last patrol captured a rebel, who is now locked in Room B73. The goblin king has ordered that the rebel be sacrificed to their god in two days.

In addition to his personal possessions, Haglar carries a sturdy ring of three keys. One key leads to the locked door at Room B72. Another leads to Room B73. Finally, the third leads to the worg stables in Rooms B77 through B82.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two fighter levels to Haglar Quickwhip. To decrease the challenge, remove one fighter level.

Skills: Hobgoblins have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

Possessions: Chain shirt, buckler, +1 whip, masterwork scimitar.

* While using two-hands to fight and wearing a buckler, Haglar suffers a -1 to AC and attack rolls, but he deals an additional point of damage.

B72. THE GOBLIN GAOL

The door to this Room is locked. A DC 25 Open Lock check is required to unlock it. However, there is a 15% chance that the door is also barred, requiring a DC 22 Strength check to break open (DC 26 when locked).

Strong chains and manacles hang from the walls and a cell is set in the northern wall. Faint, fearful moaning issues forth from the cell.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room serves as the detention area for anything captured by the goblin patrols in this Section of the dungeon. This gaol is overseen by Haglar Quickwhip (Room B71). If the PCs make too much noise in this Room, allow Haglar a Listen check to notice them, and arrive 1d4 rounds later.

Encounter Condition: Drafty

Tactics: The gaol is empty. The door to the north is sturdier than most, but has a patchwork lock cut into the wood. It looks jury-rigged by crude hands, as if a saw and hammer were the only available tools.

The small cell (Room B73) houses a lone goblin (G'lp). Allow the PCs a DC 24 Listen check to hear his heavy breathing/moaning/weeping.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B73. CAPTURED REBEL

The door to this cell is locked, requiring a DC 25 Open Lock check (or the key from Haglar's belt) to unlock.

Huddled far in the corner is a frightened goblin. He is startled by your presence and yelps when he notices you.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: This goblin, named G'lp (hp 3; normally 7), was part of a failed raiding party on the part of the rebel goblin factions. Once he has been assured that the patrols, especially Haglar, have been dealt with, he blubbers incoherently, attempting to explain the current situation and how the usurper who sits on the goblin throne has wronged his people.

If the PCs don't know what or who Haglar is, he assumes the hobgoblin is still alive and cries out for help (in goblin), in the hopes of carrying favor with his jailer. Haglar arrives 1d3 rounds later.

The PCs make out that there is a deep schism between the goblins, and the majority of them worship a newfound god. The current goblin king, who is also the leader of their new religion, has formed and alliance with the hobgoblins and is training an army to conquer the entire Region in the name of his deity. Any goblins that do not follow his commands are considered traitors and hunted mercilessly. The lucky ones die in combat. The unfortunate ones are captured and sacrificed in the name of this new god.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: If the PCs release him, G'lp flees the area entirely, making his way back to the rebel encampments on the far side of the Region.

If the PCs do not release G'lp, he curses the PCs vehemently, invoking the names of every stone spirit he can muster.

If the PCs welcome him into their party, he joins, trying to lead the PCs to the rebels. Otherwise, he is glad to be a "part of the team" and does his best to carry his weight. Whenever the PCs enter a Room with G'lp, there is a 35% chance that he's been here before and knows how to "bypass" the Room.

Sneak Attack: G'lp's attack deals extra damage any time his target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when G'lp flanks his target. This extra damage is 1d6. Should G'lp score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Ranged attacks can count as sneak attacks if the target is within 30 ft.

Skills: Goblins have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently and Ride checks.

B74. ANTECHAMBER OF THE GOBLIN KING

If the PCs killed Hammerfist in Room B85, he is not present here.

This large, rectangular room (almost a hallway) is polished brightly. Eighteen fierce-looking goblins, each wielding a spear, stare at you coldly. Behind them, a tall, wide-shouldered hobgoblin carries a fist shaped mallet.

If the goblins heard the PCs coming, read the following.

With quick precision they form a tight phalanx and move with deadly intent. The hobgoblin rushes madly, swinging his mallet with abandon.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: As the PCs enter the antechamber of the goblin king, they are attacked by eighteen goblin warriors (hp 8, 8, 8, 8, 8, 6, 6, 6, 6, 5, 5, 4, 3, 3, 2, 2, 2) and the captain of the king's elite guard, a huge hobgoblin named Hammerfist (hp 63). Because the goblins are in the process of training with Hammerfist, their adrenaline is up and the impending fight is just an excuse to cut loose on something.

After the three rounds of combat, the goblin king enters from Room B75, flanked by two hobgoblin guards. If the fight isn't going too poorly for his men, he orders his guardsmen to stand down, and invites the PCs into his throne room. The goblin king is articulate and polite, quite unusual for a goblin of any stature.

If more than 5 goblins have been slain, however, he directs the hobgoblins to join him as he bars the door and prepares for the PCs. In which case, the PCs are in for a tough fight. Additionally, if the PCs do not wish to speak with the goblin king, the battle continues until either the guards are dead, or the PCs are.

Tactics: These elite goblins are just now starting their training with Hammerfist. The others are either on patrol or standing guard in another area of the dungeon.

In combat, instead of swarming the PCs, they form up into ranks, six goblins abreast, three rows deep. They advance on the PCs stabbing the closest PCs with their spears. They hold their bucklers facing forward, offering more protection (+2 training bonus to AC) to the goblin on their left. The goblins allow the PCs to rush them, gaining attacks of opportunity as the PCs move into their threat range.

Hammerfist on the other hand, hunts the PCs. He does not draw attacks of opportunity if he can help it, but he does try to push past anyone who leaves an opening. Hammerfist hates for clerics and targets those openly displaying holy symbols. He is also fond of crippling attacks and targets PCs with little to no armor when he can.

Treasure: The weapons rack are filled with spears and if the PCs spend 15 minutes searching (DC 25 Search check), they can find a masterwork spear. All the spears are small, however, designed for goblins.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase each goblin's hit points by +5. To reduce the challenge of this encounter, remove six goblins.

B75. THRONE ROOM OF THE GOBLIN KING

If the PCs accepted the goblin king's offer to negotiate, read the following.

This room is large and opulently decorated. Hides from various animals are layered on the floor, while others hang as trophies or tapestries from the walls. Two large braziers cast a sinister, yet regal glow. A throne of bone and stone stands prominently in the room, and it is here the goblin king sits.

He is dressed in a bright leather vest and pants. A velvet cloak hangs from his shoulders. On his head rests a light, silver crown while he wields a multi-hued scepter in his left hand. "Welcome friends. I am Arglist, King of the Goblins and Voice of Norendithas Stoneshaper the Quickthinking, Smiter of Foes. The Stoneshaper has brought us together this day for great things I am sure. Please, hear what I have to say," the goblin king intones as you approach him.

If the PCs declined the goblin king's offer to parlay, or have snuck in, read the following.

The room is large, and well appointed for goblins, but without the pomp and circumstance of the goblin king, his court and his guards, it looks like any room that's been covered in hides. A pair of large braziers cast a ruddy glow about the room, playing off the brightly polished walls. In the center of the room is a throne of rubble and bones. Resting upon it is a scepter.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: If the PCs choose to continue the battle in Room B74, this Encounter does not happen and they are free to explore the Room as long as they wish.

The goblin king, Arglist, who is interested in the PCs' services, informs the PCs of the new destiny of the goblins. Their god, Norendithas Stoneshaper the Quickthinking, Smiter of Foes, has finally arrived and promises to lead them to power and glory.

"Any who serve the will of the Stoneshaper shall be greatly rewarded, in this life and the next!" the goblin king proclaims.

Truthfully the goblin king only wishes for more patsies to serve his whims. Arglist is very good at hiding this truth though; only a DC 30 Sense Motive check lets the PCs know the goblin king is being less than truthful.

If the PCs agree to assist the goblin king, he tasks them with killing the rebel chieftain Guk (Room B95). They must return with proof of his death. If the PCs return with proof, the goblin king welcomes them as members of the glorious empire of the Stoneshaper.

Once the PCs agree to ally with the goblin king, the elite guard files out of the room and returns to their barracks (Room B84). Hammerfist snarls at the PCs one last time before he too leaves the throne room and returns to his quarters (Room B85).

If the PCs refuse the goblin king's offer, he becomes enraged. "None defy the will of the Stoneshaper!" he shouts. Hammerfist lets loose with a bellowing war cry and is ready to charge the PCs. The goblin king halts his advance however and offers the PCs one last chance to see the error of their ways and join him.

THE GOBLIN KING

Some time ago the doppelganger Argliss entered the Region. He was amused by the goblinoids trapped here. Out of boredom, he assumed the guise of a goblin and slowly worked his way into the good graces of the reigning goblin king, Sug'kt. Soon he became a chief advisor. He relished the role of bringing a culture out from the shadows to suit his whims.

When word of the new "deity" arrived, Argliss saw a chance to improve his position amongst the goblins. He recently discovered the goblin king kept a powerful artifact hidden in his possession. Wanting it for himself, Argliss knew he would have to be the goblin king's confidante. Hoping to ingratiate himself with the goblins, he urged the king to embrace this new deity. The goblin king was incensed. Sug'kt felt he alone was the ruler of the goblins, as decreed by the ancient stone spirits his ancestors worshiped. Popular support was behind the new deity, however, and Argliss seized his chance to advance his position by staging a coup.

He declared Sug'kt a heretic and sacrificed the former king in the name of the new god of the goblins. Claiming the throne in the name of the new god, Norendithas Stoneshaper the Quickthinking, Smiter of Foes, Argliss began his quest to not only uncover this hidden artifact, but to ascertain his rulership over the entire Region.

Unable to locate the artifact, he enlisted the help of a halfling that had entered the Region (see sidebar The Halfling). Argliss believes that Bartleby will return the artifact to him, in exchange for the protection of the goblins and any trinkets he may find. While he awaits Bartleby's success, he has made strides towards ruling the dungeon.

Argliss approached the beleaguered hobgoblins, offering them a prime place in his empire. Wishing to seek revenge upon the bugbears that had tormented them so long, the hobgoblins accepted his offer. They now serve as elite guards and trainers of the goblin army.

Upon encountering the PCs, Argliss tries to ally himself with them. He feels their power and knows they could be very disruptive to his efforts. He is willing to assist the PCs in their mission, as long as they return the favor and help him wipe out the bugbears and rebel faction of goblins.

If the PCs do not accept his offer, all goblins loyal to him attack the PCs on sight.

TACTICS

Argliss is not a fighter. In the event of conflict, he orders his guards to attack while he runs off. Once the battle is engaged he changes shape to something inconspicuous and flees the area, returning to his throne room.

If Argliss is cornered and cannot escape, he uses the rod of wonder and necklace of fireballs quite liberally until he causes enough of a distraction so that he can flee.

A second refusal is all it takes. "May the Stoneshaper have mercy on your wretched souls," the goblin king says as Hammerfist and the elite guard attack the PCs.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The goblins move on Hammerfist's command. They form into lines, four wide. Instead of swarming the PCs, they form up into ranks, six goblins abreast, three rows deep. They advance on the PCs, stabbing the closest to them with their spears. They hold their bucklers facing forward, offering more protection (+2 training bonus to AC) to the goblin on their left. The goblins allow the PCs to rush them, gaining attacks of opportunity as the PCs move into their threat range.

Hammerfist goes after the weakest PC first, targeting spellcasters first. He also has a fond hatred for clerics and abuses them at every turn. He fights as intelligently as possible, stepping back when overwhelmed and taking full advantage of prone PCs.

If the goblin king is in danger, he flees to Room B74, and from there heads to Room B77. In the mean time, he uses his rod of wonder on whatever PC presents the biggest threat and his necklace of fireballs if too many goblins fall.

Treasure: If the PCs choose not to listen to the goblin king, and he is forced to flee, he leaves behind his royal scepter (laying on his throne) on a failed DC 20 Intelligence check. The scepter is a rod of wonder.

B76. PRIVATE ROOM OF THE GOBLIN KING

The door leading to Region A is locked and barred, requiring a DC 40 Open Lock check, followed by a DC 25 Strength check to open. A small chest rests against the door as well, making it difficult to open the door all the way.

The doors from Room B75 are also locked, but require a DC 30 Open Lock check to open. In both cases, the goblin king carries keys to these doors.

After you dispatch the last of the goblins, you enter this room, the private quarters of the goblin king, Argliiss. The room is very befitting of a king. Exquisite hides are piled as a comfortable bed, while others adorn the walls as tapestries. A good sized strongbox is tucked into the northeastern corner of the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: If the PCs made an alliance with the goblin king and attempt to enter this Room, they are warned that it is off limits. If they persist the goblin king calls off the alliance and orders his guards to attack the PCs. The goblin king flees before the PCs can capture or kill him, returning in 2d6 minutes with reinforcements to drive the PCs out.

This Room is luxuriously furnished with a thick layer of hides forming a comfortable sleeping area in the northwestern corner. The walls are decorated with tapestries made of similar hides. They depict the conquests and glories of the new goblin king and his god.

A small chest is situated against the northeastern wall. A DC 20 Open Lock check is required to unlock it. It contains the room's treasure (see below).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: +2 short sword, +2 leather armor (made for a goblin), +1 buckler. It is possible the PCs may wish to take the hides as well for their own personal use, or for future sales. They are large, made of worg hide, and carrying more than one proves to be cumbersome.

B77. ENTRANCE TO THE WORG STABLES

The door to this Room (leading from the eastern hall) is locked, requiring a DC 25 Open Lock check to unlock. The door leading from Region A is also locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock.

Pungent smells and keening wails saturate the air. The floor is covered — stained and scratched. Even the walls are not devoid of claw marks. Along the southern wall are a series of iron doors, much like cell doors. The room quiets for a brief moment, then it erupts into loud howls and barks. Whatever is in these cells, knows you're here.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These cells are the goblins' worg stables, the home of their vicious worg mounts. This hallway leads to the "cells" where the elite worg mounts are kept. The stables themselves are large. Most are noisy, except the one at the west end, which is deathly quiet. Due to their Scent ability, it is nearly impossible for the PCs to surprise the worgs in these cells.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 5, Echoes 2, Unhallowed 2

Tactics: This series of cell doors are sturdy and are all locked. The keys to these doors are kept by Haglar (B71), the Goblin King's (B75) bodyguards, and a handful of elite goblins.

The "cells" were used (long ago) to house demons, an effect that has caused the worgs to become even more bestial than they already are.

B78. WORG STABLE

Four large wolves sleep comfortably in this cell. Despite the barking and howling coming from the other cells, these animals are not as crazed. One of the wolves looks up as you enter the room, but quickly lies back down again.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: These four worgs (hp 36, 33, 29, 28) have just returned from a successful patrol and are tired. Although the PCs represent a threat, they are satiated from hunting and want to rest. The worgs have enough energy to defend themselves if the PCs attack them, but are considered fatigued.

Encounter Condition: Fearless, Unhallowed 2

Tactics: These worgs fight like a typical pack, tripping and grounding the weakest PC and then mauling him while prone. If a single PC gets separated from the party, or the PC attacks too quickly, the worgs surround and flank him.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the worg's Initiative check to exactly 1 after the highest PC, allowing them to ambush the "impulsive PC." Alternately, add two worgs. To decrease the challenge, remove one worg.

♣ Worg: CR 2; Medium magical beast; HD 4d10+8; hp 36, 33, 29, 28; Init +2; Spd 50 ft.; AC 14, touch 12, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +4; Grp +7; Atk +7 melee (1d6+4, bite); Full Atk +7 melee (1d6+4, bite); SA Trip; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., low-light vision, scent; AL NE; SV Fort +6, Ref +6, Will +3; Str 17, Dex 15, Con 15, Int 6, Wis 14, Cha 10.

Tip (Ex): A worg that hits with a bite attack can attempt to trip the opponent (+3 check modifier) as a free action without making a touch attack or provoking an attack of opportunity. If the attempt fails, the opponent cannot react to trip the worg.

Skills: A worg has a +1 racial bonus on Listen, Move Silently, and Spot checks, and a +2 racial bonus on Hide checks. *A worg has a +4 racial bonus on Survival checks when tracking by scent.

B79. THE BLACK WORG

The barks issuing from this cell are louder than from any other cell. With a DC 21 Listen check, the PCs can discern a single loud bark, deeper and more aggressive than any of the other cells.

From the darkness, a large black wolf stands at least five feet at the shoulder, and its powerful muscles ripple under its sleek, black coat. At first it doesn't notice you. Suddenly its hackles raise, and it turns, snarling at you. With a mighty howl it bursts free of its meager enclosure and leaps at you.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A black worg (hp 53) is stabled here. It is twice as large as any other worg in the goblins' possession. It is also twice as feral. Worgs may have some measure of intelligence, but this one is bestial. When the PCs enter the Room it breaks free of its inadequate holding pen and lunges at the nearest one. The PCs have no choice but to defend themselves.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Distracting Noises 4, Echoes 2, Fearless, Unhallowed 4

Tactics: The black worg attacks like an animal, vicious and unrelenting. It uses its trip attack every round, taking advantage of weak PCs. It does know fear and does not respond to pain.

Killing the black worg earns the ire of Hammerfist (Room B85), who was breaking in the worg to be his personal mount, should he find out. There is little choice for the PCs in this matter however, and they must deal with Hammerfist's wrath. Any explanation the PCs offers is not good enough for the hobgoblin.

Treasure: The black worg wears a heavy leather collar, set with three discolored gem, none of which match. The collar is worth 25 gp to a jeweler who can salvage the stones.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two hit dice to the black worg. To reduce the challenge of this encounter, replace the black worg with a worg.

Skills: A worg has a +1 racial bonus on Listen, Move Silently, and Spot checks, and a +2 racial bonus on Hide checks. * A worg has a +4 racial bonus on Survival checks when tracking by scent.

B80. FILTHY STABLE

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock.

A pack of four, miserable looking wolves, larger than normal, are penned up in this stable. Whether they are being punished or neglected is difficult to say. They growl and snap at you, but otherwise remain behind their enclosure.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Four worgs (hp 36, 35, 33, 25) are being punished for disobeying their riders' instructions during a recent patrol. They do not attack the PCs first, but defend themselves if provoked. While not chained, they lack the ability to open the locked door.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If a fight ensues, the worgs gang up on the weakest PC first, followed by other opponents without visible metal armor. They concentrate all their attacks until the victim is down. Like all pack animals, the alpha male delivers the coup de grace, before the pack moves on to the next PC. They use their trip attack every round, gaining an additional +1 because of the confines of the Rooms.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one worg. To decrease the challenge, remove one worg.

B81. EMPTY STABLE

No noise comes from this cell.

Like the other holding pens, this stable is shoddily constructed. This stable is empty, save for some discarded refuse on the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This stable is currently empty; the worgs normally housed in it are out on patrol with their hobgoblin masters. There is nothing of interest in this cell.

Encounter Condition: Fear 15, Unhallowed 3

Tactics: The goblins rely heavily on the training and cooperation of their worg mounts. It is quite obvious that the worgs stay here because they wish to, not because they are forced to.

B82. THE GOBLIN KING'S MOUNT, THE YETH HOUND

A sleek hound with a dull, black coat and glowing cherry red eyes pads around in the most luxurious pen in the stables. This is the mount of the goblin king, and the king takes very good care of it. With a lazy turn of its head, the yeth hound takes you in, and promptly dismisses you.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: The yeth hound (hp 24) is the pride of the goblin king. Serving as his personal mount, it is not only effective in combat, but the goblin king considers the hound a symbol of his power and divine rule. For its part, the yeth hound could care less about the PCs. It is confident in its combat abilities and knows its masters loyal servants are nearby.

The yeth hound only attacks if provoked.

Encounter Condition: Fear 14, Fearless, Unhallowed 3

Tactics: If the PCs attack the yeth hound it flees and seeks out the goblin king (Room B75), unleashing a series of bay attacks if cornered. If the PCs are stunned, the yeth hound slips by, continuing to bay until it has escaped or is killed by the PCs.

GOBLIN TACTICS, OR 21 WAYS TO DIE

Many of the Rooms in this Region resemble one another. This is intentional. Once the goblins descend on the PCs it is most likely they will be fighting wave after wave of reinforcements. And with 25% of the goblin population out patrolling at any given time, a battle in a hallway or Room, brings the goblins in the adjacent areas down upon the PCs quickly.

And because the goblins have been trained by hobgoblins, they all carry similar weapons and fight with the same tactics. This makes the range of Encounters limited. PCs are likely to get bored after the 3rd Room. This is where the DM comes in.

If played out properly, a single goblin Encounter can take up half the evening. By having wave after wave of reinforcements pushing into the Room, PCs are likely to tire quickly. Or at the very least, have their patience tested, when the door to the Room opens for the 4th time with another wave of twelve goblins. Worse yet, the first three waves are there just to weaken the PCs, using up their magic for the real final battle with Goblinbane.

To complicate matters, should the PCs successfully beat back everything you throw at them, they'll need to find a place to rest and that patrol or scouting party is due back any minute, more than ready to go for help, should they see the PCs standing knee deep in dead goblins. PCs on the run from goblins? Never.

And if word gets back to the goblin king that half his army is dead, a wing cavalry unit, and a few hobgoblin bodyguards can be hunting the PCs down in no time flat.

SOME THINGS TO KEEP IN MIND

The PCs should be 3rd or 4th level when they reach this Section of the dungeon. That means even twelve goblins won't be much trouble. Even making goblins with maximum hit points, the average fighter (with Cleave) kills two goblins a round.

In order to keep the challenge, the DM should try a few things.

One. Cheat. That's right. Cheat. Don't be afraid to flub attack rolls and Initiative checks. A +2 or +4 here or there shouldn't make the PCs too suspicious.

Two. Add Toughness (2). What's wrong with trained goblins having a few extra hit points. It would be worse if you gave them extra levels, right?

Three. Add natural armor. A +2 or +4 AC bonus makes the goblins tougher, but also means that rogues and clerics are going to be less useful.

Four. Aid another. With so many goblins, the aid another combat action really adds up. Don't be afraid to have 1/3 of the goblins extend a helping hand.

Five. Dog-pile. Goblins working together to tackle a dwarf or human barbarian severely weaken a group that's grown too reliant on the 12 points of damage per round 19 Strength, two-handed greataxe, raging, killing machine. Before the barbarian even thinks of raging, he's on the ground, prone and weaponless.

Six. Give the goblins the benefit of the doubt. They know the PCs are on the move and they know how to lure them into traps. Triplines across doorways, nearby reinforcements ready to attack from the rear, and signal whistles add up to one memorable encounter.

Seven. Limit the PCs options before they get here. Spells like fireball should be limited at this point in the campaign, so fighting in tight ranks won't hurt the goblins. Don't let a wizard with one spell spoil your adventures. Plan for it. Build around it.

Eight. Add a hobgoblin to every encounter. While not all of them need be 4th-level fighters, a 1st-level fighter at the back of the ranks, directing the action and throwing alchemical fire or firing a heavy crossbow does more than increase the CR by 1.

Nine. Stagger the assaults. Eventually the barbarian tires out. His rage goes away and another wave of goblins arrive on the final round of his "energy boost." How did that happen?

Ten. Add Encounter Conditions that we didn't think of. Make the Room pitch black in a 5-ft. radius or add a stench effect (similar to troglodytes) that the goblins are immune to (or used to).

Eleven. Improvise. Marines don't plan. They adapt. Effective goblins assaults should be no different. If the tactics in this book don't work, change them. Have them shore up a weak point, send in a smaller goblin to aid with flanks, or carry slings in addition to spears to take advantage of the second ranks.

Twelve. Add cool magical effects. Give the goblins potions of orc blood (the undercommon version of heroism) allowing them to rage for 3 rounds or gain +2 Strength for 2d6 rounds. Maybe their weapons are coated with a sleep poison or something that just deals 1 point on the following round, enough to make the PCs nervous. "Hey. They've got +1 wounding spears. What gives?"

Thirteen. Make the religion real. The goblin's faith is stronger than anything and thus they benefit from spells like divine strength and shield of faith, despite the lack of clerics. Heck. Add a 1st-level cleric to each unit. If you don't like clerics, add adepts, druids, or sorcerers with access to a domain spell list or granted power (or both).

Fourteen. Be smart. Don't let the PC's lure teams of goblins into stupid grease tricks. Anytime the PCs are backing up and don't look injured, trained soldiers know that means trouble. The goblins should hold back, send for reinforcements and batter the PCs later with some magical assistance or brute strength.

Fifteen. Pace the encounters. Don't let the PCs charge from Room to Room wiping out all the goblins before they sound the alarm. Lock or bar a few doors. Make it tough for the PCs to get into the more protected areas.

Sixteen. Give the goblins spell resistance 12.

Seventeen. Choose your battles. The goblins don't have to fight the PCs every time. They can lure the PCs out of a Room and force them to fight in a confined space, where their larger weapons are useless.

Eighteen. Worgs. The goblins have dire wolves, howlers, worgs, and yeth hounds at their disposal. Give each goblin unit some fire-power with a canine or lupine companion. Perhaps a blink dog was corrupted by the taint of the stables? Perhaps they found a destrachan from Region D?

Nineteen. Drop the anvil. Once the PCs are out of spells, potions, and wand charges, have the big boys show up and make the PCs rely on wits instead of magic.

Twenty. Dig up Mercenaries™. No this isn't a ploy to get you to spend more money on our books. Use the rules for serrated and laminated steel weapons. It's not like the PCs are going to be using these "spears" anyway. So its no sweat off your back if the weapons being used against the PCs do more damage.

Twenty-one. Make the PCs work for it. If the PCs are smart about it, they can decimate the entire goblin army in less than a week, or become another in the long list of victims that have fallen under Haglar's or Hammerfist's boot. No encounter in this dungeon should be "easy." Take the next step and show the PCs what you're made of.

Regardless of the outcome, the goblin king undoubtedly surmises the PCs killed his mount (unless he has yet to meet them, in which case he assumes it was bugbear raiders). Any alliances they forged are now broken. From this point on, all Initial Attitudes in encounters with the goblin king's soldiers are considered Hostile.

B83. SOUTHWESTERN OUTPOST

If the PCs have formed an alliance with the goblin king in Room B75, read the following.

This squat, spartan room serves as the most southwestern outpost of the goblin empire. The dozen goblins in this room stare blandly at you as you enter. The goblin king has ordered his army to treat you with respect, but these goblins seem to be waiting for you to make a misstep; it is quite obvious they do not want you here.

If the PCs have not formed an alliance with the goblin king in Room B75, read the following.

This squat room is an outpost, guarding against incursions. Nearly a dozen goblins are messing about and get into formation as you enter.

If the goblins are not surprised, read the following.

They await you with their sharp spears pointing menacingly in your direction. They form a perfect phalanx and advance upon you.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly or Hostile

Encounter: There are twelve goblins (hp 7, 7, 7, 6, 6, 5, 5, 4, 4, 4, 3) standing guard here in various stages of readiness. If surprised, they take a round to form up into ranks. If they heard the PCs coming, they are already in formation when the door opens, whether the PCs are allies or not.

If the PCs formed an alliance with the goblin king, the Initial Attitude of the goblins is Unfriendly. They allow the PCs to wander through the barracks as long as they do not disturb anything. If the PCs take any actions the goblins perceive as a threat, their Attitude becomes Hostile and they attack.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: In combat, instead of swarming the PCs, they form up into ranks, six goblins abreast, three rows deep. They advance on the PCs stabbing the closest PCs with their spears. They hold their bucklers facing forward, offering more protection (+2 training bonus to AC) to the goblin on their left. The goblins allow the PCs to rush them, gaining attacks of opportunity as the PCs move into their threat range.

The two weakest goblins are not Fearless and bail at the first sign of trouble (e.g. three goblins fall, they suffer at least 1 point of damage, overtly powerful magic is displayed, etc.). They head for Room B84 to retrieve reinforcements, taking 1d3 rounds to get there and 1d3+1 rounds to return.

B84. KING'S ELITE GUARD BARRACKS

If the PCs have formed an alliance with the goblin king in Room B75, read the following.

These barracks are simple and minimalist. These goblins have no requirement for comfort; they are hardened soldiers ready to die for their king and their god. They stare at you, but do not make any aggressive moves. The king has granted you his protection, and they will not violate his orders.

If the PCs take any actions the goblins perceive as a threat, their Attitude becomes Hostile and they attack.

The Room itself is a spartan affair with a weapon rack along the western wall, and a precise layer of sleeping hides on the floor. If the PCs defeated the elite guard in Room B74, this room does not contain any goblins.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: As soon as the goblins spot the PCs, they take up defensive positions in the nearby halls, while the smallest two run to Room B86 for reinforcements.

These goblins have been trained by the hobgoblins. Instead of swarming the PCs, they form up into three ranks, four goblins abreast. They advance on the PCs stabbing the closest with their spears. The goblins hold their bucklers facing forward, offering more protection (+2 competence bonus to AC) to the goblin on their left. The goblins allow the PCs to rush them, as they fight more efficiently at close range. In addition, due to their training and how they carry their spears, they have learned to use Improved Sunder and Power Attack, despite having only a 12 Strength.

B85. HAMMERFIST, CAPTAIN OF THE KING'S GUARD

If the PCs have formed an alliance with the goblin king in Room B75, read the following.

The large hobgoblin from the king's antechamber angrily paces back and forth in this room. He wields the same fist-shaped club, swinging wildly at the room's walls. As he notices you, he violently spits at the ground. "Come to try and finish what I started, have you?" he taunts.

If the PCs have not formed an alliance with the goblin king in Room B75, read the following.

A large hobgoblin angrily paces back and forth in this room. He wields a fist-shaped club, swinging wildly at the room's walls. A feral grin sprouts across his scarred face and he turns to face you. "Finally!" he shouts.

After the PCs have cleared the room of any hostile creatures, or if they defeated Hammerfist in Room B74, read the following.

Hammerfist's room is very spartan. A simple sleeping hide lies in a corner of the room. A map of the goblin empire is nailed to the southern wall. The western wall features a small collection of skulls, obviously war trophies the hobgoblin claimed from his foes.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Regardless of the PCs and their relationship with the goblin king, Hammerfist's (hp 63) attitude towards the PCs is never better than Unfriendly. If the PCs killed the black worg in Room B79 (and Hammerfist knows about it), Hammerfist becomes Hostile and attacks the PCs, screaming about revenge.

As long as Hammerfist is merely Unfriendly towards the PCs, he does not initiate combat against them. He does, however, taunt, threaten and otherwise provoke the PCs into attacking him. Hammerfist does not like the PCs and wishes to see them dead.

Encounter Condition: Fearless, Negative Energy, Unhallowed

Tactics: Hammerfist does not believe anyone is stronger than he is. To prove this, he calls the strongest PC out to fight him one on one. It goes toe to toe, never giving an inch. Because of his ego, he fights to the death.

If the PCs do not fight fair, neither does he. He pins weak PCs against the wall and throws vital blows against paladins and good-aligned PCs. Downed PCs are killed with coup de grace and helpless PCs have their fingers and hands broken under his boot or with his warclub.

While fighting, he shouts obscenities and other unsavory things at the PCs, but does not call for reinforcements. He is allowed an Intimidate check every 1d4 rounds against the PCs as a free action. This effects every opponent within 20 ft. His aggressive and boisterous mannerism is sure to unnerve even the strongest PCs.

If reinforcements do arrive, it is of their own initiative. Hammerfist is immune to the Negative Energy in this Room.

Treasure: Hammerfist keeps a strongbox in his Room. It is unlocked as no one is foolish enough to tamper with his belongings. Inside the box is a masterwork sling, a masterwork handaxe, 450 gp, 51 pp, a silver and gold ring with detailed filigree and an inlaid design of an owl (600 gp), six +1 arrows, four +1 bolts, and two potions of cure moderate wounds.

B86. DRILL ROOM

If the PCs have formed an alliance with the goblin king in Room B75, read the following.

A huge hobgoblin barks commands and mercilessly drills a group of goblins. He glances over at you, but says nothing. You get the distinct impression that treaty or no, this hobgoblin is looking for any excuse to test his men against your mettle.

If the PCs have not formed an alliance with the goblin king in Room B75, read the following.

A mighty bellow erupts as you enter this room. "At last! Fresh meat!" roars a huge hobgoblin wielding a wicked greataxe. Upon his command the goblins in the room form up and advance on you with calculating precision. The hobgoblin, however, charges at you with wild abandon.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: There are twelve goblins (hp 8, 8, 8, 6, 6, 6, 3, 3, 2, 2, 2, 1) in various stages of training in this Room. If surprised, they take a round to form up into ranks. If they heard the PCs coming, they are already in formation when the door opens, whether the PCs are allies or not.

If the PCs formed an alliance with the goblin king, the Initial Attitude of the goblins is Indifferent. They allow the PCs to wander through the barracks as long as they do not disturb anything. If the PCs take any actions the goblins perceive as a threat, their Attitude becomes Hostile and they attack.

Their leader, Goblinbane (hp 51), is a wicked taskmaster and the chief trainer of the goblins under the goblin king. He earned his name for his brutal training methods and callous disregard for goblins that could not withstand the training. As long as the PCs do not disrupt his training, he is content to let them watch and learn how a true master creates an army.

Of course if the PCs have not allied with the goblin king, Goblinbane and his goblin trainees attack the PCs as soon as they step foot in the Room.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: These goblins have been trained by Goblinbane. Instead of swarming the PCs, they form up into ranks, four goblins abreast, three rows deep. They advance on the PCs stabbing the closest PCs with their spears. They hold their bucklers facing forward, offering more protection (+1 training bonus to AC) to the goblin on their left. The goblins allow the PCs to rush them, forming a defensive line of spears.

Goblinbane seeks out the most prominent PC and engages them directly in close combat, swinging his powerful +1 greataxe mercilessly. Occasionally Goblinbane barks commands to the goblins, adjusted their tactics to keep up with the PCs movements.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the goblins in Room B85 arrive in 1d3+1 rounds. To decrease the challenge, remove two fighter levels from Goblinbane.

B87. PATROL BARRACKS

If the PCs have formed an alliance with the goblin king in Room B75, read the following.

This barracks is a long room with simple weapon racks and hides on the floor. You are met with some cold stares and toothy grimaces, but are otherwise left alone by the goblins.

If the PCs have not formed an alliance with the goblin king in Room B75, read the following.

A patrol, recently returned, stops in their tracks as you enter the room. With uncanny precision they return to formation and set their sights on you.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is a transitional chamber. Returning patrols rest here before going back out on patrol. There is an staging area towards the east where the patrols depart from. There are twelve goblins (hp 8, 7, 6, 5, 5, 4, 4, 3, 3, 1, 1, 1) stowing gear and relaxing. If surprised, they take a round to form up into ranks. If they heard the PCs coming, they are already in formation when the door opens, whether the PCs are allies or not.

If the PCs have formed an alliance with the goblin king, the Initial Attitude of the goblins is Indifferent. They allow the PCs to wander through the barracks as long as they do not disturb anything. If the PCs take any actions the goblins perceive as a threat, their attitude becomes Hostile and they attack the PCs.

The barracks itself resembles others in the goblin empire. The weapons racks and sleeping hides are precisely arranged and the crude map in the middle of the room accurately details the goblin patrols in this area of the dungeon.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: If the PCs engage the goblins they have to deal with reinforcements. After 1d3+1 rounds of combat, another phalanx of twelve goblins arrive from Room B88 and engages the PCs. Their tactics are identical to the goblins already engaged with the PCs, but they attempt to flank the PCs currently engaged.

These goblins have been trained by the Goblinbane (Room B86). Instead of swarming the PCs, they form up into three ranks, four goblins abreast. They advance on the PCs stabbing the closest with their spears. The goblins hold their bucklers facing forward, offering more protection (+2 competence bonus to AC) to the goblin on their left. The goblins allow the PCs to rush them, fighting better close in.

B88. SOUTHEASTERN OUTPOST

If the PCs have formed an alliance with the goblin king in Room B75, read the following.

This outpost serves as a forward observation point and command center in the goblin king's war against the rebel splinter faction. A dozen goblins prepare themselves for their next patrol as you enter. Your presence is ignored however, as the goblins have more pressing concerns. Reports of a large upcoming raid are circulating amongst the troops, and each wants to be a member of the patrol that crushes the rebel scum.

If the PCs have not formed an alliance with the goblin king in Room B75, read the following.

As you enter this outpost, a dozen bloodthirsty goblins turn and face you. They quickly grab their weapons and form into an impressive phalanx. Their spear points drop and they attack.

B89. HAUNTED TOMBS

The hallways intersect, again and again. It would seem as though a door would appear somewhere. But there is none. Just the same clean corridor over and over again. And then the realization that the silence is heavy hits you. Something is amiss.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A sense of dread and fear should overcome the PCs at this point. If not, ask for Will saves. Feel free to spook them at every turn with shadows and intermittent sounds of chains rattling. Drop a few command, suggestion, and cause fear spells. Lastly, a deep, allip-like moan is used to scare them straight.

In addition to any other effects going on, there is silence that pervades the tomb and affects the PCs 50% of the time, severely hampering their ability to communicate and cast spells. While there is no noise, treat this as Distracting Noises for the purposes of spellcasting.

While the map does not show secret doors, there is a way to get into each tomb. The mechanism is complicated and to date, the goblins have not found it.

Located at the two foot high mark is on the north wall of each tomb is a small unholy sigil. While each is designed differently, the key to opening the tomb is through this sigil. There are three different ways to open the tomb.

One is for a lawful good PC to completely trace the entire surface of the sigil. Another is to cast arcane lock directly onto the sigil and exceed the Spell Resistance of the lock. Finally, the PCs can smear the blood of an angel into the sigil, covering the surface.

If any of these actions are taken, a 5-ft. by 5-ft. section of wall slides open and up into the ceiling. If the PCs open a tomb, roll on the following table to see if they encounter anything.

1d20	Encounter
1	A hot wind escapes from the tomb. Drafty.
2	A swarm of rats run past the PCs and out the door. While they are no threat and deal no damage, if they run west or south, they are sure to find the goblins who send scouts to investigate.
3	A small earthquake rumbles through the Section. Tremors 15.
4–12	Nothing

18	The PCs are attacked by 1d3+1 wights.
19	The PCs are attacked by 1d4+1 vargouilles. Ambush.
20	The PCs are attacked by 1d6+1 ghouls.

Encounter Condition: [Ambush], Cursed 3, [Distracting Noises 4], Drafty, Fear 16, Haunted, Negative Energy, [Spell Resistance 14], Unhallowed 6

Tactics: Once the tomb is open, the creatures (if present) lunges at the PCs. These beasts have been entombed for centuries and are eager to escape, most likely fighting in a crazed and wild manner. The actual details are left up to the DM, but these creatures are interested in feeding on the flesh of one PC and escaping soon after. Killing them all is not possible.

The ghouls attack the lead PCs, the vargouilles use their kiss attack, and the wights swipe at the PC with the least armor on. They do not put themselves in harm's way to get to the PCs, but do not let the PC box them in either.

Treasure: None of these creatures were buried with treasure, but the DM is welcome to drop a trinket here and there, so the PCs do feel cheated. The largest treasure should be no bigger than a +1 dagger or a potion of cure serious wounds.

EL: Varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, roll twice per tomb. To decrease the challenge, roll once for every two tombs opened.

B90. ABANDONED BARRACKS

The hallway leading to this Room is trapped. Allow the PCs spot checks to notice, but since there are four traps in various locations, the DM should feel free to use them as he sees fit.

Note: This trap is really one CR 1 trap that trips and a second CR 1 trap that attacks with a spiked chain. If the tripping attack succeeds, a +4 bonus applies to the spiked chain attack because the opponent is prone.

A long wide room stretches before you. Abandoned, disheveled, and broken bunks and cots line the walls and floor. Someone or something has ransacked these chambers. The thick layer of dust suggests it was not recently cleaned.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Long ago, the goblins controlled most of the Region. Now, with the bugbear raiding parties and goblin rebels, it is difficult to control the outlying sections. The hobgoblins convinced the goblin king it would be easier to defend a smaller area, and pulled back to Room B69 through B88 (hence the concentration of manpower in such a small area).

As a result, they often send patrols up here to "check things out," but the recent "tossing" of the Room has caused them to rethink their strategy. If a goblin Random Encounter is rolled in the vicinity of Rooms B90 and B91, there is a 50% chance the Encounter is "Nothing."

Encounter Condition: Fearless, Hazardous Footing 14

Tactics: There is nothing here now, but if the PCs insist on rummaging through the debris, feel free to have a bugbear patrol happen upon them.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a pit trap. To reduce the challenge, remove the portcullis trap.

B91. NORTHEASTERN OUTPOST

This box-like room smells of charcoal and smoke. The blackened walls and burned furniture indicate only one culprit — fire. Along the back wall, resting on a small ledge, is a red and black urn, apparently unscarred by all the chaos.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Another abandoned outpost, this Room has been set ablaze and sacked several times, leaving the goblins to wonder what the true tactics of the bugbears are.

On the far wall, is a small ledge with a red and black urn. On the face of the urn is written "The Unnamed Law" in goblinoid. It is the hope of the bugbears that the goblins will inspect it or at the very least assume an important bugbear was killed. So far no one has fallen for it, but should anyone touch the urn, a trap is triggered and a hail of needles and darts fly from the north and south walls.

◆ Fusillade of Darts: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; Atk +18 ranged (1d4+1, dart); multiple targets (1d8 darts per target in a 10-ft.-by-10-ft. area); Search DC 19; Disable Device DC 25.

Encounter Condition: Ambush

Tactics: This Room is patrolled by the bugbear's often. It is their hope that the goblins will believe the Room was an important outpost and its loss has driven them deep into the dungeon. Either that or an important bugbear was killed. Either way, its presence serves to baffle the goblins and sooner or later a patrol is going to get antsy and grab the urn.

To add insult to injury, if the trap goes off, there is a 25% chance that bugbears from Room B66 arrive to investigate in 3d6 rounds.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add another hail of needles trap. To reduce the challenge, allow the PCs Spot checks when they enter the Room, to notice tiny holes in the walls where the darts and needles escape from.

B92. THE MAZE

No Random Encounters occur inside or near the Maze.

You enter a long, winding tunnel. The walls are covered in moss and vines and a pungent stench fills the air. Off in the distance you can hear the sounds of various creatures, their echoes playing tricks along the snaking corridor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The maze is a unique feature in the Region. No groups claim it and most avoid it if possible. It is a very dangerous, ever-changing trap. The bugbears and hobgoblins are smart enough to avoid the dangers of the maze, while the goblins have developed a number of superstitions regarding it.

The goblin rebels use the maze to their advantage. Situating themselves on the other end of the maze, they have a nearly impassable barrier between them and their rivals. This, coupled with the wild passages in the northeast, has allowed them to continue their existence in the Region. A few of the leaders of these goblins are starting to turn their superstitions into a counter religion. If the new god is all powerful, wouldn't he have destroyed the maze for his followers? Since he has not these rebel goblins believe the maze is the home of their old gods, the spirits in the rock their grandfathers' grandfathers worshipped.

As the PCs make their way through this maze, its denizens and a series of traps confront them. Every 30 minutes spent in Room B92, roll on the table below for a Random Encounter and then roll on the second table for any special Encounter Conditions.

14	The air is alive with 2d8+1 stirges. The stirges buzz loudly and dart back and forth across the hall.
15	A lone wight, wanders the hall, seeking refuge from the infernal maze. As it spots the PCs it lets out a blood-curdling scream and attacks.
16	Vines cloak the walls, choking the torchlight and cutting vision in half. Lurking amongst the greenery are 2d6 assassin vines laying in wait for unsuspecting prey. Ambush.
17	1d4+1 vargouilles screech and whine as they corner a long rebel goblin. The goblin is curled up in a ball, crying and shrieking, but the vargouilles are too loud. They are enjoying their torment of the goblin and suffer a –4 circumstance penalty to Listen and Spot checks to notice the PCs.
18	A group of 2d6+3 goblins stumble across the PCs. These are rebel goblins making a foray into the goblin king's territory and did not expect to find anyone in the maze. Confused, and unsure of the PCs, they do not attack. Their attitude is Unfriendly, unless attacked.
19	One hobgoblin, mounted on a worg, and six goblins hunt for rebel goblins. They are loyal and obedient to the goblin king, but patrol the maze, fearfully. If the PCs have an alliance with the goblin king their attitude is Indifferent (unless attacked). Otherwise their attitude is Hostile.
20	Bartleby (Room B28) races through the maze. He knows the maze is not a safe place to be and he appears to be dancing around from stone to stone, trying to avoid particular spots in the maze. If the PCs work out a deal with Bartleby, he guides them through the maze, cutting in half the number of Random Encounters the PCs must experience. Nonetheless, he does not know the way out and uses Survival to look for drafts and other tell-tale signs of an exit.

3	This maze is alive with noise. Howls, chattering, low growls and buzzing are just a few of the noises echoing through the halls. Distracting Noises 10.
4	Darkness closes in around the PCs. Deep Darkness.
5	A thick mist rises from every corner of the halls. Torchlight does nothing to cut through the fog. Fog 10.
6	The maze has inexplicably flooded with water. Flooded.
7	A hot wind blows through the hall. Drafty, Extreme Heat.
8	A cold wind chills the PCs to the bone. Drafty, Extreme Cold.
9–12	Ivy clings to the walls, blocking the visibility in the hallway. Reduce visible range by half.
13	The smell of rotted flesh assaults the PCs sense. However, there is no visible source for the smell. Stagnant Air.
14	The embers of a recent fire smolders, choking the air. Smoke.
15	The air crackles with energy, making the PCs feel alive and sick all at once. Negative Energy or Positive Energy.
16	The monster or trap is difficult to spot, waiting in darkness to strike. Ambush (darkness).
17	The monster or trap waits in the darkness, concealing itself in the shadows. Concealment.
18	Debris has been placed to block the PCs' path. Cover (total).
19	Silence pervades and a magic null effect permeates everything as if the walls were closing in on the PCs. Silence. Spell Resistance 15.
20	For whatever reason, creatures are drawn here, as if something unnatural called to them. Roll two Encounters.

Entangle (Su): An assassin vine can animate plants within 30 ft. of itself as a free action (Ref DC 13 partial).

The effect lasts until the vine dies or decides to end it (also a free action). The save DC is Wisdom-based. The ability is otherwise similar to entangle (caster level 4th).

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, an assassin vine must hit with its slam attack.

It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Blindsight (Ex): Assassin vines have no visual organs but can ascertain all foes within 30 ft. using sound, scent, and vibration.

Camouflage (Ex): Since an assassin vine looks like a normal plant when at rest, it takes a DC 20 Spot check to notice it before it attacks.

Anyone with ranks in Survival or Knowledge (nature) can use one of those skills instead of Spot to notice the plant. Dwarves can use stonecunning to notice the subterranean version.

Skills and Feats: Hide +14, Listen +4, Spot +4; Alertness, Weapon Finesse

Attach (Ex): If a stirge hits with a touch attack, it uses its eight pincers to latch onto the opponent's body. An attached stirge is effectively grappling its prey. The stirge loses its Dexterity bonus to AC and has an AC of 12, but holds on with great tenacity. Stirges have a +12 racial bonus on grapple checks (already figured into the Base Atk; Grp entry above).

An attached stirge can be struck with a weapon or grappled itself. To remove an attached stirge through grappling, the opponent must achieve a pin against the stirge.

Blood Drain (Ex): A stirge drains blood, dealing 1d4 points of Constitution damage in any round when it begins its turn attached to a victim. Once it has dealt 4 points of Constitution damage, it detaches and flies off to digest the meal. If its victim dies before the stirge's appetite has been sated, the stirge detaches and seeks a new target.

♣ Vargouille: CR 2; Small outsider (evil, extraplanar); HD 1d8+1; hp 5; Init +1; Spd Fly 0 ft. Skills and Feats: Hide +9, Intimidate +3, Listen +5, Move Silently +5, Spot +5; Weapon Finesse.

Shriek (Su): Instead of biting, a vargouille can open its distended mouth and let out a terrible shriek. Those within 60 ft. (except other vargouilles) who hear the shriek and can clearly see the creature must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or be paralyzed with fear for 2d4 rounds or until the monster attacks them, goes out of range, or leaves their sight. A paralyzed creature is susceptible to the vargouille's kiss (see below). A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same vargouille's shriek for 24 hours. The shriek is a mind-affecting fear effect. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Kiss (Su): A vargouille can kiss a paralyzed target with a successful melee touch attack. An affected opponent must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or begin a terrible transformation that turns the creature into a vargouille within 24 hours (and often much sooner; roll 1d6 separately for each phase of the transformation).

First, over a period of 1d6 hours, all the victim's hair falls out. Within another 1d6 hours thereafter, the ears grow into leathery wings, tentacles sprout on the chin and scalp, and the teeth become long, pointed fangs. During the next 1d6 hours, the victim takes Intelligence drain and Charisma drain equal to 1 point per hour (to a minimum of 3). The transformation is complete 1d6 hours later, when the head breaks free of the body (which promptly dies) and becomes a vargouille. This transformation is interrupted by sunlight, and even a daylight spell can delay death, but to reverse the transformation requires remove disease. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +4 racial bonus.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 12 or be unable to heal the vargouille's bite damage naturally or magically. A neutralize poison or heal spell removes the effect, while delay poison allows magical healing. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Wight: CR 3; Medium undead; HD 4d12; hp 26; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 15, touch 11, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +2; Grp +3; Atk +3 melee (1d4+1 plus energy drain, slam); Full Atk +3 melee (1d4+1 plus energy drain, slam); SA Create spawn, energy drain; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., undead traits; AL LE; SV Fort +1, Ref +2, Will +5; Str 12, Dex 12, Con —, Int 11, Wis 13, Cha 15.

Skills and Feats: Hide +8, Listen +7, Move Silently +16, Spot +7; Alertness, Blind-Fight.

Create Spawn (Su): Any humanoid slain by a wight becomes a wight in 1d4 rounds. Spawn are under the command of the wight that created them and remain enslaved until its death. They do not possess any of the abilities they had in life.

Energy Drain (Su): Living creatures hit by a wight's slam attack gain one negative level. The DC is 14 for the Fortitude save to remove a negative level. The save DC is Charisma-based. For each such negative level bestowed, the wight gains 5 temporary hit points.

Skills: Wights have a +8 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

B93 THROUGH B108. HEATHEN GOBLIN REBELS

Not all goblins fell in love with the new god. A small group held tight to the old ways, worshipping the power of the rock spirits as their ancestors had done for countless centuries before them. Once their king had been usurped, these rebellious goblins had no choice but to flee.

Fear of persecution overruled their fear of the dreaded maze to the east of the goblin lands. The goblins fled into its dangerous, confusing hallways eluding capture or other unsavory fates. Only two-thirds of the goblins made it through the maze, but that was far larger a number than any of the fleeing rebels anticipated.

With the maze between them and their rivals, the goblins quickly went to work setting up a new home for themselves. They claimed the area in the southeast corner of the dungeon as their own. The maze protects their western flank, while the wild treacherous passages to the north provide ample defense against raids by the goblin empire.

A chieftain named Guk leads these goblins. While not as clever as Argliss, he is smarter than most goblins. He is starting to think that the new deity is not as powerful as his supporters claim. Why has this deity not destroyed the maze? Why were the followers of the old ways allowed to escape? Guk believes the answer lies with his gods. The stone spirits are watching over his people and are rewarding their loyalty.

To Guk's people the maze is not something to be scared of or frightened by; it is the home of their gods. They see now they were too ignorant to realize it before. Only the unwary are punished for trespassing in the home of the gods. Those truly devout and loyal can pass through as they wish. The rebels have used the maze to their advantage, as both for protection, and as a place to strike at the usurpers empire from.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	The ground is littered with rubble and other detritus. Whether a trap caused this, or the earthquake that shook the dungeon so long ago, is unclear. What is apparent however the debris makes walking through this area very difficult. Hazardous Footing 15.
2-14	Nothing
15	A group of 1d3+1 ethereal marauders are exploring the dungeon and chance upon the PCs. Their attitude is Indifferent unless attacked. The ethereal marauders are curious about the PCs; they are used to goblinoids but not much else on two legs.
16	A pack of four blink dogs lazily make their way through the dungeon. Their attitude is Indifferent unless attacked.
17	A patrol of 2d4+2 goblins, led by a goblin mounted on a worg, wind their way through the dungeon. These goblins are rebels, fighting the goblin king's forces. If the PCs are allied with the goblin king, their attitude is Hostile. If the PCs are allied with the rebel goblin faction, their attitude is Indifferent. Otherwise their attitude is Unfriendly.
18	A hobgoblin, mounted on a wounded worg, is being followed by 3d6+3 weary goblins. They have been raiding the rebel faction, and have suffered casualties. They are wary for an ambush, and receive a +5 circumstance bonus to all Spot and Listen checks.
19	An ear-piercing shriek fills the dungeon as a pack of 2d4+1 howlers rounds the corner. They have been hunting goblins, but the PCs will serve their purpose equally well.
20	Bartleby enters the room just before the PCs do. Not wishing to be seen by the meddling PCs he ducks behind an outcropping. Bartleby receives a +2 circumstance bonus to Hide and Move Silently checks. Cover.

B93. THE WATCH ROOM

When the PCs enter Room B93, read the following.

This room is filled with goblins. They stare at you blankly for brief of moments, before they attack you.

After the PCs have dealt with the goblins, read the following.

This room is small and cramped. It contains only a small empty weapons rack against the eastern wall. Apparently the rebel goblins use this room as a staging room to launch attacks against the goblins in the west.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The rebel goblins (hp 8, 5, 3, 4, 4, 1, 1, 1, 1) are confused by the appearance of the PCs. They were planning a raid against the goblin king when the PCs entered the Room. Thinking the PCs are agents of Argliss, they attack the PCs regardless of their true standing with the goblin king.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The goblins simply swarm the PCs, attacking the en masse. They attack the PCs closest to them without regard for their personal safety. They will not stop until either the PCs or they are subdued.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four goblins. To decrease the challenge, remove two goblins.

Skills: Goblins have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently and Ride checks. Goblin cavalry (mounted on worgs) usually select the Mounted Combat feat in place of the Alertness feat, which reduces their Spot and Listen check modifiers from +3 to +1.

B94. THE SECRET ENTRANCE

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock.

This small room is empty. The slate gray walls are blank and unadorned. On the far wall hangs a banner with a crude goblin sigil on it, perhaps defiantly opposing the goblin king?

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This secret entrance is the only entrance to the rebel goblins' new home. The rebel goblin chieftain, Guk, was guided by the stone spirits and brought his people here. While Room B95 serves as their main hall, the goblins wisely decided to hide their new homes behind this hidden passage. The entrance is not guarded so it does not call attention to itself. The goblins rely on the dangers of the maze and the pit trap in this Room to defend against serious incursions from their cousins.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: A secret door in the eastern wall leads to Room B98. A DC 25 Search check is required to locate the door's latch, which is hidden behind the goblin banner. The secret door isn't locked and opens easily. In the center of the Room is a pit, carefully disguised to look like stone.

✦ Camouflaged Pit Trap: CR 4; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 40 ft. (4d6, fall); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 17.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the camouflaged pit trap to a pit trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the depth of the camouflaged pit trap to 20 ft.

B95. HALL OF THE REBELS

This room is huge, and filled with goblins. Everywhere you turn you see them. Their cold, hate filled eyes stare back at you. A number hiss and spit and all grip their spears tighter. Just when you think the goblins will attack, a large goblin near the back of the room holds up a hand and utters a simple command. The mass of goblins steps aside, forming a perfect aisle from the door to their chieftain.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This is the main Room of the rebel goblins. Twenty rebel goblins (hp 6 each) make their home here. From this hall they meet and plan their raids. The chieftain, Guk (hp 24), holds what passes for his court. It is a simple Room without ornamentation, save for a low, makeshift table in the center of the Room and a single stool, used by Guk.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: Guk stops the goblins from attacking the PCs on sight. The chieftain is curious about the PCs, and wishes to know if they are in league with the goblin king, Arglist (Room B75). If the PCs convince Guk they are not allied with Arglist, he grants them safe passage through his encampment, provided the PCs do not disturb anything.

Guk also tries to enlist the PCs aid in his war against Arglist. He believes the PCs have been brought to him by his gods. Why else would they be here if not to combat the usurper and restore order?

If Guk suspects the PCs of being allied with Arglist, he and the other goblins instantly turn hostile and attack the PCs.

Like all rebels, these goblins have not been trained by the hobgoblins and do not have a handle on the complex tactics their cousins have. The rebels use standard swarm tactics to overwhelm and subdue the PCs.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add six goblins. To decrease the challenge, remove six.

▲ Guk, Goblin Chieftain, Ftr 3/Clr 1: CR 4; Small humanoid (goblinoid); HD 3d10+3 + 1d8+1; hp 29; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 18, touch 13, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +3; Grp +0; Atk +7 melee (1d4+1/18–20, scimitar) or +7 ranged (1d4+1/×3, short composite bow [+1 Str bonus]); Full Atk +7 melee (1d4+1/18–20, scimitar) or +7 ranged (1d4+1/×3, short composite bow [+1 Str bonus]); SA Spells; SQ Darkvision 60 ft.; AL NE; SV Fort +6, Ref +3, Will +4; Str 12, Dex 14, Con 12, Int 11, Wis 13, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Hide +5, Listen +2, Move Silently +5, Ride +4, Spot +2; Alertness

Skills: Goblins have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently and Ride checks. Goblin cavalry (mounted on worgs) usually select the Mounted Combat feat in place of the Alertness feat, which reduces their Spot and Listen check modifiers from +3 to +1.

B96. STOREROOM

Constructed of simply of gray stone, this room looks mostly like a makeshift storeroom. Dried rushes litter the floor, and the weapon racks are filled with spears. A few barrels are stacked against one wall. The remaining barrels reek of something unpleasant.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Located at the end of the hall, this Room marks the beginning of the hidden goblin encampment. The rushes strewn around on the floor function an early trespassing system. The door to the Rebel Barracks (Room B97) is thin, and the sound of anyone walking over the rushes alerts the goblins stationed here to potential intruders.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Allow the goblins in Room B97 Listen checks, with a +4 circumstance bonus if the PCs walk on the rushes.

Treasure: A dozen short spears are stacked on the weapons rack and the barrels are filled with flammable oil.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B97. REBEL BARRACKS

If the goblins hear the PCs coming from Room B96, they fall into a defensive position, gaining a +4 circumstance bonus to their Initiative checks.

A small barrack houses a few dozen goblins, their spears are pointed menacingly in your direction, and they look ready to pounce on you at a moment's notice. One goblin, dressed in a leather jerkin, with a badge of office affixed to its front, approaches you, demanding to know what you are doing here.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This is the first, and last line of defense the rebel goblins have for their new home. Twelve goblins (hp 6 each) stand guard, at the quick to defend themselves from danger. If the PCs can convince the goblins they have made a pact with their chieftain, Guk, their attitude shifts to Indifferent. If the goblins believe the PCs are in league with Arglist's goblins, their attitude shifts to Hostile and they immediately attack.

If the PCs failed their Move Silently checks in Room B96, the goblins attack them as soon as they enter the Room.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: Like all rebels, these goblins have not been trained by the hobgoblins and do not have the complex tactics their cousins do. The rebels use standard swarm tactics to overwhelm and subdue the PCs. If given a chance, they flank a PC, but almost as if by accident.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four goblins. To decrease the challenge, remove four.

B98. REBEL ARMORY

Similar to the rest of the rooms in this section of the dungeon, this simple room is lined with weapon racks. Each rack holds simple, crudely crafted short spears. Along the back wall a single, ornate brass and iron longsword hangs by itself on the wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room serves as the main armory for the rebel goblins. Like their cousins, they still wield traditional spears. The weapon racks are filled with numerous spears, as well as an ornate longsword.

This Room also contains a secret door on its eastern wall, requiring a DC 23 Search check to locate. The door can be opened by pressing the top and bottom stones (pressure triggers) simultaneously. Goblins usually require a "boost" to open this door when passing through.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Aside from two-dozen short spears, this room contains a masterwork longsword.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B99. SHRINE OF THE STONE SPIRITS

This room is dark and cool. The walls are dark, but somehow inviting as well. Scattered, seemingly at random, on the floor are a wide variety of carved stones.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room has been set up by Guk (Room B95) to honor the stone spirits the rebel goblins worship. If the PCs leave the Room as they found it, they earn a measure of respect with the rebel goblins. Any alteration to the Room is viewed as a crime and any alliance the PCs have made with the rebels is instantly terminated. Should word spread of the PCs' actions, all further encounters with the rebel goblins instantly have their Initial Attitudes changed to Hostile.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 2

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Numerous carved stones line the floor of this room. While they are valuable to the goblins, they are nearly worthless to anyone else. Argliss (Room B75) may find some use for them however, and is willing to offer a small reward for their retrieval.

B100. WEAPONSMITH

This square cell of a room is filled with long, straight sticks and bits of stone. In the middle of all this is a lone goblin, feverishly working on a new short spear. He doesn't appear to notice you but maybe he does.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: The weaponsmith working here is Kr'n'g (hp 24). As long as the PCs do not disrupt him, they can stay and watch him work as long as they like. If they communicate with him, he replies with grunts and gestures. He has work to do and cannot be bothered.

If the the rebel goblins see the PCs as enemies, he signals an alarm as soon as they enter. He lunges at the PCs with a half made spear. 2d4 rounds later a squad of nine goblins arrive from Room B101 to assist the blacksmith.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Kr'n'g defends himself against the PCs to the best of his ability, using the half completed masterwork spear he is holding as his weapon. He goes on full defense each round, waiting for reinforcements to arrive. After 5 rounds, Kr'n'g assumes reinforcements are on their way and fights defensively.

When the reinforcements arrive, they use standard rebel goblin swarm tactics.

Treasure: The room is filled with the parts to make three dozen masterwork spears, but nothing else.

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the goblins arrive in 1d4 rounds. To decrease the challenge, have only five goblins arrive.

Kr'n'g, Goblin Weaponsmith, Exp 4: CR 3; Small humanoid (goblinoid); HD 4d6+4; hp 24; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 12, touch 12, flat-footed 11; Base Atk +3; Grp +1; Atk +5 melee (1d6+3/x3, masterwork spear); Full Atk +5 melee (1d6+3/x3, masterwork spear); Space/Reach 5 ft./5 ft.; SA Spells; SQ darkvision 60 ft., familiar; AL NE; SV Fort +2, Ref +2, Will +4; Str 14, Dex 13, Con 13, Int 11, Wis 11, Cha 7.

Skills: Goblins have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently and Ride checks

Possessions: Masterwork spear, leather armor.

B101. MEETING HALL

Wooden benches and tables line the walls and fill the room. Ten goblins, previously talking boisterously, grow quiet as you enter the room. This simply furnished room serves as the goblins' common room.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Unwelcome intruders, the PCs earn the glare of ten goblins (hp 6 each), who have stopped their conversation to determine the fate of the PCs. As long as the Attitude toward the PCs is not Hostile (in relations with the rebel goblins), they are left alone. The goblins do not speak as long as the PCs are around.

If the Initial Attitude toward the PCs is Hostile, or if they attack the goblins, the rebels assault the PCs immediately.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: These goblins have not been trained by the hobgoblins and do not have a handle on the complex tactics their cousins do. They fight with conviction (gaining a +2 morale bonus to all Will saves), but lack the tactical acumen of the goblins from the previous Section. The rebels swarm tactics and overwhelm the PCs, in an attempt to subdue them and hold them hostage.

B102. CROWDED WORG STABLE

Growls and snapping jaws, along with the stink of live animals, saturate the air. Four large, shaggy beasts are confined behind shaky looking wooden pens. The wooden slats strain and buckle as the worgs try and free themselves. How the goblins ride these monsters into battle is unimaginable; the thought of taming them seems laughable enough.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Inside the pens, chained to the walls, are four worgs (hp 40, 31, 18, 12). They are vicious animals, slowly being turned mad by the fear in this Room. The goblins have placed them here, unsure why their temperament is so chaotic, but remain unwilling to relocate.

Encounter Condition: Fear 14, Fearless

Tactics: Since the worgs are chained up, this is an easy kill if the PCs want to finish them. If the PCs get too close, the worgs attack. They cannot coordinate their attacks, however, and snap at anything in range.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 1

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, unchain the worgs. To decrease the challenge, have the worgs sleeping.

✱ Worg: CR 2; Medium magical beast; HD 4d10+8; hp 36, 33, 29, 28; Init +2; Spd 0 ft.; AC 14, touch 12, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +4; Grp +7; Atk +7 melee (1d6+4, bite); Full Atk +7 melee (1d6+4, bite); SA Trip; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., low-light vision, scent; AL NE; SV Fort +6, Ref +6, Will +3; Str 17, Dex 15, Con 15, Int 6, Wis 14, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Hide +4, Listen +6, Move Silently +6, Spot +6, Survival +2*; Alertness, Track.

Trip (Ex): A worg that hits with a bite attack can attempt to trip the opponent (+3 check modifier) as a free action without making a touch attack or provoking an attack of opportunity. If the attempt fails, the opponent cannot react to trip the worg.

Skills: A worg has a +1 racial bonus on Listen, Move Silently, and Spot checks, and a +2 racial bonus on Hide checks. *A worg has a +4 racial bonus on Survival checks when tracking by scent.

B103. EMPTY WORG STABLE

The empty stable is devoid of anything of any use to the PCs. Hay bales line the wall and the floor is scattered with debris. The air is heavy and oppressive.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Whether it was the death of a beast that lived here, or something else, the air in this Room is impossible to breathe. The smell is foul and oppressive, stinging the PCs' eyes.

Encounter Condition: Negative Energy, Stagnant Air

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the PCs brave the odor and search the Room, allow DC 20 Search checks to find a +1 silver dagger hidden under a bed of hay.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B104. SECRET PASSAGE

This Room contains a secret door on both its eastern and western walls, requiring DC 23 Search checks to locate. The doors can be opened by pressing the top and bottom stones (pressure triggers) at the same time. Goblins usually require a "boost" to open this door when passing through.

The door on the eastern wall has a stack of barrels behind it, in the hopes of barring entry. A DC 18 Strength check is required to push it open from the outside.

This long, narrow corridor stretches along the southern end of the rebel encampment. From what you can tell it simply leads from one end to the other.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This passage is used frequently by the goblins, but is often kept locked or barred because whatever is living in Region C should be avoided. The goblins spent a great deal of time digging up stones and adding a pit trap in the center of the hallway.

✱ Spiked Pit Trap (80 ft. deep): CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 80 ft. deep (8d6, fall), pit spikes (Atk +10 melee, 1d4 spikes for 1d4+5 damage each); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the depth of the spiked pit trap to 100 ft. To decrease the challenge, change the spiked pit trap to a pit trap.

B105. REMEMBERER'S HOVEL

Quaintly appointed, for a goblin's home, this room is the most impressive in the encampment. The floor is covered with a rug made of some animal's hide. Small carvings and markings adorn the walls. In the middle of the room sits a very old goblin. His skin is dull, leathery, and spotted.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This Room is the living quarters of the oldest goblin among the rebel faction. His name is Rememberer (hp 27), and at nearly 15 years old, he is ancient. He is the last repository of the goblin culture before the coming of the new god. He remembers the stories and ways of his people, and gladly tells the PCs what he knows, hoping to find an heir for his knowledge before he passes into the rock.

The PCs can learn much of the history of the goblins from the Rememberer. As long as the Initial Attitude does not shift to Hostile or the PCs threaten the Rememberer, he imparts his knowledge.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The Rememberer is quite old, and in no condition to fight off the PCs. Instead of fighting, he begins singing a song to fascinate the PCs. Allow the goblins in Room B101 a Listen check each round to hear the song. If they succeed, they arrive in 1d3+1 rounds to aid the Rememberer, fighting the PCs as if they had just harmed a goblin child.

Once reinforcements arrive, they draw the PCs away from the Rememberer, allowing him to escape the Room. Once safe, he flees to Room B95, while the goblins lead the PCs towards Room B97. If forced to remain in the Room, the Rememberer uses inspire courage to aid the fighting goblins in battle. This small bonus can make a great deal of difference with so many goblin warriors present. Afterwards he casts spells in the following order — sound burst, blur (on himself), lesser confusion (on enemy mages), sleep, and lesser confusion again.

If he must escape he casts, expeditious retreat, and then ghost sound to disguise the direction he ran in. His remaining spells are more utilitarian in nature and mage hand is useful for lifted daggers out of belts and that's about it.

Treasure: The Rememberer is familiar with the oral histories of his people. In addition, he wears a coral necklace (the origins of which are unknown to him) worth 50 gp. It is actually an amulet of nondetection, but he doesn't know that, because it doesn't radiate magic.

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, the reinforcements arrive at the end of the first round of combat. To decrease the challenge, the reinforcements arrive at the end of the sixth round of combat.

Goblin Rememberer, Brd 5: CR 3; Small humanoid (goblinoid); HD 5d6; hp 27; Init +2; Spd 30 ft.; AC 15, touch 13, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +3; Crp -2; Atk +3 melee (1d4-1/19-20, short sword) or +6 ranged (1d3, sling); Full Atk +3 melee (1d4-1/19-20, short sword) or +6 ranged (1d3, sling); SA Spells; SQ Bardic music, darkvision 60 ft.; AL NE; SV Fort +1, Ref +6, Will +5; Str 8, Dex 14, Con 11, Int 14, Wis 13, Cha 14.

Skills and Feats: Hide +10, Listen +7, Move Silently +10, Knowledge (history) +10, Perform (chant) +10, Perform (drum) +6, Perform (story-telling) +6, Sense Motive +10, Spot +7; Alertness, Dodge.

Bardic Knowledge: A bard may make a special bardic knowledge check with a bonus equal to his bard level + his Intelligence modifier to see whether he has relevant information about local people, legendary items, or noteworthy places. (If the bard has 5 or more ranks in Knowledge (history), he gains a +2 bonus on this check.)

A successful bardic knowledge check will not reveal the powers of a magic item but may give a hint as to its general function. A bard may not take 10 or take 20 on this check; this sort of knowledge is essentially random.

Bardic Music: Once per day per bard level, a bard can use his song or poetics to produce magical effects on those around him (usually including himself, if so desired). While these abilities fall under the rubric of bardic music and the descriptions discuss singing or playing instruments, they can all be activated by reciting poetry, chanting, singing lyrical songs, singing melodies, whistling, playing an instrument, or playing an instrument in combination with a spoken performance. Each ability requires both a minimum bard level and a minimum number of ranks in the Perform skill to qualify: if a bard does not have the required number of ranks in at least one Perform skill, he does not gain the bardic music ability until he acquires the needed ranks.

Starting a bardic music effect is a standard action. Some bardic music abilities require concentration, which means the bard must take a standard action each round to maintain the ability. Even while using bardic music that doesn't require concentration, a bard cannot cast spells, activate magic items by spell completion (such as scrolls), or activate magic items by magic word (such as wands). Just as for casting a spell with a verbal component, a deaf bard has a 20% chance to fail when attempting to use bardic music. If he fails, the attempt still counts against his daily limit.

Countersong (Su): A bard with 3 or more ranks in a Perform skill can use his music or poetics to counter magical effects that depend on sound (but not spells that simply have verbal components). Each round of the countersong, he makes a Perform check. Any creature within 30 ft. of the bard (including the bard himself) that is affected by a sonic or language-dependent magical attack may use the bard's Perform check result in place of its saving throw if, after the saving throw is rolled, the Perform check result proves to be higher. If a creature within range of the countersong is already under the effect of a noninstantaneous sonic or language-dependent magical attack, it gains another saving throw against the effect each round it hears the countersong, but it must use the bard's Perform check result for the save. Countersong has no effect against effects that don't allow saves. The bard may keep up the countersong for 10 rounds.

Fascinate (Sp): A bard with 3 or more ranks in a Perform skill can use his music or poetics to cause one or more creatures to become fascinated with him. Each creature to be fascinated must be within 90 ft., able to see and hear the bard, and able to pay attention to him. The bard must also be able to see the creature. The distraction of a nearby combat or other dangers prevents the ability from working. For every three levels a bard attains beyond 1st, he can target one additional creature with a single use of this ability.

To use the ability, a bard makes a Perform check. His check result is the DC for each affected creature's Will save against the effect. If a creature's saving throw succeeds, the bard cannot attempt to fascinate that creature again for 24 hours. If its saving throw fails, the creature sits quietly and listens to the song, taking no other actions, for as long as the bard continues to play and concentrate (up to a maximum of 1 round per bard level). While fascinated, a target takes a -4 penalty on skill checks made as reactions, such as Listen and Spot checks. Any potential threat requires the bard to make another Perform check and allows the creature a new saving throw against a DC equal to the new Perform check result.

Any obvious threat, such as someone drawing a weapon, casting a spell, or aiming a ranged weapon at the target, automatically breaks the effect. Fascinate is an enchantment (compulsion), mind-affecting ability.

Inspire Courage (Su): A bard with 3 or more ranks in a Perform skill can use song or poetics to inspire courage in his allies (including himself), bolstering them against fear and improving their combat abilities. To be affected, an ally must be able to hear the bard sing. The effect lasts for as long as the ally hears the bard sing and for 5 rounds thereafter. An affected ally receives a +1 morale bonus on saving throws against charm and fear effects and a +1 morale bonus on attack and weapon damage rolls. At 8th level, and every six bard levels thereafter, this bonus increases by 1 (+2 at 8th, +3 at 14th, and +4 at 20th). Inspire courage is a mind-affecting ability.

Inspire Competence (Su): A bard of 3rd level or higher with 6 or more ranks in a Perform skill can use his music or poetics to help an ally succeed at a task. The ally must be within 30 ft. and able to see and hear the bard. The bard must also be able to see the ally.

The ally gets a +2 competence bonus on skill checks with a particular skill as long as he or she continues to hear the bard's music. Certain uses of this ability are not feasible. The effect lasts as long as the bard concentrates, up to a maximum of 2 minutes. A bard can't inspire competence in himself. Inspire competence is a mind-affecting ability.

Bard Spells Known (3/4/2, save DC 12 + spell level): 0—detect magic, ghost sound, lullaby, mage hand, mending, resistance; 1st—lesser confusion, cure light wounds, expeditious retreat, sleep; 2nd—blur, sound burst, suggestion.

Skills: Goblins have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently and Ride checks

Possessions: Leather armor, short sword, sling, bullets (8), small drum.

B106. THE REBEL CHIRURGEON

This room is a grisly mess. A few forlorn cots line the back wall. The lumpy shapes under the rotten cloth blankets on the cots leave little to the imagination. In the center of the room, standing over the lifeless body of a goblin, is the rebel's chirurgeon, sewing together what is left of the dead soldier.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The goblin chirurgeon (hp 16) has just performed surgery on a rebel goblin, to no avail. While Guk (Room B95) calls upon the power of the stone spirits, he's not adept at healing. This young goblin chirurgeon has been tasked with fixing the raiders that return to the encampment, which is becoming more and more of a losing proposition. He is frightful and skittish and does not like the presence of the PCs one bit.

If attacked the chirurgeon flees, crying for help. If he alerts the guards housed in Room B97, they arrive 1d3+1 later.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The chirurgeon does everything in his power to escape the PCs. While he has a few spells at his disposal, he casts burning hands if cornered and sleep if he sees a cleric casting spells on the fighters.

Once the guards arrive they assist the chirurgeon, and attack the PCs. Like all rebels, these goblins have not been trained by the hobgoblins and do not have the complex tactics their cousins do. The rebels use standard swarm tactics to overwhelm and subdue the PCs. They guard the adept as best as they can, and look menacing if necessary.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 1/2

Skills: Goblins have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently and Ride checks.

Possessions: Leather apron (+1 AC), scalpel, masterwork healer's kit

✴ Black, Bat Familiar: CR —; Diminutive magical beast (augmented animal); HD [3]; hp 8; Init +2; Spd 5 ft., fly 40 ft. Skills and Feats: Hide +14, Listen +8, Move Silently +6, Spot +8; Alertness.

Blindsense (Ex): A bat notices and locates creatures within 20 feet. Opponents still have 100% concealment against a creature with blindsense.

Alertness (Ex): While a familiar is within arm's reach, the master gains the Alertness feat.

Improved Evasion (Ex): When subjected to an attack that normally allows a Reflex saving throw for half damage, a familiar takes no damage if it makes a successful saving throw and half damage even if the saving throw fails.

Empathic Link (Su): The master has an empathic link with his familiar out to a distance of up to 1 mile. The master cannot see through the familiar's eyes, but they can communicate empathically. Because of the limited nature of the link, only general emotional content can be communicated.

Because of this empathic link, the master has the same connection to an item or place that his familiar does.

Deliver Touch Spells (Su): If the master is 3rd level or higher, a familiar can deliver touch spells for him. If the master and the familiar are in contact at the time the master casts a touch spell, he can designate his familiar as the "toucher." The familiar can then deliver the touch spell just as the master could. As usual, if the master casts another spell before the touch is delivered, the touch spell dissipates.

Skills: A bat has a +4 racial bonus on Spot and Listen checks. These bonuses are lost if its blindsense is negated.

B107. GUK'S QUARTERS

Large and empty, this room is much nicer than others in the area. While spartan, a large sleeping area has been made up in the middle of the room, and various hides and weapons cover the walls. Leaning against the back wall is a club, with a wicked looking spike of iron driven through its head.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Guk (Room B95) and the majority of rebels, aside from those in the secret encampment, are still in Room B95. If the PCs have gotten this far they either have Guk's trust, or the PCs have already dealt with the rebel chieftain.

The hides and weapons on the walls are testaments to the goblin kings of the past. They are all Guk could smuggle out during his exodus from Argliss' regime. Guk's personal greatclub is here; he does not feel he needs to wield it in the safety of his own hall and leaves it in this Room when he is not raiding his cousins to the west.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs have somehow yet to meet Guk, there is a 50% chance he is here alone, and startled to find strangers in his quarters. His Initial Attitude is Unfriendly, as he does not trust foreigners.

Treasure: Guk's +1 greatclub is the only significant treasure in the room. The weapons on the walls are standard spears and short swords. They are all old and rusty however.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B108. REBEL GUARD ROOM

This room, like many in this area, is filled with spear wielding goblins. Along the north wall is a weapon's rack filled with sharpened wooden spears and javelins. Apparently nothing has threatened them recently, as they look quite bored... and eager for a fight.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room is staffed by ten of Guk's warriors (hp 6 each). They monitor the northern passages for incursions by the goblin king's forces. Occasionally they hunt the creatures that wander into these halls from the Untamed Rooms (Rooms B109 through B131).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: These goblins are bored and agitated with their assignment. They are looking for anything distracting, if their Attitude with the PCs is anything but Hostile, they strike up a conversation (in Goblin) or offer to play knuckbones or cards. If the PCs have Guk's favor, they even offer them places to sit and relax, eager for company.

If the Attitude is currently Hostile, the rebel goblins tear into the PCs, fighting with a fierceness they have not seen in goblins. Treat the goblins as enraged (per the spell rage) and give them a +2 circumstance bonus to their Initiative check.

Like all rebels, these goblins have not been trained by the hobgoblins and do not have the complex tactics their cousins do. However, they are fond of the 'aid another' combat action and flank and poke the PC at every turn. One of them has a vial of acid and another one has dragon bile smeared on his blade (3 doses). Any goblin that cannot get in to fight the PCs, throws a spear over head in attempt to harm PC spellcasters and those hanging back. They move to the weapon's rack to retrieve more if necessary.

Treasure: There are three spears and three javelins for every goblin in a weapons rack along the north wall. It requires a move action to grab one. Large or larger creatures can grab two in one action.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four goblins. To decrease the challenge, remove four goblins.

✴ Goblin, War 1: CR 1/3; Small humanoid (goblinoid); HD 1d8+1; hp 6; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 15, touch 12, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +1; Grp -3; Atk +2 melee (1d6/×3, spear) or +3 ranged (1d6/×3, spear) or +3 ranged (1d4, javelin); Full Atk +2 melee (1d6/×3, spear) or +3 ranged (1d6/×3, spear) or +3 ranged (1d4, javelin); SA —; SQ Darkvision 60 ft.; AL NE; SV Fort +3, Ref +1, Will -1; Str 11, Dex 13, Con 12, Int 10, Wis 9, Cha 6.

Skills and Feats: Hide +5, Listen +2, Move Silently +5, Ride +4, Spot +2; Alertness.

Skills: Goblins have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently and Ride checks. Goblin cavalry (mounted on worgs) usually select the Mounted Combat feat in place of the Alertness feat, which reduces their Spot and Listen check modifiers from +3 to +1.

B109 THROUGH B119. THE UNTAMED ROOMS

None of the goblinoid races lay claim to this rubble filled expanse. The earthquake hit this part of the dungeon hardest. A number of the traps originally laid down have been destroyed. Blink dogs, dire wolves, howlers and other monsters make their home in this rough expanse. Howls, high pitched whining and growls echo throughout the hallways.

The hallways are strewn with rubble and debris. Most of the rubble is the facing of the walls that came loose. Some of it is the remains of walls. The footing is treacherous and the wild monsters make the area dangerous. There are good reasons the goblinoids have not settled the area previously.

With the shrine to their new deity located in the northeastern section of this expanse, Arglist and his goblins have started to enter the area more frequently. They have even set up a way station for pilgrims and scouts to stay in at during the arduous trip from their empire to the shrine.

The bugbears have used the long, dangerous trip of the goblins to their advantage. They too have set up a small bivouac. From it they harass the goblin pilgrims and scouts. Their presence, coupled with the naturally wild monsters, makes this perhaps the most volatile area in the entire Region.

Each Room is assumed to have Poor Footing 3 in addition to any other Encounter Conditions.

1d20	Encounter
1	The PCs have walked into an area that is pitch black. The air is oppressive and a chill runs up the spines of the PCs. Deep Darkness, Fear 14.
2	Shadows jump across the hallway. The briefest of movement play just at the corner of the PCs vision. Exactly what it is may not be evident, however. Distracting Visions 10.
3	Something is not right about the expanse ahead. The lead PC is convinced, it is a perfect spot for an ambush (whether or not this is true is up to the DM). Cursed 4
4-12	Nothing
11	A dire wolf stalks the halls. This Room is strewn with debris; damage from the earthquake. The wolf lies in wait for the PCs, attacking when they are in range. Ambush, Cover.
12	Two ethereal marauders investigate this Room. Rubble and broken bits of some ancient trap litter the floor and the ethereal marauders are digging through them. They suffer a -5 distraction penalty to all Spot and Listen checks for 5 rounds.
13	Hovering over three goblin corpses is a lone howler. Since the goblins were not a challenge, the howler unleashes its fury on the PCs. Fearless.
14	A pack of three blink dogs moves slowly through the hall. They are wounded (-5 hp), having just concluded an encounter with dire wolves. Unfriendly unless attacked.
15	A pack of four dire wolves limp along. They are wounded (-10 hp), having just fought a rival pack of blink dogs. They are on the alert for any attack, despite their wounds. Ambush.
16	A goblin hunting party is engaged in a fight with a pair of vargouilles. Seven goblins remain — the corpses of five of their compatriots clog the battlefield. The goblins and vargouilles are too distracted to notice the PCs. They suffer a -6 circumstance penalty to Listen and Spot checks.
17	Three wights lurk in the halls, searching for easy prey. They encounter the PCs in this rubble strewn, dark room, attacking the PCs from the safety of the shadows. Ambush, Concealment, Cover.
18	The PCs stumble upon a trap.

Standing over the corpse of a dire wolf is Bartleby. He is fatigued from his encounter with the creature. Reduce Bartleby's hit points by -10. He does not ask the PCs for assistance, and leaves as soon as he spots them.

B109. PASSAGES OF DEATH

The door on the northern wall is open.

Rubble, broken, armored skeletons, and other detritus litter the hall. Ominous sounds emanating from the west fill the room, echoing off the cavernous walls. To the east is a small passage leading away into darkness.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: When the demon Falortuligo broke from its prison in Room C21, he broke into Region B through the doors here and finally into Room B111 where he was killed. The skeletons are a few of the paladins who died fighting him.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 10, Haunted Hazardous Footing 15, Unhallowed 4

Tactics: Just being here should unnerve the PCs. The sights, sounds, and sensations of these dead soldiers combine to create an aura of uneasy death. These men died horribly. Close examination of the bodies shows parts of bone missing from the ribs, legs, jaws, and arms, as if some great force tore them away before they died.

Treasure: There are a total of three skeletons, each wearing +1 cham shirts, with masterwork longswords on their belts, and tabbards of the order of Myrunn still hanging on their broken frames. One of the bodies wears a generic signet ring (with a cross) that can double as a silver holy symbol, should a PC require one.

B110. FRIGHTENED AND ALONE

The northern door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. The southeastern door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 35 Open Lock check to unlock.

Unless the PCs succeed at a DC 30 Move Silently check while opening the lock, read the following.

Sitting in the corner of this dark and empty room, a single goblin, eyes streaked with tears holds a withered, sharpened stick to defend itself. Its hands shake in fear and trepidation.

If the PCs succeed in picking the lock quietly, read the following.

The room is dark and empty. In one of the corners, a single goblin whimpers and cries to himself. His hands tremble as he stares at the sharpened stick in his hand.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This rebel goblin, Klibb (hp 4), has been locked inside this Room for 3 days. Fearing whatever is in Room B111, he locked himself in this Room. However, in doing so, he broke off his pick in one of the locks and has been unable to escape. To make matters worse, the Room is haunted and he's been unable to sleep with the noises, chattering, and unexplained shadows hovering around him all night long. He's down to one last candle for light, but refuses to use it for fear that he may be in this Room for a long while yet.

Encounter Condition: Haunted

Tactics: Klibb does not want to fight and gladly throws himself on the mercy of the PCs. If they intend to kill him, he greets death willingly, though if they leave an opening for an escape he takes it. If they offer to let him join, he gladly accepts and escorts them wherever they want to go.

This is a perfect opportunity to drop a new PC into the group. If a goblin is not on the menu of acceptable races for players, replace Klibb with just about anything that fits, including an elf deserter from Region H. It makes the most sense for Klibb (or his replacement) to be a rogue, but if another goblin lies dead in the Room who actually locked the doors from the inside, Klibb can be any class.

Sneak Attack: Klibb's attack deals extra damage any time his target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when G'lp flanks his target. This extra damage is 1d6. Should G'lp score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Ranged attacks can count as sneak attacks if the target is within 30 ft.

This room is evil; you can feel it in your bones. The floor is covered in debris and is slightly tacky. Any sound you make, as well as a few others, echo throughout the chamber loudly. To say you have a bad feeling about this cavernous room is an understatement.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is perhaps the most dangerous Room in the entire Region. An epic battle took place here ages ago (see Region C, page 128) and the effects of the battle still linger. The conditions of the Room are tough to handle, but that is not the worst of it. Soon after the PCs enter the Room, six corrupted ghoulish paladins (hp 26) — dressed in magical chain mail, carrying unholy swords, and wearing the tabards of the Order of Myrunn — attack the PCs. They are fearless and descend without hesitation, merely waiting for the appropriate moment to strike.

They do not look like typical ghouls. While their skin is tight, eyes hollow, and claws sharpened to razor-like perfection, they carry themselves with regal authority and wield swords as though they were born to. Their helmets hide everything but their fangs and empty eyes and their weapons gleam with unnerving energy.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment, Cursed 5, Desecration 6, Echoes 10, Fear 14, Fearless, Haunted, Hazardous Footing 16, Negative Energy, Unhallowed 4

Tactics: The ghouls alternate between bite, claw, and longsword attacks. They know that a paralyzed victim is easier to subdue, but they cannot deny their paladin heritage. They maintain an aura of fear, in addition to the fear effect of the Room. When the PCs reach the center of the Room have them make two Will saves. The Room's fear effect is oppressive, while the ghouls have a chill like effect that permeates everything.

The ghouls work like a team, ganging up on stragglers and distracting the weak. They have a strong hatred for clerics and wizards (seeing Arum as the cause of their death). They do not put themselves in harms way, but do their best to kill spellcasters before they can "boost" the PCs.

If the PCs cannot dispatch the ghouls quickly enough, they run the risk of drawing the attention of other nearby monsters. After 11 rounds of combat, roll for a Random Encounter. If the result is odd, the Random Encounter occurs, forcing the PCs to deal with even more foes. If not, roll again on the 12th round of combat. If the result is even, the Random Encounter occurs. Do not roll for further encounters beyond this point.

Note, these corrupted ghoulish paladins have spell resistance 14 and an additional +4 natural armor bonus.

Treasure: Having rotted their magical weapons and armor from their caustic and unholy touch, their swords and chain shirts turn to dust when the ghouls die.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one corrupted paladin. To decrease the challenge, remove the magical arms and armor from the corrupted paladins.

Corrupted [Ghoul] Paladin: CR 3; Medium undead; HD 2d12 + 2d12; hp 26; Init +2; Spd 30 ft.; AC 23, touch 12, flat-footed 20; Base Atk +3; Grp +5; Atk +7 melee (1d8+3/19–20, +1 unholy longsword) or +5 melee (1d6+2 plus paralysis, bite); Full Atk Bite +7 melee (1d8+3/19–20, +1 unholy longsword) or +3 melee (1d6+1 plus paralysis, bite) and +3 melee (1d3/19–20 plus paralysis, claw); SA Ghoul fever, paralysis; SQ +3 turn resistance, dark blessing, darkvision 60 ft., detect good, spell resistance 14, undead traits; AL CE; SV Fort +5, Ref +4, Will +7; Str 14, Dex 15, Con —, Int 13, Wis 14, Cha 14.

Skills and Feats: Balance +6, Climb +5, Hide +6, Jump +5, Move Silently +6, Spot +7, Multiattack, Weapon Focus (longsword).

Detect Good (Sp): At will, a corrupted paladin can use detect good as a spell-like ability, duplicating the effect of the detect good spell.

Ghoul Fever (Su): Disease—bite, Fortitude DC 14, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d3 Constitution and 1d3 Dexterity. The save DC is Charisma-based.

An afflicted humanoid who dies of ghoul fever rises as a ghoul at the next midnight. A humanoid who becomes a ghoul in this way retains none of the abilities it possessed in life. It is not under the control of any other ghouls, but it hungers for the flesh of the living and behaves like a normal ghoul in all respects. A humanoid of 4 Hit Dice or more rises as a ghast, not a ghoul.

Paralysis (Ex): Those hit by a corrupted paladin's bite or claw attack must succeed on a DC 14 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 1d4+1 rounds. Elves have no immunity to this particularly paralysis. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Smite Good (Su): Once a day, a corrupted paladin may attempt to smite good with one normal melee attack.

He adds his Charisma modifier (+2) to his attack roll and deals 2 extra points of damage. If a corrupted paladin accidentally smites a creature that is not good, the smite has no effect but is still used up for that day.

Corrupted Paladin Spells Prepared (2, save DC 12 + spell level):
1st—cause fear, inflict light wounds.

B112 THROUGH B114. PRISON CELLS

While part and parcel of the surrounding Section, these four Rooms have specific significance. They are prison cells that at one time or another held demons, devils, and undead. Some of the Room still have occupants and all the doors are locked and guarded by glyphs. DMs can describe the doors while the PCs stand in Room B111, but until they touch them, there is not chance of knowing what will happen.

B112. DARKNESS AGAIN

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. Unlike the other Rooms in this area, the glyph on this door, triggers the door to open when read.

This simple room is empty, and dark. Light recedes and dissipates, almost swallowed by the darkness. The floor, from what you can see, is strangely free of dust.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Whatever once lived here, is gone having escaped when a foolish goblin read the glyph on the door. Most likely a wight, it either escaped into the dungeon or was killed by the ghouls in Room B111.

Encounter Condition: Deep Darkness, Desecration 3, Negative Energy
Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the PCs spend 30 minutes searching the Room (and have adequate light), allow a DC 25 Search check to find a loose stone in the floor. A DC 16 Strength check lifts the stone from its perch. The stone is nearly 200 lbs and covers a small area the size of a halfling. Buried under the stone is a suit of +1 ghost touch splinted mail, obviously hidden away so it could never be used against the forces of good. It radiates evil and affects good-aligned PCs who don it as though it were an unholy weapon.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B113. TRAPPED WIGHT

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. In addition, the door is trapped with a glyph or warding, protecting the contents of the Room from escape. Tampering with the door or lock in any manner triggers it.

☛ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 4; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 5th-level cleric, 2d8 cold, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

A small tomb-like room rests to the northeast of the large circular room. The contents are spartan and darkness extends to every corner. Before you can think, something has crept from the shadows.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Two insanity wights (hp 28 each) have been trapped in this Room since its creation. Being undead, they do not understand the passage of time as humans do, but nonetheless have maintained a semblance of reality that finally drove them mad. Insane, they howl with an allip-like moan.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Distracting Noises 10, Fear 15, Fearless, Unhallowed 2

Tactics: The insanity wight attacks immediately, taking advantage of surprised PCs. They babble incessantly, as they attack each PC in turn.

Treasure: If the PCs have adequate light, allow a DC 25 Search check to find a series of loose flagstones in the floor. Buried under the stones is a +1 unholy morningstar, obviously hidden away so it could never be used against the forces of good. A DC 14 Strength check lifts the stones.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one wight. To decrease the challenge, remove the allip-like babbling ability from the wights.

☛ [Insanity] Wight: CR 4; Medium undead; HD 4d12 (26 hp); Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 15, touch 11, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +2; Grp +3; Atk +3 melee (1d4+1 plus energy drain, slam); Full Atk +3 melee (1d4+1 plus energy drain, slam); SA Babble, create spawn, energy drain; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., undead traits; AL LE; SV Fort +1, Ref +2, Will +5; Str 12, Dex 12, Con —, Int 11, Wis 13, Cha 15.

Skills and Feats: Hide +8, Listen +7, Move Silently +16, Spot +7; Alertness, Blind-Fight.

Babble (Su): An insanity wight constantly howls and moans to itself, creating an hypnotic effect. All sane creatures within 60 ft. of the insanity wight must succeed on a DC 14 Will save or be affected as though by a hypnotism spell for 2d4 rounds. This is a sonic mind-affecting compulsion effect.

Creatures that successfully save cannot be affected by the same insanity wight's babble for 24 hours. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Create Spawn (Su): Any humanoid slain by a wight becomes a wight in 1d4 rounds. Spawn are under the command of the wight that created them and remain enslaved until its death. They do not possess any of the abilities they had in life.

Energy Drain (Su): Living creatures hit by a wight's slam attack gain one negative level. The DC is 14 for the Fortitude save to remove a negative level. The save DC is Charisma-based. For each such negative level bestowed, the wight gains 5 temporary hit points.

Skills: Wights have a +8 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

B114. HELL ON EVERY EARTH

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. In addition, the door is trapped with a glyph or warding, protecting the contents of the Room from escape. Tampering with the door or lock in any manner triggers it.

☛ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 6; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 16th-level cleric, 8d8 sonic, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

From the darkness you can hear an unhealthy moan, something sinister and decrepit. The darkness cuts your torchlight and the moan grows louder as you peer into the shadows.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A ghost (hp 68) of unusual strength has been trapped in this Room since the dungeon's creation. Once shackled, it broke those bonds long ago. Now the manacles and chains hang from a metal ring in the wall. The floor is littered with sepsis and slime, making walking difficult.

The ghost has no love of the living and attacks immediately.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Concealment, Fearless, Poor Footing 4, Unhallowed 2

Tactics: Taking advantage of the darkness, the ghost bull rushes the first PC, in an attempt to pin him. Using the darkness to his advantage he gains a +2 circumstance bonus to the bullrush (in addition to having moved at least 15 ft.). Once on the ground, he attacks ferociously, biting and clawing until the victim is paralyzed. He then moves on to the next victim using the same tactics, paralyzing the PC and moving on to the next.

In addition to his paralyzing touch, the ghost also drains 1d3 Dexterity with every hit, slowing victims down with each attack. The ghost is a fear-some predator and uses its mechanisms to finish off the PCs.

Treasure: If the PCs spend 30 minutes searching the Room (and have adequate light), they can find a broken stone in the floor. A DC 12 Strength check lifts the pieces of broken stone easily. Nothing is buried here, having been taken by the ghost.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, give the ghost +6 natural armor and maximum hit points. To reduce the challenge, remove the ghost's teeth and only allow it to paralyze with its claws.

Ghost: CR 3; Medium Undead; HD 8d12+6; hp 68; Init +3; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 12, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +2; Grp+5; Atk Bite +5 melee (1d8+3 plus paralysis); Full Atk +5 melee (1d8+3 plus paralysis, bite) and +3 melee (1d4+1 plus paralysis, 2 claws); SA Ghoul fever, paralysis, stench; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., fast healing 2, undead traits, +2 turn resistance; AL CE; SV Fort +1, Ref +4, Will +6; Str 17, Dex 17, Con —, Int 13, Wis 14, Cha 16.

Skills and Feats: Balance +11, Climb +13, Hide +12, Jump +13, Listen +8, Move Silently +12, Spot +12; Multiattack, Toughness (2)

Ghoul Fever (Su): Disease—bite, Fortitude DC 15, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d3 Con and 1d3 Dex. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Paralysis (Ex): Those hit by a ghost's bite or claw attack must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 1d4+1 rounds. Even elves can be affected by this paralysis. The save DC is Charisma-based.

B

Stench (Ex): The stink of death and corruption surrounding these creatures is overwhelming. Living creatures within 10 feet must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or be sickened for 1d6+4 minutes. A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same ghast's stench for 24 hours. A delay poison or neutralize poison spell removes the effect from a sickened creature. Creatures with immunity to poison are unaffected, and creatures resistant to poison receive their normal bonus on their saving throws. The save DC is Charisma-based.

B115. SEVERED VARGOUILLES

From outside the door, the PCs can hear the muffled shriek of something far off. In actuality the vargouilles inside are shrieking at a fever pitch, but the walls of the dungeon suppress the volume of their screams. As soon as the door is opened, the shriek hits them at full volume.

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. In addition, the door is trapped with a glyph or warding, protecting the contents of the Room from escape. Tampering with the door or lock in any manner triggers it.

♣ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 4; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 5th-level cleric, 2d8 acid, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

As soon as the door opens a feverish shriek blasts your senses, striking your psyche with an impossibly bold sound. The room, shrouded in darkness, shows no signs of occupants, but the shrieks cannot be ignored.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: From the darkness, four vargouilles (hp 5 each) shriek and scream. The PCs cannot see them because it's dark, but if they can get closer, they see four heads spiked to iron rods in the wall, some ten feet above the floor. Striking them should be easy enough, should the PCs have a weapon that can reach.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Distracting Noises 6, Deep Darkness, Fear 14

Tactics: The vargouilles are spiked to the walls, unable to move, but unwilling to die. They have been shrieking for thousands of years, trapped in this constant state of agony. Unable to deny their unholy heritage, they scream continuously, no matter what the PCs do. They cannot move, and want nothing more than to be free of this living hell they are trapped in.

Death is the most obvious answer, but escape is their goal.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3 or 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, do not have the vargouilles spiked to the wall, but flying about at will. To decrease the challenge, reduce each vargouille to 1 hit point each, representing the constant state of near death that they "live" in.

♣ Vargouille: CR 2; Small outsider (evil, extraplanar); HD 1d8+1; hp 5; Init +1; Spd Fly 0 ft. (good); AC 12, touch 11, flat-footed 11; Base Atk +1; Grp -3; Atk +3 melee (1d4 plus poison, bite); Full Atk +3 melee (1d4 plus poison, bite); SA Shriek, kiss, poison; SQ Darkvision 60 ft.; AL NE; SV Fort +3, Ref +3, Will +3; Str 10, Dex 13, Con 12, Int 5, Wis 12, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Hide +9, Intimidate +3, Listen +5, Move Silently +5, Spot +5; Weapon Finesse.

Shriek (Su): Instead of biting, a vargouille can open its distended mouth and let out a terrible shriek. Those within 60 ft. (except other vargouilles) who hear the shriek and can clearly see the creature must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or be paralyzed with fear for 2d4 rounds or until the monster attacks them, goes out of range, or leaves their sight. A paralyzed creature is susceptible to the vargouille's kiss (see below). A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same vargouille's shriek for 24 hours. The shriek is a mind-affecting fear effect. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Kiss (Su): A vargouille can kiss a paralyzed target with a successful melee touch attack. An affected opponent must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or begin a terrible transformation that turns the creature into a vargouille within 24 hours (and often much sooner; roll 1d6 separately for each phase of the transformation).

First, over a period of 1d6 hours, all the victim's hair falls out. Within another 1d6 hours thereafter, the ears grow into leathery wings, tentacles sprout on the chin and scalp, and the teeth become long, pointed fangs. During the next 1d6 hours, the victim takes Intelligence drain and Charisma drain equal to 1 point per hour (to a minimum of 3).

The transformation is complete 1d6 hours later, when the head breaks free of the body (which promptly dies) and becomes a vargouille. This transformation is interrupted by sunlight, and even a daylight spell can delay death, but to reverse the transformation requires remove disease. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +4 racial bonus.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 12 or be unable to heal the vargouille's bite damage naturally or magically. A neutralize poison or heal spell removes the effect, while delay poison allows magical healing. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

B116. ISOLATED REBELS

As the PCs approach this Room, allow Listen checks to overhear the goblins inside, counting and bickering. While they are not hostile toward one another, or shouting, they are busy dividing up their loot.

There is a 50% chance one goblin is standing guard in front of the door. Otherwise, everyone is inside, with one goblin watching the door from the back wall.

This small, cramped room is filled with rebel goblin warriors, sitting down and sifting through a small pile of coins and gems. Before you can do anything, they grab their spears and attack.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Nine goblins (hp 8, 7, 7, 7, 6, 5, 5, 4, 3) left Room B108 out of boredom. Wishing to explore the dungeon, they braved the maze, snuck passed the goblins in Rooms B86 and so on, and made their way through the trapped Rooms in the center of the Region.

None of this was difficult, but the goblin keeping track of where they were going, died under a portulacis trap and they have been stuck this in Section for weeks now. The other goblins in the rebel encampment presume they are dead. Since they have been gone for so long, they do not know whether the PCs are loyal to the rebels or not. As such, they are treated no better than their traitorous cousins. Unless the PCs can show some sign of their allegiance to the rebel goblins (and quickly), they are attacked as soon as they PCs enter the Room.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 5

Tactics: These goblins are ragged and frazzled. Consider their mental state shaken for the duration of this fight. These goblins attack with an intense need to kill. The PCs should be allowed a chance to calm them down (spells work, for instance). Should 50% of the goblins come to their senses, they all stop fighting and invite the PCs in, hoping they can guide them home.

The goblins have encountered the blink dogs in Room B117, but keep to themselves, knowing better than to antagonize the beasts.

Treasure: While exploring they were able to collect a small pile of treasure that they were diving up (for the 40th time) when the PCs interrupted. There are 116 sp, 23 gp, an uncut sapphire (350 gp), and a potion of gaseous form.

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three goblins and give them all Toughness. To decrease the challenge, remove two.

♣ Goblin, War 1: CR 1/3; Small humanoid (goblinoid); HD 1d8+1; hp 8, 7, 7, 7, 6, 5, 5, 4, 3; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 15, touch 12, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +1; Grp -3; Atk +2 melee (1d6/x3, spear) or +3 ranged (1d6/x3, spear); Full Atk +2 melee (1d6/x3, spear) or +3 ranged (1d6/x3, spear); SA —; SQ Darkvision 60 ft.; AL NE; SV Fort +3, Ref +1, Will -1; Str 11, Dex 13, Con 12, Int 10, Wis 9, Cha 6.

Skills and Feats: Hide +5, Listen +2, Move Silently +5, Ride +4, Spot +2; Alertness

Skills: Goblins have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently and Ride checks. Goblin cavalry (mounted on worgs) usually select the Mounted Combat feat in place of the Alertness feat, which reduces their Spot and Listen check modifiers from +3 to +1.

B117. BLINK DOG DEN

The door to this room is open, its lock broken.

In the midst of all the chaos in this section of the dungeon, this room feels safe. An easy calm washes over you and the room itself seems to be an enticing place to rest. The peace is broken as a series of low growls fill the air.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The PCs have entered a blink dog den. Resting from rigors of the Section, four blink dogs (hp 40, 32, 24, 14) rest on beds of cloth and adventuring gear. They do not attack the PCs initially, but they make their dislike of the PCs' invasion clear. The blink dogs bare their fangs, growling and yapping at the PCs. If the PCs do not leave, the blink dogs slowly advance, hoping to drive them off. If any PCs attack, they immediately retaliate.

Any ranger or druid amongst the PCs can attempt a DC 20 Animal Empathy check to calm the dogs. Success allows the PCs to remain and rest in the room though the blink dogs are obviously not pleased with the PCs' presence.

Encounter Condition: [Safe]

Tactics: The three largest blink dogs launch themselves at the PCs, with the alpha male protecting the smallest and youngest blink dog. They focus on the most aggressive PCs first, concentrating on one enemy at a time. They use their limited blink ability to flank the PCs.

If the alpha male is killed, the second largest takes command of the pack. If it dies, the remaining blink dogs cower in a corner until the PCs leave or finish them off.

The smallest is too old to train at this point, having been feral too long to be of use to animal trainers. However, since blink dogs are lawful good creatures, they prefer not to fight. But being trapped in the dungeon, they grow more and more feral with the passage of time. Rangers and druids may attempt to calm the blink dogs, requiring an Animal Empathy check in place of Diplomacy checks. If the PCs remain for 2 hours or more, another check is required, lest the alpha male grow restless.

If the PCs clear the goblins out of B116 and keep the portculis in Room B118 down, this Room is considered Safe.

Treasure: Among the adventuring gear the blink dogs were resting on are two coils of 50-ft. rope, a backpack, six candles, a tinder box, a rusty carving knife, and waterskin filled with holy water.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one blink dog. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

✦ Blink Dog: CR 2; Medium magical beast; HD 4d10; hp 40, 32, 24, 14; Init +3; Spd 40 ft.; AC 16, touch 13, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +4; Grp +4; Atk +4 melee (1d6, bite); Full Atk +4 melee (1d6, bite); SA —; SQ Blink, darkvision 60 ft., dimension door, low-light vision, scent; AL LG; SV Fort +4, Ref +7, Will +4; Str 10, Dex 17, Con 10, Int 10, Wis 13, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Hide +3, Listen +5, Sense Motive +3, Spot +5, Survival +4; Iron Will, Run, Track

Blink (Su): A blink dog can use blink as the spell (caster level 8th), and can evoke or end the effect as a free action.

Dimension Door (Su): A blink dog can teleport, as dimension door (caster level 8th), once per round as a free action. The ability affects only the blink dog, which never appears within a solid object and can act immediately after teleporting.

B118. MOSS FILLED GUARD CHAMBER

The portculis blocking the PCs path is down. In order to open it, the PCs must pull the lever (inside the Room) down.

Deep green moss covers the walls and ceiling of this room. The only bare stone is the floor. The moss is rich and thick, taking on the appearance of an expensive carpet. The air in this room is thick and pungent as well. The moss appears to be sucking all freshness out of the room. Along the west wall, a lever juts out.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The walls and ceiling of this room are the remnants of an ancient celestial trap that was damaged in the earthquake. Touching the lever triggers an ungol dust trap, but opens the portculis.

Ungol Dust Vapor Trap: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; gas; multiple targets (all targets in a 10-ft. by 10-ft. room); never miss; onset delay (2 rounds); poison (ungol dust, DC 15 Fortitude save resists, 1 Cha/1d6 Cha plus 1 Cha drain); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 16.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: Along the western wall is a lever, that when pulled down, raises the portculis in the hallway. When pushed up, the portculis lowers.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the ungol dust vapor trap with a wyvern arrow trap. To decrease the challenge, remove the trap and raise the portculis.

B119. ABANDONED OUTPOST

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 35 Open Lock check to unlock. The door can be locked from the inside or outside.

This room was once an outpost of some sort; that much is obvious at least. A rotted framework, probably for bunk beds, leans against one wall. A large, stained table takes up the center of the room. On the eastern wall there is a slight discoloration in the center from a map which once hung there. Along the back wall is a weapons rack.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This outpost has been abandoned for a long time. The furniture is old, and the floor is littered with rubble and debris.

No matter how long the PCs search the room, they cannot determine who used the room, or what they used it for; it dates back to the time of the battle that took place in Room B111. The map that hung on the wall has long since been destroyed, and the only thing on the table are dark stains. The weapon rack in the back of the room seems to be in decent repair, and still holds a few weapons.

Encounter Condition: Hazardous Footing 5, [Safe]

Tactics: If the PCs lock the door from the inside, nothing can get in to disturb them. The locals consider this Room unreachable anyway.

Treasure: At first glance the weapon's rack appears trapped, but a DC 23 Disable Device check reveals that the trigger is fake, designed to trick would be thieves. Over the years the "tripline" has rotted and nothing resembling a trap remains.

The weapons of a long dead soldier hang on the weapon rack, holding a +1 longbow and a +2 buckler in addition to a few mundane odds and ends. The DM should place a few javelins and arrows on the rack for PCs to replenish their wares.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B120 THROUGH B132. RUINS

The fallout from the earthquake can still be felt here. Doors are broken open from the inside. Unholy screams fill the corridors. And everywhere the PCs go, the smell of death follows them. This place is unfit for the living... let alone the dead.

Unlike the majority of the Region, this expanse suffered real damage. The halls are strewn with rubble and debris that make traversing them an adventure in and of itself. Doors are broken from the inside, hanging on their hinges, allowing a glimpse into the shadowy confines of the rooms beyond. On top of all the damage, there is still the matter of the inhabitants wandering the halls.

The goblins and bugbears may have control over their respective sections, but this Section is ruled by wild creatures and untamed monsters. This makes pilgrimages to the shrine that much more difficult as beasts threaten the goblins at every turn. This Section is not safe.

To add to the disturbing nature of the Section, the stench of death and decay permeates the very air. The creatures here do not coexist peacefully, and between their encounters with each other and the goblins that enter this area surreptitiously, the results of various conflicts have saturated the dungeon. Dark stains, scattered bones and broken weapons mark the violence of these meetings. Compared to the relatively spartan and benign rooms in the other areas, this entire section radiates a dangerous aura.

The DM should add the following Encounter Conditions as he sees fit — Echoes 4, Poor Footing 4, Stagnant Air.

Every Room's door is either open or broken off.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Roll for a Random Encounter once per hour.

1d20	Encounter
1	The humid air and warm temperature combine to generate a thick, murky mist. Fog 5 or 10.
2	Something cursed this Room. A vengeful spirit, a goblin mystic, or maybe even a powerful wizard is responsible. Negative Energy.
3	The chattering sounds of the dungeon's inhabitants echo wildly off the walls here. The various growls and howls coalesce in this room, rattling all those in it to the core of their being. Distracting Noises 10.
4	The earthquake damaged the floor significantly here, and the sharp rubble presents a dangerous obstacle. Hazardous Footing 15.
5	A dead body, now unidentifiable, lies across the PCs' path. Maggots and flies surround it and the air is choked with the smell of rot. Stagnant Air.
6–12	Nothing
13–15	A creature sticks its head out of a doorway, sees the PCs and then disappears again, before they reach it.

Bartleby searches the area around the shrine for his elusive artifact. He is easily agitated and believes the artifact ought to be in the shrine, as it is the only area he has yet to fully explore.

B120. THE CROSSROADS

The enormity of this room astounds you. Its sheer, white walls and bleached granite ceiling are truly impressive. Less impressive are the red scrawled runes carved and painted on the walls. The writing is hard to decipher, but it appears to be a series of taunts and proclamations from one group to the other. The center of the room is likewise stained. Upon closer inspection it appears to be blood.

In addition to the room's decor, there is the unmistakable smell of rot. While the smell isn't overpowering, it isn't comfortable either.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Bugbears use this Room to lure their enemies into a series of traps, all simple but effective. Typically, the bugbears run through the Room, and exit through any one of a number doors, pressing hidden triggers as they go. In actuality, this trick has worked nearly a dozen times, and each time the bugbears reset the traps, they prepare for another wave of gullible victims.

Pressure sensitive plates underneath the floor trigger the first trap, which in turn triggers two more. PCs stepping across the floor are required a DC 16 Balance check to avoid triggering the first nail of needles trap. PCs that are moving quickly suffer a –4 circumstance penalty to this check.

After the hail of needles trap, a ungod dust vapor trap goes off, followed by a pit trap in the floor (with a 1 round gap between each trap). To make matters worse, the pit is lined with spikes. Presently three dead goblins line the bottom of pit, all of which are decomposing and covered in maggots.

◆ Ungod Dust Vapor Trap: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; gas; multiple targets (all targets in a 10-ft.-by-10-ft. room); never miss; onset delay (2 rounds); poison (ungod dust, DC 15 Fortitude save resists, 1 Cha/1d6 Cha plus 1 Cha drain); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 16.

◆ Wide-Mouth Spiked Pit Trap: CR 4; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 20 ft. deep (2d6, fall); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); pit spikes (Atk +10 melee, 1d4 spikes per target for 1d4+2 each); Search DC 18; Disable Device DC 25.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: To safely cross the Room the PCs need to locate the reset mechanism, which is located beneath a chipped tile in the northwestern corner of the Room. There are three separate triggers, each to a different trap. A fourth trigger leads to the delay between the traps, allowing the PCs the opportunity to alter the intervals between the traps from 1 round to 6 rounds. This requires a DC 22 Disable Device check.

There is a 10% chance that two bugbears are in this Room resetting and rearming the traps. If so, they are Unfriendly to the PCs, having never seen humans (etc.) before.

Treasure: Tucked in the southwest corner are two dead goblins, maybe 2 or 3 days old. They are covered in needles and their clothing torn to shreds. Allow the PCs a DC 25 Spot or DC 20 Search check to find these bodies. They have 1d4 sp each in their mauled pockets, but the bugbears have stripped everything else away.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a fireball trap that goes off at the bottom of the pit. To decrease the challenge, remove the ungod dust vapor trap.

B121. BUGBEAR BIVOUC

This small room has been taken over by a group of bugbears. They bark and growl at you as you enter, tightening their grip on their clubs. The bugbears seem wary and tired, and are waiting for you to make the first move.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Three bugbear soldiers (hp 29, 29, 25) use this location to harass the goblin pilgrims traveling to the shrine (Room B134). Any disruption of the goblin king's minions is seen as a victory to the bugbears and they take full advantage of the long trip many goblins make to visit their deity.

If the PCs can convince the bugbears they are friends, their attitude shifts to Indifferent and they allow the PCs to make use of the Room to rest. If the bugbears believe the PCs are allied with either faction of goblins, their attitude instantly becomes Hostile and they attack the PCs.

Encounter Condition: [Safe]

Tactics: The bugbears know they are outmatched, and avoid a fight if possible. They gang up on the nearest PC and use him as a human shield if possible. They stay close together, making sure they cannot be flanked, engaging the PCs en masse only when safe, and taking down opponents as quickly as possible — they know the cost of a protracted fight.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one bugbear and change their Initial Attitude to Hostile. To decrease the challenge, have the bugbears out on patrol, only to return in 1d6 minutes.

Bugbear Soldier, Rog 2: CR 4; Medium humanoid (goblinoid); HD 3d8+3 + 2d6+2; hp 29, 29, 25; Init +2; Spd 30 ft.; AC 19, touch 12, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +3; Grp +5; Atk +6 melee (1d8+2/19–20, longsword) or +5 ranged (1d6+2, javelin); Full Atk +6 melee (1d8+2/19–20, longsword) or +5 ranged (1d6+2, javelin); SA Sneak attack +1d6; SQ Darkvision 60 ft. evasion, scent; AL LE; SV Fort +2, Ref +8, Will +1; Str 15, Dex 14, Con 13, Int 10, Wis 10, Cha 9.

Skills and Feats: Climb +2, Hide +9, Listen +5, Move Silently +13, Spot +5; Alertness, Weapon Focus (long sword).

Sneak Attack: The bugbear soldier's attack deals extra damage any time his target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the bugbear soldier flanks his target. This extra damage is 1d6. Should the bugbear soldier score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Ranged attacks can count as sneak attacks only if the target is within 30 ft.

Evasion (Ex): Bugbear soldiers can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility. If he makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, he instead takes no damage.

Skills: Bugbears have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

Possessions: Studded leather, buckler, long sword, quiver of 3 javelins.

B122. WAYWARD AND LOST

Have the effects of this Room carry out 30 ft. or so from the Room, causing the PCs to become confused before they reach the interior. The doors to this Room are broken or missing.

All around you, the walls and floor dance with wavy hear lines, moving from you. Your vision blurs and the boundaries of the room grow more confusing, shifting in front of you. Suddenly your ears begin to ring and your balance is disrupted. On the ground, dead bodies of goblins and wolves twist and writhe. Their heads move as though barking, but no sound comes out.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Whatever magic created this Room, has become tainted, twisting the PCs minds and feeding them hallucinations. Fear takes effect every 1d4 minutes (per PC) and the effects are cumulative (shaken becomes frightened, frightened becomes panicked), so spending too long in this Room can be dangerous for the PCs mental well-being.

Encounter Condition: Deep Silence, Fear 15

Tactics: PCs remaining in the Room suffer the effects of confusion (no save), until they leave. The DM is encouraged to make the Room difficult to escape.

Treasure: The goblins each carry 1d3 mundane items and there is one minor magic item under the body of the dire wolf, but the PCs are lucky to escape this Room, let alone find time to Search the dead.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B123. PIT OF DESPAIR

A deep pit takes up the center of this room. The walls have been broken from the weight of extreme stress, and gears and other mechanical devices are exposed. Obviously a trap of some sort was the centerpiece of this room at one point, but it appears to be inoperable now. Still, for a room that seems relatively safe, why do you feel so unnerved?

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Once a great celestial trap filled this Room, now the innards of the trap lay exposed. It was either damaged by the great earthquake, or ruined by the bugbears; it is impossible to be sure.

There is a presence in the Room, be it a creature that fell to the trap while it was still active, or something living at the bottom of the pit, and it is quite unnerving. The longer the PCs stay in this Room, the more unnerved they become.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 10, Distracting Visions 10, Echoes, Fear 15, Haunted

Tactics: Every hour the PCs spend in this Room, they must make another fear save, increasing the DC by +1 for every previous check.

Treasure: A DC 20 Search check reveals a series of claw marks in the stone that could only come from the acidic touch of a demon or other creature. The stone is still hot from whatever made the marks. The marks radiate evil and strong transmutation. If the PCs spend 30 minutes collecting the molten pieces of stone from the wall, they can use them as a material components for 1d3 castings. The stone, touched by great evil, taints the magic with evil energy, but doubles the duration and range of the spell. A DC 22 Craft (alchemy) or DC 28 Spellcraft check reveals that the molten stone (once chipped away) can aid their castings of non-instantaneous spells.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

B124. CRYPT OF THE HOBGOBLIN KINGS

The door on the northeastern wall is open.

This room is filled with rubble and debris. Most of the it appears to have been a part of a large statue at some point. The details have been destroyed, but from what you can tell it looks like the statue was of a fear-some celestial. A haze of smoke fills the ceiling, giving the impression that something (or someone) was burned here recently. A slag of cloth [and flesh] rests against the north wall, just below the broken statue.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This room served as a burial place for various creatures moving through. The statue, thought of as a guardian, or watcher of the dead, was offered burnt remains or whatever religious items of significance could be procured by visitors. Various races have used this Room over the years and presently, the bugbears use it to burn their dead.

Even though the statue has crumbled with age and as a result of neglect, the creatures in the Section treat it with reverence. From time to time, whatever they can find is offered and laid to rest at its base. Usually, these coins and trinkets are taken by foolish or greedy goblins, but from time to time a small pile of silver can be found here.

Encounter Condition: Hazardous Footing 5, Positive Energy

Tactics: Sifting through the debris should take some time. A Random Encounter every 45 minutes or so is a good way to convince the PCs not to "hang around" too long.

Treasure: In the northwest corner of the Room, under a large stone, is a hidden compartment, cut out from the floor. The compartment is about the size of a Small coffin and requires a DC 24 Search check to locate. The compartment has become a repository for discarded items. Various tremors in the Room have buried it however, and no one has "donated" to the compartment in years. A few discarded weapons and trinkets can be found as well as a +1 large steel shield and three potions of magic fang +3. If the DM likes, add a few hundred silver pieces as well.

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add the Encounter Condition, Smoke. To decrease the challenge, remove the Hazardous Footing 5 Encounter Condition.

B125. FIGHT FOR DOMINANCE

The north and south doors to this Room are open.

As the PCs approach, allow them Listen checks to hear the fighting, growling, and baying taking place in this Room. Otherwise, they only hear the animals after they open one of the the doors.

Three yellow-brown hounds are fighting against a pair of large, feral wolves. They snarl and bark at one another, neither giving in or backing down. The fighting is quick and brutal.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: If the PCs remain still, the three blink dogs (hp 26, 24, 22) and two dire wolves (hp 44, 38) continue fighting (although allow Listen or Spot checks to notice the PCs). If the fight continues, both groups bite and attack one another until they are at 50% hit points at which point they flee north (dire wolves) and south (blink dogs). The wolves wear collars, indicating that someone possibly "owns" them.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs are noticed, both groups turn their attention and attack, splitting their energies between the PCs and their four-legged enemies. The DM should "mix it up" and make this melee as chaotic as it sounds.

The blink dogs here, while neutral good, are in a state of fury and not willing to explore whether the PCs are "good" or not. Consider these animals enraged (per rage) and reduce their Will saves by an additional -2.

Animal Empathy and Diplomacy checks suffer a -4 circumstance penalty in regards to these animals.

EL: 5 or 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one dire wolf and two blink dogs. To decrease the challenge, remove one dire wolf.

☛ Blink Dog: CR 2; Medium magical beast; HD 4d10; hp 26, 24, 22; Init +3; Spd 40 ft.; AC 16, touch 13, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +4; Grp +4; Atk +4 melee (1d6, bite); Full Atk +4 melee (1d6, bite); SA —; SQ Blink, darkvision 60 ft., dimension door, low-light vision, scent; AL LG; SV Fort +4, Ref +7, Will +4; Str 10, Dex 17, Con 10, Int 10, Wis 13, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Hide +3, Listen +5, Sense Motive +3, Spot +5.

Survival +4; Iron Will, Run, Track*

Blink (Su): A blink dog can use blink as the spell (caster level 8th), and can evoke or end the effect as a free action.

Dimension Door (Su): A blink dog can teleport, as dimension door (caster level 8th), once per round as a free action. The ability affects only the blink dog, which never appears within a solid object and can act immediately after teleporting.

☛ Dire Wolf: CR 3; Large animal; HD 6d8+18; hp 44, 38; Init +2; Spd 50 ft.; AC 14, touch 11, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +4; Grp +15; Atk +11 melee (1d8+10, bite); Full Atk +11 melee (1d8+10, bite); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Trip; SQ Low-light vision, scent; AL N; SV Fort +8, Ref +7, Will +6; Str 25, Dex 15, Con 17, Int 2, Wis 12, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Hide +0, Listen +7, Move Silently +4, Spot +7, Survival +2*; Alertness, Run, Track*, Weapon Focus (bite).

Trip (Ex): A dire wolf that hits with a bite attack can attempt to trip its opponent (+11 check modifier) as a free action without making a touch attack or provoking an attack of opportunity. If the attempt fails, the opponent cannot react to trip the dire wolf.

Skills: A dire wolf has a +2 racial bonus on Hide, Listen, Move Silently, and Spot checks.

*It also has a +4 racial bonus on Survival checks when tracking by scent.

B126. CELESTIAL OBSERVATORY

The northern door to this Room is locked and cannot be opened without the key in Room C105.

This room is a mess of rubble and cracked stone. After careful examination you can make out the remains of a stone desk and chair along one side of the room. Towards the back of the room are the broken pieces of what could only be a bookcase or shelf.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The purpose of this Room has been lost to the ages, but it looks like many of the observation chambers from this Region. Unlike the other locked doors leading north into Region F, the one in this Room is trapped. If the PCs touch or in anyway interact with the door short of placing the correct key in the door, a hold monster trap is triggered.

Encounter Condition: Hazardous Footing 10

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the PCs spend 30 minutes sifting through the debris allow them a DC 25 Search check to find a pair of dimensional shackles under some of the stones. The shackles radiate evil and have blood caked on them from centuries of use.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a glyph of warding trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the hold monster trap, with a ghoulish touch trap.

B127. DIRE WOLF DEN

The door to this Room is broken off the hinges.

A large room extends into the darkness, you hear low growls erupting from what you can only assume are wolves or hounds. The room appears empty, but the smell of wet, dirty fur indicates something is living here.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: There are three dire wolves (hp 48, 41, 39) in this Room and they do not take kindly to the intruders in their home. They are resting in the shadowy northern half of the Room. They can see the PCs at the doorway, and they wait until the first PC enters the Room to attack. If they surprise the PCs, they gain a +2 circumstance bonus to their Initiative check.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Concealment

Tactics: The dire wolves fight as a pack, concentrating their attacks against one PC at a time. While one draws the attention of the PC, the other two flank him. They use their trip attack at every opportunity and keep PCs prone as long as possible.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one dire wolf. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

✦ Dire Wolf: CR 3; Large animal; HD 6d8+18; hp 48, 41, 39; Init +2; Spd 50 ft.; AC 14, touch 11, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +4; Grp +15; Atk +11 melee (1d8+10, bite); Full Atk +11 melee (1d8+10, bite); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Trip; SQ Low-light vision, scent; AL N; SV Fort +8, Ref +7, Will +6; Str 25, Dex 15, Con 17, Int 2, Wis 12, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Hide +0, Listen +7, Move Silently +4, Spot +7, Survival +2*; Alertness, Run, Track*, Weapon Focus (bite).

Trip (Ex): A dire wolf that hits with a bite attack can attempt to trip its opponent (+11 check modifier) as a free action without making a touch attack or provoking an attack of opportunity. If the attempt fails, the opponent cannot react to trip the dire wolf.

Skills: A dire wolf has a +2 racial bonus on Hide, Listen, Move Silently, and Spot checks.

*It also has a +4 racial bonus on Survival checks when tracking by scent.

B128. HALLOWED GROUND

While the door to this Room can be locked, it is presently unlocked. In order to lock it, the PCs must succeed at a DC 30 Open Lock check.

Soothing energy fills this room. Being here lightens your heart and the aches and pains you've accumulated during your adventures wash away, becoming dull afterthoughts. The room is unadorned, but that only adds to the peaceful feeling washing over you. A single pedestal with a bowl on top of it, rest against the back wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There is a soothing calm to the Room and the locals often rest here. This Room is Safe, so long as the PCs lock the door behind them.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 10, Positive Energy, [Safe]

Tactics: If the PCs lock the door behind them, they can safely rest here for 2d12 hours without interruption. After which, the DM should roll for a Random Encounter. If a trap is rolled, ignore it, and if creature is rolled it tries to open the door, picking the lock or pounding on it for entry. If this occurs, the Room isn't considered Safe again for 1d3 days.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

B129. THE LAST STAND AGAINST THE FINAL OPTION

The door on the east wall is locked and barred. Opening it from the outside requires a DC 35 Open Lock check and a DC 26 Strength check.

This room is small and empty, with three doors — each leading deeper into the dungeon. The simple granite walls look untouched. Faint outlines of footprints are layered within the dust on the floor, and it looks like the ceiling has a crack running down the middle of it.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is equipped with a mighty swinging pendulum, one of the many traps the bugbears have designed to keep creatures from Region B from getting in. The trap is triggered 1d6 rounds after the door on the south or north wall is opened and 1d3 rounds after the door on the east wall is opened.

The trap's reset mechanism is located to the west wall, under a loose stone. A DC 14 Strength check is required to lift the stone gingerly enough not to trigger a ghoul touch trap protecting the reset plate. Disabling the reset mechanism prevents the trap from triggering for 1d3 days.

✦ Ceiling Pendulum Trap: CR 3; mechanical; timed trigger; automatic reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; Atk +15 melee (1d12+8/19–20 x4, serrated greataxe); Search DC 15; Disable Device DC 27.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the ceiling pendulum trap with a deathblade wall scythe trap. To decrease the challenge, remove the ghoul touch trap.

B130. GOBLIN PILGRIMS

Allow the PCs Listen checks to overhear the talking going on inside this Room.

A ragtag group of goblins takes refuge in this expanded hall. Their chanting is unnatural sounding and highly disconcerting.

If the PCs succeed at a DC 20 Move Silently check as they open the door, read the following.

They don't seem to notice you as they are completely enraptured by the tokens and trinkets they've collected into a pile on the floor.

Otherwise, read the following.

As if a single creature, and with wicked sounding cackles and shrieks they stand up in union and gather their weapons.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Six goblins (hp 8, 6, 5, 5, 4, 3) have made the long journey from the goblin empire to the shrine of their deity. They have collected about 20 gp worth of "junk" that they intend to offer to the goblin shrine (Room B134).

Having travelled a great distance to get here and having fought off numerous creatures along the way, they are not about to back down from the "heathen" PCs. Seeing the PCs as defilers, the goblin pilgrims viciously assault the PCs, not offering them a chance to "talk."

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4, Fearless

Tactics: If the goblins are not surprised, they attack the PCs in a massive swarm, concentrating their attacks on whomever is closest. The goblins continue fighting even when an opponent falls. Zealous, they jump on and lash out at their victim continuously until there is nothing left. The largest of the goblins goes so far as to bite (1d2 points of damage), once an opponent is downed.

Treasure: There are about 5 lbs. or trinkets that collective equal about 20 gp in value.

EL: 4

Scaling: In increase the challenge of this encounter, add six goblins. To decrease the challenge, remove two goblins.

✦ Goblin, War 1: CR 1/3; Small humanoid (goblinoid); HD 1d8+1; hp 8, 6, 5, 5, 4, 3; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 15, touch 12, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +1; Grp -3; Atk +2 melee (1d6/x3, spear) or +3 ranged (1d6/x3, spear); Full Atk +2 melee (1d6/x3, spear) or +3 ranged (1d6/x3, spear); SA —; SQ Darkvision 60 ft.; AL NE; SV Fort +3, Ref +1, Will -1; Str 11, Dex 13, Con 12, Int 10, Wis 9, Cha 6.

Skills and Feats: Hide +5, Listen +2, Move Silently +5, Ride +4, Spot +2; Alertness.

Skills: Goblins have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently and Ride checks. Goblin cavalry (mounted on worgs) usually select the Mounted Combat feat in place of the Alertness feat, which reduces their Spot and Listen check modifiers from +3 to +1.

B

B131. HIDDEN PRISON

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to open. It locks again automatically, so PCs must open the lock and push the door open in a single swift motion, lest the door lock again in 1 round.

As you enter the room a chill runs down your back and up your arms. The room, simple and bare seems devoid of life. The smooth floor, the high ceiling, and the darkness make you feel like you've stepped into a tower belfry. An ominous moan fills the air, followed by a chill wind.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Before the PCs can think, check to see if their torches and lanterns are blown out from the draft. After that check to see if the PCs are surprised by the four vargouilles (hp 9, 8, 8, 7) descending upon them from the ceiling. The ceiling, over 60 ft. high, hides the vargouilles from sight until they are ready to ambush the PCs, which happens as soon as one of them tampers with the lock.

They are merciless and attack like shrieking bombers upon the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Concealment, Desecration 4, Draffy, Extreme Cold, Negative Energy

Tactics: Immediately upon descending on the PCs, the first two vargouilles shriek and the next two (their Initiative 2 lower), drop down to kiss any PCs who are paralyzed with fear. The vargouilles continue attacking with diving attacks, flying up and back around. Due to the darkness of the Room, ranged attacks fire up into the chamber suffer from concealment penalties.

They alternate between kiss and bite attacks, allowing their venom to slowly weaken PCs. Unlike the vargouilles in Room B114, these put up a fight.

Treasure: Should the PCs find adequate light, they can climb the walls of this Room, to reach many of the shelves at the higher levels. PCs should make Climb checks for every 20 ft. they climb.

Along the north wall at the 40 ft. mark is a ledge 4 ft. and 4 ft. long. On the ledge is a small nest, with nothing in it. If the PC succeeds at a DC 25 Search check, he finds a cache in the north wall just above the ledge. The cache is trapped, but hides a small strongbox.

☛ Fire Trap: CR 3; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (fire trap, 3rd-level druid, 1d4+3 fire, DC 13 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 27; Disable Device DC 27.

The strongbox — thin and wide — is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. The lock is also trapped.

☛ Poison Needle Trap: CR 1; mechanical; touch trigger; manual reset; Atk +8 ranged (1 plus greenblood oil poison); Search DC 22; Disable Device DC 20.

Inside the strongbox — strapped down with silk ties — are six potions of cure moderate wounds and a ring of improved swimming. In addition, the felt bottom of the strongbox is magical (faint abjuration), helping to protect potions and other items from shattering. If a saving throw is ever called for glass items stored inside this box, they gain a +4 enhancement bonus to the save.

Along the north wall at the 55 ft. mark is a ledge, 4 ft. wide and 5 ft. long. It is sturdy and a perfect place to view the entire Room from. Offal on the ledge makes moving on it difficult, however (Hazardous Footing 14).

Along the south wall at the 15 ft. mark is a ledge, 3 ft. wide and 4 ft. long. It provides a +2 circumstance bonus to Climb check made on the south wall from the 1 ft. to 20 ft. mark.

Along the south wall at the 40 ft. mark is a ledge, 4 ft. wide and 2 ft. long. A Small or smaller creature can crouch on this ledge, allowing the a DC 30 Search check to find a loose stone in the wall. A DC 14 Strength check moves the stone, revealing a small cache with a small pile of gleaming bolts. There are five screaming bolts with continual flame cast on them. While not trapped, they are warm to the touch, which may or may not shock the PC.

Along the east wall at the 35 ft. mark is a broken stone, 1 ft. wide and 2 ft. long. While difficult to stand on, it provides a +2 circumstance bonus to Climb checks made on the east wall from the 21 ft. to 40 ft. mark.

Along the east wall at the 45 ft. mark is a ledge, 2 ft. wide and 3 ft. long. While difficult to stand on, a DC 20 Balance check allows the PC to stoop down and retrieve a pouch from the nest on this ledge without falling off.

Along the west wall at the 25 ft. mark is a stone, 1 ft. wide and 1 ft. long. While difficult to stand on, it provides a +2 circumstance bonus to Climb check made on the west wall from the 21 ft. to 40 ft. mark.

Along the west wall at the 50 ft. mark is a ledge, 4 ft. wide and 1 ft. long. It is nearly impossible to stand on. But tall PCs may use this ledge to reach a hidden shelf 6 ft. above the ledge. While it cannot be seen from here, it can be seen from the highest ledge on the north wall (DC 30 Spot check or DC 25 Search check). The shelf is 3 ft. wide and 1 ft. deep, being cut into the shape of the Room. Resting on the shelf is a small urn, painted red and black and making it difficult to spot.

The urn is trapped with dragon bile that has been smeared on the lid and a fire trap that ignites when the lid is removed. However, the urn weighs no more than 2 lbs. and easily fits in the PCs pouch for the long climb back down.

☛ Fire Trap: CR 3; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (fire trap, 3rd-level druid, 1d4+3 fire, DC 13 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 27; Disable Device DC 27.

Inside the urn are black ashes. These ashes are in fact ten doses of dust of disappearance that hide an amulet of natural armor +4. [However, the DM should be secretive about this for as long as possible.] Until all of the dust is used, the amulet cannot be seen. However, it eventually starts clanging around in the urn as the level of the dust decreases.

The DM may allow PCs to leap from ledge to ledge, but the width of the Room may prohibit this. Jump checks should be made per the rules in the Player's Handbook.

Skills and Feats: Hide +9, Intimidate +3, Listen +5, Move Silently +5, Spot +5; Weapon Finesse.

Shriek (Su): Instead of biting, a vargouille can open its distended mouth and let out a terrible shriek. Those within 60 ft. (except other vargouilles) who hear the shriek and can clearly see the creature must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or be paralyzed with fear for 2d4 rounds or until the monster attacks them, goes out of range, or leaves their sight. A paralyzed creature is susceptible to the vargouille's kiss (see below). A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same vargouille's shriek for 24 hours. The shriek is a mind-affecting fear effect. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Kiss (Su): A vargouille can kiss a paralyzed target with a successful melee touch attack. An affected opponent must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or begin a terrible transformation that turns the creature into a vargouille within 24 hours (and often much sooner; roll 1d6 separately for each phase of the transformation).

First, over a period of 1d6 hours, all the victim's hair falls out. Within another 1d6 hours thereafter, the ears grow into leathery wings, tentacles sprout on the chin and scalp, and the teeth become long, pointed fangs. During the next 1d6 hours, the victim takes Intelligence drain and Charisma drain equal to 1 point per hour (to a minimum of 3). The transformation is complete 1d6 hours later, when the head breaks free of the body (which promptly dies) and becomes a vargouille. This transformation is interrupted by sunlight, and even a daylight spell can delay death, but to reverse the transformation requires remove disease. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +4 racial bonus.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 12 or be unable to heal the vargouille's bite damage naturally or magically. A neutralize poison or heal spell removes the effect, while delay poison allows magical healing. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

B132. THE WAY STATION

As the PCs near the entranceway to Room B132, read the following.

The sounds of a large group of creatures echoes from behind the door. Goblin-like grunts and barks intermingle with the yips of wolves. It sounds like the room is pretty active.

If the PCs enter Room B132 without making a Move Silently check, read the following.

All activities cease and the room falls silent as you open the door. Two-dozen goblins and a few hobgoblins stare at you, their arms filled with barrels and crossbows. A group of worgs in the corner growl and tension mounts.

If the PCs enter Room B132 and make a Move Silently check, read the following.

Nearly a dozen goblins and a pair of hobgoblins move about the room, obviously setting up defenses of some kind. The goblins carry equipment that is too big for them and the hobgoblins yell over the sounds of the barking worgs.

The door to this Room can be locked, but at present is unlocked. A DC 35 Open Lock check is required to lock and unlock it without a key.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The PCs have entered a secret hideout for the goblin king's soldiers. Having moved defensive equipment in quietly over the past few weeks, the excited goblins and hobgoblins are now working louder than they should. A perfect place to mount an ambush, the PCs have stumbled upon the goblins king's secret plans.

There are ten goblins (hp 8, 7, 7, 6, 5, 4, 4, 3, 3, 3), two hobgoblins (hp 26, 24), and three worgs (hp 37, 35, 32) in this Room. The goblins are armed with shortwords and light crossbows, much different from those who trained with Hammerfist. The hobgoblins wear scale mail and carry masterwork shortbows and arrows. The worgs wear studded leather barding.

If the PCs have not made an alliance with the goblin king, Argliss, then they have a fight on their hands. Even if they have, the hobgoblins are Unfriendly, not wanting the PCs to know their business. A single spark is all that is needed for this powder keg of tension to erupt in combat.

If the PCs have allied themselves with the goblin king, the initial attitude of the goblins in this Room is Indifferent. The goblins return to their business and ignore the PCs. If the PCs attempt to speak with the goblins, they are met with short, gruff answers. As long as the PCs do not insult the goblins' god, they will not attack the PCs.

The hobgoblins provide information regarding bugbear attacks and the wild monsters in the region, but are also gruff and barely tolerate the PCs. The worgs are only being held back by their hobgoblin handlers, and constantly growl and snap at the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: These goblins are zealots. They have undertaken a long and tough (for them) pilgrimage to their god's shrine. They attack the PCs in a massive swarm, concentrating their attacks on whoever is closest to them. The goblins will not stop attacking even when their target is down. They jump on and gnash at their victim continuously until there is nothing left.

The hobgoblins fight with better tactics. They are armed not with short swords, but short bows. The hobgoblins let the worgs loose on the first round of combat. The worgs dive into the PCs, striking randomly. The hobgoblins stay in the back corner of the room and unleash volleys of arrows at whoever they perceive to be the most powerful PCs member. Once their target is down, they concentrate their fire on the next most powerful member and so on.

Treasure: The barrels contain stores, whetstones, oil, and enough arrows, bolts, and javelins to last two campaigns. If the PCs need to refill their ammunition, now is the time. A small pony keg contains ale, apparently smuggled in and a small strongbox (DC 30 Open Lock check to open) contains six vials of acid, six vials of alchemical fire, six vials of oil, and four tindertwigs.

The lead hobgoblin carries the key to the door.

Trip (Ex): A worg that hits with a bite attack can attempt to trip the opponent (+3 check modifier) as a free action without making a touch attack or provoking an attack of opportunity. If the attempt fails, the opponent cannot react to trip the worg.

Skills: A worg has a +1 racial bonus on Listen, Move Silently, and Spot checks, and a +2 racial bonus on Hide checks. * A worg has a +4 racial bonus on Survival checks when tracking by scent.

Possessions: Masterwork studded leather barding.

THE SHRINE TO MORENDITHAS STONESHAPER
THE QUICKTHINKING, SMITER OF FOES

What was once the final resting place of a wayward goblin hunter who ran afoul of a cockatrice, has become the true mecca of the goblin culture. The remoteness of their empire coupled with a location which is virtually on the other side of the maze, heightens the importance of this place; only those truly devoted to Norendithas Stoneshaper dare to make the trek.

The shrine is hidden behind a secret door. That a single goblin passed through the door in the first place is astonishing, that another group of goblins followed the first perfectly is a true miracle. When Argliss first visited the would-be shrine, he was able to understand the nature of the door and has given the goblin keepers of the shrine specific instructions on how to open and close it. It wouldn't do if the keepers and so-called priests could not locate their own shrine.

The shrine is well guarded by Argliss' elite hobgoblins. The goblin god is the source of the doppelganger's power over the goblins, and he will not allow anything to jeopardize it. At any given time the PCs may encounter one of the heavily armed patrols. By this point they should be used to the tactics of the goblins, and it is possible they have allied themselves with Argliss and are permitted to pay homage at the shrine.

If the PCs have allied themselves with the rebel goblins, the devout guards and keepers swarm the PCs until they are driven back or dead. The goblins do not tolerate heathens in their most holy of places.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	A sharp wind blows through the Section, its source unidentifiable but strong and persistent. Drafty.
2	A single, sickly feather lies in the middle of the hallway (it's from a cockatrice, though the PCs may not know this initially).
3	A shrill cackle echoes through the halls, followed by the cooing of giant bird. Echoes 4
4–15	Nothing
16	A goblin dressed in ill-fitting leather robes roams the halls. One of the keeper's of the shrine, his head is bent in prayer. He carries a staff, carved in incomprehensible runes. Due to his praying, he suffers a –6 circumstance penalty to all Spot and Listen checks.
17	Twelve goblin pilgrims march towards the shrine. Their attitude is Hostile, as they drive the PCs from the Section.
18	Two hobgoblins — mounted on worgs — and 2d6 goblins patrol the Section, safeguarding pilgrims on their journey. Their attitude is Unfriendly, and they order the PCs to leave the area. At the slightest provocation their attitude becomes Hostile and they attack.
19	The PCs stumble upon a trap.

B133. THE ANTECHAMBER

As the PCs near the secret door on the north wall, read the following.

A section of the wall has been turned inward. It is quite obvious looking at it now that it was meant as a secret passage into the room beyond. Someone, however, has left it open. You hear strange chanting coming from inside the room. The high-pitched, near wails, grate on your ears as you enter.

When the PCs enter Room B133, read the following.

The goblins have hung impressive, but crude, tapestries along the walls. Each depicts a ferocious looking goblin, scowling with its hands raised above its head. A few goblins kneel in supplication before a heavy stone door set into the southern wall.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: If the PCs quietly enter the Room, the goblins and hobgoblins do not notice them, as they are too involved in prayer.

Regardless of whether the PCs have made an alliance with the goblin king, the PCs are not welcome here. Three goblins (hp 7, 6, 5), unarmed, do not pose a threat in and of themselves, but 2d6 rounds after the PCs enter this Room, the Holy Guard of Stoneshaper — made up of four hobgoblins (hp 28, 27, 27, 25) wielding masterwork longswords — arrive to drive off the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Fearless, Hallowed 2

Tactics: If the PCs are known by the goblin empire as allies, they merely guide them out of the Room, rather forcefully, but as diplomatically as possible. The goblins yell obscenities as the PCs are escorted out.

If the PCs are enemies of the goblins, the hobgoblins are outright aggressive and the goblin zealots grab anything they can find to use as weapons. The goblins lash out, almost hysterical, while the hobgoblins concentrate on the PCs' front rank, using brute strength to push the PCs out of the Room, fighting them in the hall, if possible.

Treasure: The goblins consider the tapestries of their god priceless, though they hold no value outside this room. The rebel goblins might be interested in taking them however, so they can defile their enemies' religious icons.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two hobgoblins. To decrease the challenge, remove one goblin.

Possessions: Masterwork scale mail, light steel shield, masterwork longsword.

B134. THE STATUE OF NORENDITHAS STONESHAPER THE QUICKTHINKING, SMITER OF FOES

The room is dominated by religious iconography. Sigils and prayer beads adorn the room. Regardless of what the room was originally designed for, the faith of the goblins has transformed it into something more than it was.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: PCs curious about the statue can inspect it. A DC 20 Knowledge (nature) check or a DC 25 Survival check reveals the statue is a goblin that has been turned to stone. A second check reveals that either a basilisk, cockatrice, or medusa could have done this. PCs succeeding at a third check, know that a medusa would leave the statue here to mark the boundary of its lair.

Every five minutes the PCs remain in this Room, roll a Random Encounter, with a roll of 1–15 being Nothing and a roll of 19–20 is the hobgoblins from Room B133 coming to secure the Room. A 16, 17, or 18 occurs per the table on page 126.

Encounter Condition: Fearless, Hallowed 5

Tactics: Hobgoblins that enter the Room, do not hesitate and swarm the PCs. They flank the PCs in an attempt to subdue them and take them prisoner. Goblins are shaken for 1d3 rounds upon seeing the PCs in their sacred hall.

This Room contains a hidden door to Region C. A DC 30 Search check is required to locate the door. However, a special catch must be released to open the secret door (that slides upwards). A DC 20 Open Lock check allows the PC to slide his fingers into the slender crevice and open the secret door.

A second secret door lies beyond the first, requiring the same checks to find and open it. The secret doors close on their own after 1 minute.

Neither the goblins nor hobgoblins have located these doors and were unaware of a passage into Region C from this location. If the PCs move on to Region C without dealing with the holy goblin empire, Arglist learns of the secret door in 2d6 days and sends patrols into Region C, looking for a new route to the gnolls. 2d6 days after that, they learn of the cockatrice and the fate of their "god."

Treasure: The offerings the goblins have left behind for their deity, are in special bowls at the base of the statue. Burnt offers, copper coins, and trinkets worthless to the PCs fill the bowls. Collectively the contents of the Room are worth about 6 gp.

B135. THE KEEPER'S CLOISTER

As you enter the room you see an ornately dressed goblin cowering in the corner. He is wielding a small dagger in a shaky fist. The goblin hisses and sputters curses at you, spittle flying off its lips. It makes no move to advance or attack you however.

The room is decorated in the same idolatry as the antechamber, and is furnished simply. A small desk, covered in deep red stains, stands against the western wall. Against the southern wall is a simple cot, covered in rags

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The PCs have entered the personal quarters of the Keeper of the Shrine (hp 5). The keeper is a devout goblin, but not very brave. As long as the PCs do not attack him, the Keeper does not attack them. He curses the goblin, gesturing in a vulgar manner that the PCs must leave the shrine. He does not speak Common.

The Holy Guard (Room B134 and B136) does not enter the Room, unless they hear the sounds of combat. They have been trained not to disturb the keeper's meditations.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 1

Tactics: While he babbles he casts a few spells to protect himself. If attacked the keeper lunges at the closest PC. He knows he does not stand a chance against the PCs, but he cannot dishonor himself any further by fleeing.

If the hobgoblins come to his rescue, they attack the PCs and attempt to break them off into two groups. They pin spellcasters and clerics into corners and fight fervently for their religious beliefs. If the Keeper is killed, they fight as though enraged (as barbarians).

B136. BARRACKS OF THE HOLY GUARD

These cramped quarters house four hobgoblin guards who sit on the floor or on the bunks, their weapons at their sides. The bunks are stacked four high and the room reeks of sweat. Along the southern wall is a weapons rack, now empty.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The barracks of the Holy Guard of the Stoneshaper is just as volatile a Room as any located in the confines of the shrine. With most of the guardsmen patrolling hobgoblin guards (hp 28, 26, 23, 23) in this Room do not pose a huge threat to the PCs. They guardsmen are relentless in their attacks however hopeless their situation may seem.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: Like the other hobgoblin patrol and guard units, these hobgoblins single out the most powerful PC and attack them en masse. They flank the PCs as often as possible, moving on to the next PC as soon as one is down. They take PC captives to the goblin king, unless they are known enemies of the holy empire, in which case they are put to death.

REGION C. THE FINAL OPTION

This entire Region was designed specifically to hold a powerful demon, Falortuligo (Room C21). Though this cell was of primordial importance, several groups of minor demons and lesser undead creatures were also held prisoner here. When the cataclysm that shook the entire dungeon hit, most of these fiendish minions escaped, but the special cell in which the mighty demon lord was imprisoned remained completely intact. Over the years, several groups of explorers and settlers came to the region, but the great demon's cell remained undisturbed and undiscovered.

Approximately 50 years ago, the last remnants of the Order of Myruun were summoned here for mysterious reasons yet only Myruun — an ancient goddess of the oceans, travel, and vigilance — knows why they were brought here, basically, to face their inevitable demise.

It is still possible to piece together much of what went on during their stay, however, for the remnants and records of the forgotten Paladins of Myruun can be found buried here. Most of these fragments of information are well hidden, but clues are scattered throughout the region.

Perhaps sensing the crumbling of the prison wards, Myruun instructed her remaining worshippers and servants to assemble in this region of the dungeon. No one knew why they were brought together in the bowels of this forgotten place, except for the fact that they would be instrumental in turning the tide at some undetermined moment. Most were paladins and priests of acclaim. Only the wizard Arum arrived without being summoned, claiming he dreamt his "destiny." When the final pilgrim arrived, 41 men and women occupied the garrison established in Rooms C1 through C19. It was widely believed by those 41 inhabitants that they were the end of the line of the tradition of worshipping Myruun, so they waited, without further explanation.

When the prison vault of Falortuligo (Room C21) was broken open, Myruun revealed her plans. With the exception of Arum, they were all asked to give their lives to fight the powerful demon that escaped. Arum's tale of the battle is recorded in only one place. It is the sole account of the last battle and subsequent demise of the servants of Myruun, since Arum was its only living witness. The wizard's account can be found in Room C64 (see the Path of the Righteous section for further details).

It is important to note that ethereal travel is possible in the area surrounding Room C4, due to a powerful experiment performed by the wizard Arum a few months after he arrived. The boundaries of this ethereal pocket are roughly 100 ft. in every direction from the altar in Room C4, and are clearly visible if the subject can see objects in the ethereal plane.

C1 THROUGH C19. FORGOTTEN PALADIN GARRISON

When the knights, paladins, and priests of Myruun were summoned to the dungeon, they established a base of operation for their garrison in Rooms C1 through C19. Though none of the servants of Myruun survived, evidence of their passage is evident throughout the area.

It was Myruun, a minor goddess of the oceans, travel, and vigilance, who summoned her last worshippers to this region of the vast dungeon prison. At the time, those who answered the goddess' call did not know what was expected of them. They stayed here for more than three years, until one day their purpose was finally revealed to them — moments before the vile demon imprisoned in Room C21 broke free. The last servants of the goddess Myruun willingly gave up their lives to help an angel destroy the demon called Falortuligo. None but the wizard Arum — who was with them — knew of their sacrifice, but were it not for the brave men and women of the Order of Myruun, the demon would have unleashed its wrath upon the world.

C1. FORGOTTEN GUARDROOM

A broken table lies amidst the crumbled and disheveled remains of this otherwise empty room. Oddly enough, this room is not saturated with the same dust as others in the area. It is eerily quiet and the walls are unwashed.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The Order of Myruun once used this chamber as a guard post. Aside from the rod (see Treasure), however, this Room contains nothing of interest or value.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A PC who succeeds at a DC 14 Search checks finds a rod under the table. A DC 15 Appraise check notes that the craftsmanship on the rod is of masterwork quality. Anyone making a DC 25 Spellcraft check learns that this rod was transmuted into wood from some sort of metal. It is actually a greater metamagic rod of silence. Nothing short of a limited wish or wish spell can restore it, and the rod is completely non-magical unless restored.

C3. ETHEREAL FILCHER'S LAIR

PCs succeeding at a DC 20 Spot check notice the floor in front of the secret door is worn. The solid stone door itself is otherwise indistinguishable from the wall. The massive door spins on a vertical, central spindle so pushing the left side of the door, for example, causes the right side of it to swing outward. To open the door, characters must make a DC 20 Strength check while pushing on only the left or right side of it. The broken pieces of a spent gas trap are the primary reason the door is so difficult to open. Clearing the debris from the doorway allows the door to swing freely on its axis.

As the door of this chamber opens, a fetid stench is released. Within the darkness, tiny flecks of reflected light sparkle and shine. A closer look reveals a dark shape moving slowly, as more twinkling lights appear.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This is the home of a Large ethereal filcher (hp 78). The creature arrived at the prison sometime after the wizard Arum's successful experiment. It has gathered quite a collection of coins, gems, baubles, and other shiny objects over the years. Though it can travel outside the ethereal pocket, its survival instincts prevent it from leaving for extended periods. When the PCs enter its lair, it stands quietly in the corner of the Room in ethereal form, waiting for them to leave.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Concealment

Tactics: Though not particularly intelligent, this creature learned to use its jaunt ability very effectively. It remains hidden unless attacked or angered. If the PCs take more than a few baubles from the Room, its attitude changes to Hostile and it charges them.

Its favorite tactic is to use its spring attack and jaunt to surprise its opponents. Between attacks, it positions itself for the best chance at surprise. If combat starts for any reason, the filcher fights until its hit points total drops to one half or less. When this happens, it jaunts to another Room and remains there until it feels safe enough to return to its lair.

Treasure: Though it is impressive to see this much treasure displayed in such a small space, it becomes quickly apparent that the total value of this amassed fortune is less than what it appears. A DC 15 Appraise check estimates most items are colored glass or quartz, which brings the total value of all the treasure in the Room to about 55 gp. Under the almost worthless jewels and trinkets are 5 old wax candles and badly worn vestments.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a second ethereal filcher. To decrease the challenge, assume the ethereal filcher is shaken for 2d4 rounds, suffering a –2 morale penalty to all attack rolls, saving throws, ability checks and skill checks.

◆ Ethereal Filcher: CR 5; Large aberration; HD 12d8+24; hp 78; Init +7; Spd 40 ft.; AC 18, touch 12, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +8; Crp +16; Atk +11 melee (1d6+4 bite); Full Atk +11 melee (1d6+4 bite); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA —; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., detect magic, ethereal jaunt; AL N; SV Fort +6, Ref +7, Will +9; Str 18, Dex 16, Con 15, Int 7, Wis 12, Cha 10. Detect Magic (Su): Ethereal filchers can detect magic as the spell (caster level 5th) at will.

Ethereal Jaunt (Su): An ethereal filcher can shift from the Ethereal Plane to the Material Plane as part of any move action, and shift back again as a free action. It can remain on the Ethereal Plane for 1 round before returning to the Material Plane. The ability is otherwise identical with the ethereal jaunt spell (caster level 15th).

Skills: Ethereal filchers have a +8 racial bonus on Sleight of Hand checks, and a +4 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

C4. SMALL SHRINE

The floors and walls of this room are surprisingly clean, but the most prominent feature is a small but old shrine standing neglected against the eastern wall. The simple wooden shrine is engraved with an ancient symbol.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The followers of Myruun used this small shrine to meditate in quiet solicitude. Good-aligned PCs feel at comfortable and at ease when they enter this chamber. All good characters that rest for at least one hour in this Room are blessed. They benefit from the effect of an aid spell for 12 hours after they leave the shrine. If a good-aligned PC casts prayer at the shrine, all non-evil PCs are affected by the spell, which lasts twice as long as normal.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A successful DC 20 Search check of the shrine reveals a folded piece of parchment slid into a seam near the top of the altar.

The parchment starts as a standard prayer, written to the goddess Myruun. A DC 25 Knowledge (religion) check allows PCs to notice ancient references to Myruun, an old goddess of oceans, travel, and vigilance. PCs making this check also know that Myruun is no longer worshiped. Near the bottom of the parchment, the text trails off and a few short sentences were hastily written. These have nothing to do with the rest of the parchment. The sentences read, "She calls at last! Gladly will I lay down my life for my Queen! She calls to us all!"

C5. MAIN TEMPLE

An intolerable stench escapes when the door to this chamber is opened, temporarily dulling the opulence of the high vaulted ceilings and painted walls inside the place. The powerful scent is enough to make even the strongest dwarf blench in disgust. It is the horribly decayed dire bat corpse in the corner that contributes to the cloying odor here. A closer look inside reveals that the walls of this chamber are painted white but are dusty, and a large stone altar pushes up against the southern wall.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The intricately carved doors leading into this Room foretell the importance and prestige given to the temple inside. PCs outside the door succeeding at DC 15 Listen checks hear wings flapping from within. Two dire bats were lured and trapped inside the Room several months ago. Though only one is still alive, it is now maddened with thoughts of freedom.

PCs entering the Room must make DC 14 Fortitude saves or become infected by slimy doom. This disease causes 1d3 hit points of damage each day for as long as the character remains infected, gradually covering the skin of the infected victim with a gooey gel.

◆ Slimy Doom — Contact, Fortitude DC 14, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d4 Con [When damaged, the character must succeed on another saving throw or 1 point of damage is permanent drain instead.]

PCs succeeding at a DC 20 Heal check confirm that the bat died of slimy doom. The other dire bat (hp 74) is trapped here. It is angry and afraid.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The surviving dire bat immediately attacks anyone opening either doors leading into this Room, as it pushes to escape its cell. If it surprises the PCs, it attempts to force its way past, flying down the corridor outside of the Room. Otherwise, it moves into the doorway and attacks the closest PC, doing everything possible to prevent being sealed inside the Room again. At the earliest opportunity, it flees down the corridor away from the temple.

Treasure: There is nothing left of value in this Room. Even the altar near the south wall is empty.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have characters within 5 ft. of the dire bat make DC 15 Fortitude saves or become nauseated by the stench. To decrease the challenge, eliminate the opportunity for the dire bat to surprise the PCs.

◆ Dire Bat: CR 5; Large animal; HD 10d8+30; hp 75; Init +6; Spd 20 ft., fly 40 ft. (good); AC 20, touch 15, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +7; Grp +14; Atk +12 melee (2d6+4, bite); Full Atk +12 melee (2d6+4, bite); Space/ Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA —; SQ Blindsight 40 ft.; AL N; SV Fort +10, Ref +13, Will +9; Str 17, Dex 22, Con 17, Int 2, Wis 14, Cha 6.

Skills and Feats: Hide +5, Listen +14*, Move Silently +12, Spot +10*, Alertness, Improved Natural Attack (bite), Stealthy, Weapon Finesse.

Blindsight (Ex): A dire bat uses echolocation to pinpoint creatures within 40 feet. Opponents still have total concealment against the bat unless it can actually see them.

Skills: Dire bats have a +4 racial bonus on Spot and Listen checks. These bonuses are lost if its blindsense is negated.

C6. FORMER ARMORY

The door to this Room is locked and trapped. PCs who succeed at a DC 30 Search check discover poison smeared on the locking mechanism. Avoiding direct skin contact with the lock is the only way to bypass the trap. However, the poison coating the lock has lost potency over the years because of the moisture inside the Room and previous attempts at picking it. Any contact with the poison causes a painful rash on the skin, regardless of the save.

◆ Locking Mechanism Coated with Contact Poison Trap: CR 3; mechanical; touch trigger (attached); manual reset; poison (weak nitharit, DC 13 Fortitude save resists, 0/1d4+1 Con); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 19.

Picking the lock under normal circumstances requires a DC 20 Open Lock check. Anyone picking the lock without touching the surface, or while wearing gloves, suffers a –4 circumstance penalty to the Open Lock check.

This warm and musty room holds many worm-ridden wooden racks for weapons on its walls. Though a few rusty swords remain, most are useless because the leather bindings or wooden hafts are decayed beyond repair over the years.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Other than a few odds and ends, this room is bare. After the PCs spend 30 minutes in this Room, roll for a Random Encounter.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: PCs succeeding at a DC 15 Craft (weaponsmithing) check spy a masterwork quality metal warhammer head coated with a thin wax preventing rust. All the other weapons are either too rusted or damaged to be of any interest.

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the nitharit poison on the trap with terinav root. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Search DC to 22.

C7. FORMER ASSISTANT'S OFFICE

Though it is easy to determine this chamber once served as a living room, the current state of disrepair implies someone took great pains to destroy that which was not worth escaping with. Dark stains splatter the walls and floors and broken pieces of glass, wood, and stone are piled in a great heap.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was the office of the second in command of the Order of Myruun, but the place was sacked long ago.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: PCs wishing to search the rubble need to make a DC 20 Search check to discover a cracked floor tile, broken when the Room's contents were piled on the floor. Underneath this floor tile is a small diary and a holy symbol of Myruun. The holy symbol is attached to a silver chain with a broken clasp easily repaired with the appropriate tools. This symbol, which represents a flat round earth filled with oceans, is worth upwards of 250 gp to historians and members of religious orders interested in the history of the old goddess Myruun and her clergy.

The diary has writing on nearly every surface of every page. The first page has a rather verbose title, "The Diary of Thomas Corsek, Paladin of Myruun the Vigilant, Lady of Travel, Queen of the Oceans. Being a diary pertaining to personal events of life and service as squire to my brother, Geoff Corsek, and my Queen." Next to Geoff Corsek, the words "The Gold General" were written and circled, as if added at a much later date. Written in much smaller text at the bottom of the page is the additional subtitle, "And being a record of the Calling as we travel to a post my Lady has given us, to turn the tide as my Queen instructed."

PCs spending at least one hour reading through the pages of the diary find many entries characteristic of a young man who idolizes his older brother, yet doubts his own abilities. The diary tends to be vague in reference to details about locations or dates, but rather specific about personal goals, religious rituals, and specific prayers — as if recording these rituals helped to learn them. "The Gold General" refers both to the narrator's brother's uncanny ability to find chests of gold lost at sea and his quality as a leader of men. After the first dozen entries or so, there is a sentence written in a different style. It reads, "Though I am not worthy of her grace, my Queen has bid me travel with Geoff to stand vigil under the ground."

PCs reading the diary completely and who make a DC 15 Intelligence check note the total time spanning from the first entry written inside the garrison to the last entry in the diary is nearly three years. This is another fragment of the Lost Paladins' tale.

C8. FORMER COMMANDER'S MEETING ROOM

Another collection of debris is stacked in the center of this room, and the eastern wall is covered in black soot around the remains of the charred husk of the door. Despite the signs of fire damage coming from the next room, this pile of debris is built with non-combustible materials like twisted metal, broken stone, and mortar.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The commander of the Order of Myruun and his subordinates once used this chamber as a meeting place.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 6

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: This Room has a floor tile with a secret compartment underneath it in the same position as in Room C7. Anyone specifically looking there finds the compartment, otherwise a DC 25 Search check is required to uncover it. A leather parchment traveling case is hidden underneath the tile. It contains documents, two quills, and a vial of dried ink.

The documents contain duty rosters and work assignments for 41 people and various maps of the lands surrounding the dungeon. Most maps have markings denoting the lines of travel various individuals took to arrive at this garrison. These maps are all external, stopping at the entrance in Region A. The interior map of the garrison area is notably missing, although the duty rosters clearly make reference to it.

C9. FORMER COMMANDER'S CHAMBER

The door of this room is a heavily damaged frame that hangs upon a solitary hinge. The structure is essentially incinerated. The chamber itself is blackened with soot covering the entire floor, walls, and ceiling. The pile of ash in the center of the room shows where an enormous fire blazed, long ago.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was the leader of the Order of Myruun's private abode. But now, an athach named Nurganar (hp 133) makes his home here. He moves back and forth throughout the Region, so there is only a 25% chance of finding him here at any one time. If the PCs encountered (and killed) Nurganar as a Random Encounter, he is not here. If he is here, he counts his coins or organizes his belongings.

This chamber has a floor tile with a secret compartment underneath it in the same position as in Rooms C7 and C8. Anyone specifically looking there finds the compartment, otherwise a successful DC 25 Search check is required to uncover it. Nurganar keeps his treasure under the floor tile (thinking it safe there).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If battle ensues in his lair, Nurganar positions himself to defend his treasure. Though most of what he owns is worthless, he believes the shiny objects he collects are extremely valuable so he avidly defends his treasure. Given the opportunity, he targets the physically strongest PC first, concentrating all his attacks on this one foe. In the first two rounds, he bites his opponent first in an attempt weaken him.

If reduced to 25% or less of his total hit points, Nurganar begs for his life, offering the PCs his treasure in exchange for their mercy. He does not ask twice, though and fights viciously if they mock or betray his good nature.

Treasure: Nurganar collects all manner of shiny objects. Under a thick fut cot (worth 20 gp) in the corner of the Room is a multitude of colored glass shards, a pile of glistening rocks, and a handful of semi-precious gemstones. Though the five gems are worth 10 gp each, the other items are honestly worthless to all but the athach.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, give Nurganar one rogue level and have him wait in Ambush (darkness). To decrease the challenge, have him return from a long jaunt, fatigued.

✶ Nurganar, Athach: CR 8; Huge aberration; HD 14d8+70; hp 133; Init +1; Spd 35 ft. in hide armor; base speed 50 ft.; AC 21, touch 9, flat-footed 20; Base Atk +10; Grp +26; Atk +17 melee (3d6+9, +1 morningstar) or +9 ranged (2d6+8, rock); Full Atk +12/+7 melee (3d6+9, +1 morningstar), and +13 melee (3d6+4, 2 morningstars), and +12 melee (2d8+4 plus poison, bite); or +5 ranged (2d6+8, rock), and +5 ranged (2d6+4, 2 rocks); Space/Reach 15 ft./15 ft.; SA Poison; SQ Darkvision 60 ft.; SV Fort +9, Ref +5, Will +10; Str 26, Dex 13, Con 21, Int 7, Wis 12, Cha 6.

C10. FAKE DOOR

Written in Common on the surface of this otherwise normal door are the words, "WARNING! DO NOT ENTER! DANGER!" The letters are written in burgundy paint.

The moment the door is touched, a ghostly outline of a wild-haired old woman floats in the middle of the doorway.

The red lettering of warnings remain visible behind the translucent body as the creature moans, "This is now your second warning. You will not receive a third. Stay out of this room." Even as the form is speaking the last few words, it sinks back into the door and then disappears entirely.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This door was designed to fool creatures venturing into the dungeon. It leads to a solid wall.

The ghost is a programmed illusion that resets after 5 minutes. Anyone ignoring the warning and entering the Room must succeed at a DC 35 Open Lock check to unlock the door. The door handle is on the left side of the door, which opens outward. The wall behind it is painted completely black to heighten the illusion of a dark and forbidding Room, but it is nevertheless made of solid rock.

C11. FORMER STORE

This small chamber is empty. A thick blanket of dust covers its floor, suggesting that no one set foot in this area in a long time.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The members of the Order of Myruun once used this Room to store goods, but it is now empty. The lock on the door to this Room is of particularly high quality. It was added by a locksmith servant of Myruun when the deity's last followers were called to this region of the dungeon. Unlike most other locks in the region, it is made of silvery iron. The mechanism, in fact, looks brand new. Anyone attempting to pick the door must make a DC 35 Open Lock check.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Most of the goods stored in this chamber were brought to Rooms C8 and C9 where they were put to flame, as the Paladins of Myruun knew they were all going to die and did not want these items to fall in the hands of evil creatures. However, small piles of broken glass collect dust in the corner of the Rooms. In addition to the glass, there are 13 stone arrowheads and a small piece of smooth volcanic glass with the symbol of Myruun etched in one side. PCs who succeed at DC 15 Appraise checks recognize the volcanic glass curio used to have a pendant clasp, and could be worth as much as 50 gp if it were fashioned into another piece of jewelry.

C13. FORMER COMMON ROOM

A DC 35 Search check reveals the secret door on the south wall. It is extremely difficult to find, mostly because it hasn't been opened in hundreds of years. Anyone finding the secret door needs to make a DC 30 Open Lock check to determine how to unlock it. The locking mechanism is simple but must be triggered each time the door is opened, but no special tools are required. Anyone succeeding at a DC 12 Dexterity check can open the hidden portal once they understand how to manipulate the device. No check is required to open the doors from inside the secret passageway.

This room has two doorways in the northeast corner. The door to the north has been torn off its hinges and removed from the frame while the one to the east is barred. There are hooks in the southern and northern walls at various points, indicating that large tapestries or paintings that were once displayed there. In the center of the hall, metal fastenings are attached to the floor, as if a dining table had once stood here as well. Two broken chairs are tossed casually in the southwestern corner.

C14. LARGE MEETING ROOM

PCs making a DC 15 Search check or a DC 12 Knowledge (architecture and engineering) check discover that both stone doors are heavily detailed. The creators of the doors even added stone rivets and a simulated locking mechanism nearly identical to other doors found throughout the dungeon. Even the stone bars fastened across the eastern door have a peculiar wooden grain to them. PCs succeeding at a DC 20 Spellcraft check realize the doors were changed into stone, underscoring the extraordinary measures taken to keep something from getting out of the next Room.

Anyone attempting to open the eastern door must first lift the 600 lb. stone bars from their slots. The top bar is set 4 ft. from the floor and the lower bar rests 2 ft. below the first. Once the bars are laid to the side, the door still requires a DC 20 Strength check to pull open.

The heavy stone door leading into this room scrapes along the floor until it gets stuck after three feet. The room's interior is more barren than normal. Stains and scuffmarks are visible along the ground and walls though someone wiped the dirt and dust clean. Another large stone door is found on the east wall, locked with two heavy stone bars.

C15. FORMER BARRACKS

There are three more doorways leading out of this room, but the doors and frames are gone. The doorways lead to other chambers, which appear to be the same size as the main room. Oozing through the doorway of the easternmost chamber is a glob of goo. It is impossible to determine how vast it is because it completely covers the doorway as it slowly squeezes into the main room.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: About 20 years ago, Arum the Wizard trapped a black pudding (hp 176) inside this Room after narrowly escaping its grasp. Guptu the Pale — an ogre mage who was a thorn in Arum's side for years after the paladins' last battle — had set an ambush for Arum with the pudding. Guptu and Arum faced off many times before the ogre mage was killed, but this pudding was his most deadly trap.

In order to contain the black pudding, Arum polymorphed the iron door and wooden bars into stone, hoping to seal the creature inside. He knew the pudding would continue to grow until it devoured everything in the barracks, but he also knew it would never escape on its own. In the event someone did manage to set it free, he cleaned the meeting Room of everything the pudding could consume, and sealed this chamber with another stone door.

The pudding is now so big that it fills whichever Room it occupies in the barracks. It has "eaten" everything inside the chamber, including the doors and hinges. But because it must force its way through the small doorways to move from Room to Room, it is slower than normal. It has a speed of 5 ft. and a 10 ft. reach. However, any pieces splitting from the host body moves and attacks normally.

PCs succeeding at DC 20 Listen checks hear the odd sound of the pudding's motion, like a gelatinous liquid piling up, or a slow scraping waterfall. The sound is coming from the central eastern cubicles.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 4

Tactics: By the time the PCs find the black pudding, it has already sensed the PCs and is moving to attack. It moves directly toward the closest PC, switching direction if the PCs run to another Room. The pudding cannot split itself on its own and only attacks in one direction at a time.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the speed and reach of the pudding by 10 ft. and 5 ft. respectively. To decrease the challenge, reduce the black pudding to 10 HD.

Skills and Feats: Climb +16.

Acid (Ex): The creature secretes a digestive acid that dissolves organic material and metal quickly, but does not affect stone. Any melee hit or constrict attack deals acid damage, and the opponent's armor and clothing dissolve and become useless immediately unless they succeed on DC 23 Reflex saves. A metal or wooden weapon that strikes a black pudding also dissolves immediately unless it succeeds on a DC 23 Reflex save. The save DCs are Constitution-based.

The pudding's acidic touch deals 21 points of damage per round to wooden or metal objects, but the ooze must remain in contact with the object for 1 full round to deal this damage.

Constrict (Ex): A black pudding deals automatic slam and acid damage with a successful grapple check. The opponent's clothing and armor take a -4 penalty on Reflex saves against the acid.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a black pudding must hit with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Split (Ex): Slashing and piercing weapons deal no damage to a black pudding. Instead the creature splits into two identical puddings, each with half of the original's current hit points (round down). A pudding with 10 hit points or less cannot be further split and dies if reduced to 0 hit points.

Skills: A black pudding has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on a Climb check, even if rushed or threatened.

C16. COCKATRICE MAZE

The walls here are worn. Corridors turn sharply at random intervals or end abruptly. In addition, sounds soak right into the walls muffling footsteps and speech.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: There are signs that someone attempted to dig further into the rock and stone near several of the dead end passages. No tools can be found, but there are piles of dirt and gravel in the Room.

About six years ago, a goblin from Region B got separated from his raiding party and stumbled upon the secret door leading west. After going through the Room, he found the cockatrice's lair, was bitten, and turned to stone. The cockatrice (hp 72) entered the secret passage to ward off any other trespassers, but the door closed behind it. Since then, the cockatrice has wandered throughout the maze trying to find its way back to its lair.

Many wanderers found their way into the maze since then, only to be turned to stone by the crazed beast that attacks everything coming across its path (see Room C19 for more cockatrice victims). The PCs should stumble upon the cockatrice when rounding a corner, as the cockatrice is most often found wandering the Section.

Encounter Condition: Ambush

Tactics: When encountered, the cockatrice attacks, turning weaker PCs to stone. If wounded, it flees to Room C19, unless cornered. If given no chance to escape, it fiercely attacks the closest PC, until it has a chance to flee. The gargoyle in Room C19 helped it fight off attackers in the past.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, allow the cockatrice to surprise the PCs or attack from darkness. To decrease the challenge, have the cockatrice flee to Room C19 at the sound of footsteps.

Petrification (Su): Creatures hit by a cockatrice's bite attack must succeed on a DC 20 Fortitude save or instantly turn to stone. The save DC is Constitution-based. Cockatrices have immunity to the petrification ability of other cockatrices, but other petrification attacks affect them normally.

C17. FORMER GUARD POST

The moment the door latch is turned, it swings inward as a giant pendulum attached to the ceiling descends. Inside, along the north wall, there are six nail holes some six feet off the ground. Resting on its side in the southeastern corner is an old wooden chair with three legs.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: PCs with the trapfinding ability who make a DC 15 Search check notices that the door is unlocked, but that there is constant tension upon it. Anyone making a DC 27 Disable Device check discovers there is no way to bypass or disarm this trap, but realizes that it can be triggered at a safe distance. The trap was poorly designed, as the pendulum is fastened to the ceiling directly above the doorway. This causes it to slam against the frame, stopping its progress at the bottom of its arc of motion. The trap can only hit someone standing directly in front of the door.

A DC 32 Search check reveals the secret door on the north wall. This door is extremely difficult to find because it has not been opened in centuries. Anyone finding the secret door needs to make a DC 20 Open Lock check to determine how to unlock it. The locking mechanism must be triggered each time the door is opened, but no special tools are required. Anyone making a DC 10 Dexterity check can open the hidden portal once they understand how to manipulate the device. No check is required to open the door from inside the secret passageway.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Except for the broken chair, trap, and the secret passageway, this Room holds nothing of interest.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three greataxes to the ceiling pendulum trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage dealt by the trap to 1d10+3.

C19. FORMER SPARRING ROOM

Two great stone chairs face each other across this wide room, as if waiting for opposing generals to sit and watch their champions compete. The chair to the west resembles a sailing vessel, the back support being a large mast with two crossbeams and the armrests tapering into the semblance of a prow. The chair to the east is shaped to look like nothing less than a tsunami, curled back upon itself and preparing to douse whomever sits in its path. Both chairs are set about 10 ft. in front of their respective walls.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was the Paladins' exercise Room as well as a place to hold contests for sport and settling disputes. PCs who make DC 15 Spot checks notice a faint 20 ft. wide square painted on the ground in the center of the Room. They also see the ground near the western chair is scraped and marred, as if the chair had been moved and left slightly askew.

The western chair releases a cloud of insanity mist if it is moved in any direction. Anyone standing between 10 ft. to 20 ft. from the chair is allowed a DC 20 Reflex save to jump outside the poisonous cloud and avoid its effect, but anyone close is automatically caught in the mist. This trap cannot be bypassed, but it is only activated when the chair is moved. The eastern chair is not trapped.

♣ Insanity Mist Vapor Trap: CR 5; mechanical; touch trigger; manual reset; gas; multiple targets (all targets in a 20 ft. radius); never miss (within 10 ft.); onset delay (2 round); poison (insanity mist, DC 15 Fortitude save resists, 1d4 Wis/2d6 Wis); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Anyone succeeding at a DC 15 Appraise check or related Craft check values the chairs at well over 1,000 gp each, because of the unique craftsmanship.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add burnt orthur fumes to the insanity mist trap. To decrease the challenge, allow everyone within 10 ft. of the trap a DC 20 Reflex save to negate its effect and allow those beyond 10 ft. a DC 15 Reflex save.

C19. LARGE MURAL ROOM

Both doors to this Room are open.

The rows of goblin and gnoll statues arranged in this room contrast with most of the stark and empty rooms of the area. There are also several murals painted upon the walls. The north wall shows a knight in shining golden armor, standing at the prow of a ship and looking out at an endless ocean. The west wall depicts a battle between a battered ship and a coiled sea serpent, as a bolt of lightning comes down from the sky to strike the serpent. The east wall shows a breathtaking picture of a beautiful woman looking out over a calm sea at sunset, as if awaiting the return of her beloved.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The murals are painted on the walls and are magically protected, so it is impossible to erase them or dilute their colors. If the PCs study the murals, they see titles (in the Common tongue) painted at the bottoms of the pictures. The western mural is entitled "The Oceans," the northern mural is called "The Journey," and the eastern mural is simply labeled "Vigilance." In addition to the titles, further inspection reveals the incredible detail in each mural. It is clear to everyone that these paintings would be priceless, if they had been painted on a portable canvas.

The statues in the Room are arranged into four rows. There are seven gnolls, seven goblins, and three human statues; in addition to the gargoyle that haunts the place. None of the statues in the Room are on bases, except for the gargoyle standing on a square stone block in the second row from the west. Anyone examining the statues can make a DC 20 Spot check to realize the gargoyle is alive. The three human statues are in the second row from the east. The statue at the north end of the row depicts a man dressed in hides who just finished a powerful, two-handed swing with his warhammer. The second statue from the south is of a woman in studded leather armor who is reaching behind her back for another arrow. The last statue in that row shows a small, wiry man in leather armor standing on one leg, as if dodging something. All of the goblin and gnoll statues have similar poses, but most of them show horrified faces.

Anyone making a DC 20 Search check while studying the statues discovers hairline cracks and chips in all of them. In addition, several of them have heads that were broken off and placed back upon the neck. All of the statues were once humanoids petrified by the cockatrice before being dragged here by the gargoyle. None of them will survive the transformation back to flesh.

This Room is the home of a gargoyle (hp 56), but the creature does not move until discovered or attacked by the PCs. Unless the PCs killed the cockatrice in Room C16, it is also hiding. Allow the PCs DC 15 Spot checks to see the cockatrice as it moves away from them, trying to hide behind the statues.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment, Echoes 4

Tactics: The gargoyle attacks if it is discovered, if the cockatrice enters combat, or if a PC turns his back on it while within close range. In any of these circumstances, the gargoyle attempts to gain surprise on the closest PC. If none are within range, it maneuvers to attack unarmored opponents first. The gargoyle performs a full attack whenever possible. If present, the cockatrice avoids the PCs unless it is cornered or they attack the gargoyle. In either case, the cockatrice attacks. If the gargoyle is destroyed, or the cockatrice has less than 10 hit points remaining, it flees back to Room C16.

EL: 5, or 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 3 HD to the gargoyle, which becomes a large creature. To decrease the challenge, the gargoyle begins the encounter wounded (–10 points).

Gargoyle: CR 5; Medium monstrous humanoid (earth); HD 6d8+19; hp 56; Init +2; Spd 40 ft., fly 60 ft. (average); AC 16, touch 12, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +4; Grp +6; Atk +6 melee (1d4+2, claw); Full Atk +6 melee (1d4+2, 2 claws) and +4 melee (1d6+1, bite) and +4 melee (1d6+1, gore); SA —; SQ Damage reduction 10/magic, darkvision 60 ft., freeze; AL CE; SV Fort +5, Ref +6, Will +4; Str 15, Dex 14, Con 18, Int 6, Wis 11, Cha 7.

Skills and Feats: Hide +7*, Listen +4, Spot +4; Multiattack, Toughness.

Freeze (Ex): A gargoyle can hold itself so still it appears to be a statue. An observer must succeed on a DC 20 Spot check to notice the gargoyle is really alive.

Skills: Gargoyles have a +2 racial bonus on Hide, Listen, and Spot checks. *The Hide bonus increases by +8 when a gargoyle is concealed against a background of stone.

C20 THROUGH C21. PATH OF DESTRUCTION

The demon imprisoned in Room C21 had many names. His true name is still unknown, and this is perhaps the main reason he has been so consistently elusive. For the sake of reference, however, he is most often referred to as Falortuligo, which translates into Common as “the clever ash,” or “Ash, the Trickster.” In addition to his ability to escape imprisonment of any kind, Ash is renown for being a malicious tormentor.

That reputation was a primary reason he earned a special place in this prison. His cell was designed with no exit and its entrance is a specially constructed gateway, set inside two archways to create a one-way portal into the cell. The cell was flooded with water and eight massive cold iron chains were designed to clamp down on any heat source entering the place. When all eight chains found purchase — and thus took hold of the demon that was transported here — the runes on the walls of the cell activated and froze everything solid.

Ash was found by a group of angels and captured. He was then transported to the cell's entry chamber after its completion (Room C110). The demon offered little resistance until the last moment, when he pushed a solar angel named Amarantiel into the prison portal right before he was forced inside himself. Amarantiel, which means “Unfading Vigilance” in the Celestial tongue, knew there would be no escape from the cell. He accepted his imprisonment, fighting to subdue Ash in order to hasten the freezing process. Though unable to prevent one chain from attaching itself to his body, Amarantiel redirected the other seven chains to Ash. The magical walls then froze them both in solid ice for millennia.

If Amarantiel thought his unjust interment would be spent in quiet contemplation, he was quickly corrected by Ash. From the first hour of their confinement, Falortuligo initiated a telepathic dialog with Amarantiel. Over the centuries, Ash imbedded thoughts and voices into Amarantiel's mind, convincing him that the angel had been falsely imprisoned. During the last hundred years of their imprisonment, the demon twisted his soothing words until Amarantiel believed Ash another solar angel.

The final key to unlocking Ash's prison came when the wizard Arum arrived. A decade or so ago, Arum built a laboratory in Room C20 and Ash took the opportunity to speak telepathically, with the wizard. Arum believed the demon was a falsely imprisoned angel when the demon Falortuligo was placed in a cell within the prison complex. The demon told Arum it was impossible for him to gain freedom without also setting the demon free. Arum was warned against telling anyone they had spoken, to prevent the possibility of someone freeing the angel — because it would also release the demon. Ash's steadfast refusal of all offers of assistance, lest the demon be set free, convinced Arum that the voice in his head was that of the angel Amarantiel.

Posing as Amarantiel, Ash asked nothing of the wizard, but occasionally conversed with Arum during his studies. These conversations became frequent as Arum asked “Ash” for advice on magical theories and practices while working in his lab. It was during one such discussion about the creation of magical weaponry that Ash set in motion a plan that would lead to his inevitable release.

Arum complained about spending too much time maintaining his forge to generate sufficient heat, and that his research was suffering because of it. Ash suggested placing wards on the front of the forge to reflect the heat back into the walls. A higher level of heat would then be maintained. Not coincidentally, this would also focus a great amount of heat on the stone wall surrounding the prison. Arum, however, did not know how close he was to Ash's icy prison cell. It was this mixture of intense cold from the prison and constant heat from the forge that eventually cracked the wall separating Rooms C20 and C21 and melted the ice to water, which boiled away into the forge. And once the wall was weakened, Falortuligo and Amarantiel broke free.

When Ash and Amarantiel broke through the wall of the prison, the members of the Order of Merunda confronted them. At first, Amarantiel believed Ash was another angel, and he did not understand why the Paladins of Merunda fought him. For millennia, the demon deceived Amarantiel, who now believed Ash was his kin.

While the brave followers of Merunda fought the demon, Arum used a number of illusions to trick Amarantiel into activating his true sight. It was then that the veil was lifted from the angel's eyes. And Amarantiel now understood the nature of Ash's treachery. The Paladins of Merunda gave their lives to allow Amarantiel to see through the demon's trickery. Their sacrifice allowed the angel to regain his senses and slay the demon.

The events leading up to the final confrontation between the demon and Amarantiel is recorded in Arum's account of the battle in Room C64.

This Section has no Random Encounters.

C20. ARUM'S FORMER LABORATORY

Piles of rubble and cracked stone blocks along the walls take up most of the floor of this chamber. Inside the room, an immense mound of debris is splayed out upon the ground in front of a gaping hole in the eastern wall. The rest of the chamber is a jumble of crushed timber and broken glass strewn about the larger morsels of stone. The west wall is scorched, especially around the entrance to the room where an overturned forge lays cold and broken against the wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is the former laboratory and living quarters of the wizard Arum. Judging by the ground and dispersal pattern of the explosion, the hole in the eastern wall is where the forge was located before the stone of the wall broke. There is a faint residue of abjuration magic coming from the crushed forge. If PCs examine the forge closer, they can attempt a DC 27 Spellcraft check to decipher the magical runes written inside as wards that reflected the heat and energy of the forge back into itself.

PCs succeeding at DC 22 Search check find several books wedged under the mass of stones and boulders. It is clear the books are damaged, but they may be of some use, should the PCs find a way to move the massive blocks to retrieve them. Most of the blocks of stone in the Room weigh more than 500 lbs. each, and many smaller boulders have to be removed before the larger ones can be pushed aside. Anyone attempting to clear the rubble must make three separate DC 22 Strength checks. For each Strength check made, one book can be recovered. No more than one Strength check can be made every 15 minutes, and PCs failing to rest after each check suffer a cumulative -1 Strength loss from fatigue every half hour. Lost Strength points regenerate at a rate of 1 per hour.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: There is no treasure here unless the PCs remove at least three of the undamaged books from under the stones. Anyone with ranks in Spellcraft gains an additional 2 ranks after spending one month reading the fragments of these three books. No further advantages are gained for reading more books, but a total of seven can be recovered.

C21. BROKEN PRISON OF FALORTULIGO

This enormous one hundred ft. tall room is noticeably colder than other rooms in the area. Four massive chains hang like pillars from the ceiling at even intervals in the center of the chamber. Coiled upon the ground amidst the last few links hanging from the ceiling are four more impossibly huge chains. The shackles at the end of each chain is twisted and warped, as if something broke its way free. The rest of the vast room is surprisingly empty, save for the large blue runes encircling the chamber and an ornate archway on the north wall. The runes emit a faint, steady, and oscillating glow, as if imitating the breathing patterns of an enormous sleeping beast.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: PCs succeeding at a DC 25 Craft or Profession check (relating to metal) realize the chains share properties of cold iron and adamantite. The PCs who make such checks also know it is not possible to combine those two metals, since one is forged at low temperatures and the other at extremely high temperatures.

The ornate archway on the north wall has intricate designs surrounding a curtain-like interior. The surface of the archway is solid, but has a fluid sensation to it. There is no way to pass through the archway from this side.

A few minutes after the PCs enter the Room, Zrino (hp 16) — a lantern archon — arrives through the archway from Room C110. PCs succeeding at a DC 15 Spot check see the creature pass through the magical archway. The archon gives the PCs information regarding the prison and its current state and provides background about this Room (including what little it knows about its former occupants).

Zrino's primary task is to inform the PCs that a special key (Room C105) lends access to another door in the dungeon. The archon describes the key and indicates it lies to the southeast, but to get there the PCs need to deal with danger along the way. The PCs also need the Mark of the Righteous, for only those who are blessed with this Mark can open the door leading into the Room where the key lies. The archon is able and willing to give the Mark to those who want it, with the exception of evil-aligned characters.

The Mark of the Righteous endows a permanent +1 luck bonus on all saving throws for good characters. Neutral characters are unaffected by its effect. If a character with the Mark ever becomes evil, he loses the bonus and suffers a -2 luck penalty on all saving throws for as long as he remains evil or until the Mark dissipates. The archon Zrino gives the Mark by shining a light on the palm of any non-evil character wishing to receive it. Close examination of a marked hand shows a faintly glowing sigil upon the palm. A DC 25 Knowledge (religion) check reveals this sigil as an ancient symbol denoting righteousness or proven goodness. The Mark lasts for 1d3+1 months, after which time it disappears from the character's palm entirely. The Mark of the Righteous also grants the bearer the ability to read and understand Celestial, but not speak it.

If the PCs ask for aid, the archon replies in a musical voice, "I can give you light for your eyes and illumination for your mind, but our paths do not cross." Zrino casts continual flame (up to twice per PC) on any item the PCs want enchanted. Aside from the information regarding the prison and the special key, he knows little about the inhabitants of the Region or the current state of affairs in any Region other than C and G.

If questioned about Arum, Zrino simply says, "The wizard is long gone." [Zrino is one of the few inhabitants of the Region who knows this.]

If asked about a cure for petrification, the archon states, "Gahrr'k has what you seek, but does not help others."

Encounter Condition: [Fear 15], Fearless, Hallowed 3, Positive Energy

Tactics: If anyone attack Zrino, he activates aura of menace and then flies out of range. If the PCs pursue, he attacks with ray of light each round after the first. Since, Zrino cannot be fully killed (returning in one month's time due to the magic of the dungeon), he fights to the death.

In the event PCs halt their attack, a DC 25 Diplomacy check convinces the archon to cease fighting as well. Evil PCs receive a -10 circumstance penalty to that check.

Treasure: PCs searching the Room for at least 1 hour are allowed a DC 30 Search check to find a single loose stone in the floor. The stone is protected by a glyph of warding and a lock that requires a DC 50 Open Lock check. If opened, the stone can be lifted up and under the tile is a long strongbox, large enough to store a longsword. The box has another glyph of warding on it and requires another DC 50 Open Lock check to open.

Both the stone tiles and the box are indestructible.

Inside the box is a magical longsword, radiating a great deal of magic (Strong Evocation [chaotic, evil] and moderate transmutation). It is, in fact, a +3 anarchic flaming keen mightily cleaving unholy longsword; a relic of an old age, that the celestials were unable to destroy and instead, were forced to bury under this tomb.

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two lantern archons. To decrease the challenge, remove the Fearless Condition.

▲ Zrino, Lantern Archon: CR 4; Small outsider (archon, extraplanar, good, lawful); HD 4d8+8; hp 23; Init +4; Spd Fly 60 ft. Skills and Feats: Concentration +7, Diplomacy +7, Knowledge (the planes) +5, Listen +7, Sense Motive +7, Spot +7; Improved Initiative, Weapon Focus (light ray).

Aura of Menace (Su): Will DC 12 negates.

Light Ray (Ex): A lantern archon's light rays have a range of 30 ft. This attack overcomes damage reduction of any type.

Aura of Menace (Su): A righteous aura surrounds archons that fight or get angry. Any hostile creature within a 20-ft. radius of an archon must succeed on a DC 12 Will save to resist its effects. The save DC is Charisma-based. Those who fail take a -2 penalty on attacks, AC, and saves for 24 hours or until they successfully hit the archon that generated the aura. A creature that has resisted or broken the effect cannot be affected again by the same archon's aura for 24 hours.

Teleport (Su): Archons can use greater teleport at will, as the spell (caster level 14th), except that the creature can transport only itself and up to 50 lbs. of objects. Within the confines of this dungeon, the lantern archon can only teleport within line of sight.

Tongues (Su): All archons can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using a tongues spell (caster level 14th). This ability is always active.

C22 THROUGH C28. NEUTRAL ZONE

Originally, the Section comprised of Rooms C22 through C28 was a processing station for the smaller prison cells to the east and west. When an enormous earthquake tore a jagged chasm into the foundation of the dungeon prison, hundreds of years ago, this region was all but abandoned.

For the last ten years, the Rooms in this Section were claimed by different inhabitants, including goblins (from Region B) and gnolls from the Gnashing Fang Tribe (Rooms C29 through C42). Before then, it was patrolled and monitored by the Paladins of Merunda, though they lived elsewhere in the Region. Today, however, the Section is primarily a buffer zone between the goblin and gnoll factions.

The Rooms in this area are spattered with blood and gore, showing signs of many battles. Though the halls are much cleaner than the Rooms, most doors have crude markings upon them. Whether these marks are warnings or territorial boundaries — or something else entirely — does not seem to matter, as they have been crossed out and written over countless times. These marks extend to some of the walls in the area, but are primarily focused upon the doors and archways.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	A lone gnoll from the Gnashing Fang Tribe investigates the noise the PCs have created. He's actively hiding and watching from the shadows, eager to report back and bring reinforcements if necessary.
2	A breeze cuts through the Section, chilling the PCs and threatening to blow out torches and lanterns. Drafty
3	The sounds of battle and howling echo through Section.
4	A bloody gnoll fang lies in the Room, obviously ripped from the creature's mouth.
5–12	Nothing
13–14	Four gnolls (from the Gnashing Fang) scout the perimeter of their territory. They enjoy light conversation while they talk, keeping an eye out for intruders.
15–16	Five goblins scout the Section. They engage the PCs (if necessary), but scatter as soon as one falls in combat.
17	2d8+8 goblins from Region B and four gnolls from the Gnashing Fang Tribe are engaged in combat. The sound of battle is abrupt and loud enough to wake sleeping PCs. Another 2d6 gnolls arrive to support the battle 2d3 rounds after the PCs are made aware of it. The goblins sound a retreat if the PCs join the fight. The gnolls attack the PC, regardless of their actions or intent. If the PCs do not interfere, the goblins lose half their forces and retreat, while the gnolls suffer 1d3 casualties and carry off all dead gnolls and goblins back to their territory.
18	The PCs stumble upon a trap. Two sword blades strike from each side of the Room when a PC steps on a 10-ft. square pressure plate. The blades are 3 ft. long and 4 ft. from the ground. They alternate directions after each attack, automatically resetting 1 round later.
	♣ Double Blade Trap: CR 4; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; Atk +20/+15 melee (1d6+8 each, longsword); Search DC 21; Disable Device DC 18.
19	The PCs stumble upon a trap. An audible alarm goes off, followed by confusion , affecting everyone within a 15-ft. radius. The alarm can be heard by everyone within 120 ft. Immediately roll for a second encounter, ignoring results of 17, 18, and 19.
	♣ Confusion Trap: CR 5; magic device; proximity trigger (alarm); automatic reset; spell effects (alarm, confusion, 7th-level wizard, DC 16 Will save negates); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.
20	Nurganar (Room C9) searches for treasure. When encountered, he asks for a tribute — 100 gp from each PC. If the PCs pay up, Nurganar talks with them. Since he travels everywhere, he knows a about the Region.

C22. GREASE TRAP

There are two words written on the door. One is small Goblin marking and the other is large rune written in Gnoll. Both say "TRAP."

The walls of this room are black, but the floor is covered in a greasy residue that has an unpleasant smell. There is a small, black, unmov- ing shape lying near the opposite corner of the chamber. The dark color of the walls and floors makes it difficult to pick out any other features in the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: After the door is opened, the trap triggers. There is a 1d6 round delay, before burning hands is cast from the corner nearest the door, directly towards the floor. Anyone standing in the doorway is hit and must succeed at a DC 14 Balance check or become prone. In addition, the trap simultaneously lights the grease on fire, causing 1d6 points of fire damage per round to anyone caught inside the Room. Treat the burning grease as alchemical fire. The grease fire burns itself out in 10 rounds and the trap resets itself after another 10 rounds.

♣ Burning Hands and Grease Trap: CR 6; spell; touch trigger; automatic reset; Atk +2 ranged touch, spell effects (burning hands, grease, 3rd-level wizard, 3d6 fire, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); 1d6 fire per round for 10 rounds; multiple targets (all targets in a 30-ft.-by-30-ft. Room); never miss; onset delay (1d6 rounds); Search DC 26; Disable Device DC 26.

Anyone searching the Room, before or after it is set on fire, must make a DC 15 Search check to notice that the walls are heavily caked soot. PCs succeeding at a DC 20 Search check also find charred bits of bone and metal about the floor.

Encounter Condition: [Smoke]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add lightning bolt to the trap, 1d10 rounds into the fire. To decrease the challenge, remove the grease.

C23. KILLER TRAP

The stench of decaying flesh lingers here. The nauseating odor is almost certainly caused by the rotting gnoll and goblin corpses lying upon the floor. They appear to have no wounds on them, but the look of terror on their faces is a testament to the violent nature of their deaths.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A phantasmal killer trap that affects the first person enter- ing the Room. Anyone witnessing the spell sees only a vague shadowy shape. This trap resets itself one minute after being triggered, but is only sprung again when PCs re-enter the Room. PCs already in the Room do not trigger the spell again.

♣ Phantasmal Killer Trap: CR 5; magic device; proximity trigger (alarm); automatic reset; spell effect (phantasmal killer, 7th-level wizard, DC 16 Will save for disbelief, DC 16 Fort save for partial effect); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

Encounter Condition: [Smoke]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: PCs searching the bodies find various personal effects. The gnoll has four knucklebones used for gaming in a belt pouch, but one has slightly different markings. Anyone finding the bones can make DC 15 Appraise or Craft (alchemy) check to identify the odd bone as an archaic (but functional) thunderstone. Amidst the remains of the two goblins the PCs find a short sword, a rusted dagger, and 1d4 cp.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge, add a fire trap to the phantasmal killer trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the phantasmal killer trap with a magic missile trap.

C24. DEAD GHOUL ROOM

This door seems normal at first, but its locking mechanism is partially melted. The hinges of the door seem intact, if a bit rusted. Were it not for the mangled lock, this door would not be worth noting.

There is a desiccated corpse in the middle of the room. It is so skeletal and unnatural that it must be an undead creature. It was leaning against the door, as if trying to claw its way out, but it is no longer moving. The only thing remarkable about the corpse is the fascinating silver necklace on around its neck.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These are the remains of a ghoull trapped here by the wizard Arum. It is still alive, although the necklace is constantly draining its strength. Thus, the ghoull remains helpless even if the necklace is removed. The ghoull has been trapped here for years.

Encounter Condition: Haunted, Stagnant Air

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The necklace is a simple silver medallion with the word "sloth" written in Elven. It is cursed and affects any creature with a Strength score that wears it. Every day it's worn, the necklace deals 1d3 points of Strength damage (at midnight). The strength loss is permanent for as long as the necklace is worn and can only be restored with restoration or similar. Furthermore, once the necklace is worn around a person's neck or wrist, it cannot be removed by any means save remove curse. Without the aid of magic, lost Strength points return at a rate of 1 per week once the item has been removed from its victim.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the necklace deal 1d4 points of Strength damage. To decrease the challenge, allow the victim to remove the necklace with a DC 18 Will save.

C25. OPEN HALLWAY

The hallway opens into a small chamber before continuing to the east. There is a dark red stain smeared on the floor, as if something was dragged down the eastern corridor.

C26. SMALL CLOSET

The door to this small room squeaks open. Inside is a goblin. The creature is dressed in dirty clothes and sobs.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: The goblin's name is Ratul (hp 6), which means "stupid weakling." He was a scout for the Goblin King (Room B5), but never provided satisfactory information. In truth, Ratul is an exceptional scout. But, he's timid and less evil than his kin and therefore unwilling to help the Goblin King in his quests.

Ratul continually pulls up a glorified rag that skirts his waist. He is covered in cuts and scars consistent with the lashes of a whip. Ratul is too shocked to speak at first, but is relieved to meet someone who is neither a gnoll or goblin.

If the PCs questions him, Ratul pleads for mercy, offering his services as guide and scout. Anyone who makes a DC 20 Sense Motive check senses Ratul's sincerity. If the PCs threaten him, Ratul becomes afraid and unresponsive once more. If the PCs attack, he offers no defense. Ratul is familiar with the layout of Rooms C19 through C31 and will not willingly travel west into Region B, east past Room C29, or into Room C32. Unless the PCs succeed at a DC 30 Bluff or Diplomacy check, nothing convinces him to travel to those Rooms. If the PCs treat him as a captive, or force him to go where he doesn't want, Ratul escapes the first chance he gets.

If the PCs talk to him, Ratul gives out any information he has about the area. He describes a great "army of dog men" to the east, and their war with the Goblin King to the west. He also knows the "dog king," named Gahr'r'k, has "a small jar of grease that makes statues come to life." Ratul witnessed Gahr'r'k using the stone salve on one of his lieutenants in Room C19, but he never saw the cockatrice or gargoyle. Finally, Ratul knows that the gnolls and goblin armies avoid this area because of the ghouls in Rooms C27 and C28. He chose this Region as a hiding place because he does not believe anyone else knows the ghouls were destroyed.

If Ratul joins the PCs, he refuses to assist in combat. In fact, the person who is most kind to Ratul suffers a -2 AC penalty in any combat situation, as the goblin clings to that character's leg while in battle. Ratul, however, remains true to his word as long as the PCs do not betray him or leave him unprotected.

Trapfinding: Rogues (and only rogues) can use the Search skill to locate traps when the task has a Difficulty Class higher than 20. Finding a nonmagical trap has a DC of at least 20, or higher if it is well hidden. Finding a magic trap has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it.

Rogues (and only rogues) can use the Disable Device skill to disarm magic traps. A magic trap generally has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it.

A rogue who beats a trap's DC by 10 or more with a Disable Device check can study a trap, figure out how it works, and bypass it (with her party) without disarming it.

Skills: Ratul has a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently and Ride checks. Ratul speaks Common, Gnoll, and Goblin.

Possessions: Studded leather armor, short sword, dagger (2), sling, pouch, sling bullets (7), thieves tools, 25 ft. of twine.

C27. GHASTLY MURAL

Aggravation emanates from crude pictures drawn on the walls here. The pictures are barely recognizable, as the paint used to draw them has faded over time. In the southeastern wall of the chamber is a tiny structure built from gnawed bones. The roof of this miniature house is incomplete, but the thing is otherwise surprisingly detailed. Along the eastern wall, nine white carved figurines are lined up next to the house.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Anyone studying the paintings upon the wall is eventually able to discern terrible pictures of horrifying acts of violence. Each PC studying the murals imagines they see something different. The pictures are not magical, but made to inspire the most dreadful imaginings of those who behold them.

PCs searching the wall behind the bone figurines are allowed DC 24 Search checks to find a 5-ft. tall secret door leading to Room C28. The cramped, cobweb-filled corridor should unhinge all but the most seasoned adventurers. Medium or larger PCs must make a DC 20 Will saving throw or be shaken while inside the passageway. Anyone failing the first save must make another DC 20 Will saving throw to prevent being frightened when they find the secret door on the other end of the corridor wedged shut (see Room C28 for further details).

Anyone succeeding at a DC 15 Knowledge (nature) or a DC 20 Heal check can identify the bones as those consistent with humanoid creatures. The corpses are those of three gnolls and a human, but the latter has dry and sickly flesh mashed almost beyond recognition.

C28. GHAST TOMB

A pile of crushed rocks is piled in the southeast corner of this chamber, blocking the hidden panel behind and making it impossible for anyone to enter this Room via the secret corridor beyond. PCs clearing the debris are allowed a DC 20 Search check to notice the secret wall panel, which opens into the narrow corridor beyond (see Room C27).

A cloud of stench lingers close by. The trail of blood leading from the corridor to the door continues on into the chamber, past the half-opened doorway. The room seems empty except for a pile of crushed stone boulders in the southeast and the remains of several creatures lying upon the floor in the north-west corner.

Entering the room disturbs a cloud of flies hovering above the corpse. A closer look inside reveals the former occupants were smashed into a mealy pulp. The stench obviously emanates from the corpses.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Anyone succeeding at a DC 15 Heal or other related check determines there are at least three gnoll corpses in the pile of bones in addition to the remains of the ghastr. The gnolls have been dead less than a month, and were torn apart before being left to rot. The gnoll corpses seem to have been purposefully dismantled to prevent reanimation.

Gahr'r'k, the gnoll chieftain (see Gnashing Fang Tribe and Room C37), destroyed the ghastr a few weeks ago, but no one other than the chieftain and Ratul knows that. Gahr'r'k plans to use this Room, but is airing it out until it's hospitable.

GNASHING FANG TRIBAL GROUNDS

Nine years ago, a hunting party from the Howling Fang Tribe stumbled upon the entrance to the prison. The tribal Chieftain, Hag-grt, decided the tribe needed an additional lair and sent one-third of his tribe into the dungeon to pave the way for the rest of his people. Hag-grt, however, never intended to enter the underground prison.

The Howling Fang Tribe was now too large to control, and Hag-grt too old to fight off younger and stronger gnoll challengers. Wise as he was, he sent the toughest gnolls into the dungeon and remained with a smaller tribe; one he could control without competition.

So it was, that a band of 85 gnolls entered the dungeon. They had great success at first, scaring off or killing many humanoid races and fiendish beasts surrounding the entrance. But, overtime they found the dungeon's massive, sprawling tunnels too difficult to navigate and they soon became lost. Discord broke out among the gnolls and a demand for leadership reared its head. Two fiendish gnoll brothers — Gahr'r'k and Yie-ar'k — barked challenges, each claiming leadership of the group.

After some discussion, Gahr'r'k agreed to support his brother, Yie-ar'k. But the gnolls did not all agree that he should lead and one by one, the gnolls stepped forth to contest his leadership. After six challengers, a young hot-headed gnoll named Attuk'k stepped forward and, in a ferocious battle, crippled Yie-ar'k. Although Attuk'k was defeated, Gahr'r'k stepped forward and decapitated both of them, assuring his place as leader of the tribe.

Gahr'r'k (Room C37) took the remaining gnolls and formed what became the Gnashing Fang Tribe. Although Gahr'r'k led his tribe further into the dungeon prison. By the time the gnolls realized he never intended to leave the vast underground complex, they had little choice but to follow their chieftain.

Some time after entering the dungeon, Gahr'r'k met the Goblin King, Argliiss. Though unafraid of the goblin, he worked out an immediate agreement with Argliiss rather than fight (especially without a lair of their own yet). Gahr'r'k discovered Argliiss was fearful of the wizard Arum (to the east), and volunteered to kill the wizard in exchange for a vague alliance between their two tribes. Thinking either the wizard or the gnolls would be destroyed by such an alliance, the Goblin King agreed, sending along 20 of his own warriors to assist.

Gahr'r'k left the Goblin King's domain and paused in Room C29 to inspect his new forces. He charged forward to fight the wizard, but soon realized Arum had left the region long ago. Gahr'r'k then took 14 goblins as slaves and killed the other six as an example. In the next few months, Gahr'r'k sent several reports to the Goblin King. These reports explained deadly battles fought against the wizard Arum, but in truth Gahr'r'k's tribe never found the wizard.

As the months went by, the gnoll chieftain requested more goblin reinforcements, and each time the Goblin King sent more men to their deaths. Gahr'r'k, however, grew careless with the arrangement and a goblin eventually escaped slavery, and returned to tell his king of the gnolls' treachery. The goblins and gnolls then waged war against one another, and both factions lost a great number of warriors. Now, the two groups have troubles of their own and avoid each other almost entirely.

The first encounter between the PCs and the Gnashing Fang Tribe might not be a surprise meeting; at least not for the gnolls. They guard the eastern access (Room C38) and regularly patrol the various western entrances. Despite their chaotic nature, discipline is high among the gnoll warriors. With so few remaining their very survival depends on it.

The gnolls do not attack unless the PCs strike first. They parley with PCs and listen to offers of diplomacy or trade. If the PCs convince the gnolls that they mean them no harm, they are escorted directly to Gahr'r'k (Room C37). The Chieftain is willing to parley with non-hostile PCs and cut a deal with them (see Room C37).

If the PCs attacked any gnoll before being allowed passage, the remaining gnolls overwhelm the PCs and take them prisoner. If combat occurs, the gnolls capture the PCs first, using subdual damage. If the PCs killed at least one gnoll (and the gnolls know about it), every encounter with the Gnashing Fang Tribe changes to Hostile. If the PCs gain an upper hand and corner Gahr'r'k, he challenges a single PC to an honorable duel. If he wins, he offers amnesty to any other PC who swears fealty to him.

1	The PCs surprise a hiding gnoll, who flees as soon as he spots the PCs.
2	A howl echoes through the Section.
3	A ghostly moan echoes through the Section.
4–10	Nothing
11	An outcast gnoll (Brb 3), savage and brutal, strangles a goblin to death as the PCs approach. He carries no weapons, other than his fists and a heavy stone (1d4/x2, bludgeoning).
12–14	Six gnolls (from the Gnashing Fang) scout the perimeter of their territory. They enjoy light conversation while they talk, keeping an eye out for intruders. They are willing to parley, but attack aggressive PCs without mercy.
15–16	Five goblins scout the Section. They are verifying rumors of the death of Gahr'r'k (unless the PCs have killed the gnoll chieftain, those rumors are false). They engage the PCs (if necessary), but scatter when one falls in combat.
17	The PCs stumble upon a trap. Camouflaged Pit Trap: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; DC 22 Reflex save avoids; 50 ft. deep (5d6, fall); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); Search DC 26; Disable Device DC 18.

20	Nurganar (Room C9) searches for treasure. When encountered, he asks for a tribute — 100 gp from each PC. If the PCs pay up, Nurganar talks with them. Since he travels everywhere, he knows a about the Region.

C29. WESTERN GNOLL MUSTERING ROOM

This large room has a door in each corner and one set into the eastern wall. The floor suggests a high traffic volume, with several scuffed lines trudged out between each of the doors. The walls are completely dirty, as if painted in blood.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Regular traffic from the gnoll encampment courses through here. A gnoll patrol moves through the Room once every two to three hours. A DC 20 Search check made here determines that the walls have been spattered with blood over and over again. The blood is thicker near the doors, but is fairly even throughout the Room. The blood is nothing more than a warning to enemies.

Though this Room serves as a passageway, the gnolls from Rooms C33 and C35 remain alert. When the PCs are in this chamber, allow the gnolls a Listen check (–5 for distance) to notice their presence. Once they notice the PCs, the gnolls from Room C33 enter this Room using the eastern door 1d4+1 rounds later. 1d3 rounds after they arrive, more gnolls (from Room C34) come through the southeastern entrance. These warriors are well trained and fight nicely together. Like all members of their tribe, however, they are willing to parley with PCs coming in peace.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If a fight breaks out, the gnolls take the PCs prisoner rather than fighting to the death. If this is not possible, they fight ferociously, sending gnolls one at a time for reinforcements if the battle goes poorly for them.

If the PCs keep quiet and are not discovered, roll for a Random Encounter after 30 minutes in this Room.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, allow the gnolls in Rooms C33 and C35 unmodified Listen checks. To decrease the challenge, increase the Listen check modifier to –10.

C30. WEAPONS STORAGE

Nothing can stop the rusted hinges from squeaking when the door is pushed open. The sound alerts the gnoll guards in Room C33 and C35 if they succeed at DC 15 Listen checks. If they hear the ruckus, the gnolls from Room C33 enter Room C29 using the eastern door 1d4+1 rounds later. More gnolls from Room C35 come through the southeastern door 1d3 rounds after the warriors from Room C33 enter Room C29. These warriors are prepared for anything and remain in Room C29 to block the only available exit from this storage area.

The door to this room squeals loudly when opened. The place seems to be an armory or storage area holding a range of weaponry. A few of the larger weapons are placed in unevenly constructed wall mounts, but most are simply piled up on the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is the Gnashing Fang Tribe' stockpile of unused weapons. Since the members of the tribe train exclusively with only a few different types of weapons, the items gathered here — taken from the surrounding areas over the years — are seldom used. Many of the weapons are in excellent condition, but after years of abuse and neglect none are considered masterwork quality at this point. The gnolls have no use for the weapons, but they do not allow anyone to take any of them without permission from their chieftain Gahr'r'k (Room C37).

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4, [Safe]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: With the exception of warhammers, battleaxes, greataxes, and clubs, nearly any type of standard melee weapon can be found in this Room.

The weapon sizes range from Small to Large and there is a 35% chance of any specific weapon being present (roll once per weapon type).

C31. HAUNTED ROOM

The floor of this large chamber is filled with piles of crushed stone, broken weapons and furniture, and rotting wood. Amidst the rubbish, the shape of four humanoids can be made out. One of these silhouettes looks human, but the other three are tall and have canine faces. The creatures' bodies are pale where their flesh is exposed, and their gaze is empty.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: About a week ago, a lone wight entered Gnashing Fang Tribe territory, killing three gnolls on patrol and turning them into mindless servants. With the help of its newly created spawn, the creature took control of the Room.

The mighty wight (hp 55) and its three wight spawn (hp 29, 27, 22) haunt this Room. The creatures are causing major problems to the Gnashing Fang Tribe, for most of its warriors dare not face these horrors, fearing they — like their former comrades — might be turned into mindless undead servants. Because of this, PCs who destroyed those undead creatures and tell the gnolls about their deed benefit from a +4 circumstance bonus to their Diplomacy check while dealing with any member of the Gnashing Fang Tribe.

Encounter Condition: Desecration 2 or Unhallowed 3, Distracting Visions 4

Tactics: The four wights attack anyone entering their new domain. These fiends do not wield any weapons in combat, preferring to close into melee as soon as possible and use their slam attack in combination with their energy drain ability to weaken their foes.

Treasure: The improved wight wears a tarnished silver chain (worth 10 gp if cleaned) upon which hangs an ivory amulet carved to look like the face of a hawk. This item is worth only 10 gp, but could be sold to historians or sages for 200 gp.

While it does not radiate magic, PCs successfully casting identify on the amulet discover it's a (modified) circle of persuasion.

Skills: Wights have a +8 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

C32. WESTERN GNOLL MUSTERING ROOM

This large hall contains three mounds of crushed rock. This refuse is lined upon the southern wall, forming six-ft. high piles. It is obvious by the state of disrepair of the ceiling as well as the east and south walls that the rubble was once the walls and ceilings of this room. The door in the middle of the north wall is wide open, revealing the dark and narrow corridor beyond.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: It is obvious that this Room suffered some damage, but whether this damage was caused by a minor cave-in or a great battle is hard to tell. Though the southern wall, eastern wall, and ceiling are uneven, the stone of these surfaces looks identical to that of the other walls and floor — relatively smooth and worn.

Before the wights took over Room C31, this Room was used as a mustering place for the gnolls of the Gnashing Fang Tribe and, with the exception of the regular patrol passing through the chamber, it remained for the most part empty at all times. Now, a cunning gnoll ranger guards the place.

Verk'nek (hp 41), a respected gnoll ranger and loyal lieutenant, took it upon himself to set up a permanent vigil in this hall. Fearing the wights in Room C31 might come deeper into Gnashing Fang territory, Verk'nek hides behind broken stones in the southeast corner. He remains hidden and silent when patrols of Gnashing Fang warriors pass through the hall or if his compatriots escort the PCs to Gahr'rk.

If the PCs enter unescorted, Verk'nek remains hidden but demands in a clear voice that the PCs identify themselves and their business in Gnashing Fang territory. Verk'nek's voice is loud and clear, alerting gnolls in Room C31 that succeed at a DC 16 Listen check. Four gnolls enter the hall 1d3 rounds later while the other warns the gnolls in Room C35, who arrive 1d3 rounds after the group from Room C31 arrives.

Unless provoked, Verk'nek does not engage the PCs. Like most members of his tribe, he prefers diplomacy. Verk'nek's most immediate concerns are the wights. If he knows the PCs destroyed the creatures, his attitude shifts to Friendly and he reveals himself. Otherwise, he remains hidden and waits for his tribemates to join him.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Cover, Hazardous Footing 16

Tactics: In battle, Verk'nek remains hidden behind rubble, which grants him cover. He shoots arrows, targeting the more lightly armored PCs first, until forced into melee. To reach Verk'nek, the PCs must maneuver around the rubble in the eastern portion of the southern wall.

Treasure: The large quiver Verk'nek carries is made of boiled leather and decorated with a multitude of tribal designs, each more intricate than the next. The quiver holds 40 arrows. Because of its artistic value, it is worth five times the value of other items of its kind to most people, and up to ten times that amounts to any gnoll.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two ranger levels to Verk'nek and give him a potion of invisibility (2 doses). To decrease the challenge of this encounter, remove two ranger levels from Verk'nek.

▲ Verk'nek, Gnoll Rgr 4: CR 5; Medium humanoid (gnoll); HD 2d8+4 + 4d8+8; hp 43; Init +2; Spd 30 ft.; AC 18, touch 12, flat-footed 18; Base Atk +5; Grp +7; Atk +7 melee (1d12+3/x3, greataxe) or +8 ranged (1d8+2/x3, masterwork composite longbow [strength +2]); Full Atk +7 melee (1d12+3/x3, greataxe) or +8 ranged or +6/+6 ranged with rapid shot (1d8+2/x3, masterwork composite longbow [strength +2]); SA —; SQ Combat style (archery), darkvision 60 ft., favored enemy; AL LE; SV Fort +8, Ref +5, Will +2; Str 14, Dex 14, Con 14, Int 10, Wis 12, Cha 8.

Favored Enemy (Ex): Verk'nek's Favored Enemy is dwarves. The ranger gains a +2 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks when using these skills against creatures of this type. Likewise, he gets a +2 bonus on weapon damage rolls against such creatures.

Possessions: +2 studded leather, greataxe, masterwork composite longbow (strength +2), quivers (2), masterwork arrows (6), arrows (34).

C33. FIRST GUARDROOM

Both doors to this Room are open.

Eight long bunks are lined upon the walls of this chamber, taking up most of the southwestern and northeastern corners. There is a low wooden table and there are several stools in the middle of the room, as well as simple weapon racks near both entrances. These racks contain a variety of clubs and axes.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: This guardroom once housed eight gnolls, but only six gnolls (hp 15, 12, 11, 10, 9, 8) are currently here. While off duty, these warriors still remain vigilant. They pay particular attention to any noise coming from Room C29 or Room C32. Like the majority of their tribesmen, these gnolls are content to speak with PCs wishing to trade information or goods. If the PCs wish to pass through Gnashing Fang tribal grounds, the gnolls insist that they speak to their chieftain Gahr'r'k (and escort them to Room C37).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If fighting ensues, the gnolls charge the PCs. They target the warriors of the party first and flank them whenever they can.

The gnolls in Room C35 are automatically aware of a fight, and join 1d3 rounds later. Allow the sleeping gnolls in Room C36 a DC 25 Listen check. If they hear trouble, these warriors aid their fellow tribesmen in 1d4+2 rounds.

Treasure: In addition to the weapons they carry, each of these gnolls have 1d4 gold piece in small semiprecious gemstones and silver coins. Additionally, one wears a decorative bronze armband. Carved upon its surface, in simple lines, is a mighty bear. This trinket is worth upwards of 15 gp. The weapons racks near the doors holds a two clubs, a greatclub, and three battleaxes — all average quality.

A successful DC 14 Search check in this Room also reveals a jeweled-hilted dagger (worth 100 gp) tucked under the crude mattress of one of the bunk beds as well as a pouch containing 41 cp.

EL: 5

Skills and Feats: Listen +2, Spot +3; Power Attack.

C34. SECOND GUARDROOM

This wide room contains the wooden frame of twelve bunk beds. A thin layer of dust covers the bunks and floor of this chamber, suggesting that the place has not been used in awhile.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room housed gnolls from the Gnashing Fang Tribe, but none have used it in over two years.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: While this Room is Safe to rest in, the constant traffic of gnolls just outside the doors, is nerve-racking.

Treasure: A successful DC 20 Search check reveals a silver coin tucked under the leg of one of the bunk beds.

EL: N/A

C35. THIRD GUARDROOM

A stone slab dominates the southeast corner of this chamber. The slab is cracked in many places and its surface is filled with crude but colorful graffiti. Several wooden stools have been placed around the painted stone tablet, and a number of empty jars are set upon it. There are a dozen wooden bunk beds lining the north and west walls as well as a simple iron rack holding a handful of weapons besides the southern door, which is wide open.

Three gnolls sit in a circle in the middle of the place. One is holding a handful of bones while the others are eagerly look on. In front of each of the canine-faced humanoids, stacked upon the floor before them, are stacks of copper coins.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: Three gnoll warriors (hp 21, 18, 16) are sitting in a circle in the middle of the Room, playing a game of chance. Though their attention is focused on their game, they keep their ears open to any noise coming from Room C29. They suffer a -4 circumstance penalty to any checks made to notice the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4

Tactics: These gnolls are more interested in acquiring copper (or silver) to use for gambling, rather than fighting. But, if the PCs pose any threat to them — or if they learn that they have harmed any member of their tribe — they pick up their weapons and attack them.

In combat, two gnolls stand in the middle of the Room, preventing the PCs from reaching their companion, whose task it is to alert the warriors in Rooms C33 and C36, as well as their chieftain in Room C37. This gnoll stays behind his companions and barks loudly. He continues to bark until he is either forced into melee or reinforcements arrive, at which point he joins the fighting.

The gnolls in Room C33 are instantly alerted and arrive 1d2 rounds later. Also allow the sleeping warriors in Room C36 a DC 26 Listen check to notice the ruckus. If they are awakened, these gnolls enter this guardroom 1d4+2 rounds later. Gahr'r'k (Room C37) overhear the fighting if he (or anyone one in his throne room) succeeds at a DC 18 Listen check. They, then, rouse the warriors in Room C36 and arrive here in 1d4+2 rounds.

Treasure: There is a total of 151 cp lying upon the ground of this chamber. The tokens the gnolls are using for their game are six elaborately carved bones with several designs printed upon them. Though these are useless, a gnoll might pay upwards of 5 gp for them.

The stone tablet is used as both a table and canvas for painting. The jars lying upon it are empty save for a thin layer of dried paint. Most of the images represent animals and magical beasts hunted by bands of gnolls. They are crude and worthless to all but gnolls.

The weapons rack near the southern entrance holds a greataxe, two battleaxes, a warhammer, and a masterwork greatclub.

C36. FOURTH GUARDROOM

There are four humanoids in this chamber. These creatures are tall and their furry bodies and canine-like faces are exposed as they slumber upon large bunk beds. Though there are more bunks here than there are inhabitants — twelve beds in all — only nine of these have mattresses and woolen blankets upon them. There is a pair of well-polished greataxes resting upon the wall close to the north-western door.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This guardroom normally houses nine gnolls, but some currently patrol the Section. Four gnoll warriors (hp 23, 19, 17, 14) are currently sleeping here. If intruding PCs rouse them, they hurry out of their beds and ready themselves for battle. Unlike most other members of their tribe, they are prone to attack PCs entering their private chamber uninvited, but PCs who successfully change their Initial Attitude (through the use of diplomacy) might avoid a confrontation with them.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: In battle, these warriors fight savagely and flank the more heavily armed and armored foes as often as they can manage.

In combat, these gnolls utter loud barks to alert the rest of their tribe. Allow the gnolls in Room C35 and the chieftain in Room C37 a DC 15 Listen check to notice the ruckus. If they do, these gnolls join the fray in 1d3 rounds. Similarly, allow the gnolls in Room C33 a DC 20 Listen check to hear the commotion. These warriors join the battle 1d4+2 rounds after they are made aware of it.

Treasure: Each gnoll in this chamber carries 1d4 gp worth of gemstones and assorted coins. One of them also has a masterwork warhammer, which he keeps at the foot of his bed. The two greataxes lying upon the north wall near the western door are sound weapons of ordinary quality.

EL: 6

C37. GAHRR'K'S CHAMBER

A wide black pelt covers a good portion of the floor in the middle of this large chamber. There is a bed and an iron chest in the northeast corner of the room, while a narrow wooden desk takes up most of the northwest corner. A stone chair that resembles a kingly throne lies upon the floor in the middle of the northern wall. The flames from several torches set amidst this wall burn, bathing the room in a wavering golden light.

Upon the throne-like chair is a large figure with the features of a wild-dog. The fur of the humanoid — dark and disheveled — is visible where its burgundy clothing and polished scale mail armor do not cover it. The fiery eyes of the inhuman face burn brightly. Another male humanoid baring similar features stands near the chieftain in the throne. Three other gnoll warriors are standing by the southern door, as if waiting for orders.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: Gahrr'k One-Ear (hp 74), the powerful fiendish gnoll chieftain of the Gnashing Fang Tribe lives in this Room. Gahrr'k is a fierce and proven warrior who won the respect of his peers long ago.

He rules the Gnashing Fang Tribe and his ambitions include the invasion of the goblin tribe to the west, for it is in part because of the little vermin and the war he waged against the Goblin King that his tribe suffered terrible losses. Though Gahrr'k realizes this is a long-term endeavor, he continues to dream of the day when all the territory of Argliss' the Goblin King, falls under his control.

If members of his tribe escorted the PCs to Gahrr'k's chamber and they offered no resistance or threat to his people, the chieftain is eager to talk and negotiate with them. Gahrr'k is more than willing to trade information and safe passage through the territory controlled by the Gnashing Fang Tribe in exchange for weapons and other valuables. He is most interested in hearing what the PCs have learned about the other regions of the dungeon — especially if they have news of Argliss or his lowly goblins. If the PCs inform Gahrr'k that they disposed of the goblin king, the chieftain's attitude automatically shifts one rank towards Helpful.

A cunning gnoll, Gahrr'k negotiates with the PCs, hoping to gain their assistance in getting rid of the hill giant family to the east as well as the goblins to the west. If the PCs show no interest in any of these endeavors but are respectful of Gahrr'k and his people, the chieftain agrees to grant them safe passage through his domain. If the PCs are interested in slaughtering the goblins or routing out the giants, Gahrr'k offers all the gold he possesses (and keeps in his chest) in exchange for the head of the three giants or the goblin king. The gnolls do not actively help the PCs in such a mission, but they offer them assistance and safe haven.

If questioned on the wizard Arum, Gahrr'k reveals he has never seen him and suspects he is either dead or has long ago left the dungeon. He has explored most of the wizard's domain, and even used portions of it in the past to house the warriors of his tribe. Though he abandoned any claims he had on the wizard's territory long ago (because of the many traps found therein, but also because of the diminished number of warriors under his control), Gahrr'k occasionally sends scouts to investigate. As far as he knows, no one lives there.

If asked about the goblin king, Gahrr'k explains that the goblins have long been a thorn in his side, but that in recent years the fighting between Argliss' people and the Gnashing Fang Tribe almost ceased — mainly because Gahrr'k does not have the manpower to wage a constant war against the little vermin.

If the PCs barter with Gahrr'k, he offers any of the weapons stored in Room C30 in exchange for axes, clubs, hammers, bows and arrows, crossbows and bolts, ropes, or oil flasks. Gahrr'k One-Ear has a small jar of stone salve with two applications left, enough to restore two people back to flesh. He is willing to trade it for weapons or various other goods valued at 8,000 gp or more. Gold coins alone cannot account for more than 1/2 this, however, as coins are nearly worthless down here. The chieftain has little else to offer, but listens to any offers diplomatic PCs make.

If the PCs barge into his chamber unescorted, or if the chieftain learns they killed members of his tribe, he picks up his enchanted greatclub and attacks. His lieutenant (hp 38) and three bodyguards (hp 21, 18, 16) react instantly.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: In combat, Gahrr'k lets his men handle the PCs while he drinks a draught of his potion of barkskin. The following round, he attacks heavily-armored PCs first. Meanwhile, the bodyguards engage the PCs in melee and the lieutenant attacks the spellcasters.

These warriors bark loudly in combat, and their cries alarm the gnolls in Room C33 if they make a DC 15 Listen check, as well as those in Rooms C33 and C36 if they succeed at a DC 20 Listen check. These warriors come to aid their chieftain 1d4+2 rounds after they have been made aware of the ruckus.

Treasure: In addition to the weapons they carry, the three gnolls have a 1d4 gp worth of small jewels and coins. The lieutenant wears a masterwork leather armor and carries a +1 heavy steel shield. The pelts upon the chieftain's bed are in good condition and could be sold for upwards of 30 gp. Gahrr'k carries a variety of magical items

Gahrr'k's chest is made of iron. It is locked and requires a DC 27 Open Lock check or the chieftain's key to unlock. Inside, there is a total of 754 gp and 1,312 sp. Upon the gold and silver are three small diamonds (each worth 750 gp) in a green velvet pouch, a tarnished silvered dagger, and an empty ivory scroll case. When closed, this scroll case can be submerged in water without risk of damaging any parchment held inside. This object is worth 20 times the value of similar items of its kind.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a fiendish darkmantle (Region A), that Gahrr'k befriended with wild empathy. To decrease the challenge, remove two gnolls or the lieutenant from the encounter.

C38. CELLBLOCK

The door on the eastern wall is locked and requires the jailer's key (see below) or a successful DC 30 Open Lock check. It can be unlocked from either side, but PCs coming from the east automatically alert the inhabitants.

This wide hallway contains four wooden doors with small windows and iron bars upon both the north and south walls. These eight doors open into what appears to be eight small cells, but only one of them is closed. There are two double doors made out of wood and reinforced with iron plates in the center of the north wall. Similar doors appear in the middle of the south wall.

In the center of the room is a long table made out of wood with six comfortable-looking wooden chairs set around it. There are four gnolls in this room. Three of them hold greataxes and shields while a third is armed with an axe and a whip.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: Five of the cell doors have no locks and there is no apparent way to lock them. The other cells have workable locking mechanisms, but only the door to the southeastern cell is closed and locked. Inside this cell is the recently expired body of a goblin. The creature's skin is taut and scarred with countless whip marks. It probably died from both malnutrition and abuse.

Ramk'mva (hp 42), the gnoll jailer, and three gnolls (hp 20, 18, 17) are in charge of securing the prison as well as protecting the borders of the Gnashing Fang Tribe. Ramk'mva is an old and cunning gnoll who earned the trust of his chieftain long ago. He is content with his position within the tribe and happy to be in charge of the prisons — especially since so little needs to be done.

To help control their territory, the gnolls keep the eastern door locked at all times. Ramk'mva holds the key, but does not let anyone through, unless Gahrr'k orders it.

If the PCs enter this Room from the east, they must first pick the lock of the door. The gnolls stand ready to face them in battle when they enter, but Ramk'mva is willing to talk. He informs them that this marks the boundary of the Gnashing Fang tribal grounds and lets his warriors escort the PCs to Gahrr'k (in Room C37). If the PCs refuse, but agree not to disturb the tribe, Ramk'mva is happy to bid them goodbye. If the PCs threaten or attack the gnolls, combat ensues.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If combat is inevitable, Ramk'mva lets the three warriors handle the PCs while he makes his way to Room C36, C35, and C37 to alert the gnolls there of the PCs' presence. Though he does not wish to fight, if cornered or unable to escape, Ramk'mva fights until defeated. In combat, he uses both his battleaxe and whip to disarm the PCs every chance he gets. Meanwhile, the three warriors engage in melee, targeting the strongest first, using gang tactics whenever possible.

If fighting breaks out in the cellblock, allow the gnolls in Rooms C33, C34, C36, and C37 a DC 22 Listen check to hear the sound of battle. If they do, they come to aid their fellow tribesmen 1d4+2 rounds thereafter.

Treasure: The cells hold nothing valuable, but each of the warriors in this Room carries a pouch with 1d4 gp worth of small gemstones, silver coins, and copper pieces. Ramk'mva the Jailer has a ring of keys that unlock the eastern door as well as each of the three cells that still have a working locking mechanism upon their doors. One of the keys he carries also unlocks the doors of Rooms C40, C41, and C42, as well as the double doors south of Room C40.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, double the number of gnoll warriors present and add two rogue levels to Ramk'mva. To decrease the challenge, remove three gnolls.

▲ Ramk'mva the Jailer, Gnoll Rog 3; CR 4; Medium humanoid (gnoll); HD 2d8+6 + 3d6+9; hp 42; Init +2; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 12, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +3; Grp +5; Atk +7 melee (1d8+3/×3, battleaxe) or +6 melee (1d3+3 nonlethal, whip); Full Atk +7 melee (1d8+3/×3,

Skills and Feats: Hide +5, Intimidate +5, Listen +6, Move Silently +5, Spot +6; Exotic Weapon Proficiency (whip), Power Attack.

Sneak Attack: Ramk'mva's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the rogue flanks his target. This extra damage is 1d6 at 1st level, and it increases by 1d6 every two rogue levels thereafter. Should the rogue score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Evasion (Ex): Ramk'mva can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility. If she makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, she instead takes no damage. Evasion can be used only if the rogue is wearing light armor or no armor. A helpless rogue does not gain the benefit of evasion.

Trapfinding: Rogues (and only rogues) can use the Search skill to locate traps when the task has a Difficulty Class higher than 20. Finding a non-magical trap has a DC of at least 20, or higher if it is well hidden. Finding a magic trap has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it.

Rogues (and only rogues) can use the Disable Device skill to disarm magic traps. A magic trap generally has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it.

A rogue who beats a trap's DC by 10 or more with a Disable Device check can study a trap, figure out how it works, and bypass it (with her party) without disarming it.

Trap Sense (Ex): At 3rd level, a rogue gains an intuitive sense that alerts her to danger from traps, giving her a +1 bonus on Reflex saves made to avoid traps and a +1 dodge bonus to AC against attacks made by traps. These bonuses rise to +2 when the rogue reaches 6th level, to +3 when she reaches 9th level, to +4 when she reaches 12th level, to +5 at 15th, and to +6 at 18th level.

Trap sense bonuses gained from multiple classes stack.

Possessions: Masterwork studded leather, masterwork battleaxe, whip.

Possessions: Leather armor, heavy steel shield (worn on back does not add to AC), greataxe.

C39. LIEUTENANTS' QUARTERS

The doors opening into this chamber are unlocked. Inside the small room, cast in the heavy shadows, are two narrow but comfortable-looking beds. The beds are covered with thick animal pelts.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is the quarters of two powerful members of the Gnashing Fang Tribe. Verk'nek holds the title of lieutenant and guards Room C32, and Nirk'na is the chieftain's right hand man (in Room C37). Both are feared by the warriors of the tribe and trust Ramk'mva (Room C38) to protect their private chamber.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A successful DC 15 Search check made in this Room uncovers a small wooden chest hidden under one of the beds. This chest is unlocked and holds 37 sp, a large chunk of golden amber (worth 95 gp), and a bronze bracelet large enough to cover the entire forearm of a Medium creature (worth upwards of 50 gp).

EL: N/A

C40. SECURED AREA

All the doors to this Room are locked. Ramk'mva (Room C38) possess the only key. Alternately, a DC 30 Open Lock check is required to unlock any of the doors.

This hallway is cast in total darkness. Upon closer examination, the floor here reveals several scuff marks imprinted on the cold stone. The floor, however, is covered with a thick blanket of dust, suggesting that although there once was heavy traffic in this area, this hall has not been entered in years.

C41. RUST MONSTER'S PRISON CELL

The doors of this cell are made out of heavy oak and several wooden beams nailed into the stone wall block it. Anyone wishing to enter this Room must first remove the wooden planks that block the entrance. Each of the five beams can be pulled with a successful DC 20 Strength check. This action reveals a rusted but functional iron lock mechanism. A DC 22 Open Lock check is required to unlock the door, unless the PCs have acquired its key from Room C38. The PC opening this door must succeed at a DC 20 Dexterity check. Failing this check results in the door falling off its hinges, which are completely eaten by rust.

Inside this large and shadowy chamber is an insect-like creature with four squat legs, long antennae, and a squat body protected by an incongruous hide. The walls of this chamber are made out of stone, and like most of the dungeon seem to have been carved out from the sheer bedrock. These walls, however, have turned into a deep rust-colored shade, as if every ounce of metal within them had rusted.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A Large rust monster (hp 101) is locked in this Room. The creature has been feeding on the tiny residues of iron found within the walls of its prison. It is maddened and hateful, standing ready to charge anyone fool enough to unlock its cell.

While the Room itself is not haunted, remaining in it for more than 24 hours can have damaging effects. Soft, almost imperceptible echoes, bounce from the walls of the Room. As time goes on, these echoes become harder and harder to block out, until the creature inside begins to think the sounds are part of his psyche. Anyone failing a Willpower save (DC 15, +1 per previous save) suffers 1 point of permanent Wisdom damage, that takes twice as long to heal. This save must be made every two hours beyond the 24th.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4, Fearless, [Safe]

Tactics: The rust monster is mindless. It has been trapped in the cell too long. It attacks the nearest PC in metal armor and fights ferociously. It continues to attack the PC until his armor is beyond repair, then targets weapons, finally moving on to the next PC. While rust monsters themselves do not normally act like trapped raccoons, this one has suffered too much trauma from being locked up so long.

Treasure: Anything of value is now a slag of rust, although there is a masterwork cudgel on the floor, in the corner. Allow the PCs to dig through the slag all they like, however.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one rust monster. To decrease the challenge, have the rust monster wounded (–30 hit points).

✦ Rust Monster: CR 6; Large aberration; HD 14d8+52; hp 101; Init +7; Spd 40 ft.; AC 19, touch 11, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +10; Grp +17; Atk +14 melee (rust, antennae touch); Full Atk +14 melee (rust, antennae touch) and +4 melee (1d4+2, bite); SA Rust; SQ Darkvision, scent; AL N; SV Fort +7, Ref +6, Will +5; Str 18, Dex 15, Con 17, Int 2, Wis 3*, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Listen +7, Spot +6; Alertness, Improved Initiative, Improved Natural Armor, Track, Weapon Focus (antennae).

Rust (Ex): A rust monster that makes a successful touch attack with its antennae causes the target metal to corrode, falling to pieces and becoming useless immediately. The touch can destroy up to a 10-foot cube of metal instantly. Magic armor and weapons, and other magic items made of metal, must succeed on a DC 24 Reflex save or be dissolved. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +4 racial bonus.

A metal weapon that deals damage to a rust monster corrodes immediately. Wooden, stone, and other nonmetallic weapons are unaffected.

C42. IMPRISONED OCHRE JELLY

The doors leading into this cell are locked. The key to unlock them can be found in Room C38. Otherwise, a DC 22 Open Lock check is enough to bypass the lock.

This chamber contains a mass of yellowish ooze. The strange entity is oddly shaped and, in the darkness, moves slowly. Its slick surface undulates, reflecting light against the black of the dungeon walls.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: An ochre jelly (hp 74) is trapped in this cell. The creature has been imprisoned here for decades, and not even the gnolls could say who is responsible for imprisoning it here. Its corrosive jelly eats away at the stonework, turning it black and grey.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Fearless, [Safe]

Tactics: As soon as anyone opens the door, the ochre jelly strikes the first target that gets in its way. In combat, it grapples and constricts its prey. If a PC is stunned, it moves on to the next, so it can escape without fear of reprisal. If the PCs leave it a way out, it moves into the corridor outside the door. It does not fight, unless it has to.

Treasure: Any treasure that may have existed is slag now.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, give the ochre jelly maximum hit points. To decrease the challenge, replace the ochre jelly with a gray ooze.

✦ Ochre Jelly: CR 5; Large ooze; HD 6d10+36; hp 74; Init –5; Spd 10 ft., climb 10 ft.; AC 4, touch 4, flat-footed 4; Base Atk +4; Grp +10; Atk +5 melee (2d4+3 plus 1d4 acid, slam); Full Atk +5 melee (2d4+3 plus 1d4 acid, slam); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Acid, constrict 2d4+3 plus 1d4 acid, improved grab; SQ Blindsight 60 ft., split, ooze traits; AL N; SV Fort +8, Ref –3, Will –3; Str 15, Dex 1, Con 22, Int —, Wis 1, Cha 1.

Skills and Feats: Climb +10.

Acid (Ex): An ochre jelly secretes a digestive acid that dissolves only flesh. Any melee hit or constrict attack deals acid damage.

Constrict (Ex): An ochre jelly deals automatic slam and acid damage with a successful grapple check.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, an ochre jelly must hit with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Split (Ex): Slashing and piercing weapons and electricity attacks deal no damage to an ochre jelly. Instead the creature splits into two identical jellies, each with half of the original's current hit points (round down). A jelly with 10 hit points or less cannot be further split and dies if reduced to 0 hit points.

Skills: An ochre jelly has a +8 racial bonus on Climb checks and can always choose to take 10 on a Climb check, even if rushed or threatened.

C43 THROUGH C59. THE WIZARD'S DOMAIN

Following the brutal deaths of the knights and paladins of Merunda and the destruction of his former laboratory (see Rooms C20 and C21), the wizard Arum established a home for himself in this Section of the dungeon. The wizard is responsible for "accidental" liberation of the demon Falortuligo (Room C21). Though Arum left long ago, this Section is still considered his, as few creatures dare venture here and most inhabitants assume he is still around.

DMs wishing to complete the saga of Arum, can place his corpse in one of the Rooms where he committed suicide, somewhere in Region O — where he died trying to escape, or place a dread wraith, ghost, lich, or wight somewhere in this Region to represent his remorse and eternal damnation manifested into evil.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Roll for a Random Encounter once per hour.

1d20	Encounter
1	Half a dozen emaciated rats scurry across the floor before disappearing into a crack in the stone work.
2	A pile of dead goblins blocks the PCs path. Their blood is painted on the walls in a chaotic pattern.
3–13	Nothing
14	A patrol of five gnolls from the Gnashing Fang tribe ventured into this Section. These warriors are alert and ready to face anything crossing their path. They do not attack the PCs unless provoked, preferring to trade goods and information. This encounter happens only once.
15	A pair of gnoll rangers (2nd level) ventured into this Section. Looking to prove their worth, they are out for blood. This encounter happens only once. Ambush, Concealment.
	✦ Simple Pit Trap: CR 6; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 100 ft. deep (10d6, fall); Search DC 16; Disable Device DC 23.
18	The PCs stumble upon a trap.
	✦ Ice Storm Trap: CR 5; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (ice storm , 18th-level wizard, 3d6 bludgeoning damage and 2d6 cold damage to anyone within the area); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

- 19 The PCs stumble upon a crude trap.
- ◆ Razor-Wire across Hallway: CR 2; mechanical; location trigger; no reset; Atk +10 melee (3d6, wire); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); Search DC 22; Disable Device DC 22.
- 20 Nurganar (Room C9) searches for treasure. When encountered, he asks for a tribute — 100 gp from each PC. If the PCs pay up, Nurganar talks with them. Since he travels everywhere, he knows a about the Region.

C43. EMPTY STOREROOM

As the PCs approach this door, allow them each a DC 25 Listen check to hear moaning from inside the Room.

Most of the stone floor of this room is hidden under thick wooden crates. Though these crates are sound and their wood is mostly undamaged, many of them are opened and empty. The walls are blackened by age and magic. In the darkness of a nearby corner, the spiny silhouette of a beast hunkers behind a crate.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Like many Rooms in this Section, this area was once claimed as part of the Gnashing Fang Tribe's territory. Over the last decade, the tribe gradually relinquished control of this Section, which was once used to store goods. Now millipedes and other bugs hunt through the cracks of the stonework.

However, before the gnolls left, they mercilessly chained a howler (hp 28) to the wall, leaving it for dead. It has refused to go quietly and moans pitifully. However, the Room's magical nature absorbs a great deal of the sound and muffles it into white noise.

Encounter Condition: Cover, Echoes 5, Fearless

Tactics: Allow the howler a Listen check to notice the PCs enter the Room. If successful, it barks loudly, targeting everyone with its Wisdom draining howl. The howler cannot move, but pitifully yanks at its own chain in an attempt to free itself. It has no choice, but to fight to the death.

If the PCs try to befriend the creature rather than kill it, allow Handle Animal checks (in place of Diplomacy), but since the beast is an outsider they suffer -6 circumstance penalties.

Treasure: Though most of the crates are empty, some contain gear that could be helpful. The PCs find three undertwings, a flask of antitoxin, seven empty glass vials, a large clay jug, a bullseye lantern, three pints of oil, two rusty miner's picks, 200 ft. of hempen rope, and a heavy sledge.

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this trap, add two vargouille which torment the howler, but turn their attention to the PCs when the enter. To reduce the challenge, have the howler asleep when they arrive.

◆ Howler: CR 3; Large outsider (chaotic, evil, extraplanar); HD 6d8+12; hp 28; Init +7; ~~Spd 50 ft.~~; AC 17, touch 12, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +6; Grp +15; Atk +10 melee (2d8+5, bite); Full Atk +10 melee (2d8+5, bite) and +5 melee (1d6+2, 1d4 quills); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Quills, howl; SQ Darkvision 60 ft.; SV Fort +7, Ref +8, Will +7; Str 21, Dex 17, Con 15, Int 6, Wis 14, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Climb +14, Hide +8, Listen +13, Move Silently +12, Search +7, Spot +13, Survival +2 (+4 following tracks); Alertness, Combat Reflexes, Improved Initiative.

Quills (Ex): A howler's neck bristles with long quills. While biting, the creature thrashes about, striking with 1d4 of them. An opponent hit by a howler's quill attack must succeed on a DC 16 Reflex save or have the quill break off in his or her flesh. Lodged quills impose a -1 penalty on attacks, saves, and checks per quill. The save DC is Dexterity-based. A quill can be removed safely with a DC 20 Heal check; otherwise, removing a quill deals an extra 1d6 points of damage.

Howl (Ex): All beings other than outsiders that hear the creature's howling for an hour or longer are subject to its effect, though it does not help the howler in combat. Anyone within hearing range of a howler for a full hour must succeed on a DC 12 Will save or take 1 point of Wisdom damage. The save DC is Charisma-based. The save must be repeated for each hour of exposure. This is a sonic mind-affecting effect.

Carrying Capacity: A light load for a howler is up to 460 pounds; a medium load, 461–920 pounds; and a heavy load, 921–1,380 pounds. A howler can drag 6,900 pounds.

C44. MODIFIED CHAMBER

This oddly shaped chamber is vacant. The walls here are smooth and undamaged. A closer look at the floor reveals that its surface is spotless, save for a narrow space, some 10-ft. square, linking the only door with the southern wall. The skeletal remains of two goblins and one gnoll rest in one corner.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was once a tiny cell, but the wizard Arum changed the layout with powerful magic after settling in. Though no one knows what he intended, those with expertise with stone or masonry, as well as those accustomed to the geography of the dungeon, can tell that something is not quite right with the walls of this Room.

Aside from the 10 ft. wide portion of the south wall directly in front of the doorway and a narrow frame surrounding the door on the north wall, the walls of this Room have a different texture than the other walls in the dungeon. Though most of the walls in this region have the same stone surface, these are smoother, paler, and (most importantly) show no sign of wear. A successful DC 16 Knowledge (architecture and engineering) or Profession (mason) check confirms that the stone used here is not only different, but also that it is strange to find it in the dungeon. A successful DC 22 Spellcraft check reveals the entire Room was shaped with magic.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 1, Hallowed 1, [Positive Energy], Safe
Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Buried within the walls are several wands of deeper slumber, that Arum built into this chamber. The wands were corrupted by the chaotic magic of the Region, and constantly target the occupants with a desire for restful sleep. The walls radiate Strong abjuration and enchantment.

PCs spending more than 2 hours in this Room, feel a calming peace come over them. The energy is soothing and beckons the PCs to stay a while. After 5 hours however, they lose the will to leave. PCs trying to leave, must succeed at DC 16 Willpower saves, or rest in a quiet corner for another 8 hours. This rest is very good for the PC, but is hard to resist. While he heals at twice the normal rate in this Room, a DC 16 Willpower save is required every morning to summon the will to leave.

The key to escaping this perpetual trap is for PCs that CAN leave, to either carry out the ones who won't leave or sleep in another Room, until the "trapped" PCs gain the will to escape.

PCs sleeping in the hall (waiting for their comrades) are subject to Random Encounters (once every two hours), while the occupants of the Room are not.

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the slumber take effect in 2 hours rather than 5 hours. To decrease the challenge, the PCs only need to sleep on day here and can leave the next day.

C45. FALSE TREASURE ROOM

The floor of this small room is filled with gold pieces, though these fail to hide the dusty floor beneath. In the center of the chamber is a simple stone altar upon which a long double-bladed sword lies. The sword is fashioned from a silver alloy that shines brilliantly when light is cast upon it.

C

147

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was converted into a false treasure chamber by the wizard Arum. A successful DC 23 Open Lock check is required to unlock the only door leading into this Room, and the key that once served that purpose was destroyed long ago.

Anyone touching the sword or the altar triggers the trap, which was created by Arum years ago.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The longsword is endowed with a permanent magic aura, making it appear as a +3 vorpal longsword (emanating Strong necromancy and transmutation). In truth, it's a -2 cursed longsword. The gold scattered upon the floor is real, though, and totals 327 gp.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the magic missile trap with a symbol of fear trap. To decrease the challenge, the magic missile trap triggers once.

C46. TRAPPED DOORWAYS

The corridor leading south ends in a strange intersection. Upon the eastern wall is a wide doorway opening into a dark room. To the west and south, short hallways lead to closed doors, each with a locking mechanism set above their knob.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The two doors on the southern end of this corridor are trapped. The first of these doors is real, but the second is fake. It is stuck inside the stone wall and cannot be opened by any means. Both of these doors have a complex locking mechanism set upon them. A successful DC 26 Open Lock check is required to unlock each of them.

The first door is rigged with a crushing despair trap, which is triggered as soon as any creature passes through the doorway.

♣ Crushing Despair Trap: CR 5; magic device; location trigger (doorway); automatic reset; spell effect (crushing despair, 18th-level wizard, save DC 18 Will save negates); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

The second door, which is impossible to open — though its lock can be picked normally — is trapped as well and triggers when anyone touches it.

Though no creatures live in this Room, the vargouilles in Room C47 are alerted when the trap is sprung.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air, {Smoke}

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add cloudkill to the crushing despair trap and have the vargouilles (Room C47) ambush the PCs as they exit. To decrease the challenge, remove the acid fog trap.

C47. ROGUE VARGOUILLES

Both doorways leading into this chamber are wide open. Though these once held doors, they were taken out long ago. A closer inspection of these archways reveals the rusted detritus of strong iron hinges.

If the PCs fought the chained howler (Room C43), the vargouilles cannot be surprised.

Beyond the empty archway is an even wider a chamber. The room is dark and an undisturbed blanket of gray dust covers the floor. The stone floor is scuffed and marked under the dust, suggesting that traffic once coursed through here.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Four vargouilles (hp 8, 7, 6, 5) hide in this chamber. These creatures recently ventured into the wizard's domain and decided to turn this Room into their new home. They are content to remain in the darkness, but attack anyone entering what they now consider their lair.

If the PCs use a light source, the vargouilles automatically notice them. Otherwise, allow the vargouilles the appropriate Listen and Spot checks. They remain hidden, waiting for the PCs to enter. If it takes more than 10 rounds for the PCs to reach their lair after they were spotted, the vargouilles come after them instead.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Concealment, Fear 14, Fearless, Unhallowed 2

Tactics: The vargouilles use shriek as soon as they reveal themselves (or the moment they are spotted). They close in melee, biting their foes. Though they do not necessarily fight in unison, these creatures are savage and fight to the death. They target the weakest opponents first, and do not hesitate to attack the wounded.

Because vargouille have so few hit points, unless they can surprise the PCs, this will be a short battle. The key to making this an effective encounter is for the howler in Room C43 to reduce the PC's Wisdom before hearing the vargouilles shriek (thus having a lower resistance to it), which also alerts the vargouilles of trouble.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 3 Hit Dice to each vargouille. To decrease the challenge, remove one vargouille.

♣ Vargouille: CR 2; Small outsider (evil, extraplanar); HD 1d8+1; hp 8, 7, 6, 5; Init +1; Spd Fly 30 ft. (good); AC 12, touch 11, flat-footed 11; Base Atk +1; Grp -3; Atk +3 melee (1d4 plus poison, bite); Full Atk +3 melee (1d4 plus poison, bite); SA Shriek, kiss, poison; SQ Darkvision 60 ft.; AL NE; SV Fort +3, Ref +3, Will +3; Str 10, Dex 13, Con 12, Int 5, Wis 12, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Hide +9, Intimidate +3, Listen +5, Move Silently +5, Spot +5; Weapon Finesse.

Shriek (Su): Instead of biting, a vargouille can open its distended mouth and let out a terrible shriek. Those within 60 ft. (except other vargouilles) who hear the shriek and can clearly see the creature must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or be paralyzed with fear for 2d4 rounds or until the monster attacks them, goes out of range, or leaves their sight. A paralyzed creature is susceptible to the vargouille's kiss (see below). A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same vargouille's shriek for 24 hours. The shriek is a mind-affecting fear effect. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Kiss (Su): A vargouille can kiss a paralyzed target with a successful melee touch attack. An affected opponent must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or begin a terrible transformation that turns the creature into a vargouille within 24 hours (and often much sooner; roll 1d6 separately for each phase of the transformation).

First, over a period of 1d6 hours, all the victim's hair falls out. Within another 1d6 hours thereafter, the ears grow into leathery wings, tentacles sprout on the chin and scalp, and the teeth sharpen into fangs. During the next 1d6 hours, the victim takes Intelligence drain and Charisma drain equal to 1 point per hour (to a minimum of 3). The transformation is complete 1d6 hours later, when the head breaks free of the body (which promptly dies) and becomes a vargouille. This transformation is interrupted by sunlight, and even a daylight spell can delay death, but to reverse the transformation requires remove disease. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +4 racial bonus.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 12 or be unable to heal the vargouille's bite damage naturally or magically. A neutralize poison or heal spell removes the effect, while delay poison allows magical healing. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

C48. FORMER GREAT HALL

Torches set amidst heavy bronze sconces in the walls are ablaze, their light revealing a massive stone table that dominates the center of this large hall. Broken wooden stools and a rotten tapestry, which is now piled in a corner of the room, complete the collection of furniture, which is covered with dust. Three corridors lead into this place, but the one opening in the middle of the eastern wall is blocked.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The Gnashing Fang Tribe used this Room as a meeting hall. Though they have long abandoned the place, it remains unchanged.

This great hall is empty and has not been used in years. Only the vargouilles in Room C47 passed through it in recent months. The stone table in the center of the place is solid and its surface is scarred with various claw marks. These were designed by the gnolls that once lived here, but mean nothing special.

The corridor leading east ends abruptly. When Arum defeated the hill giant in Room C97, he created a permanent stone wall here to block the access. A successful DC 25 Spellcraft check made here reveals that this portion of the wall is indeed a wall of stone. It is impossible to dig through this wall.

There is a barely noticeable irregularity in the center of the western wall. PCs succeeding at a DC 28 Search check notices narrow grooves upon the stone surface, suggesting that a portion of the wall is actually a hidden panel. A close examination of this panel reveals a tiny hole in its center. The device is clearly some sort of keyhole. A successful DC 25 Open Lock check is enough to unlock the mechanism. As soon as this is done, the panel sinks into the floor, revealing Room C51 beyond. The secret door closes itself shut one minute after it was opened.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: PCs observing the degraded tapestry discern faded colors, but no particular image comes to mind based on the design. The item is worthless. The torches have continual flame cast on them.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

C49. FORMER BARRACK

Both doors to this Room are locked and require a successful DC 30 Open Lock check to open.

Every lights and dancing shadows project upon the walls, distracting you. The Room beyond the door is in disarray, as if ransacked. Shattered wooden bunk bed frames line the southern and eastern walls. Though no mattresses or bed sheets cover them, they could once sleep twelve, and if suitable bedding could be acquired, they could still be used.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room was once used to house warriors of the Gnashing Fang Tribe. Over the years, the tribe suffered great losses and abandoned the place. Before fleeing, they used this place to trap a feral ghou (hp 58) they were unable to kill. The beast has been captive for many months and seeks to destroy anyone who enters (including the PCs).

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Fearless, [Safe]

Tactics: The ghou is fearless and stronger than most of its kind. It waits above the door and descends on the last person to enter. The PCs need a DC 40 Spot check to notice it as they enter and gain a +5 circumstance bonus to the check only if they are looking straight up as they enter (the monster knows exactly where to hide in the room's shadows).

During the first round, the ghou takes full advantage of its abilities, attacking its victim with two claws, one bite, and its special rake attack. The ghou's claws are razor-sharp from many years of scratching and sharpening upon the dungeon walls, and its critical threat range is increased accordingly.

Once engaged, the ghou no longer uses its rake attack, but continues to pounce. When it drops a PC, it turns its attention to the next closest or fastest PC. Once all the PCs are down, it feeds upon one PC until he is dead and then flees deeper into the dungeon.

The ghou fights to the death. Assume it has a Initiative check of 22.

Treasure: A torch imbued with continual flame was left behind, perhaps to torment the nocturnal ghou. The torch was broken into many pieces, but the continual flame still casts light from a single 3-in. piece of wood. A successful DC 22 Search check reveals a gold earring (worth 25 gp) tucked between one of the bunks and the wall.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, allow the ghou to sneak attack the first PC for +3d6 damage or permanently bestow magic fang on its claws, making them +2 claws. In addition, at the end of the first round, have the PCs make DC 18 Will saves or become shaken. To decrease the challenge, have the ghou be surprised by the PCs.

✶ Feral Ghou: CR 6; Medium undead; HD 9d12; hp 58; Init +2; Spd 30 ft.; AC 14, touch 12, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +4; Grp +6; Atk +7 melee (1d6+2/19–20 plus paralysis, claw); Full Atk +7 melee (1d6+2/19–20 plus paralysis, 2 claws) and +5 melee (1d6+1 plus paralysis, bite); SA Ghou fever, paralysis, pounce, rake; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., undead traits, +2 turn resistance; AL CE; SV Fort +3, Ref +5, Will +8; Str 15, Dex 15, Con —, Int 13, Wis 14, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Balance +12, Climb +13, Hide +13, Jump +13, Move Silently +13, Spot +14; Multiattack, Improved Critical (claws), Improved Natural attack (claws), Weapon Focus (claws).

Ghou Fever (Su): Disease-bite. Fortitude DC 15, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d3 Con and 1d3 Dex. The save DC is Charisma-based. An afflicted humanoid who dies of ghou fever rises as a ghou at the next midnight. A humanoid who becomes a ghou in this way retains none of the abilities it possessed in life. It is not under the control of any other ghouls, but it hungers for the flesh of the living and behaves like a normal ghou in all respects. A humanoid of 4 Hit Dice or more rises as a ghou, not a ghou.

Paralysis (Ex): Those hit by a ghou's bite or claw attack must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 1d4+1 rounds. Elves have immunity to this paralysis. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Pounce (Ex): If a feral ghou charges a foe, it can make a full attack, including two rake attacks.

Rake (Ex): Attack bonus +7 melee, 1d8+3 damage.

C50. THE TOMB OF NARR'KRR

Both doors leading into this chamber were sealed with a thick wax, which was applied to the inside of the door frames long ago. Because of the wax, a successful DC 22 Strength check is required to open each door.

The doors opening into this chamber are extremely hard to push open, but once this is done a stench issues from within. Inside this large room is a simple wooden desk, a large stool, an iron chest, and a wide bed. Upon the bed is the source of the stench: A tall humanoid skeleton with bits of rotted flesh sticking to the yellowed bones. The corpse is dressed in rotten clothing, but a large gold torc hangs from a chain upon its neck.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Narr'krr, a powerful gnoll warrior, used this chamber as his private abode and office. Narr'krr suffered a crippling injury six years ago and shortly after his death, was laid to rest in this chamber, and both doors were sealed.

With a successful DC 18 Heal check or DC 15 Knowledge (nature) check, PCs observing the corpse can determine this creature was a particularly large gnoll.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Upon the desk are a handful of blank scroll pages, which are dried and yellowed but still usable, and an empty vial of ink. The chest here contains rotted clothing and a +1 handaxe. Lastly, Narr'krr spent his last few months studying some arcane notes and while he never understood them, he hid them away in a catch under the table. A successful DC 30 Search check reveals a small bone scroll case with an arcane scroll in it. The scroll contains the spells — gaseous form, illusiary script, suggestion, and water breathing.

PCs searching the body automatically find a gold torc set upon a heavy chain. The chain is made of tarnished bronze rings and worth a mere 3 gp. The surface of its crescent shape is engraved with multiple tribal designs. It is worth 250 gp to anyone, but twice as much to a gnoll. Members of the Howling Fang Tribe (that never ventured into the dungeon), and most Gnashing Fang gnolls would pay up to 1,000 gp for such a treasure, as it is an heirloom of their people.

If the PCs attempt a trade with Gahr'k (Room C37), an opposed Appraise or Diplomacy check is necessary to get both stone salves for the heirloom. He easily trades one for it.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

C51. WIZARD'S LABORATORY

To enter this Room, the PCs must find the secret panel in Room C48. This panel resets itself one minute after being opened. PCs caught on this side instantly notice the irregularity in the center of the eastern wall, provided they know where to look. From this side, a DC 20 Search check is enough to notice the narrow grooves upon the stone surface as well as the tiny keyhole in the middle of the panel. A successful DC 25 Open Lock check is still required to unlock the mechanism, but the proper key rests on the table in this chamber.

A low table lies in the middle of this chamber, which is illuminated by the flames of four torches, each set into wall sconces in the corner. Upon the table are a variety of clay flasks, glass vials, and pots, some of which containing liquids. Beside these is a minuscule silvery rod.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Shortly after the escape of the demon in (Room C21) and the terrible deaths of the knights of Merunda, Arum discovered this hidden chamber and built another laboratory here. Judging by the dust covering everything in this Room, it's clear it hasn't been used in some time.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The narrow rod upon the table is the key that unlocks the secret panel leading into this Room. The various flasks contain a potion of bear's endurance (3 doses), a potion of true strike (5 doses), a potion of endure element (fire) (2 doses), and one vial of antitoxin (1 dose). In addition to these items, there are seven empty glass vials, three clay jars, two small cooking pans made of blackened iron, an alembic and a host of crude alchemical tools. The four torches have continual flame cast on them.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

C52. WIZARD'S STUDY

Like the laboratory, the burning flames of torches set into each corner illuminate this room. A comfortable-looking chair rests at the foot of the southern wall, facing the chamber's only door. Beside the chair is a small wooden table, on which is placed a thick leather-bound volume, two vials of black ink, and an inkpen.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Arum used this chamber to meditate and conduct magical research. Like most Rooms in this part of the dungeon, the furniture in is blanketed with dust. A closer look suggests that no creature has entered this place in years.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The most significant treasure in this chamber an unmarked journal. Written in the Draconic (the first half) and scrawled in Common (the second half), the journal reveals a portion of the wizard's account. While trying to gain insight into his future, Arum, a wizard, was contacted by a divine entity known as Merunda, a minor goddess of the oceans, travel, and vigilance. The deity told him to come to the dungeon prison and wait for others to arrive. Shortly after Arum arrived, he performed experiments to discover why extraplanar travel was impossible here. After successfully opening up a tiny extraplanar rift, an angel confronted him (in his mind) forbidding him from ever attempting such an experiment again. Arum goes on to explain that the angel was imprisoned with a powerful demon in this Region, and that it would not allow anyone from releasing the fiend. The journal ends shortly after the arrival of three paladins of the deity named Merunda.

After several blank pages, the writing continues, only the handwriting is more chaotic and the verbiage more difficult to decipher. PCs succeeding at a DC 25 Decipher Script check can make out the following information.

Arum (now referring to himself in the third person) communicated with what he believed was an angel trapped within the dungeon to learn how to make his forge more efficient. Following the angel's advice, the wizard placed powerful wards to reflect the heat generated by his forge back to it. What the wizard had not realized, however, was that the wards he placed upon the wall would facilitate Ash's freedom. And that it was indeed the cunning demon that had communicated with him — not an angel. The details of the account are vague, but the text is filled with remorse, as the narrator blames himself for Ash's escape, which ultimately led to the Paladins' fall.

The two vials contain dried and useable ink, but the inkpen is still in good shape. The four torches have continual flame cast on them.

C53. ARUM'S PRIVATE SANCTUM

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This chamber was Arum's private bedroom. When the wizard left the dungeon, he abandoned some of his personal effects behind, but did not deactivate the trap he placed here. Judging by the dust covering everything in this Room, it is clear that no one has visited in a long time.

The doorway leading to Arum's chamber is rigged with a magical trap (something Arum doesn't even remember doing). Anyone entering the Room must make a DC 19 Will Save or lose 6 points of Wisdom from the bestow curse trap. The trap automatically resets after 6 rounds. It can affect the same person more than once. However, a PC's Wisdom score cannot be lowered below 1 by this device.

♣ Bestow Curse Trap: CR 5; magic device; location trigger; automatic reset (6 rounds); spell effect (bestow curse, 15th-level wizard, -6 Wisdom, DC 19 Will save negates); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 5, Haunted

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The chest at the foot of the bed is locked and requires a DC 30 Open Lock check to open. It contains two blank spellbooks, three sets of wizard's robes in various shades of blue, and six oil flasks. The lantern upon the table is still in good shape. Copper and silver coins with the faces melted off are scattered along the bottom of the chest.

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the bestow curse trap drain 6 points of Intelligence (or Dexterity) as well as Wisdom. To decrease the challenge, replace the bestow curse trap with a burning hands trap.

C54. GHASTLY GUARD POST

Half a dozen carcasses lie in the middle of this dark room. A closer look at the corpses indicates these warriors died years ago in brutal combat. The weapons they wielded remains with them.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This chamber was once a guard post used by the members of the Gnashing Fang Tribe. The corpses here are six gnolls from the Gnashing Fang Tribe. These creatures died at the hands of a powerful hill giant that ventured into this Section. The tribe abandoned this Room shortly after this battle, leaving the dead behind.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Visions 5

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: PCs searching the corpses find three rusty greataxes, two great clubs, a morningstar, and four large steel shields. One of these shields is a masterwork item. The gnolls also carry a total of 21 gp worth of semiprecious gemstones and coins.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

C55. RIGGED FALSE DOOR

Four doors open into this dark intersection. Though the three doors set amidst the three different eastern walls do not seem to lock, a black iron lock is set in the one at the end of the western corridor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The door at the end of the western corridor is false. It is set in the stone of the wall and cannot be opened, but it nevertheless contains a complex locking mechanism.

The western door is also trapped. It was designed to fool the inhabitants into believing that some powerful creature was imprisoned on the other side. A successful DC 25 Open Lock check is enough to unlock the mechanism upon the door, but it can unfortunately not be opened.

Anyone touching the door or lock also triggers its magical trap.

♦ Cloudkill Trap: CR 6; magic device; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (cloudkill, 18th-level wizard, save DC 19); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a freezing sphere to the cloudkill trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the cloudkill trap with a slow trap; its effect lasts 1 day.

C56. FLOODING ROOM

The floor of this intersecting corridor is surprisingly clean, but there is a layer of green moss covering the walls, which forms an almost straight line around the room some three feet from the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This intersection is rigged with a potent flooding Room trap. Unfortunately, the powerful earthquakes that modified parts of the dungeon also damaged this device.

Four rounds after the PCs enter this Room, the doors shut tightly and loud clicking sounds are heard as they are locked into place. Water then pours from minuscule cracks upon the floor, forming a pool in the Room. The water rises at a rate of 1 ft. per round, but fortunately for travelers, the trap is not as effective as it once was and the water stops rising after three rounds (at the level were the moss can be seen). The sound of running water continues to be heard until 10 rounds elapse. At the end of this period, everything is quiet for 15 minutes before the water level drops. 10 additional rounds later, the water dissipates and the doors instantly unlock themselves.

♦ Flooding Room Trap: CR 1; mechanical; proximity trigger; automatic reset; no attack roll necessary (if the trap was working properly, the Room would flood in 10 rounds); Search DC 35; Disable Device DC 32.

PCs unlocking any of the doors must succeed at a DC 30 Open Lock check or remain trapped inside the Room. Disarming the trap requires a DC 32 Disable Device check, which prevents the doors from shutting off on their own as well as preventing water from pouring into the corridor.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 6, Flooded

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

C57. HAZARDOUS TUNNEL

A narrow tunnel was dug from the bedrock of the dungeon, connecting two small chambers together. The uneven corridor and the rooms it connects are filled with a multitude of stone debris and it is clear many stone boulders tumbled from the walls and ceiling.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Demons imprisoned in the dungeon dug a tunnel linking both ends of this Room, which were once separate. The demons eventually escaped when the geography of the dungeon changed, centuries ago. Now, this Room is a hazardous place and the ceiling threatens to collapse.

PCs examining this Room notice the precarious state of the place. A successful DC 15 Knowledge (architecture and engineering) or Profession (mason) check confirms that journeying through this place is dangerous and might result in an avalanche.

PCs moving through this Room must do so carefully. They must succeed at a DC 15 Dexterity check to avoid a cave-in. Each PC failing this check causes several large blocks of stone to fall to the ground, dealing 6d6 points of crush damage to everyone in the Room. This damage is cumulative, so anyone else failing the check adds another 3d6 points of crush damage. PCs succeeding at a DC 18 Reflex save cut the damage in half.

Encounter Condition: Tremors 18

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, double the damage caused by the cave-in. To decrease the challenge, no extra damage is suffered if more than one PC fails his Dexterity check.

C58. SACKED BED CHAMBER

This room is filled with debris. There are many broken wooden poles and planks, the remnants of a bed as well and the broken remains of what was a small cabinet. The wooden pieces are scattered upon the room, and it is obvious that someone — or something — destroyed everything here.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This chamber once housed the only healer of the Gnashing Fang Tribe. This wise old gnoll died long ago, however, and his bedroom was sacked. PCs looking at the debris also find several strips of rotted cotton as well as the dusty remains of dried herbs. A successful DC 15 Heal check made here confirms that these items were once part of a large healer's kit.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A successful DC 23 Search check through the debris here reveals a vial containing three applications of universal solvent and a potion of cure critical wounds (2 doses).

EL: N/A

C59. HALL OF MIRAGES

This room is unlike anything encountered in the region. The walls are made out of dark brown wooden logs and reminiscent of the makings of a comfortable log cabin. Upon the southern wall is a thick frame made out of red bricks to create a hearth. The flames burn within the hearth, raising the temperature of the room to a comfortable level. There are tables in this room, as well as stools and the trophies of various hunting trips hanging on the walls.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Arum set a powerful illusion into this hall, as well as a lethal trap. This great chamber is reminiscent of an tavern, without the bar and barkeep. Arum placed a powerful illusion here, and a DC 21 Will save (disbelief) reveals that this Room is, like most in the dungeon, cut from stone. Those who fail, believe it to be a tavern, complete with darts, drinks, kegs, and the like. The Room is totally empty, and the stone floor is cloaked in dust. PCs walking 10 ft. or more release a magical trap, which affects everyone one round later.

• Phantasmal Killer Trap: CR 5; magic device; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (phantasmal killer, 15th-level wizard, save DC 18); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30. This device is actually a series of phantasmal killer traps. Each of these traps affect a different creature in the Room.

C60 THROUGH C68. PATH OF THE RIGHTEOUS

This Section was originally designed as a deadly path preventing demonic and devilish creatures from venturing too far. Though the angel and archon wardens of the Region could safely walk from Rooms C60 through Room C68, and even used some of these chambers to rest, non-lawful good creatures found it more difficult to make the journey.

When Arum discovered this area, he essentially kept it as it was. However, he used Room C64 to honor the brave men and women who sacrificed their lives in the service of their god and who died fighting the most powerful demon of the dungeon. Arum's testimony of the paladin's battle is engraved upon the walls of this chamber in maddened Common, Draconic and Abyssal.

PCs notice that the stone surface of the walls, floor, and ceiling is whiter in Rooms C61 through C67. In addition, the material from which they had been hewn is different than in other parts of the vast complex and no dust has accumulated anywhere. Lastly, the spotless white stone surfaces of these halls are illuminated by an unknown light source, as if under the permanent effect of daylight.

C60. SECRET ENTRANCE

The door leading to Room C61 is actually a secret stone panel that is extremely hard to notice. The secret panel upon the eastern wall is a 10-ft.-by-10-ft. section of stone that sinks into the floor when opened. The secret door opens instantly if a PC with the Mark of the Righteous

(see Room C21 and C103) walks within 5 ft. of it, revealing the bright light on the other side. The panel remains open for 1 minute before rising back into place. A PC with the Mark of the Righteous caught on the other side of this doorway needs only to touch the secret wall panel to open it.

The corridor widens here, but leads simply to a bare wall. Like many places in this region, a thin gray dust covers the floor. This pale cloak is undisturbed and even, suggesting that no one has ventured into this hallway for years.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: If no one has the Mark of the Righteous, the PCs cannot gain access to this chamber — and thus they cannot reach the eastern Rooms of this Region. Most importantly, the special key in Room C103 is unavailable to them. If the PCs never met Zrino (Room C21), or if they refused the Mark of the Righteous, Zrino arrives, offering the Mark.

If the PCs attacked the lantern archon, however, he is not here.

C61. GOLDEN WEAPON RACK

The western wall of this chamber contains an empty weapon rack. The structure of this item is composed of four long bars that curve slightly. Each of these bars is made of pure gold decorated with a feather pattern. The golden feathers are linked to one another and form an intricate design. Upon the northern door, written in golden Celestial runes are the words: "Leave all weapons behind."

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was designed so anyone entering Room C62 would do so unharmed. The weapon rack is enchanted and all those leaving their arms behind find the journey through Rooms C67 and beyond more pleasant than it has been. The rack is also the key to unlock the door leading to Room C62. Once a weapon is placed, it cannot be removed from the rack, but an exact duplicate awaits in Room C67. If the PC returns to this Room, the weapon is gone (unless the weapon was placed again in Room C67).

A PC with the Mark of the Righteous (see Room C21 and C103) walking within 5 ft. of the doorway is instantly aware of its existence. He also knows how to open it by simply touching the hidden panel. Only those with the Mark of the Righteous can open it in this fashion, however. When opened, the stone panel sinks to the floor.

The secret panel upon the eastern wall of this chamber is 5-ft.-by-5-ft. It is made from the same white stone as the walls of the Room from this side, but on the other the surface is as ordinary as that of the dark corridor leading to Room C95. Like the secret doorway in Room C60, this panel sinks into the floor when opened. The panel remains sunk inside the floor for 1 full minute before rising back into place. PCs without the Mark of the Righteous cannot open this door.

The door upon the north wall is locked. There are no obvious locking mechanisms and it cannot be unlocked with normal means. The only way to unlock this door and gain access to Room C62 is by placing weapons into the golden rack upon the western wall. A minimum of 1 weapon per PC must be placed in the rack. Once this is done, the weapons disappear and the door opens by itself, allowing the PCs access to Room C62.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 4

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The weapons rack is made out of gold and is of significant value (2,000 gp or more). It is, however, bolted to the wall and magically endowed. PCs may pull the rack out from the wall with a successful DC 40 Strength check, but doing so not only cancels its enchantment but also ruins the item, which crumbles into a fine black dust. Destroying the rack before unlocking the door prevents access to Room C62 permanently.

C62. ANTECHAMBER OF LAW

This square room is empty, but upon the perfectly smooth white stone floor is an intricate pattern of an angel with outspread wings. The angelic figure sculpted upon the floor holds a wide shield with a scale and sword designed in its center.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A successful DC 15 Knowledge (religion) or DC 25 Knowledge (the planes) check made here reveals that the symbol on the shield represents Order. This symbol is used by angels and archons, as well as any religious order that upholds the law.

This Room contains a powerful device that affects all non-lawful beings. Any non-lawful creatures entering this Room must make a DC 30 Will save or be afflicted by nausea for 4d6 minutes. Lawful-aligned characters are not affected by this effect and unarmed non-lawful characters who placed all their weapons in the rack in Room C61 or Room C67 gain a +8 luck bonus to their save. Nauseated characters lose 1d6 temporary points of Constitution, can only one standard action each round, and suffer a -5 circumstance penalty to attack rolls, skill checks, and saves for the duration of the nausea.

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

C63. THE HALL OF LAW

Silken sheets are lined up all along the floor of this large hall. There are eight silk blankets on either side of the room, and all were placed near the eastern and western wall. Though they are no beds under them, the blankets look inviting. Their deep blue shades are in strong contrast to the clean white walls of the place.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was a meditation hall. The silken sheets are surprisingly comfortable and lying on them feels like lying on a soft feathery mattress. Anyone stealing the blankets receives a powerful electrical discharge upon exiting (through either door). The discharge deals 12d6 points of electrical damage, but a DC 30 Fortitude save reduces this damage by half.

Lawful PCs resting here rejuvenate lost hit points at a rate of 2 per hour. Lawful PCs resting for 8 hours also recuperate 1d3+1 lost points of one ability score damage they suffered. Upon awakening, they are blessed with divine favor for 24 hours. Non-lawful PCs do not benefit from these effects.

Chaotic PCs find no respite here. No matter how long they sleep, they gain none of the benefits normally bestowed by rest. Furthermore, upon entering this Room, chaotic-aligned PCs must make a DC 30 Will save or become immediately fatigued. Chaotic PCs who left all their weapons in the rack in Room C61 or C67 gain a +8 luck bonus to resist this effect.

To decrease the challenge, allow non-lawful PCs to rest normally in this Room and reduce the damage caused by the discharge to 8d6.

C64. AN ACCOUNT OF THE LAST BATTLE

Gouges scar the pure white walls of this hall. The markings are letters of exquisite quality carved into the walls. The writing is in the Celestial, but under each phrase are Common runes translating the language.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Arum used this Room to record the account of the brave, final stand of the Paladins of Merunda. The account was made by Arum, who used both languages to make sure any good soul traveling into this chamber would know the truth. PCs succeeding at a DC 30 Sense Motive check, can sense sadness in the words and the style of writing, as if the writer had given up hope.

PCs reading the inscriptions on the walls learn that Merunda, a minor goddess of the ocean, travel, and vigilance, summoned the last of her followers to the dungeon. Though at first they did not know why the deity had called them to the forgotten place, the servants of the goddess eventually learned they were expected to fight the great demon held within the confines of an important prison cell. They were also expected to die; all except Arum, whose signature can be found at the end of the account.

Moments before the tragic event, the paladins of Merunda were told the demon would escape its prison and that a mighty angel would slay the fiend, provided they sacrificed their lives to help it. When the time came and the demon broke through the wall of its prison cell, the servants of Merunda stood ready to face the creature. They sacrificed their lives to allow the angel to kill the demon. Only Arum survived the onslaught, and the wizard saw the angel dissolve into thin air once the demon was dead.

Though the narrator does not explain the events leading to the demon's escape, he does insist that the followers of Merunda allowed the fiend to be destroyed. And he wrote the account upon the walls to honor the memory, the valor, and the sacrifice of the deceased.

C65. HALL OF GOODNESS

Large sofas of deep blue velvet dominate the eastern and western walls of this large hall. In the center is a low blue marble table. The furniture is elegant and, like the white stone surfaces of the hall, surprisingly clean.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Good-aligned PCs entering this hall immediately feel relaxed. Those suffering from ailment such as from poison, disease, or a curse also feel that they could get better if they stay here a while longer. Every hour a good-aligned PC remains, he benefits from one of the following spell-like effects — neutralize poison, remove blindness/deafness, remove curse, remove disease, remove fear, and remove paralysis. Non-good PCs do not gain any of these benefits.

For evil characters this place is unnerving. Upon entering the hall, they must succeed at a DC 30 Will save or become blind and deaf. They also suffer from 2 negative levels for as long as they remain here. Remove blindness/deafness restores their sight and hearing. PCs who placed all their weapons in the rack in Room C61 or Room C67 gain a +8 luck bonus to the save.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a bestow curse (–6 Intelligence) effect to each evil PC traveling in this hall. To decrease the challenge, have evil PCs either blind or deaf rather than both, and reduce the save DC to 25.

C66. ANTECHAMBER OF GOODNESS

An intricate pattern is carved into the center of this room. The design represents a handsome male angel with powerful wings protruding from its back. The angel upon the floor has one hand above his head, palm outstretch in front of him. His other hand holds a delicate lyre at his side.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A successful DC 15 Knowledge (religion) or DC 20 Knowledge (the planes) check reveals the pose of the angel signifies peace. Angels, archons, and members of religious institutions frequently depict their greatest heroes in this position.

This Room is imbued with strong magic that affects all non-good creatures. Non-good PCs entering this Room must make a DC 30 Will save or become frightened for 4d6 minutes and lose 1d6 temporary points of Strength. Good characters are not affected and non-good characters who placed all their weapons in the rack in Room C61 or Room C67 gain a +8 luck bonus to their save.

C67. SILVERY WEAPON RACK

The southern door is locked, but has no locking mechanism upon it. It cannot be unlocked through normal means and the only way to open it is by placing weapons onto the silvery shelves. Each PC must place at least one weapon in the rack. Like Room C61, these weapons cannot be removed.

An empty silver weapon rack is encased upon the western wall of this otherwise empty room. The rack is made from seven curved bars embellished with leafy patterns of wonderful design. The words, "Leave all weapons behind" are written in silver Celestial runes in the center of the southern door.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Like Room C61, this chamber was designed to allow everyone entering Rooms C62 through C66 to leave their weapons behind. The weapon rack, although fashioned from a different material, functions as the one in Room C61. It is also the key to unlock the door leading to Room C66.

PCs who left their weapons behind in Room C61, and vice versa, find their weapons here. When non-evil PCs take their arms from the rack in Room C67, they feel the weapons are charged with potent energy. The weapons of lawful PCs become axiomatic, while those of good-aligned PCs become holy. The weapons of lawful good PCs gain both these powers. The duration of these enchantments lasts for 1 day plus a number of days equal to the character's Wisdom bonus (if any). Weapons may not be enhanced more than once per month, so PCs journeying through this Section several times within a short period may not benefit from this more than once, unless they place different weapons in the rack.

The magical rack does not enhance the weapons of non-lawful or non-good PCs. The weapons of evil PCs are imbued with powerful enchantments that bestow them a –2 luck penalty for a 1d4+1 days. An evil weapon placed in the rack is destroyed and never reappears.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 4

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The weapon rack in this Room is made out of the purest silver (it is worth approximately 2,000 gp). PCs can pull the rack from the wall with a successful DC 30 Strength check. Doing so, however, cancels its magical effect and ruins the item, which instantly crumbles into a fine black dust. C69 THROUGH C79. BLACK DRAGON TERRITORY

Before Arum fled the dungeon, his scattered mind created a number of monstrosities in this Section, bringing to life inanimate objects (like the furniture) and turning mindless mold into powerful, destructive oozes. Months and years passed, and Arum hid under the shadow of the dragon, before fleeing the Region in search of clarity and to ease his weary mind.

Over the years, this Section been home to a number of beasts, including hill giants, too stupid to stay away and a number of gnoll patrols who learned to leave well enough alone.

Now, uncontested, a mighty black dragon (named Nardarik) controls Rooms C69 through C79. This cunning dragon is aware of every secret door and hidden passage in its territory. Nardarik is smart and agile, and frequently patrols its lair in order to insure no other inhabitants enter it.

While journeying through Nardarik's territory, the PCs notice several scuff marks upon the floor and walls. Nardarik's claws and scaly body created these marks. They are especially obvious in narrow corridors and chambers.

When Nardarik encounters the PCs, he is Hostile. Unless they offer great treasures, the dragon attacks. He wants nothing to do with the PCs. However, if they buy their way out, Nardarik honors the bargain and shows them the way out.

C69. FIRST MARKED ROOM

The surface of the stone floor and walls here is heavily dented. A closer examination suggests that part of the rock face was burned. There are also several marks upon the floor, suggesting frequent traffic.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The walls and floor of this Room are damaged. Their stone surfaces are melted and uneven, as though a potent acid had eaten through the rock. Nardarik (Room C77) — the black dragon that makes his lair in this Region — is responsible for the markings.

There is nothing special in this Room aside from the acid-damaged floor and walls. A successful DC 16 Intelligence check made here confirms the walls and floor were damaged with a strong acid. Another check suggests the acid was thrown or projected against the stone surfaces, as though through a jet or thrown flask. A third check (DC 26) reveals the acid's source was monstrous and unnatural.

A successful DC 25 Search check uncovers a simple secret panel at the end of the western corridor. This panel is made from the same stone as the walls and is just as damaged. It veers precariously upon hidden hinges towards the inside of this Room when opened. A narrow groove into the stone surface allows PCs to pull it open, but a successful DC 15 Strength check is required.

C70. DEVASTATED CHAMBER

The three secret doors leading into this Room are simple stone panels that can be noticed with DC 20 Search checks. When pushed with a successful DC 15 Strength check, they veer open, revealing strong iron hinges hidden within the archway. PCs opening the panels from the outside must use a narrow groove that grips the panel (also requiring a Strength check).

The two secret doors in the corridor to the northwest are identical to those from this Room.

This room is filled with broken furniture, crushed boulders, and bone fragments. The detritus is piled at the foot of the western wall, and a simple looking door separates them in two mounds. Within the debris are bits of rusty iron, thorns and rotted clothing.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: When Nardarik took control of the Section, he fought powerful hill giant stragglers. The dragon wasted no time hunting down his enemies, and the giants made a brave, but futile last stand. Casting the room in darkness, the Nardarik killed each giant, slowly, in turn. Now, only their bony carcasses remain — along with the devastation wrought by Nardarik.

Searching the debris thoroughly takes 2 hours, but PCs succeeding at a DC 25 Search check can determine that the bone fragments from the detritus resulting from the decay of a number of giant-sized creatures. Portions of these bones are marked, twisted, or melted, as though acid had been thrown upon them. PCs studying the bones must succeed at a DC 20 Knowledge (nature) check to ascertain they come from seven different hill giants.

A DC 25 Spot check made here also reveals that behind the debris, portion of the western wall are scarred and damaged, as though by acid.

Encounter Condition: [Deep Darkness], Echoes 4, Fog

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: There is nothing of value in this hall, as Nardarik stripped the giant of any treasure they carried, including their weapons. PCs taking at least 20 minutes to search this Room uncover large pieces of wood, broken iron nails, the dried remains of pine branches, and large but rotted animal pelts. C72. HALL OF RUBBLE

A massive pile of stone rubble dominates this great hall. Boulders and chunks of broken rocks, all neatly put together in the center of the place, form a mound almost as tall as the fifty-ft. high ceiling.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Though the PCs can step into this Room, it is extremely difficult to move inside it, as the stone rubble is scattered everywhere. PCs staying close to the walls can make their way around the hall, circling the mound, the summit of which is roughly in the center of the Room. Once rubble has fallen, the PCs may move safely.

Encounter Condition: [Fog 10], Hazardous Footing 16, Tremors 19

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the PCs spend 2 hours searching through the rubble, they find several bone fragments (scarred by acid), a small pile of copper slag, and a bag of holding (although the sack looks like any other, only undamaged). It does not radiate magic.

After 3 hours, allow the PCs a DC 30 Search check to discover a +3 dragonbane dagger. Nardaruk could not destroy it, so he buried it under a massive pile of rubble.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

C73. TRAPPED HALLWAY

The secret door on the northern end of the corridor is easy to spot. The grooves surrounding the stone panel are larger than most and there are obvious markings (wide scuffs) on the floor around it, that disappear under the secret panel. A DC 15 Search check is enough to spot these details, and a subsequent DC 18 Search check is required to uncover the hidden button to the east of the panel. Pushing this button causes the panel to slide through the western wall, disappearing completely.

The westernmost part of the south wall of this 60-ft. high corridor is significantly damaged. The stone is broken and several piles of rubble lay scattered upon the floor, as though some powerful force had struck the wall. On the far end of the hallway, a single wooden lever juts from the stone.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: At the end of the hallway is a lever (that does nothing). It is designed to get someone to walk down the hallway. Two rounds after the secret door is opened, a potent magical trap is triggered. The magic affects the entire length of the corridor, from either side of the secret panel. PCs succeeding at a DC 26 Search check can find a tiny locking mechanism besides the secret doorway. This lock can be picked with a DC 28 Open Lock check to safely bypass the trap.

When triggered, the trap remains active for 7 rounds. On the first round, the reverse gravity sends all creatures and objects hurling toward the ceiling. Creatures take falling damage when they hit the 60 ft. high ceiling. When the spell ends, 7 rounds later, they fall to the ground as the reverse gravity effect ends, taking damage again.

♦ Reverse Gravity Trap: CR 8; magic device, touch trigger; automatic reset; lock bypass (Open Lock DC 28); spell effect (reverse gravity, 13th-level wizard) 6d6 fall [upon hitting the ceiling], then 6d6 fall [upon hitting the floor when the spell ends], DC 22 Reflex save avoids damage; Search DC 32, Disable Device DC 32.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the ceiling height to 100 ft. or add spikes to the ceiling. To decrease the challenge, reduce the ceiling height to 40 ft. and have the trap trigger 3 rounds later.

C74. MIMIC'S CHAMBER

This wide hall is vacant except for massive wooden shelves dominating the entire northern wall. The shelves are filled with vials, leather-bound books, yellowed scrolls, clay pots, and silvery urns.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A mimic (hp 148), fearful of Nardaruk, remains in the form of a large book shelf filled with trinkets to attract anyone foolish enough to enter. It lies in wait, ready to attack intruders. Having suffered years of torment at Nardaruk's hand, it is eager to vent its rage upon those who violate its lair. It attacks the PCs when someone steps within 5 ft. of it.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Fearless, Poor Footing 4

Tactics: The mimic exudes a thick adhesive, hoping to grapple its prey or catch their weapons. Though angry, this creature fight intelligently and when given the chance, it concentrates its attacks upon less armored opponents.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one mimic. To decrease the challenge, give the PCs an opportunity to spot the mimic.

♦ Mimic: CR 7; Huge aberration (shapechanger); HD 20d8+100; hp 190; Init +4; Spd 10 ft.; AC 16, touch 8, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +15; Grp +31; Atk +22 melee (2d8+8, slam); Full Atk +22 melee (2d8+8, 2 slams); Space/Reach 15 ft./15 ft.; SA Adhesive, crush; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., immunity to acid, mimic shape; AL NE; SV Fort +13, Ref +8, Will +15; Str 27, Dex 10, Con 21, Int 10, Wis 13, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Climb +15, Disguise +21, Listen +14, Spot +14; Alertness, Great Fortitude, Improved Initiative, Improved Natural Weapon (slam), Iron Will, Lightning Reflexes, Weapon Focus (slam).

Adhesive (Ex): A mimic exudes a thick slime that acts as a powerful adhesive, holding fast any creatures or items that touch it. An adhesive-covered mimic automatically grapples any creature it hits with its slam attack. Opponents so grappled cannot get free while the mimic is alive without removing the adhesive first.

A weapon that strikes an adhesive-coated mimic is stuck fast unless the wielder succeeds on a DC 25 Reflex save. A successful DC 25 Strength check is needed to pry it off.

Strong alcohol dissolves the adhesive, but the mimic still can grapple normally. A mimic can dissolve its adhesive at will, and the substance breaks down 5 rounds after the creature dies.

Crush (Ex): A mimic deals 2d6+8 points of damage with a successful grapple check.

Mimic Shape (Ex): A mimic can assume the general shape of any object that fills roughly 450 cubic ft. (7 ft. by 8 ft. by 8 ft.), such as a truly massive chest, a giant's bed, or an arch way. The creature cannot substantially alter its size, though. A mimic's body is hard and has a rough texture, no matter its appearance. Anyone who examines the mimic can detect the ruse with a successful Spot check opposed by the mimic's Disguise check. Of course, by this time it is generally far too late.

Skills: A mimic has a +8 racial bonus on Disguise checks.

C75. FALSE DRAGON'S HOARD

This cross-shaped hall is filled with coins of all shapes and sizes. Upon the mound of copper, gold, and silver are bronze candelabums, golden plates, silvery cutlery, ivory cups, and a multiple brightly-colored jewels.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Nardaruk is a covetous creature, with no understanding of his true lineage, his reptilian mind understands two things — "this is mine" and "how do I get more?" Therefore, in order to protect his valuables from gnolls, giants, and whatever beast was too stupid to stay away, he built a false treasure hoard.

The entire Room is blanketed with a permanent image (DC 20 Will save, disbelief) making visitors believe the Room holds impossible treasures. PCs rolling a natural '1' on their saves, see whatever they truly desire in the hoard (weapons, power, et al). In reality, the illusion hides a pit trap covering most of the floor. Only those who see through the illusion can search for the trap (otherwise all Search checks automatically fail). Anyone stepping on the floor triggers the mechanism, which opens a pit trap 2 rounds later.

♦ Wide-Mouth Pit Trap: CR 8; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; DC 22 Reflex save avoids; 100 ft. deep (10d6, fall); multiple targets (all targets within the Room); onset delay (2 rounds); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 17.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: There is nothing of value here as the treasure is just an illusion.
EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the depth of the wide-mouth pit trap to 150 ft. to the pit trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the depth to 60 ft.

C76. GELATINOUS CUBE GUARDIAN

This hallway is completely dark. Like many other rooms in this region, the walls are scarred with scuffs and narrow markings, as though something was dragged upon them.

There is a large cube made out of bluish translucent gelatin in the middle of this hallway. Inside this weird cube is a wooden chest reinforced with golden brackets. The chest appears undamaged.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A huge gelatinous cube (hp 216), born from the chaotic magic of Arum's fractured intellect, has grown to enormous strength. It guards the hallway running around the Nardarik's nests (Room C77), with a mimic (hp 52) — posing as a treasure chest — inside its oozing core. After all, the mimic's acid immunity renders it invulnerable to the cube's touch.

These creatures were already here when Nardarik took control of the Section and seeing no need to destroy them, the dragon kept them alive, to use as sentries. The gelatinous cube and mimic remain close to the door in the northern stretch of the corridor, but can appear anywhere in the Room the DM wishes.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, [Fear 14], Fearless

Tactics: Should the cube suffer 50 or more points of damage, the mimic springs to life and attacks the PCs, catching them flat-footed (even if they are already engaged in combat) unless they succeed at a DC 33 Spot check.

The cube attacks mindlessly, engulfing the first PC it encounters. If the cube is successful, the mimic attacks the PC from inside the cube, rather than waiting for an opening. PCs witnessing such an attack must succeed at a DC 14 Will save or become shaken for 2d4 rounds.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, two mimics inside the cube, each shaped like treasure chest or desks. To decrease the challenge, have the mimic surprise the PCs after the cube suffers 100 points of damage.

☛ Gelatinous Cube: CR 3; Huge ooze; HD 12d10+96; hp 216; Init -5; Spd 15 ft.; AC 3, touch 3, flat-footed 3; Base Atk +8; Grp +16; Atk +6 melee (1d6 plus 1d6 acid, slam); Full Atk +6 melee (1d6 plus 1d6 acid, slam); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft.; SA Acid, engulf, paralysis; SQ Blindsight 60 ft., immunity to electricity, ooze traits, transparent; AL N; SV Fort +17, Ref -1, Will -1; Str 10, Dex 1, Con 26, Int —, Wis 1, Cha 1.

Skills and Feats: —

Acid (Ex): A gelatinous cube's acid does not harm metal or stone.

Engulf (Ex): Although it moves slowly, a gelatinous cube can simply mow down Large or smaller creatures as a standard action. It cannot make a slam attack during a round in which it engulfs. The gelatinous cube merely has to move over the opponents, affecting as many as it can cover. Opponents can make opportunity attacks against the cube, but if they do so they are not entitled to a saving throw. Those who do not attempt attacks of opportunity must succeed on a DC 17 Reflex save or be engulfed; on a success, they are pushed back or aside (opponent's choice) as the cube moves forward. Engulfed creatures are subject to the cube's paralysis and acid, and are considered to be grappled and trapped within its body. The save DC is Strength-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Paralysis (Ex): A gelatinous cube secretes an anesthetizing slime. A target hit by a cube's melee or engulf attack must succeed on a DC 24 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 3d6 rounds. The cube can automatically engulf a paralyzed opponent. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Blindsight (Ex): An ooze's entire body is a primitive sensory organ that can ascertain prey by scent and vibration within 60 ft.

Transparent (Ex): Gelatinous cubes are hard to see, even under ideal conditions, and it takes a DC 15 Spot check to notice one. Creatures who fail to notice a cube and walk into it are automatically engulfed.

☛ Mimic: CR 4; Large aberration (shapechanger); HD 7d8+21; hp 52; Init +1; Spd 10 ft.; AC 15, touch 10, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +5; Grp +13; Atk +9 melee (1d8+4, slam); Full Atk 2 slams +9 melee (1d8+4); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Adhesive, crush; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., immunity to acid, mimic shape; AL N; SV Fort +5, Ref +5, Will +6; Str 19, Dex 12, Con 17, Int 10, Wis 13, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Climb +9, Disguise +13, Listen +8, Spot +8; Alertness, Lightning Reflexes, Weapon Focus (slam).

Adhesive (Ex): A mimic exudes a thick slime that acts as a powerful adhesive, holding fast any creatures or items that touch it. An adhesive-covered mimic automatically grapples any creature it hits with its slam attack. Opponents so grappled cannot get free while the mimic is alive without removing the adhesive first.

A weapon that strikes an adhesive-coated mimic is stuck fast unless the wielder succeeds on a DC 16 Reflex save. A successful DC 16 Strength check is needed to pry it off.

Strong alcohol dissolves the adhesive, but the mimic still can grapple normally. A mimic can dissolve its adhesive at will, and the substance breaks down 5 rounds after the creature dies.

Crush (Ex): A mimic deals 1d8+4 points of damage with a successful grapple check.

Mimic Shape (Ex): A mimic can assume the general shape of any object that fills roughly 150 cubic ft. (5 ft. by 5 ft. by 6 ft.), such as a massive chest, a stout bed, or a wide door frame. The creature cannot substantially alter its size, though. A mimic's body is hard and has a rough texture, no matter what its appearance. Anyone who examines the mimic can detect the ruse with a successful Spot check opposed by the mimic's Disguise check. Of course, by this time it is generally far too late.

Skills: A mimic has a +8 racial bonus on Disguise checks.

C77. NARDARIK'S NEST

If Nardarik hears the PCs coming (highly likely), the Room is already cast in darkness. Otherwise, read the following.

A great mound of copper, gold, and silver coins takes up most of the floor space of this vast chamber. Among the coins are several pieces of jewelry, such as necklaces, rings, and bracelets, as well as a handful of tapestries, goblets, and utensils. What truly catches the eye, however, is the large dragon sitting atop his treasure. The creature's scales are deep black, bearing several scars, and shaped like jagged diamonds. Fire burns within the pits of its eyes.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Nardarik (hp 110) lives here. Though he frequently patrols his own territory, it is found here most of the time. Like most of its peers, Nardarik is clever, cruel, and malevolent. It sees the PCs' presence in its private realm as an affront to its power and does not hesitate to attack anyone entering its nest.

In order to negotiate with Nardarik, the PCs must first be able to change its initial attitude through the use of Diplomacy or Bluff checks. Unless the PCs tempt Nardarik by promising great riches to the black dragon, they suffer from a -4 circumstance penalty to all Diplomacy checks made to change its attitude. If the PCs successfully change the dragon's mind, it listens to what they have to offer hoping to acquire treasure from them. If the PCs fail to pay at least 2,000 gp worth of treasure to Nardarik, combat ensues.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), [Deep Darkness], Fearless, Fog 10, Smoke

Tactics: In battle, Nardarik is merciless. If he hasn't already done so, he casts the room into darkness, unless the PCs surprise him in which case he starts fighting immediately. Before engaging in melee, he uses his line of acid breath (60 ft.), targeting the spellcasters. Due to his ferocious nature, he does not breathe acid as quickly as he can, repeating this action every 1d+1 rounds.

Once engaged in melee, Nardarik tears at the PCs with claw and bite attacks. If too many PCs surround him he tail slaps the largest, reducing his opponent's numbers before returning to his breath weapon and claw attacks.

Due the size of the Room, Nardarik keeps his distance when necessary and jumps about for a better position whenever possible. In the darkness, he attacks like a cat, attacking powerful PCs before slinking away to stalk them again.

If the PCs are too strong for Nardarik, he uses darkness and his powerful breath weapon to escape to Room C72.

Treasure: Nardarik's treasure hoard includes 8,500 gp worth of small gemstones, assorted coins, and various pieces of jewelry. In a locked (DC 40 Open Lock check) wooden chest are a number of unmarked vials. A potion of bless, a potion of cure moderate wounds (3 doses), and a small glass vial containing ungol dust can be found.

In another locked (DC 40 Open Lock check) chest — strapped closed with bands of cold iron — the PCs find one large delicate jade bowl of commanding water elementals, a scabbard of keen edges (that is stuck in longword size), a small lacquer box (wrapped in silk) containing brushes and marvelous pigments as well as three incense of meditation sticks (bound with twine), a dark blue ioun stone, a clear ioun stone, a plain-looking ring of evasion, a ring of wishes (with 0 wishes remaining), a minor ring of energy resistance (fire) (with a faceted fire opal set in a three-part crown), and an amulet [choker] of health (+2) that only fits Small or smaller creatures.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, give Nardarik maximum hit points for his size (hp 182). To decrease the challenge, allow the PCs two rounds before Nardarik notices them.

▲ Nardarik, Young Adult Black Dragon: CR 9; Large dragon (water); HD 16d12+48; hp 152, Init +4; Spd 60 ft., fly 150 ft. Skills and Feats: Hide +15, Intimidation +20, Listen +22, Move Silently +19, Search +20, Spot +22, Swim +22; Alertness, Flyby Attack, Improved Initiative, Improved Natural Attack (bite), Improved Natural Attack (claw), Multiattack

Blindsense (Ex): Dragons can pinpoint creatures within a distance of 60 ft. Opponents the dragon can't actually see still have total concealment against the dragon.

Breath Weapon (Su): Nardarik has one type of breath weapon, a 80 ft. line of acid, 10d4 acid damage Reflex save (DC 21) for half.

Frightful Presence (Ex): Nardarik can unsettle foes with his mere presence. The ability takes effect automatically whenever the dragon attacks, charges, or flies overhead. Creatures within a radius of 150 feet are subject to the effect if they have fewer HD than the dragon. A potentially affected creature that succeeds on a Will save (DC 19) remains immune to that dragon's frightful presence for 24 hours. On a failure, creatures with 4 or less HD become panicked for 4d6 rounds and those with 5 or more HD become shaken for 4d6 rounds. Dragons ignore the frightful presence of other dragons.

Keen Senses (Ex): A dragon sees four times as well as a human in shadowy illumination and twice as well in normal light. It also has darkvision out to 120 ft.

Water Breathing (Ex): Nardarik can breathe underwater indefinitely and can freely use its breath weapon, spells, and other abilities while submerged.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—darkness.

Sorcerer Spells (5/3, save DC 11 + spell level): 0—acid splash, arcane mark, detect magic, mage hand; 1st—shield, true strike.

C78. CONVERTED HALL

This oddly shaped hall was probably two rooms once, but there are now wide gapes in the east and south walls, which open into the second part of it. Though there is nothing special here, the walls and floor bear many scars. The horizontal scarring of the walls suggest that something was dragged up them, and it is obvious that the floor was scarred with claws or sharp tools.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This hall was once two separate chambers, but the doors — and indeed the entire doorways — that separated them were destroyed long ago. The oversized arch ways are scorched and a good portion of the stone walls surrounding them has melted under the effect of an acidic substance.

The secret door in the southernmost portion of the east wall is a simple stone panel that has seen much use in recent years. Because of this, it is easy to discern its discolored shade and the large marks around it. A successful DC 16 Search check is enough to notice it. When pushed, the panel opens into the narrow corridor and wide chamber beyond.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: After the PCs spend 30 minutes in this Room, roll for a Random Encounter. On a 6–14, a gray ooze or ochre jelly shuffles into the Room.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, a gray ooze is already here, dissolving the stone. To decrease the challenge, remove the possibility of a Random Encounter.

C79. GRAY OOZE PRISON

The narrow hallway opens into a wide room. This dark chamber is empty except for a puddle of water in the northeastern corner.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Nardarik keeps a gray ooze (hp 31) prisoner in this room. This creature unwittingly ventured into the black dragon's lair over a year ago and now Nardarik frequently visits the ooze to torment it. The ooze remains motionless and does not attack unless the PCs move within 5 ft., striking the closest target.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Cover

Tactics: The gray ooze does its best to conceal itself, hiding under cover when possible and generally avoiding outright confrontation. While mindless, months of torture have taught it to lie still and not attract unwanted attention.

If combat is inevitable, unarmored PCs are perfect targets, suffering the gray ooze's acidic touch.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one gray ooze. To decrease the challenge, have the ooze recently tortured by Nardarik (hp 20).

☛ Gray Ooze: CR 4; Medium ooze; HD 3d10+15; hp 31; Init –5; Spd 10 ft.; AC 5, touch 5, flat-footed 5; Base Atk +2; Grp +3; Atk +3 melee (1d6+1 plus 1d6 acid, slam); Full Atk +3 melee (1d6+1 plus 1d6 acid, slam); SA Acid, constrict 1d6+1 plus 1d6 acid, improved grab; SQ Blindsight 60 ft., immunity to cold and fire, ooze traits, transparent; AL N; SV Fort +6, Ref –4, Will –4; Str 12, Dex 1, Con 21, Int —, Wis 1, Cha 1.

Skills and Feats: —

Acid (Ex): A gray ooze secretes a digestive acid that quickly dissolves organic material and metal, but not stone. Any melee hit or constrict attack deals acid damage. Armor or clothing dissolves and becomes useless immediately unless it succeeds on a DC 16 Reflex save. A metal or wooden weapon that strikes a gray ooze also dissolves immediately unless it succeeds on a DC 16 Reflex save. The save DCs are Constitution-based.

The ooze's acidic touch deals 16 points of damage per round to wooden or metal objects, but the ooze must remain in contact with the object for 1 full round to deal this damage.

Constrict (Ex): A gray ooze deals automatic slam and acid damage with a successful grapple check. The opponent's clothing and armor take a –4 penalty on Reflex saves against the acid.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a gray ooze must hit with its slam attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Blindsight (Ex): An ooze's entire body is a primitive sensory organ that can ascertain prey by scent and vibration within 60 ft.

Transparent (Ex): A gray ooze is hard to identify, even under ideal conditions, and it takes a DC 15 Spot check to notice one. Creatures who fail to notice a gray ooze and walk into it are automatically hit with a melee attack for slam and acid damage.

C80 THROUGH C85. TRICKS AND TRAPS

Once serving as powerful prisons for demons and the like, these Rooms fell out of favor when the celestials were forced into Regions E and G. Each Room in this Section is trapped with powerful magic, capable of bringing the strongest PC to his knees. For thousands of years, these Rooms have stood as cells, holding pens, and "torture" chambers to remind evil of the price of disobedience.

Since the Section is devoid of inhabitants and filled with traps that discourage travel, Nardarik (Room C77) makes no challenge to annex this territory. Most inhabitants of the Region know about this Section and avoid it at all costs, leaving the dragon to focus his energies elsewhere.

The stone floor in this Section is covered with a thick layer of undisturbed dust, suggesting that nothing has entered here in some time.

There are no Random Encounters in this Section.

C80. THE WEARINESS OF THE TRAVELER

This room would be perfectly square if it were not for a thin wall separating it in two sections. Though this wall seems out of place, its surface is exactly as the other stone walls in the area. The only difference is that it is narrower than what would be expected.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is rigged with a potent magical device that causes fatigue to those journeying through it. Anyone traveling through this Room, in either direction, falls under its effect. Merely entering the Room through one door is not enough to trigger the enchantment, but PCs entering the Room from one door and exiting through the other instantly becomes fatigued. This effect takes place regardless of the amount of time spent inside the Room. There is no save and condition persists for 24 hours.

The Room radiates a faint necromantic aura.

Encounter Condition: [Fear 16], Haunted, Negative Energy

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add fear to the fatigue effect. To decrease the challenge, allow each PC a DC 16 Will save to avoid fatigue.

C81. THE BURDEN OF THE WEAK

The floor in this room is covered in thick dust and dirt. With the exception of the seven burning torches set upon the eastern wall, the place is completely empty. A beautiful sigil criss-crosses the stone pattern of the floor, forming an ellipse with intersecting circles.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is trapped with a permanent symbol of weakness that affects anyone who steps on or reads the symbol printed on the center of the floor.

If the symbol is touched or read, everyone in the Room must make a DC 22 Fortitude save or suffer 3d6 Strength damage. The symbol of weakness remains active for 3 hours once triggered. Anyone who exits the Room must save again upon re-entering the chamber and viewing the symbol. A PC whose Strength is reduced to 0 in this manner lies helpless until his Strength returns to at least 1 (at which point he can crawl out of the Room).

♦ Symbol of Weakness Trap: CR 8; magic device; touch/special trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (symbol of weakness, 18th-level wizard, DC 22 Will save negates); multiple targets (all creatures within 60 ft.); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32.

Encounter Condition: [Fear 18]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a symbol of pain to the symbol of weakness trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the symbol of weakness trap with a symbol of sleep trap.

C82. THE STAGGERING STRENGTH

The floor of this room is covered with dust, but this substance is darker than most of the dust blanketing the other chambers and hallways of this region.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: 1 round after the PCs enter this Room, a powerful gust of wind erupts from tiny cracks in the floor. The gust of wind affects everyone in the Room and sends poisonous ungol dust into the air. Living creatures inhaling the dust begin choking immediately, and must succeed at a DC 16 Will save or become panicked for 2d6 rounds in addition to any other effects.

♦ Gust of Wind and Ungol Dust Trap: CR 6; magic device and poison; location trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (gust of wind, 18th-level wizard, DC 18 Fortitude save negates) and poison (ungol dust, DC 15 Fortitude save resists, 1 Cha / 1d6 Cha +1 Cha drain); multiple targets (all creatures within the Room); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

Encounter Condition: [Drafty], [Fear 16], Stagnant Air

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add chain lightning to the gust of wind and ungol dust trap. To decrease the challenge, remove the ungol dust and instead have the PCs pelted with pebbles and debris (2d6 bludgeoning damage each).

C83. THE MIRROR OF TRUTH

This small room is empty except for a large mirror mounted on the diagonal northwest wall. The mirror is framed in an orange copper alloy that reflects light nicely. It is a large but otherwise simple piece of furniture.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This tiny chamber is actually a portal to Room C84. In order to pass through the secret door (or even discover it), the PCs must face the mirror in the northwest corner.

Anyone entering this Room must make a DC 17 Will save to resist the zone of truth coming from the mirror. Those standing directly in front of the mirror, so as to see their reflections, trigger a magic mouth. Everyone in the Room hears — "Shelter and comfort await friends who wish it. What is your name?" To everyone else, the mirror is empty, but to those who answer the mirror see through to the other side.

On the other side of the mirror is a lush, yet confined Room filled with two three-tiered bunk beds, a modest table, two chairs, and a wash-basin. The mirror is a doorway to Room C84.

C84. RESTFUL NIGHTMARE

A pair of three level bunk beds dominates this small room. The beds can easily accommodate six medium-sized creatures and thick sheets rest upon them. In addition to the bunks, there are two small chairs, an ivory washbasin, and a large wooden chest.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The basin in this Room is filled with cool fresh water. When water is taken out of it, the basin magically refills itself. Regardless of the quantity of liquid taken out of it, the basin constantly refills. The basin is mounted to the floor and cannot be moved or tipped over.

This Room was designed to attract demons to safety, instead targeting them with a powerful nightmare. Any PC trying to rest here is subjected to the nightmare.

◆ Nightmare Trap: CR 6; magic device; automatic reset; spell effect (nightmare, 18th-level wizard, DC 21 Will save negates); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30.

Those who uttered their true names in Room C83 receive personalized nightmares, based on events from their past. Those who lied (as demons are apt to, lest they give away their true name) suffer a -5 circumstance penalty to their Will save and see visions of a future that is horrific, unexplainable, and so abstract that the PC is left unnerved and shaken for 2d4 days after whether the save succeeds or not.

Encounter Condition: [Distracting Visions 4], [Haunted]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The wooden chest contains extra blankets and pillows for the six beds.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add phantasmal killer to the nightmare trap. To decrease the challenge, replace the nightmare trap with a crushing despair trap.

C85. ANGELIC STATUE

The door to this Room is locked. A DC 30 Open Lock check is required to open it.

A beautiful statue representing a large female humanoid with mighty wings issuing from her back stands in the middle of this room. Though the statue is cloaked with dust, it is clear her eyes are made of the purest emerald stones.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is anachronistic in relation to the rest of the Section. It looks and feels alien to anything else they've seen so far. Evil-aligned PCs must succeed at a DC 18 Will save or become shaken for 2d4 rounds after entering the Room. While this effect is not devastating, it is intimidating.

The statue in this Room is made of the same stone as the rest of the dungeon. Despite the obvious valueless nature of its material, it is a truly impressive work of art. The emeralds that make its eyes are priceless and foreign to this world. A successful DC 25 Appraise check confirms these gems are entirely unique and alien, fetching upwards of 10,000 gp each.

The PCs can remove the emeralds from the statue by prying them out with a successful DC 15 Strength check. Three rounds after the precious stones are taken out, they turn into a dull black shape and crumble to dust. Soon after, the real terror begins.

First, when the gems turn to dust, the bearer must succeed at a DC 20 Reflex save or swallow some of them dust, suffering 1 negative level for 1 week. Second, everyone in the Room suffers bane for 2d8 days (no saving throw). Third, a beastly howl fills the Room, chilling the PCs to the bone (teyebite). They are allowed a DC 21 Fort save to negate the effect. Fourth, a wave of exhaustion (no saving throw) strikes everyone in the Room, at which point the angelic statue (hp 70) animates and attacks the PCs.

Each trap effect triggers one after the other in successive rounds.

PCs who did not steal the emeralds are blessed when they leave the Room and may rest here as long as they like (so long as the emeralds are untouched).

Encounter Condition: [Fear 18], Fearless, Hallowed 5 or Unhallowed 5, Haunted or Safe, Negative Energy or Positive Energy

Tactics: If the PCs must fight the statue, it fights defensively, pushing the PCs out of the Room, if possible. If necessary, it strikes evil PCs first in an attempt to rid the Room of their foul corruption. Otherwise, it attacks whoever touched the emerald. It does not leave the confines of the Room and if everyone is pushed out, it closes and locks the door.

The statue automatically succeeds at any Will saves required and fights to the death.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 11

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a doom to the bane trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the duration of bane to 24 hours.

◆ Animated Celestial Angel Statue: CR 4; Large construct; HD 4d10+30; hp 70; Init +0; Spd 30 ft.; AC 14, touch 9, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +3; Grp +10; Atk +5 melee (1d8+4, slam); Full Atk +5 melee (1d8+4, slam) and +0 (1d6+2, 2 wing buffets); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft. Smite Evil (Su): Once per day, the statue can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD (+4) against an evil foe.

ROOMS C86 THROUGH C94. NARROW MAZE

A multitude of narrow corridors make up most of this Section. Because the outlying territory is so dangerous, inhabitants of the Region usually avoid this Section. Two years ago, a group of adventurers found their way into the dungeon and entered this Region, establishing a base of operations in Rooms C86 through C91. They passed away soon after. Signs of their passage can be found throughout these isolated chambers.

PCs venturing into the narrow hallways of this area must walk single file.

While Room C94 is technically part of Arnuk's (Room C96) Section, she avoids it and commands her sons do the same.

There are no Random Encounters in this Section.

C86. FORMER ADVENTURERS' CHAMBER

Though this small Room was originally designed to hold a prisoner, the lock was destroyed long ago.

The stench of decay prevails in this room and a glance inside instantly reveals the source of the foul smell. The body of a dwarf, curled up in the fetal position, lies in the southwest corner. Almost no meat remains upon the skeletal corpse, but the odor of rotted flesh lingers.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Long after its original captive was gone, the Room was used as a bed chamber. A dwarven male lies on a rotted blanket in this bed chamber, his cancerous form so diseased it doesn't even attract flies.

Anyone touching or examining the dwarf's body must succeed at a DC 18 Fortitude save or contract demon fever. Normally demon fever is spread through injury, but this strain is deadly even centuries after the demon's fled the dungeon.

♦ Demon Fever — Contact, Fortitude DC 18, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d6 Con [When damaged, character must succeed on another saving throw or 1 point of damage is permanent drain instead.]

Encounter Condition: Diseased (demon fever) 18, Stagnant Air
Tactics: N/A

Treasure: There are three old bedrolls in the corner, plus a diseased and rotted blanket on which the dwarf is sleeping. A successful DC 20 Search check reveals a leather scroll case and a small copper holy symbol (worth 5 gp) hidden in the closed skeletal fist of the dwarven corpse. The case contains three divine scrolls — calm emotion, freedom of movement, and protection from evil.

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add devil chills. To decrease the challenge, replace demon fever with mind fire.

C87. OLD HEARTH

A circle of blackened stone lies at the heart of this room, a small pile of gray ashes in its center. It is obvious that this place was used as a hearth where fire once burnt, but there is no trace of wood anywhere in the chamber.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The adventuring band who lived here used this chamber as a common hall.

Encounter Condition: Diseased (demon fever) 18

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A successful DC 15 Search check uncovers a half-burnt piece of parchment within the ashes. The last phrases of what must have been a longer paragraph remains intact: "No one knew why they were brought together in the bowels of this forgotten place, except that they would be needed to turn the tide at some forthcoming event. Yet the priests and paladins serving Merunda obeyed the will of their deity."

This parchment is part of Arum's notes and anyone reading "Arum's Journal" succeeding at a DC 15 Intelligence check notices that the writing on the parchment is identical to that of the wizard's journal in Room C52. This is another fragment of the accounts of the servants of Merunda who lost their lives fighting Ash (Room C21).

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

C88. ANCIENT STOREROOM

Five small crates and two large sacks crowd this chamber. Though the wood from the crates is rotted, some of the items they contain appear sound.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Before their demise, the adventurers dwelling here, stored extra gear in this Room.

The door on the west wall is hidden by an illusion, making it appear like the wall. Anyone touching the "door" must succeed at a DC 16 Will save to disbelieve the illusion. Failing this save means the PC is fooled by the illusion.

Those succeeding the save realize the stone wall is an illusion. The illusionary wall never disappears, but those making the save can open the door to Room C89. Due to the nature of the illusion, those who fail their save will never see it as anything but a wall.

Encounter Condition: Diseased (demon fever) 18

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The large sacks contain several long cords of rotted ropes, as well as torches, arrows, and bolts in similar states of decomposition. Within the crates, the PCs uncover the rusty end of a grappling hook

(with a rotted cord), a well-oiled tent in surprisingly good shape, a hooded lantern, seven oil flasks, flint and steel, and a rusted (but still useful) masterwork climber's kit.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

C89. FORMER TREASURE ROOM

In order to enter this Room, PCs must first bypass the illusory wall in Room C88.

The rotted remains of shelving line the walls of this small room. Some of the shelves have fallen atop others, crushing whatever items were displayed on them in their wake. Others remain in place, but it is obvious by the state of the apparatus that they are extremely fragile.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was once used to store the adventurers' most precious treasures. When the surviving members of the band abandoned their base of operations, they took most of what was valuable in this Room.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: There are several broken glass vials, clay pots, and wax candles lying among the debris of the shelves and at first glance there is nothing of value here. A successful DC 18 Search check uncovers an unbroken vial of holy water (3 doses) as well as a +1 defending battleaxe laying under the crushed shelves of the western wall. The sword's blade is decorated with thick dwarven runes.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

C90. FUNERAL CHAMBER

The only door leading to this chamber is locked but not trapped. A successful DC 18 Open Lock check is enough to unlock it.

Two stone altars are lined up on the eastern and western walls of this chamber and it is clear to anyone entering the place that something rests upon each. Closer inspection reveals two man-sized corpses wrapped in gauzy layers of yellowed wool.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Inside, the bony remains of two humans and their gear are discovered. Both were human males. Sigils were painted on the wool, but the paint has faded to red.

Anyone touching or examining the bodies must succeed at a DC 18 Fortitude save or contract demon fever.

♦ Demon Fever — Contact, Fortitude DC 18, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d6 Con [When damaged, character must succeed on another saving throw or 1 point of damage is permanent drain instead.]

Encounter Condition: Diseased (demon fever) 18

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: PCs searching the corpses find a masterwork battleaxe, a +2 throwing axe, a rusty breastplate, a pouch containing 71 gp worth of assorted coins, and a small chunk of amber (worth 15 gp).

Each of the items is also riddled with disease and the DM should determine if the PCs can leave without making several Fortitude saves.

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add devil chills. To decrease the challenge, replace demon fever with mind fire.

C91. EMPTY CELL

There is a lock upon the door, but it is busted and completely useless.

The door leading to this room has a barred window set into it, allowing everyone to gaze inside. The floor is cloaked in a thick blanket of undisturbed dust. A closer look reveals that the walls of this cell have turned into a dull brown shade, as though someone or something had painted them long ago.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This prison cell has not been used in centuries, but once contained a minor demon. A DC 18 Intelligence check made here confirms the walls were painted with blood. The substance dried long ago, but its dark shade can still be seen.

Anyone touching or examining the blood must succeed at a DC 22 Fortitude save or contract this powerful strain of demon fever.

♣ Demon Fever — Contact. Fortitude DC 22, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d8+1 Con [When damaged, character must succeed on another saving throw or 2 points of damage is permanent drain instead.]

Encounter Condition: Diseased (demon fever) 18

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add devil chills. To decrease the challenge, replace demon fever with mind fire.

C92. CRUSHING WALL TRAP

This room is devoid of light or furniture, but a narrow pile of broken bones takes up most of the spatial area in this chamber. The crushed skeletons are lined up in the middle of the place, forming an almost straight line from north to south, as if connecting the two corridors opening into this room together.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is rigged with a deadly mechanism designed to hold any creature that escaped its original cell. The bony remains in the center of the Room are those of the unfortunate creatures that unwittingly ventured here and never escaped.

Three rounds after anyone enters this Room, the east and west walls quickly move towards the center, crushing everyone within 1 round after this trap is sprung, the walls move back into their proper places.

A minuscule hidden switch can be found with a DC 27 Search check upon the north wall just east of the arch way. Pressing this switch prevents the trap from functioning for 10 minutes.

♣ Compacting Room Trap: CR 7; mechanical; timed trigger; automatic reset; hidden switch bypass (Search DC 27); walls move together (12d6, crush); multiple targets (all targets in the Room); never miss; onset delay (3 rounds); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 23.

Encounter Condition: [Deep Darkness]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A successful DC 16 Search check is enough to notice an ivory ring on one of the bony remains in the center of the Room. The ring is simple, but it is ancient and undamaged. It fits any Medium creature and is worth upwards of 750 gp to a collector.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the crushing wall trap's crush damage to 16d6. To decrease the challenge, make the trap deal only 8d6 of crush damage.

C93. IMPRISONED SPECTRE

Due to the design of this Room, opening either door is not easy. There are four different locks on each door. Subsequential DC 30, DC 35, DC 35, and DC 40 Open Lock checks are required to unlock them. If any check fails by 10 or more, all the locks reset and the PC must start over. In addition, each lock is trapped with a powerful ward that activates if the lock is tampered with. Each ward is extremely difficult to notice, as the tiny rune is written inside of the locking mechanism.

The first ward is a bestow curse trap.

♣ Bestow Curse Trap: CR 4; magic device; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (bestow curse, 15th-level cleric, -6 to Wisdom, DC 18 Will save negates); Search DC 36; Disable Device DC 28.

The second lock is protected by a symbol of sleep.

♣ Symbol of Sleep Trap: CR 6; magic device; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (symbol of sleep, 18th-level wizard, DC 20 Will save negates); multiple targets (all creatures within 60 ft.); Search DC 38; Disable Device DC 30.

The third lock is protected by symbol of stunning.

♣ Symbol of Stunning Trap: CR 8; magic device; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (symbol of stunning, 18th-level wizard, DC 22 Will save negates); multiple targets (all creatures within 60 ft.); Search DC 40; Disable Device DC 32.

The fourth lock is guarded by feeblemind.

♣ Feeblemind Trap: CR 5; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (feeblemind, 16th-level wizard, Intelligence and Charisma drop to 1, DC 15 Will save negates, arcane spellcasters suffer a -4 penalty to this save); single target; Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30.

Opening the doors from inside this Room requires the PCs to unlock only the last two locks, but the wards protecting these two are still present.

Five massive columns carved out from the bedrock support the fifty-foot high ceiling of this great hall. Like most chambers in the dungeon, the place is bathed in shadows, but the disquieting innumers of some hidden menace echoes through the wide place. Strange mirrors on the floor, ceiling, and walls reflect light in every direction, casting shadows into every corner and distorting the size of the room.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This chamber holds one of the few original inhabitants of the dungeon — a mighty spectre, named Aslur'thyn (hp 91) whose cell was so secure, he never escaped. Magical wards upon the entire stone surfaces of the walls, ceiling, and floor keep him inside. Powerful magic [Strong abjuration and illusion] imbues the walls of this special prison cell, trapping all sound inside. This effect acts as silence.

Aslur'thyn has been confined to this cell since the dungeon was first built and has lost all hope of ever escaping. When the PCs open one of the doors leading into its cell, he stares in disbelief for one round. Allow him a DC 30 Will save on the second round. If successful, he rushes for the door, otherwise he waits until the third round to make his escape.

Unless the PCs prevent Aslur'thyn from exiting the Room, he flies past them. If the PCs stand in his way or attack him, Aslur'thyn fights back, venting centuries of accumulated anger. If the doors close, trapping him once again inside, he becomes enraged and gains the benefit of rage for 3 minutes.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 4, Distracting Noises 5, Distracting Visions 5

Tactics: Once engaged in battle, Aslur'thyn is relentless and fights until destroyed. He targets the weakest PC, drawing him away or sequestering him from the rest of the party. He continues to attack a single target until either of them is dead. If Aslur'thyn successfully kills a PC (returning as a spawn 1d3 rounds later), he flees so the PCs are forced to fight one of their own.

If Aslur'thyn flees into the dungeon, he escapes via the fastest route possible, hiding from the PCs if they give chase. If the PCs allow him to escape, he immediately looks for victims to convert to spawns and within 1 day's time commands 1d6 spectres. This pattern continues, interminably, until everything is converted or the spectre finds an adversary more powerful than himself.

Aslur'thyn heads north, avoiding the dragon and oozes, but attacking any humanoids he finds. If the PCs emptied this Region, he heads west in search of goblins in Region B before heading toward Region N. If the PCs chase him to Region F or G, he flies across the lava.

Treasure: The spectre's cloak is a black robe of the archmagi, with the ghost touch ability. The benefits of wearing this robe are bestowed to the wearer against corporeal and incorporeal creatures. If the PCs destroy Aslur'thyn they can take the robe, understanding that it is, of course, evil. The cloak is semi-incorporeal and part of him, but it becomes substantial when Aslur'thyn is destroyed.

The angels hid a powerful tome in this Room, keeping its secrets from the world. The mirrors along the walls are part of the spectre's torment, reminding him of these trappings, no matter where he looks. But, they also serve a second purpose. If the PCs succeed at a DC 30 Search check, they see a series of nodes on the four outside pillars in the mirrors, that they cannot see on the pillars themselves. The center pillar is devoid of these nodes. Clever PCs should note that this means something, but a DC 28 Concentration check, a DC 25 Disable Device check, or a DC 22 Decipher Script check reveals the nodes are part of grand puzzle. [Remember that Search and Spot are based on Intelligence and Wisdom which were more than likely reduced by the traps outside the Room.]

It takes 1 hour for the PCs to study the nodes and note and subtle differences in their shape and color. Allow the PCs a DC 30 Search check to find the four nodes that are identical. If the PCs can find a way to touch them all at the same time (and they are all inconveniently placed and no two can be touched at once), the center pillar slowly opens from top to bottom like a giant puzzle box. As each stone shifts, more and more light from the pillar's core releases until 5 minutes later the room is bathed in daylight.

Once the pillar is completely opened (a process that takes 30 minutes), a small pedestal remains, with a book resting on it. This process also disables the traps on the locks, until the pillars are reset by pressing the nodes again (which closes the pillar). The book is shielded by great magic [Strong abjuration] and any PC touching it sets off a powerful dictum trap which resets in 5 rounds.

◆ Dictum Trap: CR 7; magic device; touch trigger; automatic reset (5 rounds); spell effect (dictum, 13th-level cleric); Search DC 32; Disable Device DC 32.

In addition, the surface of the book is protected by explosive runes, which go off once the PCs read the cover. If they turn the book open to the first page, sepi snake sigil triggers as well. These spells have an effective caster level of 13th. Neither of these spells can be disabled and neither harms the book. Once triggered, they do not reset.

If the PCs find a way to bypass the dictum trap, they can take the book, which is in fact, a vile tome containing every arcane necromancy spell ever written. There are a total of 49 spells in the book. Everything from The Player's Handbook™, plus a few more. It is up to the DM if these spells are from other open source material or just so powerful and incomprehensible the PCs can never learn them. The book radiates Strong necromancy (evil). If they do not disable the dictum trap, the book can only be removed from the pedestal by a lawful good character.

EL: 13

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a spectre or wight, neither of which wants to leave but instead intends to convert the PCs into the undead. In addition, they can use 'create spawn' on animals as well as humanoids. To decrease the challenge, place daylight in the center of the room (in a 20-ft. radius) that affects Aslur'thyn as sunlight.

▲ Aslur'thyn, Spectre: CR 7; Medium undead (incorporeal); HD 14d12; hp 91; Init +7; Spd 40 ft., fly 80 ft. Energy Drain (Su): Living creatures hit by a spectre's incorporeal touch attack gain two negative levels. The DC is 20 for the Fortitude save to remove a negative level. The save DC is Charisma-based. For each such negative level bestowed, the spectre gains 5 temporary hit points.

Create Spawn (Su): Any humanoid slain by this spectre becomes a spectre in 1d3 rounds (instead of the normal 1d4 rounds). Spawn are under the command of the spectre that created them and remain enslaved until its death. They do not possess any of the abilities they had in life.

Unnatural Aura (Su): Animals, whether wild or domesticated, can sense the unnatural presence of a spectre at a distance of 30 ft. They do not willingly approach nearer than that and panic if forced to do so; they remain panicked as long as they are within that range.

Sunlight Powerlessness (Ex): Spectres are powerless in natural sunlight (not merely a daylight spell) and flee from it. A spectre caught in sunlight cannot attack and can take only a single move or attack action in a round.

Possessions: Robe of the archmagi (black) with ghost touch.

C94. CRUSHING GRATE TRAP

The floor of this great hall is arranged with a multitude of square tiles. A gray dust covers most of the floor, but it fails to hide the dented and chipped stone surface. Within each of the cracks separating the floor tiles, caked blood can be seen.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The floor of this chamber is rigged with countless pressure plates. Each 5-ft.-by-5-ft. stone square making up the floor of the hall is part of a deadly mechanism that sends a heavy stone grate to the ground. This grate is made out of the same stone as the rest of the region, is as large as Room, and is supported from the ceiling by massive iron poles. When more than 50 lbs. is put upon one of the pressure plates, the grate descends to the floor and crushes everyone inside.

When not activated, the grate looks like it is part of the ceiling. The only differences being that there are a multitude of small holes (some six inches in diameter) cutting through its surface and dried blood is all over it. It can be spotted with a successful Search DC 22, which also alerts anyone with the trapsense ability of the danger.

◆ Stone Grate Trap: CR 7; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; grate moves down (10d6, crushing); multiple targets (all targets within the Room); never miss; onset delay (2 round); Search DC 20; Disable Device 18.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the stone grate trap deal 14d6 of crushing damage. To decrease the challenge, have it deal 6d6 points of damage.

C95 THROUGH C102. HILL GIANTS' LAIR

This Section is the home of Arnuk, a hill giant cleric, and her two sons. Arnuk's family was part of a tribe that once dominated a large section of this Region. But when Nardarik (Room C77) came, he killed off most of the tribe and drove the survivors away. Arnuk and her sons are the only living hill giants from this once proud tribe.

To make matters worse, Vernir, one of Arnuk's son, once made a deal with the king of the goblins (Room B75) to fight the wizard Arum for them. Even in his maddened state, Arum was too much for the giant and Vernir nearly lost his life. Fortunately, the wizard showed mercy and only trapped the giant behind several layers of stony walls, rather than kill him. Arnuk and her other son now bear a deep grudge, but are unaware that Arum is gone. Lastly, the giants no longer trust the goblins and seek vengeance, should they ever find a way to escape.

Though they are content with their existence, these hill giants are trapped in the Region and have little hope of ever emerging from the dungeon (they do not know about the secret door in Room C61 nor can they get past the imprisoned spectre (Room C93). If they ever escape, Arnuk plans to destroy the black dragon Nardarik (Rooms C69 through C79), the entire goblin tribe (Region B), and Arum.

Unless the PCs are Hostile, Arnuk asks them to do her bidding by talking about the great riches stolen from her people by the evil dragon Nardarik as well as the treachery of the Gnashing Fang Tribe. If the PCs agree to help Arnuk get rid of her enemies, they are welcome in her lair. If the PCs do not want anything to do with the hill giants, Arnuk and her sons insist that they exit their private domain. If the PCs know a way out, they handsomely reward them and offer an alliance.

Due to the size of the corridors, the giants are rarely found outside Room C97. Their speed is cut in 1/2 in these tight hallways.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Roll for a Random Encounter once per hour.

1d20	Encounter
1	A single copper coin lays on the floor. It looks as though it was once used to mark a trail.
2	Two silver coins lay on the floor, marking a trail of some kind.
3	A bent gold coin lays on the floor.
4-18	Nothing
19-20	The PCs stumble upon a trap.

♣ Symbol of Sleep Trap: CR 6; magic device; touch trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (symbol of sleep, 18th-level wizard, DC 20 Will save negates); multiple targets (all creatures within 60 ft.); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 30.

C95. PRISON CUBICLES

This room is divided in smaller sections by a number of walls. Though these walls are made from the same stone as the rest of the chamber — and indeed most of the dungeon — they are thinner and obviously designed to break the room in small cubicles. Within each of these cubicles, rusted iron chains and manacles hang from the walls.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is segmented into smaller alcoves where minor demons were kept in chains centuries ago. There are enough chains and manacles in this chamber to keep 14 Medium creatures shackled. Though the chains are rusty, they remain solidly encased within the walls. The manacles, on the other hand, have all been forced open and are now completely useless.

The secret door on the northeastern wall is seldom used nowadays, but the stone is marked with several dents and its edges are beginning to crumble. A successful DC 14 Search check is enough to notice the stone panel, which can be easily pushed open.

C96. BONE ROOM

Large bones litter the floor of this room, covering most of its stone facing. The bones seem old and, judging by the accumulated dust upon them, have not been disturbed in awhile. Within the debris are several skulls, which resemble humanoid heads, only bigger.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Arnuk and her sons piled the remains of some dead hill giants here. A successful DC 20 Knowledge (nature) check confirms the bones are those of hill giants. Twelve corpses can be found.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: This Room is filled with hill giant bones from Arnuk's former tribe. A successful DC 25 Search check reveals a golden tooth in a giant's jaw. The tooth is large and made of pure yellow gold. It is worth 150 gp.

C97. BROKEN WALLS

PCs in Room C48 can hear a soft clamor of metal on stone, coming from the other side of the wall of stone. However, because the stone is so dense, they cannot determine that a hill giant is pounding away at it.

The sound of stone breaking upon stone echoes throughout this chamber and beyond. Inside the wide hall is a large giant in tattered hides. The male giant stands in the middle of the room, surrounded by massive mounds of stony rubble. One of its eyes is swollen shut, as though it suffered a tremendous blow. The creature seems hard at work, as it takes heavy boulders, raises them above its head, and throws them as hard as it can against the surrounding walls, which are heavily damaged from years of such abuse. Each time the giant throws a boulder, it refuses to fragment in smaller pieces.

Initial Attitude: Varies

Encounter: A small portion of the east wall is a corridor blocked with wall of stone. A DC 25 Spellcraft check identifies it. When Arum fought the hill giant Vernir, he encased him in stone in this great hall. Though his family eventually freed him, Vernir frequently visits the chamber, hoping to demolish the stony remains of his former prison.

Vernir (hp 99) spends most of his time in this hall smashing the stone walls created by Arum. The rubble is from the damage Vernir dealt the stonework over the years. Because Vernir is working and not paying attention to what goes on around him, he suffers from a -5 circumstance penalty to any Listen or Spot checks.

If one of the PCs is a male human spellcaster (in dark-colored robes), Vernir is Hostile and attacks him on sight. Otherwise, his Initial Attitude is Unfriendly — he is suspicious of humanoids. If the PCs talk to Vernir, the hill giant mutters "You should not be here. This is mother's territory." To reinforce his comment, he demands a 20 gp toll from each of them. If the PCs pay the toll, or if they convince Vernir they mean no harm (through the use of Bluff or Diplomacy), he brings them to his mother in Room C98. If the PCs promise to leave the hill giant's domain, Vernir still insists they pay the toll.

Encounter Condition: Cover, Echoes 5

Tactics: If there is a battle here, Vernir's mother and brother do not come to his aid. Both giants are accustomed to the constant din of breaking boulders and crashing rocks. Unless the PCs make some kind of unusual noise (such as loud screaming, sonic spell effects, etc.) the other hill giants remain in place.

In combat, Vernir takes cover behind a stone pile and throws boulders at the party. He targets the spellcasters first, hoping to kill a wizard or sorcerer. If forced into melee, he handles the enemies within his reach, using his massive steel maul.

Treasure: Vernir carries a pouch with 11 bloodstones, worth 20 gp each.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three barbarian levels to Vernir. To decrease the challenge, Vernir becomes shaken when a PC casts an offensive spell at him or uses magic to do anything "obvious."

C98. HILL GIANT SHRINE

If the PCs make any noise or use a light source in the corridor leading to this chamber, Arnuk automatically notices them.

A stone altar dominates this chamber. Upon the altar is a pair of human skulls inside of which yellow candles are set. The candles burn with a pale golden light, illuminating portions of the room. Behind the altar is a giant female. Her long disheveled hair is tangled with small bones and a scorched human skull hangs from a thick gold chain around her neck.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Arnuk (hp 124) built a crude shrine to her deity in this wide chamber, and the hill giant priestess spends most of her recreational time here. Unless the PCs have harmed one of her sons or they attack her immediately, Arnuk is more than willing to negotiate. She is especially interested in the dragon's hoard (Room C75) and killing the black dragon guarding it. If the PCs appear interested, she reveals where it is and even warns them about the deadly creature in Room C76 and the trap in Room C94. She does not know Room C75 is a false hoard.

If the PCs offend her god or harmed one of her sons, Arnuk attacks immediately.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If battle ensues, Arnuk casts bull's strength on herself, followed by divine favor and shield of faith. She then proceeds to cast an offensive spell to harm or hamper the PCs, target the warriors of the party first. Since she has a 10 ft. reach, she keeps the PCs at bay for a round or two, at least, before using her magical mace to crush her enemies. She continues to cast spells when not engaged directly with two or more PCs.

Arnuk utters loud cries and curses while combating the PCs, which automatically alerts her son Mourgir (Room C101). Mourgir comes to defend his mother 1d2 rounds later.

Treasure: In addition to the magical items Arnuk carries, she also has a pouch with 79 pp, 51 gp, and 19 sp as well as three glass vials of unholy water. The unholy symbol upon her neck is made from a painted human skull and worth upwards of 25 gp to any follower of the faith. The golden chain upon which it is set is also worth 25 gp.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three cleric levels to Arnuk. To decrease the challenge take away Arnuk's mace and cloak.

C99. VERNIR'S CHAMBER

A massive bed made out of broken logs, crushed tree branches, and dried leaves occupies most of the floor area of this room. The crude bed is covered with tattered animal pelts and is large enough to accommodate a pair of giants. Beside it are several perfectly round rocks.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is the private bedchamber of Vernir, Arnuk's youngest son. Vernir uses this chamber to rest, but spends most of his time in Room C97. Since he does not trust Mourgir (Room C101), he carries his bloodstones with him, leaving only battered skins on his bed.

If the PCs make noise, Arnuk (in Room C98) automatically hears them and investigates 1 round later. Also allow Mourgir the appropriate Listen check to notice the PCs. If he hears them, Mourgir arrives in 1d2 rounds.

C100. ARNUK'S CHAMBER

Four old beds are arranged in the middle of this room, taking up most of the floor. The beds are lined up against one another and a thick layer of animal skins covers them. On top of the pelts is a human skull. The latter is neatly placed at the exact center of the four beds.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is Arnuk's private abode and she does not tolerate anyone coming in to her bedroom. Although she is only here when she rests, the Room is close enough to her shrine that she can keep an eye on it. She investigates 1 round later and does not hesitate to attack would-be thieves. Allow Mourgir (Room C101) the appropriate Listen check to notice the PCs. If he does, the hill giant comes out of his bedchamber and arrives here 1d3 rounds thereafter.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A successful DC 18 Search check reveals a wooden coffer tucked under a bed. This chest is unlocked and contains various robes fashioned for a giant as well as a total of 541 gp worth of assorted coins and gems, a well wrought sapphire (worth 500 gp), and a wand of magic missile (5th) (17 charges).

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

C101. MOURGIR'S CHAMBER

A large pile of crushed stone rubble covered with broken twigs and branches dominates the northern area of this room. A dark haired giant dressed in hide armor sits atop the uncomfortable-looking bed.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This is the private bedroom of Mourgir (hp 109), Arnuk's eldest son. Though the hill giant sometimes patrol his mother's domain, he spends most of his time in this chamber, dreaming about the fresh air of his mountain home. For such a savage beast, he is (at times), noticeably sensitive. As such, his mother is more protective of him than Vernir (Room C97).

Although suspicious, Mourgir is curious about the PCs and eager to talk with them. He is especially interested in tales of the open country and the mountains surrounding the dungeon. If the PCs are friendly and tell stories, his attitude automatically shifts to Friendly. If, on the other hand, they harmed his brother or mother — or if they tried to steal from Room C102 — Mourgir does not hesitate and attacks the intruders.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: Mourgir does not throw rocks, preferring instead to charge the strongest warriors and engage in melee. He fights until his hit point total is reduced to 25 or less, at which point he flees for Room C98. If combat breaks here, Arnuk (in Room C98) arrives 1d3 rounds later.

Treasure: Mourgir wears a large necklace made out of carved bone fragments (worth 20 gp) and carries a pouch with 97 gp worth of small gemstones.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 3 barbarian levels to Mourgir. To decrease the challenge, have him frazzled by a recent argument with his brother, suffering from an effect similar to doom.

▲ Mourgir, Hill Giant: CR 7; Large giant; HD 12d8+48; hp 109; Init -1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 20, touch 8, flat-footed 20; Base Atk +9; Grp +20; Atk +16 melee (2d8+10, greatclub) or +15 melee (1d4+7, slam) or +8 ranged (2d6+7, rock); Full Atk +16/+11 melee (2d8+10, greatclub) or +15 melee (1d4+7, 2 slams) or +8 ranged (2d6+7, rock); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Rock throwing; SQ Low-light vision, rock catching; AL CE; SV Fort +12, Ref +3, Will +4; Str 25, Dex 8, Con 19, Int 6, Wis 10, Cha 7.

C102. HILL GIANTS' STOREROOM

A rounded, flat boulder blocks the only door leading to this Room, which is used by the giants to store the various goods they found in the dungeon. A successful DC 22 Strength check is required to move the boulder in front of the door. This action, however, automatically alerts Mourgir that someone is trying to enter the store. Since he is in charge of it, the giant comes out of his chamber (Room C101) to investigate 1 round later. If Mourgir engages the PCs in battle, his mother (in Room C98) joins the fray 1d3 rounds after combat begins.

Three piles of round rocks and a wide mound of broken bones take up most of this room, which is used for storage. Upon the southernmost wall is a collection of weapons and other gear. The trinkets lie in an untidy pile near by.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: There are piles of boulders here as well as skull trophies and the like. The body of an adventurer can be found among the debris as well, stripped of its gear and left to rot. Fiendish DMs can make the adventurer a familiar face from one of the PC's past.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Along the south wall are three large greatclubs, a rusty bastard sword, two disheveled halberds, an ornate masterwork falchion, a Medium suit of masterwork full plate armor, a +2 large steel shield, three coils of 50-ft. long hempen rope, two empty backpacks, and a small wooden box containing 16 wax candles.

C103 THROUGH C105. THE KEY

The doors of this section of the dungeon have not been breached since the angel wardens abandoned it. Built within the vast prison complex, this area was used to store an important key. This special key opens the door in Room B21 (and thus gives access to Region F). It can be found in Room C105 but can only be handled by PCs bearing the Mark of the Righteous (see Room C21), as it is an animated object attacking anyone not bearing the Mark who touches it.

To complicate things, the angel builders of the dungeon designed a false key (in Room C103) as well as a series of six interconnected Rooms (C104) made to deceive would-be robbers.

There are no Random Encounters in this Section.

C103. THE FALSE KEY

Both doors leading into this Room are locked. Anyone succeeding at a DC 34 Open Lock check unlocks each of them.

The walls of this room are beautifully painted. The pictures depict a various angels performing blissful tasks. Some hold weapons and stand at attention. Others are sculpting great works of arts or designing tall buildings. Though a thick dust covers the floor of this room, its painted walls are surprisingly clean. What truly catches one's attention, however, is the glowing silvery key resting upon a simple stone altar in the southern nook of the chamber.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The only purpose of this Room is to deceive others into believing a false key is the key needed to unlock the door in Room B21. Unlike the keys found in Room C104, this false key is a perfect replica of the one fitting into the lock of Room B21. When inserted into this lock, however, a powerful sonic blast is triggered and the fake key melts into the mechanism, preventing anyone from unlocking the door.

Anyone with the Mark of Righteous (see Room C21) is allowed a DC 20 Will save learn this key is a fake.

The secret panel upon the south wall is impossible to notice or open by normal means. A PC with the Mark of the Righteous is automatically made aware of the secret door and only needs to touch it to watch the panel sink into the floor. The secret doorway remains open for as long as someone with the Mark of the Righteous stands within Room C103 or the adjacent Room C104.

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The only treasure in this Room is the false special key upon the altar.

EL: N/A

C104. RIGGED FALSE KEYS

The only door leading into these six interconnected Rooms is locked. A PC succeeding at a DC 34 Open lock check unlocks it. Each of these Rooms holds 20 different keys, hanging at varying length from the ceiling on strands of wire above a simple stone altar. The keys vary in size, shape, and color, and each is made from a unique material.

A small altar lies in the middle of the south wall. Hanging from the ceiling are several keys of various sizes, shapes, and materials. Some are made of silver, gold, bronze, copper, or steel, wood, granite, ivory, colored glass, semi-precious stone, and alien material you've never seen before.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These six chambers hold a total of 120 false keys (20 per Room) made to confuse, hamper, or harm trespassers. Each key is different. Some are trapped, while others are mere trinkets serving no real purpose. Every time a PC picks up one of the keys, roll on the following table to determine its effect:

1	This key is a mundane key that does not fit in any lock.
2	This key is brittle and crumbles to dust when touched.
3	This key is actually to a set of manacles in Room 1103.
4	This key is caustic to the touch dealing 1 point of damage.
5	This key is cursed, lowering the Strength of the wielder to 3, so long as it is held.
6	This key is heavy, weighing nearly 50 lbs., but no bigger than a dagger.
7	This illusionary key cannot be picked up or moved by any means. Though tangible to those who do not see through the illusion, it remains stuck in place, totally immovable. A DC 20 Will save (disbelieve) is required to see through this harmless illusion.
8	This key is extremely hot, dealing 1d6 fire damage each round. If dropped, it melts to worthless slag.
9	This key is barbed and cannot be held or stored in a pocket without jabbing the PC for 1 point of damage per round. If stored in a sack, it eventually cuts through the material.
10	This key becomes invisible when held.
11	This key hums and vibrates (while held), getting louder and louder until its deafening. If not dropped within 2d4 rounds, the key casts shout .

5	This key is cursed, lowering the Constitution of the wielder to 3, so long as it is held. If this reduces the wielder to 0 hit points or less, he slips into a coma for 1 week at which time he returns at full health.
6	This key is made of powdered charcoal and explodes into soot when touched.
7	This key is made of negative energy, shooting a cold chill up the wielder's arm. While held, it bestows one negative level. If this drops the wielder below 1st level, he becomes a wight.
8	This key looks like the perfect key for the task at hand. The wielder must succeed at a DC 18 Will save or believe he carries the true key.
9	This key is made of glass and reflects light like a prism. The wielder believes he gains true seeing from it, but instead cannot lie while holding the key.
10	This key makes everyone else appear invisible when held.
11	This key projects legend lore in the mind of the wielder, reciting the entire history of the dungeon. It takes 100 years to watch the entire vision, but the PC is allowed a DC 18 Will save each day to stop watching.

16	This key turns the wielder's hand incorporeal, allowing him to only touch the key and incorporeal creatures. A DC 18 Will save is required to drop the key. Only one save is allowed per day.
17	This key alerts all lawful and good creatures in a 500-ft. radius of the wielder's presence.
18	This key can open any one mundane lock, but drains the wielder of 1 hit point (permanently) after doing so. Afterwards, it turns to a fine sand.

- 19 This key casts energy drain (as a 18th-level caster), when touched but only bestows 1d3 negative levels.

C105. TEST OF CHARITY

The door of this Room opens when the PCs step into Room C104, but remains opened only for 5 rounds so PCs need to succeed at the Test of Humility in order to discover this door. However, this secret panel also shuts as soon as one person enters this Room. It is impossible to open once it is closed, but PCs on either side succeeding at a DC 28 Tumble check can move in or out of the Room before the door closes. The door opens by itself once a PC selects an item from one of the cubbyholes.

There are three items in cubbyholes against the northern wall of this otherwise empty room: a chest filled with gold pieces, a beautiful golden rose, and an intricate sword with a strange runic mark on it. Above the items are the words "Choose from the Heart" written in silver Celestial runes.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: In order to pass the Test of Charity, the PC must select an item and explain why he chose it. The actual item chosen by the PC is not important, but what he plans to do with it is.

There is no correct answer.

It is up to the DM to determine as best he can what motivated the PC in his selection. Charitable motives include taking one of the treasures to offer it to another, to a faith, or a cause. If the PC was charitable, he passes the test. If he was not, he fails.

Once any item is touched, the rest disappear. Failing the test sends a powerful electrical discharge through the Room.

☛ Chain Lightning Trap: CR 7; magic device; special trigger (see above); automatic reset; spell effect (chain lightning, 12th-level wizard, 12d6 electricity to target failing the test plus 6d6 electricity to each of up to twelve secondary targets within the Room, DC 19 Reflex save half damage); Search DC N/A; Disable Device DC N/A.

Succeeding the test results in the PC receiving the Mark of the Righteous (as explained in Room C21) and all benefits it bestows, including being allowed to enter Room C103.

C105. THE REAL SPECIAL KEY

The secret panel leading into this Room is impossible to see or open by normal means. A PC with the Mark of the Righteous is automatically made aware of this secret doorway. He needs to touch the panel to make it sink into the floor. The secret door remains open as long as someone with the Mark of the Righteous stands in Room C105 or the adjacent Room C104.

An untraceable light source simulating daylight illuminates this chamber. The walls, floor, and ceiling are painted white and their surfaces are surprisingly clean. In the center of the room is a simple altar made from the same painted stone. A silver key, glowing brightly in the magical light, rests upon it.

Initial Attitude: Helpful or Hostile (see below)

Encounter: This Room holds the real special key allowing the angels and archons that built the dungeon to move from Room B21 to Region E. The only way to gain access to this Room is by having the Mark of the Righteous. Once the door opens for a PC with the Mark, others can accompany him inside.

The silvery key on the altar is a special animated object (hp 2). When picked by someone with the Mark of the Righteous it remains inanimate, just as any other key. If, however, someone without the Mark takes the key at any time or place, it becomes animated and attacks (and its Attitude changes to Hostile). If destroyed, the key becomes useless. Otherwise, it can be used to unlock the door in Room B21, thus giving access to Region E.

Tactics: This animated object targets creatures not bearing the Mark of the Righteous and never strikes those blessed with such a Mark. It fights until destroyed. However, if 1 full round elapses without anyone trying to strike it, it ceases to attack and falls prone (just as if it was not animated). If this happens, a PC with the Mark of the Righteous can pick it up. If someone without the Mark takes it again, however, it becomes animated and attacks.

Treasure: The special key rests upon the altar. It is the only key that unlocks the door in Room B21.

ROOMS C106 THROUGH C110.

THE FINAL MILE

Rooms C106 through C110 are isolated from the rest of the region. Though they connect with Region G and the base of the angels and celestials inhabiting this part of the dungeon, no creatures have graced this Section in many years.

There are no Random Encounters in this Section.

C106. THE ANGELS' INSIGNIA

The floor of the corridor is blanketed in undisturbed dust. The double doors at its northern end are cast from solid bronze. Upon them is a design: a flaming sword encircled by a ring of feathers.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These corridors connect Region C and G together. Though there are no traps here, the bronze double doors in these corridors are locked. A successful DC 40 Open Lock check is required to unlock them. The insignia upon them is the symbol of the Order of the Children of the Inner Light, the group of angels and celestial in charge of protecting Region G. The symbol marks the beginning of their territory.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

C107. TRAPPED CORRIDORS

This hallway is dusty, dark, and empty. A closer look at the floor reveals a rune in the center of the corridor. Though covered with dust, the design is easily spotted, as it is over ten ft. in diameter. The marking represents an angel holding a wide blade, its feathery wings spread wide behind its back.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The corridors to the east and west of Room C108 are trapped. The designs upon the floor in each of these corridors are meant to attract the attention of travelers. The patterns take the entire width of the hallways and are at least 10 ft. long. Anyone stepping upon the markings or touching them automatically triggers the magical trap placed upon them. There is no way to bypass these traps, and creatures flying above the designs automatically trigger them.

✦ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 6; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast]); 16th-level cleric, 8d8 sonic, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the save DC of the glyph of warding trap by +4. To decrease the challenge, replace the glyph of warding trap with a burning hands trap.

C108. INTRICATE MOSAIC

A large and perfectly round mosaic made out of stones of varying shapes and colors take up most of the floor of this chamber. The mosaic is exquisitely designed and its many patterns are abstract and fascinating. They are somewhat reminiscent of the complex patterns made by the artisans who fashion the marvelous carpets in the Southern Realms, yet a thousand times more elaborate.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The floor of this chamber is rigged with a simple but effective pit trap. A closer look at the mosaic reveals the colorful stones composing it are not attached to the floor and could be extracted from the pattern. Anyone touching the stones from the mosaic or stepping upon them automatically triggers the pit trap. When activated, the floor of the entire Room opens, sending all the stones from the mosaic inside a deep pit.

PCs who do not disturb the mosaic can move safely through the Room without triggering the trap.

✦ Pit Trap: CR 9; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; DC 24 Reflex save avoids; 100 ft. deep (10d6, fall); multiple targets (all targets within the Room and first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 30.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: At the bottom of the pit trap are bony remains of a dead dretch demon. A golden armband (worth 190 gp) is attached to one of the bones and a +3 halberd rests under them.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add another 40 ft. to the pit trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the trap to 60 ft.

C109. DISPIRITING HALL

A series of torches, set some 20 ft. from the floor into thick bronze sconces, burn here. The dancing flames illuminate the great hall, but fail to cast the eerie shadows very far.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This great hall is empty but endowed with powerful angelic magic meant to discourage living creatures from venturing through it. Lawful good creatures are not affected by the enchantment, but all other living beings, including outsiders such as demons, are.

Upon entering, all non-lawful good PCs must make a DC 30 Will save or become disheartened for one full week. A disheartened character suffers from a -2 morale penalty to attack rolls, damage rolls, AC, saves, and skill check. A remove curse or lesser restoration spell is not strong enough to lift this effect, but each one reduces the duration of the effect by 1 day. Restoration or greater restoration lifts the effect completely.

Encounter Condition: Cursed 5, Fear 16

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: All 40 torches are imbued with continual flame.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the Will save DC to 35 and add one week to the duration of the disheartening effect. To reduce the challenge, reduce the effect to 1d3 days. Alternately, it only affects non-lawful PCs.

C110. THE GATEWAY

A wide ornate archway dominates the southern wall of this great hall. The archway opens into a surprisingly vast room, but the rest of the hall is empty and dark. A close examination of the cloak of dust upon the floor here reveals that no one has walked here in years.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This chamber has a magical gateway that allows travel to Room C21, but offers no means of exiting.

This hall has a portal identical to the large ornate archway in Room C21, with the exception that the interior of the archway is not solid. Instead, it opens into Room C21, just as if the two chambers were connected. This is the one-way entrance into the prison cell where a great demon was once held prisoner. Any object that goes through the archway from Room C110 instantly comes out the other archway in Room C21. Inanimate objects that partially pass through the portal can be retrieved, but anything living or organic is lost to Room C21. Nothing from Room C21 can travel back through the portal in this hall.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the PCs lose limbs if they stick their hands through the portal and pull them back. To decrease the challenge, allow the PCs to move back and forth without fail, assuming the wards protecting this prison vanished decades ago.

REGION D.

THE TARTAREAN DEPTHS OF THE XILL MASTER

Chtrax is a diabolic xill of such caliber that his society willingly cast him out to wander the planes for the remainder of eternity. Desperately seeking revenge, the xill searched for a good way to destroy his people outright. In the course of his roamings, he came upon information which confirmed the existence of a malevolent, exiled god, Asrakhor the Undying, a terrible threat to the stability of the planes if freed. He understood from the depths of his madness that Asrakhor could help him get his revenge, but he did not know where to find him. All of his searching yielded no clues, no evidence, nothing concrete enough to substantiate its existence.

The only way to reach this god, Chtrax realized, was through the mighty power of a wish spell. Moreover, the xill knew where he could find one at minimal cost. Aware of the world's largest dungeon, and its original purpose, he suspected the devil's vault still contained a powerful pit fiend named Kator. If Chtrax could free this beast, he was certain he could gain the wish. A mad plan to be certain, Chtrax has been especially careful not to reveal the truth behind his goals, for he knows breaching the walls of the vault would surely result in the deaths of all his servants.

The wicked xill traveled a myriad of Material Planes, but alas for all his searching, he could not locate the place, though many had heard of it, and a number of dusty tomes spoke eloquently of it. In frustration, he tortured and maimed many a sage and scholar in his efforts to locate the massive complex until finally one brutalized soul gave him a name: Alkaman. Even Chtrax had heard of this ancient loremaster, but he had believed, like most beings in the planes, the old man dead. He quickly tracked down the sage, finding him deep within the Astral Plane. After torturing the old man for 2 years, the sage finally revealed the location of the Dungeon. Not trusting the information, Chtrax took the crippled scholar with him. When they finally reached the sprawling complex, he killed the old man and left his bones to rot on the surface, before descending into the dungeon's tunnels.

Unable to locate the vault on his own, he suspected it remained concealed and intact. He also realized he could never hope to uncover the vault on his own, as the labor would be too overwhelming for just one creature, so he turned to the derro for assistance. In their warrens, they had uncovered extensive veins of truesilver — a substance especially useful for controlling and containing devils — and deposits of adamantite: two things Chtrax knew the celestials used to create the vault holding the fiends. With the recent geological instability, more and more clues revealed themselves to the malicious, self-serving xill, turning suspicion into solid evidence.

Before the inevitable assumption of control over the mad derro, Chtrax approached a trapped formian queen. Weakened and injured from a costly war with the derro, and desperate to be back in touch with the hive on her native plane, the xill's honeyed words swayed her, and she agreed to transfer control over her most trusted myrmarchs in exchange for her freedom. The xill lied, of course, and murdered her in the shadows of an obscure cave with her eggs all around her, stealing her essence and trapping it in a special phylactery.

Considering the unusual nature of the region, Chtrax organizes his minions with brutal efficiency. He commands the entire operation, answering to none. Serving him are three formian myrmarchs, each of whom have specific duties. The first myrmarch oversees security of the mining outfit and truesilver extraction (Great Hall). His responsibilities include procuring stone golems from the gnome, positioning the golems at checkpoints throughout the complex, and maintaining existing ones. Also serving him are squads of formian warriors, some of whom ride gorgons. These guards oversee extraction caverns, patrol the tunnels, and ensure traps and sentry towers are in working order and so on. Chtrax, not content with the truesilver extracted by the other myrmarch's crews, started drilling into the Great Hall for more truesilver, entrusting this operation in addition to his responsibilities for security. In fact, the Great Hall has transformed from this region's central nervous system to a massive drill, refinement and transportation site. Hence, security is thinner there than it was, just a few short weeks ago.

The second myrmarch controls the security and excavation of the northern mines. With the recent waves of plague and rogue xill ambushes, the place has collapsed into chaos. Furthermore, the myrmarch here does not trust the xill master, and bides his time, waiting for proof of his suspicions to surface. Most of the remaining labor, there, works to build a giant bore to expedite mining.

The last myrmarch oversees excavation. A typical extraction crew consists of a taskmaster, derro leaders, a lesser savant, three handler crews and three teams. Each group of handlers controls one of the following: bulette, destrachan or yrthak. Each monster digging team crushes the rocks, and the teams are responsible for removing the rubble. Two teams are composed of a grimlock foreman and duergar slaves, who clear away much of the debris created by the handler crews. The third team consists of a grimlock foreman and deep dwarf sounders. This crew uses a magic device created by the evil gnome to test the depth of the rock, search for dead caves, and material compositional changes. Their efforts are dangerous and futile. It is dangerous to use the device because it occasionally unleashes crackling electricity, nearly always vaporizing a slave or two. It is futile, because the device only has an accurate range of about 5 to 10 ft. due to the vault's inherent warping nature.

Fortunately, the recent collapses and instability of their excavations severely reduced the derro's command structure, allowing Chtrax to ingratiate himself easily, slipping past the paranoia and the xenophobia that describes the psychology of this degenerate race. He rose quickly through the ranks and to become the trusted advisor to the only remaining high savant, eventually supplanting the leader and taking control of the entire region.

Chtrax amassed a large excavation force. The derro captured duergar and deep dwarves to serve as slaves. A legion of destrachan and several yrthak act as living tools to wear away the rock with their sonic attacks, while the formians offer security and additional labor for digging. The high savant tenuously controls a tarrasque, urging it to break through the bands of adamantite warding the vault. Chtrax has also gained the help from Korus, a particularly evil gnome, who, though cruel enough to appreciate Chtrax's plan, is not worthy in the xill's eyes to be in possession such guarded information. The gnome produces the wailing guardians, stone golems capable of creating a terrific noise, regular stone golems, tools to handle the truesilver, and all manner of other mining equipment. Finally, Chtrax secretly injects eggs into the derro and slaves to replace his flawed subjects with reliable xill.

The warping effects of the vault impede divination spells, and even go so far as to disrupt magnetic impulses rendering mechanical direction sense useless and confusing those with a propensity for navigation. For these reasons, Chtrax commands the workers to tunnel through the whole place, knowing the vault is close, but exactly where, he cannot say. The desperate digging undermines the entire complex, destabilizing it. Earthquakes ripple through the place, along with the aftershocks, collapsing tunnels, killing more slaves and servants daily. Each collapse sets back the operation, as Chtrax must commit labor to building and rebuilding retaining walls to allow the excavation to continue. Despite the losses, Chtrax is committed to uncovering the vault, capturing the pit fiend and discovering for himself where the dark god lies.

HIVE MIND

Formians normally share a collective conscious when within 50 miles of the formian queen, allowing them to react to danger as if they all faced it simultaneously. Chtrax realized if he killed the formian queen, the formians would be useless to him and they would be aware of their queen's death. To galvanize his command over these outsiders, Chtrax trapped her essence in special phylactery allowing the formians to communicate through the myrmarchs, but only to the extent of their respective sections. Though the hive mind is intact, albeit to a lesser extent than before, the myrmarch would have been understandably suspicious, if it were not for the queen's mental missive to her minions commanding them to serve the xill. Now, the queen's remains a presence in the minds of the myrmarch, but it is only an echo from the past.

If a myrmarch controls a section, its death confuses the remaining formians, imposing a -2 circumstance penalty to all attacks, saves and checks. In addition, they lose access to their hive mind ability. If the PCs shatter the phylactery, the formians realize Chtrax duped them, and fight against Chtrax and his minions, turning on slaves, derro, giants and PCs. For more details, see Room D49 in the Great Hall.

XILL EGGS AND THE DERRO

Chtrax injected eggs into the derro and slaves serving him. Consequently, the derro and dwarf population is on the decline, as more and more of these outsiders hatch. Left alone, xill would eventually replace all of the derro and slaves, being a far more disciplined work force for the evil master.

This affliction has interesting side effects. Whenever the PCs encounter a derro or dwarf, there is a 25% chance the creature is host for a xill egg. Infected derro and dwarves are at risk of premature hatching whenever they take damage. When the infected's hit points fall below half their normal total, roll 1d20. If the result is more than his hit point total, a full-grown xill immediately erupts out of its host's chest, killing him in the process. The xill spends 1 round assessing its situation before attacking the nearest non-derro. Any dwarf slaves witnessing the "birth," must succeed DC 15 Will saves or become panicked for 1d4 minutes. Derro see a xill hatching as a sign of their foul goddess' blessing.

CONSTANT EFFECTS

The proximity to the vault makes negotiating these tunnels a challenge. The magical emanations have a warping effect on magnetic north, imposing a -10 circumstance penalty to all Survival checks made to determine direction, stonecunning checks to determine approximate depth below ground, and any other check involving navigation.

The warping field extends to magic too; spells determining direction (locate object, find the path, for example) automatically fail. Worse, it effectively impedes all other divination spells. Whenever a spellcaster casts a divination spell, that caster must succeed at a Spellcraft check (DC 25 + the spell's level) or the spell is lost. In addition, the field immediately deals 1d6 points of temporary Wisdom damage to the caster, as unsettling images of devils standing in a sea of blood beat against walls of some invisible barrier. If the caster succeeds, the spell dissipates without effect and he becomes aware of something ominous.

Given these impediments, neither Chtrax nor his minions have any sense of where they dig, causing them to backtrack, dig towards the lava, up or down, just about in any direction. Moreover, because of the haphazard digging, the entire complex is unstable. Each hour the PCs spend in this region, there is a 10% chance of an earthquake, as per the spell, centered on their position. The quake lasts for 1 round, as cast by a 20th level sorcerer.

Finally, all Rooms are dark unless otherwise noted. The creatures here are accustomed to working in total darkness. The gnome designed a special alchemical material lighting areas without affecting other creatures with light sensitivity, thereby allowing a few creatures to work alongside the duergar and derro.

A RACE AGAINST TIME

Chtrax is close to achieving his goals. Every day, his servants come closer to stumbling across the vault. The region is highly organized, but the unusual permutations emitted by the vault distort and confound their magical efforts to locate it. Therefore, the likelihood of its discovery is random; no effort, aside from random continued digging, can guarantee its breach. Realizing this, Chtrax does just this — he commands his forces to dig. Their perseverance should ultimately result in the discovery and consequent breach of the unholy tomb, releasing the devils into the world once more.

Timeline

- Day 0: PCs enter the derro mines.
- Day 1: Nothing
- Day 2: Derro miners in Room D22 break through to Room D27. The stone giant chief leads a force to eradicate the rebel derro, exterminating the derro, slaves and beasts in the Old Mines except those derro in Room D19.
- Day 3: Tarrasque reaches the first adamantine bands. All surviving formian warriors and gorgons move to Room D58
- Day 4: Tarrasque breaches first band.
- Day 5: Tarrasque breaches second band.
- Day 6: Guards and wards effect in the Old Mines ends. Tarrasque breaches the third band.
- Day 7: Tarrasque breaches the vault itself, unleashing the hordes of devils contained within.
- Day 12: The miners at Room D79 breach the Vault, if the tarrasque does not.

The derro and the monsters serving them dig through unworked stone (Break DC 65; Hardness 8; 900 hp/ 5-ft. of thickness). To reflect the progress through most of these rooms, expect the depth of each tunnel to continue 10-ft. each day, except in rooms near the tomb (Room D59 through Room D63, Room D78 through Room D80). These rooms are magically treated (Break 85; Hardness 16; 1,800 hp/5-ft. of thickness) and require the tarrasque for much of the digging. In these rooms, mark progress by 5-ft. each day. Once the tunnels cross an existing tunnel, the digging stops, and the formian myrmarchs redistributed crews to other rooms.

Three days after the PCs first enter the complex the tarrasque reaches the adamantine bands (see the Tomb of the Devils). When this happens, Chtrax realizes he is close to his objective. At this point, he moves all formian warriors and gorgons from their ~~respective~~ locations to Room D58, letting those unsupervised crews do as they wish. The tarrasque breaches one adamantine band per day, finally breaches the vault and releasing the devils into the region.

The PCs have about seven days to stop Chtrax and his minions from achieving their goals. It is important to convey urgency, but without directly telling them what is afoot. While there are clues through the locations, feel free to add details in order to keep the PCs on track. If the PCs fail to stop Chtrax, the devils break free and pour through the tunnels, bent on killing and enslaving. For details on the devil's actions if they break free from their prison, consult the Introduction to the vault, below.

D1 THROUGH D6. FOREBODING

D1. SENTRY TOWER

Standing on the broken plain is a 100-ft. tower. Instead of a roof, a large spike bears the impaled effigy of an unrecognizable humanoid. Three bas-reliefs of demonic faces decorate the surface of the structure. On the brows of ~~each of~~ the faces is a bright blue, red and yellow gemstone, each ~~about foot~~ in diameter. Aside from the opened maws spilling reddish ~~fluid, perhaps~~ blood, there are no entrances into the building. A few ~~scattered~~ piles of broken bones litter the immediate vicinity, some partly submerged in the crimson run-off.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This encounter refers to all three watchtowers positioned at the perimeter of the derro mines. Derro savants created these towers to deter unwanted attention. With the towers complete and the savant derro dead from the flooding, Chtrax commanded his gnome servant to upgrade each of them. The gnome constructed special wailing golems (hp 107, see below) for the derro placed one on each spike making the golems appear to be nothing more than part of the structure's obscene décor. Unlike normal stone golems, the gnome uses petrified humanoids created by gorgon guards instead of a single block of granite, and their forms are visible in the golem's bodies.

When the heroes approach within 100 ft. of the towers, allow each of them to make a DC 25 Spot check (distance penalties already taken into account). A successful check indicates scorch marks and deep impressions on the plain approaching the tower. A successful check by 10 or more allows the PC to notice the scorch marks have an approximate 20-ft. radius.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The tower itself is a proximity trap. The tower targets any non-derro approaching within 100 ft. with one of the following spells once each round — ~~fireball~~, lightning bolt or ice storm. The tower can use each spell once per day, as a 12th level caster. The spell resets in 24 hours.

Once the tower exhausts its spells, the impaled golem at the tower's top animates and pulls itself off from the spike in a grisly display. On the following round, it drops to the ground, using its innate feather fall ability. Once on the ground, it moves to attack PCs within 100-ft. of the tower. If the PCs retreat beyond the tower's range, or fall into the lava, the stone golem remains at the perimeter for 1d8 minutes before returning to the tower.

Treasure: Scattered about the plain are bits of clothing, bone and the remains of others who thought to approach the complex. PCs may search the Room and find a few valuables left by the fallen. The PCs discover one item every 10 minutes they spend searching — a gem worth 10d10 × 10 gp, a +1 truesilver melee weapon, a random potion, a random minor wondrous item.

After finding all four items, or after 40 minutes of searching, the PCs find nothing else.

EL: 13

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the wailing golem activate immediately and allow the tower to use each spell twice per day. To decrease the challenge, the tower can use one of the listed spells, once per day.

Wailing Stone Golem: CR 12; Large construct; HD 14d10+30; hp 107;

Init -1; Spd 20 ft.; AC 26; touch 8, flat-footed 26; Base Atk +10; Grp +23; Atk +18 melee (2d10+9, slam); Full Atk +18 melee (2d10+9, 2 slams); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Slow, spell-like abilities, wail; SQ Construct traits, damage reduction 10/adamantine, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to magic, low-light vision; AL N; SV Fort +4, Ref +3, Will +4; Str 29, Dex 9, Con —, Int —, Wis 11, Cha 1.

Skills and Feats: —

Slow (Su): A wailing stone golem can use a slow effect, as the spell, as a free action once every 2 rounds. The effect has a range of 10 ft. and a duration of 7 rounds, requiring a DC 17 Will save to negate. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—feather fall. Caster Level 12th.

Wail (Su): Whenever the golem engages in melee combat, it lets out a tremendous wail lasting until the melee ends. Like a shrieker, the sound attracts nearby creatures disposed to investigating it.

Immunity to Magic (Ex): A wailing stone golem is immune to any spell or spell-like ability that allows spell resistance. In addition, certain spells and effects function differently against the creature, as noted below.

A transmute rock to mud spell slows a wailing stone golem (as the slow spell) for 2d6 rounds, with no saving throw, while transmute mud to rock heals all of its lost hit points.

A stone to flesh spell does not actually change the golem's structure but negates its damage reduction and immunity to magic for 1 full round.

Construction: A wailing stone golem's body is chiseled from the petrified victims of gorgons, weighing at least 3,000 pounds. The stone must be of exceptional quality, and costs 5,000 gp. Assembling the body requires a DC 17 Craft (sculpting) check or a DC 17 Craft (stonemasonry) check.

CL 14th; Craft Construct (see MM), antimagic field, alarm, geas/quest, symbol of stunning, caster must be at least 14th level; Price 90,000 gp; Cost 50,000 gp + 3,400 XP.

TRUESILVER

Truesilver is a scarce and unusual alloy of mithral and silver. Nearly never worked, truesilver loses its special properties, becoming normal silver, if ever touched by a creature other than an outsider. If forged into tools, the metal is just as good as steel; it does not impose the –1 penalty on damage rolls like alchemical silver. Furthermore, wholly or partially constructed truesilver enhances magic items with spell effects from the enchantment school increase save DCs for these spell effects by +2.

Weapons or armors fashioned from truesilver are always masterwork and confer a +2 enhancement bonus to attack and damage rolls, and a +1 enhancement bonus to the armor or shields armor bonus to AC. The masterwork cost is included in the prices listed below. Truesilver has 10 hit points per inch of thickness and hardness 10. Magical enhancement overlaps, does not stack, with these bonuses.

Truesilver is also useful as a material component for casting spells with the good descriptor. A caster may add 25 gp of truesilver per spell level as a material component any good spell he casts. Doing so increases the caster level by +2 and increases the save DCs by +2. Truesilver is also an exceptional material for constructing holy weapons, for it takes good spells easier than other materials during the enchanting process. When an imbuing a truesilver weapon with the holy special ability, the enchantment counts as only a +1 bonus instead of +2. In addition, these weapons deal an extra +1d6 damage against evil creatures. For purposes of overcoming damage reduction, truesilver weapons function as good and silver weapons.

Type of Truesilver Item	Item Cost Modifier
Ammunition	+10 gp
Light Armor	+1,500 gp
Medium Armor	+6,000 gp
Heavy Armor	+13,500 gp
Shield	+1,500 gp
Other Items	+750 gp/lb.

D2. STATUE OF SUPPLICATION

At the edge of the rocky outcropping kneels a statue of a man in carved from grey stone. Much of its body is worn and chipped, seemingly ancient. Its head hangs on its chest, perhaps in prayer or sleep, concealing its facial features for the most part. Behind it rise three stone mounds. Broken stone, trash and other debris litter the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The statue is a wailing golem (hp 107, see Room D1). The derro in Room D3 positioned the golem here to warn of any intruders. Unfortunately, this golem is old and unreliable, being a prototype for those on the sentry towers, and does not function properly, only noticing intruders half of the time. Chtrax, lacking the inclination or the resources to construct a replacement, temporarily positioned a number of derro guards in a hollow pillar of rock (see Room D3 for details) to reinforce the weakened defenses.

Encounter Condition: Fear 18

Tactics: When the PCs step onto the landing, the golem rolls a DC 10 Wisdom check to notice. If it fails the check, it does not animate unless the PCs touch it. Should this happen, it immediately animates and starts to wail. Due to the golem's age, it sometimes gets confused. Each round, the golem must make a DC 10 Wisdom check or suffer the effects of confusion for the round. If not confused, it attacks with slow, catching as many PCs as it can. On the next round, it grabs a slowed PC and hurls them into the smoking lava below. It alternates between slow and grabbing PCs until it slows all the PCs.

This construct is under orders to fight to the death.

The wailing attracts the attention of the derro guards in Room D3. One of the derro activates the trap at Room D6, while his comrades ready their repeating light crossbows. On the second round of combat, the derro target the PCs with poisoned bolts.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one wailing golem. To decrease the challenge, reduce the number of derro by –2 or increase the time it takes them to respond by 1d3 rounds.

Slow (Su): A wailing stone golem can use a slow effect, as the spell, as a free action once every 2 rounds. The effect has a range of 10 ft. and a duration of 7 rounds, requiring a DC 17 Will save to negate. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—feather fall. Caster Level 12th.

Wail (Su): Whenever the golem engages in melee combat, it lets out a tremendous wail lasting until the melee ends. Like a shrieker, the sound attracts nearby creatures disposed to investigating it.

Immunity to Magic (Ex): A wailing stone golem is immune to any spell or spell-like ability that allows spell resistance. In addition, certain spells and effects function differently against the creature, as noted below.

A transmute rock to mud spell slows a wailing stone golem (as the slow spell) for 2d6 rounds, with no saving throw, while transmute mud to rock heals all of its lost hit points.

A stone to flesh spell does not actually change the golem's structure but negates its damage reduction and immunity to magic for 1 full round.

D3. TOWER OF DEATH

This irregular mound of stone is 25 ft. thick and 25 ft. high. Patches of multicolored fungus cling to its surface. Dark clefts and pirs in the mound of rock are common higher up, and several webs with scuttling spiders fill the smaller holes.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This mound of stone is actually hollow. A DC 25 Search check reveals a false stone, when pressed, opens a secret door. On the inside of the mound, stands a complex arrangement of scaffolding allowing access to the innumerable arrow slits overlooking the entire landing.

Ten derro guards (hp 16 each) man this watchtower. Chtrax positioned these unruly guards here to serve dual purposes. First, he wanted to ensure the golem functioned properly at Room D2, and if not, have a failsafe sentry. Second, confident the golem works, Chtrax wanted to remove these troublesome derro from the main operation.

Each derro knows some portion of the xill's plan, though none was smart enough to understand the significance. As no derro trusts the other, they have not collaborated to compare what they have learned. To make matters worse, the Chtrax impregnated them before exiling them to this remote tower. The master of the mines assumes the young xill take care of the problem for him.

Encounter Condition: Fear 18

Tactics: The derro are not especially watchful, and are lax about their duties. They spend most of their time arguing with each other, or muttering madly to themselves in their darkened corners. Assume the derro are not looking or listening for intruders, expecting the golem to alert them to trouble.

If the PCs open the secret door, make a loud noise outside, or do anything to draw attention, the derro rouse from their bickering and attack PCs using heavy repeating crossbows and poisoned bolts. One derro activates the trap at Room D6 by pulling a lever, and joins his comrades in shooting the PCs on the following round.

The arrow slits give the derro improved cover, granting a +8 circumstance bonus to AC and Reflex saves, Improved Evasion and a +10 bonus to Hide checks. There are so many arrow slits the derro can virtually attack any target with line of sight to the hollowed tower. Despite their isolation and exiled status, these derro are as crazy as any other derro, fighting to the death.

Should the PCs avoid this encounter and return later, a xill replaces one derro for each passing day.

Treasure: Inside the tower are four large barrels of water. There is also a ceramic pot filled with black adder venom, enough to coat 20 bolts.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 2 levels of rogue to each derro. To decrease the challenge, reduce the number of derro by 2.

★ Derro: CR 3; Small monstrous humanoid; HD 3d8+3; hp 16; Init +6; Spd 20 ft.; AC 19, touch 13, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +3; Grp -1; Atk +4 melee (1d4/19–20, short sword) or +6 ranged (1d6/19–20 plus poison, repeating light crossbow); Full Atk +4 melee (1d4/19–20, short sword) or +6 ranged (1d6/19–20 plus poison, repeating light crossbow); SA Poison use, spell-like abilities, sneak attack +1d6; SQ Madness, spell resistance 15 vulnerability to sunlight; AL CE; SV Fort +2, Ref +5, Will +6; Str 11, Dex 14, Con 13, Int 10, Wis 5*, Cha 16*.

Skills and Feats: Bluff +5, Hide +10, Listen +1, Move Silently +8; Blind-Fight, Improved Initiative.

Possessions: Studded leather armor, buckler, shortsword, black adder venom (2d4 doses), heavy repeating crossbows, bolts (10).

RACIAL TRAIT'S

Due to the number of derro, deep dwarves, and duergar in this complex, and in the interest of saving space, only the most relevant information is included in these stat blocks.

Deep Dwarf Traits (Ex): Deep dwarves possess the following racial traits.

- Weapon Familiarity: Deep dwarves treat dwarven waraxes and dwarven urgroshes as martial weapons, rather than exotic weapons.
- Stability: Deep dwarves are exceptionally stable on their feet. A deep dwarf has a +4 bonus on ability checks made to resist being bull rushed or tripped when standing on the ground (but not when climbing, flying, riding, or otherwise not standing firmly on the ground).
- +3 racial bonus on saving throws against poison. * Not reflected in the saving throw numbers given here.
- +3 racial bonus on saving throws against spells and spell-like effects. * Not reflected in the saving throw numbers given here.
- +1 racial bonus on attack rolls against orcs (including half-orcs) and goblinoids (including goblins, hobgoblins, and bugbears).
- +4 dodge bonus to Armor Class against creatures of the giant type (such as ogres, trolls, and hill giants).
- +2 racial bonus on Appraise checks that are related to stone or metal items.
- +2 racial bonus on Craft checks that are related to stone or metal.
- Light Sensitivity: Deep dwarves are dazzled in bright sunlight or within the radius of a daylight spell.

Derro Traits (Ex): Derro possess the following racial traits.

- Madness (Ex): Derro use their Charisma modifier on Will saves instead of their Wisdom modifier, and have immunity to confusion and insanity effects. A derro cannot be restored to sanity by any means short of a miracle or wish spell. * The racial madness of the derro provides a +6 bonus to their Charisma scores and a -6 penalty to their Wisdom scores. A derro restored to sanity gains 6 points of Wisdom and loses 6 points of Charisma.
- Poison Use (Ex): Derro typically carry 2d4 doses of greenblood oil or Medium monstrous spider venom, applying it to their crossbow bolts. Derro are not at risk of poisoning themselves when handling poison.
- Sneak Attack (Ex): Any time a derro's opponent is denied his Dexterity bonus to AC, or if a derro flanks his opponent, he deals an extra 1d6 points of damage. This ability is just like the rogue's sneak attack and subject to the same limitations.
- Spell-Like Abilities: At will—darkness, ghost sound; 1/day—daze (DC 13), sound burst (DC 15). Caster level 3rd. The save DCs are Charisma-based.
- Vulnerability to Sunlight (Ex): A derro takes 1 point of Constitution damage for every hour it is exposed to sunlight, and it dies if its Constitution score reaches 0. Lost Constitution points are recovered at the rate of 1 per every 24-hour period spent underground or otherwise sheltered from the sun.
- Skills: Derro have a +4 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks.

Duergar Traits (Ex): Duergar possess the following racial traits.

- Weapon Familiarity: Duergar treat dwarven waraxes and dwarven urgroshes as martial weapons, rather than exotic weapons.
- Stability: Duergar are exceptionally stable on their feet. A duergar has a +4 bonus on ability checks made to resist being bull rushed or tripped when standing on the ground (but not when climbing, flying, riding, or otherwise not standing firmly on the ground).
- +2 racial bonus on saving throws against spells and spell-like effects. * Not reflected in the saving throw numbers given here.
- +1 racial bonus on attack rolls against orcs (including halforcs) and goblinoids (including goblins, hobgoblins, and bugbears).
- +4 dodge bonus to Armor Class against creatures of the giant type (such as ogres, trolls, and hill giants).
- +2 racial bonus on Appraise checks that are related to stone or metal items.
- +2 racial bonus on Craft checks that are related to stone or metal.
- Immunity to paralysis, phantasms, and poison.
- +2 racial bonus on saves against spells and spell-like abilities.
- Spell-Like Abilities: 1/day—enlarge person and invisibility as a wizard of twice the duergar's class level (minimum caster level 3rd); these abilities affect only the duergar and whatever it carries.
- Light Sensitivity: Duergar are dazzled in bright sunlight or within the radius of a daylight spell.

D4. MAD SCRAWL

This column of stone reaches 30-ft. high before tapering off into a sharp break. It is apparent this structure was once taller as evidenced by the debris and rubble littering the place. Otherwise, the mound appears commonplace.

Encounter: This earthen column, along with Room D5, once supported a roof, but the recent instability of the caverns caused it to collapse littering this Room with debris. The uncertain footing and debris cuts movement in half. PCs investigating the Room notice with a DC 20 Search check or DC 25 Spot check graffiti on the southern face of the pillar. PCs capable of reading Undercommon make out the following words: "Hurt," "Help me," "It's inside," "Curse all my traitorous brothers and their foul master!" A fleeing duergar driven mad by his captivity found he could not escape for the lava flow, and so in resignation, carved words onto the surface of the rock. The xill egg inside him burst and the xill consumed his body, dumping the bones into the lava before wandering through the uninhabited mines.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 6

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

Scaling: N/A

D5. TRAPPED COLUMN

This tower of rock extends upward some thirty ft., where it still supports part of the collapsed ceiling once sheltering this place. Rubble and bones litter the floor, making the footing uncertain. Something metallic on the eastern side of this column reflects the light emitted by the lava.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The metallic sheen originates from a permanent image (DC 20 Will save disbelieves) of a longsword stuck into the rock. The sword is a lure to ensnare the foolish and greedy, for just above the illusion is a greater glyph of warding (blast).

Greater Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 6; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (greater glyph of warding (blast)), 16th-level cleric, 8d8 sonic, DC 17 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 31; Disable Device DC 31.

Encounter Condition: Drafty

Tactics: If the golem or the PCs actions did not alert the derro in Room D3, triggering the glyph alerts them. The derro respond as described in Room D3, activating the trap at Room D6, and firing poisoned bolts at the PCs from positions of improved cover.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6.

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the greater glyph of warding trap with an acid fog trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the greater glyph of warding trap to 6d8.

D6. TRAPPED GATE

In the center of the convex surface of unworked stone is a 10-ft. wide portal opening into an immense gallery. On either side of the gate, bas-reliefs of derro push towards the opening as if trying to shut it. The lintel features bleached and cracked white skulls sitting in a row overtop the whole width of the gate.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Unless the PCs alert or otherwise engage the derro at Room D3, the trap in this gate does not function. The derro leave the gate trap disengaged because it kills indiscriminately, and instead of killing their replacements, they opt to leave it disabled. However, combat with the derro guarantees the activation of the trap. The trap activates whenever anyone steps through the gate, causing the walls to slam shut, pulping anyone caught between. The gate automatically resets after each attack, so should someone remain in the Room, it triggers again, dealing damage once more. The gate continues to slam shut and reset as long as anything occupies the Room.

• Crushing Gate Trap: CR 10; mechanical; proximity trigger; automatic reset; no attack roll required (18d6, crush); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 25.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs move past the tower of death, Room D3, and the derro inside are aware of them, the derro activate this trap in the hopes of pasting a few of the invaders, while peppering them with arrows.

The slamming gate creates a lot of noise, certain to attract wandering monsters. Immediately roll for a Random Encounter each time the trap activates.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of the crushing gate trap to 22d8. To decrease the challenge, have the trap jam after the second activation.

D7 THROUGH D20. OLD MINES

Derro rebels control this area. Their racial madness has worsened in isolation, thus derro are exceptionally paranoid and delusional to say the least. Souiji sporadically sends out raiding parties into sections controlled by Chtrax to kill formians, derro, slaves and anything else getting in their way. The rebels use hit-and-run tactics to avoid capture, knowing, despite their madness, they are far outnumbered.

The derro trapped all the corridors leading to their warrens. The traps here are vicious, resulting in countless formian deaths. There are signs of formian remains throughout; their heads decorate the tunnels as grisly trophies.

Souiji, a savant, leads these derro in their guerrilla war. Delusional beyond all the rest, he trusts no one, not even his fellow rebels. Once a week, he sacrifices one of his servants to the goddess of the derro, in a futile effort to forestall the inevitable demise they all face when the xill eggs inside them hatch. Souiji stole a map of warding (see Room D19) from Chtrax before fleeing from the Great Hall. He uses it at the start of each day, but unfortunately, it has only six charges left so he knows his time is running out. The effects of the spell cover all encounter Rooms beginning in Room D8 through Room D24, with particular effects included in the Encounter below. Souiji has six charges starting on Day 0, and all effects attributed to the guards and wards spell end on Day 6.

If the PCs have not vanquished Souiji and his minions by Day 2, the miners in Room D22 accidentally break through the wall to Room D27. The stone giant chief in this uncovered Room leads an expedition to kill the rogue derro, bringing 3 additional stone giants, a formian taskmaster with 2 dominated destrachans and 3 formian warriors. Inside the old tunnels, the giants quickly dispatch all derro they find there and establish 3 stone giants as guards. The giants then invade Souiji's sanctuary on Day 6, killing the savant and his remaining minions. Alternatively, if the PCs dispatch the stone giant chief in Room D27 before destroying the rebel derro, the miners conceal the breach and use this exit to mount raids throughout the rest of the complex.

All Rooms here are dark unless otherwise specified. In addition, dense fog fills Room D8 through Room D24, providing concealment (20% miss chance) to all those within the shifting mists, and reducing vision, including darkvision, to 10 ft. The walls are unworked stone and the ceiling averages 10 ft. in height, while smaller, narrow tunnels are only 5 ft. tall. Bones, trash, metal scraps and spider webs litter the corridors and Rooms, making charging impossible and forcing PCs to succeed a DC 15 Balance check for run actions. The air stinks of rot.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Roll for a Random Encounter once per hour.

1d20	Encounter
1	A loud shriek echoes down the corridors.
2-14	Nothing
15	A beheaded derro corpse lies slumped over. The taskmasters cut off their heads to prevent speaking with the dead .
16	Day 0 through Day 2: 1d3 Ankhegs hunting. Day 3 and beyond: One destrachan fleeing the stone giants.
17	One derro sentry watches for intruders. He is Unfriendly and sounds an alarm if he sees aggressive PCs.
18	One formian taskmaster and 1d3 formian warriors hunt for derro rebels. They attack the PCs on sight.
19	1d3 xill carrying the body of a dead duergar slave.
20	Tremors shake the corridor, causing fine streams of dust to spill from cracks in the ceiling. Smoke, Tremors 20.

D7. OLD DERRO ENCAMPMENT

This massive gallery houses the ruins of an ancient village. The buildings once filling this room now stand in ruins, shattered by chunks of fallen rock and massive stalactites. Pools of brackish water glisten in the darkness, and overhead you see just the tips of more stalactites emerging from the darkness of the concealed ceiling. Tunnels lead off into the fog-filled darkness, as distant grinding noises echo from one of the corridors ahead.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room lays in utter ruin, destroyed by the flooding and the earthquakes that ravaged the entire complex. Individual buildings lay shattered preventing entry altogether. Random Encounters in this Room should be more frequent than recommended, as wandering creatures are prone to be here as they move to the other mines. Roll for Random Encounters every 15 minutes.

Searching the ruins uncovers the remains of derro. Most of the corpses are skeletal, but some are preserved. In addition to the bodies of the derro, there are bones of a destrachan, a few digesters and even a stone giant. Most of the corpses lack the capacity to speak if subject to speaking with dead, though the preserved corpses could impart the following with the appropriate questions.

Where are the derro now? Dead. (As far as these corpses know, the floods wiped out all of the derro.)

What were you digging for? I do not know. (The derro savants commanded their followers to dig, after receiving an enigmatic vision. With their destruction, their original motives are now lost.)

The corpses' response to any other questions results with confusion or ignorance.

PCs tracking and succeeding a DC 5 Survival check identify significant traffic from the North to the South. A DC 20 Survival check, with the Track feat, indicates light traffic to the Southwest tunnel.

Encounter Condition: Drafty

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: PCs searching the ruins may uncover treasure in addition to the moldering corpses and trash. If a PC devotes an hour to searching and succeeds a DC 25 Search check, he finds one of the following items: a potion of good hope in a metal flask, an arcane scroll (darkvision, fly, lesser globe of invulnerability; caster level 7th), flawed sapphire (635 gp) and pair of gauntlets of ogre strength.

It is possible for the PCs to uncover more treasure, but the likelihood of searching this Room unmolested is slim. In addition to the increased likelihood of Random Encounters, searching this Room is noisy, so roll for an additional Random Encounter after 30 minutes and whenever the PCs make a loud noise. Subtract 1 from the roll (minimum of 1).

EL: Varies

Scaling: N/A

D8. TRAPPED HALLWAY

Fog fills this corridor, muting light, and making footing uncertain. Broken spider webs hang from the ceiling, and bones litter the floor. The corridor extends as far as you can see.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Halfway down this tunnel, 30 ft. from the entrance, is a large hole in the ceiling. Several weeks ago, a pair of derro miners uncovered an unusual lump of stone covered in runes. One of them foolishly traced the rune and found himself splattered on the ceiling far above, having unlocked the stone's reverse gravity effect. Souiji saw this find as a boon granted by the derro goddess. Experimentation with the stone revealed he could not deactivate it, but devised a way to put its magical properties to work.

The exiled savant commanded miners to dig a 40 ft. hole in the ceiling of the entrance corridor. With sovereign glue, Souiji affixed metal rungs to the wall beneath, and glued the enchanted rock at the top of the hole in the ceiling. In the morning, he places a magic mouth in the pit through his casting of guards and wards. The result of his ingenuity is a permanent trap functioning to ensnare enemies and alert the derro to intruders.

Earlier, a destrachan (hp 60) had the misfortune to find itself ensnared by the trap. In its frustration, it used its destructive harmonics to blast away at the walls of its imprisonment. Its rage made escape all the more difficult. By the time the PCs discover the reverse pit trap, the destrachan is enraged, ready to kill. It lashes out at anyone who passes beneath it, or falls inside.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Secretly make a DC 20 Spot check for any PCs moving 25 ft. down the corridor. A successful check indicates the PC notices a series of metal rungs set into the western wall. PCs who see the rungs, may bypass the trap easily, by succeeding a DC 5 Climb check. However, the destrachan, with blindsight, attacks the PC with its destructive harmonics attack. PCs falling into the pit have to contend with the enraged monster as well as taking damage from the fall. Trapped PCs can climb up the walls to escape the ceiling pit by succeeding a DC 25 Climb check.

PCs hitting the bottom of the pit trigger the magic mouth created by the guards and wards spell. It babbles in a terrifically loud voice "There are intruders invading the sacred halls of Souiji the mighty." The mouth repeats the message, but finishes with "There are intruders..." Once the magic mouth ends, roll for wandering monsters. Allow the derro in Room D22 a DC 25 Listen check to detect the noise.

If the derro hear the screams, two of them move to the edge of the pit to investigate. With the random derro death, formian patrols and the instability of the caverns, if the investigating derro do not return, the rest continue working, fearful of Souiji's rage.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the depth of the fall to 80 ft. To decrease the challenge, replace the destrachan with a digester.

♣ Destrachan: CR 8; Large aberration; HD 8d8+24; hp 60; Init +5; Spd 30 ft.; AC 18 (-1 size, +1 Dex, +8 natural), touch 10, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +6; Grp +14; Atk Claw +9 melee (1d6+4); Full Atk 2 claws +9 melee (1d6+4); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Destructive harmonics; SQ Blindsight 100 ft., immunities, protection from sonics; AL NE; SV Fort +5, Ref +5, Will +10; Str 18, Dex 12, Con 16, Int 12, Wis 18, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Hide +8, Listen +25, Move Silently +7, Survival +9; Dodge, Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes

Destructive Harmonics (Su): A destrachan can blast sonic energy in a cone up to 80 ft. long. It can also use this attack to affect any creatures or objects within a 30-ft. radius. It can tune the harmonics of this destructive power to affect different types of targets. All save DCs are Charisma-based.

Flesh: Disrupting tissue and rending bone, this attack deals 4d6 points of damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Nerves: A destrachan can focus its harmonics to knock out foes rather than slay them. This attack deals 6d6 points of nonlethal damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Material: When using this form of harmonics, a destrachan chooses wood, stone, metal, or glass. All objects made of that material within the area must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or shatter. Objects (or portions of objects) that have up to 30 hit points are potentially affected by this attack.

Blindsight (Ex): A destrachan can use hearing to ascertain all foes within 100 ft. as a sighted creature would.

Immunities: Destrachans have immunity to gaze attacks, visual effects, illusions, and other attack forms that rely on sight.

Protection from Sonics (Ex): While they can be affected by loud noises and sonic spells (such as ghost sound or silence), destrachans are less vulnerable to sonic attacks (+4 circumstance bonus on all saves) because they can protect their ears. A destrachan whose sense of hearing is impaired is effectively blinded, and all targets are treated as having total concealment.

Skills: A destrachan has a +10 racial bonus on Listen checks.

D9. FUSILLADE OF DARTS

Though the roiling mists conceal much, the obscene paintings on the walls of this tunnel are clear. The scenes depict imagery of blue-skinned dwarves sacrificing humanoids to warped idols, great dragons with oily black scales breathing death on fleeing orcs, and grotesque scenes of demons and devils cavorting with mortals. The pictures cover the tunnel, floors, walls and ceiling, leading to a disturbing sense of being present in the pictured hell.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A talented, but misguided and mad derro artist painted this tunnel to conceal the activation trigger of a lethal trap, firing a hail of poisoned darts. The mechanism is simple, anytime 5 or more pounds of weight touches the sensitive pressure plate a fusillade of darts fires up from the floor. Given the density of the paintings and the persistent fog, this trap has claimed its fair share of formian hunters and treasure seekers. Even the derro have a difficult time remembering exactly where the pressure plate lays.

♣ Fusillade of Deathblade Darts: CR 9; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; Atk +18 ranged (1d4+1 plus poison, dart); poison; (deathblade poison, DC 20 Fortitude save resists, 1d6 Con/2d6 Con); multiple targets (1d8 darts per target in a 10-ft.-by-10-ft. area); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 25.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: PCs can find the trap by succeeding a DC 32 (the fog adds a +5 to the DC) Search check. Triggering the trap causes a number of darts to fire at the PC stepping on the plate. Once per day, a single derro from Room D20 comes to remove any corpses killed by the trap.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace deathblade with wyvern poison. To decrease the challenge, replace deathblade with greenblood oil.

D10. INTERSECTION

Roiling clouds of mist fill this intersection impeding your vision. Odd noises, clacking sounds, and an occasional groan sound from ahead. Through the gloom, you see three tunnels leading away. All of the tunnels are dark and murky, filled with more of the same clammy fog. In the center of the three tunnels is a headless granite statue of a robed man with arms upraised and pointing in your direction. Then, you notice several torches bobbing down one of the tunnels. Shortly after their appearance, they disappear around a corner.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Several things happen as soon as the PCs enter this Room. First, their appearance triggers the dancing lights created by guards and wards. These bobbing lights appear as torches. Souiji programmed the dancing lights to appear as soon as a living creature enters the intersection at the edge of Room D11 and wait there for three rounds before moving back into the Room and disappearing. The derro savant hopes to lure intruders to the suggestion and sinking cloud in Room D11 in an effort to distract and destroy them before they get too deep into his territory.

Second, the statue in the hall always faces the largest number of PCs, pivoting on its base. The derro here constructed it to frustrate and confuse intruders, hoping to stall them long enough to mount a counterstrike. However, with the derro rebels' numbers depleted, the function of the statue serves little more than as a distraction. Not trapped, it carries an enchantment similar to phantom trap making PCs believe a trap is there.

Third, this intersection features the confusion effect guards and wards. The confusion makes it 50% probable that the PCs believe they are going in the opposite direction from the one chosen. This feature of guards and wards is an enchantment mind-affecting effect, with no saving throw, but spell resistance does apply.

A PC with the Track feat, who succeeds at a DC 29 Survival check notices the tracks of Small creatures moving from the hall leading to Room D22 to the hall leading to Room D13.

Encounter Condition: Draffy

Tactics: When the statue moves on its base, it grinds loudly, echoing down the tunnels. The derro in Room D22 are accustomed to the random noises, but if the PCs are indecisive and test the statue by moving around, three derro from Room D22 and four more from Room D20 come to investigate.

D11. HASTILY PATCHED HOLE

The tunnels slightly widens before terminating at a cracked and fissured wall. Charred carcasses litter the floor here along with small piles of slag and ash. The room stinks of burned meat and rotten eggs. Bright light shines through the cracks of the far wall. You think you hear whistling of wind as well.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A week ago, a team of derro rebels searching for a way out, accidentally broke through this wall to the lava beyond. The Room filled with the molten rock and magma mephits killing all the miners instantly. Souiji realized this Room could serve as an excellent trap. He commanded duergar slaves to erect a shoddy retaining wall, just strong enough to keep the lava out, but easily destroyed with a well-placed hit. Then, he commanded the duergar to chisel away the floor near the wall to allow more lava to fill in should the wall fall.

With the Room complete, Souiji uses the suggestion from guards and wards to suggest to the first person entering the Room, what lays beyond the wall is in fact the way out, urging them to escape. Beyond the wall the gust of wind blows the stinking cloud at the wall, so when the wall collapses, the wind blows the stinking cloud inside along with the lava.

The first person entering the Room must succeed a DC 19 Will save or take a suggestion to break down the wall and escape the dungeon. The wall has 15 hp and 5 hardness.

Encounter Condition: Tremors 18

Tactics: If the PC reduces the wall's hit points to 0, it shatters and collapses, releasing the stinking cloud into the first 20 ft. of this Room and forcing all inside the area of effect to succeed a DC 19 Fortitude save or become nauseated for as long as they remain inside the effected area and for 1d4+1 rounds afterward. In addition to the effects of the spell, lava splashes all PCs in the cloud's effect, dealing 6d6 points of damage, DC 15 Reflex save for half.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add 1d6 magma mephits and 1d4 steam mephits to the lava. To decrease the challenge, reduce the lava splash to 4d6 points of damage.

D12. SCYTHE GAUNTLET

This tunnel features the same clinging mists encountered since you first entered these mines. Littering the length of the tunnel are dismembered limbs and heads of strange insect creatures, and stains of green ichor splashed in random patterns throughout. The tunnel continues ahead beyond the limits of your vision.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This tunnel heads south before turning back to the east. Where it turns, three trip wires stretch across the width of the tunnel, concealed by the mists. Pressure of any kind triggers the trap, causing razor sharp scythes to snap out of hidden recesses and slash anyone in their way. On the following round, poison gas mixes with the fog, filling the air with deadly maddening poison.

A derro name RTobn designed this devious trap to impress his master with his ingenuity. Souiji rewarded the enterprising derro by letting him test the trap himself. A PC succeeding a DC 20 Search check finds the rotting severed remains of the derro inventor near the tripwires. Souiji permits no one smarter than he to serve him.

Finding the trip wires is difficult in the poor lighting and the thick fog. Worse, all three wires are at different heights and it only takes triggering one of them to set off the trap. PCs can find the central wire by succeeding a DC 25 Search check. If they succeed by 5 or more, they find the other two wires.

Tripping any one of the three wires can activate the trap. Two wall scythes lash out from hidden recesses for each 10-ft section of the hall's length. Each blade carries a virulent form of filth fever having noincubation time and dealing damage immediately on a failed saving throw. On the following round, the hall fills with poison gas. The gas disperses three rounds after the trap triggers. Roll randomly per 10-ft. section to see determine the scythes' targets.

♣ Filth Fever Wall Scythe Traps (2 per 10 ft. section): CR 8; mechanical; touch trigger; manual reset; Atk +16 melee (2d4+8 plus poison, scythe); poison (Filth fever—bite, Fortitude DC 11, incubation period 1d3 days, damage 1d3 Dex and 1d3 Con); Search DC 24; Disable Device DC 19.

♣ Poison Gas Trap: CR 3; mechanical; timed trigger; manual reset; multiple targets (all within corridor); poison (insanity mist, DC 15 Fortitude save resists 1d4 Wis/2d6 Wis); Search DC 30 and DC 20; Disable Device DC 20.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Though the scythe blades create a lot of noise, scraping out of the hidden recesses, the derro in this section are accustomed to the trap's activation and are confident in its ability to dispatch intruders.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 14

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the disease with deathblade poison. To decrease the challenge, reduce the number of scythe traps to one per 10 ft. section and eliminate the disease effect.

D13. BURROW

The long tunnel opens into a wide chamber clouded by swirling mist preventing you from gauging its actual size. Through the haze, you see debris consisting of sharp rocks and bones litters the floor. There is a definite stench of rotten meat mixed with another sharp and acrid smell. To the right, warm light shines through the fog, and to the left are sounds of metal ringing on stone.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room serves as a large intersection connecting several smaller tunnels leading to the various lairs for the rogue derro controlling this section. In the southern end of this Room are three 5-ft. diameter tunnels housing three ankhegs (hp 41, 27, 26). The derro befriended these beasts and now employ them as guards. The light the PCs notice emanates from Room D14 where the lava has collapsed some of the floor. Otherwise, the fog effect of guards and wards permeates this chamber concealing other exits from this Room.

This Room also carries the same confusion effect as found in Room D10. The confusion effect makes it 50% probable that the PCs believe they are going in the opposite direction from the one they chose. This feature of guards and wards is an enchantment mind-affecting effect, with no saving throw, but allows spell resistance.

The floor in this Room is worse than other areas in this section. The poor footing reduces speed to half, making charge attacks and running impossible.

Encounter Condition: Fog 10

Tactics: Unless a derro accompanies the PCs — these creatures learned to distinguish the vibrations made by their masters from other tremors — the ankhegs detect intruders as soon as they enter the Room. The ankhegs squirm out from their tunnels and attack the nearest PC. While in the narrow tunnels, they take a –4 penalty to attack rolls and AC, and move at half speed. Once out of the tunnels, the ankhegs move at normal speed having adapted to the treacherous floor. These creatures fight to the death.

Sounds of combat attract the attention of the derro in Room D20. They come to investigate in 1d3 rounds. Allow Souiji (Room D19), a DC 11 Listen check to hear the sounds of the conflict. If he succeeds, he casts a few protective spells in preparation of an invader breach.

If the PCs explore this Room after Day 2, remove the ankhegs and replace them with 4 formian warrior (hp 26 each) sentries.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6 (10 with derro from Room D20)

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three ankhegs. To decrease the challenge, increase the number of rounds it takes for derro to investigate to 1d6 rounds.

✦ Ankheg: CR 3; Large magical beast; HD 3d10+12; hp 41, 27, 26; Init +0; Spd 30 ft., burrow 20 ft.; AC 18, touch 9, flat-footed 18; Base Atk +3; Grp +12; Atk +7 melee (2d6+7 plus 1d4 acid, bite); Full Atk +7 melee (2d6+7 plus 1d4 acid, bite); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Improved grab, spit acid; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., low-light vision, tremorsense 60 ft.; AL N; SV Fort +6, Ref +3, Will +2; Str 21, Dex 10, Con 17, Int 1, Wis 13, Cha 6.

Skills and Feats: Climb +8, Listen +6, Spot +3; Alertness, Toughness.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, an ankheg must hit with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If the ankheg is damaged after grabbing its prey, it retreats backward down its tunnel at its land speed (not its burrow speed), dragging the victim with it.

Spit Acid (Ex): 30-ft. line, once every 6 hours; damage 4d4 acid, Reflex DC 14 half. One such attack depletes the ankheg's acid supply for 6 hours. It cannot spit acid or deal acid damage during this time. The save DC is Constitution-based.

An ankheg does not use this ability unless it is desperate or frustrated. It most often spits acid when reduced to fewer than half its full normal hit points or when it has not successfully grabbed an opponent.

D14. PLAYED-OUT MINE

The narrow tunnel opens into a bright cave, heated to uncomfortable levels by a mass of lava fed by a hole in the wall, where you see a sea of magma, with Small creatures swimming through the molten rock, tossing globules of magma at wispy imps flying near the lava's surface. Steam clouds much of the room, concealing the details, though it is clear the footing is unusual, with ripples and waves common to flowstone. Beyond the pool of smoking magma is another tunnel leading off into more gloom, lit by the feeble light of a fallen torch. A slight tremor shakes the chamber causing streams of dust to fall from above and a rock to splash into the magma. As soon as the tremor stops, you hear someone call out to you from the darkened cave across the pool of lava.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Duergar miners, like the ones in Room D11, accidentally broke through the outer wall of this complex flooding the Room with magma. The retreating slaves fled down another tunnel where they died in Room D16. Unable to fill the breach, the derro in the rest of the section leave this Room alone fearing the lava's spread throughout the rest of the tunnels.

Each day, Souiji places a magic mouth inside the small tunnel on the opposite side of the pool of magma. Three rounds after a non-derro enters the Room, the spell calls for help (in Common) saying, "help... I'm trapped... oh please help me," before falling quiet. Lying on the floor in the tunnel's bend is a small globe of light created by the guards and wards dancing lights effect to appear as a dropped torch. The effect of this is to lure invaders across the lava to expose them to the concealed stinking cloud triggering on their crossing.

Crossing the pool of lava should be relatively simple for PCs of this level, as they probably have the means to fly across it. However, crossing the lava triggers the stinking cloud laying just beneath the surface of the lava, causing the lava to bubble up and splash all crossing PCs dealing 2d6 points of fire damage and exposing those PCs to the effects of the stinking cloud. PCs in the area of effect must succeed DC 19 Fortitude saves or become nauseated for as long as they remain ovetop of the lava and 1d4+1 rounds after they leave.

Encounter Condition: [Deep Darkness]

Tactics: The derro ignore any sounds coming from this Room, as they are used to intruders falling victim to this trap.

D15. FLOW

Beyond the rift in the wall, it is clear the apparent sea of lava is in fact a wide river of the molten rock flowing sluggishly into an enormous cave farther downstream. Partly submerged in the flow is an odd device, similar to a wagon, but with a large glass canister, several burned hoses and a cone at the end. The lava conceals the rest of the machine.

Corpses crowd the top of the device. Some of the bodies are obviously missing legs or arms, charred by the flow. Despite the condition of the bodies, and the burned hoses, the machine seems intact.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The "wagon" in the lava is a magical device called a sounder (see Room D53 for details). The derro use it to determine depth and direction while digging. The gnome constructed the machine, but with the unusual qualities of the mines, it works sporadically, occasionally unleashing a stroke of raw electricity, killing one or two slaves per discharge. This sounder and the unfortunate slaves fell into the lava at Room D11, and floated downstream before an adamantine spar beneath the surface of the magma snared it. The corpses have all succumbed to poisonous vapors, starvation and slashing lava.

If the PCs cross the lava, they attract the attention of 1d6 magma mephits and 1d6 steam mephits (hp 13 each), who attack at once. See page 14 for details on the magma.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The mephits attack any PC crossing the stream. The magma mephits use pyrotechnics on the first round to create clouds of smoke, while the steam mephits employ blur to mask their positions before closing in for the attack. Thereafter, both types of mephits use breath weapon attacks to hit as many opponents as possible.

Should the combat continue more than four rounds, 1d3 magma and steam mephits come along to join the combat. More show up every four rounds. If the PCs flee, the mephits do not pursue them.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have mephit reinforcements arrive each round. To decrease the challenge, increase the number of rounds it takes for the mephit reinforcements to arrive to eight rounds.

◆ Magma Mephit: CR 3; Small outsider (fire, extraplanar); HD 3d8; hp 13; Init +5; Spd 30 ft., fly 50 ft. Breath Weapon (Su): 10-ft. cone of magma, damage 1d4 fire, Reflex DC 12 half. Living creatures that fail their saves are tormented by burned skin and seared eyes unless they have immunity to fire or are otherwise protected. This effect imposes a -4 penalty to AC and a -2 penalty on attack rolls for 3 rounds. The save DC is constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Spell-Like Abilities: Once per hour, a magma mephit can use shapechange to take the form of a pool of lava 3 ft. in diameter and 6 inches deep. The mephit's damage reduction improves to 20/magic when in this form. The mephit can't attack while in lava form but can use other spell-like abilities. It can move at a speed of 10 ft., but it can't run. In this form the mephit can pass through small holes or narrow openings, even mere cracks. The pool's touch ignites flammable materials such as paper, straw, or dry wood.

Once per day a magma mephit can use pyrotechnics (DC 14). It can use itself as the fire source without harm. Caster level 6th. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Fast Healing (Ex): A magma mephit heals only if it is touching magma, lava, or a flame at least as large as a torch.

This effect imposes a -4 penalty to AC and a -2 penalty on attack rolls for 3 rounds. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Spell-Like Abilities: Once per hour a steam mephit can surround itself with a plume of vapor, duplicating the effect of a blur spell (caster level 3rd). Once per day it can create a rainstorm of boiling water that affects a 20-ft.-square area. Living creatures caught in the storm take 2d6 points of fire damage (Reflex DC 14 half; caster level 6th). This ability is the equivalent of a 2nd-level spell. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Fast Healing (Ex): A steam mephit heals only if it is touching boiling water or is in a hot, humid area.

D16. THE DEAD

Beyond the pool of smoking lava is an irregular tunnel extending forty ft. into swirling mists before switching back towards the west. At the end of the western tunnel lie five or six bodies in a heap. The bodies are all grey-skinned dwarves and most have fatal burns. A few, though, have empty cavities in their abdomens, as if something ate its way out from the inside.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: After the derro breached the wall in Room D14, those not killed outright by the lava fled here. Most of the derro succumbed to their burns, but a few tried to dig their way free. Before they were able to make much progress, the xill eggs hatched inside them and the pupae ate its way free. Nothing lives here now.

PCs find nothing of value on the bodies. Most dropped their tools in their haste to get away from the danger. A PC succeeding a DC 20 Search check discovers bloody scratches on the wall. Written in Undercommon, the markings read, "From within...."

Encounter Condition: Fear 18

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A few tools are scattered about the Room, but nothing of value is found here.

D17. BARRIER

The door to this Room is closed.

This short mineshaft extends eight ft. before ending at a wall of natural stone.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Souiji wards the door leading to the derro encampment and storage facilities by concealing the door with the lost door feature of guards and wards. Arcane lock also protects the door. Even if the PCs manage to remove both magical wards, they still need to bypass the mechanical lock and the trap to get through. Finally, touching the door triggers the alarm, alerting Souiji to the presence of intruders.

◆ Arcane Locked Iron Door: 2 in. thick; hardness 10; hp 60; Open Locks DC 30; Break DC 38 (triggers trap, below)

◆ Door Trap: CR 9; mechanical; touch trigger; automatic reset; multiple targets (all within 5 ft.); poison (burnt other fumes, DC 18 Fortitude save resists 1 Con/3d6 Con); Search DC 30; Disable Device DC 25.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If Souiji did not hear the sounds of combat in Room D13, touching the door alerts him to the presence of intruders. He orders the derro scouts sharing his quarters to take positions in the hallway using darkness for cover and to conceal the entrance to Room D19. Souiji casts his power-up suite of spells in preparation. These derro do not leave the safety of their tunnels nor do they retreat to Room D18.

The stone giants, if they invade, do not detect this door until Day 6. If the PCs explore this area after this day, the door is shattered.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the poison with a symbol of fear trap. To decrease the challenge, change the poison to insanity mist.

D18. STORAGE CAVE

This thirty-foot egg-shaped room is free of the pervasive fog polluting many of the nearby corridors and rooms. Crates, barrels, boxes and sacks lie in a haphazard jumble. Many of the contents spill out onto the floor, revealing grains, wine bottles, a few weapons and tools. Aside from the flight of a frightened spider, nothing moves.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The renegade derro stored their supplies here until yellow mold became problematic. Chtrax's servants, unable to dislodge the renegade derro, contaminated a small store of supplies with yellow mold spores and placed them in a lightly guarded Room for the derro to raid. The renegade derro, thoroughly insane, overlooked how easy it was to gain access to the goods, and in triumph brought them back to Souiji. Placing the purloined swag in their warm storage chamber, they promptly forgot about it. After a few weeks, the yellow mold spores quickly took over the Room killing a few careless derro. Souiji, seeing the gift as another blessing from his goddess, carefully constructed a trap, while removing the salvageable supplies. Now the yellow mold has expanded to cover the entire Room concealed by a permanent illusion (he cast it from a stolen scroll) depicting the actual equipment but concealing the threat of the mold.

PCs wishing to disbelieve the illusion must succeed a DC 19 Will save to see the mold fills each 5-ft. space along the perimeter of the Room. PCs touching any of the items disturb the concealed yellow mold, causing a 5-ft. area to burst into a 10-ft. cloud of spores. All PCs in the area of effect must succeed DC 15 Fortitude saves to resist the effects of the mold or take 1d6 points of Constitution damage. One minute later, regardless of whether the PC saved or not, the victim must succeed a second DC 15 Fortitude save or take 2d6 points of Constitution damage.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Derro do not come to this Room except to toss more junk inside and from a safe distance too. Therefore, any noise in this area makes the derro in Room D19 suspicious causing them to take up defensive positions as described in Room D17 if they had not already done so.

Treasure: The mold ruined all of the perishable goods in the Room. All of the tools, weapons and armor are ruined. A DC 25 Search check, and likely triggering the mold, uncovers a pair of ceramic bottles. In one is an unlabeled potion of magic fang +3. The second bottle is a potion of resist fire 30, and has a labeled identifying it in Dwarven.

D19. RENEGADE DERRO WARREN

This unusual shaped natural cavern has a sour stench of charcoal. The ceiling rises to over 60 ft. high and a cloud of smoke hangs there unmoving. Holes in the floor give off streams of foul smoke, strangely sweet. To the right is a large cleft in the rock, where a few clay pots, crates and barrels clutter the area in a jumble. There is no fog here, and there are no visible exits.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This cave is the Souiji's lair and campsite for his loyal renegade derro. When Chtrax seized control over the derro mines for his own purposes, some of the derro refused to serve him. These derro, led by the savant Souiji, fled to the empty mines in the western section of this region. From here, they mount sporadic guerrilla raids to disrupt Chtrax's operations. They have had minimal impact on the efforts, instead drawing formian guards into their complex to fall victim to the nasty traps protecting them.

PCs may believe that because Souiji and his followers fight against Chtrax, they may have an ally here. Nothing is further from the truth. Souiji is a lunatic. He sees the PCs as a threat to his control and eventual power grab.

Souiji (hp 84) is always here. He uses his map of warding to defend his section of the tunnels once per day. He knows he only has a few charges left, and when the map runs dry, so too do his defenses. The savant keeps eight elite derro guards (hp 25) with him at all times. Souiji, paranoid as ever also cast alarm on Room D19, so any tampering with the door mentally alerts him.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If Souiji is aware of the PCs, as is likely if they enter through Room D17, he orders the elite derro guards to take up positions in the hall and conceal themselves with darkness. Souiji then casts the following spells in this order: eagle's splendor, shield, spider climb and resistance. He crawls up the wall to a hidden nook above the entrance to this cave, where he has cover. He then readies an action to cast flame arrow at any non-derro entering the cave.

The derro in the hall Hide in the concealing darkness. When the PCs enter the area, the derro attack the opponents, catching them flat-footed to deal sneak attack damage. The elite derro guards are more frightened by Souiji than they are of the PCs and so fight to the death.

The giants, after Day 2, do not immediately detect this concealed section of tunnels, only discovering it on Day 6. Once discovered, 3 stone giants, a formian taskmaster, 2 dominated destrachan and 3 formian warriors break through the door at Room D18 and attack Souiji and his minions. If the PCs are not present for this confrontation, assume the giants win.

Treasure: Piled in the cleft are boxes, barrels and crates all containing dry goods and water. A thorough search of the area, DC 25 Search check, reveals a small cache of gemstones, stolen from the mines. All of the gems are rough cut, but if polished and finished, their value doubles. The stones include the following: irregular freshwater pearl (14 gp), bloodstone (89 gp), amber (109 gp) and a black opal (1,056 gp).

EL: 13

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three levels of sorcerer to Souiji. To decrease the challenge, reduce the number of elite derro guards from eight to four.

WARDING MAP

Warding Map: This scroll of vellum is simple and unadorned, creased from folding. Each warding map has 50 charges just like a wand, and when all 50 charges are used, the map disintegrates. The user can draw on the map with any implement once per day, taking 30 minutes and expending a charge from the item. For the map of warding to work, the map must replicate the layout of the section. At the end of the activation time, the map creates an effect identical to guards and wards as cast by an 11th level caster. The illustrator makes all determinations of the spell as if he had cast the spell himself.

Moderate Abjuration; CL 11th; Craft Wondrous Item, guards and wards; Price 19,800 gp.

D20. DERRO ENCAMPMENT

If the miners did not hear the sounds of combat with the ankhegs in Room D13, read the following.

Two feeble campfires burning on either side of this cave light this wide mist-filled room. To the left huddle six blue-skinned dwarves, clearly derro. To your right is a small crowd of dwarves, some with grey features, while others are pale and bald. Only the derro speak to one another, while the dwarves are silent with heads bowed. In the center of the room is a loose pile of large anthropomorphic insect heads, their blank eyes watching the cave's entrance. The room stinks with fear.

If the PCs encountered the derro in this Room in Room D13 instead, read the following.

This wide room is quiet. Standing in the shifting mists are six bedraggled and hungry duergar and one slender and bald deep dwarf. All of the dwarves wear bloody rags, and most have filthy bandages covering a wound or stump. They watch you with cold eyes and grim expressions.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room houses the rebel derro mining encampment, consisting of four derro (hp 16 each), three duergar (hp 9 each), and six deep dwarves (hp 6 each). Souiji keeps all derro rebels he does not fully trust with the slaves, forcing them to share living quarters. The savant's suspicions are ungrounded and the product of his insanity; none of these dwarves or derro has the will or the ability to hatch a plot against their renegade master.

The derro collect the heads of formian warriors and workers, dumping them in the middle of this Room to serve as a demarcation line the slaves cannot cross. This is an arbitrary border. Neither side is better; all live in abject squalor.

If the PCs attracted the attention of the derro by their combat with the ankhegs in Room D13, then this Room houses just the dwarven slaves. All but one of the slaves carries a xill egg in their stomachs, and they know it dooms them, having seen many of the numbers succumb to the hatching. Souiji has promised to cure those slaves who work hard and prove their worth. Elite derro guards take those slaves meeting his criteria to Room D18, where the guards dump the poor slaves into the yellow mold, Souiji's cure. Even though the slaves have not seen any of their number returned, the other derro claim the savant granted the slaves freedom and healing for their loyalty. Consequently, the slaves are fanatically loyal to the savant and see him as the means for their salvation.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Shifts change at 12-hour intervals, and the derro and slaves move to Rooms D22, D23 and D24, where they relieve the other derro and their slaves. The shift change takes 1 minute for the relief to reach the other miners and 1 minute for the relieved to return to Room D20. During this time, the derro encampment is empty.

If the PCs did not draw the derro from this Room into the fight at Room D13, the derro "Take 10" on their Listen checks (with a check result of 11), while the slaves "Take 0," too tired and too demoralized to care. If the derro hear the PCs advance, they order the slaves to take up their picks and attack the intruders. Meanwhile, all the derro hide in their darkness effects on the first round, awaiting the opportunity to strike dealing sneak attack damage.

If the PCs defeated the derro from this Room in the ankheg battle, the slaves take up their picks and ready themselves for the attack. PCs entering the Room have one round to make a DC 25 Diplomacy or Intimidation check to improve the slaves' attitudes to Indifferent. If the PCs fail, the dwarf slaves attack, fighting to the death.

Finally, if the PCs do not explore this Room until Day 3 or later, they find the bodies of all of the opponents normally encountered here, slaughtered by the giants.

Treasure: Aside from a pile of formian heads, there are 4 extra heavy picks, 2 warhammers and a hand axe in a wheelbarrow, hidden beneath a tarp made of cured yrrhak hide (50 gp value).

D21. SUPPLY ROOM

The narrow tunnel extends 40 ft. before sharply turning to the right where it ends in a small cave, no larger than 10 ft. wide, filled with junk. Bars of corroded silver, bolts of stained cloth, axes, hammers, picks and other mining equipment covers the outer edge of the room, leaving a narrow island in the sea of trash. There are no visible exits and the room is otherwise unoccupied.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The derro and slave miners, from Room D20 and Room D22 through Room D24, use this cave for storage. Most of the equipment here is worthless, except the silver bars and a few hidden items (see Treasure below). The derro do not guard this Room and only come here to drop off a broken piece of equipment or unusable items acquired from a raid.

Encounter Condition: [Deep Darkness]

Tactics: PCs exploring this Room do not draw attention to themselves unless they make an inordinate amount of racket, causing a derro from Room D20 to investigate. This is a good place for the PCs to rest, heal and recover spells, with only a 10% chance each day of a Random Encounter.

Treasure: The piles of equipment contain all manner of useless items, including, but not restricted to the following: hempen rope 500 ft., seven barrels of tepid water, an empty bucket, six hammers, ten miner's picks, four spades and a scrap of parchment providing a rough sketch of Room D32 through Room D51, though there are no notes, scale or any useful information aside from just the layout. In addition, there are 10 1-lb. trade bars of truesilver worth 50 gp each wrapped in treated Formian chitin to protect them. If mortals handle the bars, their touch transmutes the metal into mundane silver. Finally, buried beneath the equipment are the following items, recognized as unusable by the rebels: divine scroll of hold animal (caster level 3rd), divine scroll of summon swarm (caster level 3rd), and one dose of dust of dryness.

D22. MINERS

When the PCs enter the tunnel leading to Room D22, read the following.

The darkened tunnel features the same clinging mists so pervasive in these tunnels, and continues deep into the darkness. Ahead, clangs of tools on stone sound and echo down the tunnel. Amidst the calls of the hammers and picks, you hear voices, and then a weird humming noise jarring your bones. Just as soon as the noise starts, the roar of crumbling rock masks it.

When the PCs approach the entrance, read the following.

This gloomy cavern is clearly a mining work site. Derro overseers monitor the efforts of several slaves who chip away the dense rock in the many shallow mines. The source of the unusual noise is clear, now, as a derro with a spear prods a chained destrachan toward another small tunnel. The room is dark, but lacks the clinging mists of the tunnel.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This cave is the heart of the renegade derro miners. Souiji, though unaware of Chtrax's true goals, knows the xill searches for something in the mines. In a vain effort to defeat his nemesis, Souiji directs the derro under his command to mine the tunnels in the hopes they can beat Chtrax to his goal. Given their position in the complex, the derro have thus far, broken through the outer walls, releasing lava into the tunnels (see Rooms D11 and D14), collapsed several tunnels killing many slaves and derro (not pictured) and are now likely to break through to some of the Rooms under the xill's control. These miners are close to breaking through the walls. Two days after the PCs first enter this complex, the rebel derro break through to Room D27 as described in the opening sidebar.

DWARVEN ALLIES

The PCs could befriend and gain the help from liberated slaves throughout the region. Having 20 or more dwarven soldiers at their sides could mean a significant difference in the survival rate throughout the adventure. However, before the PCs build an army of ex-slaves to overthrow the evil masters, there are a few issues to consider first.

Xill Eggs: There is a 25% chance any given duergar or deep dwarf carries a xill egg. As the process of gaining the egg is maddening, along with the realization of death's immediacy, many dwarves go insane. Consequently, add +20 to the alignment roll if the xill is in fact infected. See Xill Eggs sidebar above for more details.

Alignment: Unless the PCs are of matching alignment, they may have some difficulties convincing the slaves to join their cause, by dint of alignment alone. Deep dwarves are "often" lawful neutral or just neutral, making them the more amenable to the PCs actions than the "usually" lawful evil duergar (although a Lawful Evil dwarf might be happy to follow a strong leader who promises revenge). To determine the alignment of a particular liberated slave, roll on the following tables.

Roll	Deep Dwarf	Roll	Duergar
01-25	Lawful Neutral	01-70	Lawful Evil
26-50	Neutral	71-78	Lawful Neutral
51-58	Lawful Good	79	Lawful Good
59-66	Lawful Evil	80-86	Neutral Evil
67-74	Neutral Good	87-92	Neutral
75-82	Neutral Evil	93	Neutral Good
83-90	Chaotic Good	94-96	Chaotic Evil
91-98	Chaotic Neutral	97-99	Chaotic Neutral
99+	Chaotic Evil	100+	Chaotic Good

Loyalty: Chtrax uses propaganda and fear to coerce the slaves to work hard and face the innumerable dangers of these mines. As a result, most of the slaves are blind to the depredations of their xill and formian masters. To enlist a dwarf as an ally, a PC must make a Bluff or Diplomacy check against the DC indicated by the rooms' starting attitude for each slave. Make these checks in secret. Dwarves whose attitudes change to helpful are willing to join the PCs. Dwarves whose attitudes are friendly, may offer advice. Other results indicate the dwarves do not help. If more slaves are helpful than the rest, all of the dwarves present help the PCs, though those whose attitudes are unfriendly or worse, betray the PCs and their traitorous brethren at their nearest convenience. If the PCs are willing to arm the slaves, give the PC making the Bluff or Diplomacy check a +2 circumstance bonus to the roll.

Possessions: Most dwarves carry light picks and hammers, wear no armor, and have rags for clothes. It is up to the PCs to outfit these allies adequately if they wish their assistance.

Combat: Recordkeeping for combats involving 20 or more combatants can be nightmarish for a DM. If you have Empire, Mercenaries, or War, you can employ mass combat rules to expedite the battles for larger sections, like the Great Hall or the Deep Mines. Alternatively, you could simply roll for groups of slaves, glossing over the damage, and providing cinematic descriptions. However, if keeping up with the slaves, the added burdens to combat and the slowing of the game play that a large number of followers causes, feel free to disallow the slaves from being allies.

Before this time, however, five derro overseers (hp 16 each) command five duergar (hp 9 each) and four deep dwarves (hp 6 each) to work the tunnels in the Room. In addition to the slave forces, the derro also control a moody destrachan (hp 60), using it to break up particularly dense sections of rock. There are two miners per alcove, including Room D23. A bulette and its derro handler work the tunnel at Room D24.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 8

Tactics: The derro command the slaves, loyal thanks to Souiji's promises (see Room D20 for details as to why), to attack the PCs. The handler in Room D24 releases his pet bulette as soon as combat breaks out in Room D22. The derro use poisoned crossbow bolts from positions of darkness. The destrachan uses the PCs attack to get revenge on its captors. Each round it is 50% likely to attack the derro and their slaves or the PCs. If the PCs attack the destrachan, it focuses its attack on them exclusively. If combat goes against the miners, dwarf slaves fall back to the two tunnels at Room D23 in an effort to lure them to an unstable corridor. All of the miners fight to the death.

On Day 2, the slaves break through the wall to Room D27, creating a permanent connection between these two Rooms. The stone giant chief invades the Old Mines with 3 regular stone giants, a formian taskmaster and 3 formian warriors to destroy the problematic derro. See Room D27 for more details.

If explored on Day 3 or later, the Room holds nothing but corpses.

Possessions: Studded leather armor, shortsword, repeating light crossbow, bolts 10.

✦ Destrachan: CR 8; Large aberration; HD 8d8+24; hp 60; Init +5; Spd 30 ft.; AC 18 (-1 size, +1 Dex, +8 natural), touch 10, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +6; Grp +14; Atk Claw +9 melee (1d6+4); Full Atk 2 claws +9 melee (1d6+4); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Destructive harmonics; SQ Blindsight 100 ft., immunities, protection from sonics; AL NE; SV Fort +5, Ref +5, Will +10; Str 18, Dex 12, Con 16, Int 12, Wis 18, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Hide +8, Listen +25, Move Silently +7, Survival +9; Dodge, Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes

Destructive Harmonics (Su): A destrachan can blast sonic energy in a cone up to 80 ft. long. It can also use this attack to affect any creatures or objects within a 30-ft. radius. It can tune the harmonics of this destructive power to affect different types of targets. All save DCs are Charisma-based.

Flesh: Disrupting tissue and rending bone, this attack deals 4d6 points of damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Nerves: A destrachan can focus its harmonics to knock out foes rather than slay them. This attack deals 6d6 points of nonlethal damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Material: When using this form of harmonics, a destrachan chooses wood, stone, metal, or glass. All objects made of that material within the area must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or shatter. Objects (or portions of objects) that have up to 30 hit points are potentially affected by this attack.

Blindsight (Ex): A destrachan can use hearing to ascertain all foes within 100 ft. as a sighted creature would.

Immunities: Destrachans have immunity to gaze attacks, visual effects, illusions, and other attack forms that rely on sight.

Protection from Sonics (Ex): While they can be affected by loud noises and sonic spells (such as ghost sound or silence), destrachans are less vulnerable to sonic attacks (+4 circumstance bonus on all saves) because they can protect their ears. A destrachan whose sense of hearing is impaired is effectively blinded, and all targets are treated as having total concealment.

Skills: A destrachan has a +10 racial bonus on Listen checks.

✦ Duergar Slave, War 1: CR 1; Medium humanoid (dwarf); HD 1d8+5; hp 9; Init +0; Spd 20 ft.; AC 10, touch 10, flat-footed 10; Base Atk +1; Grp +2; Atk +2 melee (1d6+1/x4, heavy pick); Full Atk +2 melee (1d6+1/x4, heavy pick); SA Duergar traits, spell-like abilities; SQ Darkvision 120 ft., duergar traits, stonecunning; AL LE; SV Fort +4*, Ref +0*, Will -1*; Str 13, Dex 11, Con 14, Int 10, Wis 9, Cha 4.

Possessions: Heavy pick, ragged clothing.

D23. UNSTABLE TUNNEL

This tunnel ends after 15 ft. Spider web cracks cover both walls and ceiling here.

Initial Attitude: N/A or Hostile

Encounter: Two slaves, a duergar (hp 9) and deep dwarf (hp 6) normally work this tunnel. The dwarves have warned their masters of the danger in the tunnels, but the derro make them work it anyway. Any loud noise, such as those created by fireball or ice storm, causes the tunnel to collapse. Should the ceiling collapse, the cave-in deals 8d6 points of damage, or half on a successful DC 15 Reflex save.

A PC succeeding a DC 20 Knowledge (architecture and engineering) or a DC 20 Craft (stonemasonry) can identify weakened ceilings for what they are.

Encounter Condition: Poor Footing 4, Hazardous Footing 18, Tremors 18

Tactics: If combat goes against the miners in Room D22, a slave retreats to this tunnel in a mad act of sacrifice. Should the PCs follow, a derro uses sound burst to collapse the tunnel, bringing it down on himself and the PCs. The dwarves realize they are doomed, and feel their loyalty lies with Souiji.

D24. CHAINED BULETTE AND ITS MASTER

If combat does not occur in Room D22, read the following.

A cloud of dust and the sounds of scraping pour out of this tunnel. Through the flying debris, a large armored beast claws at the rock, while an exceptionally mad derro looks on, a wide smile staining his face. Neither the beast, nor the derro notice you.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A bulette (hp 94) and its derro handler (hp 48) work this short tunnel. The derro handler has a tenuous control over the monster, forced to devote his entire attention on goading the bulette to dig through the derro's wild empathy class ability. The noise the monster makes as it digs is deafening, so the derro is unlikely to hear any disturbances or disruptions.

The bulette is loud in its work, deafening all creatures within 10 ft. for as long as they remain in the area. Note, deafened PCs suffer a -4 penalty to Initiative checks, automatically fail Listen checks, and have a 20% chance of spell failure when casting spells with verbal components.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 8, Echoes 4

Tactics: If combat occurs in Room D22, allow the derro handler a DC 10 Spot check to notice each round. Should he succeed this check, he turns from the bulette to investigate. Then allow the bulette a DC 10 Spot check to notice when something other than it holds the handler's attention. If the monster succeeds, it attacks its handler and leaps into the thickest group of combatants, killing PCs, derro and slaves alike.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two ranger levels to the derro handler and disallow the bulette from attacking its allies. To decrease the challenge, have the bulette immediately notice the handler's distraction. Instead of having it enter the melee, it burrows away after killing its former master.

✦ Bulette: CR 7; Huge magical beast; HD 9d10+45; hp 94; Init +2; Spd 40 ft., burrow 10 ft.; AC 22, touch 10, flat-footed 20; Base Atk +9; Grp +25; Atk +16 melee (2d8+8, bite); Full Atk +16 melee (2d8+8, bite) and +10 melee (2d6+4, 2 claws); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft.; SA Leap; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., lowlight vision, scent, tremorsense 60 ft.; AL N; SV Fort +11, Ref +8, Will +6; Str 27, Dex 15, Con 20, Int 2, Wis 13, Cha 6.

Skills and Feats: Jump +18, Listen +9, Spot +3; Alertness, Iron Will, Track, Weapon Focus (bite).

Leap (Ex): A bulette can jump into the air during combat. This allows it to make four claw attacks instead of two, each with a +15 attack bonus, but it cannot bite.

✦ Derro Handler, Rgr 3: CR 6; Small monstrous humanoid; HD 3d8+9 + 3d8+9; hp 48; Init +9; Spd 20 ft.; AC 19, touch 13, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +6; Grp +3; Atk +8 melee (1d4+1/19-20, masterwork short sword) or +12 ranged (1d8+1/19-20 plus poison, +1 repeating heavy crossbow); Full Atk +6/+1 melee (1d4/19-20, short sword) and +6 melee (1d3/19-20 plus poison, masterwork dagger) or +12 ranged (1d8+1/19-20 plus poison, +1 repeating heavy crossbow); SA Combat style (two weapon fighting), favored enemy (magical beasts +4); Poison use, spell-like abilities, sneak attack +3d6; SQ Madness, spell resistance 15 vulnerability to sunlight; AL CE; SV Fort +6, Ref +11, Will +9; Str 12, Dex 20, Con 16, Int 8, Wis 4*, Cha 20*.

Skills and Feats: Bluff +7, Handle Animal +8, Hide +14, Jump +4, Knowledge (dungeoneering) +2, Listen -2, Move Silently +10, Survival +0; Blind-Fight, Endurance*, Improved Initiative, Point Blank Shot, Track*.

Possessions: Studded leather armor, masterwork short sword, masterwork dagger, +1 heavy repeating crossbow, 2 cases of bolts (10).

D25 THROUGH D31. THE APPROACH

Rooms D25 through D31 serve as the only path to the Chtrax enclave. A mixture of lairs, checkpoints and even a foundry, this path is exceedingly dangerous, fraught with hostile derro, formians and giants, for the PCs' successes or failures here determine the reactions of the rest of this Region. Yet, despite this section's importance to Chtrax's overall plan, his bulwarks are failing as evidenced by the corpses of derro in Room D25 and the malfunctioning trap at Room D26.

There are far fewer traps in these sections, as Chtrax's resources are flagging, forcing him to rely on the stone giant chief to defend the back door to his operations. Still, the xill master barely trusts the giant, so he commands a myrmarch to dispatch regular formian patrols through these areas. These threats, along with the occasional creeping xill, combine to make the approach a dangerous path.

If the PCs have not vanquished the renegade derro in the Old Mines by Day 2, the miners in D22 break through the wall to Room D27. There, the stone giant chief leads an expedition to kill the rogue derro, bringing 3 more stone giants, a formian taskmaster and 3 formian warriors to the fight, leaving this Room empty of hostiles until Day 4, when the stone giant returns. If the PCs have still not defeated the stone giant chieftain by Day 6, he returns to the Old Mines to kill Souiji.

When the PCs first enter this section, they must succeed a DC 10 Listen check to hear the loud slamming noise caused by the malfunctioning trap at Room D26. From Room D27, they must succeed a DC 10 Listen check to hear the hammering noises from the factory at Room D30.

All Rooms here are cloistered unless specified otherwise. Throughout this area are hewn stone walls with average ceiling heights equaling 30 ft. in Rooms and 15 ft. in tunnels. Debris in the tunnels collects at the edges in collections of small rocks, trash, scraps of cloth and luminescent fungi. The scent of smoke lingers in the air and wisps of it are visible near the ceilings.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1–2	Fissures of superheated steam erupt from the floor targeting a random PC and dealing 3d6 points of fire damage. DC 15 Ref save for half damage.
3–4	Tremors shake the corridor, causing fine streams of dust to spill from cracks in the ceiling. Smoke, Tremors 20.
5–9	Nothing
10–12	Renegade derro hunters — one formian taskmaster and 1d6 formian warriors — move toward the Old Mines, searching for renegade derro. Treat this roll as “Nothing” in Rooms D27 through D30.
13	An escaped and malicious destrachan waits in darkness for prey. Concealment
14–17	Two formian warriors and two gorgons patrol the tunnels, defending against intruders and renegades. Treat this roll as “Nothing” in Rooms D27 through D30.
18	A stone giant tosses boulders down the tunnel halls. Treat this roll as Nothing in Rooms D25 through D26.
19	1d4 xill hunting for hosts.
20	The PCs stumble upon a trap.

✦ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 6; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 16th-level cleric, 8d8 sonic, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

After the trap is triggered, tremors shake the corridor. Smoke, Tremors 20.

D25. PLAYED OUT MINE

Rounding the corner, you come upon a grisly heap of corpses. Worse, all have bloody cavities in their chests. Bloody footprints mark the passage leading back in the direction you came before they fade away completely.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was once a derro checkpoint, responsible for defending the approach from intruders. Chtrax implanted his eggs in these guards and a couple of days ago they hatched. The surviving derro fled, but the renegade derro or traps killed them all.

Searching the bodies uncovers precious little. Someone already looted the bodies, so the bodies have no treasure. A DC 20 Knowledge (the planes) identifies their deaths were caused by the hatching of xill eggs. There is nothing else that is of interest. From here the PCs can hear the malfunctioning trap (smashing stones) in Room D26.

D26. MALFUNCTIONING TRAP

The source of the awful din comes from this 30 ft. long corridor. From the ceiling, huge 5 ft. by 5 ft. by 10 ft. stone blocks drop and slam to the floor making a terrible racket and sending clouds of rock dust in the air. Soon after they fall, they rise back up into the darkness, while another block falls, randomly. Bloody stains, broken bits of bone and teeth, and none too few flattened corpses litter the floor here.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This trap is broken. When working properly, mere passage down the tunnel would trigger the trap, causing blocks to fall onto unsuspecting intruders. A secret level on either side of the trap, when pulled, would disable it. Now, however, the levers on both sides are broken and the trap triggers at random. For four hours each day, the trap stops functioning, allowing passage into the Great Hall.

Each round, roll 1d12 to determine the 5 ft. section malfunctions and triggers the trap automatically. In addition, whenever a PCs stands in any of the 5 ft. sections of the hall, there is a 50% chance for the trap to trigger.

✦ Falling Block Trap: CR 3; mechanical; location trigger (each square in tunnel has a 50% chance of triggering each round); automatic reset; Atk +10 melee (4d6, stone blocks); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 20.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: No creatures come to investigate the trap. However, if the PCs disable the trap, 1d3 stone giants from Room D27 (unless it is Day 2 or 6) come to investigate the odd silence.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, have the trap trigger 75% of the time and have the blocks deal 6d6 points of damage. To decrease the challenge, have the sections trigger their respective traps just once.

D27. STONE GIANT QUARTERS

This large cavern is nearly 40 ft. across, and 50 ft. above stretches the dripping ceiling. Boulders litter the floor along with the skins of an unspecified enormous reptile. Through the gloom, you think you see blankets, a few overlarge crates and a fire pit radiating light.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This large cave houses the stone giants in service to the xill. Most times Talig (hp 163) and 1d6 stone giants (119 hp each) recline here, relaxing and entertaining themselves while biding their time before rising against their newest masters. While they wait, they frequently kill lone derro in revenge for their years of captivity, and hide the bodies under a pile of loose rocks. These giants are not immediately hostile, though they attack if they sense an easy opponent for the sheer enjoyment of the act.

The stone giants have maintained a presence in these mines. Before Chtrax, the derro had enslaved them as a labor force. When Chtrax assumed control, however, he approached them as equals instead of in the more traditional hierarchy of a master-slave relationship. The xill approached the elder stone giant, Talig, and lied, requesting the giant's assistance in recovering a lost artifact. The giant agreed on the promise of power in return and seeing the puny outsider as no immediate threat. The stone giant elder offered his stone giant minions to serve as laborers and guards to survey the progress of the artifact's recovery. Talig ordered his minions to seize the object as soon as the derro and their workers uncover it. By positioning stone giants throughout the complex, Talig expects an easy victory over the xill. Until Chtrax recovers the artifact, the giants are content to work, watch and wait.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 7, Echoes 10

Tactics: The giants are wary of trespassers, like solitary derro, moving to and from Room D28 through Room D26, so when the PCs enter this Room, the giants know. While not overtly hostile — the PCs do not represent a threat to them — they are suspicious. They watch from hidden positions among the rocks. If the party is small, they attack hurling boulders until the PCs close. Otherwise, they allow well-armed PCs to pass unmolested. If the PCs explore this Room, however, Talig steps into view and questions why they intrude. Respectful PCs succeeding at a DC 25 Diplomacy check improve the giants' attitude to friendly. If they manage this, the giants give them the following information if asked. If the PCs succeed a DC 40 Diplomacy check, the giants give the following information freely. Otherwise, they simply tell the PCs to move on or die.

A canny red-skinned devil named Chtrax controls the mines now with the help of formians, orderly insect men. He commands the surviving derro, their slaves and even our brethren to dig into the depths to reach some lost artifact. We are not certain as to what this artifact is or what it does, but Chtrax is adamant about retrieving it. While we serve him now, it is out of convenience. Ahead is the Great Hall. There the slaves process silver for tools and other equipment. Beyond the Hall are the deeper mines. It is dangerous there, certainly no place for a group such as yourselves.

The giants have no interest in helping the PCs, and if requested, they refuse. If the PCs are respectful, the giants let them pass freely.

Should combat occur, Talig takes cover behind the myriad of huge rock piles, hurling rocks at the PC spellcasters. The other giants in the Room close after one round of ranged attacks. These giants fight to the death.

If the PCs kill the giants and leave their carcasses in the open, the Great Hall has a 20% chance each day of going on alert (see below).

Depending on developments in other parts of this region, this Room may be empty. The renegade derro, if undefeated, punch through the wall on Day 2. The giants here react by gathering a force and wiping out the rebels, leaving this Room empty. The chieftain returns with 1d3 stone giants on Day 3, watchful of the new exit. On Day 6, the chieftain, if still alive goes back into the Old Mines to kill Souiji.

Treasure: The giants hide their accumulated wealth with the bodies of the slain derro in a rock pile. Clearing the rock requires 2 hours of hard labor and exposes diggers to Slimy Doom, carried by the rotting derro. PCs digging must succeed a DC 14 Fortitude save or contract the disease.

PCs succeeding in excavating the treasure find 1567 gp divided somewhat equally between three leather sacks. In a fourth bag are 6 gems, consisting of a tourmaline (800 gp), 2 red spinels (700 gp, 600 gp), zircon (70 gp), onyx (50 gp) and a small shard of obsidian (8 gp).

Each stone giant, including the chieftain carries a large sack holding 2d12 throwing rocks and 1d4+6 mundane items.

D28. SOUNDS OF INDUSTRY

Weird lights and ghostly shadows play on the walls of this 30 ft. long tunnel. Pounding noise of metal clanging on metal echo up ahead, making the tunnel inordinately loud. Otherwise, the tunnel is as dark as it is ordinary.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This tunnel leads to the sentry post at Room D29. There are no creatures here and the tunnel is debris-free. PCs clearly hear the sounds of metalworking and smelting coming from ahead in Room D30.

There are too many tracks here to get an accurate read on the types and numbers of creatures travelling through this tunnel.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs retreat from the formian and gorgon guards in Room D29, and if they did not befriend or encounter the giants in Room D27, the formians and the stone giants trap the PCs here, flanking them.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

D29. GUARDS

The tunnel takes a sharp turn to the left, opening into a small room serving as an antechamber for a larger cavern. Mounted on two armor-plated bulls with green mist curling from their nostrils and dead empty eyes, are two insect men, each holding a guisarme.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Functioning as guards overseeing traffic coming from Room D27 and beyond to enter Rooms D30 and the Great Hall are two formian warriors (hp 35, 26) mounted on gorgons (hp 87, 76). These creatures are vigilant about their duties, allowing only stone giants, derro, and dwarves to pass into D30 without question. They are watchful for intruders, cautious about creatures they do not recognize and readily attack any who threaten the complex.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: PCs have 1 round to make their case to these guards to avert combat, by succeeding a DC 25 Bluff, Diplomacy or Intimidate check. PCs suffer a -5 circumstance penalty, as the guards are exceptionally suspicious. If combat sounded from Room D27, the guards attack without question.

One gorgon uses its breath weapon, while the other tramples into combat. The formian warriors attack PCs using their pole-arms. On the second round of combat, one of the mounted formians urges its mount to charge surviving PCs, while the other uses its breath weapon attack. Thereafter, the formians and gorgons use charge attacks and attacks with reach weapons until the gorgons' respective breath weapons recharge.

Combat with any formian alerts all formians in the region due to their hive mind ability, though only those nearest the threat respond (see Tactics, Rooms D30, D32, and D33). Consequently, fighting the formians here alerts those in the factory and the Great Hall.

D30. FACTORY

This gallery houses a major operation. Scores of derro work at various tables and forges, constructing weapons, tools, carts and rails. More insect men stand at locations throughout the room, overseeing the operation. In the center of the room is a stone golem, obviously built from petrified humanoids. A crucible, where liquid iron and other metals bubble, spitting sparks and belching toxic fumes, lights the room with a struggling inconsistent warmth. Ahead, another tunnel leads to a large cavern with several buildings and attendant toiling slaves.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The factory is where the derro work raw materials into useable items. Here they forge tools, weapons, ore carts, tracks, spikes, and braces for tunnel ceilings out of the corrupted truesilver and iron. Twenty infected derro (hp 16 each) work in this Room. Chtrax does not trust the slaves to handle the vital manufacturing needed to keep his excavation moving. As a result, only derro work here and only under constant guard of six formian warriors (hp 26 each) and a wailing golem (hp 107) ensuring against sabotage or intrusion.

The derro, focused on their work, "Take 0" on Listen checks. The formians are wary of intruders. They question any non-derro entering the Room. Unless a formian, stone giant or Chtrax accompany and vouch for the PCs, the formians attack.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If PCs battle the sentries in Room D29, the wailing golem and half of the formians move to Room D29 to aid the guards, while the remaining formians go to Room D31 and ready an action to tip the crucible of molten ore to spill into the Room once all the PCs enter. The derro climb on top of their worktables, using darkness for concealment and level crossbows at the Room's entrance, firing as soon as they see the PCs.

When the PCs enter the Room, the formians and the derro at Room D31, tip the crucible spilling liquid metal over the whole floor. PCs on foot take 8d6 points of fire damage each round they remain in the liquid metal, no save. The derro avoid the damage, because the worktables hang on chains suspended from the ceiling. The metal cools after 20 minutes.

The formians in Room D32 hold their positions, waiting for the intruders to enter the Great Hall.

Treasure: This Room is home to over one hundred hammers, picks, shovels and an assortment of mining tools, though none are valuable enough to warrant plundering. There are also 24 short swords, 15 warhammers and 18 light maces. Finally, there are over 300 spikes, three Huge ore carts, and 200 ft. of linear track.

EL: 14 (15 with molten ore and derro from Room D31)

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the number of wailing golems by one. To decrease the challenge, remove the formian warriors.

Skills and Feats: —

Slow (Su): A wailing stone golem can use a slow effect, as the spell, as a free action once every 2 rounds. The effect has a range of 10 ft. and a duration of 7 rounds, requiring a DC 17 Will save to negate. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—feather fall. Caster Level 12th.

Wail (Su): Whenever the golem engages in melee combat, it lets out a tremendous wail lasting until the melee ends. Like a shrieker, the sound attracts nearby creatures disposed to investigating it.

Immunity to Magic (Ex): A wailing stone golem is immune to any spell or spell-like ability that allows spell resistance. In addition, certain spells and effects function differently against the creature, as noted below.

A transmute rock to mud spell slows a wailing stone golem (as the slow spell) for 2d6 rounds, with no saving throw, while transmute mud to rock heals all of its lost hit points.

A stone to flesh spell does not actually change the golem's structure but negates its damage reduction and immunity to magic for 1 full round.

D31. FOUNDRIES

A crucible hanging from an iron frame and filled with bubbling molten metal dominates this alcove. Beneath it burns a white-hot fire, fed by jets of gas from numerous holes set into the walls. All around this area are barrels containing water. Some derro climb a ladder leading up to the bowl and drop broken weapons, tools, chunks of ore and on occasion a squeaking rat into the molten mixture, while others dip smaller crucibles attached to long poles to withdraw a portion and pour it into the casts at the base.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is where the 5 derro (hp 16 each) smelt the raw metals into a liquid state. When the metal is hot enough, they extract a portion to pour into casts. They then carry the cast, using tongs, to one of the workbenches, where workers allow the cast to cool, before stripping the flash and finishing the object. While most cast metal is weaker than forged metal, the derro add a small amount of adamantite to the mixture to reinforce the tools. There is not enough of this material to give the tools and weapons any special properties; just enough to make it as strong as steel.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The formian warriors in Room D30 move to this area to tip the crucible and cover the floor with flaming metal. Tipping the crucible is simple, requiring a pull of a lever. The formians take positions on the ladders, using ranged attacks against the PCs. Near the water barrels is a stack of repeating light crossbows. At the first sign of trouble, each derro grabs one and moves to a position of cover, if any, before firing.

Pouring hot metal onto the floor causes the water barrels to burst, resulting in billows of steam. All creatures in this Room gain concealment (20% miss chance) from the obscured vision. There is no way to tamper with the gas jets fueling the fire. PCs unlucky enough to find themselves in the inferno take 20d6 points of fire damage and automatically catch fire. To put themselves out, they must make a DC 15 Reflex save.

Treasure: Though none of the derro have any personal treasure, they do possess ten 1-lb. bars of adamantite, each worth 50 gp.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage dealt by the liquid metal to 20d6. To decrease the challenge, do not allow the crucible to be tipped.

☛ Derro Smith: CR 3; Small monstrous humanoid; HD 3d8+3; hp 16; Init +6; Spd 20 ft.; AC 18, touch 13, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +3; Grp -1; Atk +4 melee (1d4/19-20, warhammer); Full Atk +4 melee (1d4/19-20, warhammer); SA Poison use, spell-like abilities, sneak attack +1d6; SQ Madness, spell resistance 15 vulnerability to sunlight; AL CE; SV Fort +2, Ref +5, Will +6; Str 11, Dex 14, Con 13, Int 10, Wis 5*, Cha 16*.

D32 THROUGH D51. GREAT HALL

This section is the central nervous system of the complex, comprised of Rooms D32 through D51. This is an enormous cavern, over 200 ft. wide and with a ceiling towering 100 ft. overhead. Nine buildings dominate the center of the cavern. Several of these structures feature connecting ramps and tracks leading to other buildings and ultimately the track at Room D51. Three balconies overlook the workings, while the two major entrances feature more guards. Filling this vast gallery are stone giants, derro, xill and more, too numerous to count. In short, a direct confrontation is tantamount to suicide.

The massive bore dominates the Hall. Four stone giants push the handles turning it which pull the truesilver out of the earth. The extracted truesilver climbs the helical thread with each turn, until it reaches the platform at the top. There, derro workers use force clamps to retrieve the ore and place it into large metal carts. A fifth stone giant pushes the cart to a conveyer carrying the metal to the separation Room, where the slaves separate the ore from the rock before sending the truesilver on to the refinery. In this Room, slaves heat the truesilver and form it into bars where they are loaded onto palettes. Stone giants carry the palettes to the wheeled carts, depositing them into the gnome's lab in Room D53. The slaves move the separated rock to Room D37, where an yrthak uses its sonic lance to pulverize it into gravel, so the dwarves can easily dump it in the lava at the lava flow.

Chtrax uses the Great Hall as his command center, where he oversees operations in the mines, from discussing security issues with his myrmarch captain to inspecting the extraction process, to checking on the various excavation sites. In all, Chtrax keeps a close eye on his servants' progress, and he does so from this quasi cockpit.

If the PCs combat any formians before entering this place, the entire cavern is put on alert because of the hive mind link between formians. Each Room below details normal encounters and encounters when alert. In addition, each Room also details what reinforcements, if any arrive to aid their beleaguered allies. Even though many Rooms list the number of formian warriors as they arrive in waves, there are only so many formian warriors. The Great Hall has 30 unattached formian warriors, 10 unattached elite formian warriors and 2 unattached formian taskmasters. Each time the PCs engage in a combat in one of the Great Hall's Rooms, they undoubtedly draw more formians to their position as indicated in the Room's description. The formian warrior reinforcements number 30. After all 30 formian warriors or formian taskmasters arrive or fall, no more arrive. You could, move formian warriors from other encounter sites to engage the PCs, but those formians are under orders to protect their respective Rooms. Regardless, the Great Hall resumes its normal activity after 1 hour lapses (unless the PCs kill or rout everyone).

Chtrax remains in the Great Hall from Day 0 until Day 3. Later, he moves to Room D58 after the tarrasque reaches the first adamantite bands. Thereafter he has a 10% chance to be in a random Room in the Great Hall, a 50% chance of being in Room D58 and a 40% chance to be inspecting the mines in Rooms D78 through Room D80.

Destroying the myrmarch in Room D39 or the phylactery in Room D49 changes the dynamics of the section. If the PCs kill the myrmarch, formians in the Great Hall, the Approach, and the Old Mines suffer a -2 penalty to attacks, saves and skill checks and lose their hive mind ability. Destroying the phylactery, however, removes the hive mind ability from all the formians in the region, telling them their queen is dead. The formians stay in their respective locations attacking any non-formians encountered, including the giants, derro, slaves, xill and PCs. While in this enraged state, PCs cannot reason with them. All formians fight to the death.

Allow cautious PCs to move unmolested through this area, as long as they do nothing to draw attention to themselves. There are plenty of places for the PCs to move such as by skirting the edge of the cavern, keeping out of range of the inhabitants' darkvision and as long as they avoid combat, they should be fine. Should the PCs make a direct assault, let them feel the full weight of Chtrax's power.

Buildings have masonry walls 1 ft. thick. Each wall and roof has an 8 hardness and 90 hp. Climbing these walls requires a DC 15 Climb check.

The Great Hall has a sunken floor, but it is relatively level and free of debris. Unlike most of this section, purplish flames erupt from the floor, lighting the Great Hall. The flames are not hot, but offer light equivalent in brightness to moonlight. Water extinguishes them for a time, five minutes, before drying enough to flare up again.

13-14	1d8 duergar slaves walk towards Room D44 to work in a random tunnel.
15-16	1d4 formian warriors patrol the Great Hall looking for slackers, intruders, or dead.
17-18	1d4 stone giant laborers move towards Room D39 to relieve the workers there.
19-20	1d6 xill prowls the shadows looking for hosts.

D32. SENTRY

Guarding this wide staircase are two insect men and a large stone creature, its face chiseled into a cruel smile. Behind the guards is a vast cavern filled with several buildings and creatures, all working near a massive bore drilling into the heart of the earth. Balconies overlook the cavern occupied by watchful guards manning ballistae. This is a fearsome place, filled with more opponents than even the bravest army could hope to overcome.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly or Hostile (if alerted)

Encounter: Guarding this entry are two formian warriors (hp 26 each) and a stone golem (hp 107). The formian warriors vigilantly protect the Great Hall from intruders and are even suspicious of derro, with the recent raids from the renegades.

Getting past these sentries requires a successful DC 25 Bluff check (DC 35 if alerted). Combat with these formians puts the Great Hall on alert.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs fought the derro and formians in Room D31, these guards are ready for the PCs, positioning themselves on either side of the door and leaving the stone golem in the middle blocking the passage into the hall. When the PCs engage the golem, the formian warriors take full attacks on the closest PCs.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 11

Skills and Feats: —

Slow (Su): A stone golem can use a slow effect, as the spell, as a free action once every 2 rounds. The effect has a range of 10 ft. and a duration of 7 rounds, requiring a DC 17 Will save to negate. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Immunity to Magic (Ex): A stone golem is immune to any spell or spell-like ability that allows spell resistance. In addition, certain spells and effects function differently against the creature, as noted below.

A transmute rock to mud spell slows a stone golem (as the slow spell) for 2d6 rounds, with no saving throw, while transmute mud to rock heals all of its lost hit points.

A stone to flesh spell does not actually change the golem's structure but negates its damage reduction and immunity to magic for 1 full round.

D33. SEPARATION ROOM

This large building stands between a smaller connected building and a ramp descending from the platform housing the bore. With no windows and only a single door, the plumes of smoke rising from stacks on its roof make the structure more imposing.

If the PCs enter, read the following text.

Inside, a tracked ramp dumps nuggets of rock mixed with some glowing metal into bins. Dwarven slaves move the full bins to worktables where other slaves use odd devices to handle the materials and separate the silvery metal from the base rock. Once they separate the metal, they place the pure substance on a conveyor carrying it out of the room into the attached building. Clouds of dust boil up from the tables, venting through the ceiling. Overseeing the entire operation is a large ant creature with a derro with a glazed expression at its side.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent or Hostile (if alert)

Encounter: A formian taskmaster (hp 39) is in charge of the separation of the truesilver from the rock. At his side is a dominated [derro] overseer (hp 29). Working the Room are 12 duergar (hp 9 each) and 20 deep dwarf (hp 6 each) slaves.

Encounter Condition: [Stagnant Air], Unhallowed 6

Tactics: If not alerted to intruders, the taskmaster scuttles over to the PCs inquiring of their business. To convince the formian they belong, they must succeed a DC 15 Bluff/Intimidate check. The taskmaster does not respond to Diplomacy. If the Great Hall is alert, the formian alerts his fellow formians through the hive mind of the presence of intruders.

Combat with the formian taskmaster alerts the rest of the Great Hall. If alerted, in 1d6 rounds a patrol of 1d4 formian warriors arrives to aid the combatants against the heroes. More formians join the fight every 1d6 rounds thereafter until the threat is suitably contained. The reinforcements continue until 12 formian warriors have answered the call. Then, the formian myrmarch from Room D39 arrives to destroy any surviving PCs.

If the PCs or a tremor destroys this building, production stops for 1d6 days, as formian workers hasten to rebuild the structure. In the meantime, the formian myrmarchs confine the slaves to their quarters or the formians send the dwarves to work in other tunnels.

Treasure: There is a considerable fortune of truesilver in this Room, however direct contact by a mortal turns it to normal silver. There are 75 pounds of the stuff scattered between the bins and the various tables, worth over 75,000 gp if the PCs can handle it without contaminating it. Otherwise, the silver is worth 375 gp.

Dominate Monster (Su): A taskmaster can use a dominate monster ability as the spell from a 10th-level caster (Will DC 17 negates), although the subject may be of any kind and may be up to Large size. Creatures that successfully save cannot be affected by the same taskmaster's dominate monster ability for 24 hours. A single taskmaster can dominate up to four subjects at a time. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Dominated Creature (Ex): A taskmaster is never encountered alone. One dominated nonformian creature always accompanies it (choose or determine randomly any creature of CR 4).

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 15, initial and secondary damage 1d6 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based.

D34. REFINERY

Inside this smaller, attached and windowless building, slaves work to melt silver metal taken from a conveyor from the adjoining building. They then cast the metal into bars. When suitably cooled, the slaves load the bars onto low carts, for the stone giants to move to yet another structure. More insect men watch the slaves' progress with blank and unblinking stares. The room is replete with poisonous fumes.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent or Hostile (if alert)

Encounter: Once the slaves separate the ore from the rock in Room D33, they send it here on a conveyor belt, where ten deep dwarf slaves (hp 6 each) smelt the ore into liquid and cast it into bars, making it easy to transport for the gnome in Room D54. Six formian warriors (hp 26 each) are vigilant in the security here, keeping alert and watching for treachery. Two stone giant laborers (hp 119) load the palettes of bars onto carts and roll them to Room D42. This process is extremely slow and dangerous.

The fumes from the refining process are toxic. As the dwarves are extremely resistant to poison, and the formians immune, most are unaffected. PCs entering this Room must succeed DC 15 Fortitude saves or take 1d6 points of Constitution damage from the poisonous atmosphere. Ten rounds later, they must succeed a second save, regardless of the success or failure of the first, against the same DC, or take an additional 1d6 points of Constitution. This continues for every 10 rounds they remain in the Room and for ten rounds after they leave.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the Room is alert, the formian warriors alert the other formians in the Great Hall to the presence of intruders. Otherwise, the formian warriors question the PCs about their presence. PCs must succeed a DC 15 Bluff check to convince the formian warriors they belong. On a failed check, the warriors ask the PCs to leave. On a failed check by 5 or more, the formians warn the other formians in the Great Hall of intruders and then attack.

The formians command the slaves to attack the PCs, though the slaves only fight until half their number fall before fleeing. The stone giants hurl carts at the PCs dealing damage as boulders. They have enough for two carts apiece. Finally, the formian warriors move to gain flanks against the PCs.

Combat with the formians alerts the rest of the Great Hall. If alerted, a patrol of 1d4 formian warriors arrives in 1d6 rounds to aid the combatants against the heroes. The reinforcements continue until a total of 12 formian warriors answer the call, and then the formian myrmarch from Room D39 arrives to destroy any surviving PCs.

If the PCs or a tremor destroys this building, refinement moves to the factory at Room D30. If the PCs destroyed the factory there, production stops altogether for 2d6 days until the formian workers can rebuild the structure. In the meantime, the formian myrmarches confine the slaves to their quarters or send dwarves to work in other tunnels.

Treasure: There are 50 pounds of truesilver in bars and in raw form in this Room. The haul is worth over 37,500 gp if the PCs can handle them without contamination. Otherwise, the silver is worth 250 gp.

D35. TRACKED RAMP

Large carts filled with rock travel down the tracked ramp descending from the large platform to end inside of an adjacent building.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: An ore cart travels down the ramp once per five minutes from Room D39. The ramp itself is unguarded. Walking on this ramp reduces a PC's speed by half and requires a successful DC 20 Balance check to keep one's footing. A failed check indicates the PC falls on the ramp. A failed check by 5 or more indicates the PC fell to the floor below, taking 8d6 points of falling damage. The ore carts are unavoidable, taking up the whole of the ramp. PCs struck by a cart take 2d6 points of damage and tumble down the ramp into a bin in Room D33.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The ramp has a hardness of 5 and 40 hp. If the PCs or tremors destroy it, slaves unload the rock from the threads of the bore at Room D40 and load it into carts and the giants push the carts to Room D33. It takes the formian workers 1d3 days to rebuild this ramp.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

D36. TRACK

Two stone giants push a cart along this track. With each movement, the contents splash and run down its sides. The track originates at an angled building and ends at the drill site.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Two stone giants (hp 119 each) haul grease to the drill site. The giants ignore PCs unless they attack or if a formian taskmaster commands them to attack. If the Great Hall is alert, the giants continue about their business.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: PCs improving the giants' attitude to Friendly or better, requiring a successful DC 15 Diplomacy check, convince the giants to divulge what they know about the Great Hall. The giants know the basic operations in the Hall, but are unfamiliar with anything beyond the Hall. They do know formians take injured derro to the Infirmary at Room D48. Most derro return, but all notice they return changed.

If drawn into a fight, the giants are ruthless, having lived under the oppressive rule of first the derro and then the xill. They use the opportunity to vent their frustration, by hurling a cart at the PCs, dealing damage as a thrown rock, before they close with slam attacks.

Combat here instantly alerts formians warriors, who in turn alert the rest of the Hall. Every 1d4 rounds, 1d6 formian warriors arrive, continuing until 18 formian warriors have arrived. In addition, the derro sentries at Room D45 fire ballista bolts at the PCs for as long as they can see them. After six rounds of fighting, the formian myrmarch from Room D39 arrives to dispatch the remaining intruders.

If the PCs or tremors destroy this track, slaves manually carry tubs of the grease until the formian workers repair the track in 1d3 days.

Treasure: N/A

D37. GRAVEL AND RENDERING SHOP

This angled building is nondescript, featuring two entrances. The first is a wide bay, large enough to allow the giant exiting to pass without ducking. The second is a smaller wooden door. The air here stinks of rock dust, mixed with the stench of a charnel house.

Once inside...

Inside, the twin purposes of this building become abundantly clear. First, a chained, large winged reptile and two blind bipedal creatures with cone-like mouths shatter rock with a magical sonic ability. Derro overseers watch the progress, while dwarf slaves drag more large boulders into the path of the blasting. Clouds of grey dust swirl into the air. It is safe to say the noise is deafening.

The second function of the room is less mundane. Corpses of slaves, derro and even giants sit in a pile while a weird dinosaur creature hoses them with a stream of liquid. Where the fluid falls, the flesh breaks down and streams of acrid smoke rise. Four masked slaves squeegee the runoff into troughs to carry the fluids into a sunken vat. There three more slaves stir the mixture with long poles. Occasionally, one dips a bucket into the stinking pool to pull forth a fresh batch of lubricant.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This building serves to break down rock and flesh. The chained creature is an yrhak (hp 102) and the others are destrachan (hp 60 each). Two derro handlers (hp 64 each) watch their progress, and 4 deep dwarves (hp 6 each) shovel the gravel into carts to be dragged away at a later time to Room D7. The derro and the dwarves are deaf from the noise.

On the other side is a digester (hp 68) and his handler. The slaves are all deep dwarves (hp 6 each). These slaves make lubricants for drilling from liquefied carcasses.

If the PCs enter this Room, the derro are suspicious but ignore the PCs. As this Room lacks a formian presence, even if the Great Hall is under direct assault, the derro handlers have no way of knowing about it without going outside, something they only do at shift changes. Consequently, all of the creatures here ignore the PCs.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The derro are not interested in conversing with PCs. Any questions about the complex, its operation, or leadership tell the derro the PCs are outsiders. Should a fight break out, the derro fall back and command the others to attack.

Round 1: Derro handlers fall back and fire crossbow bolts at the PCs. The digester uses its acid spray in a cone effect. The destrachan move to catch the PCs in crossfire of destructive harmonics (flesh), while the yrthak uses its sonic lance on the chain holding it. The slaves flee.

Round 2: Derro handlers fire another barrage of poisoned crossbow bolts or use sound burst on groups of PCs. The digester charges the nearest living creature, ally or enemy and attacks using its claw until its acid recharges. The destrachan use their destructive harmonics (flesh) again if losing, or if they have the upper hand, switch to the nerves effect. The yrthak wings out through the wide door and takes to the air, launching sonic lance attacks at the various buildings and individuals in the Great Hall. The slaves flee to Room D42.

Round 3: If the combat goes against the derro and their minions, they create darkness and flee, leaving the combat to their remaining minions. Otherwise, the derro alternate between sound burst and poisoned bolts. Surviving destrachan continue with their destructive harmonics, intent on reducing the PCs to quivering puddles of flesh. The digester continues its attack.

Following Rounds: If the yrthak escaped, it wreaks havoc in the Great Hall, using its sonic attacks to destroy structures and villains alike. In response to those attacks, the ballistae at Room D43 and Room D45 launch attacks at the winged reptile. Formian workers scramble to repair damaged structures and 2d12 formian warriors and a formian myrmarch move to Room D37 to eliminate the PCs on round 6. The rest of the Great Hall is alert until the formians destroy yrthak and the PCs.

If the PCs or tremors destroy the gravel and rendering house, the formians force the slaves to carry the larger rocks directly to the lava. For lubrication, they simply slaughter slaves at the drill site and dump the bodies in near the bore. This is not effective, but the derro do not care. It takes the formian workers 2d3 days to rebuild this structure.

Treasure: One of the derro handlers has an iron key. The key unlocks the gate to Room D47.

EL: 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a formian taskmaster to this Room and have it control the digester. To decrease the challenge, remove the yrthak.

Skills and Feats: Hide +8, Listen +25, Move Silently +7, Survival +9; Dodge, Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes.

Destructive Harmonics (Su): A destrachan can blast sonic energy in a cone up to 80 ft. long. It can also use this attack to affect any creatures or objects within a 30-ft. radius. It can tune the harmonics of this destructive power to affect different types of targets. All save DCs are Charisma-based.

Flesh: Disrupting tissue and rending bone, this attack deals 4d6 points of damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Nerves: A destrachan can focus its harmonics to knock out foes rather than slay them. This attack deals 6d6 points of nonlethal damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Material: When using this form of harmonics, a destrachan chooses wood, stone, metal, or glass. All objects made of that material within the area must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or shatter. Objects (or portions of objects) that have up to 30 hit points are potentially affected by this attack.

Blindsight (Ex): A destrachan can use hearing to ascertain all foes within 100 ft. as a sighted creature would.

Immunities: Destrachans have immunity to gaze attacks, visual effects, illusions, and other attack forms that rely on sight.

Protection from Sonics (Ex): While they can be affected by loud noises and sonic spells (such as ghost sound or silence), destrachans are less vulnerable to sonic attacks (+4 circumstance bonus on all saves) because they can protect their ears. A destrachan whose sense of hearing is impaired is effectively blinded, and all targets are treated as having total concealment.

Skills: A destrachan has a +10 racial bonus on Listen checks.

❖ Digester: CR 6; Medium magical beast; HD 8d10+24; hp 68; Init +6; Spd 60 ft.; AC 17, touch 12, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +8; Grp +11; Atk +11 melee (1d8+4, claw); Full Atk +11 melee (1d8+4, claw); SA Acid spray; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., immunity to acid, low-light vision, scent; AL N; SV Fort +9, Ref +10, Will +3; Str 17, Dex 15, Con 17, Int 2, Wis 12, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Hide +9, Listen +6, Jump +21, Spot +6; Alertness, Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes.

Acid Spray (Ex): A digester can spray acid in a 20-ft. cone, dealing 4d8 points of damage to everything in the area. Once a digester uses this ability, it can't use it again until 1d4 rounds later.

The creature can also produce a concentrated stream of acid that deals 8d8 points of damage to a single target within 5 ft. In either case, a DC 17 Reflex save halves the damage. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Skills: A digester's coloration gives it a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks. It also has a +4 racial bonus on Jump checks.

❖ Yrthak: CR 9; Huge magical beast; HD 12d10+36; hp 102; Init +6; Spd 20 ft., fly 60 ft. (average); AC 18, touch 10, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +12; Grp +25; Atk +15 melee (2d8+5, bite) or +12 ranged touch (6d6, sonic lance); Full Atk +15 melee (2d8+5, bite) and +13 melee (1d6+2, 2 claws); or +12 ranged touch (6d6, sonic lance); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft.; SA Sonic lance, explosion; SQ Blindsight 120 ft., immunities, vulnerability to sonic; SV Fort +11, Ref +10, Will +5; AL N; Str 20, Dex 14, Con 17, Int 7, Wis 13, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Listen +12, Move Silently +10; Endurance, Flyby Attack, Improved Initiative, Multiattack, Snatch.

Sonic Lance (Su): Once every 2 rounds, a yrthak can focus sonic energy in a ray up to 60 ft. long. This is a ranged touch attack that deals 6d6 points of damage to a single target.

Explosion (Su): A yrthak can fire its sonic lance at the ground, a large rock, a stone wall, or the like to create an explosion of shattered stone. This attack deals 2d6 points of piercing damage to all within 10 ft. of the effect's center. This counts as a use of the sonic lance attack and thus is usable only once every 2 rounds, and never on the round following a sonic lance attack.

Blindsight (Ex): A yrthak can ascertain all foes within 120 ft. Beyond that range it is considered blinded. Yrthaks are invulnerable to gaze attacks, visual effects of spells such as illusions, and other attack forms that rely on sight. A yrthak whose sense of hearing is impaired is effectively blinded, treating all targets as having total concealment. Immunities: Yrthaks have immunity to gaze attacks, visual effects, illusions, and other attack forms that rely on sight.

Skills: Yrthaks have a +4 racial bonus on Listen checks.

D38. CISTERN

A 40-ft. tall tank, nearly 30 ft. in diameter, stands in the center of the chamber. Guarding it are five insect men and a crippled derro who fills cups with water drawn from the massive container. The floor around the cistern is muddy.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This reservoir holds fresh water. Six formian warriors (hp 26 each) stand guard, while a crippled derro (hp 13) rations out the water to dusty workers. The formians pay little attention to the humanoid, being watchful of trespassers or idle workers. Four formians stand evenly spaced, guarding each cardinal point. The other two flank the derro.

Mythran, the crippled derro, on the other hand, despises his lot, the formians and the xill controlling the entire region. In fact, his hatred is so fierce he despises even his own people, seeing them only as traitors. Several weeks ago, he broke his leg in a cave-in. He refused treatment in the infirmary, and managed to set the bone himself. Somehow, he was not condemned to the rendering house, and instead forced to work the cistern.

Since taking his new post, he has secretly poisoned the well, adding more and more toxins with the intention of murdering the region's population. What has happened instead is most of the inhabitants have resisted the poison and grown immune to it. Those that have not, are easier to paralyze and thereby easier to inject with eggs. Now the well is extremely toxic and anyone who has not been acclimated to it must succeed a DC 15 Fortitude save or take 1d6 points of Constitution damage. Ten rounds later, regardless of whether they made the initial save or not, the victim must succeed another save against the same DC, or the poison deals 2d6 points of Constitution damage.

Encounter Condition: Poor Footing 4

Tactics: The formian warriors do not wait for discussion before attacking. A myrmarch ordered them to protect the cistern at all costs, as it is the only fresh water supply in the region. Hence, if the PCs approach and the formian warriors notice them, they attack first, alert the rest of the Hall to the threat if it is not already aware, and call for reinforcements.

Mythran runs as fast as he can to Room D32, where he believes he can make a quick escape.

If the PCs or tremors destroy the cistern, the entire operation is in jeopardy. With no water, the inhabitants dehydrate. However, there is a supply of water in Rooms D72 and D75. Chtrax does not divert labor to acquire it. Instead, he doubles and triples the shifts, intent on finding the vault before his labor force perishes. Should this take place, escalate the tarasque's timeline as detailed in the Introduction by two days, meaning the devils escape on Day 5 instead of Day 7.

PCs without water can survive for 1 day plus the number of hours equal to their Constitution scores. On the third day after the cistern's destruction, all slaves take 1d6 points of nonlethal damage. On the fourth day, they take another 1d6 points of nonlethal damage. This continues until the tarasque breaks through to the devil vault.

Treasure: Mythran carries 6 doses of dark reaver powder (300 gp each).

Blind-Fight, Improved Initiative.

Possessions: Dagger, dark reaver powder (6 doses).

D39. BORE

A giant drill descends into the earth. Sprouting from it are four large iron bars, pushed by four stone giants. The drill threads carry chunks of rock upward to the platform overhead. The rock surrounding the drill head is slippery with lubricant and smokes with a foul odor. Overseeing the bore's progress is an enormous insect creature and four small insect warriors.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Four stone giants (hp 119 each) push the handles of an enormous bore. As they rotate it, chunks of truesilver emerge near the cavity. Shifts change in 8 hours, effectively doubling the stone giants here for 1 minute.

Watching their progress is the formian myrmarch (hp 102) in charge of truesilver extraction and refinement. He keeps eight formian warriors (hp 30 each) nearby to ensure security. Aside from overseeing the drilling process, he is aware of disruptions in the Great Hall, and commands his formian warriors through the hive mind to deal with disruptions. In addition, he also is responsible for repairing structures and so oversees the formian workers in Room D46.

The formian warriors are watchful for slackers and intruders and actively make Spot checks. Each round the PCs remain within line of sight with the bore, allow the formian warriors there to make Spot checks. If they see the PCs, they immediately report the information to the myrmarch, who in turn alerts the rest of the Hall to the presence of intruders.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The myrmarch has his orders: destroy all intruders. Leading his warriors, he sends out a mental alert to all the formians in the complex, and attacks the PCs. Each round 1d3 additional formian warriors arrive to help their master, until 18 formians (hp 28 each) arrive. The giants continue to turn the bore, but defend themselves if attacked. The derro ballistae crews at Rooms D43 and D45 target PCs they can see.

Killing the myrmarch removes the formians' hive mind ability and imposes a -2 circumstance penalty to all of their attacks, saves and skill checks.

If the PCs, tremors, or the destruction of the platform above collapses and destroys the bore, truesilver extraction stops, lacking the materials to construct another one. Fortunately, Chtrax has enough truesilver for the gnome to construct the collar for the Pit Fiend. With the extraction processes halted, Chtrax leaves this section to oversee the digging at Room D61 or with the gnome in Room D63, with a 50% chance of each. The formians divert the slaves and derto to various tunnels throughout the complex to aid in the digging efforts. Thereafter, only a token force remains in this chamber; halve the number of all creatures encountered in this section.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 13 (15 with reinforcements)

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, advance the myrmarch to 20 HD. To decrease the challenge, increase the time it takes reinforcements to arrive to 1d6 rounds and remove one of the stone giants.

Skills: * A stone giant gains a +8 racial bonus on Hide checks in rocky terrain.

D40. PLATFORM

Framing the great drill are four huge metal poles, easily 5 ft. thick. Atop of the poles, 80 ft. high, stands a platform. From one side descends a ramp. Two ladders, on the opposite side offer access to the top.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Working atop the platform are six formian workers (5 hp) who use force clamps to move the rock from the helical thread to the iron carts. Two stone giants (hp 119 each) push the carts onto the tracked ramp, Room D35, to travel down to Room D33. These creatures are oblivious to combat and do nothing to aid those below, focused obsessively on their work.

Encounter Condition: Tremors 18

Tactics: These creatures do not initiate combat, nor do they converse with PCs. If attacked, however, the stone giants fight back. The formian workers flee, scuttling down the ladders as quickly as they can. The stone giants hurl chunks of rock as they come up the thread until the PCs close to melee combat. Then, the giants make bull rush attacks to knock them from the platform. The ballistae at Room D43 and Room D45 have a clear line of sight to the platform and direct their attacks there if combat breaks out, unconcerned if they happen to hit a stone giant or formian. If the PCs reduce the giants to 10 hit points or less, they surrender.

A fall from the platform deals 8d6 points of damage.

If platform is destroyed, the bore falls to the floor in a random direction. With the platform, the ramp at Room D35 falls as well. To see the falling drills' direction, roll 1d20 and consult the table below.

1d20	Result
1-3	Falls on Room D47 and collapses the building. All creatures within take 3d6 points of damage and the monsters go on a killing spree, heading in random directions, attacking as many creatures as possible.
4-7	Falls to the floor, creating a tremor as if you had rolled 2-4 on the Random Encounter Table for this Section.
8-10	Falls to the floor, creating a tremor as if you had rolled 2-4 on the Random Encounter Table for this Section. In addition, it lands on the track between Rooms D34 and D41, halting the transport of truesilver.
11-13	Falls on Room D33 and collapses the building. All creatures inside take 3d6 points of damage.
14-16	Falls on Room D37 and collapses the building. All creatures inside take 3d6 points of damage. In addition, the surviving monsters go on a killing spree, wreaking havoc throughout the Section.
17-19	Falls on Room D38, destroying the cistern, killing the formian warriors and the crippled derto.
20	Falls on Room D46, killing all inhabitants. Destruction of this magnitude shuts down the entire operation as described in Room D39.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, make the platform unstable, requiring PCs to succeed at DC 15 Balance checks to keep their footing. If they fail by 5 or more, they fall to the ground 80 ft. below. In addition, add two more formian workers, so they can heal one of the stone giants. To decrease the challenge, remove one of the stone giants.

Destructive Harmonics (Su): A destrachan can blast sonic energy in a cone up to 80 ft. long. It can also use this attack to affect any creatures or objects within a 30-ft. radius. It can tune the harmonics of this destructive power to affect different types of targets. All save DCs are Charisma-based.

D41. TRANSPORTATION AND INVENTORY

A cart track runs into this building from one side and out another. A stone giant wheels the cart into the building and then walks up the track. Outside of the building stand three insect warriors.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Three elite formian warriors (hp 52 each) guard this Room. Their orders are to ensure no one tampers with arriving or departing ore carts. These creatures are watchful, so allow them to make Spot checks against any creatures in line of sight.

Inside a formian taskmaster (hp 39) and its winged half-fiend destrachan servant (hp 74) inventory the truesilver bars going to the gnome. He submits a weekly report to the formian myrmarch, who in turn reports to Chtrax to show their progress.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The formian warriors generally ignore anyone moving past this Room, only attacking anyone not of the Great Hall and approaching this Room. When attacking, they do not move more than 10 ft. away from the Room, falling back should PCs attempt to lure them away. Combat with these formians alerts the rest of the Great Hall to the intruders. On the following round, the formian taskmaster exits the Room commanding the half-fiend destrachan to attack, while it enters melee. Each round of combat, 1d4 formian warriors arrive until 12 have arrived. Then, the formian myrmarch from Room D39 comes to dispatch any surviving PCs.

If the PCs or tremors destroy this Room, business continues as normal; a formian taskmaster goes to Room D34 to count.

Treasure: At any given time, there are 2d20 1-lb. bars of truesilver. Each bar is worth 750 gp. Recall, if any creature touches the bar, the bar becomes standard silver, worth about 5 gp.

Flesh: Disrupting tissue and rending bone, this attack deals 4d6 points of damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Nerves: A destrachan can focus its harmonics to knock out foes rather than slay them. This attack deals 6d6 points of nonlethal damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Material: When using this form of harmonics, a destrachan chooses wood, stone, metal, or glass. All objects made of that material within the area must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or shatter. Objects (or portions of objects) that have up to 30 hit points are potentially affected by this attack.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a half-fiend destrachan can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (+8) against a good foe.

Blindsight (Ex): A destrachan can use hearing to ascertain all foes within 100 ft. as a sighted creature would.

Immunities: Destrachans have immunity to gaze attacks, visual effects, illusions, and other attack forms that rely on sight. Half-fiend destrachan have an immunity to poison.

Protection from Sonics (Ex): While they can be affected by loud noises and sonic spells (such as ghost sound or silence), destrachans are less vulnerable to sonic attacks (+4 circumstance bonus on all saves) because they can protect their ears. A destrachan whose sense of hearing is impaired is effectively blinded, and all targets are treated as having total concealment.

Spell-like Abilities: 3/day—darkness, poison (DC 16); 1/day—desecrate, unholy blight (DC 16). Caster level 8th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Skills: A destrachan has a +10 racial bonus on Listen checks.

D42. BARRACKS

Ramshackle cots fill this large building. Cobwebs cling to corners and the floor is filthy with dust, hair and dirt. Otherwise, the room is empty.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This large building is not much more than a warehouse filled with beds, its rear wall exposed rock. Once, the derro slept here, but now it is always empty as the derro sleep in or around their work areas.

Encounter Condition: [Safe]

Tactics: This is a good place for the PCs to rest as no one ever comes here anymore. Only roll for Random Encounters once per day at this location.

If the PCs or tremors destroy this Room, no one notices.

Treasure: PCs searching under the cots and succeeding a DC 20 Search check, find a secret compartment concealed by years of grime. The compartment is locked, its key long lost, requiring a successful DC 25 Open Locks check to open. Alternatively, a PC succeeding a DC 20 Strength check can break it open. Inside are the following items: six cut sapphires (1,000 gp each), a small charcoal diagram of a repeating ballista (100 gp), obsidian bracelet with three small spheres each etched with a decorative rune (140 gp), a perfect cylinder made of cherry wood (800 gp), a smooth slate ring (500 gp), a doll made of human skin (no value), +2 keen kukri, ring of improved swimming, and a pearl of power (3rd level). Souiji's daughter, a consummate thief, left this hidden cache. She intended to return for her things, but a xill egg killed her before she could.

D43. GUARD BALCONY

A dark staircase carved into the rock winds upward, presumably to the balcony 80 ft. above the Great Hall. From below, you can see a large ballista mounted on the rail and derro leaning over the rail to watch those below.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Three derro sentries (hp 33 each) guard the Great Hall. One mans a repeating ballista (see below) mounted on a swivel base. The other two carry heavy repeating crossbows. As they keep an eye out for trouble, they use the repeating ballista against any foes combating the inhabitants of the Great Hall. With their height advantage along with the dim lighting in the Hall, the derro have a good view of the entire complex.

◆ Repeating Ballista: 3d8/19–20; range 120 ft; crew 1; cost 1,000 gp.

Unlike normal ballistae, the repeating ballista may fire up to six projectiles before needing a new cartridge. The crew makes a ranged attack with this weapon, but at a –6 penalty for size. It takes 3 rounds to reload this weapon, 2 if two people work together.

There are five cartridges in all for the ballista.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the derro sentries spot a combat in the Great Hall, they use the repeating ballista and heavy crossbow attacks against the PCs. If the PCs come up the access tunnel, the three derro ready actions to fire their heavy repeating crossbows against any intruders coming up the stairs behind them. These derro are infected and fight to the death.

If the PCs or tremors destroy this Room, the balcony and its survivors fall to the ground, destroying both the ballista and the sentries. The formian workers repair the balcony in 1d2 days.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a second ballista and make both +1 flaming ballistae. To decrease the challenge, take away the ballista's repeating function.

Possessions: Mithril chain shirt, buckler, short sword, repeating heavy crossbow, Bolts (20).

D44. EAST SENTRY

Three steps lead up to this exit. At the top, a single sentry defends this exit. It resembles a giant derro, except it is made of granite. Bloodstains and shattered bones cover the floor below.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The stone golem (hp 107) guards this exit and is under orders to attack any creature not accompanied by a formian or derro. Hence, the golem has killed many slaves trying to get back to work in the mines. The golem attacks the PCs as soon as they either attack it or come within 20 ft.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The golem closes with the PCs and uses its slow attack. On the following rounds, it uses full attack actions as much as possible. This golem fights until destroyed. Combat with this sentry is common, so 1d6 formian warriors only come to investigate 50% of the time. If the warriors do come to the fight, they alert the rest of the Great Hall, and 1d4 more formian warriors arrive every 1d6 rounds until a total of 12 formian warriors arrive. Thereafter, no one else in the Hall comes to investigate.

Skills and Feats: —

Slow (Su): A stone golem can use a slow effect, as the spell, as a free action once every 2 rounds. The effect has a range of 10 ft. and a duration of 7 rounds, requiring a DC 17 Will save to negate. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Immunity to Magic (Ex): A stone golem is immune to any spell or spell-like ability that allows spell resistance. In addition, certain spells and effects function differently against the creature, as noted below.

A transmute rock to mud spell slows a stone golem (as the slow spell) for 2d6 rounds, with no saving throw, while transmute mud to rock heals all of its lost hit points.

A stone to flesh spell does not actually change the golem's structure but negates its damage reduction and immunity to magic for 1 full round.

A remove disease spell rids a victim of the egg, as does a DC 25 Heal check. If the check fails, the healer can try again, but each attempt (successful or not) deals 1d4 points of damage to the patient.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a xill must hit with one or more claw attacks. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. It receives a +2 bonus on the grapple check for each claw that hits. If it wins the grapple check and maintains the hold in the next round, it automatically bites the foe at that time. The bite deals no damage but injects a paralyzing venom.

Paralysis (Ex): Those bitten by a xill must succeed on a DC 14 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 1d4 hours. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Planewalk (Su): Xill cannot use planewalk in this adventure.

D45. GUARD PLATFORM

A dark staircase carved into the rock winds upward, presumably to the balcony 80 ft. above the Great Hall. From below, you see a ballista extending over the railing. At ground level, there is a dark tunnel leading to some steps.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The dero sentries that once manned this ballista have succumbed to the xill eggs. Now, three xill (hp 32) occupy this Room, feasting on the remains of their former hosts. They are uninterested in the developments in the great hall, but if the PCs, or any other creature approach within 20 ft. of this Room, allow the xill Spot checks to notice. If they catch sight of the intruders, one creeps forward to the repeating ballista and takes aim, while the other two outsiders Move Silently down the stairs.

Unlike normal ballistae, the repeating ballista may fire up to six projectiles before needing a new cartridge. The crew makes a ranged attack with this weapon, but at a –6 penalty for size. It takes 3 rounds to reload this weapon, 2 if two people work together.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Once in position, the xill on the balcony fires, hoping to herd the PCs into the darkened tunnel where the xill's comrades wait. PCs foolishly scaling the wall or flying reach the balcony 80 ft. up, while the xill targets PCs still on the ground. Once any PCs reach the balcony, the xill retreats to the tunnel entrance, where he fights to the death or until his allies come up from below. Meanwhile, the xill in the tunnel "ready an action" to attack the first PC entering the tunnel. One focuses on grappling and injects an egg into the subject, while the other joins the

D46. FORMIAN BARRACKS

This long, low-slung structure is made of stone worked in honeycomb patterns. The structure is immaculate, the ground around the place smooth and level, adorned with line patterns on the floor extending outward away from the building some 10 ft. Round portals offer access to the building's dark interior.

Initial Attitude: N/A (or Indifferent)

Encounter: This unusual building, designed by its occupants, serves as the formian barracks. Though outsiders do not need to sleep, formians function better with a place to collect their thoughts between shifts. The barracks are in effect eight different cells. Each cell is bare, except for a conical mound in the center where a small orb of granite rests. The formians focus their thoughts on the perfect sphere as a means to maintain perfectly ordered thoughts. Complex line patterns cover the walls and floors, leading through the patterns to the mounted spheres.

Presently, the barracks are empty, giving the PCs a chance to rest, stage an ambush, or investigate their enemy. After 30 minutes roll for a Random Encounter.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs or tremors destroy this Room, the Great Hall continues as normal, except there is a 15% chance any given Room has its numbers halved. In addition, the loss to the formian workers increases the number of days needed to repair a damaged or destroyed building by 1d3.

Treasure: Each Room houses a perfect sphere of granite. The craftsmanship, not the material, makes these 10-lb. spheres valuable. There are eight spheres, each worth 20 gp.

D47. CORRAL OF THE BEAST HANDLERS

The Gate to the corral is locked, requiring a DC 25 Open Locks check to unlock it; the beast handler at Room D37 has the key. Inside the gate, the monsters all wander about the open area. A large trough of semi-clean water sits at one end. The monsters here are beyond caring and have little fight left in them. They are fatigued, and only fight if attacked. [A fatigued PC can neither run nor charge and takes a -2 penalty on Strength and Dexterity checks.] They fight to the death, battling mostly in defense and not working together.

A 9 ft. tall wall of stone corrals this place. From inside, you hear growling and roaring, the crunching of bones and other disturbing sounds associated with feasting. Guarding the gate on the side facing the great drill are three formian warriors holding halberds. Behind them, you clearly see a collection of fearsome monsters, including a bulette, a couple of digesters and even a destrachan.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Three elite formian warriors (hp 52 each) guard the corral to ensure no one tampers with the beasts. Inside, there is one bulette (hp 94), one destrachan (hp 60), and two digesters (hp 68). The formians are watchful; assume they "take 10" on all Listen and Spot checks. If the PCs approach, and the formians are not on alert, one of the formian warriors demands to know the PCs' business. The PCs must succeed a DC 25 Bluff check to prevent the formians from attacking. If the encounter turns to combat, the elite formian warriors alert the rest of the Great Hall with their Hive Mind ability before attacking. The monsters are all fatigued from their work in the Great Hall, and are not interested in fighting unless provoked. If the PCs keep out of the corral, the monsters ignore them.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: After combat starts, 1d2 more elite formian warriors arrive every 1d4 rounds until a total of 2 more have arrived. On the round after the last elite formian warrior arrives to reinforce the guards, the formian myrmarch at Room D39 comes to destroy the attackers.

The elite formian warriors work to make full attacks, letting the PCs come to them rather than charging into the thick of the battle. Reinforcements surprise attack the PCs from the rear. Even if the desperation of the fight escalates, the elite formian warriors do not draw the monsters inside the corral into the fight.

If the PCs or tremors destroy this Room all surviving monsters escape and head in random directions to kill as many formians and derro as possible.

Treasure: N/A

EL: Varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, remove the fatigued condition from the monsters inside the corral. To decrease the challenge, replace the elite formian warriors with standard formian warriors.

✦ Elite Formian Warrior: CR 5; Medium outsider (lawful, extraplanar); HD 8d8+16; hp 52; Init +3; Spd 40 ft.; AC 18, touch 13, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +8; Grp +11; Atk +12 melee (2d4+3 plus poison, sting); Full Atk +12 melee (2d4+3 plus poison, sting) and +10 melee (1d10+4/x3, +1 halberd) and +9 melee (1d4+1, bite); SA Poison; SQ Hive mind, immunity to poison, petrification, and cold, resistance to electricity 10, fire 10, and sonic 10, spell resistance 18; AL LN; SV Fort +8, Ref +9, Will +7; Str 17, Dex 16, Con 14, Int 10, Wis 12, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Climb +18, Hide +18, Jump +22, Listen +16, Move Silently +18, Survival +9(+11 following tracks), Tumble +20; Mounted Combat, Multiattack, Weapon Focus (sting).

Hive Mind (Ex): All formians within 50 miles of their queen are in constant communication. If one is aware of a particular danger, they all are. If one in a group is not flatfooted, none of them are. No formian in a group is considered flanked unless all of them are.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 16, initial and secondary damage 1d6 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Possessions: +1 halberd.

✦ Fatigued Bulette: CR 7; Huge magical beast; HD 9d10+45; hp 94; Init +2; Spd 40 ft., burrow 10 ft.; AC 22, touch 10, flat-footed 20; Base Atk +9; Grp +25; Atk +16 melee (2d8+8, bite); Full Atk +16 melee (2d8+8, bite) and +10 melee (2d6+4, 2 claws); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft.; SA Leap; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., lowlight vision, scent, tremorsense 60 ft.; AL N; SV Fort +11, Ref +8, Will +6; Str 27, Dex 15, Con 20, Int 2, Wis 13, Cha 6.

Skills and Feats: Jump +18, Listen +9, Spot +3; Alertness, Iron Will, Track, Weapon Focus (bite).

Leap (Ex): A bulette can jump into the air during combat. This allows it to make four claw attacks instead of two, each with a +15 attack bonus, but it cannot bite.

✦ Fatigued Destrachan: CR 8; Large aberration; HD 8d8+24; hp 60; Init +5; Spd 30 ft.; AC 18, touch 10, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +6; Grp +14; Atk +9 melee (1d6+4, claw); Full Atk +9 melee (1d6+4, 2 claws); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Destructive harmonics; SQ Blindsight 100 ft., immunities, protection from sonics; AL NE; SV Fort +5, Ref +5, Will +10; Str 18, Dex 12, Con 16, Int 12, Wis 18, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Hide +8, Listen +25, Move Silently +7, Survival +9; Dodge, Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes.

Destructive Harmonics (Su): A destrachan can blast sonic energy in a cone up to 80 ft. long. It can also use this attack to affect any creatures or objects within a 30-ft. radius. It can tune the harmonics of this destructive power to affect different types of targets. All save DCs are Charisma-based.

Flesh: Disrupting tissue and rending bone, this attack deals 4d6 points of damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Nerves: A destrachan can refocus its harmonics to knock out foes rather than slay them. This attack deals 6d6 points of nonlethal damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Material: When using this harmonic structure, a destrachan chooses wood, stone, metal, or glass. All objects made of that material within the area must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or shatter. Objects (or portions of objects) that have up to 30 hit points are potentially affected by this attack.

Blindsight (Ex): A destrachan can use hearing to ascertain all foes within 100 ft. as a sighted creature would.

Immunities: Destrachans have immunity to gaze attacks, visual effects, illusions, and other attack forms that rely on sight.

Protection from Sonics (Ex): While they can be affected by loud noises and sonic spells (such as ghost sound or silence), destrachans are less vulnerable to sonic attacks (+4 circumstance bonus on all saves) because they can protect their ears. A destrachan whose sense of hearing is impaired is effectively blinded, and all targets are treated as having total concealment.

Skills: A destrachan has a +10 racial bonus on Listen checks.

✦ Fatigued Digester: CR 6; Medium magical beast; HD 8d10+24; hp 68; Init +6; Spd 60 ft.; AC 17, touch 12, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +8; Grp +11; Atk +11 melee (1d8+4, claw); Full Atk +11 melee (1d8+4, claw); SA Acid spray; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., immunity to acid, low-light vision, scent; AL N; SV Fort +9, Ref +10, Will +3; Str 17, Dex 15, Con 17, Int 2, Wis 12, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Hide +9, Listen +6, Jump +21, Spot +6; Alertness, Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes.

Acid Spray (Ex): A digester can spray acid in a 20-ft. cone, dealing 4d8 points of damage to everything in the area. Once a digester uses this ability, it can't use it again until 1d4 rounds later.

The creature can also produce a concentrated stream of acid that deals 8d8 points of damage to a single target within 5 ft. In either case, a DC 17 Reflex save halves the damage. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Skills: A digester's coloration gives it a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks. It also has a +4 racial bonus on Jump checks.

D48. HEADQUARTERS

As the PCs approach this Room read the following text.

Clearly, this structure is new and imposing when compared to the other structures in this massive gallery. Blending alien architecture with the grim utilitarian features characteristic of this region, it sports fluted columns, odd and apparently useless spinning gears, in an intricate stone pattern. The building is windowless and has a single entrance, a purple steel trapezoid shaped door.

If the PCs enter, read the following text.

Beyond the glowing door is a foyer of sorts, extending 10 ft. to either side and ahead about 12 ft. The room is barren both of furnishings and décor, except for a puce colored disk inset at the center of the room. A single door of the same material and shape as the one you just entered stands closed in the center of each wall.

Consult the Great Hall introduction for details on Chtrax placement in this Section.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is the entrance to Chtrax's most private sanctum and headquarters. When a petition wishes to speak with the kill master, they know to stand on the circle, call to their master and state the purpose of their visit. If Chtrax is not present or does not wish to address the petitioner, he ignores them. The derro and formians know to leave if they do not hear a response within a minute.

To prevent unwanted intrusions and to command fear and respect from his minions, Chtrax warded all of the doors leading to the inner sanctum with terrible traps. If Chtrax agrees to speak with the petitioner, he deactivates the traps from inside Room D49 and opens the central door. Otherwise, PCs or foolish servants who would reach the inner sanctum must contend with the nasty devices protecting the kill.

All three interior doors and the speaking circle detect as magical. On a successful Spellcraft check and in conjunction with the spell's effects, the speaking circle detects as faint transmutation and the doors moderate evocation (right), moderate transmutation (center), and moderate evocation (left).

D49. INNER SANCTUM

The stink of this enormous hall is overpowering. Overhead hang globes of purplish light casting obscure shadows on the walls. Filling the room are innumerable tables holding twitching, barely conscious derro, duergar and deep dwarves. Given their supine positions and distended abdomens, it is clear something is gestating inside them. Sprays of reddish-brown liquid stain the walls and ceiling. The floor is black and sticky.

If the PCs enter through the center door, or round one of the corners, read the following text if Chtrax is not present:

In the center of the chamber and upon a dais stands a silver tripod holding a 1 cubic ft. box of some silvery metal and encrusted with gems, etched with runes, and flickering with unfathomable intelligence.

If Chtrax is present, read the following text instead.

In the center of the chamber and upon a dais stands an empty silver tripod.

Initial Attitude: N/A or Hostile

Encounter: This Room is a testimony to the depths of Chtrax's fathomless evil. In an effort to replace the substandard derro, Chtrax breeds his here. Summoning an occasional derro or dwarf to receive reward for their labors and wisdom, Chtrax injects an egg inside the host. Some he releases back into the mines, others, especially the dangerous ones, he keeps locked up in here.

Amid the developing wombs, Chtrax plots his course, tracking the progress of his tunneling, truesilver extraction and the birth rate of his spawn. He also keeps the formian queen's phylactery here, keeping it in proximity so he can maintain the hive mind.

If Chtrax (hp 118) is present, see the Great Hall introduction for chances, and aware of the PCs approach, the protection of the phylactery is of paramount importance. He snatches the phylactery from its stand and casts as many spells as he can before the PCs enter.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If present, and allowed time to prepare, he casts the following spells in order: expeditious retreat, stoneskin, greater invisibility, and fox's cunning. When the PCs enter the Room, he then casts cone of cold, targeting as many PCs as he can. On the following round, he flees, alerting the entire Great Hall. All surviving unattached elite formian warriors arrive on round 3 and 1d6 formian warriors arrive every 2 rounds until all surviving members of the 30 unattached formians arrive. Finally, in five rounds, the formian myrmarch arrives to aid his leader. Chtrax takes any opportunity he can to escape, fleeing to Room D61, where he remains until the tarrasque breaches the vault.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Chtrax prefers not to fight alone and retreats to alert the entire Great Hall. All surviving unattached elite formian warriors arrive on round 3 and 1d6 formian warriors arrive every 2 rounds until all surviving members of the 30 unattached formians arrive. Finally, in five rounds, the formian myrmarch arrives to aid his leader. Chtrax takes any opportunity he can to escape, fleeing to Room D61, where he remains until the tarrasque breaches the vault. If combat becomes unavoidable, Chtrax strikes from surprise, using greater invisibility and spider climb to first observe his foe and then strike from unexpected angles. If he has time to prepare for an encounter, Chtrax casts the following spells on himself (in this order): greater invisibility, spider climb, protection from arrows, displacement, and haste. Chtrax casts stoneskin fighters approach.

Chtrax uses acid fog and cloudkill to control the terrain of the encounter. If he has the chance, he uses animate dead to provide a distraction and expendable troops, he combines zombie troops with cloudkill (zombies are immune to the poison). Chtrax saves his baleful polymorph for opposing sorcerer or wizards, preferring to change them into peacocks. If an encounter turns against him, Chtrax does not hesitate to flee.

He is desperate to release the devils and never forfeits his life for mere formians. If prevented from fleeing, he uses his offensive spells, using his staff of fire if necessary.

If Chtrax dies, the phylactery vanishes freeing the formians from the xill's hold and having results as described in this region's Introduction. However, the digging continues. The tarasque, driven by the commands of the derro savant controlling it, continues to press forward unless somehow stopped. On the other hand, the tunnels descend into bloody death traps, with formians killing derro and dwarf, stone giants attacking the derro, and the bulette and other monsters rampaging. All truesilver extraction halts, and the gnome in Room D53 ceases production of the mining equipment, and emerges to seize control over Rooms D57 through D61. If the PCs do not stop the tarasque, the devils break free on schedule and sweep through the tunnels bent on genocide.

If the PCs or tremors destroy this Room and Room D48, check to see if Chtrax was present. If he was, he escapes with the phylactery to Room D61, where he remains until Day 7. If he was not present, the destruction of the building destroys the phylactery and the formians act as described above.

Treasure: Hidden beneath one of the tables is Chtrax's journal and notes, written in Infernal. Players able to translate the book learn all the details in this region's Introduction, including details on Asrakhor the Undying, the devil vault and Chtrax's nefarious plan.

It receives a +2 bonus on the grapple check for each claw that hits. If it wins the grapple check and maintains the hold in the next round, it automatically bites the foe at that time. The bite deals no damage but injects a paralyzing venom.

Paralysis (Ex): Those bitten by Chtrax must succeed on a DC 22 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 1d4 hours. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Planewalk (Su): Xill cannot use planewalk in this adventure.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day Chtrax can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (+19) against a good foe.

Wizard Spells Prepared (4/6/6/6/4/3/2; DC 17 + spell level): 0—detect magic, read magic, resistance, touch of fatigue; 1st—cause fear, color spray, disguise self, expeditious retreat, feather fall, magic missile; 2nd—acid arrow, protection from arrows, scorching ray, spider climb, touch of idiocy; 3rd—displacement, fireball, haste, nondetection, suggestion, vampiric touch; 4th—animate dead, baleful polymorph, greater invisibility, stoneskin; 5th—cloudkill, cone of cold, telekinesis; 6th—acid fog, globe of invulnerability.

Possessions: Amulet of natural armor +2, bracers of armor +3, two +1 adamantine short swords, ring of protection +2, gloves of dexterity +2, headband of intellect +4, staff of fire, scroll of permanent image, potion of cure serious wounds (3), phylactery of the formian queen.

D50. RUINED BUILDING

The shattered ceiling must have collapsed here, for nothing remains of this building aside from a few broken walls, bones and rubble.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This building was at one time, a storage facility, but tremors collapsed part of the ceiling causing it to fall and destroy the contents. This building serves to clue your players in about the Great Hall's instability. If the PCs make a frontal assault, allow them to make a Spot check to catch sight of this ruined building before they recklessly engage the formians. Of course, if they do not see the clue for what it is, let them die.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

Scaling: N/A

D51. SILVER TRACK

A line of track runs on the floor from a circular building to a large exit.

Initial Attitude: N/A or Indifferent

Encounter: Two stone giants (hp 119) push an ore cart laden with truesilver from Room D41 to Room D53. It takes 1 minute to move the ore cart from Transportation and Inventory to reach the Gnome's Workshop. There, it takes three minutes to unload them, and then eight minutes to return. The giants, then, work at the bore, or return to their lair in Room D27. Typically, the giants make 1d3 trips per day, and there is always at least 1d6 hours between each trip. Therefore, there is a 30% chance the giants are at a random point, somewhere on the track.

The giants hate their work, and are thus both slow and slothful. Should they encounter the PCs, they are Indifferent and depending on the PCs' attitudes, may or may not let them move about their business. Confronted with well-armed and dangerous opponents, the stone giants ignore them, and move about their business. On the other hand, if the PCs are weak, the giants attack them.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Should combat occur, the giants attack to kill the PCs quickly and efficiently by pummeling them with slam attacks. If combat turns against them, they call out for help. If they start calling, roll for Random Encounters to see what happens or who comes to investigate. These giants flee if one falls below 50 hit points.

Treasure: If the giants head toward the Gnome's Workshop (Room D53), then their cart holds 1d6 x 10 1-lb. bars of truesilver. Each bar is worth 750 gp, but if touched by a mortal, the metal transmutes to normal silver, reducing the bars' value to 5 gp.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two warrior levels to each stone giant. To decrease the challenge, remove one giant.

✦ Stone Giant: CR 8; Large giant (earth); HD 14d8+56; hp 119; Init +2; Spd 30 ft.; AC 25, touch 11, flat-footed 23; Base Atk +10; Grp +22; Atk +17 melee (1d4+8, slam) or +11 ranged (2d8+12, rock); Full Atk +17 melee (1d4+8, 2 slams) or +11 ranged (2d8+12, rock); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Rock throwing; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., low-light vision, rock catching; AL NE; SV Fort +13, Ref +6, Will +7; Str 27, Dex 15, Con 19, Int 10, Wis 12, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Climb +11, Hide +6*, Jump +11, Spot +12; Combat Reflexes, Iron Will, Point Blank Shot, Power Attack, Precise Shot.

Rock Throwing (Ex): The range increment is 180 ft. for a stone giant's thrown rocks. It uses both hands when throwing a rock.

Rock Catching (Ex): A stone giant gains a +4 racial bonus on its Reflex save when attempting to catch a thrown rock.

Skills: * A stone giant gains a +8 racial bonus on Hide checks in rocky terrain.

D52. TUNNEL AND INTERSECTION

Following the rail, you travel down the wide tunnel. Words of encouragement, praises to the Master, and solemn reminders of duty echo in your ears. The exhortations continue from invisible mouths until you reach an intersection, where an enormous statue of a multi-armed demon stands proudly, with one hand on the head of an adoring derro servant, another hand on the shoulder of a proud formian warrior and dwarves and derro groveling at his feet. The dark corridor grows brighter with flickering light to the right, and sounds of deep rumbling and tools working away stone from the left.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A permanent wall of force protects this statue. Chtrax believes it to be a symbol of inspiration for the derro and the slaves, and it pleases him to walk by it. There is a 5% chance Chtrax (Room D49) is here admiring his features.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

D53. LABORATORY

The tunnel opens into a large cave with multicolored walls, places of flowstone near the high, 30 ft. tall ceiling with attached stone draperies. Crystal coral and gypsum flowers cover the floor, reflecting the light and presenting a dazzling scenario. Marring this natural artistic display are four cages hanging from the ceiling, each housing a half-starved and much-abused dwarf slave. At the far end of the cave is a small forge, seconding as the light in the room. Several worktables hold mechanical atrocities, devices of unspeakable purpose. Against the walls, between the occasional stalactite and column stands a half carved granite humanoid twitching, as if alive. Emerging from the shadows is a petite humanoid, with pale skin, curly brown hair, and a wry smile distorting his face. In one hand, he carries overlarge fork, but instead of metal tines, there are crackling electricity sparks.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Chtrax's pet artificer, Korus (hp 89), works in this laboratory, designing tools and devices to aid in the mining, the extraction of truesilver and whatever evil designs hatched by the xill tyrant. Though the gnome nominally works for the xill, he is not exceptionally loyal, and instead enjoys working and hurting others in the process. He keeps four derro and deep dwarf slaves in cages suspended from the ceiling as test subjects for his horrid experiments. They are on the verge of death.

Korus' greatest task, one requiring vast amounts of truesilver, is a collar and manacles he is building. Knowing the importance of these items to the xill, he hides them behind one of the stone draperies and conceals his progress in their manufacture. He feels once the collar and manacles are complete, Chtrax's use for him may end, and Korus does not know if the xill will allow him the same amounts of freedom he has thus far enjoyed.

Korus does not attack immediately, though he is suspicious. He waits to see what the PCs do or say, to assess their usefulness as allies or the threat they pose as enemies. If the PCs are amenable to conversation, despite the Room's sinister atmosphere, and the nasty tool in the gnome's hand, Korus eagerly engages them in conversation. On the other hand, if combat erupts, the gnome throws a hidden lever on the eastern wall of the tunnel, releasing his pet digesters before hammering the PCs with a barrage of spells.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: With a successful DC 25 Diplomacy check, Korus tells the PCs the following.

Chtrax (a powerful xill) controls these mines. He easily assumed control of the region, especially after the flooding and subsequent chaos. Having murdered most of the derro savants, and with the might of his formian slaves, he enjoys complete control over the derro and their minions. The xill searches for something in the depths of the world, something called the vault, though what exactly is inside, only Chtrax knows. Of his minions, only the derro are truly loyal. The stone giants work for the master only because it serves their purpose. Even the formians serve through coercion.

Chtrax's control over the formians exists only because he has stolen the formian queen's essence and trapped it inside a special phylactery. If you want to disrupt Chtrax's plans, destroy the box and watch it explode. One more thing, beware the tunnels in the deeper mines. Chtrax controls a tarrasque and uses it to dig the deepest tunnels.

If diplomacy fails, Korus first uses quickenened mage hand to throw the lever releasing his digesters in Room D54, and then casts greater invisibility, moving toward the exit. On the next round, he casts expeditious retreat and flees. If prevented from fleeing, he casts spell turning, waves of exhaustion and then delayed blast fireball. If there are any survivors, he casts wall of force, blocking the PCs inside the Room and then flees to warn Chtrax. Korus, despite his power, would rather flee than face a band of well-armed adventurers.

The digesters, unfailingly loyal to their wicked master, open combat with a spray of acid, crossing each other's cones for maximum effect. If an opponent is particularly troublesome, surviving digesters use concentrated streams on the most threatening foes.

Killing the gnome avails the PCs little, for the manacles and collar are complete. If the PCs do not find and destroy these items, Chtrax has a 20% chance of finding them each day. If the PCs destroy the items, simply touching them is enough, or if Chtrax fails to find them, he automatically fails to capture Kator on the seventh day when the tarrasque breaches the Vault.

The captured slaves all carry xill eggs and they succumb to the infestation in 1d6 days. Up until the xill eggs hatch, they aid the PCs in whatever capacity they can.

Treasure: Aside from the gnome's personal possessions, he has a wide assortment of his creations. Hidden behind a stone drapery (Search check, DC 20) are the truesilver collar and manacles. Mortal hands touching these items destroy their magical properties, and these items become nothing more than mundane, albeit silver, items. Scattered throughout the Room are three force clamps, six rocks of forgefire, two pocket airs, ten doses of softlight, three incomplete sounders (worth nothing) and one finished sounder. See the sidebar for details on these items.

EL: 16

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two levels of wizard to Korus and three more digesters. To decrease the challenge, remove all of the digesters, and reduce Korus' wizard level to 14.

Feats: Craft Construct, Craft Magic Arms and Armor, Craft Wondrous Item, Dodge, Mobility, Quicken Spell, Scribe Scroll, Skill Focus (craft [alchemy]), Spell Focus (Evocation), Weapon Focus (ray).

Gnome Traits: +2 racial bonus on saving throws against illusions. Adds +1 to the Difficulty Class for all saving throws against illusion spells cast by gnomes. This adjustment stacks with those from similar effects, such as the Spell Focus feat. +1 racial bonus on attack rolls against kobolds and goblinoids (including goblins, hobgoblins, and bugbears). +4 dodge bonus to Armor Class against creatures of the giant type (such as ogres, trolls, and hill giants).

A SAMPLE OF KORUS' TOOLS AND OTHER DEVICES

Force Clamp: This tool looks for all intents and purposes like a small fork, but instead of metal tines, it projects contained force. These tools allow the slaves and derro to handle truesilver without touching it, or without channeling the mortal taint through metal. A force clamp is a viable weapon; it uses the same statistics as a club, but requires an Exotic Weapon Proficiency to use without penalty. Force clamps have all the characteristics and immunities as a wall of force, making them virtually indestructible to physical damage.

Forgefire: This alchemical fuel burns hotter and longer than normal fire. The slaves use it to smelt truesilver faster and more efficiently. Unlike alchemist fire, forgefire is a solid and does not ignite unless exposed to fire. Once lit, a half-pound brick of forgefire burns for 1d6 days. You can throw forgefire, with adequate protection, but as a standard ranged attack and not as a ranged touch attack. If you hit, the target takes 2d6 points of fire damage and must succeed a DC 20 Reflex save to avoid catching on fire. If lit, the victim takes 1d6 points of fire damage each additional round, but may extinguish the flames by succeeding a DC 15 Reflex save.

Faint transmutation; CL 5th; Craft Wondrous Item, Craft (alchemy) 8 ranks, flame arrow; Price 1,500 gp.

Pocket Air: Created to produce a pocket of air in the case of a cave-in, this wondrous item looks like small blue marble. When cast to the ground, though, it shatters and releases a gust of wind originating from the point of impact caused by the introduction of 300 cubic ft. of new fresh air. One can throw pocket air with a 10 ft. range increment, up to 50 ft. In sealed spaces, the new air fills the available space and stops.

Faint evocation (air); CL 3rd; Craft Wondrous Item, Knowledge (the planes) 2 ranks, gust of wind; Price 600 gp.

Softlight: When spread out onto a flat surface, this purple dust ignites. It burns, but generates no heat. Furthermore, its luminescence does not affect creatures with light sensitivity, but is still enough light to cast light equivalent to bright light in a 5 ft. radius and dim lighting 10 ft. beyond. Softlight burns for 8 hours. Once lit, you cannot move it, nor does it ignite other combustibles. In effect, softlight is harmless.

Craft (alchemy) DC 25; Price 10 gp per 5 ft. section.

Sounder: This unusual device looks more like a laden cart than a digging tool. Measuring 10 ft. long, the sounder rolls about on a flat bed atop six wheels. The mechanism consists of a 4 ft. wide metal cylindrical tank mounted in an iron cradle. Coolant hoses run from the tank to its water reservoir and pumps into the tank, where it cools its magical processes venting the steam from the top. The rear of the tank houses the operation assembly. There, four levers move up and down to control the depth, height and width and intensity of the probing pulse (the greater the intensity, the more accurate the results, but the greater the risk for the machine to malfunction). The tank has small bound wire leads running into the directionally reversed cone. The cone has handles to allow its manipulation and placement onto the rock's surface. Three sharp spikes emerge from the front, e.g. its narrow end, and they automatically drill into a rocky surface. Depressing a button disengages the drills.

When activated, the machine sends an electromagnetic pulse into the rock that magically returns once it reaches the specified depth, height and width. When it has pulsed out and contracted, pulse carries with it information back to the reverse cone. Affixed the fluted edge of the cone are seven lenses, tied to each color in the visible light spectrum. The color determines the density of the rock, where red is the presence of an empty space, orange signifies it is filled with heavy gases, yellow water, green loose earth, and blue rock. The darker colors imply heavier deposits such as lead or gold. If the sounder pulse hits adamantite, it emits all seven colors. In wide pulses, many densities result. In this case, the brightest light is the dominate density, while unusual pockets and anomalies may register as only a flicker. The best pulses are the high intensity, narrow beams. A pulse can extend 50 ft. into rock, with a 50 ft. width and height.

As mentioned above, a pulse's intensity dictates its accuracy. A low pulse has a 75% chance of a misread, firing a random color, but without a malfunction. A mid pulse has a 50% chance of a misread, but a 10% chance of a malfunction. A mid-high pulse has a 25% chance of a misread, but a 30% chance of malfunction. Finally, a high pulse has a 10% chance of a misread, but a 60% malfunction.

If a malfunction results, an arc of electricity leaps from the sounder to ground in the nearest living target up to 40 ft. away and dealing 8d6 points of electricity, DC 15 Reflex save for half damage.

Chtrax's obsession in uncovering the vault forces the engineers to use high-pulses rather than the safer mid- or low-pulses. As a result, the sounders claim nearly as many lives as the cave-ins.

☞ Large Device; Spd drawn; hp 30 (hardness 5); AC 4; Space/Reach 10 ft/ 0 ft.; Height 9 ft.; Crew 2; Weight 300 lb.; Cost 30,000 gp.

Truesilver Collar and Manacles: Forged from truesilver and never touched by mortal hands, this matching collar and manacles fit a large devil. When so placed, the devil may only utilize his special attacks if the owner of the collar and manacles permits it. Chtrax commissioned these items to coerce the pit fiend Kator to give up his wish.

Strong Abjuration: CL 15th; Craft Wondrous Item, magic circle against evil, must be crafted from 75,000 gp of truesilver; Price 165,000.

Spell-like Abilities: 1/day—speak with animals (burrowing mammal only, duration 1 minute).

D54. PEN

Piles of rotting straw and bits of bone fill this pen.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Four digesters (hp 68) live in this pen. If combat erupts in Room D53, Korus releases these monsters to aid him against his attackers. Otherwise, the digesters feast on the occasional slave Korus offers them, content with their fate as beloved pets.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: If the PCs somehow prevent Korus from releasing the digesters, and his life is threatened, the digesters use their acid attacks against the gate until they break out on their own. Once they engage Korus' attackers, they fight to the death, using their acid spray attacks to hit as many targets as possible.

Gate: hardness 5, hp 60, Break DC 40.

Treasure: A fist-sized diamond lies under some hay, apparently undigestible. It is easily worth 5,000 gp or more, but can only be found with a DC 30 Search check.

Acid Spray (Ex): A digester can spray acid in a 20-ft. cone, dealing 4d8 points of damage to everything in the area. Once a digester uses this ability, it can't use it again until 1d4 rounds later.

The creature can also produce a concentrated stream of acid that deals 8d8 points of damage to a single target within 5 ft. In either case, a DC 17 Reflex save halves the damage. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Skills: A digester's coloration gives it a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks. It also has a +4 racial bonus on Jump checks.

D57 THROUGH D68. DEEP MINES

This section is the vanguard of the vault miners. The center of activity occurs in Room D58, with connecting tunnels branching off in many directions. The central chamber is nearly as vast as the Great Hall, nearly 100 ft. wide and 70 ft. long. Its ceiling rises to 60 ft. in the center and 40 ft. at the caverns' perimeter. The large tunnels branching off from the central cave, Rooms D59 through D62 feature ceilings 40 ft. tall. The smaller tunnels are almost all 5 ft. wide and 10 ft. tall to accommodate the grimlock foremen. Room D58 is lit softlight, but all other Rooms are dark unless it is mentioned otherwise. The tarasque's noise imposes a –10 circumstance penalty to all Listen checks, and the dust filling the air imposes a –5 circumstance penalty to Spot checks. Just like the Great Hall, this is a dangerous location, and subterfuge and infiltration are the preferred tactics over a frontal assault.

The greatest threat in this section is the tarrasque in Room D61. Tenuously controlled by a mad derro savant, this monster rapidly digs through the rock, excavating enormous amounts of stone and earth. The slaves bring the stone to Room D58, where delvers, destrachan and others work to break it down for retaining walls, gravel or simple disposal. The spider web of other tunnels house digging teams of grimlock led slaves. These miners suffer. Their lives are nothing more than 16-hour days of toil and death. Commanding this section is the second formian myrmarch, whose responsibility it is to locate the mysterious vault.

Combat with formians in this place has similar results to combat with formians throughout this region. Once one group of formians engages the PCs, the entire section goes on alert because of the hive mind link between all the formians. Each Room below details normal encounters and encounters when alert. In addition, each Room also details what reinforcements, if any, arrive to aid their allies. Even though many Rooms list the number of formian warriors who arrive in waves, there are only so many formian warriors. The Deep mines have 15 unattached formian warriors, 5 unattached elite formian warriors and 1 unattached formian taskmaster. Each time the PCs engage in a combat in one of the Great Hall's Rooms, they undoubtedly draw more formians to their position as indicated in the Room's description. Strike the number of formian warrior reinforcements killed from those listed above. When the unattached number of formian warriors or formian taskmasters falls to 0, no more formian warriors arrive. You could move formian warriors from other encounter sites to engage the PCs, but those formians are under orders to protect their respective Rooms. Regardless, the Deep Mines resumes normal activity after an hour lapses between combats.

On Day 3, Chtrax moves to Room D58 when the tarrasque reaches the first adamantine bands. Thereafter he has a 10% chance to be in a random Room in the Great Hall, a 50% chance of being in Room D58 and a 40% chance to be inspecting the mines in Rooms D78 through D80.

Destroying the Myrmarch in Room D58 or the phylactery in Room D49 alters the dynamics of the section. If the PCs destroy the Myrmarch, formians in this section suffer a -2 penalty to attacks, saves and skill checks and lose their hive mind ability. Destroying the phylactery, however, removes the hive mind ability from all the formians in the entire region, telling them their queen is dead. The formians stay in their respective locations attacking any non-formians encountered, including the giants, derro, slaves, xill and PCs. While in this enraged state, PCs cannot reason with them. All formians fight to the death.

Allow cautious PCs to move unmolested through this Section, as long as they do not draw attention to themselves. There are plenty of places for the PCs to move such as by skirting the edge of the cavern and remain out of range of the inhabitants' darkvision. Should the PCs make a direct assault, let them feel the full weight of Chtrax's power.

If the savant retains control over the tarrasque, the tarrasque reaches the first adamantine bands on Day 3, breaches it on Day 4, breaches the second band on Day 5, breaches the third band on Day 6 and finally penetrates the vault on Day 7. See the Vault (page 220) for details on what happens after a breach.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Roll for a Random Encounter once per hour. If the tarrasque (Room D61) breaks free, no longer roll for Random Encounters.

3-15	Nothing
16-18	Patrol of 1d8 formian warriors and 1 gorgon search for escaped slaves.
19	Chtrax (Room D49) inspects the operation.
20	Tremors shake the corridor, causing fine streams of dust to spill from cracks in the ceiling. Smoke, Tremors 20. If this result occurs twice in this Section, increase the Tremors to 25.

D57. ENTRANCE TO THE DEEP MINES

The track ends at the entrance to an enormous cavern filled with slaves, formians, and more. In the center of the vast cavern, dozens of dwarven slaves are employed, hammering the rock into smaller pieces. Formians move through their ranks, their razor sharp claws flashing in the dim light of the purple flames dancing on the floor. Branching off from this central chamber are numerous tunnels of various sizes. What is immediately obvious is the noise-level, for across the tunnel, great plumes of dust and debris pour out of a tunnel. As you watch, a roar shakes the entire cavern, and all work stops, as formians, derro and dwarves alike, stop to look at the ceiling far above.

D58. DIGGING NEXUS

Note. This is a very difficult encounter, possibly the most difficult in the dungeon. It should take several hours of game play and we recommend DMs use crib notes before, during, after, and throughout all stages of combat. Read and re-read this section before combat begins.

Loose rock and gravel covers much of the floor area. From the connecting tunnels, emerge dusty slaves dragging large rocks to a central site in the chamber, where the debris is thickest. Deep dwarf and duergar slaves hammer at the collected rock under a formian myrmarch's watchful eyes.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This is the heart of the digging operation. Working the rock piles are 24 duergar (hp 9 each) and 12 deep dwarves (hp 6 each). Overseeing their efforts are 8 formian warriors (hp 26 each), 2 formian taskmasters (hp 39 each), each with a dominated destrachan (hp 60), and a formian myrmarch (hp 102). The destrachan use sonic attacks to shatter the larger rocks, while the slaves shatter the small rocks into gravel with mauls and picks, or chisel them into blocks to use as buttresses for unstable tunnels.

Allow the myrmarch and the formian warriors Spot checks to notice the PCs. If they beat the PCs Hide check, the formians attack. They consider the PCs a threat to the operation, and worse as a catalyst for loosing the tarrasque on the rest of the region.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 8, Echoes 8

Tactics: The taskmasters set the destrachan against the PCs and use their dominate monster ability against the PCs, while the warriors circle the group. The myrmarch uses dictum, followed by order's wrath before closing and engaging in melee. If Chtrax is absent and the PCs surrender, the formian myrmarch dispatches two warriors to escort the PCs to the region's entrance at Room D6. If Chtrax is present, the formians give no quarter, cutting the PCs down to the last. The slaves keep working throughout combat, defending themselves only if attacked.

If combat persists for more than 3 rounds, 1d6 unattached formian warriors arrive each round until all of the unattached formian warriors arrive. If combat continues for 6 rounds, the formian sentries at Room D65 come to help. The inhabitants of other Rooms do not assist, holding their positions, rather than risk the ire of the xill master.

If the tarrasque breaks free at Room D61, the formians dive the slaves forward to meet the threat in a futile effort to halt the monsters advance. The myrmarch sends one of the formian warriors to Chtrax to warn the master of the monsters' release.

✦ Destrachan: CR 8; Large aberration; HD 8d8+24; hp 60; Init +5; Spd 30 ft.; AC 18, touch 10, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +6; Grp +14; Atk +9 melee (1d6+4, claw); Full Atk +9 melee (1d6+4, 2 claws); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Destructive harmonics; SQ Blindsight 100 ft., immunities, protection from sonics; AL NE; SV Fort +5, Ref +5, Will +10; Str 18, Dex 12, Con 16, Int 12, Wis 18, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Hide +8, Listen +25, Move Silently +7, Survival +9; Dodge, Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes.

Destructive Harmonics (Su): A destrachan can blast sonic energy in a cone up to 80 ft. long. It can also use this attack to affect any creatures or objects within a 30-ft. radius. It can tune the harmonics of this destructive power to affect different types of targets. All save DCs are Charisma-based.

Flesh: Disrupting tissue and rending bone, this attack deals 4d6 points of damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Nerves: A destrachan can focus its harmonics to knock out foes rather than slay them. This attack deals 6d6 points of nonlethal damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Material: When using this form of harmonics, a destrachan chooses wood, stone, metal, or glass. All objects made of that material within the area must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or shatter. Objects (or portions of objects) that have up to 30 hit points are potentially affected by this attack.

Blindsight (Ex): A destrachan can use hearing to ascertain all foes within 100 ft. as a sighted creature would.

Immunities: Destrachans have immunity to gaze attacks, visual effects, illusions, and other attack forms that rely on sight.

Protection from Sonics (Ex): While they can be affected by loud noises and sonic spells (such as ghost sound or silence), destrachans are less vulnerable to sonic attacks (+4 circumstance bonus on all saves) because they can protect their ears. A destrachan whose sense of hearing is impaired is effectively blinded, and all targets are treated as having total concealment.

Skills: A destrachan has a +10 racial bonus on Listen checks.

✦ Duergar Slave, War 1: CR 1; Medium humanoid (dwarf); HD 1d8+5; hp 9; Init +0; Spd 20 ft.; AC 10, touch 10, flat-footed 10; Base Atk +1; Grp +2; Atk +2 melee (1d4+1/×4, light pick); Full Atk +2 melee (1d4+1/×4, light pick); SA Duergar traits, spell-like abilities; SQ Darkvision 120 ft., duergar traits, stonecunning; AL LE; SV Fort +4*, Ref +0*, Will -1*; Str 13, Dex 11, Con 14, Int 10, Wis 9, Cha 4.

Hive Mind (Ex): All formians within 50 miles of their queen are in constant communication. If one is aware of a particular danger, they all are. If one in a group is not flat-footed, none of them are. No formian in a group is considered flanked unless all of them are.

Dominate Monster (Su): A taskmaster can use a dominate monster ability as the spell from a 10th-level caster (Will DC 17 negates), although the subject may be of any kind and may be up to Large size. Creatures that successfully save cannot be affected by the same taskmaster's dominate monster ability for 24 hours. A single taskmaster can dominate up to four subjects at a time. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Dominated Creature (Ex): A taskmaster is never encountered alone. One dominated nonformian creature always accompanies it (choose or determine randomly any creature of CR 4).

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 15, initial and secondary damage 1d6 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Possessions: Guisarme.

D59. MINE

Working in this wide tunnel is a score of duergar slaves, slowly chipping away at the dense rock. Barking orders in Undercommon are two humanoids. Though blind, they are clearly aware of the goings on in this tunnel.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Slowly digging through the dense rock are 18 duergar slaves (hp 9 each), suffering under the whips and lashings of the grimlock overseers (hp 16 each). They live to please their master, but take no part in combat in the neighboring areas. Replacement slaves come from the Great Hall and other sections throughout the region.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 10, Echoes 8

Tactics: No amount of conversation or bargaining distracts these workers from their task, cowed as they are by Chtrax and the neighboring tarrasque. A successful DC 25 Intimidate check panics the teams, who flee to Room D58 seeking protection from the myrmarch. If the PCs have already destroyed the myrmarch, they flee to the Great Hall and out of the region if possible. These creatures are no threat to the PCs, unless, of course, they succeed in locating the vault.

Skills: * A grimlock's dull gray skin helps it hide in its native terrain, conferring a +10 racial bonus on Hide checks when in mountains or underground.

Equipment: Masterwork whip, battle axe.

D60. BIG MINE

A line of four formian sentries stands guard here, as clouds of dust and small rocks spew past them from behind. Beyond the line of guards, you see a mammoth monster of enormous proportions. Armored and bristling with horns, its massive claws tear through the rock with ease. Standing at its side is a bloodied and dusty derro, whose features are blank aside from a beatific smile.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: In a futile effort to curb the tarrasque should he break the derro's control, these four formian warriors (hp 102) stand guard. While they maintain a constant vigilance in watching the tarrasque behind them, they also guard against saboteurs who would throw the region into chaos should the monster break free. Given Souiji's recent efforts, these guards are extra watchful.

If the PCs approach within 10 ft. of the tunnel's entrance, the formian warriors attack. These creatures fight to the death.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If attacked, these warriors alert the rest of the formians in the deep mines of the presence of intruders. Two move forward while two remain in the tunnel to prevent anyone from getting past them. The formian myrmarch at Room D58, if he still lives, sends one warrior to alert Chtrax and then joins the fight with his remaining warriors on the following round. On the next round, any remaining unattached formians in the Deep Mines arrive. On the round after, the formian sentries, if they still survive, at Room D65 join the fight.

If combat continues through six rounds, the mad savant in Room D61 comes to see what is wrong. The savant heroically joins the fight, using destructive spells. However, each round the savant is away from the tarrasque, there is a cumulative 5% chance for the tarrasque to break the derro's control. Worse, if the savant dies, the tarrasque automatically breaks free. Should this happen, consult this section's introduction for details.

If the tarrasque at Room D61 breaks free, these formians act as the first line of defense, concerting their attacks in a futile effort to defeat the monster.

D61. THE DOOM OF THE DERRO

Amidst clouds of dust and rock, ploughs the greatest terror in the entire world. Great chunks of stone collapse and pull away from the walls as the tarrasque digs and digs. Standing behind the creature is a robed derro, whose focused expression belies his madness. The sound of the monsters digging is awesome to be sure. After a moment, the derro turns, as if somehow aware, and looks at you, a smile blooming on his face.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This encounter is both deadly to the PCs and instrumental to defeating Chtrax and his terrible plan. Excavating this tunnel is the tarrasque (hp 858), controlled by its mad master Rroliq (hp 103). Through a well-worded wish, cast years before Chtrax ever arrived, Rroliq gained control over this monster, but only as long as it remained within 5 ft. If he ever leaves the monster, the tarrasque breaks free. Each round the Rroliq is more than 5 ft. from the tarrasque there is a cumulative 5% chance the tarrasque breaks free. If the PCs kill Rroliq, the tarrasque automatically breaks free and goes on a killing rampage. Chtrax, when he dispatched the savants, dared not touch Rroliq lest the tarrasque destroy him. Instead, he allied with the savant, exploiting him for his powers over this monstrosity.

When the PCs approach this area, Rroliq starts casting offensive spells. He does not send the tarrasque after them, fully confident in his own abilities. PCs naturally want to defend themselves, and may strike back against the derro. If they kill him, they have bigger problems on their hands.

Letting the tarrasque go wild is the surest way to defeat Chtrax, short of killing the xill. However, PCs ought to get clear as quickly as they can, and avoid confrontation with this monster. If they are foolish enough to fight the tarrasque, let them die.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Rroliq casts spells with little regard for his own safety. First, he casts a maximized fireball as a full-round action and takes a 5 ft. step towards the PCs. He repeats this tactic again on the following round, before falling back to lower level offensive spells, saving a limited wish for something spectacular. Rroliq does not care if he dies, knowing the tarrasque would avenge him. If the PCs flee, Rroliq does not pursue.

Area of effect spells, like maximize fireballs, have additional effects in this tunnel, creating an earthquake on ceiling directly above the area of effect. See the PHB for details.

As long as the savant lives, the tarrasque digs, ignoring the events around it. However, the savant's death looses the tarrasque giving it free reign to kill and destroy all it can. The tarrasque attacks the nearest creatures, snapping up unfortunate victims with its bite attack and swallow them whole. The loosed tarrasque takes the following actions.

- Round 1—Takes full attack against any creatures it threatens and moves 5 ft. towards Room D58.
- Round 2—Rushes to Room D58, taking a bite attack at a random creature.
- Round 3—Swallows grabbed creature and moves 20 ft. forward.
- Round 4—Full attack against any creatures it threatens, 5 ft. step towards the tracked exit (Room D57).
- Round 5—Swallows whole any bitten creature and moves 20 ft. towards the tracked exit.
- Round 6—Attacks anything else left standing or that threatens it.
- Beyond—Thereafter the monster follows moves, kills and destroys all it can moving along the following path — Room D58, Room D57, Room D52, Room D52, spends several rounds leveling the Great Hall (this triggers cave-ins each round), and then moves toward Room D32 and beyond, widening the passage as necessary. If not stopped, the tarrasque moves out of the region, entering the lava flow from Room D2 and entering another region, laying waste to the dungeon, unless the denizens somehow rally and stop the monster. It continues its rampage for 1d2 weeks before finding a new place to sleep.

Surviving formians, if still under the control of their respective myrmarch and the phylactery is intact, rally to fight this monster, doing what they can to slow its movements. All surviving formian in the respective sections move to stop this monster's progress. The derro use destrachan, bulette and any other creatures at their disposal to fight as well. The slaves, however, use this opportunity to flee, moving away from the tarrasque's path and hiding in tunnels or the ruins of Room D7.

Chtrax has no interest in dying at the tarrasque's mercy, and flees to the Western Mines, away from the path of destruction. There he bides his time, plotting to break into the Vault some other way. However, it is likely the tarrasque destroys the entire operation, setting back Chtrax's plans for years if not decades. If he knows the PCs are responsible, they have certainly earned his wrath for years to come.

On the other hand, if the PCs leave the monster alone, the tarrasque punches through the final barrier on Day 7 releasing the devils imprisoned in the vault. Rroliq dies immediately and a spectacular fight ensues between the devils and the tarrasque. PCs would do best to get away quickly, and explore some other region in this dungeon. You can play through the combat, perhaps even letting the PCs control the tarrasque, formians, or even the hordes of shrieking fiends finally released after thousands of years of imprisonment. This could be a massive multi-night conflict, extending beyond the borders of this region, or simply a highlight, where you describe the events in cinematic detail. If you choose the latter, allow the devils to defeat the tarrasque after 20 rounds of combat before moving on to conquer the rest of this region. For more information on the devils, their numbers, tactics and goals, consult the Vault, Rooms D81 through D84.

Madness (Ex): Derro use their Charisma modifier on Will saves instead of their Wisdom modifier, and have immunity to confusion and insanity effects. A derro cannot be restored to sanity by any means short of a miracle or wish spell.

* The racial madness of the derro provides a +6 bonus to their Charisma scores and a -6 penalty to their Wisdom scores. A derro restored to sanity gains 6 points of Wisdom and loses 6 points of Charisma.

Poison Use (Ex): Derro typically carry 2d4 doses of greenblood oil or Medium monstrous spider venom, applying it to their crossbow bolts. Derro are not at risk of poisoning themselves when handling poison.

Sneak Attack (Ex): Any time the derro handler's opponent is denied his Dexterity bonus to AC, or if a derro flanks his opponent, he deals an extra 1d6 points of damage. This ability is just like the rogue's sneak attack and subject to the same limitations.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—darkness, ghost sound; 1/day—daze (DC 15), sound burst (DC 17). Caster level 3rd. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Vulnerability to Sunlight (Ex): A derro takes 1 point of Constitution damage for every hour it is exposed to sunlight, and it dies if its Constitution score reaches 0. Lost Constitution points are recovered at the rate of 1 per every 24-hour period spent underground or otherwise sheltered from the sun.

Skills: Derro have a +4 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks.

Sorcerer Spells Known (Cast per day: 6/8/8/7/7/7/6/3; save DC 16 + spell level): 0—acid splash, daze, detect magic, message, open/close, ray of frost, read magic, resistance, touch of fatigue; 1—cause fear, expeditious retreat, mage armor, magic missile, shocking grasp; 2—bear's endurance, eagle's splendor, scorching ray, summon swarm, touch of idiocy; 3—dispel magic, fireball, lightning bolt, ray of exhaustion; 4—fear, ice storm, shout, solid fog; 5—cloudkill, cone of cold, waves of fatigue; 6—chain lightning, disintegrate; 7—limited wish.

Note: Rroliq casts mage armor at the beginning of the day and if he senses the slightest hint of trouble he casts bear's endurance (granting him +38 hit points and increase his Fort save bonus by +2).

▼ Tarrasque: CR 20; Colossal magical beast; HD 48d10+594; hp 858; Init +7; Spd 20 ft.; AC 35, touch 5, flat-footed 32; Base Atk +48; Grp +81; Atk +57 melee (4d8+17/18–20/x3, bite); Full Atk +57 melee (4d8+17/18–20/x3, bite) and +52 melee (1d10+8, 2 horns) and +52 melee (1d12+8, 2 claws) and +52 melee (3d8+8, tail slap); Space/Reach 30 ft./20 ft.; SA Augmented critical, frightful presence, improved grab, rush, swallow whole; SQ Carapace, damage reduction 15/epic, immunity to fire, poison, disease, energy drain, and ability damage, regeneration 40, scent, spell resistance 32; AL N; SV Fort +38, Ref +29, Will +20; Str 45, Dex 16, Con 35, Int 3, Wis 14, Cha 14.

Skills and Feats: Listen +17, Search +9, Spot +17, Survival +14 (+16 following tracks); Alertness, Awesome Blow, Blind-Fight, Cleave, Combat Reflexes, Dodge, Great Cleave, Improved Bull Rush, Improved Initiative, Iron Will, Power Attack, Toughness (6).

Augmented Critical (Ex): The tarrasque's bite threatens a critical hit on a natural attack roll of 18–20, dealing triple damage on a successful critical hit.

Frightful Presence (Su): The tarrasque can inspire terror by charging or attacking. Affected creatures must succeed on a DC 36 Will save or become shaken, remaining in that condition as long as they remain within 60 ft. of the tarrasque. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, the tarrasque must hit a Huge or smaller opponent with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can try to swallow the foe the following round.

Rush (Ex): Once per minute, the normally slow-moving tarrasque can move at a speed of 150 ft.

Swallow Whole (Ex): The tarrasque can try to swallow a grabbed opponent of Huge or smaller size by making a successful grapple check. Once inside, the opponent takes 2d8+8 points of crushing damage plus 2d8+6 points of acid damage per round from the tarrasque's digestive juices. A swallowed creature can cut its way out by dealing 50 points of damage to the tarrasque's digestive tract (AC 25). Once the creature exits, muscular action closes the hole; another swallowed opponent must cut its own way out. The tarrasque's gullet can hold 2 Huge, 8 Large, 32 Medium, 128 Small, or 512 Tiny or smaller creatures.

Carapace (Ex): The tarrasque's armorlike carapace is exceptionally tough and highly reflective, deflecting all rays, lines, cones, and even magic missile spells. There is a 30% chance of reflecting any such effect back at the caster; otherwise, it is merely negated. Check for reflection before rolling to overcome the creature's spell resistance.

Regeneration (Ex): No form of attack deals lethal damage to the tarrasque. The tarrasque regenerates even if it fails a saving throw against a disintegrate spell or a death effect. If the tarrasque fails its save against a spell or effect that would kill it instantly (such as those mentioned above), the spell or effect instead deals nonlethal damage equal to the creature's full normal hit points +10 (or 868 hp). The tarrasque is immune to effects that produce incurable or bleeding wounds, such as mummy rot, a sword with the wounding special ability, or a clay golem's cursed wound ability.

The tarrasque can be slain only by raising its nonlethal damage total to its full normal hit points +10 (or 868 hit points) and using a wish or miracle spell to keep it dead.

If the tarrasque loses a limb or body part, the lost portion regrows in 1d6 minutes (the detached piece dies and decays normally). The creature can reattach the severed member instantly by holding it to the stump.

Skills: The tarrasque has a +8 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks.

D62. SOUNDERS

At the far end of this massive tunnel hums a six-wheeled wagon carrying a metal cylindrical tank mounted in an iron cradle, with connecting hoses running to another reservoir. At the tank's rear is a deep dwarf who manipulates several levers, while towards the front, another dwarf holds a cone of sorts, and presses the narrow end to the wall.

Beyond the odd machine are two narrow tunnels. The sound of hammering is undeniable.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: A sounder crew, consisting of two deep dwarves (hp 6 each), tests the walls with harmonic resonances here to see if they are any closer to the Vault. Six duergar (hp 9 each) and a grimlock overseer (hp 16) work in each of the narrow tunnels. The sounder crew, if left alone, turns on the device, to a narrow beam, high-pulse with results as described in Room D53, likely arcing and killing one of the workers. If the PCs approach, the sounder crew alerts the grimlocks in the side tunnels, who lead the slaves to attack.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The PCs can negotiate with the sounder crew, but a failed Diplomacy check results as above. If the PCs improve their attitude to Friendly, the deep dwarves urge them to leave. They know nothing of the Chtrax's plans, although they can explain how sounders work.

Combat is straightforward. The grimlocks lead the van, charging into the largest body of the PCs. If the grimlock overseers fall, the slaves surrender. All of the duergar slaves carry xill eggs inside them.

If the tarrasque breaks free, the duergar turn on their grimlock overseers, possibly hatching the xill eggs should the grimlocks hit or kill any of these slaves. The deep dwarves flee to the Great Hall.

D63. SLAVES

Digging through the rock is a team of slaves led by a grimlock alongside a large armored horror. Sharp rocks, dust and bones litter the area. They seem focused on their task.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A crew of duergar slaves (hp 9 each) propelled by the lash of the grimlock overseer's (hp 16) whip slowly digs through the dense rock. Working in the narrow tunnel is a bulette (hp 107) and its derro handler (hp 48). The handler and half of the slaves carry xill eggs inside them. At sign of the PCs, the grimlock sends one of the slaves to fetch the handler and its beast, before it commands the slaves to attack.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: As long as the derro handler and the grimlock foreman live, the slaves fight the PCs, fearful as they are of their masters. The duergar enlarge and circle the PCs, moving to gain flanks against the spellcasters, while the bulette barrels into the warriors. The grimlock and the handler aid the bulette. If both of the leaders fall, the duergar flee to Room D58 to gain the myrmarch's protection. If the PCs already dispatched the myrmarch, the slaves flee to the Great Hall and out of the region if possible.

If the tarrasque breaks free in Room D61, the grimlock and the derro handler lead the bulette and the duergar to help stop the monster from destroying the whole complex.

D64. TARRASQUE NEST

This deep tunnel is a stinking morass of dung, rotting carcasses and cast off equipment parts. The stench is unbearable. Great tents in the floor of this cave speak of some enormous clawed inhabitant.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is where the tarrasque retires after a long day of work. Filthy and disease ridden, rotting body parts, mostly dwarven arms and heads, lie scattered throughout. PCs exploring this area are at risk of contracting filth fever.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A search through this area turns up some incidental items left by the tarrasque's victims. Lodged into the rock is a large jacinth worth 5,000 gp, star ruby worth 1,400 gp, an emerald worth 1,000 gp, and 4 pieces of tourmaline worth 400 gp each. Scattered throughout the tunnel, created by the tarrasque's friction as it scratches against the tunnel are 23 various-sized chunks of obsidian, each worth 30 gp each. Beneath one partly intact corpse of a derro savant (DC 20 Search check) is a rod of flame extinguishing, a fully charged wand of cure serious wounds.

D65. SENTRIES

Two insect men stand guard at this intersection, ready for anything.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Two formian warriors (hp 26 each) watch over the slaves in the tunnels behind them.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4

Tactics: These monsters immediately alert the rest of the formians in this section and attack any creature they encounter not a detro, dwarf, formian or xill. They do not negotiate and they fight to the death. No one in the connecting tunnels comes to help these formians.

If the tarasque breaks free in Room D61, these formian warriors move to Room D58 to help defend the rest of the region.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 14, initial and secondary damage 1d6 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Possessions: Guisarme.

D66. DIGGERS

The narrow tunnel opens into a small cave, where dwarves slowly chip away at the rock. Standing over them and gauging their progress is a blind humanoid with a drawn whip.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: A crew of slaves and a grimlock mine this tunnel. They attack any PCs intruding on their tunnel, unless the PCs succeed a DC 15 Bluff or Intimidate check. Otherwise, the duergar attack the PCs, using their tools as weapons.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The grimlock knows nothing more detailed than the basic organization of the crews and teams working in this area. He also knows about the tarasque at Room D61. The duergar, if allowed to speak, know a little, having heard rumors from their fellow slaves. They think the xill master is close to reaching some hidden treasure, and they mutually fear the outcome of his finding.

If combat breaks out, the duergar enlarge and charge, while the grimlock switches to his battleaxe. If combat goes against the slaves and their master, the surviving duergar use invisibility to flee.

D67. MINE

More slaves and an overseer work this tunnel. In an adjoining cave is a weird mechanical device manned by two deep dwarf slaves, connecting the machine's odd cone apparatus to the wall. All focus on their labor.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: A team of six duergar slaves (hp 9 each) and a grimlock overseer (hp 16) mine this tunnel. The device in the cave is a sounder (see Room D58), manned by two deep dwarf slaves (hp 6 each). When the PCs approach, the deep dwarves turn on the sounder using a mid-pulse. Allow the grimlock to make a Listen check opposed by the PCs Move Silently check. If he notices the PCs, he takes no obvious action and waits to "see" using his blind sight ability to see where they go. If the PCs leave, he ignores them; if they position themselves for an attack, he commands the duergar to the ready.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Should combat occur, the grimlock commands his duergar to vanish, and the duergar use their innate invisibility ability to disappear, attacking only when a PC happens to walk by them. The grimlock retreats to the sounders position, and commands the deep dwarves to fire a high-pulse as soon as the PCs close. These opponents are uninterested in talk and fight to the death.

Treasure: The deep dwarves have an intact and operational sounder. EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one level of rogue to each of the duergar slaves. To decrease the challenge, remove the sounder and deep dwarves.

D68. ABANDONED TUNNELS

This tunnel steeply descends deeper into the earth. Algae and luminescent fungus line the walls, fed by water droplets beading on the rock's surface. After 30 ft., the tunnel ends at a staircase spiraling down into a great black void. The scent of moisture is clear.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Where this tunnel goes off the map, it leads to an underground lake filled with horror. The exact details of this site are up to you. The lake could be a flooded derro city, inhabited now by a powerful aboleth lord and his skum slaves. Alternatively, it could lead to more tunnels, with more derro miners working to uncover the vault. D69 THROUGH D75. WESTERN MINES

The Western Mines encompass Rooms D69 through D75. These tunnels are all new and recently excavated in just the last few weeks. Unlike other sections in this region, there is no single center of activity; the tunnels are still in the exploratory stages, resulting in small groups of expert miners as opposed to massive networks of miners.

Chtrax commanded his forerunners to explore this section, lay track in the tunnels, and excavate the area entirely, but a large section collapsed killing more than thirty miners, see Room D69. Worse, a few of the deeper probes to the north, beyond Rooms D72 and D75, released a flood of water, killing even more slaves and formians. Along with some unusual properties throughout these tunnels, progress has slowed, with many of the miners replaced by xill.

A single stone giant (hp 117) works the rails leading from Room D44 throughout these tunnels. He goes to the various digging sites, loads the rock, and takes the rock to Room D77, where the delver dissolves the rubble. The stone giant has no interest in fighting, and flees in the face of well-armed PCs. He does not interact at all and only fights if prevented from fleeing.

All of the tunnels here are at least 10 ft. tall, extending to heights equal to the widths in larger tunnels and Rooms. The floors are treacherous, prohibiting charges and run actions. PCs moving more than half speed must succeed a DC 10 Balance check or fall prone. All tunnels and Rooms are dark unless otherwise specified in the Rooms' descriptions.

Day 0 through Day 3, Chtrax sends his minions to explore these tunnels and to excavate the Rooms to find the Vault. After Day 3, however, he focuses on Room D61 and the tarrasque's progress through the adamantite bands. Consequently, the supplies, guards and materials moved to other areas in the region, leaving this area virtually abandoned.

If the PCs have not yet stopped the tarrasque in Room D61 and explore this region after Day 3, treat all Rooms featuring mining teams, those Rooms featuring deep dwarves, duergar, grimlocks, and or derro, as empty.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

During Days 0 through 3, check for Random Encounters once every two hours the PCs explore this section. Day 4 or later, roll for random encounters just once per day.

1d20	Encounter
1	The earth groans, causing a small tremor to shake the place. No result, other than streams of rock dust spill down from the ceilings.
2–15	Nothing
16	A confused and lost derro stumbles into the PCs; when he does, his chest explodes releasing the xill inside. This encounter occurs just once.
17	Patrol of 1d4 formian warriors looking for escaped slaves.
18	A stone giant pushes an ore cart up and down the rails.
19	Pack of 1d6 hungry xill looking for flesh.
20	Tremors shake the Room causing dust to spill down from overhead. Each PC must succeed a DC 10 Balance check to keep his footing. Roll 1d20. If an 18–20 results, there is a major tremor functioning as an earthquake cast on the ceiling.

D69. CAVED-IN ROOM

PCs moving down the tunnel to Room D77 and succeeding a DC 26 Listen check, hear the following.

From the wall, you hear a faint scratching noise. You strain to listen, and you think you hear cries for help. Trinkets, stone carvings and the like lie scattered on the floor near the base of a pile of loose rock.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: An earthquake caved-in a large portion of the tunnels, trapping and killing many of Chtrax's workers. Still alive and trapped inside this cave are 4 duergar (hp 9 each) and 6 deep dwarf (hp 6 each) slaves who hammer at the walls for help. The sounds echo eerily throughout the tunnels outside. The duergar slaves joke about the sounds, but the deep dwarves leave offerings and secretly work at the walls to free their trapped comrades, when no one watches.

The slaves inside are half-starved, bruised and beaten. They lack the strength to dig themselves out, and succumb to the ravages of hunger and thirst by Day 5. The PCs can clear the rock and debris where the wall is narrowest. A PC with stonecunning can make DC 20 Spot check, or anyone may roll a DC 25 Knowledge (dungeoneering) check to find the narrowest wall. In 1 minute, without tools, a PC can clear rock and debris equal to five times her heavy load limit. With tools, they clear double this amount. Assume there is 3,000 lb of rock.

The PCs may also tunnel through the rock. The walls have a thickness as indicated on the map and count as hewn stone (hardness 8, hp 540 per 10 ft. by 10 ft. section). Alternatively, the PCs can use passwall, stone shape or similar magic to punch a hole through the walls.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 9, Echoes 8.

Tactics: If the PCs manage to break through the walls and free the slaves, the dwarves are friendly, offering to help the PCs in any way they can, even the duergar. The dwarves are equipped as below. These dwarves have the standard chances of carrying a xill egg inside them (see region Introduction).

Trapped in the slide, and given their lowly status, they do not know much. They do know the general layout of the various sections in the region, at least by name, though they do not know much about the creatures dwelling in any particular Rooms. They warn the Deep Mines house the most dangerous creature in the entire world, and encourage the PCs to avoid those tunnels.

D71. PILE OF BONES

The narrow tunnel widens into a small grotto. Two more tunnels lead out of this room. The floor is rough slate, and clearly treacherous. There are pits and holes in the floor, filled with black stagnant water. The floor clearly slants to the right exit. Black bones with bits of rotted flesh collect in a pile near the left wall. Otherwise, this room appears to be empty.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room once held the campsite for the expeditionary force. When they breached the underground lake, this Room flooded and some fearsome subterranean aquatic monster devoured the inhabitants. Now, just their bones and a few puddles of toxic water remain. Foolish PCs who drink the water must succeed a DC 16 Fortitude save or contract Blinding Sickness.

✦ Blinding Sickness—Ingested, Fortitude DC 16, incubation period 1d3 days, damage 1d4 Str (Each time victim takes 2 or more damage from the disease, he must make another fortitude save or be permanently blinded.)

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: PCs moving down the tunnel to Room D72 must move at one-quarter speed. Moving faster requires the PCs to succeed a DC 15 Balance check, or slide down the tunnel to land in the murky waters and the vast sea of green slime below.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

D72. WATER-FILLED CAVE

The now steeply angled tunnel ends on the shores of brackish water that gently laps against the sand. The watery room extends back into darkness, but there are no other visible exits.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was originally connected to a network of deeper tunnels, but when the miners accidentally breached the underground lake, the Room flooded, killing scores of miners, derro, and formian guards. Now, this Room serves as one of the two entrances for these subterranean realms. It descends 30 ft. to the bottom. At the far end is a tunnel leading to the watery tunnels. Unfortunately, this Room is also the home for an enormous colony of aquatic green slime resting just below the surface of the water, unseen for all the water's contaminants. It owes its massive size to corpses of the drowned beneath its surface.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: PCs entering the pool meet with a horrible surprise as green slime coats their bodies. The slime fills the entire Room, beneath the water.

✦ Green Slime (CR 4)—This dungeon peril is a dangerous variety of normal slime. Green slime devours flesh and organic materials on contact and is even capable of dissolving metal. Bright green, wet, and sticky, it clings to walls, floors, and ceilings in patches, reproducing as it consumes organic matter. It drops from walls and ceilings when it detects movement (and possible food) below.

A single 5-foot square of green slime deals 1d6 points of Constitution damage per round while it devours flesh. On the first round of contact, the slime can be scraped off a creature (most likely destroying the scraping device), but after that it must be frozen, burned, or cut away (dealing damage to the victim as well). Anything that deals cold or fire damage, sunlight, or a remove disease spell destroys a patch of green slime. Against wood or metal, green slime deals 2d6 points of damage per round, ignoring metal's hardness but not that of wood. It does not harm stone.

DMs not wishing to expand this dungeon should remove the exit at the far end of the Room.

D73. XILL CAVE

The tunnel opens into a wide and awkwardly shaped chamber. Hanging 2 ft. from the floor from hooked chains descending from the 30 ft. ceiling, are seven corpses of derro, duergar and dwarves. They are all in various states of decomposition. One thing unifies them, though, they all feature terrible holes in their chests.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Seven xill (hp 32 each) cling to the backs of the hanging carcasses, feeding. When the PCs arrive, assume the xill took "10" on their Hide checks, and allow PCs a Spot check to detect them. If the PCs see them and take any action revealing their awareness, the xill attack. Otherwise, the xill are content to watch them while they eat.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: These xill are aggressive warriors, driven to barbarism after a life in these tunnels. They give no quarter. The xill use bite attacks to paralyze their foes first, and destroy those still moving before implanting their eggs.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one level of fighter to each of the xill. To decrease the challenge, reduce the number of xill present to just four.

✦ Xill: CR 6; Medium outsider (extraplanar); HD 5d8+10; hp 32; Init +7; Spd 40 ft.; AC 20, touch 13, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +5; Grp +7; Atk +7 melee (1d4+2/x4, light pick) or +7 melee (1d4+2, claw) or +8 ranged (1d8/x3, longbow); Full Atk +7 melee (1d4+2/x4, 1d4+1/x4, 2 light picks), and +5 melee (1d4+1, 2 claws); or +5 melee (1d4+2, 1d4+1, 4 claws); or +4 ranged (1d8/x3, 2 longbows); SA Implant, improved grab, paralysis; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., planewalk, spell resistance 21; AL LE; SV Fort +6, Ref +7, Will +5; Str 15, Dex 16, Con 15, Int 12, Wis 12, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Balance +13, Climb +10, Diplomacy +2, Escape Artist +11, Intimidate +8, Listen +9, Move Silently +11, Sense Motive +8, Spot +9, Tumble +11, Use Rope +3 (+5 with bindings); Improved Initiative, MultiattackB, Multiweapon Fighting.

Implant (Ex): As a standard action, a xill can lay eggs inside a paralyzed creature. The young emerge about 90 days later, literally devouring the host from inside. A remove disease spell rids a victim of the egg, as does a DC 25 Heal check. If the check fails, the healer can try again, but each attempt (successful or not) deals 1d4 points of damage to the patient.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a xill must hit with one or more claw attacks. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. It receives a +2 bonus on the grapple check for each claw that hits. If it wins the grapple check and maintains the hold in the next round, it automatically bites the foe at that time. The bite deals no damage but injects a paralyzing venom.

Paralysis (Ex): Those bitten by a xill must succeed on a DC 14 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 1d4 hours. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Planewalk (Su): Xill cannot use planewalk in this adventure.

D74. DEAD END

Aside from a few bones and scraps of sodden cloth, this dead-end tunnel is empty.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Soon after the water flooding these tunnels receded, a crew of miners worked to salvage the mines. Unfortunately, their grimlock overseer was a bit overzealous, and drove them with its whip harder than normal. The damage caused by his abuse, trigger the xill to emerge early from their hosts. The xill consumed the grimlock leaving his bones here, before pulling the corpses of their hosts to Room D73. Now, this tunnel is empty.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Beneath the grimlock's bones is a +1 keen battleaxe, masterwork whip and a potion of spider climb.

EL: N/A

D75. THE DROWNED GUARDIANS

Floating on the surface of the glistening waters are ten sodden corpses of dwarves. Where exposed to the air, they have rotted, explaining the stink.

Initial Attitude: N/A or Hostile

Encounter: If you would like to expand this dungeon to include subterranean depths of your own design, the corpses are deep dwarf zombies (hp 9 each) animated by an aboleth necromancer living in the underground sea and dispatched here to prevent intrusion. However, if you choose not to expand this dungeon, treat these corpses as just corpses, and remove the exits from the map.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If these creatures are indeed zombies, they move to attack as soon as the PCs come within 5 ft. of the shore. These creatures are mindless and fight to the death.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A or 3

Scaling: N/A

✦ Deep Dwarf Zombie: CR 1/2; Medium undead; HD 2d12+3; hp 16; Init +0; Spd 20 ft. Skills and Feats: —; Toughness.

Single Actions Only (Ex): Zombies have poor reflexes and can perform only a single move action or attack action each round. A zombie can move up to its speed and attack in the same round, but only if it attempts a charge.

Possessions: Light pick, ragged clothing

D76. SOUNDER CREW

At the far end of this massive tunnel hums a six-wheeled wagon carrying a metal cylindrical tank mounted in an iron cradle, with connecting hoses running to another reservoir. At the tank's rear is a deep dwarf manipulating several levers, while towards the front, another dwarf presses a cone to the wall. In the smaller tunnel beyond unusual creatures are at work, using their cone-like heads and a loud sonic assault to erode the rock.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The odd device is a sounder (see Room D53) manned by two deep dwarf engineers (hp 6 each). Four loyal destrachan (hp 60 each) use their destructive harmonics to tunnel through the rock as directed by the sounder crew.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: At sign of the PCs, the malevolent destrachan turn their harmonics on the PCs, while the deep dwarf engineers hide beneath the device. The destrachan use their nerve effects first, hoping to have a little fun before killing the intruders. However, if combat goes against them, they resort to the flesh destroying attacks.

The dwarves are terrified of the PCs and unswervingly loyal to Chtrax. They do not fight the PCs, but do not offer any assistance.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three formian warriors to the group. To decrease the challenge, remove two of the destrachan.

✦ Deep Dwarf Engineer, War 1: CR 1/2; Medium humanoid (dwarf); HD 1d8+2; hp 6; Init +0; Spd 20 ft.; AC 10, touch 10, flat-footed 10; Base Atk +1; Grp +2; Atk +3 melee (1d10+1/x3, maul); Full Atk +3 melee (1d10+1/x3, maul); SA Dwarf traits; SQ Darkvision 90 ft., deep dwarf traits; AL LG; SV Fort +4*, Ref +0*, Will -1*; Str 13, Dex 11, Con 14, Int 10, Wis 9, Cha 6.

Possessions: Maul, ragged clothing.

✦ Destrachan: CR 8; Large aberration; HD 8d8+24; hp 60; Init +5; Spd 30 ft.; AC 18, touch 10, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +6; Grp +14; Atk +9 melee (1d6+4, claw); Full Atk +9 melee (1d6+4, 2 claws); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Destructive harmonics; SQ Blindsight 100 ft., immunities, protection from sonics; AL NE; SV Fort +5, Ref +5, Will +10; Str 18, Dex 12, Con 16, Int 12, Wis 18, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Hide +8, Listen +25, Move Silently +7, Survival +9; Dodge, Improved Initiative, Lightning Reflexes

Destructive Harmonics (Su): A destrachan can blast sonic energy in a cone up to 80 ft. long. It can also use this attack to affect any creatures or objects within a 30-ft. radius. It can tune the harmonics of this destructive power to affect different types of targets. All save DCs are Charisma-based.

Flesh: Disrupting tissue and rending bone, this attack deals 4d6 points of damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Nerves: A destrachan can focus its harmonics to knock out foes rather than slay them. This attack deals 6d6 points of nonlethal damage to all within the area (Reflex DC 15 half).

Material: When using this form of harmonics, a destrachan chooses wood, stone, metal, or glass. All objects made of that material within the area must succeed on a DC 15 Fortitude save or shatter. Objects (or portions of objects) that have up to 30 hit points are potentially affected by this attack.

Blindsight (Ex): A destrachan can use hearing to ascertain all foes within 100 ft. as a sighted creature would.

Immunities: Destrachans have immunity to gaze attacks, visual effects, illusions, and other attack forms that rely on sight.

Protection from Sonics (Ex): While they can be affected by loud noises and sonic spells (such as ghost sound or silence), destrachans are less vulnerable to sonic attacks (+4 circumstance bonus on all saves) because they can protect their ears. A destrachan whose sense of hearing is impaired is effectively blinded, and all targets are treated as having total concealment.

Skills: A destrachan has a +10 racial bonus on Listen checks.

D77. DIGGING ZONE

This large cavern extends nearly 60 ft. across, with a ceiling just as high. Sifting down from above are constant streams of dust and pebbles landing onto the back of an enormous cyclopean, an armed slug-like creature situated in the room's center. Duergar slaves scurry about feeding rocks to the thing, and scramble back before the monsters bodily secretions dissolve them in addition to the stone. Two blind overseers lend an imposing physical presence and the bite of their whips to encourage the duergar to work harder.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: The massive central creature is a delver (hp 145), who dissolves the rock chunks with its corrosive slime. It serves Chtrax, believing the xill holds its mate and brood hostage. Hauling the rock to the delver are ten duergar slaves (hp 9 each) and their grimlock overseers (hp 16 each). The delver is disinterested in working, and so does not excavate the rock unless ordered, content to dissolve the rock brought to it instead. The delver remains here after Day 3 along with half of the duergar and one grimlock.

The farthest edge of the map may extend to more tunnels, more workers and other horrors at the DMs discretion. If you do not wish to expand the dungeon, enclose this Room.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: When the PCs approach this Room, allow the grimlocks Listen check opposed by the PCs Move Silently checks. If they succeed, they order their forces to attack. The delver aids the grimlocks 50% of the time. If he does not aid the grimlocks, he either does nothing, or sides with the PCs, with a 50% chance of either.

The duergar enlarge and turn invisible, maneuvering to gain flanks, while the grimlocks drop their whips, draw their battleaxes and charge if possible. The delver, if it attacks, lashes out with its slam attacks against heavily armored foes, leaving the spellcasters for the grimlocks and duergar to deal with.

If the both grimlocks die, the delver and the duergar surrender. The delver does not aid the PCs beyond this Room, and instead moves toward the Great Hall to find its mate and brood.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one level of rogue to each of the duergar slaves. To decrease the challenge, reduce the number of duergar to five and remove the grimlocks altogether.

✦ Duergar Slave, War 1: CR 1; Medium humanoid (dwarf); HD 1d8+5; hp 9; Init +0; Spd 20 ft.; AC 10, touch 10, flat-footed 10; Base Atk +1; Grp +2; Atk +2 melee (1d4+1/x4, light pick); Full Atk +2 melee (1d4+1/x4, light pick); SA Duergar traits, spell-like abilities; SQ Darkvision 120 ft., duergar traits, stonemasonry; AL LE; SV Fort +4*, Ref +0*, Will -1*; Str 13, Dex 11, Con 14, Int 10, Wis 9, Cha 4.

Skills and Feats: Climb +4, Hide +3*, Listen +5, Spot +3; Alertness, Exotic Weapon Proficiency (whip), Power Attack, Track.

Immunities: Grimlocks are immune to gaze attacks, visual effects, illusions, and other attack forms that rely on sight.

Skills: * A grimlock's dull gray skin helps it hide in its native terrain, conferring a +10 racial bonus on Hide checks when in mountains or underground.

Equipment: Masterwork whip, battle axe.

▼ Delver: CR 9; Huge aberration; HD 15d8+78; hp 145; Init +5; Spd 30 ft., burrow 10 ft.; AC 24, touch 9, flat-footed 23; Base Atk +11; Grp +27; Atk +17 melee (1d6+8 plus 2d6 acid, slam); Full Atk +17 melee (1d6+8 plus 2d6 acid, 2 slams); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft.; SA Corrosive slime; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., immunity to acid, stone shape, tremorsense 60 ft.; AL N; SV Fort +12, Ref +6, Will +11; Str 27, Dex 13, Con 21, Int 14, Wis 14, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Knowledge (dungeoneering) +14, Knowledge (nature) +4, Listen +20, Move Silently +17, Spot +20, Survival +14 (+16 underground); Alertness, Blind-Fight, Great Fortitude, Improved Initiative, Power Attack, Toughness.

Corrosive Slime (Ex): A delver produces a mucus-like slime that contains a highly corrosive substance. The slime is particularly effective against stone. A delver's mere touch deals 2d6 points of acid damage to organic creatures or objects. Against metallic creatures or objects, a delver's slime deals 4d8 points of damage, and against stony creatures (including earth elementals) or objects it deals 8d10 points of damage. A slam attack by a delver leaves a patch of slime that deals 2d6 points of damage on contact and another 2d6 points of damage in each of the next 2 rounds. A large quantity (at least a quart) of water or weak acid, such as vinegar, washes off the slime. An opponent's armor and clothing dissolve and become useless immediately unless the wearer succeeds on a DC 22 Reflex save. Weapons that strike a delver also dissolve immediately unless the wielder succeeds on a DC 22 Reflex save. A creature attacking a delver with natural weapons takes damage from its slime each time an attack hits unless the creature succeeds on a DC 22 Reflex save. These save DCs are Constitution-based.

Stone Shape (Ex): A delver can alter its slime to temporarily soften stone instead of dissolving it. Once every 10 minutes, a delver can soften and shape up to 25 cubic ft. of stone, as a stone shape spell (caster level 15th).

▼ Duergar Slave, War 1: CR 1; Medium humanoid (dwarf); HD 1d8+5; hp 9; Init +0; Spd 20 ft.; AC 13, touch 10, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +1; Grp +2; Atk +2 melee (1d6+1/x4, heavy pick); Full Atk +2 melee (1d6+1/x4, heavy pick); SA Duergar traits, spell-like abilities; SQ Darkvision 120 ft., duergar traits, stonemasonry; AL LE; SV Fort +4*, Ref +0*, Will -1*; Str 13, Dex 11, Con 14, Int 10, Wis 9, Cha 4.

Skills and Feats: Appraise +2, Craft (blacksmithing) +2, Craft (stonemasonry) +2, Listen +3, Move Silently -4, Spot +2; Toughness. Possessions: Studded leather armor, heavy pick.

▼ Grimlock Overseer, Ftr 1: CR 2; Medium monstrous humanoid; HD 2d8+2 + 1d10+1; hp 17; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 11, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +3; Grp +5; Atk +6 melee (1d3+2 nonlethal, whip) or +5 melee (1d8+3/x3, battleaxe); Full Atk +6 melee (1d3+2 nonlethal, whip) or +5 melee (1d8+3/x3, battleaxe); SA —; SQ Blindsight 40 ft., immunities, scent; AL NE; SV Fort +3, Ref +4, Will +2; Str 15, Dex 13, Con 13, Int 10, Wis 8, Cha 6.

Skills and Feats: Climb +6, Hide +3, Listen +5, Spot +3; Alertness, Exotic Weapon Proficiency (whip), Track*, Weapon Focus (whip).

Blindsight (Ex): Grimlocks can sense all foes within 40 feet as a sighted creature would. Beyond that range, they treat all targets as having total concealment.

Grimlocks are susceptible to sound-based and scent-based attacks, however, and are affected normally by loud noises and sonic spells (such as ghost sound or silence) and overpowering odors (such as stinking cloud spell or incense-heavy air). Negating a grimlock's sense of smell or hearing reduces this ability to normal Blind-Fight (as the feat). If both these senses are negated, a grimlock is effectively blinded.

Immunities: Grimlocks are immune to gaze attacks, visual effects, illusions, and other attack forms that rely on sight.

Skills: A grimlock's dullgray skin helps it hide in its native terrain, conferring a +10 racial bonus on Hide checks when in mountains or underground.

Possessions: Battleaxe, whip, leather armor.

D78. CONFUSED MINERS

The railed track ends up in a small alcove. Four duergar miners steadily dig a tunnel through the rock while a grimlock's presence more than guarantees their labor is happening.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This crew of 4 duergar miners (hp 9 each) along with their grimlock foreman (hp 16) digs, unknowingly, toward the Great Hall. The confusing effects of the region have turned them around, and they can faintly hear sounds coming through the rock from the Hall beyond.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs engage these miners, they fight to the death, thinking they are close to reaching Chtrax's prize. The duergar use their spell-like abilities to gain advantage when able, while the grimlock battles the armored PCs.

Left to their own devices, the miners breach the wall of the Great Hall on Day 5, creating a tremor collapsing part of the ceiling onto a random structure. See Random Encounters in the Great Hall for details. After the tremors, Chtrax executes the miners and their grimlock overseer, by dumping them all into the lava flow.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two fighter levels the duergar slaves and three fighter levels to the grimlock. To decrease the challenge, have the PCs to surprise the miners.

D79. MINERS

The railed track ends in a small alcove. A weird creature with a tubular mouth destroys the rock with a sonic attack, while dwarf slaves shovel away the rubble.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: A destrachan (hp 60) destroys the rock with its destructive harmonics, while 4 infected deep dwarf (hp 6 each) slaves clear away the debris. These creatures are engrossed in their work, so are unlikely to notice the PCs, unless they draw attention to themselves in some egregious way. If so, the slaves and the destrachan fight to a suicidal death.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The slaves grapple the closest PC, while the destrachan uses its destructive harmonics to collapse the ceiling on the party's rear ranks. If the deep dwarves gain a hold, the destrachan blasts them and the held victim with a flesh destroying sonic attack.

The destrachan and its deep dwarf slaves hit the first adamantite barrier on Day 5. It takes them two days to break through each barrier. Therefore, these creatures eventually complete the kill master's task on Day 12, but only if the PCs somehow stop the tarrasque first.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the deep dwarves with a derro handler. To decrease the challenge, replace the destrachan with a bulette.

A destrachan hearing is impaired is effectively blinded, and all targets are treated as having total concealment.

Skills: A destrachan has a +10 racial bonus on Listen checks.

D80. RATS

The railed track ends in a small alcove. A rat swarm feeds on the carcass of a former slave. A light-weight pick lies discarded on the floor.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: A lone deep dwarf miner thought to escape from this region by secretly mining a tunnel into the floor of this cave when no one was looking. Instead, what he found was a nest of fiendish rats lying dormant in a pocket in the earth. The rats boiled out of the hole and made short work of the poor dwarf. The swarm of fiendish rats (hp 13) is content to feast on the bones of the dwarf.

This Room is empty after Day 4.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs provoke the rats, say by attacking or casting a spell, the rats turn on the lead PC, in a frenzy of bites and claws. The rats open with a smite good attack, regardless of whether the opponent is good or not. The rats fight till death.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 3

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add six fiendish rat swarms that emerge on the second round of combat. To decrease the challenge, replace the fiendish rat swarm with a rat swarm.

Fiendish Rat Swarm: CR 3; Tiny magical beast (extraplanar, swarm); HD 4d8; hp 13; Init +2; Spd 15 ft., climb 15 ft.; AC 14; touch 14, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +3; Grp —; Atk (1d6 plus disease, swarm); Full Atk (1d6 plus disease, swarm); Space/Reach 10 ft./0 ft.; SA Disease, distraction, smite good; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., half damage from slashing and piercing, low-light vision, resistance to cold and fire 5, spell resistance 5, scent, swarm traits; AL NE; SV Fort +4, Ref +6, Will +2; Str 2, Dex 15, Con 10, Int 3, Wis 12, Cha 2.

Skills and Feats: Balance +10, Climb +10, Hide +14, Listen +6, Spot +7, Swim +10; Alertness, Weapon Finesse.

Swarm: A fiendish rat swarm seeks to surround and attack any prey it encounters. A fiendish rat swarm deals 1d6 points of damage to any creature whose space it occupies at the end of its move.

In order to attack, a single fiendish rat swarm moves into opponents' spaces, which provokes an attack of opportunity. It can occupy the same space as a creature of any size, since it crawls all over its prey, but remains a creature with a 10-ft. space. Fiendish rat swarms never make attacks of opportunity, but they can provoke attacks of opportunity.

Unlike other creatures with a 10-ft. space, a fiendish rat swarm is shapeable. It can occupy any four contiguous squares, and it can squeeze through any space large enough to contain one of its members.

Disease (Ex): Devil Chills—bite, Fortitude DC 12, incubation period 1d4 days, damage 1d4 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based. It requires three successful Fortitude saving throws in a row to recover from devil chills.

Distraction (Ex): Any living creature that initiates its turn with a fiendish rat swarm in its square must succeed on a DC 12 Fortitude save or be nauseated for 1 round. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Smite Good (Su): Once per day a fiendish rat swarm can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD total (+2) against a good foe.

Skills: A fiendish rat swarm has a +4 racial bonus on Hide and Move Silently checks, and a +8 racial bonus on Balance, Climb, and Swim checks. A fiendish rat swarm can always choose to take 10 on all Climb checks, even if rushed or threatened. A fiendish rat swarm uses its Dexterity modifier instead of its Strength modifier for Climb and Swim checks. A fiendish rat swarm has a +8 racial bonus on any Swim check to perform some special action or avoid a hazard. It can always choose to take 10 on a Swim check, even if distracted or endangered. It can use the run action while swimming, provided it swims in a straight line.

D81 THROUGH D84. DEVIL VAULT

Chtrax's goal, the Devil Vault, is a nest of vile evil, a prison withstanding thousands of years, earthquakes, the rise and fall of civilizations, as it has never failed to contain the darkness within. Eons ago, before mankind stirred from the sleep of creation, Asrakhor the Undying, the Destroyer and the Void incarnate surged madly in the planes, and brought war to the heavens. Great celestial cities, infernal strongholds and even the halls of the gods succumbed in the clutches his foul hand. Though the Nemesis' destructive ability was a dire threat, his corrupting aura brought all manner of outsiders beneath his banner. From these fallen celestials rose a particularly corrupted Solar called Kator. This fallen angel gathered to him a host of loyal followers and served the mad god and his fell purposes, laying siege to the gates of heaven. Thousands of years passed, with terrific losses to both sides. It was only when the good and evil gods joined forces, were they able to defeat Asrakhor and imprison him beyond reach in some cosmic prison for all eternity.

With the dark god at bay, there remained the matter of its servants. The evil gods demanded the destruction of these dark servants, but the good gods offered quarter and the gods of light took responsibility for their incarceration. The gods dispatched celestials to the Material Plane to construct a prison to contain these fallen celestials for all eternity.

The total area of the Vault measures 140 ft. by 100 ft., but the actual prison itself is small. Its size is deceptive however, for it originally held all 300,000 of Asrakhor's servants in the sphere appearing only 50 ft. in diameter. The sphere is actually a nexus to a pocket dimension large enough to house all of the fiends, but encapsulated by a sphere of sacred force.

The borders of the Demiplane were not strong enough to contain the raw hate and evil within, so the celestial designers gave their lives to serve as conduits to fuel the energies required to reinforce the heavenly boundaries. The essence of four solars occupied the four corners of the vault, their inherent goodness enough to channel the energies of their divine creatures to buttress the magical barrier (the red lines in Room D81).

Even the sacrifice of the four archangels was not enough to guarantee the permanence of the prison. The builders coated the interior walls with truesilver from the natural deposits found throughout the area surrounding the site. Celestial craftsmen surrounded the vault with bands of magical adamantine and as long as those bands remained intact, they would generate an effect similar to a wall of force (the green lines, Room D82). Filling in the gaps are clouds of raw sacred magical energy, making the Vault inhospitable for fiends, and lending to the magical impediments preventing teleportation effects, plane travel and divination magic.

With these defenses in place, the gods and celestials were confident in the vault's defenses, and over time, expanded the dungeon, imprisoning more of Asrakhor's minions, using inevitables, celestials and more to safeguard the world from the evil inside the massive dungeon. Eventually, the gods and the forces of good forgot about the massive complex, their attention turned to the affairs of mortals and creation.

Now, Chtrax threatens the Vault's integrity, pressing forward with his minions. As he draws closer to his goals, the wards and defenses gradually fail until ultimately, when the tarrasque breaches the walls, the prison's collapses releasing Kator into the world once more. As noted in the Introduction, if the PCs do nothing to stop the tarrasque, it breaches the first set of adamantine bands on Day 4, collapsing two of the walls of force and depleting the sacred energies within. The impediment on divination magic ends. On Day 5, the tarrasque breaches the second band of adamantine, collapsing another wall of force. The impediments on teleportation end in this region. On Day 6, the tarrasque breaks through the final adamantine band, and the final wall of force collapses, dispersing all of the sacred energies and ending the plane travel impediments in this region. Finally, on the seventh Day, the tarrasque breaks inside the Vault. With the Vault's integrity destroyed, the solars' essences fail and the reinforcement to the magical barrier collapses entirely. The sphere warps and twists, collapsing completely after 3 rounds and returning the devils to the Material Plane after 3 rounds. Chtrax cannot place the collar and manacles on Kator before the devil and his legions overwhelm him.

As soon as the devils break free they fight the tarrasque, led by the infamous Kator, with a mixture of spell-like abilities and the devils' ability to summon more of their kind, they quickly overrun the tarrasque and punch through the formian defenses, spilling throughout the region, slaughtering formians, derro, dwarves and other living things they encounter along the way. After one day, the devils conquer the entire region, and plot to conquer the rest of the dungeon. After two more weeks of feasting and terrible hunting, the army of devils marches on the neighboring regions.

The release of the devils has a dynamic effect on the rest of this region. During the day of the devil raids, all of the devils use their summon abilities to draw more of their kind into the region. They move quickly throughout the complex.

Follow this timeline:

- Hours 0 to 3 Devils gain control of the Deep Mines.
- Hours 4 to 5 Devils conquer the Great Hall.
- Hour 6 Devils take the Western and Northern Mines.
- Hour 7 Devils take the Old Mines.

Once the devils conquer the region, replace the inhabitants with the following creatures, regardless of whether the PCs defeated the original inhabitants.

Original Inhabitant	Devilish Inhabitant
Ankheg	Hellcat
Bulette	Bone Devil
Chtrax	Kator, the Pit Fiend; His movements are those of Chtrax during Days 0 through 3.
Delver	None
Derro	Imp
Destrachan	Barbed Devil
Digester	Hellcat
Dwarf, Deep	Lemure
Dwarf, Duergar	Lemure
Formian Warrior	Bearded Devil
Formian Taskmaster	Ice Devil
Formian Myrmarch	Horned Devil
Gorgon	Hellcat
Grimlock	Chain Devil
Stone Giant	None
Stone Golem	None
Xill	Xill remain, as the devils find them entertaining and useful.
Yrthak	None

The only way the PCs can save the day is to take the truesilver manacles and collar, and place them on Kator. This is exceptionally difficult as the pit fiend never sleeps and has no interest in wearing them. Thus, the PCs must ensnare the devil through a magic circle, or defeat the creature in combat, dealing nonlethal damage until he falls unconscious or in some other way. If they position the manacles and collar on the devil, they can use its wish to return all of the devils to prison. Be as lenient as possible on the wish's wording, unless the PCs are foolish enough to use the wish for themselves. If the PCs fail, what happens is up to the DM. Perhaps the gods return their attention to the lost prison and exert their influence to restore the devils to their prison. On the other hand, Kator could simply leave the dungeon from this region and unleash the Nemesis onto the Planes once more for a campaign of epic proportions.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Once the devils are free from the Vault, replace all random encounter tables with this one. Check for random encounters once per hour.

1d20	Encounter
1-12	Tremors shake the corridor, causing fine streams of dust to spill from cracks in the ceiling. Smoke, Tremors 20.
13	1d3+2 barbed devils move to secure closest Room.
14	1d4+5 bearded devils hunt for survivors.
15	1d3+1 bone devils torture a formian for information.
16	1d4 fleeing deep dwarves run from a swarm of 1d8+8 lemures.
17	A pair of hellcats hunts for fresh meat.
18	A horned devil greedily stuffs derro corpses into its mouth.
19	An imp plucks the eyes from a screaming, dying derro.
20	Kator walks his new domain, with Chtrax's head on a pike.

D81. DIVINE SHELL

If the PCs somehow enter this Room without breaching the adamantine bands, read the following.

This multi-hued field sparkles with powerful energy, pulsing as beams originating from four statues in the corners which feed it.

If the PCs explore this Room after the devils break free, read the following.

A great black pit dominates this room, stinking of brimstone and dung. The walls and the ceiling feature tarnished metal strips. In the corners stand the shattered remains of statues, apparently once depicting angelic heroes. The room is quiet, heavy with tragedy.

D84. DEVILS

If the PCs somehow enter this Room without breaching the adamantine bands, read the following. Otherwise, refer to Room D81 for descriptions of the vault.

In the center of this vast room is an orb of an utterly dark nature. Clouds of swirling energies dance on its surface and beyond them you can see screaming faces refracted into warped and twisted horrors. Ephemeral hands pound against the walls, and ever so faintly, you think you hear blasphemous mutterings whispering in the air.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This swirling nexus is the border to the Demiplane housing the devils. Inside lurks Kator, and hundreds of other devils, ranging from imps to hellcats and the fearsome horned devils. The only way to release these devils is to destroy the outer adamantine bands and then breach the Vault's interior. The defenses fall like dominoes and release all the imprisoned fiends to destroy the world. See page 21 for details when the devils break free.

✶ Barbed Devil (Hamatula): CR 11; Medium outsider (evil, extraplanar, lawful); HD 12d8+72; hp 126; Init +6; Spd 30 ft.; AC 29, touch 16, flat-footed 23; Base Atk +12; Grp +22; Atk +18 melee (2d8+6 plus fear, claw); Full Atk +18 melee (2d8+6 plus fear, 2 claws); SA Fear, improved grab, impale 3d8+9, summon devil; SQ Barbed defense, damage reduction 10/good, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to fire and poison, resistance to acid 10 and cold 10, see in darkness, spell resistance 23, spell-like abilities, telepathy 100 ft.; AL LE; SV Fort +14, Ref +14, Will +12; Str 23, Dex 23, Con 23, Int 12, Wis 14, Cha 18.

Skills and Feats: Concentration +21, Diplomacy +6, Hide +21, Intimidate +19, Knowledge (any one) +16, Listen +19, Move Silently +21, Search +16, Sense Motive +17, Spot +19, Survival +2 (+4 following tracks); Alertness, Cleave, Improved Grapple, Iron Will, Power Attack.

Fear (Su): A creature hit by a barbed devil must succeed on a DC 20 Will save or be affected as though by fear (caster level 9th). Whether or not the save is successful, that creature cannot be affected by that same barbed devil's fear ability for 24 hours. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Impale (Ex): A barbed devil deals 3d8+9 points of piercing damage to a grabbed opponent with a successful grapple check.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a barbed devil must hit with a claw attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can impale the opponent on its barbed body.

Summon Devil (Sp): Once per day a barbed devil can attempt to summon 1d6 bearded devils or another barbed devil with a 35% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 4th-level spell.

Barbed Defense (Su): Any creature striking a barbed devil with handheld weapons or natural weapons takes 1d8+6 points of piercing and slashing damage from the devil's barbs. Note that weapons with exceptional reach, such as longswords, do not endanger their users in this way.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), hold person (DC 16), major image (DC 17), scorching ray (2 rays only), 1/day—order's wrath (DC 18), unholy blight (DC 18). Caster level 12th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

✦ Bearded Devil (Barbazul): CR 5; Medium outsider (evil, extraplanar, lawful); HD 6d8+18; hp 45; Init +6; Spd 40 ft.; AC 19; touch 12, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +6; Grp +8; Atk +9 melee (1d10+3 plus infernal wound, glaive) or +8 melee (1d6+2, claw); Full Atk +9/+4 melee (1d10+3 plus infernal wound, glaive) or 2 claws +8 melee (1d6+2, claw); Space/Reach 5 ft./5 ft. (10 ft. with glaive); SA Infernal wound, beard, battle frenzy, summon devil; SQ Damage reduction 5/silver or good, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to fire and poison, resistance to acid 10 and cold 10, see in darkness, spell resistance 17, telepathy 100 ft.; AL LE; SV Fort +8, Ref +7, Will +5; Str 15, Dex 15, Con 17, Int 6, Wis 10, Cha 10

Skills and Feats: Climb +11, Diplomacy +2, Hide +11, Listen +9, Move Silently +9, Sense Motive +9, Spot +9; Improved Initiative, Power Attack, Weapon Focus (glaive).

Spell-like Abilities: At will—greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only). Caster level 12th.

Infernal Wound (Su): The damage a bearded devil deals with its glaive causes a persistent wound. An injured creature loses 2 additional hit points each round. The wound does not heal naturally and resists healing spells. The continuing hit point loss can be stopped by a DC 16 Heal check, a cure spell, or a heal spell. However, a PC attempting to cast a cure spell or a heal spell on a creature damaged by a bearded devil's glaive must succeed on a DC 16 caster level check, or the spell has no effect on the injured PC.

A successful Heal check automatically stops the continuing hit point loss as well as restoring hit points. The infernal wound is a supernatural ability of the bearded devil, not of the weapon. The check DC is Constitution-based.

Beard (Ex): If a bearded devil hits a single opponent with both claw attacks, it automatically hits with its beard. The affected creature takes 1d8+2 points of damage and must succeed on a DC 16 Fortitude save or be infected with a vile disease known as devil chills (incubation period 1d4 days, damage 1d4 Str). Damage is dealt each day until the afflicted creature succeeds on three consecutive Fortitude saves, the disease is cured magically, or the creature dies. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Battle Frenzy (Ex): Twice per day, a bearded devil can work itself into a battle frenzy similar to the barbarian's rage (+4 Strength, +4 Constitution, +2 morale bonus on Will saves, -2 AC penalty). The frenzy lasts for 6 rounds, and the bearded devil suffers no ill effects afterward.

Summon Devil (Sp): Once per day a bearded devil can attempt to summon 2d10 lemures with a 50% chance of success, or another bearded devil with a 35% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 3rd-level spell.

✦ Bone Devil (Osyluth): CR 9; Large outsider (evil, extraplanar, lawful); HD 10d8+50; hp 95; Init +9; Spd 40 ft.; AC 25, touch 14, flat-footed 20; Base Atk +10; Grp +19; Atk +14 melee (1d8+5, bite); Full Atk +14 melee (1d8+5, bite) and +12 melee (1d4+2, 2 claws) and sting +12 melee (3d4+2 plus poison); SA Spell-like abilities, fear aura, poison, summon devil; SQ Damage reduction 10/good, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to fire and poison, resistance to acid 10 and cold 10, see in darkness, spell resistance 21, telepathy 100 ft.; AL LE; SV Fort +12, Ref +12, Will +11; Str 21, Dex 21, Con 21, Int 14, Wis 14, Cha 14.

Skills and Feats: Bluff +15, Concentration +18, Diplomacy +6, Disguise +2 (+4 acting), Hide +14, Intimidate +17, Knowledge (any one) +15, Listen +17, Move Silently +18, Search +15, Sense Motive +15, Spot +17, Survival +2 (+4 following tracks); Alertness, Improved Initiative, Iron Will, Multiattack.

Fear Aura (Su): Bone devils can radiate a 5-foot-radius fear aura as a free action. Affected creatures must succeed on a DC 17 Will save or be affected as though by a fear spell (caster level 7th). A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same bone devil's aura for 24 hours. Other devils are immune to the aura. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 20, initial damage 1d6 Str, secondary damage 2d6 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), dimensional anchor, fly, invisibility (self only), major image (DC 15), wall of ice. Caster level 12th. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Summon Devil (Sp): Once per day a bone devil can attempt to summon 2d10 lemures with a 50% chance of success, or another bone devil with a 35% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 4th-level spell.

✦ Chain Devil (Kytton): CR 6; Medium outsider (evil, extraplanar, lawful); HD 8d8+16; hp 52; Init +6; Spd 30 ft.; AC 20, touch 12, flat-footed 18; Base Atk +8; Grp +10; Atk +10 melee (2d4+2/19–20, chain); Full Atk +10 melee (2d4+2/19–20, 2 chains); Space/Reach 5 ft./5 ft. (10 ft. with chains); SA Dancing chains, unnerving gaze; SQ Damage reduction 5/silver or good, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to cold, regeneration 2, spell resistance 18; AL LE; SV Fort +8, Ref +8, Will +6; Str 15, Dex 15, Con 15, Int 6, Wis 10, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Climb +13, Craft (blacksmithing) +17, Escape Artist +13, Intimidate +12, Listen +13, Spot +13, Use Rope +2 (+4 with bindings); Alertness, Improved Critical (chain), Improved Initiative.

Dancing Chains (Su): A chain devil's most awesome attack is its ability to control up to four chains within 20 feet as a standard action, making the chains dance or move as it wishes. In addition, a chain devil can increase these chains' length by up to 15 feet and cause them to sprout razor-edged barbs. These chains attack as effectively as the devil itself. If a chain is in another creature's possession, the creature can attempt a DC 15 Will save to break the chain devil's power over that chain. If the save is successful, the kytton cannot attempt to control that particular chain again for 24 hours or until the chain leaves the creature's possession. The save DC is Charisma-based.

A chain devil can climb chains it controls at its normal speed without making Climb checks.

A chain devil's natural weapons, as well as any weapons it wields, are treated as evil-aligned and lawful-aligned for the purpose of overcoming damage reduction.

Unnerving Gaze (Su): Range 30 ft., Will DC 15 negates. A chain devil can make its face resemble one of an opponent's departed loved ones or bitter enemies. Those who fail their saves take a -2 penalty on attack rolls for 1d3 rounds. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Regeneration (Ex): Chain devils take normal damage from silvered weapons, good-aligned weapons, and spells or effects with the good descriptor. A chain devil that loses a piece of its body regrows it in 2d6 × 10 minutes. Holding the severed member against the stump enables it to reattach instantly.

Skills and Feats: Chain devils have a +8 racial bonus on Craft checks involving metalwork.

✦ Hellcat (Bezekira): CR 7; Large outsider (evil, extraplanar, lawful); HD 8d8+24; hp 60; Init +9; Spd 40 ft.; AC 21, touch 14, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +8; Grp +18; Atk Claw +13 melee (1d8+6); Full Atk +13 melee (1d8+6, 2 claws) and +8 melee (2d8+3, bite); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Improved grab, pounce, rake 1d8+3; SQ Damage reduction 5/good, darkvision 60 ft., invisible in light, resistance to fire 10, scent, spell resistance 19, telepathy 100 ft.; AL LE; SV Fort +9, Ref +11, Will +8; Str 23, Dex 21, Con 17, Int 10, Wis 14, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Balance +16, Climb +17, Hide +13, Jump +21, Listen +17, Move Silently +20, Spot +13, Swim +17.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a hellcat must hit with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can rake.

Pounce (Ex): If a hellcat charges, it can make a full attack, including two rake attacks.

Rake (Ex): Attack bonus +13 melee, damage 1d8+3.

Invisible in Light (Ex): A hellcat is invisible in any area lit well enough for a human to see. In a darkened area, it shows up as a faintly glowing outline visible up to 30 ft. away (60 ft. if the viewer has low-light vision). Magical darkness smothers the glow and conceals the outline.

Skills: Hellcats have a +4 racial bonus on Listen and Move Silently checks.

▼ Horned Devil (Cornugon): CR 16; Large outsider (evil, extraplanar, lawful); HD 15d8+105; hp 172; Init +7; Spd 20 ft., fly 50 ft. (average); AC 35, touch 16, flat-footed 28; Base Atk +15; Grp +29; Atk +25 melee (2d6+15 plus stun, spiked chain) or +24 melee (2d6+10, claw) or +24 melee (2d6+10 plus infernal wound, tail); Full Atk +25/+20/+15 melee (2d6+15 plus stun, spiked chain) and +22 melee (2d8+5, bite) and +22 melee (2d6+5 plus infernal wound, tail); or +24 melee (2d6+10, 2 claws) and +22 melee (2d8+5, bite) and +22 melee (2d6+5 plus infernal wound, tail); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft. (20 ft. with spiked chain); SA Fear aura, infernal wound, spell-like abilities, stun, summon devil; SQ Damage reduction 10/good and silver, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to fire and poison, resistance to acid 10 and cold 10, regeneration 5, see in darkness, spell resistance 28, telepathy 100 ft.; AL LE; SV Fort +16, Ref +16, Will +15; Str 31, Dex 25, Con 25, Int 14, Wis 18, Cha 22.

Skills and Feats: Bluff +24, Climb +28, Concentration +24, Diplomacy +10, Disguise +6 (+8 acting), Hide +21, Intimidate +26, Listen +22, Move Silently +23, Search +20, Sense Motive +22, Spot +22, Survival +4 (+6 following tracks); Cleave, Improved Sunder, Iron Will, Multiattack, Power Attack, Weapon Focus (spiked chain).

Spell-like Abilities: At will—dispel chaos (DC 21), dispel good (DC 21), magic circle against good, greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only); persistent image (DC 21) 3/day—fireball (DC 19), lightning bolt (DC 19). Caster level 15th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Fear Aura (Su): A horned devil can radiate a 5-foot-radius fear aura as a free action. A creature in the area must succeed on a DC 23 Will save or be affected as though by a fear spell (caster level 15th). A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same horned devil's aura for 24 hours. Other devils are immune to the aura. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Stun (Su): Whenever a horned devil hits with a spiked chain attack, the opponent must succeed on a DC 27 Fortitude save or be stunned for 1d4 rounds. The save DC is Strength-based. This ability is a function of the horned devil, not of the spiked chain.

Infernal Wound (Su): The damage a horned devil deals with its tail attack causes a persistent wound. An injured creature loses 2 additional hit points each round. The wound does not heal naturally and resists healing spells. The continuing hit point loss can be stopped by a DC 24 Heal check, a cure spell, or a heal spell. However, a PC attempting to cast a cure spell or a heal spell on a creature damaged by a horned devil's tail must succeed on a DC 24 caster level check, or the spell has no effect on the injured PC. A successful Heal check automatically stops the continuing hit point loss as well as restoring hit points. The check DC is Constitution-based.

Summon Devil (Sp): Once per day a horned devil can attempt to summon 2d10 lemures or 1d6 bearded devils with a 50% chance of success, 1d6 barbed devils with a 35% chance of success, or another horned devil with a 20% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 6th-level spell.

Regeneration (Ex): A horned devil takes normal damage from good-aligned silvered weapons, and from spells or effects with the good descriptor.

▼ Ice Devil (Gelugon): CR 13; Large outsider (evil, extraplanar, lawful); HD 14d8+84 (147 hp); Init +5; Spd 40 ft.; AC 32, touch 14, flat-footed 27; Base Atk +14; Grp +24; Atk +20 melee (2d6+9/x3 plus slow, spear) or +19 melee (1d10+6, claw); Full Atk +20/+15/+10 melee (2d6+9/x3 plus slow, spear) and +14 melee (2d6+3, bite) and +14 melee (3d6+3 plus slow, tail); or +19 melee (1d10+6, 2 claws) and +14 melee (2d6+3, bite) and +14 melee (3d6+3 plus slow, tail); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Fear aura, slow, spell-like abilities, summon devil; SQ Damage reduction 10/good, darkvision 60 ft., immunity to fire and poison, resistance to acid 10 and cold 10, regeneration 5, see in darkness, spell resistance 25, telepathy 100 ft.; AL LE; SV Fort +15, Ref +14, Will +15; Str 23, Dex 21, Con 23, Int 22, Wis 22, Cha 20.

Skills and Feats: Bluff +22, Climb +23, Concentration +23, Diplomacy +9, Disguise +5 (+7 acting), Intimidate +24, Jump +27, Knowledge (any three) +23, Listen +25, Move Silently +22, Search +23, Sense Motive +23, Spellcraft +23, Spot +25, Survival +6 (+8 following tracks); Alertness, Cleave, Combat Reflexes, Power Attack, Weapon Focus (spear).

Fear Aura (Su): An ice devil can radiate a 10-foot-radius fear aura as a free action. A creature in the area must succeed on a DC 22 Will save or be affected as though by a fear spell (caster level 13th). A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same ice devil's aura for 24 hours. Other devils are immune to the aura. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Slow (Su): A hit from an ice devil's tail or spear induces numbing cold. The opponent must succeed on a DC 23 Fortitude save or be affected as though by a slow spell for 1d6 rounds. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—cone of cold (DC 20), fly, ice storm (DC 19), greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), persistent image (DC 20), unholy aura (DC 23), wall of ice (DC 19). Caster level 13th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Summon Devil (Sp): Once per day an ice devil can attempt to summon 2d10 lemures or 1d6 bearded devils, 2d4 bone devils with a 50% chance of success, or another ice devil with a 20% chance of success. This ability is the equivalent of a 4th-level spell.

Regeneration (Ex): An ice devil takes normal damage from good-aligned weapons and from spells or effects with the good descriptor.

▼ Imp: CR 2; Tiny outsider (evil, extraplanar, lawful); HD 3d8; hp 13; Init +3; Spd 20 ft., fly 50 ft. Skills and Feats: Diplomacy +8, Hide +17, Knowledge (any one) +6, Listen +7, Move Silently +9, Search +6, Spellcraft +6, Spot +7, Survival +1 (+3 following tracks); Dodge, Weapon Finesse.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 13, initial damage 1d4 Dex, secondary damage 2d4 Dex. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +2 racial bonus.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—detect good, detect magic, invisibility (self only); 1/day—suggestion (DC 15). Caster level 6th. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Once per week an imp can use commune to ask six questions. The ability otherwise works as the spell (caster level 12th).

Alternate Form (Su): An imp can assume other forms at will as a standard action. This ability functions as a polymorph spell cast on itself (caster level 12th), except that an imp does not regain hit points for changing form, and an individual imp can assume only one or two forms no larger than Medium. Common forms include monstrous spider, raven, rat, and boar.

Constrict (Ex): A pit fiend deals 2d8+26 points of damage with a successful grapple check.

Disease (Su): A creature struck by a pit fiend's bite attack must succeed on a DC 27 Fortitude save or be infected with a vile disease known as devil chills (incubation period 1d4 days, damage 1d4 Str). The save DC is Constitution-based.

Fear Aura (Su): A pit fiend can radiate a 20-foot-radius fear aura as a free action. A creature in the area must succeed on a DC 27 Will save or be affected as though by a fear spell (caster level 18th). A creature that successfully saves cannot be affected again by the same pit fiend's aura for 24 hours. Other devils are immune to the aura. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a pit fiend must hit with its tail slap attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 27, initial damage 1d6 Con, secondary damage death. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Spell-like Abilities: At will—blasphemy (DC 25), create undead, fireball (DC 21), greater dispel magic, greater teleport (self plus 50 pounds of objects only), invisibility, magic circle against good, mass hold monster (DC 27), persistent image (DC 23), power word stun, unholy aura (DC 26); 1/day—meteor swarm (DC 27). Caster level 18th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Once per year a pit fiend can use wish as the spell (caster level 20th).

Summon Devil (Sp): Twice per day a pit fiend can automatically summon 2 lemures, bone devils, or bearded devils, or 1 erinyes, horned devil, or ice devil. This ability is the equivalent of an 8th-level spell.

Regeneration (Ex): A pit fiend takes normal damage from good-aligned silvered weapons, and from spells or effects with the good descriptor.

D85 THROUGH D103. NORTHERN MINES

Encompassing Rooms D85 through D103, these blighted tunnels are a deadly gauntlet of pestilence, where despite the ravaging plagues wreaking havoc throughout, some mining continues, and where the traps are aplenty, lying in wait for interlopers who have no business exploring them. Commanding these tunnels is a tired and nearly broken formian myrmarch, whose control is tenuous at best. Fighting the plagues ravaging the tunnels has been no small feat and has claimed the lives of countless slaves, derro and formians. Making matters worse, a band of xill have organized and ambush miners, formian sentries and stall the process for some esoteric purpose.

In a rare meeting between Chtrax and the myrmarch, the xill commanded the myrmarch's forces to construct a bore to assist in the mining process, as the master was dissatisfied with the progress. Furthermore, Chtrax did not intend to reveal this project to the gnome, as it would great undue conflict between the artificer and the master. The command came three weeks ago, before the plagues and xill strikes. Hence, progress on the bore has been slow.

Unlike the other two formian myrmarchs, this one suspects the formian queen is dead at the hands of the xill master. If the PCs demonstrate evidence of this, and with some smooth talking, the myrmarch throws his lot in with the PCs to defeat the xill overlord. However, if the PCs betray him, he becomes an implacable enemy and hunts the PCs throughout the region.

All Rooms here are dark unless otherwise specified. The walls are unworked stone and the ceiling averages 10 ft. in height, while smaller, narrow tunnels are only 5 ft. tall. Bones, trash, metal scraps and spider webs litter all the corridors and Rooms, making charging impossible and forcing PCs to succeed a DC 15 Balance check to run. The air is sulfurous and foul.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	A crack in the floor vents sulfurous fumes, forcing all PCs within 5 ft. to make DC 20 Fortitude saves or become nauseated for 1d3 rounds. Smoke, Stagnant Air.
2–10	Nothing
11–13	1d4 formian warriors hunt for rogue xill.
14–15	Two formian warriors astride gorgon, patrolling for xill.
16–17	1d6 xill fight over a shackled, screaming duergar slave.
18–19	1d3 xill carrying the body of a dead duergar slave.
20	Tremors shake the corridor, causing fine streams of dust to spill from cracks in the ceiling. Smoke, Tremors 20.

D85. WARNING

On the floor, about ten feet inside this wide tunnel is some softly glowing writing scribbled on the floor. The corridor continues ahead into darkness.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The writing is in Undercommon, scribed in ink made from luminescent mold. PCs able to read the writing or succeeding a DC 20 Decipher Script learn danger lies ahead. The message is a true warning, alerting derro to the russet mold contaminating Room D86.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

D86. MOLDY ROOM

As you move further down the corridor, it gets colder. When you finally reach the mouth of the cave, you note a brown powdery substance fills the entire room hanging in strands from floor to ceiling and covering the rocks. In the center of the room lies a gleaming longsword, in the grip of a dead humanoid. The room is exceedingly cold, and your breath puffs out in steam.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: When the waters poured into the tunnels from above, much of the water collected here. The resulting moisture and the rotting flesh from the drowned made this an ideal location for various molds. Over time, the water evaporated, leaving a thriving colony of brown mold in its wake. Brown mold covers this Room, so whenever anyone enters a 5 ft. space, they take 3d6 points of damage from each 5 ft. square of mold, for a total of 27d6 points of cold damage.

Encounter Condition: Flooded

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The corpse of Ulrad the Unlucky rots in the center of the Room, a cursed fighter who found himself lost in the dungeon and finally crawled in here to die. All of his other equipment has long since rotted away, except for his particularly unlucky longsword, a –2 cursed adamantine longsword.

EL: 14

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, replace the brown mold with yellow mold. To decrease the challenge, shrink the area of the brown mold to just the central 10 ft. by 10 ft. section.

D87. MORE BODIES

The narrow tunnel extends deep into the rock. Four corpses with large gaping wounds in their chests fill the end of tunnel. Their tools, picks and shovels lie scattered about, rusting. The bodies look like they have been dead for a while.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These bodies once housed xill eggs, but no longer. Two of the corpses were duergar and the other two were deep dwarves. Their jaws have been removed to prevent speak with dead spells.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Aside from a few rusty tools, there is no treasure.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

D88. TUNNEL

Another small tunnel delves into the rock. Scratching noises sound from the darkness.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Three xill (hp 32 each) hide at the end of the tunnel. Newly emerged from the bodies of three duergar miners, they have just killed the grimlock overseer and are making a meal of his remains. If anyone enters the tunnel, the xill hide in the shadows, waiting for the opportunity to strike.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The xill are merciless combatants. If a lone scout enters the tunnel, two make grab attacks to hold the unfortunate victim steady, while a third tries to inject the egg. Against more opponents, the xill lash out with melee attacks, but keep at least one opponent alive to act as a host.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two more xill. To decrease the challenge, remove one xill.

✖ Xill: CR 6; Medium outsider (extraplanar); HD 5d8+10; hp 32; Init +7; Spd 40 ft.; AC 20, touch 13, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +5; Grp +7; Atk +7 melee (1d6+2/x4, heavy pick) or +7 melee (1d4+2, claw); Full Atk +5 melee (1d6+2/x4, 1d6+1/x4, 2 heavy picks) and +5 melee (1d4+1, 2 claws); or +5 melee (1d4+2, 1d4+1, 4 claws); SA implant, improved grab, paralysis; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., planewalk, spell resistance 21; AL LE; SV Fort +6, Ref +7, Will +5; Str 15, Dex 16, Con 15, Int 12, Wis 12, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Balance +13, Climb +10, Diplomacy +2, Escape Artist +11, Intimidate +8, Listen +9, Move Silently +11, Sense Motive +8, Spot +9, Tumble +11, Use Rope +3 (+5 with bindings); Improved Initiative, MultiattackB, Multiweapon Fighting.

Implant (Ex): As a standard action, a xill can lay eggs inside a paralyzed creature. The young emerge about 90 days later, literally devouring the host from inside. A remove disease spell rids a victim of the egg, as does a DC 25 Heal check. If the check fails, the healer can try again, but each attempt (successful or not) deals 1d4 points of damage to the patient.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a xill must hit with one or more claw attacks. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. It receives a +2 bonus on the grapple check for each claw that hits. If it wins the grapple check and maintains the hold in the next round, it automatically bites the foe at that time. The bite deals no damage but injects a paralyzing venom.

Paralysis (Ex): Those bitten by a xill must succeed on a DC 14 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 1d4 hours. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Planewalk (Su): Xill cannot use planewalk in this adventure.

D89. CHUTE TRAP

For PCs searching for secret doors, or elves and other creatures who notice such things, read the following text.

Something about this empty stretch of wall is suspicious. Perhaps it is the scuff marks on the floor, or the flash of something behind it, but you are certain you spy a secret door here.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Designed to snare the snoopers, this secret door is more of a trap than a passage. PCs succeeding at a DC 25 Search check notice scuff marks on the rock surrounding the door, similar to claw marks. The stone door itself is poorly concealed, requiring a DC 15 Search check to locate. The door spins on a horizontal, central spindle, but pushes on a false vertical spindle, so pushing either side of the door causes the top to spin forward, while the bottom lifts the PC up and into the chute beyond. Opening the door is simple, requiring a DC 5 Strength check. PCs pushing on the door must succeed a DC 20 Reflex save or tumble to the other side, sliding down the chute to fall in a spectacular splash into the lava below. See lava in this region's Introduction for details.

Once in the lava, 1d6 magma mephits (13 hp each) attack the PC. The unfortunate PC can swim out of the lava to reach the lip of the chute, taking damage as if immersed each round in the lava. Climbing back up the chute requires a DC 20 Climb check.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The magma mephits attack PCs in the lava. They are nearly mindless, so they favor claw attacks over breath weapons. Each round the PC fights the mephits in the lava there is a 20% chance for 1d6 more steam and magma mephits to join the fight.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, double the number of attacking mephits. To decrease the challenge, reduce the Reflex DC to 15.

✖ Magma Mephit: CR 3; Small outsider (fire, extraplanar); HD 3d8; hp 13; Init +5; Spd 30 ft., fly 50 ft. Skills and Feats: Bluff +8, Escape Artist +7, Hide +11, Listen +6, Diplomacy +4, Disguise +2 (+4 acting), Move Silently +7, Spot +6, Use Rope +1 (+3 with bindings); Dodge, Improved Initiative.

Breath Weapon (Su): 10 ft. cone of magma, damage 1d4 fire, Reflex DC 12 half. Living creatures that fail their saves are tormented by burned skin and seared eyes unless they have immunity to fire or are otherwise protected. This effect imposes a -4 penalty to AC and a -2 penalty on attack rolls for 3 rounds. The save DC is constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Spell-like Abilities: Once per hour, a magma mephit can use shapechange to take the form of a pool of lava 3 ft. in diameter and 6 inches deep. The mephit's damage reduction improves to 20/magic when in this form. The mephit can't attack while in lava form but can use other spell-like abilities. It can move at a speed of 10 ft., but it can't run. In this form the mephit can pass through small holes or narrow openings, even mere cracks. The pool's touch ignites flammable materials such as paper, straw, or dry wood.

Once per day a magma mephit can use pyrotechnics (DC 14). It can use itself as the fire source without harm. Caster level 6th. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Fast Healing (Ex): A magma mephit heals only if it is touching magma, lava, or a flame at least as large as a torch.

✦ Steam Mephit: CR 3; Small outsider (extraplanar, fire); HD 3d8; hp 13; Init +5; Spd 30 ft., fly 50 ft. Skills and Feats: Bluff +8, Escape Artist +7, Hide +11, Listen +6, Diplomacy +4, Disguise +2 (+4 acting), Move Silently +7, Spot +6, Use Rope +1 (+3 with bindings); Dodge, Improved Initiative.

Breath Weapon (Su): 10-ft. cone of steam, damage 1d4 fire, Reflex DC 12 half. Living creatures that fail their saves are tormented by burned skin and seared eyes unless they have immunity to fire or are otherwise protected. This effect imposes a -4 penalty to AC and a -2 penalty on attack rolls for 3 rounds. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +1 racial bonus.

Spell-like Abilities: Once per hour a steam mephit can surround itself with a plume of vapor, duplicating the effect of a blur spell (caster level 3rd). Once per day it can create a rainstorm of boiling water that affects a 20-ft.-square area. Living creatures caught in the storm take 2d6 points of fire damage (Reflex DC 14 half; caster level 6th). This ability is the equivalent of a 2nd-level spell. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Fast Healing (Ex): A steam mephit heals only if it is touching boiling water or is in a hot, humid area.

D90. SOUNDER

The large tunnel descends into the earth at a sharp angle. At the end of the tunnel, a large six-wheeled wagon carrying a metal cylindrical tank mounted on an iron cradle, with connecting hoses running to another reservoir of sorts hums as a deep dwarf manipulates several levers at the rear of the machine, while another dwarf presses the narrow end of a cone to the wall. Insect men stand guard, evaluating their progress.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: A sounder crew, consisting of two deep dwarves (hp 6 each), tests the walls with harmonic resonances to see if they are any closer to the Vault. The sounder crew, if left alone, turns on the device, to a narrow beam, mid-pulse with results as described in Room D53. The deep dwarf engineers are sick with cackle fever and frequently stop their detections while they suffer bouts of coughing. Furthermore, the disease has eroded their minds, so they have a 50% chance of switching the sounder up to a high pulse. Three formian warriors stand guard, watchful for xill saboteurs.

✦ Cackle Fever—Inhaled, Fortitude DC 16, incubation period 1 day, damage 1d6 Wis.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The PCs can negotiate with the formians, as the formians count the roaming xill among their enemies and not so much outsiders. PCs succeeding a DC 25 Diplomacy check prevent combat from occurring and the formian warriors request the PCs to accompany them to their myrmarch in Room D93. If the PCs agree, one of the formian warriors leads the PCs there.

PCs interacting with the deep dwarves must succeed DC 16 Fortitude saves or catch Cackle fever.

If the PCs engage the formians in melee, they fan out to gain flanks where possible, and concentrate their attacks on the spellcasters first. The deep dwarves switch up the sounder to a high-pulse in the hopes an arc will kill a PC.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, advance the formian warriors to 8 HD. To decrease the challenge, have the formians start with a Friendly attitude.

✦ Deep Dwarf Miner, 1st-Level Warrior: CR 1/2; Medium humanoid (dwarf); HD 1d8+2; hp 6; Init +0; Spd 20 ft.; AC 10, touch 10, flat-footed 10; Base Atk +1; Grp +2; Atk +3 melee (1d4+1/x2, light hammer); Full Atk +3 melee (1d4+1/x2, light hammer); SA Dwarf traits; SQ Darkvision 90 ft., deep dwarf traits; AL LG; SV Fort +4*, Ref +0*, Will -3*; Str 13, Dex 11, Con 14, Int 10, Wis 5, Cha 6.

Possessions: Light hammer, ragged clothing.

✦ Formian Warrior: CR 3; Medium outsider (lawful, extraplanar); HD 4d8+8; hp 35, 26; Init +3; Spd 40 ft.; AC 18, touch 13, flat-footed 15; Base Atk +4; Grp +7; Atk +7 melee (2d4+3 plus poison, sting); Full Atk +7 melee (2d4+3 plus poison, sting) and +5 melee (1d6+1, 2 claws) and +5 melee (1d4+1, bite); SA Poison; SQ Hive mind, immunity to poison, petrification, and cold, resistance to electricity 10, fire 10, and sonic 10, spell resistance 18; AL LN; SV Fort +6, Ref +7, Will +5; Str 17, Dex 16, Con 14, Int 10, Wis 12, Cha 11.

Skills and Feats: Climb +10, Hide +10, Jump +14, Listen +8, Move Silently +10, (+3 following tracks), Tumble +12; Mounted Combat, Multiattack.

Hive Mind (Ex): All formians within 50 miles of their queen are in constant communication. If one is aware of a particular danger, they all are. If one in a group is not flat-footed, none of them are. No formian in a group is considered flanked unless all of them are.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 14, initial and secondary damage 1d6 Str. The save DC is Constitution-based.

D91. DIGGING DELVER

Astride the back of a huge brown cyclopean slug monster rides a derro dressed in rags. The creature reaches out with its squiggly arms and liquefies the rock it touches. The air is acrid and foul. The mounted derro shrieks with pleasure when he swats his mount with his improvised riding crop.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly/Friendly

Encounter: An insane, crazed derro (hp 16) rides atop a delver (hp 145). Made even more insane by a nasty run of cackle fever, he is perilously close to comatose. With no concern for his actions, he commands the monster beneath him to find the prize at any cost. The delver, eager to find her mate, who resides at Room D77, agrees in the hopes she can destroy as much of the region as she can. She tolerates the rider only because it serves her purpose.

If not stopped, the delver cuts a swathe across the dungeon, reaching the lava flow on the other side in 7 days.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs make their presence known to the delver and her rider, the delver stops its digging. The delver is willing to talk with the PCs, but the derro is not. After three rounds of conversation, and if the PCs seem trustworthy, the delver crushes the derro, silencing him.

The delver is interested in any information the PCs have, especially details about what Chtrax's intentions actually are. The delver does not know much, only that a myrmarch controls this section, and the formian workers spend their time constructing a massive drill. Once the PCs have finished speaking, she turns back to her digging, to find her mate.

If the PCs attack, the delver and the rider charge the PCs, intent on destroying them. The delver concentrates her attacks at the armored PCs first, while the derro uses sound burst to disrupt spellcasters.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the Initial Attitude of the delver to Unfriendly. To decrease the challenge, remove the mad derro.

✱ Mad Derro: CR 3; Small monstrous humanoid; HD 3d8+3; hp 16; Init +6; Spd 20 ft.; AC 19, touch 13, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +3; Grp -1; Atk +4 melee (1d4/19-20, short sword) or +6 ranged (1d6/19-20 plus poison, repeating light crossbow); Full Atk +4 melee (1d4/19-20, short sword) or +6 ranged (1d6/19-20 plus poison, repeating light crossbow); SA Poison use, spell-like abilities, sneak attack +1d6; SQ Madness, spell resistance 15 vulnerability to sunlight; AL CE; SV Fort +2, Ref +5, Will +6; Str 11, Dex 14, Con 13, Int 10, Wis 1*, Cha 16*.

Skills and Feats: Bluff +5, Hide +10, Listen -1, Move Silently +8; Blind-Fight, Improved Initiative.

Possessions: Studded leather armor, buckler, shortsword, black adder venom (2d4 doses), heavy repeating crossbows, 2 cases of bolts (10).

✱ Delver: CR 9; Huge aberration; HD 15d8+78; hp 145; Init +5; Spd 30 ft., burrow 10 ft.; AC 24, touch 9, flat-footed 23; Base Atk +11; Grp +27; Atk +17 melee (1d6+8 plus 2d6 acid, slam); Full Atk +17 melee (1d6+8 plus 2d6 acid, 2 slams); Space/Reach 15 ft./10 ft.; SA Corrosive slime; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., immunity to acid, stone shape, tremorsense 60 ft.; AL N; SV Fort +12, Ref +6, Will +11; Str 27, Dex 13, Con 21, Int 14, Wis 14, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Knowledge (dungeoneering) +14, Knowledge (nature) +4, Listen +20, Move Silently +17, Spot +20, Survival +14 (+16 underground); Alertness, Blind-Fight, Great Fortitude, Improved Initiative, Power Attack, Toughness.

Corrosive Slime (Ex): A delver produces a mucus-like slime that contains a highly corrosive substance. The slime is particularly effective against stone. A delver's mere touch deals 2d6 points of acid damage to organic creatures or objects. Against metallic creatures or objects, a delver's slime deals 4d8 points of damage, and against stony creatures (including earth elementals) or objects it deals 8d10 points of damage. A slam attack by a delver leaves a patch of slime that deals 2d6 points of damage on contact and another 2d6 points of damage in each of the next 2 rounds. A large quantity (at least a quart) of water or weak acid, such as vinegar, washes off the slime. An opponent's armor and clothing dissolve and become useless immediately unless the wearer succeeds on a DC 22 Reflex save. Weapons that strike a delver also dissolve immediately unless the wielder succeeds on a DC 22 Reflex save. A creature attacking a delver with natural weapons takes damage from its slime each time an attack hits unless the creature succeeds on a DC 22 Reflex save. These save DCs are Constitution-based.

Stone Shape (Ex): A delver can alter its slime to temporarily soften stone instead of dissolving it. Once every 10 minutes, a delver can soften and shape up to 25 cubic ft. of stone, as a stone shape spell (caster level 15th).

D92. THE BORE

The tunnel slants down and opens into an enormous cave, filled with the din of industrial noise. Muted stone guardians stand at attention, blankly watching the workers toil. Duergar smiths forge the plates the deep dwarf craftsmen shape into components for the large bore. Other slaves hoist the panels, and other parts to the hive of activity, where formian workers labor to assemble a great bore. The cavern echoes the sounds of beating hammers, footfalls, and the occasional shout.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Inside this half of the enormous cave, 20 formian workers (hp 5 each) assemble the bore Chtrax commissioned in secret. Ten duergar smiths (hp 9 each) and their 8 deep dwarf assistants (hp 6 each) busily melt the metal fragments turned up from the rich iron veins in Rooms D101 and D102. Two stone golems (hp 107) stand ready to attack any intruder not a derro, dwarf, or formian taking a hostile action while in this Room. Chtrax called for the bore once he lost patience with Korus', the gnome artificer, devices. The formian workers do not respond to conversation, though the duergar and deep dwarves direct PCs to Room D93. If the PCs attack the workers, the golems animate and move to engage, while the dwarves and formian workers flee Room D93.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Should the PCs fight the inhabitants of this Room the formian workers alert the myrmarch at Room D93, who in turn alerts the rest of the section to the presence of intruders. The stone giants close with the PCs, opening with their slow effect, before pummeling PCs with slam attacks. On the third round, the myrmarch and all the formian warriors from Room D93, join the combat.

Cure Serious Wounds (Sp): Eight workers together can heal a creature's wounds as though using the cure serious wounds spell (caster level 7th). This is a full-round action for all eight workers.

Hive Mind (Ex): All formians within 50 miles of their queen are in constant communication. If one is aware of a particular danger, they all are. If one in a group is not flat-footed, none of them are. No formian in a group is considered flanked unless all of them are.

Make Whole (Sp): Three workers together can repair an object as though using the make whole spell (caster level 7th). This is a fullround action for all three workers.

D93. FORMIAN HIVE

Mounds of stone and mud cover this half of the large cavern. Several insect men move among the mounds conversing, antennae twitching. In the center of these creatures stands a larger and more powerful figure who directs the smaller warriors through practice drills.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: The myrmarch (hp 102) in charge of this section resides here, drilling his troops and honing their abilities to fight against the all-too-frequent xill raids. With him are 10 formian warriors (hp 26 each) and a formian taskmaster (hp 39) with a dominated xill (hp 32). From the captive xill, the myrmarch learned the xill in this section are conspiring to replace all of the formians, using the slaves as hosts for their eggs. This has fueled this myrmarch's suspicions all is not well with the queen, and the deal between Chtrax and the formians is nothing more than a ruse. Consequently, the formian has no use for the derro and plots to use the new bore against the Hall and disrupt the entire operation.

With the arrival of the PCs, the myrmarch's plans are in jeopardy unless the PCs can convince him they fight the same fight. This requires a DC 15 Diplomacy check to improve the formian's attitude from Indifferent to Friendly. If the PCs succeed, the formian explains they served the great Hive Mother, T'chtcheralaz, until the xill master met with her some few months back. The formian myrmarches receive instruction from their leader to follow the commands of the xill as if they were her own. Now, they control the mining operations, truesilver extraction and security throughout the complex.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs enter the Room, itching for a fight, they find one. A fight with the formians here draws the attention of the stone golems in Room D92, who arrive to face the PCs on round 3. The formian taskmaster sends the xill to fight the spellcaster PCs, while it tries to dominate the warrior PCs. Meanwhile, the warriors charge into the combat, working to gain flanks where possible, and to separate the PCs from the main body, while the myrmarch employs its spell-like abilities against chaotic PCs. The myrmarch and his minions fight to the death.

If the PCs slay the myrmarch, all formians in this section take a -2 circumstance penalty to all attacks, saves and checks. In addition, they lose access to their hive mind ability.

If the PCs befriend the formians, they can rest and heal here worry-free. The myrmarch refuses to make an assault against the Great Hall until the bore is ready. The formian workers complete the bore on Day 8, far too late to stop the devils from breaking free.

Implant (Ex): As a standard action, a xill can lay eggs inside a paralyzed creature. The young emerge about 90 days later, literally devouring the host from inside. A remove disease spell rids a victim of the egg, as does a DC 25 Heal check. If the check fails, the healer can try again, but each attempt (successful or not) deals 1d4 points of damage to the patient.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a xill must hit with one or more claw attacks. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. It receives a +2 bonus on the grapple check for each claw that hits. If it wins the grapple check and maintains the hold in the next round, it automatically bites the foe at that time. The bite deals no damage but injects a paralyzing venom.

Paralysis (Ex): Those bitten by a xill must succeed on a DC 14 Fortitude save or be paralyzed for 1d4 hours. The save DC is Constitution-based.

A large insect guard stands watch here, periodically looking into the room behind it and then testing the air with its antennae.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: A formian warrior (hp 26) stands guard here, keeping an eye out for hatching xill eggs, unruly slaves or any other disturbance disrupting the integrity of this section. He redirects any questions posed to him, back to the myrmarch in Room D93.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs attack this guard, it alerts the myrmarch, if it still lives, in Room D93. Thereafter, it fights defensively, until reinforcements arrive. It fights to the death, regardless of whether reinforcements arrive.

The myrmarch sends 1d4 more formian warriors to aid the sentry. These reinforcements, if the PCs did not destroy them in Room D93, arrive in 2 rounds.

D97. SLAVE ENCAMPMENT

This large cavern rivals the one you just came from, but instead of hard working slaves, you encounter bedrolls, mostly empty lie in neat and organized rows. At one time, this room probably held some 50 or more slaves. Now, just a few dwarves recline, nursing injuries, or stealing a few hours of sleep before they return to work.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Eight diseased deep dwarf slaves (hp 4 each) rest here. All have a random disease, as determined by the DM. The dwarves are not interested in conversation, just rest. If the PCs cure a dwarf, they gain an ally for the rest of their time in this Region. Otherwise, these dwarves are no threat to the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Diseased (any) 20

The air quickly sours as you round the corner. At the end of the tunnel is a wide room filled with corpses twitching with vermin. Three odd reptilian creatures spew viscous streams of fluid onto the bodies, causing smoke to rise where the droplets fall.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: When a slave in this Section dies, the dwarves carry the corpse to this Room to be dissolved by the three digesters (hp 68). The digesters are always listening for the approach of fresh bodies, but have learned not to attack formians or dwarves.

Encounter Condition: N/A

REGION E. THE LAST STAND

Region E is a hodge-podge of Sections, each fighting for control in an uneven battle to depose the current celestial garrison of inevitables. For reasons that will become clear, this Region is divided into disparate Sections that require deeper discussion. For the most part, the following rules apply to this Region, but each Section details its own story.

ILLUMINATION

The celestials who man the garrison know darkness is the ally of evil so they filled Region E, the heart of the garrison, with magical light sources. Unless otherwise specified in the description, every Room in this Region has a continual flame lantern built into the ceiling at the center of every 10-ft. square. This provides complete and total illumination in the Rooms where the continual flame torches still function, but over time some of the magic fueling the torches failed, has been dispelled, or the lantern has been destroyed. Such abnormalities are described in the various Room descriptions.

INITIAL ATTITUDES

Initial attitudes provided in the Rooms of Region E assume that the PC party is comprised of good- (or at worst) neutrally-aligned characters and are pursuing peaceful interactions with the inhabitants. If the PCs approach the Region with hostile intent, however, all "Friendly" areas become at best "Unfriendly," and more likely "Hostile," at the DM's discretion. Use common sense when determining the initial attitude of the various Rooms under alternate conditions, bearing in mind that the inevitables in this Region are not going to welcome marauders with open arms.

WARDS AND GLYPHS

The celestial garrison was established in this section not only to act as jailers, but also to keep the primary wards of the dungeon functional. The wards are located in the northern reaches of Region E on the doors that lead to Region I. These wards, forged with the powers of gods and angels, prevent any creature with an evil alignment from crossing them heading into Region E from Region I without succeeding at a DC 40 Will save. If another creature tries to carry an evil creature across the wards, the carrying creature must make the Will save. If an evil creature wishes to make a ranged attack against a creature in Region E across a ward, it must succeed in a DC 40 Will save.

All these checks only apply if the creature is moving from Region I to Region E or attacking something in Region E from Region I. An evil creature can pass from Region E to Region I without difficulty. Neutral and good aligned creatures are not affected by the wards. The wards also prevent any incorporeal creature from traveling through the walls, doors, and floors of Region E, but this effect goes away if any of the wards fail.

These wards require constant upkeep by the celestial garrison using ward staves (see below). Each day a ward is not recharged its caster level drops by 1. Also each time an outsider of any alignment crosses the ward its caster level decreases by 1. Each reduction in caster level also reduces the Will save DC by the same amount. If the caster level reaches 0 the ward is destroyed. These lost caster levels can be restored by spending one extra hour charging the ward with a ward staff for each point restored.

Destroying the wards by other means is difficult at best. They are considered to have a caster level of 30th, a hardness of 50, and 250 hit points.

WARD STAVES

When the wards were devised at the northern end of Region E a set of eight magical staves were created to assist the members of the celestial garrison in recharging the wards. The wards were built to be of such a power that they needed to be recharged regularly by drawing on the power of the celestials making up the garrison. The ward staves focused the energies of the celestials into the wards, originally requiring each celestial to spend eight hours every few weeks charging one of the eight primary wards. Unfortunately in the chaos of the last few centuries four of the ward staves were lost in Rooms of Region E claimed by other creatures. This, combined with the diminished celestial garrison, makes keeping the wards functional, a challenging endeavor. The remaining four staves see constant use through a rotating schedule of the remaining members of the garrison, meaning four of them are always on an eight hour shift charging wards. Also the lack of four ward staves forces the garrison to alternate the four remaining staves amongst eight wards; the wards are slowly weakening and will eventually fail if the lost ward staves are not found and subsequently returned.

Currently the inevitables possess two of the ward staves while the other two are in the hands of the remainder of the celestial garrison. These items are the most highly prized treasures of the celestials and they readily sacrifice themselves to protect them. The celestials reward anyone who brings them one of the ward staves with healing, support, and equipment from their stores while the inevitables offer no reward, expecting the honor of the deed to be a sufficient one.

Using a ward staff to charge a ward requires eight hours of uninterrupted concentration. Only good or neutrally aligned outsiders and divine spell casters capable of channeling positive energy can use ward staves. A ward staff may be used to charge one ward a day without detriment to the user. If the ward staff is used to charge a second ward the staff draws power from the user, consuming one daily use of channeling positive energy or inflicts 1 negative level on the creature. Because of this drain, the garrison members charge the wards in groups to protect themselves.

Also ward staves can 'transport' the wielder twice a day. This transportation is done by warping local space instead of traveling through other planes or dimensions, bypassing the limitations on dimensional travel within the dungeon. However, it was specifically designed for the guardians of the dungeon and only celestial creatures or creatures with the ability to channel positive energy can use this ability.

After the charging is complete, the ward staff transports the user exactly back to the spot the user started from on command. This power only works within the confines of Region E.

THE ALL-DOORS

Wishing to secure certain areas against intruders, the celestial garrison created a number of Rooms with no exit throughout Region E. These walled off Rooms each contain a doorway built into one wall with no door. These hidden Rooms can only be reached through use of a magic item called the all-door which the celestials created to go along with these hidden Rooms. By warping space the all-door creates a path between itself and one of the hidden Rooms, chosen by articulating a specific command word when the door is opened. The all-door need not be attached to any means of support to function; if a command word is said within 1 ft. of the all-door, it immediately rights itself, floating a few inches off the ground and establishes a connection to the specified Room; once activated the all-door cannot be physically moved until it is opened and shut, cutting off the connection to the specified Room. The all-door does not use planar or dimensional travel to function, instead changing the properties of local space.

Both groups of celestials want the all-door due to the many supplies and other assets that are locked up behind it. The celestials reward those who bring them the door with choice equipment from the hidden storehouses and access to the hidden library, while the inevitables offer no reward other than the satisfaction of the deed. Both groups know the all-door was originally located in Room E18.

The all-door requires a standard action to activate and the user must know at least one of the all-door's command words listed below. Once activated the all-door remains active until it is shut; any number of beings may pass through. Creatures inside the hidden Rooms cannot activate the all-door from their end. Creatures cannot go straight from one hidden Room to another; they must go out through the all-door and reenter the system. An all-door only functions within the bounds of Region E.

GARRISON CHARTER

When the garrison was created a charter was written out detailing the tasks and responsibilities of the garrison, and the oaths its members took. The oaths boil down to always do what is right, defend the weak, help your brothers in arms, and never relent to evil. It also states that those who sign the charter and break its tenets are struck with vengeance should they touch the charter again.

Each member of the garrison signed the charter and in doing so they bound their spirits to the garrison. Those signatories gain a +2 bonus to Will saves as long as they serve the purpose of the garrison. Anyone who signed the charter, broke its precepts, and is brought into physical contact with the charter takes 5d6 points of holy damage with no saving throw. Anyone who has signed the garrison charter knows instantly if any evil creatures cross the wards of Region E or if any of the wards fail.

If any of the inevitables touch the charter they take damage, making perfectly clear even to themselves that they have strayed from the intended purpose of the garrison. Until all the Redeemed who do not wish to be part of the garrison are set free the inevitables take damage each time they touch the charter. This undeniable proof that they have failed the purpose of the garrison forces the inevitables to rethink their plans and heal the split between factions.

The garrison charter is a unique magic item with a caster level of 20th. It cannot be recreated. It weighs 5 lbs.

THE TRAPS

The celestials are fond of traps. In fact, they are fond of a handful of traps that they use again and again, throughout this Region. The traps always harm evil creatures, do relatively the same thing, and few if any can be bypassed.

The celestials also want evil creatures to know the traps are there. If the trap is obvious, the creatures keep to themselves and stay out of harm's way. This makes the job of patrolling and guarding the Region that much easier. DMs that tire of the same traps over and over again are welcome to change them out at will (for a trap of equal strength), but be aware of how this changes the theme of the Region. Also note, glyph of wardings do not normally reset, but many of the traps in this Region do. This is a symptom of the power of the inevitables and their wards.

Once the PCs have been stung by the same trap once or twice, give them a competence bonus (+3 to +5) to Spot them in the future.

BARGHEST TACTICS

Many Sections of Region E have barghest in them. In fact, two packs of barghests are actually at war with one another. Whenever the PCs encounter Morat's pack, chances are they are attacked on sight as Morat is an antagonistic and territorial leader. Sarraas, on the other hand, plans out her actions. She does not fight unless she has to, but also knows when a prey is weak to strike hard.

Typically when the PCs encounter the barghest they do not take goblin or wolf form. Wolf form is reserved for moving through the dungeon quietly and quickly, and goblin form is reserved for drawing members of Region B into their little war. If either leader suspects that the PCs will be more friendly toward a goblin, they have no problem assuming that form.

Neither group of barghest are stupid or willing to die for the sake of their leaders. In any instance where their life will be spared by working with the PCs, they most certainly take it. Fleeing and getting help is also an option.

FINALE

Unlike other Regions of this dungeon, Region E does not have any clear finales. Many of the factions in this Region have an agenda and how the PCs interact with the environment, determines how things play out. If they fight for the inevitables, things will turn out very different. Should they choose one barghest pack over another, or fight for the shadows instead of against them, they will undo the delicate balance of this Region and possibly the surrounding ones.

Since the distance from Region E to G is so great, it is unlikely that the celestials in Region G will even know about the events in E, unless the PCs tell them. Especially if the redeemed and/or inevitables are destroyed.

If the DM is running the World's Largest Dungeon as a full campaign, then a lot of work is required after the PCs leave this Region, to detail the aftereffects of their actions.

E1 THROUGH E5. LOST TERRITORY

Room E1 through Room E5 lay unclaimed by any faction in the dungeon, hidden behind secret doors and glyphs. None of the other factions regularly travel through these Rooms.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Roll for a Random Encounter once per hour.

1d20	Encounter
1	A howl of a dog echoes through the Section.
2	There is a cold rush of air and then a scuttling sound, like an approaching or fleeing creature. A trumpet blast echoes in the distance.
3	The charred corpse of an unidentifiable "thing" lies in the Room.
4-16	Nothing
17-18	1d4 dire rats scavenge the Room, looking for whatever they can find. They do not attack, unless provoked, and flee when reduced to 50% hit points.
19	The PCs stumble upon a trap.
	◆ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 5; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 5d8 sonic, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.
20	The PCs stumble upon a trap.
	◆ Lightning Bolt Trap: magic device; proximity trigger (alarm); automatic reset; spell effect (lightning bolt, 5th-level wizard, 5d6 electricity, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

E1. ENTRY WAY

A glyph of warding (blast) is activated whenever an evil creature touches the door.

◆ Glyph of Warding: CR 5; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 6th-level cleric, 3d8 sonic, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

The stone walls of this room are surprisingly clean cut and well maintained with only hints of moss and wear on their surfaces. A soft light from a lantern attached to the ceiling illuminates the room. The door in the north wall is a large iron door covered in a steel relief sculpture of an open eye in the middle of a flaming sun, around which is an obscure script. The room is unnaturally quiet, as if something immense waits just around the corner.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The script reads "Eternal Vigilance, Eternal Duty," the motto of the celestial garrison, in Celestial.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter change the glyph of warding trap to a blade barrier trap. To decrease the challenge, change the glyph of warding trap to a burning hands trap.

E2. TRAP HALL

Illuminated by five torches mounted in the ceiling along the length of this corridor, this hallway has no discernible exit other than the southern entrance. It is utterly clean of refuse except for a grappling hook with a short length of rope stuck in one wall. The rope is obviously cut.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The secret door on the north wall activates by pressing a stone in the center of the north wall six and a half ft. above the ground. This stone, carved with the eye in the sun symbol of the garrison is made of marble while the rest of the wall is granite. Pressing this stone opens the secret door by sliding the stone blocks aside. The door remains open for five minutes before closing.

The entirety of this Room except for the 10 ft. in front of each door is a massive pit trap that is set off whenever more than 50 lbs. of pressure are placed on the floor. Next to each door is a stone with a small circle carved in it; if this stone is pressed the trap is disarmed for 10 minutes. After the trap is set off, it resets itself 1 minute later.

At the bottom of the pit are three goblin corpses, former tomb robbers whose luck ran out. It is their grappling hook and rope above, which was cut when the trap door swung shut while they tried to climb out.

◆ Pit Trap: CR 2; mechanical, location trigger; automatic reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 40 ft. deep (4d6, fall); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the bodies are searched, the PCs find 8 sp, 12 cp, two short swords, one short bow, 14 arrows, three Small suits of studded leather, 26 ft. of frayed rope, and a potion of cure light wounds.

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add spikes to the bottom of the pit trap (increasing the fall damage by 1d4 per 10 ft.) or increase the depth to 60 ft. To reduce the challenge, make the pit trap 20 ft. deep.

E3. DIVINING ROOM

Four torches attached to the ceiling, one in each corner, illuminate this large rectangular room. At the center of the room is a reflecting pool perched on a thin, stone pedestal. The pool is cracked and can no longer be filled more than to half capacity. The walls of the room are covered in runes and symbols, several of which are marred by cracks or scratches. A number of silver candelabra lay on the floor, broken into pieces.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was previously used to focus and increase the power of divination spells cast by members of the celestial garrison. It was ransacked during the battles following the second earthquake, but due to the glyph on the door in Room E1 it has remained uninhabited. Much of the magic of the Room is gone, but there is still a faint trace of power. Any divination spells cast in this Room have their caster level increased by +2.

With a successful DC 30 Spellcraft check and six hours of work, some of the damage to this Room can be repaired. If this is done, any divination spells cast in this Room have their caster level increased by +4.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The five silver candelabras can be sold for 40 gp, but they weigh 3 lbs. each.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

E4. TEMPLE

Unlike many of the rooms in this area, this one is largely undamaged and has been left alone by the inhabitants. The room is lit by several dozen candles held in a number of large candelabra spread about the room. At the center of the western wall is an altar, above which lays a symbol of an open eye over a flaming sun. The altar is plain, made of marble with little adornment, with a pool of water on its top. The walls of the room are covered in frescoes of angels and various celestials smiting demons and similar creatures.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is warded against evil; any creature with the evil or undead creature descriptors succeed at a DC 24 Will save to enter this Room. Failure means the creature cannot enter the Room again for 10 minutes.

This Room was one of the many temples that served the needs of the members of the celestial garrison. This temple was dedicated to serve as a non-specific temple to any lawful good god. Any spells cast within this Room with the lawful or good descriptor have their caster level increased by +3.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The water on the altar is holy water and there is sufficient to fill five vials.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

E5. TEMPLE LIVING QUARTERS

This darkened room was at one time someone's living quarters, but now it lays in ruins. Two torches burn in ceiling sconces, but they are concealed by the ruins of a once magnificent four poster bed smashed into pieces, along with several pieces of oak furniture. A humanoid skeleton stands against one wall, held in place with a rotted, and rusty spear stuck through its abdomen; its once fine robes long since given way away to dust.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This Room served as living quarters for priests who attended to the temple in Room E3. The ghost of the slain priest Iridinrael (hp 41) inhabits this Room; he continues to watch the temple and the surroundings even in death. He cannot rest until all the creatures of evil who have taken up residence in Region E are removed and the garrison is strengthened. Until then he protects his area of the dungeon from any who would defile it. He is devoted to the cause of the garrison and the welfare of its members, to the point where his spirit cannot rest as long as strife threatens the unity of the garrison.

Iridinrael aids any good or neutral characters who seek to kill the evil creatures infesting Region E and help the garrison. Iridinrael is hungry for news and if he learns of the split between the inevitables and the other celestials he mends it. He suggests the PCs do so by reclaiming the garrison charter in Room E39 but he warns that to do so they must pass a number of tests of virtue.

If the PCs are evil, Iridinrael attacks them or forces them away, hoping the shadows do the job for him. He has no traffic with creatures of evil.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Iridinrael primarily uses his clerical spells in combat, and uses his manifest ability so he can interact with the material world. He does not chase opponents beyond Room E5, but pursues them unrelentingly until then. Iridinrael does not hide or act subtly; fear is one of his favored weapons.

Treasure: The skeleton wears a ring of protection +1, and a holy symbol. With a successful DC 15 Search check the PCs find a silver masterwork longsword, two vials of holy water, and two potions of cure moderate wounds.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two cleric levels to Iridinrael. To decrease the challenge, reduce Iridinrael's cleric levels by four.

A Iridinrael, Ghost, Clr 6: CR 8; Medium undead (augmented humanoid) (incorporeal); HD 6d12; hp 41; Init +1; Spd Fly 30 ft. Draining Touch (Su): A ghost that hits a living target with its incorporeal touch attack drains 1d4 points from any one ability score it selects. On each such successful attack, the ghost heals 5 points of damage to itself. Against ethereal opponents, it adds its Strength modifier to attack rolls only. Against nonethereal opponents, it adds its Dexterity modifier to attack rolls only.

Manifestation (Su): Every ghost has this ability. A ghost dwells on the Ethereal Plane and, as an ethereal creature, it cannot affect or be affected by anything in the material world. When a ghost manifests, it partly enters the Material Plane and becomes visible but incorporeal on the Material Plane. A manifested ghost can be harmed only by other incorporeal creatures, magic weapons, or spells, with a 50% chance to ignore any damage from a corporeal source. A manifested ghost can pass through solid objects at will, and its own attacks pass through armor. A manifested ghost always moves silently. A manifested ghost can strike with its touch attack or with a ghost touch weapon (see Ghostly Equipment, below). A manifested ghost remains partially on the Ethereal Plane, where it is not incorporeal. A manifested ghost can be attacked by opponents on either the Material Plane or the Ethereal Plane. The ghost's incorporeality helps protect it from foes on the Material Plane, but not from foes on the Ethereal Plane.

When a spellcasting ghost is not manifested and is on the Ethereal Plane, its spells cannot affect targets on the Material Plane, but they work normally against ethereal targets. When a spellcasting ghost manifests, its spells continue to affect ethereal targets and can affect targets on the Material Plane normally unless the spells rely on touch. A manifested ghost's touch spells don't work on nonethereal targets.

A ghost has two home planes, the Material Plane and the Ethereal Plane. It is not considered extraplanar when on either of these planes.

Rejuvenation (Su): In most cases, it's difficult to destroy a ghost through simple combat: The "destroyed" spirit will often restore itself in 2d4 days. Even the most powerful spells are usually only temporary solutions. A ghost that would otherwise be destroyed returns to its old haunts with a successful level check (1d20 + ghost's HD) against DC 16. As a rule, the only way to get rid of a ghost for sure is to determine the reason for its existence and set right whatever prevents it from resting in peace. The exact means varies with each spirit and may require a good deal of research.

Spells: (5/5/4/3; base DC 13 + spell level): 0th—detect magic, detect poison, light (2), read magic; 1st—bless, command, obscuring mist, *protection from evil, sanctuary; 2nd—consecrate, lesser restoration, *shield other, zone of truth; 3rd—daylight, *magic circle against evil, searing light.

Turn Resistance (Ex): A ghost has +4 turn resistance.

Turn Undead (Su): Any cleric, regardless of alignment, has the power to affect undead creatures by channeling the power of his faith through his holy (or unholy) symbol (see Turn or Rebuke Undead).

A good cleric (or a neutral cleric who worships a good deity) can turn or destroy undead creatures.

A cleric may attempt to turn undead a number of times per day equal to 3 + his Charisma modifier. A cleric with 5 or more ranks in Knowledge (religion) gets a +2 bonus on turning checks against undead.

Skills: Ghosts have a +8 racial bonus on Hide, Listen, Search, and Spot checks.

E6 THROUGH E34. SHADOWS

Seraxes (Room E7) and his fellow shadows control the southern region of Region E.

The shadows of Region E arrived in the dungeon under the control of a necromancer by the name of Ezrael Lostander, who investigated the dungeon shortly after the second earthquake. Ezrael had only his two apprentices and ten shadows under his control when he arrived, but as he went deeper in to the dungeon, the many creatures he slew rose to swell his ranks. When Ezrael entered Region E he quickly found his shadow minions bottlenecked by the inability to have his minions walk through the section's walls and the tests in Room E35. Ezrael managed to find the secret door in Room E2 and lead his minions deeper into Region E, drawing the attention of the celestial garrison. The majority of the garrison was still engaged with the creatures that tried to escape directly following the earthquake, but Besar the Bralani broke off and went after the shadows. He quickly engaged them and killed Ezrael after hacking down a number of shadows. The two apprentices and the remaining shadows fled, dragging their master's body with them. The two apprentices wanted to immediately return to the surface, but the lone greater shade, called Seraxes, saw an opportunity. Seraxes had been the subject of experimentation by Ezrael and was marginally smarter than the other shades, in addition to being startlingly ambitious.

Intimidating the two apprentices into following his commands, Seraxes had them use a rod of negation to remove many of the continual flames, making Region E more comfortable. The shadows then settled in, but could not progress deeper into the dungeon because they could not open the secret door in Room E2 or bypass the wards placed by the celestial garrison. Seraxes insisted on the two apprentices being kept alive in case they proved useful later, but one of them, Farggalaan escaped. Seraxes wants him back and the shadows are always on the look out for Farggalaan.

Currently there are 64 shadows under Seraxes command in addition to Seraxes himself and the surviving apprentice, Phinadar Solas (Room E12). Any creatures slain by the shadows are added to their number, causing their population to increase gradually. They cannot reach the barghests due to a number of glyphs, but they can attack the creatures in Regions A, C, and F if they so choose.

All the doors in this Section are nailed open unless otherwise noted; when they are closed the shadows cannot pass through them and the shadows cannot open them on their own due to their incorporeal nature. Prying a door loose requires a DC 18 Strength check. Any doors found closed arouse the suspicions of the shadows and attracts lots of attention.

19	Besar (Room E102) heads off to hunt shadows, shadow mastiffs, or barghests when he should be patrolling or resting. If the PCs are allies he invites them along.
20	Persal (Room E69) hunts shadows. He hails creatures he does not recognize and ascertains their reason for being in this Section. He leads the PCs to see Dubar (Room E75) or Tekarus (Room E64) if they seem useful.

E6. EZRAEL'S CRYPT

At the lightless junction of three hallways a crude throne has been erected by placing a large wooden chair taken from some other area of the dungeon atop a pile of loose rocks. The whole situation looks precarious. Sitting in the chair is an unmoving body, dressed in fading and rotten robes, a wand in one hand.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This primitive throne was constructed by Phinadar and Farggalaan on orders from Seraxes after Ezrael's death in the hopes that Ezrael would either return as undead on his own or that eventually Seraxes would find someone able to restore life to Ezrael. Seraxes keeps four shadows (hp 23, 22, 22, 20) guarding the body at all times, fearful someone will steal it.

Encounter Condition: Unhallowed 10

Tactics: The shadows attack anyone that approaches the body, though if significant resistance is encountered one of the shadows flees to tell Seraxes. The shadows remain hidden until a PC wanders too close, at which point they attack. Spotting the shadows before they strike requires a DC 18 Spot check.

Treasure: The wand in Ezrael's hands is a rod of negation (that only works once per day). Behind the throne is an +1 unholy undeadbane quarterstaff. A DC 15 Search check for Ezrael's body reveals 69 gp, 98 sp, 102 cp, a silver dagger, a wand of inflict critical wounds (2 charges), and a darkskull.

The darkskull is not present if Phinadar (Room E12) has already taken it for himself (see Room E12, Scaling).

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two shadows. To decrease the challenge, remove two.

Skills and Feats: Hide +8*, Listen +7, Search +4, Spot +7; Alertness, Dodge.

Strength Damage (Su): The touch of a shadow deals 1d6 points of Strength damage to a living foe. A creature reduced to Strength 0 by a shadow dies. This is a negative energy effect.

Create Spawn (Su): Any humanoid reduced to Strength 0 by a shadow becomes a shadow under the control of its killer within 1d4 rounds.

Skills: Shadows have a +2 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks and a +4 racial bonus on Search checks. * A shadow gains a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks in areas of shadowy illumination. In brightly lit areas, it takes a –4 penalty on Hide checks.

Skills and Feats: Diplomacy +4, Hide +15*, Listen +10, Search +7, Sense Motive +5, Spot +10; Alertness, Dodge, Mobility, Spring Attack.

Strength Damage (Su): The touch of a greater shadow deals 1d8 points of Strength damage to a living foe. A creature reduced to Strength 0 by a greater shadow dies. This is a negative energy effect.

Create Spawn (Su): Any humanoid reduced to Strength 0 by a greater shadow becomes a shadow under the control of its killer within 1d4 rounds.

Skills: Greater shadows have a +2 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks and a +4 racial bonus on Search checks. * A greater shadow gains a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks in areas of shadowy illumination. In brightly lit areas, it takes a –4 penalty on Hide checks.

E7. SERAXES' THRONE ROOM

A crudely constructed throne made of stone fragments and debris dominates the center of this large, dark room. The rest of the room is littered with desiccated corpses and rubble; clearly many creatures died here. As you enter, a soft moaning reverberates around the room and single large shadow form erupts from the throne, its eyes glowing bright red.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is used by Seraxes as a throne Room, the decorations for it constructed by Phinadar, who knows nothing of furniture making or stonework so the construction is unsteady at best. Seraxes sees himself as the ruler of this side of Region E, and he is a ruler who controls with an iron fist.

Seraxes (hp 80) attacks the PCs as soon as they enter. Seraxes wants to destroy the PCs and feast upon their bodies. But, if the PCs display significant magical power he stops his attack and brokers a deal to help him bypass the wards and secret doors stopping the continued advance of Seraxes' minions.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Desecration 4, Negative Energy, Unhallowed 6

Tactics: Seraxes considers himself much more powerful than anything in the vicinity except for the celestials. He does not flee unless he is badly injured.

E8. HIDDEN LIBRARY

Two gleaming orbs are suspended from the ceiling, bathing the entire room in a warm glow. This room is filled from ceiling to floor with books, all of which are in good condition, without dust. This room has the feeling of being untouched. It is as lonesome as a tomb.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room can only be reached by using the all-door, and its command word is "Illtherin," the name of the original head librarian of the garrison. This library contains the complete history of the garrison, its membership roles, stories of fallen members, and all the previous documents of the garrison other than the garrison charter. With a six-hour effort and a successful DC 25 Search check the PCs can learn the basics of the history of the dungeon (until the first earthquake) and of the surviving members of the garrison. All of the books are written in celestial. By spending an additional six hours researching in these books a PC can gain a +4 competence to a single Knowledge or Bardic Lore check regarding celestials or the history of the garrison.

If any of the books are removed from the library a glyph of warding above the door strikes the offending PC. It resets one minute later.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 4, Safe

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: There are 50 books in here worth 500 gp each to collectors in the outside world, but each book weighs 20 lbs. The celestials do not want any of these books removed from the library.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of the glyph of warding trap to 5d8. To decrease the challenge, change the glyph of warding trap to a burning hands trap.

E9. RUINED SMITHY

Coal strewn across the floor and a pair of overturned anvils makes the former purpose of this room obvious. Metal ingots lay in piles around the room, as does a collection of tools. A large forge and bellow dominates the northeastern corner and the device appears to be in working order. In the northwestern corner a small smelter sits. Near the forge lies a rotted skeleton in rusted armor clutching a worn warhammer; his breastplate ripped asunder and his ribs broken into countless shards.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was one of the primary smithies for the garrison, charged with keeping weapons and armor in tip top condition. It was run by a half-celestial dwarf named Fendrick Foehammer, who died defending his smithy from a group of derro that broke through after the second earthquake. The forge is in working order and it escaped most of the destruction visited on other areas of the garrison. The only thing missing to run the forge is a sufficient supply of coal.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: There are 100 iron ingots in this Room, each weighing 50 lbs. and worth 5 gp each. There are also 10 silver ingots weighing 50 lbs. and worth 250 gp each.

The hammer held by Fendrick Foehammer's corpse is a +2 warhammer known as the Foe-Smith that grants a +4 enhancement bonus to any of the wielder's Profession skills related to smithing, but the hammer's magical bonuses only take effect if the wielder has at least one rank in a Profession skill related to smithing.

E10. WARD STAFF ROOM

The door to this Room is closed and is trapped.

♦ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 5; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 5d8 sonic, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

This small room has a single feature: a raised pedestal on which a six-ft. metal staff rests. A brightly glowing orb illuminates the room from above the staff, which is covered in runes. This room seems completely untouched by the ravages that have affected the other areas of the dungeon, feeling instead pristine and peaceful.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is one of the original store Rooms for one of the ward staves. The staff on the pedestal is one of the missing ward staves that the garrison seeks to recover. The door to this Room is protected by a glyph of warding against evil creatures, as is the staff. Both glyphs of warding reset after one minute.

♦ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 5; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 5d8 fire, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

The light in the Room is a daylight spell and all creatures in the Room are under the effect of a magic circle against evil. The shadows and other denizens of the dungeon do not chase the PCs into this Room and do not enter under any circumstances.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The only treasure is the ward staff.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter change the glyph of warding trap to a blade barrier trap. To decrease the challenge, change the glyph of warding trap to a burning hands trap.

E11. QUARTERS FOR LORD HIGH MARSHAL SERENNETH

The doors on the east and west sides of the Room require a DC 30 Search check to find from outside this Room, but they are easily visible from inside Room E11. Both of these doors are triggered by pressing a discolored stone block in the wall next to the door at foot level. Once this is done the doors swing open and close.

These doors are closed when the PCs arrive.

This sparsely decorated room is much neglected, but is not damaged. The room served as living quarters for someone, since it still has a bed, desk and several comfortably designed chairs. On the walls well-executed landscape paintings hang in informal wood frames. On another wall a banner of an eye over a flaming sun hangs, while on a third wall two crossed swords are mounted. In the northeastern corner an empty armor rack stands next to an unused sword rack.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as the personal quarters of Lord High Marshal Serenneth, the original second in command of the garrison. He was slain in the battles following the first earthquake.

Encounter Condition: N/A

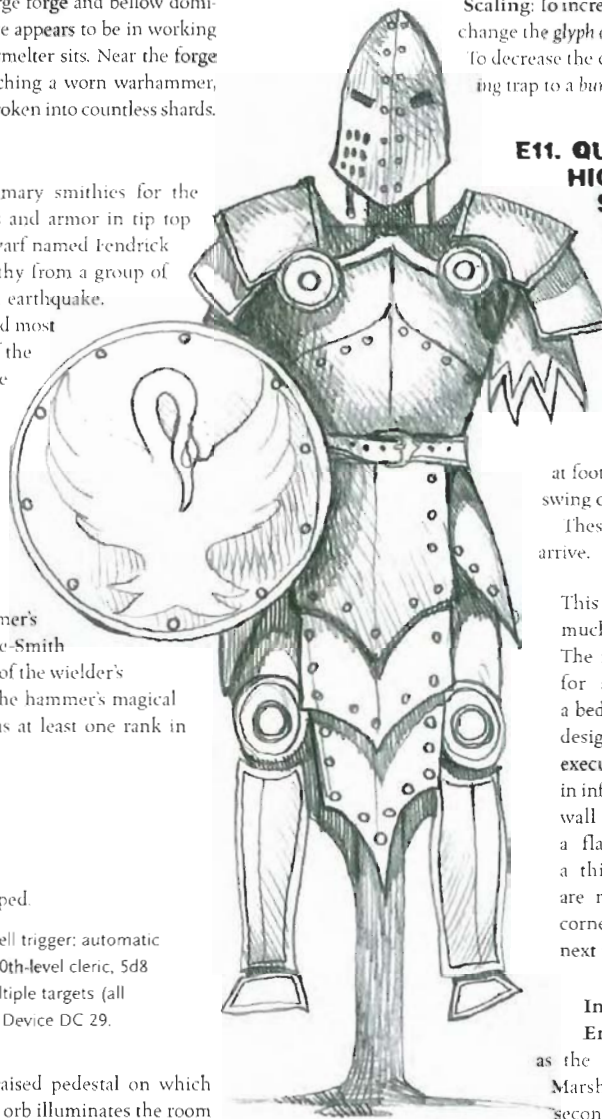

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: There are four paintings in the Room, each worth 500 gp but each weighs 20 lbs. and would be difficult to transport without damage. The two crossed swords are antiques of an ancient celestial war against an infernal invasion of this plane far in the ancient past, but the swords break if used. The swords are worth at least 400 gp to a collector who knew of their historical value.

A successful DC 25 Search check reveals a scroll of lesser restoration in the desk and two vials of holy water.

E12. PHINADAR'S QUARTERS

The door to this Room has no lock despite serving as Phinadar's prison; the shadows could not lock it if they wanted to due to their incorporeal nature.

This room is filthy. Gnawed bones are piled around and a thoroughly unkempt and ramshackle bed dominates the northeastern corner. A single torch attached to the ceiling in the northwestern corner of the room provides illumination, perched directly above a desk piled with papers. Clothes and books are tossed randomly about the floor.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Phinadar is an inhuman wizard, his race of origin unknown. He specializes in necromancy and is something of a professional toady, earning his way into Ezrael's service not by showing promise, but by licking boots. Phinadar kowtows to whomever seems the greatest threat — meaning he may help the PCs if he thinks they have a good chance of taking down Seraxes. He is willing to help them with directions, knowledge of Seraxes and his minions, and even spell-casting assistance, but he does not take part in actual combat. Phinadar wants to escape the dungeon, eventually, because he knows Seraxes will tire of him before too long. But Phinadar is too cowardly and cannot do it alone. Given the chance Phinadar steals the magical items left on Ezrael's corpse in Room E6, specifically the darkskull.

Encounter Condition: Unhallowed 3

Tactics: Phinadar avoids combat at all costs, striking only from behind or by surprise when forced into violence. He pleads and begs when threatened, hoping his wheedling gets him out of trouble. He uses his spells to escape danger or defend himself if required, delivering touch attack spells (mostly) through spectral hand. If given time Phinadar casts haste, stoneskin, and mage armor (or shield) before entering combat.

Treasure: Phinadar's spell book is in this Room, a map of Room E6 through Room E34, a gold ring in the shape of a ram's head worth 50 gp, and a silver necklace from the college of wizardry Phinadar graduated from denoting his major of necromancy worth 100 gp.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, raise Phinadar's level to be equal with the lowest party member's character level. To decrease the difficulty, give Phinadar one less spell per day per level.

E13. PHINADAR'S WORKSHOP

This well ordered room is largely occupied with oversized work tables and shelves, most of which contain a collection of scrolls, writing implements, unidentifiable powders, metal ingots, and metal working tools. A small anvil and forge are in the north eastern corner of the room. Two torches illuminate this room from the ceiling.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Phinadar uses this Room as his workshop where he toils, searching daily for a means to bypass the celestial's defenses, or at least that's what he tells Seraxes. Phinadar knows now his magic is not powerful enough to accomplish the task. Instead, he works on a means to escape the shadows, doing his best to look busy and fool Seraxes into believing he is actually making progress

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: This Room contains any common spell components for 1st through 4th level arcane spells. Scattered throughout the Room the PCs find a 100 gp pearl, 100 gp of silver dust, 30 cp, 100 gp of gold dust, 3 small silver rods worth 4 gp each, 50 gp of ruby dust, three flasks of oil, two quarts of ink, and a large glass mirror. E14. FIRST HALL OF PORTRAITS

This dark hall stretches east to west and has an open door on each end. The walls are dominated by large paintings, four on each side of the hall. The paintings have suffered damage, but are aging well. All the paintings are posed shots against an array of backgrounds. Each painting has a small informational plaque beneath it naming the subject.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The portraits in this Room commemorate the leaders and heroes of the garrison. All the paintings are ensorcelled to resist normal wear and tear and have a hardness of 10 and 50 hit points. The paintings are on canvas and can be cut from their frames, which requires inflicting 20 hit points of damage on the portraits. Unfortunately doing so disrupts the magic protecting the paintings, meaning they may very well be ruined in transport if due care is not taken.

The subjects of the eight portraits are:

- Lord High Commander Saerius Lorsehahll, Highest of the Garrison: A winged angel clad in full plate mail, greatsword in one hand and helmet in the other, he stands amongst a quiet forest of ancient trees. He was the original leader of the garrison, slain during the battles following the first earthquake.
- Xyhchichyl, Queen of the Holy Swarm: A large queen celestial formian surrounded by a host of large celestial formians in a huge cavern. These celestial formians made up a large number of the foot soldiers of the garrison.
- Lord High Marshal Serenneth: Second in command of the garrison, this aged looking angel wears a suit of sparkling adamantine chain mail and carries a matching pair of longswords. He served as the second in command of the garrison until his death after the first earthquake.
- Genda Who's Hands Break Bones: A female ghaele armed with an enormous mace, she stands on a mountain side looking out into the distance. She served as one of the garrisons most skilled warriors, but perished in the battle following the first earthquake.

- High Magus Silinear, Keeper of Secrets Arcane: An aasimar of extreme age, he sits in a large chair surrounded by piles of books. An extremely powerful wizard, he advised the leaders of the garrison in matters regarding arcane magic and helped in the design of the wards.
- Bella, the Incarnate: A human-like figure clothed in skins and carrying weapons of bone, she stands amidst a raging river, unmoved by its current. Bella was given great longevity and power by her deity and came to serve the garrison at its direction.
- Dellacks the Unseen: This painting appears to have no one in it; instead is a landscape depicting a copse of trees in the middle of a plain. With a Search check (DC 30) a PC can spot a male bralani hiding amongst the trees, clad in black leather. Dellacks served as a scout and spy amongst the garrison.
- Kasil Who's Tales Shame the Stars: An aasimar clothed in leather and colorful clothes, Kasil served as the tale teller of the garrison, keeping up spirits with stories of adventure and heroics.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: These paintings are worth at least 1,000 gp each to a collector, but each painting weighs 25 to 75 lbs. and is awkward to carry.

E15. SECOND HALL OF PORTRAITS

This, long dark hall stretches east to west and has a door on each end. The door at the far end is fire-damaged and barely stands on its hinges. The walls are dominated by large paintings, four on each side of the hall, but three of the paintings are damaged beyond recognition by flame. All the paintings are posed shots against an array of backgrounds. Each painting has a small plaque beneath it naming its subject.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The portraits in this Room commemorate the leaders and heroes of the garrison. All the paintings are enchanted to resist normal wear and tear and the surviving paintings have a hardness of 10 and 50 hit points. The paintings are on canvas and can be cut from their frames, which requires inflicting 20 hit points of damage on the portraits. Unfortunately doing so disrupts the magic protecting the paintings, meaning they may very well be ruined in transport if not well taken care of.

The subjects of the five surviving portraits are:

- Lady Sapphim, Caller of the Dawn: This painting depicts a pensive looking trumpet archon holding her trumpet gingerly in a field of long grass. She served as the garrison bugler and signaler until her death during the battles following the second earthquake.
- Demon Hunter General Maclan: A hound archon wearing splint mail and carrying a long metallic bow, Maclan was originally charged with keeping the population of the prisoners at reasonable levels.
- Kelara the Fearsome: A leonal without armor or weapons, she sits in a meditative stance in a snowy field.
- Illtherin the Keeper: A hooded angel whose features are hidden in shadow, this figure holds a large book and quill. The Keeper served as the main historian of the garrison, but was felled during the battles following the second earthquake.

- Sebardin, Tallier of the Stock: A Kolyarut Inevitable, he sits in a vast warehouse of endless crates. He served as the overall steward and quartermaster of the garrison.

E16. TRAPPED PORTRAIT HALL

This wall looks to have once been a hall of portraits, but a fire long ago consumed the paintings that once graced its walls. The walls are scorched and small piles of ashes and bone litter the floor. There is no source of light in this room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: If any creature passes more than halfway through the Room without tapping a specially colored red rock next to the door a fireball trap goes off, filling the Room with fire. The trap resets after one minute. The shadows cannot disarm this trap without Phinadar.

E17. GUARD HALL

The three doors in this T shaped room are each flanked by alcoves, each just large enough for a human to stand in comfortably. Several old, empty weapon racks line the walls and blood stains cover large areas of the floor.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room served as a guardroom to create a bottleneck in case anything attacked from Region A. After the second earthquake the sentries were killed and new ones were never assigned. Three shadows (hp 22, 21, 20) currently guard this Room, charged with stopping incursions from Region A.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The shadows lurk in the racks on the north and south walls, hiding amidst the piles of goods. They seek to surprise characters that come to inspect what's on the shelves, leaping out when the characters get within arm's reach. Spotting the shadows before they attack requires a DC 22 Spot check.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two shadows. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

Skills and Feats: Hide +8; Listen +7, Search +4, Spot +7; Alertness, Dodge.

Strength Damage (Su): The touch of a shadow deals 1d6 points of Strength damage to a living foe. A creature reduced to Strength 0 by a shadow dies. This is a negative energy effect.

Create Spawn (Su): Any humanoid reduced to Strength 0 by a shadow becomes a shadow under the control of its killer within 1d4 rounds.

Skills: Shadows have a +2 racial bonus on Listen and Spot checks and a +4 racial bonus on Search checks. * A shadow gains a +4 racial bonus on Hide checks in areas of shadowy illumination. In brightly lit areas, it takes a -4 penalty on Hide checks.

E18. DOORWAY ROOM

This small room has a door in its northern and eastern walls, but the eastern doorway leads nowhere. It is boarded up like some ancient architect's long forgotten joke. Next to the doorway to nowhere lays a wooden door bound in silver and steel, barely touched by the passage of years. The rest of this room is ransacked and littered with broken furniture, shattered weapons, and more than a few corpses, all of which are dressed in rotting armor and carrying long rusted weapons. A hard fought battle took place here. The lights in this room went out long ago.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is the home of the all-door, containing both the door and the doorway that were originally designed to store it. Many traps once guarded it, but they were set off long ago by the occasional wandering monster. They were never reset and the wards have failed ever since.

Encounter Condition: Haunted

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The Room was ransacked of everything except for the door, which past looters have not considered valuable enough to move due to its immense weight. Few realize the door's true power.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as an emergency supply Room for the garrison, accessible by the all-door. The command word to activate the all-door for this Room is Sebardin, the name of the head quartermaster of the garrison. It has been untouched since the loss of the all-door.

E20. WARD STAFF ROOM

Finding the door to this Room requires a DC 25 Search check. It is opened when any good aligned creature touches the door. The door is also protected by a glyph of warding against evil creatures.

♣ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 5; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 5d8 sonic, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

This small room has a single feature within it: a raised pedestal on which a six-ft. metal staff rests. The staff is covered in runes and it is illuminated from above by a brightly glowing orb. A single corpse wearing battered plate mail armor stands propped up against the staff, flail and shield held at the ready.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room is an original storage Room for one of the ward staves. The staff on the pedestal is one of the missing ward staves the garrison seeks to recover. A glyph of warding against evil creatures protects the staff. Both glyphs of warding reset after one minute.

♣ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 5; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 5d8 fire, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

The light is daylight and all creatures in the Room are under the effect of a magic circle against evil. The shadows and other denizens of the dungeon do not chase the PCs into this Room and do not enter under any circumstances. Evil PCs feel the presence of the circle, as well.

The body is an aasimar paladin who spent his last days keeping the ward staff safe after this Section of Region E was taken by the shadows.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: In addition to the ward staff two potions of cure moderate wounds and a +1 shield of light fortification can be found on the aasimar's body.

E21. HELL'S SWARM

Glyphs of warding have been put on both sides of the door that activate when an evil creature touches the door.

♣ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 5; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 5d8 sonic, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

When the PCs approach this door, read the following.

The door to this room is shut. Behind it you can hear an intense buzzing sound like the roar of a thousand insects or a jet engine.

Once the PCs open the door, read the following.

This room served at one point as a church, but now seconds as a hive. Inside hundreds of insects buzz about the room, attacking everything they come in contact with, including you. A single corpse rests up against the wall next to the door. The room is illuminated by multiple torches in the ceiling, but several old candles also litter the room.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room served as a church, long before the fall of the garrison. After the second earthquake, a hellwasp swarm (hp 90) was trapped with the priest who cared for the temple. Not having the power to defeat the hellwasp swarm, he trapped it with glyphs of warding, but was slain shortly thereafter. Now the swarm wants out, and the PCs opening the door has given it the opportunity.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The hellwasp swarm instantly attacks anyone who opens the door in a bid for freedom. They surround the first person to come in the door and work their way down the line until everyone is dead. If the party closes the door again the swarm animates the corpse and uses it to attack if the PCs return.

Treasure: Investigating the corpse the PCs find two spoiled vials of holy water, a silver holy symbol, and a potion of cure light wounds. There are also 100 candles in the Room.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter change the glyph of warding trap to a blade barrier trap and increase the HD of the hellwasp swarm by two. To decrease the challenge, change the glyph of warding trap to a burning hands trap and reduce the HD of the swarm by -2.

✦ Hellwasp Swarm: CR 8; Diminutive magical beast (extraplanar, evil, swarm); HD 12d10+27; hp 90; Init +10; Spd 5 ft., fly 40 ft.; AC 20, touch 20, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +12; Grp —; Atk (3d6 plus poison, swarm); Full Atk (3d6 plus poison, swarm); Space/Reach 10 ft./0 ft.; SA Distract-ion, inhabit, poison; SQ Damage reduction 10/magic, darkvision 60 ft., hive mind, immune to weapon damage, resistance to fire 10, low-light vision, swarm traits; AL LE; SV Fort +10, Ref +14, Will +7; Str 1, Dex 22, Con 14, Int 6, Wis 13, Cha 9.

Skills and Feats: Hide +19, Listen +10, Spot +10; Ability Focus (poison), Alertness, Improved Initiative, Iron Will, Toughness.

Distraction (Ex): Any living creature that begins its turn with a hellwasp swarm in its space must succeed on a DC 18 Fortitude save or be nauseated for 1 round. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Inhabit (Ex): A hellwasp swarm can enter the body of a helpless or dead creature by crawling into its mouth and other orifices. Inhabiting requires 1 minute, and the victim must be Small, Medium, or Large (although four swarms working together can inhabit a Huge creature). The swarm can abandon the body at any time, although doing this takes 1 full round. Any attack against the host deals half damage to the hellwasp swarm as well, although the swarm's resistances and immunities negate some or all of this damage.

If a hellwasp swarm inhabits a dead body, it restores animation to the creature and controls its movements, effectively transforming it into a zombie of the appropriate size for as long as the swarm remains inside. If a hellwasp swarm inhabits a living victim, it neutralizes the effects of its own poison and controls the victim's movement and actions as if using dominate monster on the victim. The hellwasps quickly consume a living victim, dealing 2d4 points of Constitution damage per hour they inhabit a body. A body reduced to Constitution 0 is dead.

A hellwasp-inhabited creature is easy to spot, since its skin crawls with the insects beneath the surface. The swarm is intelligent enough to hide beneath loose clothing or a large cloak to keep its presence from being detected. The swarm can attempt a Disguise check to conceal its inhabitation of a host, with a -4 penalty if currently inhabiting a Small host.

A remove disease or heal spell cast on an inhabited victim forces the hellwasp swarm to abandon its host.

Poison (Ex): Injury. Fortitude DC 18, initial and secondary damage 1d6 Dex. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Hive Mind (Ex): Any hellwasp swarm with at least 1 hit point per Hit Die (or 12 hit points, for a standard hellwasp swarm) forms a hive mind, giving it an Intelligence of 6. When a hellwasp swarm is reduced below this hit point threshold, it becomes mindless.

E22. ENTRY ROOM TO THE HOLY SWARM'S CHAMBERS

This small square room is remarkably different from the rest of the dungeon. The walls and floor are made out of hexagonal stones instead of square stones and the mortar is replaced with resin. A translucent substance covers the walls and floor, giving the room an organic feel. There are tables and weapon racks in this room made of bone and resin, but they are broken. On the north wall is a mural depicting an endless stream of armed and armored humanoid ants spiraling out around a huge hexagonal fortress.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The door to this Room once held a glyph of warding, but it was dispelled by Ezrael during his exploration of the dungeon. This Room served as the entry way and guardroom for the area of the garrison controlled by the Holy Swarm, a group of celestial formians that comprised the rank and file of the garrison. Unfortunately their queen was killed right after the first earthquake by an unknown assailant, driving the Holy Swarm into disarray, limiting their effectiveness in beating back the evils contained below.

Four shadows (hp 25, 22, 21, 20) guard this Room, attacking any who enter, except those they recognize.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The shadows in this Room have no Room to hide and attack the PCs immediately. If the PCs appear strong, the shadows split up and flee into the Holy Swarm living quarters, attacking the PCs using hit and fade tactics until the PCs leave or the shadows are destroyed.

Treasure: A DC 15 Search check reveals a matched set of a master-work trident and masterwork heavy shield, both made of bone and resin. If sold together they fetch double the market price.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two shadows. To decrease the challenge, remove one shadow.

E23 THROUGH 30. HOLY SWARM LIVING QUARTERS

Rooms E23 through E30 are essentially alike. Use the following description for all of them.

This small room was a barracks with hexagonal sleeping chambers stacked high on each wall. This room held at least two dozen creatures, each with little more than a few feet of private space. These sleeping quarters are built out of hard resin and chitin, warm to the touch but hard. Few of these structures are damaged, but the remaining contents of this room have been ransacked. Also numerous corpses of centaur-like armored insects can be found spread about the room, scarred with gaping battle wounds.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: These Rooms served as living quarters for the many members of the Holy Swarm assigned to the garrison. They were either slain on the front lines or in these Rooms when the battle moved into Region E itself.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: For each Room the PCs successfully search (Search check, DC 20), roll 1d20 (once) and consult the table to see what is found.

1d20	Treasure
1	1d6 gp
2	1d6 + 1 arrows
3	2d8 arrows
4	Masterwork heavy spiked shield
5	Masterwork kukri made of bone and resin
6	Masterwork suit of banded mail made of bone and chitin
7–14	Nothing
15	Potion of cure light wounds
16	Potion of lesser restoration
17	Ring of climbing
18	Silver necklace in the shape of a faceted oval (worth 75 gp)
19	Small gold covers for a celestial formian's mandibles (celestial formian formal wear) (worth 100 gp)
20	Wand of cure light wounds (3 charges)

E31. CAPTAIN OF THE HOLY SWARM'S QUARTERS

This small room appears to have been a room for a solitary occupant unlike the previous rooms, containing only one of the hexagonal sleep chambers. It also contains a desk and some normal furniture, both of which have suffered some damage. A single horse sized insectoid corpse leans against the north wall, surrounded by a circle of eight other non-insectoid corpses, one of which still rests on the insect's sword.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as the quarters for the head myrmarch of the Holy Swarm, a celestial formian known as Xychos, who was slain here after the first earthquake.

E32. QUEEN OF THE HOLY SWARM'S QUARTERS

The door to this Room is barred from the inside and requires a DC 30 Strength check to break. It has a hardness of 15 and 150 hit points. There are no Random Encounters in Room E32.

A huge rotting insectoid creature dominates this room. Once it probably appeared powerful and majestic due to its large size, but now it is simply a rotting pile of meat with strange bones protruding from it. The rest of this room has been set up to accommodate the creature complete with oversized trays, writing instruments, and pillows. Several smaller insectoid corpses are scattered about the room, but most appear to be in positions of repose rather than combat. A metal pedestal against the western wall holds a rune covered staff, looking incongruent to the rest of the room because of its more mundane design.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This was the Room of Xyhchyl, Queen of the Holy Swarm. She led the members of the Holy Swarm assigned to the garrison until her demise shortly after the first earthquake. Xyhchyl was slain after the wards went down by a member of the swarm who fell victim to the dominate monster power of a balor demon that attempted to fight its way through the garrison. The controlled celestial formian took a Nine Lives Stealer from the balor and used it to coup de grace Xyhchyl when he returned to the hive, after which he attacked the other celestial formians. The controlled celestial formian was slain, but not before the queen was slain and several of her minions as well. The Nine Lives Slayer was used up in the process, becoming a +2 longsword.

The formians who survived in this Room barricaded themselves in so they could give their queen the proper rites, after which they all committed ritual suicide so they could serve their queen in the afterlife. There are six such corpses in the Room in addition to five other celestial formians slain by violence, one of which holds the former Nine Lives Stealer.

Xyhchyl was also charged with keeping one of the ward staves safe. It remains in the Room, protected by a glyph of warding.

There is a glyph of warding set on the pedestal holding the ward staff that activates whenever an evil creature touches the staff. The glyph resets one minute after being triggered.

E33. ARMORY (SENSIL'S CORPSE)

Filled up to the ceiling with shelves, spider web encrusted armor, and rusted weapons, this room must have previously operated as an armory. Most of its stores have long ago rusted away to uselessness. Suddenly the stench of decaying flesh assaults you, drawing your eyes to an armored humanoid corpse on the floor. There are no light sources here.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The corpse is that of Sensil, a ghaele slain two months ago by the shadows while looking for more ward staves. The garrison only knows that she left and never returned, but did not have intelligence concerning the circumstances of her death and they are appreciative if the PCs bring word of it. Doj is especially thankful as Sensil was his mate. If the PCs are able to return the body, Doj owes them a debt of honor and becomes very well disposed towards them.

The body has decomposed but has not been disturbed by any inhabitants of the Region. It is obvious the corpse was not human, but identifying exactly what type of creature it is requires a DC 20 Knowledge (the planes) check.

Seraxes has stationed four shadows (hp 24, 22, 19, 15) here at the scene of his most recent triumph.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The four shadows hide amongst the armor and weapon stores until the PCs enter the Room to investigate the body or the equipment. Spotting the shadows before they attack requires a DC 22 Spot check. They surround the PCs and prevent them from fleeing.

Treasure: Sensil's body still holds her +2 holy greatsword. The rest of the Room contains the following, found with a DC 15 Search check — one suit of full plate mail, two short swords, one lance, one longbow, 45 arrows, one heavy crossbow, one spiked chain, two heavy shields, one chain shirt, and a suit of splint mail.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one shadow and increase the Spot check DC to 28. To decrease the challenge, remove one shadow.

E34. CONTAINMENT ROOM

The door to this room is made of solid steel and is covered in wards and glyphs, as is most of the interior. The walls are coated with steel, on top of which runes and etchings are engraved. As you enter the room you feel a distinct change in temperature and there is suddenly a profound silence.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This small Room served as a temporary holding ground for other planar prisoners or unexpected guests. The entire Room is under the effect of a spell to suppress magic. Creatures with magical abilities feel distinctly uncomfortable in this Room and the shadows do not willingly enter it.

E35 THROUGH E50. MORAT'S BARGHEST PACK

Morat's pack of barghests controls the central-eastern part of Region E, between the shadows, the celestials, and Sarraas barghest pack. This includes Rooms E35 through E50.

Shortly after the first earthquake a group of barghests wandered into the dungeon complex, eventually settling in a part of Region E abandoned by the celestials. The barghests found the region to be much to their liking. Rarely bothered by the celestials, they in turn caused little trouble. Realizing the celestials could wipe them out, the barghests wisely kept to themselves.

Shortly before the second earthquake a barghest named Morat ascended to lead the tribe, largely due to his natural intelligence and inborn magical skills. Morat encouraged the tribe to take a proactive role in the dungeon and to take control of some of the humanoid groups. Before Morat could put his plan in motion the second earthquake occurred, throwing the dungeon into chaos. By the time Morat and the pack recovered, the shadows and shadow mastiffs had moved in, making it difficult for the barghests to hunt.

The barghest population remained steady and Morat has become complacent. He no longer plans to take control of the humanoids, grown complacent with his easy life. He actively stops any members of his pack from attacking the Broken Axe tribe, claiming the minotaurs are too strong for the barghests to defeat without significant losses. The lack of humanoids prevented any other barghests from becoming greater barghests, ensuring Morat's place at the head of the pack. Unfortunately for him the other barghests are not as complacent; one of them, a female named Sarraas, became particularly skilled at sneaking into Regions A and B, devouring the creatures that live there. Through this practice she became a greater barghest and returned to her tribe with two radical notions.

The first was to ally with the inevitables and other creatures in Region E against the shadows, clearing the path to a readily available source of humanoids. The second idea was to organize, large scale hunting of the Broken Axe tribe, creating another, more risky, source. Being lawful, some of the barghests found the prospect of allying with the inevitables not particularly repugnant, and it certainly gave them an improved chance of removing the shadows. Also the risk of hunting the minotaurs was more palatable than a lifetime of scavenging. Morat, seeing the possibility of losing his powerful position, said the two ideas were foolhardy and forced Sarraas from the tribe, assuming the pack would remain with him instead of becoming outcasts.

Morat considers this dissension a direct insult to him and is now filled with a burning hatred of all those who left his pack, regarding them as traitors. Morat now concentrates much of his efforts on killing Sarraas, but the fact that Sarraas settled right next to the celestials forces Morat to be cautious. Also Sarraas has numbers comparable to Morat's pack with the advantage of having more of the intelligent members of the tribe as well. Morat hopes that the celestials rebuff her offer and kill Sarraas, letting the problem take care of itself.

The 35 member tribe is ruthlessly controlled by Morat and his hand picked group of personal guards, all but one of which are completely loyal. The one traitor, Mislik, secretly sabotages Morat's pack and passes information to Sarraas, but he knows his actions will be exposed eventually and he shall have to flee. Due to the many wards protecting Rooms E34 through E42 do not roll for Random Encounters in those Rooms.

E35. ROBE ROOM

There is a glyph of warding against evil creatures on the door that activates whenever an evil creature touches it. The glyph rests after one minute.

♣ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 5; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 5d8 sonic, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

Clothes and faded finery fill this room, once stored in a substantial armoire; they are now, alas, simply cast haphazardly on the floor. These are ceremonial robes that were once of great quality, but are ruined now. Above the door in the western wall a short message is scrawled in an undecipherable script.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as a storehouse for the clothes designated for the various rituals through which the garrison charter was signed or consulted, but that has not happened in centuries. The clothes are mostly silver, white, gold, red, and blue robes.

This small, stone walled room is featureless except for the doors on the east and west walls, a sword sticking out of the floor, and the symbol of an eye above a flaming sun is inscribed above the western door.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: As soon as all the characters enter the Room the eastern door slams shut and it requires a Strength check, DC 25, each round to keep it open. The sword identifies as a +2 holy longsword, but in truth this is a complex illusion that even fools identify spells. If any PC tries to remove the sword from the floor the western door becomes magically sealed; the door gains a hardness of 30 and the magical effect holding the door shut has a caster level of 20th. If the characters do not remove the sword the door functions normally.

After the PCs pass through this Room once without touching the sword the sword disappears and they can pass through without difficulty. After the test is passed the garrison symbol disappears and is replaced with celestial script reading "Temptation."

This small, stone walled room is featureless except for the doors on the east and west walls, a symbol of an eye above a flaming sun appears above the western door, and a distressed humanoid body on the floor.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: As soon as all the characters enter the Room or anyone touches the body, the eastern door slams shut and it requires a DC 25 Strength check to open. The body is that of a human male decked out in robes who is badly wounded in the chest, but amazingly the man is still moving, crawling toward the PCs. The man is in fact a specially crafted illusion; if the PCs give any sort of aid to the man within a minute of entering the Room the man fades away and the door on the western wall opens. If they refuse to aid the man or attack him, the western door is magically sealed; the door gains a hardness of 30 and the magical effect holding the door shut has a caster level of 20th. This small room contains a set of cushioned wooden chairs arrayed in a circle around a raised stone table. A crystal is held tight by the table, almost as though it grew inside the table. The crystal glows radiating thousands of pin pricks of light. There is a stout door on the northern wall bound with silver and iron bands, all of which are inscribed with glowing runes. Above the door in the north wall is a single word in a strange script.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The word written above the door (in Celestial) is "Knowledge". A DC 25 Decipher Script check reveals this. There is one chair for each member of the PC's party, including NPCs. If the PCs sit in the chairs, the crystal glows brightly and shoots a ray of light toward each PC. Evil PCs must succeed at a DC 24 Will save or suffer 1d4 negative levels. Neutral and good PCs are informed of the true purpose of the dungeon — a giant prison built to house the evil that heaven's denied death. While not torturous, the conditions of the prison were designed to remind demonic, devilic, and undead hordes of the punishment for their transgressions and to deny them the freedoms so dear to their kind. Good and neutral PCs also receive the benefit of aid and owl's wisdom (caster level 20th).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The northern door has a hardness of 30 and 300 hit points. It does not open until all the PCs sit in the chairs and interact with the crystal. After the PCs have passed through this Room once by sitting in the chairs the chairs disappear and the PCs can pass through without difficulty.

This room is illuminated by a globe attached to the ceiling that shines with wattage equivalent to that of a noontime sun. At the center of the room stands a waist level steel pillar, on which is set a scroll, aged and cracked but still in one piece.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The object on the pillar is the garrison charter, which can be removed by any PC who has entered the Room through Room E38. Other characters are struck by a glyph of warding on the pillar if they remove the garrison charter. Characters may sign the garrison charter if they pass the tests.

• Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 5; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 5d8 electricity, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

Small rugs and pillows cover the floor of this room, giving it a spartan but comfortable appearance. It has an unusual peaceful feeling, as if the conflicts of the world do not penetrate into this space. While there are torches burning in ceiling sconces, they have been dimmed with shades to cast a warm amber glow over the room. The only thing marring this serene scene is a dog-headed corpse in the middle of the floor, long ago shriveled to be little more than bones and dust.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as a place of meditation and contemplation for those who had just joined the garrison, hopefully granting them the wisdom they would need to carry out their appointed task. Unfortunately it is now disturbed by the body of one of the hound archon members of the garrison who died in this Room in the battle after the second earthquake.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: After the body is removed this Room reattunes to its proper state. Once so repaired any PC in this Room receives a +4 circumstance bonus to all Concentration and Wisdom based skill checks.

The walls of this chamber are covered with hundreds of tiny alcoves, each of which holds a small candle. On the top of each alcove is a small bit of odd little text. Of the thousands of candles only nineteen remain alight; the rest have gone out, though judging from the height some went out earlier than others. Several more unused candles sit on a small table next to the western door.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: When a new member of the garrison reached this Room they would light a candle and place it in an alcove on which their name appeared. Any person who signs the charter has an alcove with their name on it, including the PCs if they signed the garrison. Once the candle is lit and placed in an alcove it remains lit until that candle's person is slain, at which point the candle goes out. The nineteen candles that remain lit are for the surviving members of the garrison.

The northern door has a glyph of warding on it that is set off by an evil creature touching the door. The glyph resets one minute after being triggered.

◆ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 5; spell: spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 5d8 electricity, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

A thick rug covers the floor of this room, but it has been worn bare in a number of spots near the center of the room. On the eastern wall hangs a sword, while on the western wall a book sits on a small shelf. This room has an air of gravity to it, as if waiting for a solemn event to conclude.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Years ago, this Room was used often, giving ceremony to the induction of new guardians. The new member knelt in the center of the Room and was tapped with either a book or sword as their title and duties were pronounced. The applicant then rose and was considered a full member of the garrison. Now the Room houses these ceremonial items that have collected centuries of dust.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The sword is a non-magical weapon, but it was the first sword ever raised against evil. It is of immense symbolic significance, but its historic significance is greatly diminished since knowledge of the days of its use is completely lost. A PC succeeding at a DC 50 Knowledge or Bardic Knowledge check might be able to decipher its significance from the runes, but otherwise it looks like a plain longsword.

When opened, the book holds the primary religious text of whatever religion the holder follows, as long as it is not an evil religion. This book is worth 2,000 gp to a collector, but the surviving members of the garrison do not take its removal well.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, the glyph of warding trap triggers regardless of alignment. To decrease the challenge, the glyph of warding trap triggers against chaotic evil creatures only.

E44. CHAMBER OF RETURNING TO THE WORLD

This room is littered with half a dozen corpses; some human, one with wings, another with a dog head. They all bear battle injuries and tattered armor, inflicted years ago, but a few of the injuries seem far more recent. More the marks of a scavenger than a warrior, something has been chewing on these bodies. Scattered amongst the bodies are several shattered goblets, broken candelabra, and both blood and wine have stained this floor. As you survey the scene three large, blue furred wolves enter the room from a door on the northern wall and begin sniffing around the bodies.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: In the days where the garrison was fully operational this Room served as a celebratory space for new members to be roasted by their fellows. Some groups used it as a place for a rollicking good time, others carried out dignified and refined ceremonies of honor and remembrance. Unfortunately the creatures welling up from the deep had no such interests and a group of celestials fought a desperate last stand here in the hopes of preventing any of the intruders from reaching the garrison charter. They were successful, but at great cost.

The three barghests (hp 36, 34, 30) are on guard duty, charged with watching this Room for the next eight hours. They take no great joy in this task since this Room is not comfortable, but there is little chance of actual combat.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The barghests attack the PCs on sight, using their blink and dimension door power to cause confusion. The barghests continue to attack PCs, even after they are knocked down. If one of the barghests is defeated the others flee to reach Room E46 and warn Morat, who comes with reinforcements in a few minutes.

Treasure: If the PCs search the bodies they find a suit of scale mail, a silver masterwork longsword and a potion of barkskin.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, the glyph of warding trap triggers regardless of alignment. To decrease the challenge, the glyph of warding trap triggers against chaotic evil creatures only.

Feed (Su): When a barghest slays a humanoid opponent, it can feed on the corpse, devouring both flesh and life force, as a full-round action. Feeding destroys the victim's body and prevents any form of raising or resurrection that requires part of the corpse. There is a 50% chance that a wish, miracle, or true resurrection spell can restore a devoured victim to life. Check once for each destroyed creature. If the check fails, the creature cannot be brought back to life by mortal magic.

E45. LIVING QUARTERS

The door to this room has been shattered from its hinges, causing it to hang open. Inside, the furniture of this room has been chopped up and pushed to the edges of the room, clearing out an open area in the middle of the floor where blankets and tapestries are piled to form a small nest. In this pile of bedding four large, blue furred wolf creatures sit, having a quiet conversation amongst themselves.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The four barghests (hp 40, 36, 34, 28) in this Room were placed on watch duty by Morat, but watch duty on this end of Morat's territory is considered a plum assignment due the lack of hostiles coming through this way. The barghests suffer a -4 penalty to Spot and Listen checks because they are paying more attention to their discussion of possible mates than guard duty.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4

Tactics: If the PCs attract the attention of the barghests and do not immediately surrender they are attacked by all the barghests. If any of the PCs are knocked down the barghests attack him in unison. The barghests flee if two of them are slain, running to Room E46 to warn Morat. It takes at least 6 rounds for Morat to arrive and twelve rounds for the rest of the pack, which arrives at a rate of four barghests every six rounds until twenty four barghests have arrived.

Treasure: One of the pieces of cloth the barghest lays on is actually a cloak of elvenkind, but finding it requires a DC 25 Search check. However, the barghest stench requires the wearer to make a DC 14 Fortitude save to avoid becoming nauseated for 1d4 rounds each time it is put on.

E46. HIDDEN ROBE ROOM

From its appearance this room has not been in use for some time. It is essentially a giant closet, filled with unusual costumes. Its surfaces are free of dust. Its walls lined with hooks, from each of which hangs a robe, cloak, or tunic bearing the crest of an eye in front of a flaming sun, some with added symbols like a pair of crossed swords or a hexagonal gold field. Some of the clothes are ceremonial in nature, while others seem strictly utilitarian.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Hidden behind the all-door, this Room served as an emergency stash for important types of clothing used by the garrison, such as uniforms, ceremonial robes, or disguises for traveling in the mortal world. This place has been unattended to for quite some time and the remaining celestials do not take well to the PCs removing outfits from it. The command word for connecting the all-door to this Room is "Kasil."

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: All of the outfits in this Room are ensorcelled to constantly clean and repair themselves. Some of them have more powerful magic upon them and none are labeled, but the celestials can identify most of them if asked. On a DC 25 Search check the PCs find a cloak of resistance +1, boots of elvenkind, and a vest of escape.

E47. MORAT'S ROOM

This room's floor is covered with a layer of pillows, rugs, and sheets that at one point were of fine silk, but now are smudged with dirt and dog fur. The ceiling torches are covered over with wooden boxes and the room is instead illuminated by candles, giving the room a small, cozy feel. The three blue wolf creatures in the room diminish this feeling greatly especially since one of them is as large as a horse.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Morat (hp 89) calls this Room home and decorates it with the finest materials the pack has found. If the alarm has been sounded by other members of the pack Morat is elsewhere, rousing the defense of the pack and finding strength in numbers.

If Morat is particularly impressed with the PCs' abilities he may strike a deal with them, such as hiring them to kill Sarraas (Room E57).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Morat holds off on attacking the first round, using his spell-like abilities first. He first uses crushing despair on the PCs, and if given a chance he also uses rage and mass bull's strength. If Morat hears the PCs coming he uses these abilities before they arrive. Morat uses invisibility sphere to escape if he is in danger of dying.

Treasure: A DC 19 Search check turns up a +1 greataxe and a potion of cure moderate wounds.

E48. MORAT'S GUARD'S ROOM

Scattered and torn mattresses litter the floor of this room, covered by a selection of torn tapestries and rugs. This mess is concentrated at a T intersection of three halls, but the trash stretches for several yards down each hall. In one corner a pile of badly cleaned skulls are visible, all of which are obviously humanoid. Four blue furred, wolverine creatures roam about the room restlessly, snapping at each other.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: These four barghests (hp 42, 38, 36, 33) are Morat's personal guard and some of his most loyal supporters. They have a privileged position in the pack. When Morat is in his Room they can be found here; when Morat is out they are normally with him. These barghests attack anyone who enters their Room with complete abandon.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: These barghests simply charge attackers, working in pairs to concentrate their attacks before moving on to the next target. They are used to working together and flank enemies whenever possible. If any of them are defeated one flees to tell Morat and collect the rest of the pack while the rest of the group stays to fight. It takes at least six rounds for Morat to arrive and twelve rounds for the rest of the pack, which arrives at a rate of four barghests every six rounds until twenty four barghests have arrived.

E49. PRACTICE HALL

Looking into this room is like looking into the world above; the entire room is a primeval forest. The stone floor is replaced with an earthen mat, and trees stretch out as far as the eye can see. The only hints as to your true location are two doors in the northern and southern walls of this room.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room was previously used for rest and relaxation and for occasional war games between members of the garrison. Now it serves as one of the main locations of Morat's pack. The arboreal appearance of the Room is an illusion with a caster level of 20th.

The five barghests (hp 33) are asleep if the alarm has not been raised by other members of the pack. Unless the PCs make significant noise the barghests remain asleep.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If awakened the barghests are groggy for three rounds, suffering a -2 penalty to attacks and saving throws, but after that they fight with all their strength. One of them immediately flees to Room E47 to warn Morat and his guard if the path is not blocked. It takes at least 8 rounds for Morat to arrive with his guard and twelve rounds for the rest of the pack, which arrives at a rate of four barghests every six rounds until twenty barghests have arrived.

E50. MEETING HALL

Long stone tables running east west take up much of the space in this room, along with three smaller circular stone tables against each of the northern and southern walls. Along each of the tables are jumbles of wooden benches, some of which have been hacked to pieces and burned in the eastern edge of the room. At the eastern end of the room there is a small raised pedestal, on which there is a podium and three stone chairs, one of which holds a rotting corpse. The door on the western wall is boarded and barricaded with piles of stone and wood. Four blue-furred wolf creatures dig through the rubble.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Originally this Room served as a meeting place for members of the garrison, but now it serves as living space for Morat's pack. The corpse in the chair is a bralani corpse they propped up as a joke that has been long ago stripped of anything of value. They have barricaded the western door to prevent any curious celestials from investigating their activities.

There are four barghests (hp 35, 33, 32) assigned to guard this Room. Sarraa's spy in Morat's pack, Mislik (hp 30), is stationed here. The other guards attack the PCs on sight, but Mislik stays in the background until the guards are dispatched and then approaches the PCs about working with Sarraa against Morat. Mislik tries to set up a meeting between Sarraa and the PCs, offering the pack's assistance while they are in the dungeon. If Mislik accompanies the PCs through Sarraa's territory the initial attitude of all the barghests in that area changes to friendly.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Unless the PCs try to negotiate, the barghests attack the PCs on sight. Mislik hangs back and avoids combat.

E51 THROUGH E60. SARRAAS' PACK

Sarraas' pack of barghests controls the northeastern region of Region E, north of Morat's barghest pack and east of the Inevitable garrison. This includes Rooms E51 through E60.

The renegade pack of barghests is led by Sarraas in the hopes of making an alliance with the celestials against the shadows and Morat, and to hunt the minotaurs of the Broken Axe tribe (Region E). Such a "coup" would surely make her appear a more effective leader than Morat and other barghests will flock to her banner. Also she hopes that by feasting on minotaurs she can advance her followers to greater barghests, increasing her power base. While she is likely to lose some of her pack in doing so, Sarraas feels this is an acceptable trade.

Sarraas is more intelligent, cunning, and open-minded than Morat, but she is still thoroughly self-interested and malicious. She keeps deals she makes, but she makes little effort to live up to the letter of such agreements. Sarraas is willing to make alliances with anyone she can trust to meet her goals, including the PCs. Sarraas has commanded her followers to bring outsiders to her before killing them so she may see if they might be useful in her schemes. Because of this it is likely the PCs can speak with her, but her minions are also likely to use violence to subdue the PCs (if necessary), making the initial meetings rocky. Sarraas is currently on the look out for someone to speak to the celestials for her. Sarraas sees their efforts with the Redeemed as a good that they are willing to work with evil creatures for what they see as the greater good.

Sarraas has 21 members in her pack, comprising most of the forward thinking and clever members of the barghest population in this section. While her pack does not rival Morat's for sheer numbers, its members are more cunning and adaptable. Through attacks on the Broken axe tribe Sarraas' second in command, Menerr, has recently become a greater barghest, greatly boosting the pack's strength.

E51. HIDDEN STORE ROOM

Broken glass crunches under foot as you step into this room. While the shelves of this room hold glass containers of various colored liquids, a number of these containers are broken. Amidst the broken glass and multi-hued liquids sit two corpses, one of a humanoid twice the size of a man wearing the remains of bright, loose fitting clothes carrying a scimitar while the other is a female humanoid with a bundle of snakes for hair. Both have been dead for quite some time, the large humanoid's scimitar sticking through the other's abdomen.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as a repository of potions and miscellaneous magical supplies for the garrison, but it has been unused for some time. Unfortunately the last visitors to the Room were a medusa who tried to steal supplies from the Room and the djinn who tracked her down. Unfortunately the two killed each other and in the process destroyed some of the stores.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If any of the potions are carried from this Room by a creature who is not a member of the garrison the potion becomes a poison potion as soon as it crosses the threshold of the all-door. The command word to set the all-door for this Room is "Silnear."

Treasure: There are a great many potions in here, all of which are labeled in celestial. There are five potions of cure light wounds, three potions of endure elements, one potion of jump, two potions of mage armor, four oils of magic weapon, four potions of protection from evil, six potions of remove fear, three potions of shield of faith +2, three oils of bless weapon, two potions of aid, one potion of bear's endurance, one potion of bull's strength, two potions of cat's grace, two potions of cure moderate wounds, one potion of delay poison, one potion of eagle's splendor, one potion of owl's wisdom, two potions of lesser restoration, and one potion of remove paralysis.

EL: N/A

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the glyph of warding trap to a burning hands trap. To decrease the challenge, change the glyph of warding trap to a blade barrier trap.

E52. GUARDROOM

If the PCs enter from the south read the following.

Around the door to this room a sizeable barricade was erected using several old bed frames and shelves. Numerous slits and holes were left through which now jut arrowheads and the occasional eye. From behind the barricade comes a rough, growl, "Who trespasses in the territory of Sarraas?"

If the PCs enter from any other direction read the following.

The southern door to this room is barricaded with a small semi-circle of overturned beds and shelved, behind which crouch four small, goblin-like humanoids armed with shortbows. The rest of the room is filled with shelves holding arrows, weapons, and unlabeled bottles.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The four barghests (hp 35, 33, 33, 32) assigned to guard this Room constructed a makeshift barricade from which they pelt attackers with arrows. This gives them a strong sense of security and makes them bold. The barghests parlay with the PCs for a few rounds before attacking, assuming the PCs have something interesting to say. The barghests play the part of being dumb goblins if they think it gives them an advantage over the PCs.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The barricade is constructed to only allow access to one five ft. square just inside the door, meaning the PCs have to enter in small numbers. While behind the barricade the barghests gain cover and attack through the holes with their shortbows, which does not provoke an attack of opportunity due to the barricade. If the barghests are pressed one of them throws alchemist's fire over the top of the barricade so it rains down on the PCs. If the barricade catches fire the barghests have several buckets of water ready.

The barricade has a hardness of 5 and 60 hit points. It is ten ft. high and can be climbed with a climb check, DC 15, but this grants an attack of opportunity to the barghests, which use their claws for this attack.

Treasure: On the shelves of this Room are five shortbows, 256 arrows, 5 vials of alchemist's fire, and a potion of cure moderate wounds.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one barghest. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—blink, levitate, misdirection (DC 14), rage (DC 15); 1/day—charm monster (DC 16), crushing despair (DC 16), dimension door. Caster level equals the barghest's HD. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Feed (Su): When a barghest slays a humanoid opponent, it feeds on the corpse, devouring both flesh and life force, as a full-round action. Feeding destroys the victim's body and prevents any form of raising or resurrection that requires part of the corpse. There is a 50% chance that a wish, miracle, or true resurrection spell can restore a devoured victim to life. Check once for each destroyed creature. If the check fails, the creature cannot be brought back to life by mortal magic.

A barghest advances in HD by consuming corpses in this fashion. For every three suitable corpses a barghest devours, it gains 1 Hit Die, and its Strength, Constitution, and natural armor increase by +1. Its attack bonus and saves improve as normal for an outsider of its HD, and it gains skill points, feats, and ability score improvements normally.

The barghest only advances by consuming the corpses of creatures whose HD or levels are equal to or greater than its current total. A barghest that reaches 9 HD through feeding immediately becomes a greater barghest.

Change Shape (Su): A barghest can assume the shape of a goblin or a wolf as a standard action. In goblin form, a barghest cannot use its natural weapons but can wield weapons and wear armor. In wolf form, a barghest loses its claw attacks but retains its bite attack.

Pass Without Trace (Ex): A barghest in wolf form can use pass without trace (as the spell) as a free action.

Skills: * A barghest in wolf form gains a +4 circumstance bonus on Hide checks.

Possessions: Shortbow, 30 arrows, quiver.

E53. PIT GUARDROOM

Except for a ledge in front of each door the entire floor of this Room is a pit trap triggered by the lever. The trap resets when the lever is switched back to its original position.

✦ Well-Camouflaged Pit Trap: CR 7; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; DC 25 Reflex save avoids; 70 ft. deep (7d6, fall); multiple targets (entire room except for the five foot squares in front of each door); Search DC 27; Disable Device DC 18.

Bereft of dust and debris, this room received an unusual level of care by someone. There is no furniture in the room, only two small goblin-like humanoids standing next to the door on the western wall, one of which holds an iron lever built directly into the wall.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: There are two barghests (hp 33) charged with guarding this Room who rely on the trap to kill anyone who enters. They flip it gleefully when the time comes. They are not keen on talking, but rather prefer to flip the switch first and ask questions later.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The barghests lure the PCs onto the trapped area, at which point one throws the switch while the other uses crushing despair on the PCs. Any PCs who remain on the ledges are peppered with arrows or attacked in barghest form, as the situation demands.

Treasure: There are several other bodies at the bottom of the pit trap, including a minotaur corpse wearing a silver chain worth 20 gp.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter add one barghest or increase the damage of the trap to 10d6. To decrease the challenge, remove one barghest or lower the damage of the trap to 4d6.

E54. WARD STAFF ALCOVE

Little more than a small hallway off the side of a larger hallway, a brightly glowing sphere attached to the ceiling illuminates this alcove. Below the sphere is a metal pedestal covered in ruins that would normally hold a staff. On the floor next to the pedestal a staff sits on the floor along with rocks and arrows.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This small alcove is one of the storage points for the ward staves. The alcove is illuminated by a daylight spell and protected by a magic circle against evil and four glyphs of warding, one on each wall, the ceiling, and the floor. All the glyphs activate if an evil creature moves past them.

Each glyph is positioned just before the pedestal, set to activate if any evil creature passes them. There is another glyph on the pedestal itself that activates if an evil creature touches the staff within 5 ft. of the pedestal. On the pedestal.

• Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 5; spell; spell trigger; automatic reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 5d8 fire, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 29; Disable Device DC 29.

The barghests cannot reach the ward staff without taking damage, but they do make a sport of throwing things at the staff to knock it off the pedestal. Now the barghests simply ignore the staff, their curiosity squelched by the numerous glyphs blocking the way.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A ward staff.

EL: 11

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, change the glyph of warding traps to blade barrier traps. To decrease the challenge, change the glyph of warding traps to burning hands traps.

E55. LIVING QUARTERS

Several blankets and rugs are piled together in the center of this room, while the remaining pieces of furniture, mostly shelves, are pushed up against the walls. In the center of the rugs and blankets lay five sleeping blue-furred wolf creatures.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is one of the main sleeping areas for Sarraas' pack of five barghests (hp 35, 34, 33, 32, 32). It is usually filled with those not currently on watch.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If roused, the barghests fight furiously (as rage), except for one who flees to Room E55 to warn Menerr and Sarraas, who come to aid in the fight eight rounds later. They only use their spell-like abilities as a last resort.

Treasure: A DC 18 Search check reveals a heavy pick, a dwarven waraxe, a heavy shield, and a diamond worth 50 gp.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two barghests. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

E56. MENERR'S QUARTERS

Weapons, bits of armor, and cast off clothing lay scattered around this room, most of which are stained with blood. A single mattress lays on the floor with a pile of sheets and a pillow beside it.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is the room of Menerr, Sarraas' right hand man. He has a preference for moving around in his goblinoid form and explores other areas of the dungeon under that guise. Menerr is usually only found here for a few hours each day.

If Menerr is found here, he is asleep and only wakes up if the PCs make noise. Once awakened he attacks any unfamiliar creatures and flees when he is reduced to half hit points. He flees to Room E57, warning Sarraas, and then the two fight the PCs together, waiting for them in Room E57. Despite his favor for his goblinoid form, Menerr fights in his barghest form.

If the PCs calm Menerr, he stops attacking and listens to them. If they talk about making an alliance and appear trustworthy he leads them to Sarraas in the next room. If the PCs have already caused trouble for the pack Menerr stops his attacks, and considers them enemies.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A successful DC 20 Search check reveals a suit of studded leather armor, a Small suit of padded armor, a Small chain shirt, a Small suit of banded mail, a Small shortsword, a light shield, a shortbow, 13 arrows, 5 sp, and a tindertwig.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

E57. SARRAAS' QUARTERS

Everything in this room is oversized. The chairs are extra stuffed and reinforced, the table is a dastardly oak affair, and the bed of blankets and pillows on the floor are big enough to hold a horse. On the table are several scrolls and books, along with an ink and quill. Books line the two bookshelves in the room, but most of them are badly battered and worn. At the center of the room next to the table stand a small goblinoid and a huge beast of a wolf, covered in blue fur.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Sarraas (hp 84) and Menerr (hp 78) are going over plans to contact the celestials when the PCs interrupt. While they do not appreciate the intrusion, they do not react violently. Sarraas is looking for allies, and the PCs may fit that bill.

Encounter Condition: Cover

Tactics: If the PCs leave the Room, Sarraas engages them with a proposition. However, if the PCs attack, Sarraas fights back and Menerr goes for help, running around the long way through Room E57. Sarraas flees using invisibility sphere if hard pressed. She then gathers reinforcements, using mass bull's strength and mass enlarge on her followers, going after the PCs in force.

Treasure: A DC 20 Search check reveals a masterwork rapier, a silver warhammer, and a suit of Small masterwork banded mail.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two barghests. To decrease the challenge, remove Menerr.

Pass Without Trace (Ex): A greater barghest in wolf form uses pass without trace (as the spell) as a free action.

Skills: * A greater barghest in wolf form gains a +4 circumstance bonus on Hide checks.

E58. TRAP HALL

This long hallway is conspicuously empty. There is no furniture to speak of and only a few scorch marks on the wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as a first line of defense if the wards ever failed.

There are two traps in this Room, both of which are disarmed by taping a small red stone built into the doorway near the level of the door handle. Doing so disarms both traps. If the traps are not disarmed before a PC steps into the north-south hallway a lightning bolt trap triggers, covering the entirety of the north-south hallway. The following round the Room's floor gives way to a pit trap.

E59. DEFENSIVE POINT

The entire floor of this room is caked and covered with stains, as if a great many creatures were slain in this room. The stains even reach up the walls, as if the blood was knee deep. Bits of bone and rotting flesh can also be found in some spots, as can a handful of broken weapons.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: After the earthquakes, many battles took place here. Now it sees little use. Just beyond the northern door lay wards that keep the evils locked up below. There was no easy escape from this Room when the fighting started so all of its defenders were slain.

E60. BARGHEST COMMON ROOM

At the center of this room are two large, circular stone tables. The floor around each table is littered with bones, most of which appear to have been gnawed on. Around the stone tables a number of wooden tables and benches are haphazardly arranged. Amongst the tables stalk a pair of blue-furred wolves.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The barghests (hp 34, 33) assigned to guard this Room, do so out of territorial necessity. They protect this Room to the death, unwilling to parlay.

Encounter Condition: Ambush; Concealment or Cover

Tactics: They have no easy route to seek help through so they fight on their own. One of the barghests uses crushing despair on the PCs while the other uses rage on himself and his comrade during the first round of combat.

Treasure: N/A

E61 THROUGH E84. INEVITABLE GARRISON

Some inevitables have fractured from the remainder of the garrison, claiming Rooms E61 through E84. The inevitables and the Redeemed control the central and eastern portions while the rest of the celestials control the western part. The entirety of the inevitables' efforts is directed towards keeping the evils from Regions F, I, and M from escaping and they pay little attention to the creatures that have infiltrated Regions A, B, and C. They are unaware of the conditions in Regions D, J, K, and L and unable to help Region G. Instead they concentrate on keeping the wards charged with their remaining wand staves. Also most of the inevitables do not expend energy hunting down the creatures that have taken up residence nearby, thinking these creatures too weak to really concern them. This strategy cost the lives of a few inevitables who wandered the tunnels alone, so some of the other celestials are beginning to consider removing these threats.

Initially the celestial garrison numbered in the hundreds and the majority of this Region and several neighboring Regions were made up of quarters to house these troops. Over the millennia the garrison has been whittled down to nineteen members who occupy a small region in the northern half of Region E. The inevitables pay lip service to following the orders of Kelara, but usually do as they please due. The inevitables stand an unfailing watch over the wards, so the other celestials are limited in their criticism, but as time has gone by the inevitables have become more and more focused on keeping the wards intact at the expense of all other considerations. This includes creatures coming from the surface and the morality of the creatures the inevitables ally with. The inevitables continue their chosen course oblivious to the displeasure of the other celestials, mystified when anyone speaks against their strategies. The other celestials now believe they may come to blows with their brethren if things continue in this fashion for another few centuries, for they fear the inevitables will accept a wider and wider variety of beings as allies, even if those beings were what the prison was built to contain. Normally inevitables are called home every few centuries to update their programming, but those in the dungeon have never been recalled. They behave erratically, leading Kelara to fear they may have to be put down violently some time in the future if nothing can be done to help them.

The largest bone of contention between the inevitables and the other celestials are the Redeemed. The inevitables have recruited a few of the more "morally compatible" inhabitants of the dungeon in the hopes of reforming them and creating a new garrison force for the dungeons. The Leonals and Bralani think this is an awful idea and the Bralani have done everything short of sabotage to stop the inevitables plan. Despite this disagreement the inevitables now have a handful of lawful and neutral creatures working in a group they call the Redeemed. The inevitables see no goals as being above their duty to guard the wards of the dungeon. If given the chance, the inevitables impress others into their service against their will, including good aligned creatures they stumble across. They are flabbergasted that anyone would refuse the honor and call of duty their watchfulness entails.

The members of the garrison and the Redeemed tend to move around a lot between going on patrols and recharging wards so some of the Rooms list a percentage chance of finding the inhabitants of that Room at home.

SURVIVING INEVITABLES

Dorsam, Bringer of Law to Chaos. Although as zealous as the other Zelekhut in pursuing those who escape justice, Dorsam is concerned with educating those transgressors about what they did wrong. He is one of the main proponents of the Redeemed and spends all of his time with them. Dorsam defends the Redeemed with his life, refusing to let them come to any harm no matter what their deeds, convinced they can be turned to good.

Dubar, Master of Submission. Charged with enforcing agreements of fealty or surrender, Dubar was assigned to the garrison to help any agents of evil who surrendered or decided to walk the path of redemption. Unfortunately none of the prisoners ever made this choice willingly, so Dubar eventually made the choice for them, forming the Redeemed. He is the Inevitable who is going the furthest from his original programming, slipping into the methodology of the ends justifying the means.

Fastur the Ending, Astol the Last, and Toras Who Seeks Without Ceasing. These three Marut inevitables were created together and think of themselves as siblings, though such a concept is tough to apply to constructs. They were assigned to the dungeon to stop any of the prisoners from extending their lives beyond a reasonable length, but the casualties the garrison suffered and the damage the wards suffered has the efforts of the marut strained. Now they simply take their turns standing watch with the other celestials, their true purpose going unfulfilled.

Morsaq, Slayer of Falsehood. While Morsaq hunts those who escape justice like all Zelekhut, he prefers to hunt liars. He has an uncanny knack for detecting falsehood and views everyone with suspicion, even other garrison members. He is paranoid, but generally does not act on his paranoia unless given cause. Of the Zelekhuts he is possibly the most balanced because he can fulfill his programming, despite his paranoid tendencies. He is not likely to trust the PCs under any circumstances unless he's known them for at least six months with no sign of treachery.

Persal, Slayer of the Unliving. While no maruts like undead, Persal spends more time hunting them than the other marut in the garrison. He actively hunts the shadows in the southern reaches of Region E, usually doing so alone when he is not on watch. Of the inevitables he maintains the strongest set of ideals and spends much of his time with the other celestials instead of the inevitables, finding their mindset more agreeable.

Presin, Adjudicator to the Host. Master of laws and legal history in the garrison, he helps Tekarus settle disputes amongst the members of the garrison. Presin is more a scholar than a warrior and of all the inevitables is the most anxious to leave the dungeon. While his sense of duty keeps him here, he has no interest in a glorious death surrounded by the corpses of his enemies. Presin carries one of the ward staves when it is not in use.

Senar, Keeper of the List. Historian of the garrison, Senar keeps the list of all those who have fallen in the line of duty. He spends much of his time recording every minute detail of the garrison's daily life. Senar is overly upbeat and tries hard to convince everyone that the daily grind of keeping the garrison's records is really interesting; he longs for the days of recording great battles and the deeds of heroes, not how many hours each member of the garrison spends charging wards. Of the surviving celestials he is most interested in finding the all-door so the Hidden Library may be reached.

Smeras, Follower of Those Who Flee. Leader of the Zelekhut, Smeras tasked with hunting down creatures who somehow over come the wards. This happens every few centuries, but not nearly often enough for Smeras' tastes. Smeras feels that the rest of the garrison does not appreciate his skills and is constantly looking for a way to prove his abilities.

Tekarus, Watcher of Bargains. Tekarus is an inevitable charged with seeing bargains are kept and contracts carried out, specifically in terms of political arrangements or trade agreements. In the garrison he serves as an intermediary between factions and adjudicator, but now he has few means to answer his calling. He has tried reaching out to the non-evil inhabitants of the dungeon in the hopes of serving in the same capacity for others, but has thus far been unsuccessful. Despite this he is the default leader of the inevitables, a responsibility he carries out without excitement or interest. Tekarus normally carries one of the ward staves when it is not in use.

Wetoq, Keeper of Stores. Well-liked but not respected, Wetoq was originally assigned to the garrison to serve as the assistant quartermaster for the garrison, helping the quartermaster dole out supplies as needed. Unfortunately the quartermaster was slain during the first earthquake, leaving Wetoq in charge. Wetoq over time has become more and more stingy, growing reluctant to give supplies, even in life or death situations.

THE REDEEMED

The Redeemed are the makeshift band of creatures the inevitables have recruited in an attempt to bolster their numbers and hopefully reform a few of the inhabitants of the dungeon. On the whole the creatures in the Redeemed were recruited by force and do not want to have anything to do with the celestials. Most escape given the chance, but they are also terrified of the celestials and usually do as ordered, as long as the celestials are around. Except for Ackersan the Redeemed don't care about the evils locked up below, ultimately seeing it as someone else's problem.

Morigssen recently found the secret door into Room E61 and uses the Rooms in that area as secret meeting places and storage for items they do not want the inevitables to know about. Using these Rooms as a staging ground Morigssen is considering contacting the various factions of Region E and forging an alliance against the celestial garrison that has the power to wipe it out. Morigssen hopes to use the confusion created in such a conflict to rob the celestials of everything of value and escape the dungeon. When the PCs arrive at Region E Morigssen is preparing his first overture to Morat and Sarraas' packs, unaware of the enmity between them.

The inevitables do not allow the Redeemed weapons and armor when they are not being directly supervised, except for Ackersan who is allowed to carry his weapons and armor. When the Redeemed go on patrol they are issued weapons by the inevitable leading the patrol, but the weapons are taken back after the patrol. This usually involves thoroughly searching the Redeemed because of multiple attempts by Morigssen to sneak weapons back to his Room. Acquiring a source of weaponry has been one of Morigssen's main concerns, and he has found it in the armory in E61.

Ackersan Redsword. Ackersan is the leader of the Redeemed according to the celestials, but in truth Morigssen Skullbreaker has more influence over the group. Ackersan is a disciplined, skilled soldier but he has the leadership of a head of lettuce.

Croo. Dumb even for an ogre, Croo likes being a Redeemed. He is clueless where the idea of reform is concerned; he just enjoys the attention. He follows the orders of the celestials but uses any means available to carry out those orders, regardless of the moral implications of those actions. Croo usually uses the most violent means he can come up with to solve problems. He gets confused when the celestials punish him for such actions, not learning a thing from the negative reinforcement.

Cultharic. An unfortunate lizardman who wandered too close to the wards while exploring the dungeon. Cultharic just wants to go home and see his family. He is not evil, just not interested in the grand crusade the celestials are on. He may talk the PCs into helping him escape, or get them to convince the celestials to let him leave. Cultharic is from outside the dungeon and is willing to accompany the PCs until he can escape with them.

Killian Earthscar. A duergar miner who wandered too far from his people's territory, Killian is hoping to find a way to dig around the wards and let the creatures trapped below out, for a small toll of course. He seeks wealth and allies amongst the creatures below and may use the PCs to contact them.

Klarihg'en. Taken from his tribe by the inevitables, Klarihg'en is an abject coward who stays with the Redeemed because he is terrified of the celestials. He is easily bullied and normally follows Morigssen's commands.

Morigssen Skullbreaker. Morigssen wants out of the Redeemed, but he's patient enough to bide his time and greedy enough to make sure he escapes with a fortune when he does make a run for it. He is the de facto leader of the Redeemed as most of the other members respect or fear him enough to listen to Morigssen.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Roll for a Random Encounter once per hour.

1d20	Encounter
1	Strange howling noise echoes through the Section
2	The sound of dogs barking echoes through the Section.
3	A whisper prayer carried on a warm breeze.
4	A trumpet sounds through the halls, following by the sounds of a marching army.
5	A dead barghest lies in the Room, its throat cut open. Its body is still warm, and the blood is fresh.
6-9	Nothing
10	1d4 kolyaruts are on patrol, led by Tekarus (Room E64). The kolyaruts check general wards and for incursions. If they encounter non-evil, non-chaotic creatures, they recruit them for the garrison or the Redeemed.
11	1d4 zelehkuts are on patrol, checking stores, and examining wards. The zelehkuts encourage the PCs to speak with Dubar (Room E75).
12	The three marut brothers (Room E68) are on patrol. They attack any creatures they suspect of being evil, but interrogate them afterwards. Anyone important, is brought back to the garrison to speak with Dubar (Room E75).
13	Ackersan Redsword (Room E77) is on patrol. Unlike the other Redeemed, Ackersan is allowed to wander on his own. He flees most creatures he encounters. But leads non-evil PCs to the garrison to meet Dubar.
14	The Redeemed are on patrol with Dorsam (Room E78), Dubar (Room E75) and 1d4 inevitables. The inevitables question the PCs to learn of their intentions and usefulness. The Redeemed make an alliance against the inevitables if the PCs are powerful and willing.
15	The PCs stumble upon a trap.

◆ Camouflaged Pit Trap: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; automatic reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 50 ft. deep (5d6, fall); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 17.)

16 The PCs stumble upon a trap.

17 The PCs stumble upon a trap.

◆ Fusillade of Spears: CR 6; mechanical; proximity trigger; automatic reset; Atk +21 ranged (1d8, spear); multiple targets (1d6 spears per target in a 10 ft. by 10-ft. area); Search DC 26; Disable Device DC 20.

18 The PCs stumble upon a trap.

◆ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 5; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 5d8 acid, fire, or sonic, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

19 The PCs stumble upon a trap.

◆ Poison Wall Spikes: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; Atk +16 melee (1d8+4 plus poison, spike); multiple targets (closest target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); poison (Medium monstrous spider venom, DC 12 Fortitude save resists, 1d4 Str/1d4 Str); Search DC 17; Disable Device DC 21. Market Price: 12,650 gp.

20 A lantern archon examines the surrounding wards, ignoring known PCs and the garrison. It flees to report anything else.

E61. ARMORY

The secret door in the northwestern corner of the Room can be found with a DC 25 Search check. The door is opened by pressing a specific flagstone in the floor that bares no special marker.

If the secret door is opened in any other fashion, it triggers one of the many glyphs of warding found within the Region.

6 Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 5; spell; spell trigger; no reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 5d8 fire, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

Rusted weapons and armor fill this room, held on racks and shelves covering many of the walls of the room. Nearly all of them are badly damaged, but a few weapons were recently cleaned and rest atop a table in the center of the room next to a whetstone, several bottles, and a few primitive smithing tools.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Morigssen plans on using the weapons in this Room to arm the Redeemed when the rebellion against the inevitables comes since the inevitables do not allow the Redeemed to keep weapons unsupervised. Unfortunately most of the weapons in this Room are not useable, but with Killian's help Morigssen has begun repairing some of them as best he can.

Inevitable patrols are not encountered in this Room. Treat such encounters as Nothing.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 6, [Safe]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Most of the weapons and armor in this Room are useless, but two longswords, a shortsword, a battle axe, a warhammer, two suits of splint mail, and a suit of studded leather armor have been repaired.

EL: N/A

E62. MORIGGSSEN'S HIDEOUT

The door to this Room is locked, requiring an DC 30 Open Lock check. Morigssen carries the key to this Room. The lock was built into the door by Morigssen. Once the door is open read the following.

The walls of this room are covered in faded tapestries crudely hung from the ceiling while the floor is covered with several layers of rugs. In the north western corner sits a large bed piled with pillows, while a comfortable chair sits in the southeastern corner in front of a large desk. A small chest sits next to the desk, a heavy iron padlock holding it shut. Bits of debris are scattered amongst several plates placed all around the room. Books are also visible, most of which have pages torn out.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Morigssen built this Room to be his private hideaway where he hoards his wealth. He tried to make the Room as luxurious as possible and he considers the Room his private abode; no one else is allowed inside. He reacts violently to anyone disrupting his privacy. The chest is locked, and requires a DC 30 Open Lock check. Morigssen carries the only key on a ring with the key to this Room.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The tapestries in this Room are in good condition and worth 500 gp, but weigh anywhere from 25 to 50 lbs. each. Inside the chest the PCs find 458 gp, 859 sp, 237 cp, 12 pp, a ruby worth 100 gp, a gold necklace worth 75 gp, a platinum circlet in the shape of an circling dragon worth 150 gp, a +1 dagger, a potion of cure moderate wounds, a potion of invisibility, and a potion of hide from undead. The books were once valuable works of history and philosophy, but age has ravaged them beyond repair.

E63. HIDDEN PRISON

The bare walls of this room are marred by a series of rings bolted to the walls, through which run chains and shackles, six of which still hold rotting corpses. Some of the bodies have fallen apart under their own weight, while others remain intact. A single unchained humanoid body sits in the center of the room, a sword in hand.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as a prison for creatures that escaped to Region E until they could be returned to their cells. During the battle following the second earthquake several creatures were placed in this Room to be questioned about other "invading" inhabitants taking advantage of the earthquakes. Unfortunately with the loss of the all-door the prisoners died from starvation, including the aasimar assigned to guard them. The prisoners were two dretches, a derro, two ogres, and an orc. The command word to open the all-door to this Room is "Dellacks."

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 6, Safe (creepy), Spell Resistance 30

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: The only treasure in this Room is the aasimar's holy bastard sword, holy symbol, heavy shield, and a suit of half plate.

EL: N/A

E64. TEKARUS' QUARTERS

This room is so thoroughly clean and straightened to such a precise degree it seems a sin to step inside. Papers sit in organized piles, each with a paper weight or bound together, and the two book shelves in the room are filled with books that all look exactly the same. In the center of the room stands a podium, at which stands a humanoid made of black mechanical parts, wearing armor of gold and a flowing robe. A sword hangs at its side as the creature studiously reads a scroll, occasionally making notes or changes with a metal large quill.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: This Room is the home and research library of Tekarus, Watcher of Bargains, who is the leader of the remaining inevitables. Tekarus spends all his time recharging the wards or examining the many documents of the garrison that survive, looking for a by-law or rule that backs up the creation of the Redeemed or replace Kelara as the commanding officer.

Tekarus is friendly with the PCs, using his discern lies spell-like ability at the beginning of the conversation to get the truth out of the PCs. If the PCs come across to Tekarus as being good aligned he explains the history of the garrison to them, its current needs (ward staves and the all-door) and asks them for help, but does not offer any reward beyond thanks. If the PCs come across as evil or do not seem interested in helping the garrison at all Tekarus captures them and forces them to join the Redeemed, calling the other inevitables if necessary.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 4, Safe

Tactics: If a fight breaks out with Tekarus he subdues the PCs so they join the Redeemed and are reeducated. He uses both his vampire touch and enervation ray abilities in the hopes of cowing the PCs into surrendering.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 20

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, give Tekarus maximum hit points. To decrease the challenge, replace Tekarus's +2 holy longsword with a masterwork longsword.

▲ Tekarus, Kolyarut: CR 12; Large construct (extraplanar, lawful); HD 13d10+20; hp 93; Init +1; Spd 20 ft.; AC 27, touch 11, flat-footed 26; Base Atk +9; Grp +11; Atk +11 melee touch (6d6, vampiric touch) or +10 ranged touch (enervation ray) or +13 melee (1d8+5/19–20, +2 holy longsword) or +11 melee (1d6+3, slam); Full Atk +11/+6 melee touch (6d6, vampiric touch) or +10 ranged touch (enervation ray) or +13/+8 melee (1d8+5/19–20, +2 holy longsword) or +11/+6 melee (1d6+3, slam); SA Enervation ray, spell-like abilities, vampiric touch; SQ Construct traits, damage reduction 10/chaotic, darkvision 60 ft., fast healing 5, low-light vision, spell resistance 22; AL LN; SV Fort +6, Ref +7, Will +7; Str 14, Dex 13, Con —, Int 16, Wis 17, Cha 16.

Skills: A kolyarut has a +4 racial bonus on Disguise, Gather Information, and Sense Motive checks.

Possessions: Banded mail, +2 holy longsword.

E65. SENAR'S QUARTERS

The walls of this room are completely hidden by a number of large bookcases, each of which is full of books, most of which are of very similar appearance. All the books are neatly organized and the room has a feeling of just being cleaned. At the center of the room sits three podiums arranged in a semi-circle, behind which stands a humanoid made of black mechanical parts and clothed in golden armor. The creature appears to be reading from a book on the center podium and writing in two books simultaneously on the other two podiums.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: These are the quarters of Senar, Keeper of the List who is the current acting historian of the garrison. He is interested in the PCs since they represent something different to record in his journals. If allowed he questions the PCs for hours on end about their history and adventures, recording all of it in his journals. If they are inducted into the garrison this can stretch out for days, since Senar feels he must have a complete recording of all garrison members.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 4, Safe

Tactics: Senar only fights the PCs in self-defense and if combat does break out he seeks to take the fight out of his Room as quickly as possible. Senar fights to end the battle as quickly as possible and has no reservations about killing the PCs. He favors the use of his enervation ray over his other weapons.

Treasure: Senar's +2 holy longsword sits in its sheath leaning against one of the bookshelves in the Room.

EL: 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the AC of Senar by +3. To decrease the challenge, have Senar start wounded (–10 hit points).

E66. GARRISON COMMON ROOM

This open, clean room has a tree growing out of a circular bed of soil at its center, but the tree died long ago. Most of its leaves have fallen off, but a few remain. Leaves are scattered across the floor, but the rest of the room has a pristine feel. Stone benches line all the walls of this room and a stone podium sits directly north of the tree. Two circular stone tables flank either side of the tree.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room serves as a common Room for the surviving inevitable members of the garrison, but they rarely do more than walk through it. The Redeemed clean it regularly, maintaining a work ethic despite the morale of the guardians. However, there always seem to be leaves on the floor.

The tree was planted as a symbol of the garrison, but now is withered and all but dead. If the PCs join the garrison and are able to lend substantial aid to it, the tree recovers somewhat. If the split between the inevitables and the other celestials is healed, the tree makes a significant recovery.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 5, Safe

Tactics: Since leaves are a sign of dying and not death, PCs inquire as to why the tree was neglected. It is ultimately up to the DM if there is a way to save the tree, but this is a minor subplot of the dungeon and can easily be ignored. The details are for flavor and nothing more.

E67. WETOQ'S ROOM

There is barely enough free space in this room for air, let alone for you and your companions. The room is overflowing with bags, sacks, weapons, bottles, chests and tools, all in orderly piles or placed neatly on shelves. Despite the quantity of items in the room there are deep undercurrents of logic or planning to their placement, even if it isn't apparent. Amongst these many goods moves a humanoid creature made of black mechanical parts decked out in golden armor, counting items and straightening piles.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: This is the Room of Wetoq and the primary supply Room for the inevitables. Wetoq is in charge of keeping the supplies ordered and accounted for in addition to procuring more supplies. Unfortunately Wetoq's programming has degraded over time and now he feels the garrison can never have enough supplies. Unless the PCs are violent with members of the inevitable garrison Wetoq offers to trade with the PCs; he is specifically interested in magic weapons, potions, silver, holy water, and armor. While he does trade fairly, he is also stingy and pushes for better deals.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 5, Safe

Tactics: If attacked Wetoq (hp 93) tries to move the fight into Room E66 and call for help so the stores are not disturbed. Wetoq favors his vampiric touch power in combat and readily fights to the death to protect his supplies.

Treasure: The supplies of the garrison contain at least three of every type of simple and martial weapon, at least one of every type of armor (medium sized for heavy and medium, both small and medium sized for light armor), at least three of every item listed under adventuring gear, special substances and items, tools and skill kits (no alchemist's labs), and clothing. There may be more of these items at the DM's discretion. Finding a specific item requires a DC 25 Search check.

The stores also contain two silver longswords, one silver battleaxe, one masterwork shortsword, one masterwork silver longsword, three masterwork silver daggers, a masterwork mighty [+2 Str bonus] composite longbow, a masterwork great axe, a +1 dagger, a shatterspike, a suit of masterwork small studded leather armor, a suit of masterwork chain shirt, +1 chain mail, a suit of elven chain, +1 splint mail of cold resistance, five potions of cure light wounds, three potions of lesser restoration, two potions of mage armor, two potions of remove fear, three potions of cure moderate wounds, two scrolls of fireball, two scrolls of halt undead, one wand of cure moderate wounds (8 charges), one wand of knock (12 charges), gloves of arrow snaring, and boots of speed.

EL: 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two fighter levels to Wetoq. To decrease the challenge, lower Wetoq's HD by 3.

Enervation Ray (Su): A kolyarut can fire a black enervation ray at targets within 200 ft. The effect is identical with the enervation spell (caster level 13th).

Fast Healing (Ex): An kolyarut inevitable heals 5 points of damage each round as long as it has at least 1 hit point. However, damage dealt by chaotic weapons heals at the normal rate.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—discern lies (DC 17), disguise self, fear (DC 17), hold person (DC 16), invisibility, locate creature, suggestion (DC 16); 1/day—hold monster (DC 17), mark of justice; 1/week—geas/quest. Caster level 13th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Vampiric Touch (Su): As a melee touch attack, a kolyarut can steal life force from its foe, as the vampiric touch spell (caster level 13th).

Skills: A kolyarut has a +4 racial bonus on Disguise, Gather Information, and Sense Motive checks.

Possessions: Banded mail, +2 holy longsword.

E68. THE MARUT BROTHERS' QUARTERS

The walls of this room are decorated with bones and skulls, under each of which is a small stone plaque with a label in a strange tongue. There is no furniture in this room except a single table on which rests a few blank sheets of paper.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: This Room serves as the home of the three Marut brothers, Fastur the Ending, Astol the Last, and Toras Who Seeks Without Ceasing. They are only here about 20% of the time. All the bones are trophies taken from former enemies. The plaques are written in celestial and have no names, simply a date on which they were defeated (all of these are labeled at least six hundred years ago, most falling around 1,000 years ago).

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 4, Safe

Tactics: If the Marut brothers are present and attacked they attack with full fury, incapacitating their enemies so they may be interrogated later. They fight to the death and only call for reinforcements if one of them is taken. The Marut brothers favor using their fists over their spell-like abilities.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 18

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase each marut's HD by 2. To decrease the challenge, remove 20 hit points from each.

Fists of Thunder and Lightning (Su): A marut's left fist delivers a loud thunderclap whenever it hits something, dealing an extra 3d6 points of sonic damage and causing the target to be deafened for 2d6 rounds (Fortitude DC 31 negates the deafness). Its right fist delivers a shock for an extra 3d6 points of electricity damage, and the flash of lightning causes the target to be blinded for 2d6 rounds (Fortitude DC 31 negates the blindness). Possessions: Full plate mail.

E69. PERSAL'S QUARTERS

This bare room has no decorations to speak of other than a small stone shrine topped by the symbol of an enormous cog. Around the shrine several candles burn and a soft clicking sound can be heard from the machinery within.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: This Room is the home of Persal, Slayer of the Unliving, but he is rarely around to use it. Instead he is out charging wards, chasing shadows, or socializing. The shrine is a shrine to the powers of the heavens. Persal is only found here 10% of the time.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 2, Safe

Tactics: If Persal is attacked in his home he seeks help from the other inevitables and then fights to incapacitate his foes. Persal mainly fights with his fist, but because of the massive damage they inflict he will offer any badly wounded enemy who is not clearly evil a chance to submit. Persal uses his hold person and mass inflict light wounds spell-like abilities against particularly troublesome foes.

Treasure: The only treasure is Persal's spiked chain.

Possessions: Full plate mail.

E70. SMERAS' QUARTERS

This mostly empty room is decorated by a dozen skulls and other trophies, such as large horns or claws. None of them are labeled, but much of the wall space is taken up by these objects. There is precious little organization to their placement.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This Room serves as Smeras' (hp 102) quarters, where he spends several hours each day practicing and going over the methods used to kill each of his trophies. Mostly, Smeras is out recharging the wards or on patrol. He is found here 40% of the time.

Smeras has little interest in the PCs unless they are causing trouble for the garrison, in which case he attacks them immediately. He directs the PCs to Tekarus if they have questions and says precious little to the PCs otherwise. If the PCs are part of the garrison he treats them with more patience.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If attacked Smeras defends himself with his spiked chain, attacking every possible target with no thought to capturing the PCs. Smeras does not call for help and avoids letting the other inevitables get involved. He seeks glory on his own in order to up his standing in the eyes of others, or so he thinks.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter increase Smeras' HD by 4. To decrease the challenge, remove 30 hit points.

Skills: A zelekhut has a +4 racial bonus on Search and Sense Motive checks.

Feats: Due to its centaur-like construction, a zelekhut qualifies for feats as if it had the Mounted Combat feat.

Possessions: Plate barding, spiked chain.

E71. PRESIN'S QUARTERS

Several large, comfortable chairs are scattered around a large table at the center of this room, on which sit several pieces of paper and a handful of books. Two book cases lean against the southern wall while tables run the length of the eastern and western walls. Sitting in an abnormally long chair is a mechanical centaur-like construction made up of white and gold parts, a pair of gold wings stretching up from its back. It pours over several of the books on the table before it.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: Home of Presin, Adjudicator to the Host (hp 102), this Room also serves as law library and courtroom for the remaining members of the garrison. Presin currently researches a means to remove Kelara from command at the behest of Tekarus, but he personally has no interest in the dispute; Presin knows there is no legal basis for such an action, but Tekarus does not believe him.

Presin welcomes the PCs to his Room and is more than willing to speak to them at length. He's always looking for more information on laws and their structure, even those from the mortal world outside the dungeon.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 4, Safe

Tactics: If attacked Presin tries to flee and get reinforcements immediately. If cornered he fights with his spiked chain, but he makes every attempt to find allies.

Treasure: The books in this Room are about celestial law, 10 of which would fetch 100 gp from a book collector.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase Presin's HD by +4. To decrease the challenge, remove 30 hit points.

72. MORSAQ'S QUARTERS

The door to this Room is trapped. If it is opened without first knocking twice, a blade slices down from the ceiling, hitting the person entering the Room.

▲ Deathblade Wall Scythe: CR 8; mechanical; touch trigger; manual reset; Atk +16 melee (2d4+8 plus poison, scythe); poison (deathblade, DC 20 Fortitude save resists, 1d6 Con/2d6 Con); Search DC 24; Disable Device DC 19.

This room is completely dark, the torches in the ceiling are shuttered with heavy cloth. There is little in the room beyond a table containing some tools, a sword, some bottles, and a quill. A single, long, oddly shaped bench sits at the head of the table. On the eastern wall hangs a map of a region of this dungeon.

Initial Attitude: N/A, Indifferent

Encounter: The bench is also trapped. If one sits in the chair without first stomping on it the bench collapses, dumping the victim into a pit trap in the floor behind the bench.

▲ Well-Camouflaged Pit Trap: CR 8; mechanical; touch trigger; repair reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 100 ft. deep (10d6, fall); Search DC 27; Disable Device DC 18.

Morsaq (hp 94) only uses this Room to repair his weapons, brew poison, and contemplate all the ways in which the entire universe is out to get him. He set the various traps in his Room because he feels someone will eventually come after him. When the PCs enter the Room it is assumed Morsaq is out patrolling but returns in twenty minutes, and if he finds the PCs in his Room he interrogates them at length about who sent them, their exact intentions, and about how much they know concerning a variety of topics, such as the local barghest population.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 4

Tactics: If Morsaq is forced to fight he fights with his spiked chain to subdue the PCs as long as he has more than half his hit points in the hopes he can later interrogate them. If reduced to less than half his hit points Morsaq uses his poisons on his spiked chain and becomes less concerned with interrogating the PCs.

Treasure: The sword on the table is a masterwork longsword that Morsaq is considering using in a trap. The bottles are a dose of large scorpion venom, a dose of blue whinnies poison, and a dose of black adder venom.

EL: 14

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the pit trap damage to 14d6. To decrease the challenge, remove the poison from the deathblade wall scythe trap, reduce the pit trap damage to 7d6, and remove Morsaq's rogue levels.

▲ Morsaq, Zelekhut Rog 5: CR 14; Large construct (extraplanar, lawful); HD 8d10+30 + 5d6; hp 94; Init +0; Spd 35 ft., fly 40 ft. (average); AC 27, touch 9, flat-footed 27; Base Atk +9; Grp +18; Atk +13 melee (2d6+5 plus 1d6 electricity, spiked chain); Full Atk 2 +13 melee (2d6+5 plus 1d6 electricity, 2 spiked chains); SA Sneak attack +3d6, spell-like abilities; SQ Construct traits, damage reduction 10/chaotic, darkvision 60 ft., evasion, fast healing 5, low-light vision, spell resistance 20, trap sense +1, trapfinding, uncanny dodge 1; AL LN; SV Fort +4, Ref +2, Will +5; Str 21, Dex 11, Con —, Int 10, Wis 17, Cha 15.

Skills and Feats: Craft (Poisonmaking) +16, Craft (Trapmaking) +16, Diplomacy +6, Listen +9, Search +10, Sense Motive +21, Spot +9, Survival +3 (+5 following tracks); Great Fortitude, Negotiator, Ride-By Attack, Spirited Charge, Skill Focus (Sense Motive);

Evasion (Ex): At 2nd level and higher, a rogue can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility. If she makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, she instead takes no damage. Evasion can be used only if the rogue is wearing light armor or no armor. A helpless rogue does not gain the benefit of evasion.

Sneak Attack: If a rogue catches an opponent when he is unable to defend himself effectively from her attack, she can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

The rogue's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the rogue flanks her target. This extra damage is 1d6 at 1st level, and it increases by 1d6 every two rogue levels thereafter. Should the rogue score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Ranged attacks can count as sneak attacks only if the target is within 30 ft.

With a sap (blackjack) or an unarmed strike, a rogue can make a sneak attack that deals nonlethal damage instead of lethal damage. She cannot use a weapon that deals lethal damage to deal nonlethal damage in a sneak attack, not even with the usual –4 penalty.

A rogue can sneak attack only living creatures with discernible anatomies — undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack. Any creature that is immune to critical hits is not vulnerable to sneak attacks. The rogue must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach such a spot. A rogue cannot sneak attack while striking a creature with concealment or striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—clairaudience/clairvoyance, dimensional anchor, dispel magic, fear (DC 17), hold person (DC 16), locate creature, true seeing; 3/day—hold monster (DC 18), mark of justice; 1/week—lesser geas (DC 18). Caster level 8th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Trap Sense (Ex): At 3rd level, a rogue gains an intuitive sense that alerts her to danger from traps, giving her a +1 bonus on Reflex saves made to avoid traps and a +1 dodge bonus to AC against attacks made by traps. These bonuses rise to +2 when the rogue reaches 6th level, to +3 when she reaches 9th level, to +4 when she reaches 12th level, to +5 at 15th, and to +6 at 18th level.

Trap sense bonuses gained from multiple classes stack.

Trapfinding: Rogues (and only rogues) can use the Search skill to locate traps when the task has a Difficulty Class higher than 20.

Finding a nonmagical trap has a DC of at least 20, or higher if it is well hidden. Finding a magic trap has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it.

Rogues (and only rogues) can use the Disable Device skill to disarm magic traps. A magic trap generally has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it.

A rogue who beats a trap's DC by 10 or more with a Disable Device check can study a trap, figure out how it works, and bypass it (with her party) without disarming it.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Starting at 4th level, a rogue can react to danger before her senses would normally allow her to do so. She retains her Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) even if she is caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker. However, she still loses her Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized.

If a rogue already has uncanny dodge from a different class she automatically gains improved uncanny dodge (see below) instead.

Skills: A zelekhut has a +4 racial bonus on Search and Sense Motive checks.

Feats: Due to its centaur-like construction, a zelekhut qualifies for feats as if it had the Mounted Combat feat.

Possessions: Plate barding, spiked chain, large scorpion poison (2 doses), giant wasp poison (1 dose).

E73. KILLING ZONE

This hallway is a pit trap that is armed by the lever in the south wall.

▲ Poisoned Spiked Pit Trap: CR 10; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; hidden lock bypass (Search DC 25); DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 50 ft. deep (5d6, fall); multiple targets (entire hallway); pit spikes (Atk +10 melee 1d4 spikes per target for 1d4+5 plus poison each); poison (purple worm poison, DC 24 Fortitude save resists, 1d6 Str/2d6 Str); Search DC 16; Disable Device DC 25.

The floor of this room is a collage of blood stains, scorch marks, and the chipped stone. The room echoes with combat long past and a yearning for more. A large metal lever is built into the southern wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as the primary killing ground for the creatures charging up from the depths after the two earthquakes.

The PCs have a 10% change of finding Doj (Room E101), Persal (Room E69), Smeras (Room E70), or Morsaq (Room E72) here checking on the garrison's defenses.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 3

Treasure: N/A

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the damage of the pit trap to 8d6. To decrease the challenge, remove the poison from the pit trap spikes.

E74. MURDER HOLE WEST

This room contains multiple racks of arrows, spears and similar ranged weapons along with a number of wands. A large metal lever is located on the wall next to the entrance. Several unstrung bows lean against the northern walls, their bowstrings wrapped around the handle.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as a flanking position to pepper invading enemies as they passed through Room E73. When the lever is flipped a reinforced metal grate slides down where indicated on the map, with a hardness of 15, 200 hit points and a break DC of 30. Characters can easily fire through the grate into Room E73 for cover.

The PCs have a 10% change of finding Doj (Room E101), Persal (Room E69), Smeras (Room E70), or Morsaq (Room E72) here checking on the garrison's defenses.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: This Room contains 872 arrows, 54 silver arrows, 37 masterwork arrows, three +1 arrows, five masterwork longbows, two masterwork shortbows, two mighty (+3 Str bonus) composite longbows, two heavy crossbows, 400 bolts, 34 silver bolts, five vials of alchemist's fire, and two tanglefoot bags. The members of the garrison do not take well to any of these objects being removed.

E75. DUBAR'S QUARTERS

This room contains a number of chairs of varying sizes. These are all gathered around a table which is covered with a variety of papers, both drawing and letters or contracts. A whip hangs on one wall and a club on another. There are shelves holding plates, and there is a large locked metal chest against the western wall. At the table sits a humanoid made of black mechanical parts wearing a suit of gold armor and a flowing, red cloak.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: This Room serves as Dubar's quarters and the primary location of the attempted conversion of the Redeemed to the cause of good. Dubar (hp 93) uses it as a school house, trying to teach lessons of how not to be evil and how to serve the greater good to his charges, punishing them as needed to get the point across. There is a 20% chance the Redeemed are here getting such a lesson when the PCs arrive.

Dubar is interested in the PCs; if they seem of good or neutral alignment to him he informs them of the garrison's needs and tells them to go accommodate them. If they seem evil or do not listen to his commands Dubar sizes them up for joining the Redeemed.

The metal chest holds the weapons and armor for the Redeemed, to be distributed by Dubar when he feels they are needed. The chest has a hardness of 10 and 100 hit points. Picking the lock requires an Open Locks check (DC 30).

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Hallowed 2, Safe

Tactics: If attacked Dubar fights alone, confident no mere mortals can beat him in combat. He favors the use of his enervation ray in combat. If the Redeemed are present he invites them to join the fight, but only Croo and Ackersan readily do so.

Treasure: If the Redeemed are currently in their Rooms and unarmed the chest holds one masterwork longsword, one normal longsword, a great axe, two light crossbow with 30 bolts each, a short sword, a warhammer, a trident, a heavy mace, four heavy shields, one light shield, two Medium suits of chain mail, a Large suit of studded leather, a Small suit of studded leather, a Medium suit of splint mail, and a Medium chain shirt.

If the Redeemed are on patrol it is empty.

Fast Healing (Ex): An kolyarut inevitable heals 5 points of damage each round as long as it has at least 1 hit point. However, damage dealt by chaotic weapons heals at the normal rate.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—discern lies (DC 17), disguise self, fear (DC 17), hold person (DC 16), invisibility, locate creature, suggestion (DC 16); 1/day—hold monster (DC 17), mark of justice; 1/week—geas/quest. Caster level 13th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Vampiric Touch (Su): As a melee touch attack, a kolyarut can steal life force from its foe, as the vampiric touch spell (caster level 13th).

Skills: A kolyarut has a +4 racial bonus on Disguise, Gather Information, and Sense Motive checks.

Possessions: Banded mail, +2 holy longsword.

E76. HALL TO THE REDEEMED

The secret door at the eastern end of the passage requires a DC 30 Search check to open. On both sides it is opened by pressing a specific stone in the wall above the door.

This long, thin hallway has no visible exit beside the door you just came through. The walls and floor are bare.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room serves as a secret passage to the Rooms now used to house the Redeemed.

Encounter Condition: Fog 10, Safe

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

E77. ACKERSAN'S QUARTERS

Presently, the door to this Room is locked and requires a DC 35 Open Lock check. Oddly, this door is normally not locked.

Tidy and clean, this room looks like that of a soldier. The bed is neatly made and everything is dusted. The only furniture in the room is a basic bed and dresser set.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This is the home of Ackersan Redsword (hp 40), the garrison appointed leader of the Redeemed. He is here 40% of the time, sleeping or reading one of the many books he borrows from the inevitables to learn more about the garrison. He respects other members of the garrison who enter but he is more than wary of strangers and he tries to warn the inevitables as soon as possible.

Encounter Condition: Concealment, Fearless

Tactics: Ackersan only attacks if directed by the inevitables or in self defense. Unless equipped by Dubar or Dorsam, Ackersan is unarmed.

Treasure: Ackersan's only valuable possession is a silver locket depicting a flying angel worth 60 gp. It was a gift from the inevitables and is of great sentimental value to him.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter add two fighter levels to Ackersan. To decrease the challenge, remove his chain mail armor and heavy shield.

Ackersan Redsword, Hobgoblin Ftr 4: CR 4; Medium humanoid; HD 4d10+12; hp 40; Init +1; Spd 30 ft.; AC 18, touch 11, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +4; Grp +8; Atk +10 melee (1d8+6, longsword); Full Atk +10 melee (1d8+6, longsword); SQ Darkvision 60 ft.; AL LN; SV Fort +7, Ref +2, Will +2; Str 18, Dex 13, Con 16, Int 12, Wis 12, Cha 7.

Skills and Feats: Climb +8, Hide +5, Intimidate +2, Listen +5, Jump +8, Move Silently +5, Swim +8; Cleave, Power Attack, Weapon Focus (longsword), Weapon Specialization (longsword);

Skills: Hobgoblins have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

Possessions: Chain mail, heavy shield, masterwork longsword.

E78. DORSAM'S QUARTERS

A table, two chairs, and a writing desk are the only furniture in this room. A banner of an eye over a flaming sun hangs on one wall and a banner with a large gold cog on it hangs on another wall. On the desk sit several piles of paper and a quill. A small wooden chest sits in the northeastern corner of the room.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: Dorsam's Room serves as a first warning point if the wards fail and creatures cross over through the adjacent hallway and as a place to teach the Redeemed. While Dubar focuses on teaching them "good" (by example), Dorsam (hp 100) teaches them to be polite and courteous, hoping to encourage them to change their habits for the better. He also records their progress in his journal.

Dorsam is in his Room 50% of the time. If the PCs are part of the garrison and Dorsam is here he allows them free reign. If they are not part of the garrison he interrogates them at length, fearful they will destroy all the progress he has made with the Redeemed. If the PCs come across as good- or neutrally-aligned (and are interested in helping out) he takes them to Tekarus to see about having them join the garrison, while if they come across as evil or show no interest in aiding the garrison Dorsam subdues them and adds them to the Redeemed.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 1, Safe

Tactics: If attacked Dorsam subdues his foes (they are obviously in need of rehabilitation). If possible, he rallies the Redeemed to take part, hoping that in helping another's redemption it will help them make progress toward their own.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 12

Caster level 8th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Skills: A zelekhut has a +4 racial bonus on Search and Sense Motive checks.

Feats: Due to its centaur-like construction, a zelekhut qualifies for feats as if it had the Mounted Combat feat.

Possessions: Plate barding, spiked chain.

E79. CROO'S QUARTERS

The door to this Room requires a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. This door is normally locked if Croo is home.

Everything in this room is larger than normal; the huge oak bed is at least twelve ft. long, the only chair in the room is five ft. high and has legs the size of tree stumps. There is an organized pile of clothes on the chair and a broken plate on the floor.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Croo (hp 39) is here 75% of the time sleeping or sitting around bored (he is not good at entertaining himself). If he is home when the PCs arrive, Croo talks to them, only attacking in self-defense or if the PCs do something Croo the inevitables wouldn't like. If the PCs find a way to entertain Croo, they earn themselves a loyal ally.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: Croo is unarmed while in his Room, so if attacked he fights with his fists or picks up the chair and uses it as a club, suffering a -2 penalty to hit due to the awkward weight of the chair. Croo fights to the death.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 2

Scaling: To increase the difficulty of this encounter add two fighter levels to Croo.

▲ Croo, Ogre: CR 2; Large giant; HD 4d8+11; hp 39; Init -1; Spd 40 ft.; AC 16, touch 8, flat-footed 16; Base Atk +3; Grp +12; Atk +9 melee (2d8+9, greataxe); Full Atk +9 melee (2d8+9, greataxe); SQ Darkvision 60 ft., low-light vision; AL NE; SV Fort +7, Ref +0, Will +1; Str 22, Dex 8, Con 16, Int 4, Wis 10, Cha 7.

Skills and Feats: Climb +3, Listen +1, Spot +1; Toughness, Weapon Focus (greataxe).

Possessions: Studded leather, greataxe.

E80. CUL'THARIC'S QUARTERS

The door to this Room requires a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. This door is normally locked if Cul'tharic is home.

This room smells faintly of mold and mildew mixed with the smell of decay. A bed in the northeastern corner is covered with leaves instead of a sheet and a large tub of water sits in the southeastern corner. Water lilies and algae are present in the water, giving it a greenish tinge. On the single table in the room sits a folded tunic, a leather belt and loincloth, and a small bone statue of a dragon.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: Cul'tharic (hp 50) spends all the time he can in this Room and away from all the other crazy people in this dungeon. Cul'tharic is here 80% of the time, most of the time sleeping or submerged in his tub of water. He is more than willing to talk to anyone who stops by because he dearly wants to escape this hell he is caught up in.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: Cul'tharic only fights in self-defense and flees combat to avoid any possible punishment by the inevitables.

Treasure: The bone dragon statue, an image of Cul'tharic's god, is worth 50 gp.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase Cul'tharic's fighter level by 2. To decrease the challenge of this encounter, remove two of Cul'tharic's fighter levels.

Cul'tharic, Lizardfolk Ftr 5: CR 6; Medium humanoid; HD 7d10+14; hp 50; Init +0; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 10, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +6; Grp +8; Atk +8 melee (1d4+2, claw) or +9 melee (1d8+4, trident) or +6 ranged (1d6+2, javelin); Full Atk +8 melee (1d4+2, 2 claws) and +6 melee (1d4, bite); or +8 melee (1d8+4, trident) and +6 melee (1d4, bite); or +9/+4 melee (1d8+4, trident); or +6 ranged (1d6+2, javelin); SA —; SQ Hold breath; AL NG; SV Fort +6, Ref +2, Will +5; Str 14, Dex 10, Con 15, Int 10, Wis 14, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Climb +4, Balance +4, Jump +5, Survival +9, Swim +4; Iron Will, Multiattack, Power Attack, Skill Focus (Survival), Weapon Focus (Trident), Weapon Specialization (Trident).

Hold Breath: A lizardfolk can hold its breath for a number of rounds equal to four times its Constitution score before it risks drowning.

Skills: Because of their tails, lizardfolk have a +4 racial bonus on Jump, Swim, and Balance checks. The skill modifiers given in the statistics block include a -2 armor check penalty (-4 on Swim checks) for carrying a heavy shield.

Possessions: Trident, heavy shield, 6 javelins.

E81. KILLIAN'S QUARTERS

The door to this Room is locking, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. The door is normally locked if Killian is home, but Morgissen can pick the lock when required.

Two beds in the southeastern and southwestern corners take up much of the space of this small room. Both the beds are four ft. in length and the two chairs in the room are equally small. A mixture of bottles, metal nuggets, rocks and tools fill the lone shelf in the room.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Killian Earthscar makes his home in this Room. He is here 50% of the time; much of the time the inevitables think they are in their Room they are in fact working on Morgissen's secret plans in E60. Both are willing to talk to the PCs, but are guarded because they do not want to give away their escape plans, or the fact that they have contraband in their Room. They suggest the PCs talk to Ackersan (Room E77) or Dorsam (Room E78) if they have questions.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Fearless

Tactics: Killian snuck two daggers into his Room. If attacked, he spends one round flipping his bed over and drawing the dagger hidden beneath the mattress. He then fights his way free and goes to get help from the inevitables (disposing of the dagger beforehand).

Treasure: There is a dagger under each bed, which requires two DC 15 Search checks to locate. Also in the bottles on the shelf there is a jug of dwarven moonshine worth 2 gp and a vial of large scorpion venom.

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter add two fighter levels to Killian. To decrease the challenge, remove Killian's expert class levels.

▲ Killian Earthscar, Duergar, Exp 2/Ftr 4: CR 5; Medium humanoid; HD 4d10+12 + 2d6+6; hp 56; Init +0; Spd 20 ft.; AC 18, touch 10, flat-footed 18; Base Atk +5; Grp +7; Atk +7 melee (1d8+2, warhammer); Full Atk +7 melee (1d8+2, warhammer); SQ Darkvision 120 ft., Immunity to paralysis, phantasms, and poison, +2 racial bonus on saves against spells and spell-like abilities, Spell-Like Abilities, Light Sensitivity; AL LE; SV Fort +8, Ref +0, Will +3; Str 14, Dex 10, Con 17, Int 12, Wis 10, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Appraise +6, Climb +4, Craft (Armorsmith) +12, Craft (Weaponsmith) +9, Listen +5, Move Silently +5, Profession (Miner) +12, Spot +5; Great Fortitude, Skill Focus (profession [armorsmith]), Skill Focus (profession [mining]), Weapon Focus (warhammer), Weapon Specialization (warhammer).

Light Sensitivity: Duergar are dazzled in bright sunlight or within the radius of a daylight spell.

Spell-Like Abilities: 1/day—enlarge person and invisibility as an 8th-level caster; these abilities affect only Killian and whatever he carries.

Possessions: Splintmail, heavy shield, warhammer.

E82. KLARIH'EN'S QUARTERS

The door to this Room requires a DC 30 Open Lock check to unlock. The door is normally locked if Klarih'ën is home. Morigssen can pick the lock if required.

Scattered around this room are bits of paper, small shiny pieces of metal, and a bunch of blankets removed from the unusually small bed. The whole room is in a complete state of disarray.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Klarih'ën's Room is a perfect demonstration of how easily bored he gets. He spends 60% of his time here, for most of which he jumps around the Room like a hyperactive child, bored out of his skull. When away from his Room Klarih'ën is usually on patrol with the Redeemed or helping Morigssen with his plans of rebellion.

Klarih'ën is absolutely terrified of anyone (unknown) entering his Room and "toadies" immediately to the obvious leader. He answers questions, but does not betray Morigssen or his plans.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Being a coward, Klarih'ën flees if at all possible. If it is not possible he uses charm person and invisibility to make his escape. If Klarih'ën expects trouble, he casts mage armor on himself ahead of time.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase Klarih'ën's level by two. To decrease the challenge, Klarih'ën must spend one round getting to his feet.

▲ Klarih'ën, Kobold, Sor 4: CR 4; Small humanoid; HD 4d4; hp 18; Init +2; Spd 30 ft.; AC 12, touch 12, flat-footed 11; Base Atk +2; Grp -4; Atk +1 melee (1d2-2, unarmed); Full Atk +1 melee (1d2-2, unarmed); SA Spells: SQ Light sensitivity, spells; AL NE; SV Fort +1, Ref +2, Will +3; Str 7, Dex 12, Con 11, Int 13, Wis 8, Cha 16.

Skills and Feats: Bluff +12, Climb +1, Concentration +7, Intimidate +5, Search +3, Spellcraft +8; Combat Casting, Persuasive;

Light Sensitivity (Ex): Kobolds are dazzled in bright sunlight or within the radius of a daylight spell.

Sorcerer Spells Known: (6/7/4; save DC 13 + spell level):

Skills: Kobolds have a +2 racial bonus on Craft (trapmaking), Profession (miner), and Search checks.

E83. MORIGSSEN'S QUARTERS

The door to this Room requires a DC 35 Open Lock check to unlock. The door is normally locked if Klarih'ën is home. The door is normally locked if Morigssen is home. Morigssen can pick the lock if desired.

Neat and orderly, this room is organized with military precision. There are two beds in both northern corners, but only the one in the eastern has seen recent use. There is a shelf against both the eastern and western walls, both of which hold a few books.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Morigssen is here 60% of the time. A quarter of the time Morigssen is patrolling and the rest of the time he is working on a plan to revolt. Morigssen usually sneaks out after the inevitables put him to bed for the evening because the inevitables only check in every four hours on the Redeemed, giving Morigssen plenty of time to sneak out.

Morigssen is guarded in his discussions with the PCs, wanting to feel out the PCs' intentions towards the inevitables without giving away his own plans. If the PCs are obvious in their dislike for the inevitables Morigssen may decide to bring them in on his plan, but if they learn of his plan and go to tell the inevitables Morigssen attacks them with the intent to kill.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment

Tactics: Morigssen brought a longsword with him into his Room. It is hidden behind the eastern bookshelves, but it is set up to be easy to draw, requiring a move equivalent action. Morigssen attacks if his plans have been discovered or in self defense and aims to kill. When at all possible Morigssen uses his sneak attack ability.

Treasure: The only treasure present is the longsword and short-sword they have smuggled in, both of which can be found with a DC 20 Search check.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two rogue levels to Morigssen. To decrease the difficulty, remove two fighter levels.

▲ Morigssen, Hobgoblin Ftr 4/ Rog 4: CR 8; Medium humanoid; HD 4d10+8 + 4d6+8; hp 66; Init +2; Spd 30 ft.; AC 19, touch 12, flat-footed 17; Base Atk +7; Grp +11; Atk +12 melee (1d8+6, longsword); Full Atk +12/+7 melee (1d8+6, longsword); SA Sneak attack +2d6; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., evasion, trapfinding, trap sense +1, uncanny dodge; AL LE; SV Fort +7, Ref +7, Will +2; Str 18, Dex 14, Con 15, Int 14, Wis 10, Cha 12.

Skills and Feats: Climb +11, Bluff +8, Diplomacy +6, Escape Artist +9, Hide +9, Jump +8, Intimidate +15, Listen +5, Move Silently +13, Open Lock +11, Search +7, Sense Motive +7, Sleight of Hand +9, Spot +5; Dodge, Negotiator, Persuasive, Skill Focus (open lock), Weapon Focus (longsword), Weapon Specialization (longsword).

Sneak Attack: If a rogue can catch an opponent when he is unable to defend himself effectively from her attack, she can strike a vital spot for extra damage.

The rogue's attack deals extra damage any time her target would be denied a Dexterity bonus to AC (whether the target actually has a Dexterity bonus or not), or when the rogue flanks her target. This extra damage is 1d6 at 1st level, and it increases by 1d6 every two rogue levels thereafter. Should the rogue score a critical hit with a sneak attack, this extra damage is not multiplied.

Ranged attacks can count as sneak attacks only if the target is within 30 ft.

With a sap (blackjack) or an unarmed strike, a rogue can make a sneak attack that deals nonlethal damage instead of lethal damage. She cannot use a weapon that deals lethal damage to deal nonlethal damage in a sneak attack, not even with the usual -4 penalty.

A rogue can sneak attack only living creatures with discernible anatomies — undead, constructs, oozes, plants, and incorporeal creatures lack vital areas to attack. Any creature that is immune to critical hits is not vulnerable to sneak attacks. The rogue must be able to see the target well enough to pick out a vital spot and must be able to reach such a spot. A rogue cannot sneak attack while striking a creature with concealment or striking the limbs of a creature whose vitals are beyond reach.

Trapfinding: Rogues (and only rogues) can use the Search skill to locate traps when the task has a Difficulty Class higher than 20.

Finding a nonmagical trap has a DC of at least 20, or higher if it is well hidden. Finding a magic trap has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it.

Rogues (and only rogues) can use the Disable Device skill to disarm magic traps. A magic trap generally has a DC of 25 + the level of the spell used to create it.

A rogue who beats a trap's DC by 10 or more with a Disable Device check can study a trap, figure out how it works, and bypass it (with her party) without disarming it.

Evasion (Ex): At 2nd level and higher, a rogue can avoid even magical and unusual attacks with great agility. If she makes a successful Reflex saving throw against an attack that normally deals half damage on a successful save, she instead takes no damage. Evasion can be used only if the rogue is wearing light armor or no armor. A helpless rogue does not gain the benefit of evasion.

Trap Sense (Ex): At 3rd level, a rogue gains an intuitive sense that alerts her to danger from traps, giving her a +1 bonus on Reflex saves made to avoid traps and a +1 dodge bonus to AC against attacks made by traps. These bonuses rise to +2 when the rogue reaches 6th level, to +3 when she reaches 9th level, to +4 when she reaches 12th level, to +5 at 15th, and to +6 at 18th level.

Trap sense bonuses gained from multiple classes stack.

Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Starting at 4th level, a rogue can react to danger before her senses would normally allow her to do so. She retains her Dexterity bonus to AC (if any) even if she is caught flat-footed or struck by an invisible attacker. However, she still loses her Dexterity bonus to AC if immobilized.

If a rogue already has uncanny dodge from a different class she automatically gains improved uncanny dodge (see below) instead.

Skills: Hobgoblins have a +4 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

Possessions: Chain mail, heavy shield, masterwork longsword.

E84. HIDDEN ARMORY

Weapons, armor, and shields fill this room from floor to ceiling. They all appear to be in good repair and little dust has collected on them. At the center of the room sits a forge surrounded by a circle of inlaid silver. The anvil is made out of white marble and glows slightly. The hammer is made out of adamantite and sits atop the anvil, calling out to be used.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as an emergency armory for the garrison, reached by using the all-door. The command word to open the all-door to this Room is "Kelara."

None of the weapons in here are magic, but the forge allows them to be imbued temporarily with magic. If a weapon or suit of armor is placed on the anvil and struck with the hammer it can be imbued with magic by draining hit points (permanently) from the wielder of the hammer. For every hit point drained, the item is enchanted with a +1 enhancement bonus for 1 day, up to a +5 enhancement bonus. These bonuses only last for 24 hours.

Any armor or weapon qualities with a market value rated in enhancement bonus may also be added to an item by trading in the appropriate amount of enhancement bonuses. The process takes ten minutes. This process may only be performed on non-magical weapons and the weapons need not be masterwork.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 1, Safe

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: There is at least one of every type of weapon and armor within this Room. There may be more than one at the DM's discretion.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

E85. LOST GARDEN

Originally Room E85 was a garden tended by the celestials as a reminder of the green world they fought to protect. Unfortunately with the depleted numbers of the garrison the garden has not been properly cared for, and now it is a miniature jungle. As a result, a number of undesirable creatures have taken up residence here. These creatures live off of the magical daylight that bathes the Room.

The garden's most common inhabitants are phantom fungus and purple fungus, though a few celestial shambling mounds are also in the area. These shambling mounds are formed of mutated celestial plants, making them far more agreeable than most shambling mounds. While not particularly intelligent these creatures protect the garden from harm and chase evil creatures out of it if they can. They leave the various fungi alone, counting them as part of the garden. Few creatures from other areas of the dungeon come to the garden, knowing the danger of its inhabitants.

The shambling mounds are Friendly to non-evil PCs, who do no damage to the garden or its plants. The shambling mounds do not leave the garden under any circumstances, but work with the celestials if given the option.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

Roll for a Random Encounter once per hour.

1d20	Encounter
1	The PCs find a small bush with gleaming red berries. A Survival check (DC 25) reveals them as blood berries — consuming one cures 1d4 hit points. There is 1d10 berries on the bush.
2	The PCs find a large, branching tree with wide, green leaves weighted down by large fruit. A Survival check (DC 30) reveals this tree to be a sinter tree — eating the fruit restores 1 point of temporary Strength and temporary Constitution damage. The tree holds 1d6 ripe fruit.
3	The PCs find a small green fern with abnormally thick leaves. A Survival check (DC 25) reveals the plant to be an angel fern — smeared on a the skin, it duplicates the effect of hide from animals (caster level 8th). There is enough sap to cover 1d4 Medium creatures.
4	The PCs find a red shrub covered with orange berries. A Survival check (DC 25) reveals it to be a fire bush — properly crushed and treated, a flask of alchemist's fire can be made from one berry (requiring a DC 15 Craft (alchemy) check). There are 1d6 berries on the shrub.
5	The PCs find a darkwood tree. — chopped down it provides enough wood to make five heavy shields. The shambling mounds do not react well to such actions, however.
6	The PCs hear the sound of water falling from the upper branches, mimicking the sound of rain.
7	Rain. The PCs are suddenly drenched by a heavy down pour falling with no discernible source. The rain lasts for 5 minutes, covers the entire garden, and creates Concealment.
8–12	Nothing
13–14	A phantom fungus attacks anyone that wanders too close.
15	A violet fungus attacks any creature that comes within reach.
16	A celestial shambling mound approaches the PCs. It attacks those who harm the garden or anyone evil. Otherwise, it leaves the PCs alone and continue on its way.
17	Farggalaan (Room E86) traveling invisibly through the Garden. He avoids the PCs if he does not know them.
18	A large monstrous spider attacks a group of less than three, but avoids larger groups.
19–20	A shrieker fungus screams if anyone approaches. Immediately roll another encounter on this table, ignoring a shrieker fungus result.

E85. LOST GARDEN

Both the secret doors at the southern end of the Room can be found with a DC 30 Search check. They are both triggered by pressing a stone in the wall next to the door; these stones are currently underneath a layer of vines, but they can still be pushed easily.

This large room appears to be an interior garden. The ceiling is masked with a blue sky, complete with a sun and the occasional storm cloud. The floor is covered with dirt and plant life abounds. In the distance you hear creatures moving through the forest and you swear you hear rain falling somewhere in the room. Someone put a very large forest in the middle of this dungeon.

Initial Attitude: Varies

Encounter: This Room is one giant forest with little in the way of landmarks or features. If the Room were larger one could easily get lost in it. The creatures that inhabit it are largely nomadic wanderers that have little in the way of dens, so there are no specifically important regions of the Room.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: See the Section description above.

Treasure: None of the creatures of the Lost Garden have anything of value. There is one possible source of treasure; in the southeastern corner of the Room a tree's roots have covered the corpse of a hound archon, but a DC 35 Search check is required to find the body. On the body are a silver dagger, 6 +1 arrows, a mighty composite longbow (+2 Str bonus), and a spiked chain.

EL: Varies

Scaling: To increase the challenge of these encounters, increase the HD of all creatures by +2. To decrease the challenge, reduce their HD by 2.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a shambler must hit with both slam attacks. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can constrict.

Constrict (Ex): A shambler deals 2d6+7 points of damage with a successful grapple check.

Immunity to Electricity (Ex): Shamblers take no damage from electricity. Instead, any electricity attack used against a shambler temporarily grants it 1d4 points of Constitution. The shambler loses these points at the rate of 1 per hour.

Skills: Shamblers have a +4 racial bonus on Hide, Listen, and Move Silently checks. * They have a +12 racial bonus on Hide checks when in a swampy or forested area.

Smite Evil (Su): Once per day a celestial creature can make a normal melee attack to deal extra damage equal to its HD (maximum of +20) against an evil foe.

Skills and Feats: Listen +4, Move Silently +6, Spot +4; Alertness.

Greater Invisibility (Su): This ability is constant, allowing a phantom fungus to remain invisible even when attacking. It works like greater invisibility (caster level 12th) and lasts as long as the phantom fungus is alive. This ability is not subject to the invisibility purge spell. A phantom fungus becomes visible 1 minute after it is killed.

Skills: A phantom fungus has a +5 racial bonus on Move Silently checks.

E86 THROUGH E88. FARGGALAAN THE NECROMANCER

One of Ezrael's apprentices, Farggalaan escaped Seraxes and the shadows shortly after their defeat by the celestials. Farggalaan is usually found in Rooms E86 through E88.

Farggalaan is a goblin wizard of moderate power. He was raised by humans for most of his childhood due to an early indication of his magical abilities, but he really just wants to be a goblin. He has no dreams of grand conquest at the head of undead hordes like his master Ezrael had; Farggalaan just wants a comfortable life, a mate, and to live to a ripe old age. If given the chance to escape he does anything in his power to make it so, short of facing the shadows in direct combat. But, he can only be trusted as long as his best interests are at stake unless the PCs actually befriend him, a process that would take several weeks. Farggalaan has never had a non-goblin friend that treated him as an equal. Doing so earns his trust quickly and garners the PCs a ready ally in Region E.

More than anything in the dungeon Farggalaan fears Seraxes and the shadows, who he knows seek to capture him. Farggalaan does not enter the shadow territory for any reason and avoids going anywhere near it. Farggalaan actively wants to destroy the shadows, thinking Seraxes a creature too dangerous to allow to live, and aids in any plan to destroy him. Farggalaan has no interest in rescuing Phinadar Solas from the captivity of the shadows because the two often clashed while under the tutelage of Ezrael. Farggalaan avoids the celestial garrison, fearing they will kill him outright, but he has learned of the Redeemed and seeks to contact them as possible allies. If the celestials learn of Farggalaan they either kill him or press him into the Redeemed, depending on what faction of the garrison finds him.

E86. FARGGALAAN'S LABORATORY

The door to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 25 Open Lock check. Farggalaan keeps the only key.

The sound of bubbling liquids and boiling water mix in this room filled with beakers, glass tubes, oddly colored slimes, and dangerous looking unlabeled clay flasks. There are tables against all the walls of the room and another in the center, all of which are pot marked with scorch marks. Several chairs of varying designs surround the tables, all of which are made for someone fairly short.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room serves as Farggalaan's laboratory. It is a fully functional alchemist's lab. He spends much of his time here working on alchemical or magical items. He is not presently around.

Encounter Condition: Smoke

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: If the PCs search this Room, allow them a DC 15 Search check. The number the highest roll exceeds the check by is the number of items they find from the following — a set of masterwork thieves' tools, a magnifying glass, a set of merchant's scales, a water clock, 500 gp worth of potion making materials that weigh 20 lbs., 500 gp worth of scroll making materials that weigh 10 lbs., two flasks of acid, three flasks of alchemist's fire, three vials of antitoxin, one everburning torch, three smokesticks, two sunrods, two tanglefoot bags, three thunderstones, five tindertwigs, two potions of mage armor, and a scroll of identify.

E87. FARGGALAAN'S QUARTERS

If you cram one more book, bone, or odd-looking shiny object into this room it would explode. Numerous shelves line the walls of this room, except for the southeastern corner where a bed juts up against the wall. The shelves are all overflowing with a wide variety of knickknacks to the point where the floor before each shelf is completely covered. A table in the northwestern corner of the room is the only clear space, on which rests an open book that is blank. A small goblin bolts upright in the bed when you enter, a wand held at the ready, a questioning look on his face. "Do I barge into your bedroom?" it queries sounding very annoyed.

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: This is Farggalaan's living quarters and he does not appreciate being disturbed. However, he is not necessarily looking for a fight, either. Assuming the PCs do not attack, Farggalaan invites them in, his wand sitting on his lap — ready for use. Farggalaan was raised by humans so he speaks fluent and even poetic common, and he is polite and well mannered.

The book on the table is Farggalaan's journal which details his daily activities since escaping the shadows, including magical experiments, and logged entries regarding ingredients for alchemical research.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment, Spell Resistance 15 (PCs only)

Tactics: If attacked Farggalaan takes the first round to cast darkness on himself and then targets the largest PC with blindness the round after that. He uses his wand of lightning bolt to defend himself, saving his prepared offensive spells for more appropriate situations (scorching ray for spellcasters, cause fear on rogues, etc.).

Farggalaan takes prisoners if he can, hoping that after a sound beating the PCs may be more willing to listen to reason. Farggalaan has no place to flee to so he makes his stand here unless an opportunity to escape via gaseous form or expeditious retreat presents itself. If Farggalaan reaches the door, he uses wall of force to keep the PCs from pursuing him.

If he expects trouble, Farggalaan casts greater invisibility, haste, lesser globe of invulnerability, mage armor, and stoneskin on himself before the fight begins.

If the fight lasts for more than 8 rounds Edgar (Room E88) investigates.

Treasure: A Search check (DC 20) reveals a scroll of darkness, a potion of cure light wounds, 56 gp, 79 sp, 34 cp, and a pearl worth 100 gp in various hiding places throughout the Room.

EL: 10

Scaling: This encounter is designed to be exceptionally challenging. It is not recommended that you alter it. However, if the PCs beat Farggalaan too easily, allow him to escape and prepare for a second battle.

To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase Farggalaan's level by two. To decrease the challenge, reduce Farggalaan's level by two and have Edgar arrive in 12 rounds.

Possessions: Spellbook, wand of lightning bolt (15 charges), a ring of protection +2, a scroll of invisibility, and a potion of cure moderate wounds.

E88. FARGGALAAN'S DISPOSAL ROOM

The ceiling of this room is stained by fire as evidenced by two small, blackened piles of wood in the southeastern and western corners of the room. Refuse is scattered across the northern section of the room. At the center of the room is a circular stone table. A monstrous spider sits before the tables, clacking its claws excitedly.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room serves as Farggalaan's garbage disposal. It also serves as a home for Farggalaan's charmed pet monstrous spider Edgar (hp 31), who attacks anyone who bothers him.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Edgar is more concerned with being left alone and keeping Farggalaan safe than killing the PCs so he leaves them alone if they do not bother him. If they attack him Edgar tries to grab the PCs and use his web ability to trap the PCs and then use his poison attack on them.

Treasure: Beyond the blackened debris, there is nothing of value here. Farggalaan only throws away what he cannot use.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase Edgar's HD by two. To decrease the challenge, reduce Edgar's HD by two.

E89 THROUGH E92. THE INSECT HORDE

A number of unusually large insects inhabit Rooms E89 through E92, driving out other creatures by sheer numbers.

One of the many deceased members of the celestial garrison was a trumpet archon known as Sedar the Hive, renowned for her special affinity for insects. In addition to the normal powers of her horn it could create a horde of oversized insects, ready to do her bidding. Unfortunately during the battle that followed the second earthquake Sedar chased down a group of lesser devils who had breached the ward and cornered them in Room E92. In the fight that followed the devils were slain but Sedar lost her life as well, driving her sword through the last devil with her dying breath. Unfortunately in the fight Sedar's trumpet was cleaved in twain and the summoned insects all suddenly were free to wander as they desired, taking over a small section of the dungeon. The insects do not battle each other, but they attack any other creature they encounter. The celestials are aware of their presence but unaware of their source, while most of the other creatures simply avoid them when possible.

The Large insects have some trouble fitting through many of the doors in the dungeon but manage it, requiring a full round action to crawl through a doorway.

E89. SPIDER ARMORY

Overtured shelves and racks cover the floor of this room, many of which are cracked and broken. Bones and dried husks are stacked on top of the shards of wood. Above the broken remains are a number of large spider webs, cover much of the ceiling and all the corners. In the webs in both the northwestern and southeastern corners a large spider sits, eyeing you eight times over.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Three monstrous spiders (hp 23, 22, 21) wait in this Room for prey to wander by. The third spider hangs above the door the PCs enter through, requiring a DC 22 Spot check or DC 21 Listen check to notice before it attacks.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Echoes 6

Tactics: The spider above the door tries to attack the third person to enter the Room. The other two spiders attack once their sneaky comrade drops down, using their web spinners to entangle the front two people and then close in to bite them once they are entangled.

Treasure: A DC 20 Search check reveals the following in the Room: 12 sp, a masterwork morning star, a rapier, a light crossbow, 12 bolts, and a small silver statue of an angel taking to flight worth 100 gp.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two more monstrous spiders. To decrease the challenge, remove one monstrous spider.

E90. HALL OF THE FALLEN

Fog clings to the floor of this room, crawling up the many columns reaching the ceiling. The floor is moist and the lights subdued, giving the room the feel of a natural subterranean formation. Skittering creatures can be heard in the distance, but with all this fog, the source of the noise may be much closer. The columns are all covered in text in a range of languages, all carved directly into the stone.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: There are five giant fire beetles (hp 5 each), two Medium monstrous scorpions (hp 13 each), and three Medium monstrous spiders (hp 11 each) lurking in this Room. A heavy stench hangs in the air, as the vermin dig through the rot of the dungeon walls, wallowing in filth.

The texts on the columns are eulogies and messages written by members of the garrison to those who fell in battle.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment, Fog, Spell Resistance 16, [Stagnant Air]

Tactics: Insects of a like type swarm a single target before moving on to a new victim. If any of the PCs are dropped, the insects swarm the PCs' bodies.

The DM should have the monstrous scorpions use their Constitution damaging poison to hurt bards, sorcerers, wizards, and anyone with few hit points. Lastly, the spiders target barbarians, fighters, and PCs who rely heavily on Strength.

DMs who fully want to take advantage of this encounter, should increase the DC of these saves by 3 or more to really challenge the PCs and provide the vermin with cold and fire resistance. If anyone escapes this encounter without ability score damage, this encounter was too easy.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 5

Scaling: To increase the challenge of the encounter, give each creature cold and fire resistance 10. To reduce the challenge, reduce the number of each insect type by one.

E91. FOUNTAIN ROOM

Two large stone tables are in the center of this room. In the southern wall a fountain gurgles slowly as four large centipedes click softly while drinking from the fountain. They look up as you enter, eyeing you.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room provides an unnatural water supply for most of the nearby garrison members. However, recently, it was taken over by vermin and it now serves the local insect population. Four monstrous centipedes (hp 15 each) have wedged themselves in, waiting for prey looking to drink from the fountain.

Encounter Condition: Cover, Echoes 4, Hallowed 3, Spell Resistance 18

Tactics: Four centipedes charge the PCs, using their poison to incapacitate them. As in Room E90, they use their poison against the PCs least likely to resist their venom. To severely hamper the PCs, have the monstrous scorpion attack the physically weakest party member.

Because of the magical properties of this Room, each centipede and scorpion has its poison DC increased by 2; this is not noted in the stat block below.

Treasure: The fountain in this Room is invigorating and refreshing, but beyond that it can heal creatures of life-threatening ailments. Anyone drinking from this fountain immediately turns permanent ability score damage to temporary ability score damage, and temporary ability score damage is healed immediately to all but 1 point (which heals normally in 24 hours). In addition, everyone drinking from the fountain heals 2d8 points of damage as if they drank a cure potion.

PCs may only gain benefit from the fountain once per week, but cannot drink as much as they want without getting sick. Like all cure spells, this water harms undead.

If placed in a flask (or any container), the water spoils after 24 hours.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter add two monstrous centipedes and increase the DC of their poison by +3. To decrease the challenge, remove one centipede.

✶ Monstrous Centipede, Large: CR 1; Large vermin; HD 3d8; hp 15; Init +2; Spd 40 ft., climb 40 ft.; AC 14, touch 11, flat-footed 12; Base Atk +2; Crp +7; Atk +3 melee (1d8+1 plus poison, bite); Full Atk +3 melee (1d8+1 plus poison, bite); Space/Reach 10 ft./5 ft.; SA Poison; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., vermin traits; AL N; SV Fort +3, Ref +3, Will +1; Str 13, Dex 15, Con 10, Int —, Wis 10, Cha 2.

Skills and Feats: Climb +10, Hide +6, Spot +4; Weapon FinesseB
Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 11, initial and secondary damage, 1d4 Dex. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Skills: Monstrous centipedes have a +4 racial bonus on Spot checks, and a +8 racial bonus on Climb and Hide checks. They can use either their Strength or Dexterity modifier for Climb checks, whichever is higher. Monstrous centipedes can take 10 on Climb checks, even if threatened or distracted.

E92. HOME OF THE TRUMPET

While this room looks to have once been a sparring room or practice area of some type, its character is drastically changed now. At the center of the room sits a winged, bald humanoid, a broken trumpet clutched in one hand and a spear in the other. The spear is impaling a horrid, white insectoid creature the size of four men combined. Also in the room are corpses of horned and winged creatures, all decomposing. Several slain insects also sit rotting on the floor of the room. Chittering noises can be heard coming from the pile of corpses.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: There is no illumination in this Room. This is where Sedar and her enemies fell. Now, five monstrous scorpions (hp 26), attracted by the residue of magic, make their home among the bodies.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Deep Darkness, Hallowed 2, Spell Resistance 15

Tactics: The monstrous scorpions, hiding among the corpses, attack the PCs as soon as they investigate the bodies. They sting and drag the PCs back to the pile of corpses where the victims are devoured. The scorpions attack targets without armor first and concentrate their attacks on a single target when possible.

Treasure: Sedar's spear is a +1 holy longspear.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two monstrous scorpions. To decrease the challenge, remove two of the monstrous scorpions.

✶ Monstrous Scorpion, Medium: CR 2; Medium vermin; HD 4d8+8; hp 26; Init +0; Spd 40 ft.; AC 14, touch 10, flat-footed 14; Base Atk +3; Grp +5; Atk +5 melee (1d4+2, claw); Full Atk +5 melee (1d4+2, 2 claws) and +0 melee (1d4 plus poison, sting); SA Constrict 1d4+2, improved grab, poison; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., tremorsense 60 ft., vermin traits; AL N; SV Fort +5, Ref +0, Will +0; Str 14, Dex 10, Con 14, Int —, Wis 10, Cha 2.
Skills and Feats: Climb +6, Hide +4, Spot +4.

Constrict (Ex): A monstrous scorpion deals automatic claw damage on a successful grapple check.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a monstrous scorpion must hit with a claw attack. A monstrous scorpion can use either its Strength modifier or Dexterity modifier for grapple checks, whichever is better.

Poison (Ex): Injury, Fortitude DC 13, initial and secondary damage 1d3 Con. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Skills: A monstrous scorpion has a +4 racial bonus on Climb, Hide, and Spot checks.

E93 THROUGH E100. HOUNDS OF SHADOW

A group of mastiffs who escaped during the second earthquake live in the western portion of Region E, waiting for their chance to free other creatures from behind the wards of the celestials. These shadow mastiffs serve no master and control Rooms E93 through E100.

Of all the groups in Region E, the shadow mastiffs are the only group the celestials are actively concerned with. The shadow mastiffs are not much of a threat, but they did manage to escape during the second earthquake due to a ward that was not properly charged because of the missing ward staves. The shadow mastiffs waited in Region E for other creatures to join them from below and to lick their wounds, but soon found that no one else had escaped. By the time they had decided no one else was coming they were already trapped, both by the repaired wards of the celestials and Seraxes shadow legions. If the shadow mastiffs could find the secret door leading to Room E2 they could easily escape, but as yet they have not been able to.

The goal of the shadow mastiffs is to help the creatures imprisoned below escape, which means destroying the wards. Having little magical power, the shadow mastiffs have decided destroying the surviving members of the garrison is the best way of destroying the wards. They do not fight the garrison openly, instead occasionally ambushing lone celestials or stealing supplies. The shadow mastiffs mainly trouble Kelara and her side of the garrison, rarely interfering with the inevitables or their operations.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	A loud clanging noise echoes through the Section.
2	There is a cold rush of air and then a scuttling sound, like an approaching or fleeing creature.
3	A ghostly image of a celestial's death. This image is nothing but a spiritual echo, depicting fiends and shadows slaying the celestial.
4–11	Nothing
12–16	Four shadow mastiffs out looking for a meal. Non-allies and non-celestials are attacked without pause.
17	A Large monstrous scorpion hunting. It attacks anything.
18	The PCs stumble upon a trap.

E93. SHRINE

Six fountains are built into the walls of this room, each in a different design. All the fountains feature a humanoid statue at their center, but these statues have long since been damaged to the point of being unrecognizable. The fountains bubble slightly, but all the fountains now leak water onto the floor through numerous cracks. A small shrine sits against the center of the eastern wall, but it was long ago savagely attacked and its wood frame lays splintered and battered. Three large, black furred dogs cavort in the marble fountains.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room served the garrison as a place of contemplation and purification, each of the fountains dedicated to a godly patron of the garrison. Now it lays in disarray, the divine long absent. Instead three shadow mastiffs (hp 32, 31, 30) use this Room to bathe.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Distracting Visions 6, Echoes 6, [Total Concealment]

Tactics: If the PCs are exceptionally noisy, the shadow mastiffs are ready. Otherwise, they howl at the PCs at a distance the first round of combat and close quickly for melee thereafter. They divide and conquer, corralling a single prey into a corner and weakening the "herd." Should the fight last 3 rounds or more, the mastiffs flee to Room E95.

Treasure: The fountain in this Room draws upon the same spring as Room E91. Drinking from these fountains produces the same effect.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one shadow mastiff. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

♣ Shadow Mastiff: CR 5; Medium outsider (extraplanar); HD 4d8+12; hp 32, 31, 30; Init +5; Spd 50 ft.; AC 14, touch 11, flat-footed 13; Base Atk +4; Grp +7; Atk +7 melee (1d6+4, bite); Full Atk +7 melee (1d6+4, bite); SA Bay, trip; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., shadow blend, scent; AL NE; SV Fort +7, Ref +5, Will +5; Str 17, Dex 13, Con 17, Int 4, Wis 12, Cha 13.

Skills and Feats: Hide +8, Listen +8, Move Silently +8, Spot +8, Survival +8*; Dodge, Improved Initiative, Track*.

Bay (Su): When a shadow mastiff howls or barks, all creatures except evil outsiders within a 300-ft. spread must succeed on a DC 13 Will save or become panicked for 2d4 rounds. This is a sonic mind-affecting fear effect. Whether or not the save is successful, an affected creature is immune to the same mastiff's bay for 24 hours. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Trip (Ex): A shadow mastiff that hits with its bite attack can attempt to trip the opponent as a free action (+3 check modifier) without making a touch attack or provoking an attack of opportunity. If the attempt fails, the opponent cannot react to trip the shadow mastiff.

Shadow Blend (Su): In any condition of illumination other than full daylight, a shadow mastiff can disappear into the shadows, giving it total concealment. Artificial illumination, even a light or continual flame spell, does not negate this ability. A daylight spell, however, will.

Skills: * A shadow mastiff has a +4 racial bonus on Survival checks when tracking by scent.

E94. ROOM OF WARMTH

A blindingly bright globe of light illuminates this room from the ceiling, completely filling the room with daylight. Making the light seem even brighter this room is abnormally warm. While not likely to cause serious harm, staying in this room for long will be very uncomfortable.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room stays at a constant 90 degrees Fahrenheit, allowing creatures used to a slightly warmer environment to remain comfortable. The shadow mastiffs avoid this Room due to the daylight spell attached to the ceiling. They do not chase characters into the Room, but set ambushes for them outside instead.

Encounter Condition: Safe, Spell Resistance 10

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

E95. SILENCE

As soon as you enter this room everything goes dead quiet; you can't even hear your own heartbeat. The walls are coated in dull gray metal plating that reflects little light and makes the room gloomy. Three small straw mats sit on the floor of the room along with a single wooden chair. A single humanoid corpse leans against the north wall, several arrows sticking out of his chest. Three large black dogs are asleep on the floor of the room, apparently taking advantage of the utter and complete silence.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room is under the effect of a permanent silence spell; no sound of any type can be heard within the confines of this Room. The three shadow mastiffs (hp 30 each) do not awaken unless the PCs touch them or the PCs drop something heavy enough on the floor to make it vibrate.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If awakened the shadow mastiffs flee the Room immediately so they can use their bay ability, concentrating their attacks on any character blocking the door until they escape. If unable to escape they fight until the last.

Treasure: The corpse, that of a slain aasimar paladin, carries a potion of cure moderate wounds, a masterwork halberd, and a dented suit of chain mail.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one shadow mastiff and have them all awake, ready to ambush the PCs. To decrease the challenge, remove one shadow mastiff.

Skills: * A shadow mastiff has a +4 racial bonus on Survival checks when tracking by scent.

E96. WHITE NOISE

As soon as you open the door to this room an intense wall of noise assaults your senses, reflexively cover your ears for a few seconds. The inside of the room is covered in shiny metal plating and contains only a few metal chairs and a straw mat. These facts are nearly completely ignored in the face of the overwhelming noise with no discernable source in the room. The sounds are also difficult to identify; they are too loud to easily recognize.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Anyone staying in this Room suffers 1d3 points of sonic damage each minute and they must make a DC 14 Fortitude save or be deafened for 1d10 hours. Creatures with sonic resistance are immune to these effects.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 10

Tactics: It is inexplicable why a Room of this kind could be built, but perhaps it was used as a tool to subdue beasts the inevitables could not normally contain.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

E97. A ROOM OF COGS

From within this room comes a number of soft, repetitive click noises, the source of which are dozens of cogs, cranks, pulleys, and chains. This room looks like an automated device of some sort, but its exact purpose is not clear. The only unusually thing about the cogs is that there seems to be the body of a humanoid corpse clogging the gears in the northeastern corner. Three large black dogs sit in the center of the room.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: The cogs do not actually perform any useful function, other than grate on the nerves of those unaccustomed to the sound. The one extraordinary feature of the Room is that all the walls have gravity pushing down on them, meaning characters can walk on the walls or ceiling as easily as they walk on the floor.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Distracting Noises 8

Tactics: The three shadow mastiffs (hp 33 each) bay as soon as they see the PCs, summoning help from the surrounding Rooms and hopefully causing some of the PCs to panic. They then close for melee combat, using the odd gravity of the Room to circle around the PCs and attack the rear if possible. The shadow mastiffs flee or hide in the shadows if seriously wounded and no help arrives.

The body is that of an aasimar wizard who was slain by the shadow mastiffs a few months ago.

Treasure: On the wizard's body the PCs can find a scroll of scroll of sculpt sound, a scroll of gentle repose, a scroll of keen edge, and a wand of shatter with 12 charges.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one shadow mastiff and increase the Distracting Noise to 12. To decrease the challenge, remove one shadow mastiff and reduce the Distracting Noise to 5.

E98. MEDITATION

Framed collections of shredded canvas hang where there were once paintings in this room, setting the theme of destruction for the entirety of the room. There are three smashed wooden tables, several broken chairs, and several destroyed bottles, incense burners and jars. Two large black dogs stalk through the room, growling at each other.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room once served as a meditation Room for the garrison. Unfortunately it has been completely demolished by the two shadow mastiffs (hp 33 each) who reside here now.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Concealment, Echoes 5

Tactics: Upon spotting the PCs, the shadow mastiffs use their bay ability and then flee to Room E99. From there, they run to Room E100 to warn Leirkos. They only fight if trapped.

Treasure: NA

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one shadow mastiff (who stays behind to hold off the PCs). To decrease the challenge, allow the PCs a surprise round before the shadow mastiffs can run for help.

E99. ROOM OF NIGHT

This room is completely black. Your light sources can barely penetrate the inky darkness within, reaching only a fraction of their normal range. It sounds like there is something moving inside, but it is impossible to make out what it is.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room served as a place for those members of the garrison who needed a temporary respite from the garrison. The darkness effect in this Room reduces the range of all light sources to 1/4th of their normal range. It cannot be dispelled.

There are three shadow mastiffs (hp 34, 33, 32) in this Room, waiting for the PCs to enter. The floor of the Room is covered in scavenged sheets and pillows because the shadow mastiffs often sleep in this Room.

Encounter Condition: Ambush (darkness), Concealment, Deep Darkness, Hazardous Footing 18, Spell Resistance 12

Tactics: The shadow mastiffs are aware of the PCs and cannot be surprised. They fight as long as the PCs seem intimidated by the darkness, but they bay as soon as they face serious opposition. This baying draws Leirkos and his two guards from Room E100 in 1d3 rounds.

E100. ROOM OF DEATH

This dark gray room is illuminated at a light level equal to twilight, casting a strange pale tone of light around the room. Several black iron chairs are scattered about the room and a number of skulls are attached to the walls. A small nest of blankets and pillows sits in the southwestern corner of the room. The whole room has a serious, oppressive feel, as if only weighty matters are allowed to be contemplated here.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This Room was intended as a place for those mortal members of the garrison to contemplate and cherish their own humanity and for the immortal members of the garrison to understand what it is to be mortal. It became a place for the marut inevitables to deal with the failures of the Region and its leadership.

In time, the Room was lost and now Leirkos (hp 50), the leader of the shadow mastiff pack, makes his home in this Room. His mate Phaer (hp 48) can be found here with him at all times.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Fearless, Smoke, [Total Concealment]

Tactics: Leirkos attacks any intruders unless they submit immediately by baring their neck to him. Otherwise he and his mate bay for two rounds, before leaping into the fray. They are fearless and fight without mercy. Leirkos fights to the death, knowing that a show of weakness would lose him his alpha status among the pack.

Treasure: Leirkos has collected a number of items, which he keeps in his nest. A DC 15 Search check reveals his stash — an ever-smoking bottle, a ruby worth 200 gp, and a silver necklace worth 150 gp.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one shadow mastiff guard. To decrease the challenge, remove Phaer.

E101 THROUGH E112. CELESTIAL GARRISON

The surviving members of the celestial garrison that do not believe in the efforts of the inevitables live in the northwestern corner of Region E, claiming Rooms E101 through E112. Despite their small numbers these steadfast survivors continue their duty to keep the ancient evils below locked away; millennia without backup, relief, or even acknowledgement of their existence has worn on these proud celestials, but they still stand strong against the darkness they swore to imprison so long ago.

The celestials are led by Kelara the Fearsome, a Leonal that originally was twelfth in command of the garrison. Attrition has forced her to take charge of the remaining members of the garrison to keep the wards active, despite the lost ward staves and the issues with the inevitables. Due to the low number of celestials available for charging the wards a good portion of the celestial garrison is level-drained at any given time, which makes it difficult for Kelara to force the inevitables to shape up, or take the fight to the shadows or shadow mastiffs encroaching on the garrison.

The celestials spend all their time recharging the wards, patrolling the wards, or resting and protecting their home territory. The Bralani occasionally venture into other Regions of Region E to hunt, but the rest of the garrison stays within their own territory for security. They know there are a number of items somewhere in the section they could use, such as the all-door or the missing ward staves.

The celestials attack evil creatures that enter their domain, but they seek to parlay with other creatures and are more than willing to form alliances with other good creatures. Kelara requires some type of test of the PCs' intentions and abilities though, such as collecting half a dozen barghest pelts or slaying a certain number of shadows. They can exchange healing, some magical equipment, and knowledge for help recovering lost items or assistance with charging the wards. Kelara is greatly appreciative of any help the PCs can give; possibly even inducting them into the garrison as honorary members if they are extremely helpful.

Kelara and her celestials avoid interacting with the inevitables, not wanting to be a party to their questionable methods. Kelara does not feel she and her followers have the strength to force a resolution currently, but if her position improves she tries to force the inevitables to disband and the Redeemed to forsake their current course. Kelara's ultimate goal is to get the inevitables to return home so their programming can be updated.

Due to the celestial ability to always use tongues as a spell-like ability when around strangers the celestials often speak in extremely archaic versions of celestial that are not known to mortals. This allows them to keep their discussions private and can be disconcerting to those not accustomed to it.

THE GARRISON

Besar. Rabble-rouser of the garrison, he often disobeys inconsequential orders if they interfere with his efforts to get the most out of life. He thinks the garrison should spend more time hunting down the barghests and shadow mastiffs. Besar does not disobey orders that are vital to the garrison, such as ward charging duty, but he readily skips out on helping out with supplies or removing rubble. He accepts whatever punishments these actions earn him with aplomb, always ready to do his part, but on his own schedule.

Doj. While he lives within the confines of the garrison, Doj spends most of his time apart from the others, seeking solitude or the thrill of the hunt. He can be counted on to be ready in times of battle, but otherwise he is rarely around. Doj's mate, Sensil, recently disappeared and is presumed dead. Doj has been consumed with sadness and guilt for not saving her.

Kelara the Fearsome. The leader and (currently) highest ranking celestial in the garrison. Weary but ready to die with honor, she is the epitome of honor and martial prowess. Kelara was originally twelfth in line for command of the garrison, a squad commander in charge of one of the elite heavy combat teams in the garrison. Kelara is very much a "smash it until it's not a problem" sort of leader at heart, but she realizes this and tempers her actions with patience. Kelara carries one of the ward staves when it is not in use.

Lilig. Originally stationed in the deeper reaches of the dungeon, Lilig retreated when her post was overrun shortly after the first earthquake. She still mourns her lost comrades and wishes someone would find their bodies down in the depths where they lie unburied. She questions anyone who returns from the lower depths about any celestials they find beneath, hoping against hope some of her comrades survive.

Morkor, Whose Arms Are Soaked in Blood. Kelara's right hand man, he is the most powerful individual combatant amongst the surviving members of the garrison, but has no desire to lead. He merely wants his enemy's blood on his hands and the innocents saved from the predation of evil. Morkor has been Kelara's right hand man since they were assigned to the garrison and the two are nearly inseparable. Morkor carries one of the ward staves when it is not in use.

Sanjid. One of the reserve healers assigned to the garrison, Sanjid has not seen as much combat as other members of the garrison. More a scholar than a warrior, he is unsure of his skills as a warrior. He always tries his best, but often fears the results will shame him in the eyes of others.

Sorjin. An unusually large lantern archon, Sorjin keeps an eye on the garden area and the shadows, always concerned about the growing number of shadows. If he was more martially capable Sorjin would go shadow hunting himself, but instead he accompanies the PCs if they think to ask him. Sorjin is protective of the other lantern archons and sees himself as their defender as he is bigger than the others.

Spark. This lantern archon is charged with continually checking on the major wards in the Region, reporting any damage to them. Spark is playful with those it encounters who are not evil, helping them find their way through dark Regions. Spark normally avoids combat, fleeing to the protection of the other celestials.

Spers. While Morkor is not the most capable warrior in the garrison, none desire combat more than Spers. She spends much of her time checking wards and training, always spoiling for a fight.

E101. DOJ'S QUARTERS

A disheveled room with little semblance of organization, sheets, plates, weapons, and clothes lay strewn about the room. The bed in the northeastern corner is almost stripped of its sheets and the pillow has been cast to the floor. A large mirror sits on top of a chest of drawers, but it has been broken. A wooden chair sits unsteadily near the door to the room, one of its legs crudely reattached after being lost some time in the past.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: This is the Room of Doj, a bralani. He is here 30% of the time, spending his time charging wards, patrolling, or looking for Sensil. Doj only comes here to sleep or shout out his frustration. He is rarely in an entertaining mood.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 1, Safe

Tactics: Doj only fights creatures he knows are evil or in his own self-defense. If attacked by creatures of questionable alignment he seeks to capture them for interrogation. If he is attacked by creatures he is sure are evil he does not hesitate to kill them. In either case he normally fights with his +1 holy spiked chain or uses his spell-like ability. Doj is a loner by nature and does not seek out the aid of his fellow celestials in combat and he does not flee combat.

Treasure: A DC 20 Search check reveals a masterwork longsword/short sword set, a silver hand axe, a potion of cure critical wounds, and a small platinum statue of a trumpet archon worth 500 gp.

EL: 12

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter increase Doj's fighter levels by two. To decrease the challenge, remove two fighter levels.

Whirlwind Blast (Su): When in whirlwind form, a bralani can attack with a scouring blast of wind, dealing 3d6 points of damage in a 20-foot line (Reflex DC 17 half). The save DC is Constitution-based.

Alternate Form (Su): A bralani can shift between its humanoid and whirlwind forms as a standard action. In humanoid form, it cannot fly or use its whirlwind blast, but it can use its spell-like abilities and its weapons. In whirlwind form, it can fly, make slam attacks and whirlwind blast attacks, and use spell-like abilities.

A bralani remains in one form until it chooses to assume a new one. A change in form cannot be dispelled, nor does the bralani revert to any particular form when killed. A true seeing spell, however, reveals both forms simultaneously.

Tongues (Su): Bralanis can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using a tongues spell (caster level 14th). This ability is always active.

E102. BESAR'S QUARTERS

A giant bed made by pushing together several smaller beds takes up the entirety of the eastern portion of this chamber. Covered in a number of sheets and blankets, the bed could easily hold ten people. The rest of the room looks as though a whirlwind has hit, but there was little for it to hit. Only a few bits of clothing lay scattered about and much of the room is completely bare.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: Besar loves his bed, and he thinks the bigger it is the better. Besar is here 35% of the time, spending the rest of his days on patrol, charging wards, or being punished for disobeying orders. If the PCs catch him at home he welcomes them to his home, especially if they are members of the garrison. If they are not members he tries to discern their intentions through discussion and then take them to meet Kelara or attack them, as appropriate to the situation.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 3, Safe

Tactics: Besar makes regular use of his whirlwind form, often using it in combat to increase his mobility. He also favors using his spell-like abilities and whirlwind blast to fighting in melee, but he does so only once he uses up his other options. Besar usually fights his battles alone, only seeking help from his comrades when he is badly injured.

Treasure: A DC 15 Search check reveals a masterwork falchion, a potion of aid, a scroll of bear's endurance, and 34 gp — dented and gnawed.

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add Spers (Room E103). To decrease the challenge, reduce Besar's fighter levels by 2.

E103. SPER'S QUARTERS

At the center of this room stands a badly beaten fighting dummy that clearly had been the recipient of a great deal of violence in its day. Against the eastern wall a pile of hay stands behind a collection of targets, all shaped like demons and several have thrown daggers sticking out of them. Other than a simple bed and chest of drawers all the decorations in this room are violent. A short, stocky female elf with white hair stands before the hay targets, bow in hand, preparing to take aim.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: Spers is only here for a limited amount each day, but the PCs are lucky enough to catch her. Spers is mainly interested in keeping her combat skills in top shape so conversation holds little interest for her. Sparring is far more enjoyable, especially since she's tired of sparring with the other members of the garrison.

If the PCs are not yet part of the garrison Spers suggests they go see Kelara and she gathers a group of celestials to escort the PCs to Kelara's chamber.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 2, Safe

Tactics: Spers prefers ranged combat to up front warfare, but knows that the close confines of a dungeon environment often make ranged combat impractical. She does not favor her whirlwind form, preferring the heft of a weapon in her hand. Spers generally does not concern herself with taking prisoners and she readily accepts aid from other members of the garrison.

Treasure: Scattered throughout the Room are a battle axe, 67 arrows, a repeating crossbow, a potion of cat's grace, and a +1 heavy spiked shield.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add Besar (Room E102) or Doj (Room E101). To decrease the challenge, reduce Spers' fighter levels by 2.

E104. GARBAGE ROOM

This room smells of rot and the floor has stains and gouges. It is unremarkable, except for the pit at least ten ft. across, in the center of the room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The bottom of the pit is 40 ft. down and anything thrown in the pit is hit with a disintegrate spell when it strikes the bottom. Each round more than one hundred lbs. of material are in the pit a disintegrate spell is cast from the bottom of the hole, eliminating one 10-ft. cube of material every ten rounds until there is less than one hundred lbs. of material.

If a living being is thrown into the hole they suffer 20d6 points of damage every ten rounds they are at the bottom of the hole, but they are allowed a DC 15 Fortitude save for half damage.

E105. LIBRARY

On this door is a glyph of warding that is activated whenever an evil creature touches the door. The glyph resets one minute after being triggered.

♣ Glyph of Warding (Blast): CR 6; spell; spell trigger: no reset; spell effect (glyph of warding [blast], 10th-level cleric, 8d8 electricity, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); multiple targets (all targets within 5 ft.); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

The walls of this room are completely covered with a mass of book-cases, most of which are filled with books. A long wooden table stretches east-west through the center of this room, surrounded by cushioned wooden chairs. Several books lay open on the table.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room serves as the one remaining library still held by the celestial garrison. Its books are mostly about the creatures trapped below in the dungeon and threats from other planes. All of the books are written in celestial. By spending six hours researching, a PC gains a +4 competence to a single Knowledge or Bardic Lore check regarding the prisoners or evil outsiders in general.

E106. WARD HALL

The lever next to the southern door opens a pit trap that lays beneath the entire floor from the southern doorway to the ward at the north edge of Region E.

♣ Wide-Mouth Spiked Pit with Poisoned Spikes: CR 9; mechanical; manual trigger; manual reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 70 ft. deep (7d6, fall); multiple targets (all targets in the room); pit spikes (Atk +10 melee, 1d4 spikes per target for 1d4+5 plus poison each); poison (giant wasp poison, DC 14 Fortitude save resists, 1d6 Dex/1d6 Dex); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20.

This long hallway's floor is stained deep red with blood, though in some areas the caked blood still remains. Bone fragments and shards of armor are also scattered about the room, providing further proof of the great battle that must have taken place here. To the north a large silver glyph in the floor glows slightly. There is a large metal lever directly next to the door in the southern wall.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room serves as the first line of defense if the ward at the end of the hallway failed. Now it stays empty and unused most of the time. The celestials patrol it regularly and traverse it to reach the wards for recharging, but otherwise do not enter the Room. Some believe the Room to be haunted by the dead — both celestial and infernal.

Encounters happen here every 2 hours and only once per day.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 8, [Haunted]

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: N/A

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, increase the pit trap damage to 12d6. To decrease the challenge, remove the poison from the pit trap.

E107. SANJID'S QUARTERS

This room is spartan with only a small altar, several paintings and a sculpture of an angel in flight. On the northern and southern walls there is a bed and a chest of drawers, but they seem unused. A single bookshelf stands against the eastern wall. A dog-headed humanoid sits on the edge of the southern bed looking up at you.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: This Room is the home of the hound archon Sanjid. Sanjid spends much of his time praying and can be found here 50% of the time. The rest of the time he is out on patrol or charging wards. If the PCs are part of the garrison Sanjid welcomes them to his Room, and if they are not he invites them to come in and sit, but is wary of them. Sanjid tries to get an idea of the alignment of the PCs; if they seem like good allies he leads them to Kelara and if they seem like trouble he leads them to Morkor.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 2, Safe

Tactics: Against most foes Sanjid tries to end fights as quickly as possible using his clerical spells, such as hold person. Against demons, undead, or similarly vile creatures he fights mainly in melee, using his spells for support and healing.

Treasure: The sculpture is worth 600 gp.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add one bralani. To decrease the challenge, lower Sanjid's cleric level by 2 or reduce his prepared spell by 1 per day.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—aid, continual flame, detect evil, message. Caster level 12th.

Aura of Menace (Su): A righteous aura surrounds archons that fight or get angry. Any hostile creature within a 20-ft. radius of an archon must succeed on a DC 16 Will save to resist its effects. The save DC is Charisma-based. Those who fail take a –2 penalty on attacks, AC, and saves for 24 hours or until they successfully hit the archon that generated the aura. A creature that has resisted or broken the effect cannot be affected again by the same archon's aura for 24 hours.

Change Shape (Su): A hound archon can assume any canine form of Small to Large size. While in canine form, the hound archon loses its bite, slam, and greatsword attacks, but gains the bite attack of the form it chooses. For the purposes of this ability, canines include any doglike or wolflike animal of the animal type.

* Domain Spell. Domains: Good (cast good spells at +1 caster level), Healing (cast good spells at +1 caster level).

Teleport (Su): Archons can use greater teleport at will, as the spell (caster level 14th), except that the creature can transport only itself and up to 50 lbs. of objects. Within the confines of this dungeon, the hound archon can only teleport within line of sight.

Tongues (Su): All archons can speak with any creature that has a language, as though using a tongues spell (caster level 14th). This ability is always active.

Turn Undead (Su): Any cleric, regardless of alignment, has the power to affect undead creatures by channeling the power of his faith through his holy (or unholy) symbol (see Turn or Rebuke Undead).

A good cleric (or a neutral cleric who worships a good deity) can turn or destroy undead creatures.

A cleric may attempt to turn undead a number of times per day equal to 3 + his Charisma modifier. A cleric with 5 or more ranks in Knowledge (religion) gets a +2 bonus on turning checks against undead.

Skills: * While in canine form, a hound archon gains a +4 circumstance bonus on Hide and Survival checks.

E108. LANTERN ARCHON QUARTERS

The walls of this room are covered by tapestries and paintings, most of which have seen better days. On the floor sits a collection of statues, many of which are cracked or damaged. A small potted plant grows in the northwest corner of the room. In the way of furniture there are only two chairs. Two glowing balls of light float in the center of the room, gently bobbing up and down.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: This Room is shared by all the surviving lantern archons, but Spark (hp 4) is rarely here. Instead he spends most of his time checking the wards or wandering about the Section. Sorjin (hp 8) and Lilig (hp 5) remain here, when not checking wards or some other duty. They are both willing to accept visitors, but are fearful of unfamiliar creatures, knowing there are many creatures in the dungeon that can easily destroy them. If the PCs can overcome this apprehension through discussion, acts of kindness or joining the garrison the lantern archons gladly act as guides in the dungeon.

The lantern archons know Region E well in terms of layout and what the Rooms used to be when the garrison was in full force, but have little information as to current inhabitants other than the inevitables, and so on. They can point out important landmarks on a map if offered. If allowed, they accompany the PCs, but avoid combat unless it is against the shadows, who they particularly dislike.

The lantern archons can also give a general idea of the creatures to be found in Region F but cannot be specific about what creatures live where. They know a chaos beast resides in Region I and that it should be avoided.

The lantern archons encourage the PCs to join the garrison if the PCs are good-aligned.

Encounter Condition: Hallowed 3, Safe

Tactics: If combat erupts Sorjin charges to the forefront in the hopes Lilig has time to flee. Lilig of course does not want to leave more of her friends to die, so she stays to fight as well. After three rounds of being frustrated with each other both archons flee to get help. All the archons use their light ray attack when threatened.

Treasure: One of the intact paintings is a landscape of a winding river and it is worth 200 gp, but it weighs 30 lbs. Two of the statues, a matched set of dragons rampant, are worth 300 gp each, or 800 gp as a set.

EL: 4

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add Spark to the encounter. To decrease the challenge, remove Lilig from the encounter.

E109. KELARA AND MORKOR'S QUARTERS

Everything in this room is neat, orderly, and speaks of residents who are disciplined. One bed sits in the north eastern corner of the room, while the other sits in the southeastern corner. On the western wall a large map hangs which depicts the layout of a section of this dungeon. In front of this map stand two lion headed, athletic humanoids that appear to have been considering the map, but have now turned to face you.

Initial Attitude: Friendly

Encounter: This Room is shared by Kelara the Fearsome (hp 226) and Morkor (hp 260). Not willing to ask their followers to do something they would not, Morkor and Kelara took the Room closest to the ward, and the first line of defense, should the ward ever drop.

Kelara and Morkor discuss various strategies of cutting off the shadows' collective strength. But, unfortunately they lack the strength to mount an expedition into their territory.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Kelara prefers to use her roar supernatural ability and her ranged spell-like abilities to incapacitate her enemies, avoiding melee combat when possible. Morkor charges straight into combat, using fireball at close range to wipe out weaker targets and wall of force to split up his foes into manageable groups.

Treasure: On the table is a small bag containing two potions of cure critical wounds.

Skill and Feats: Balance +22, Bluff +14, Concentration +24, Diplomacy +14, Heal +17, Hide +22, Intimidate +26, Jump +35, Knowledge (religion) +19, Knowledge (History) +18, Knowledge (the planes) +18, Listen +20, Move Silently +22, Sense Motive +22, Spot +20, Spellcraft +17, Survival +20; Ability Focus (roar), Dodge, Mobility, Negotiator, Persuasive, Spring Attack, Track, Weapon Focus (Claws).

Roar (Su): A leonal can roar up to three times per day. Each roar releases a blast in a 60-ft. cone that duplicates the effects of a holy word spell and deals an extra 2d6 points of sonic damage (Fortitude DC 22 negates). The save DC is Charisma-based.

Pounce (Ex): If a leonal charges a foe, it can make a full attack, including two rake attacks.

Improved Grab (Ex): To use this ability, a leonal must hit with its bite attack. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If it wins the grapple check, it establishes a hold and can rake.

Rake (Ex): Attack bonus +28 melee, damage 1d6+8.

Spell-Like Abilities: At will—detect thoughts, fireball (DC 17), hold monster (DC 19), polymorph, wall of force; 3/day—cure critical wounds (DC 18), neutralize poison, remove disease; 1/day—heal (DC 20). Caster level 10th. The save DCs are Charisma-based.

Lay on Hands (Su): As the paladin class feature, except that each day, a leonal can heal an amount of damage equal to its full normal hit points.

Protective Aura (Su): Against attacks made or effects created by evil creatures, this ability provides a +4 deflection bonus to AC and a +4 resistance bonus on saving throws to anyone within 20 ft. of the leonal. Otherwise, it functions as a magic circle against evil effect and a lesser globe of invulnerability, both with a radius of 20 ft. (caster level equals leonal's HD). (The defensive benefits from the circle are not included in a leonal's statistics block.)

Speak with Animals (Su): This ability works like speak with animals (caster level 8th) but is a free action and does not require sound.

Skill: Leonals have a +4 racial bonus on Balance, Hide, and Move Silently checks.

Possessions: * Morkor wears +4 half plate which is not included in his stats above.

E110. TRAP HALL

Any creature that comes within 10 ft. of the wall at the southern end of this corridor sets off a pair of lightning bolt traps that fill the entire hallway. The trap resets itself one minute after being triggered.

⚡ Lightning Bolt Trap: CR 6; magic device; proximity trigger (alarm); automatic reset; spell effect [twice] (lightning bolt, 10th-level wizard, 10d6 electricity, DC 14 Reflex save half damage); Search DC 28; Disable Device DC 28.

The walls of this hallway bear scorch marks and a collection of badly burned corpses. At least twenty corpses line the floor of this hallway.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room served as another measure to slow down any creatures that breached the wards.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A DC 25 Search check reveals a potion of protection from energy (fire), a masterwork hand axe, and a bag of dust of appearance.

EL: 6

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add a 40-ft. pit trap that activates immediately after the lightning bolt trap. To decrease the challenge, reduce the damage of the lightning bolt trap to 7d6.

E111. HIDDEN BUNKER

This wall has a handful of weapons and supplies scattered about in a haphazard fashion. The mortar looks new, as do the two doorways that don't go anywhere in the south wall. Only half of the continual light torches are functioning.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Originally these tunnels connected with Room E110 and the nearby ward, but after the battle following the first earthquake the garrison decided they did not want creatures that make it through the wards to be able to regroup so easily. Several walls were boarded up, some traps laid, and the all-door was attuned to the western doorway in southern wall of this Room. This created a pocket of hidden resistance on the front lines, but it saw little use in the battle of the second earthquake.

The command word to set the all-door to open to this Room is "Genda."

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: There are three heavy maces, two crossbows, 126 bolts, one quarterstaff, two shortspears, one longsword, one heavy shield, a scroll of fireball, a potion of heroism, and a potion of cure moderate wounds.

E112. HIDDEN TRAP LAB

This large room is dominated by a number of large metal tables, on which sit a large collection of gears, metal plates, vials, and bottles of dust. The walls of the room are a mishmash of shelves containing small mechanical parts, books and work tables covered in tools and gadgets. There is a slight covering of dust in the room, creating a feeling that no one has been here for awhile.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room was used to build and repair the dozens of traps the garrison used in their defense. Many of the traps were designed to reset themselves, but even these require occasional maintenance. Due to the many tools in this Room characters using the skill Craft (trap-making) in this Room gain a +2 circumstance bonus.

Encounter Condition: Safe

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: This Room contains 15,000 gp worth of raw materials for making traps, weighing 1,500 pounds and 4,000 gp of worth of powdered diamonds for creating glyphs of warding, weighing 50 pounds.

REGION F. THE MAZE

This Region of the dungeon is a complex labyrinth. Originally designed to comprise Rooms of various shapes and sizes as well as all manners of corridors often leading nowhere, this labyrinth was once a prison to house minor demons.

Because of its complex layout, it is difficult to move to or from this Region, which is the most isolated area in the underground dungeon complex. This is mostly due to the fact that the majority of the entrances leading into the Region offer no means of exiting. The presence of several warp gates, which open in random locations within the Region every time they are used, renders leaving difficult at best. These warp gates prevent anyone from leaving the Region, but also to trap trespassers in its labyrinthine environment.

The Region comprises countless traps, both magical and mechanical. Though many of the traps within the Region were dismantled over the years, several of them remain active. The current inhabitants use these devices to protect their respective territories.

Originally, this Region housed several hellish minions, but overtime the stronger demon prisoners used the weaker ones to conduct experiments that eventually led to understanding of the warp gates. The demons trapped here are now long gone, but other creatures have moved into the area. Because the inhabitants of this Region made pacts with each other, there have not been any major conflicts here for several years. Several empty Rooms (which are not numbered on the map) and hallways are considered neutral grounds, belonging to none of the various factions living in these parts.

WARP GATES

Warp gates are, at first glance, indistinguishable from any other doorway except for the fact that there are small locking devices set upon them. When someone opens the door of a warp gate, an inter-dimensional connection between the gates is created. Thus, the warp gate opens into a random location, as determined by the Warp Gates: Random Locations table below.

All warp gates in this Region are intrinsically linked. When a warp gate is opened, the PCs can see on the other side of the doorway, just as if opening a regular door. What they see, however, is not necessarily a Room next to the one they are coming from, but rather another area containing a warp gate. What the PCs observe on the other side of the gateway is just as real as a Room standing next to the one they occupy. The warp gate's magic simply links two of these enhanced doorways together, so PCs may travel from one end of the Region to the other without ever noticing it. This is not astral travel, but rather its own kind of magic, created centuries before to seal the demons forever.

When PCs open the door of a warp gate, roll on the following table to determine in which Room the doorway leads.

WARP GATES LOCATIONS

1d20*	Room
1-2	Room F2
3-4	Room F19
5-6	Room F22
7-8	Room F23
9-10	Room F29
11-12	Room F37
13-14	Room F43
15-16	Room F62
17-18	Room F90
19-20	Room F95

* If the roll of the die indicates the Room in which the PCs are currently standing, ignore the result and roll again.

IDENTIFYING WARP GATES

There are three ways to notice the warp gate. First, a successful DC 28 Search check reveals small indentations within inside the doorframe of each gate. A closer look at these lightly carved marks confirms they were not made by the passage of time or by the claws of an unknown creature that once journeyed through the doorway, but indeed finely detailed runes.

Detect magic reveals strong conjuration. The magic of a warp gate can be cancelled by a successful DC 25 dispel magic which negates its power for 1d4 days, or a DC 35 greater dispelling, which renders the warp gate useless for 1 month. Dispelled warp gates opening into walls become unusable doorways while those leading into other Rooms (such as the one in Room F2) become simple doors opening to adjacent chambers.

The third way to uncover the presence of a warp gate is by unwittingly going through it and suffering from its random side effects. Lawful good PCs are totally immune to these side effects, as were the celestials that originally created the warp gates.

Every time the PCs move through a warp gate, roll 1d20 to determine whether they suffer ill effects from their journey.

WARP GATE SIDE EFFECTS

1d20	Side Effect
1	Dead: A DC 20 Fortitude save negates this effect and causes the PCs to instead suffer catatonia for 1d4 days.
2	Petrification: Per the spell flesh to stone . Caster level 15th.
3	Insanity: Per the spell. Caster level 15th.
4	Feeblemind: Per the spell. Caster level 15th.
5	Energy Drain: Per the spell. Caster level 15th.
6	Rage and confusion: Per the spells. Caster level 15th.
7	Blinded: PCs using the warp gate must succeed at a DC 20 Fortitude save or become blinded for 1d6 hours.
8	Dazed: PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Will save or become dazed for 2d6 rounds.
9	Dazzled: PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Will save or become dazzled for 2d6 minutes.
10	Deafened: PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Will save or become deafened for 1d6 hours.
11	Exhausted: PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Fortitude save or become exhausted for 2d6 x 10 minutes.
12	Fascinated: PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Will save or become fascinated for 2d6 minutes.
13	Fatigued: PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Will save or become fatigued for 2d6 hours.
14	Nauseated: PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Fortitude save or become nauseated for 2d6 rounds.
15	Panicked: PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Will save or become panicked for 2d6 rounds, then frightened for 2d6 minutes, and finally shaken for 2d6 hours.
16	Paralyzed: PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Fortitude save or become paralyzed for 2d6 rounds.
17	Sickened: PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Fortitude save or becomes sickened for 2d6 x 10 minutes.
18	Stunned: PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Fortitude save or become stunned for 2d6 minutes.
19	Weakened: PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Fortitude save or become weakened, suffering a -2 to Strength and Constitution for 1d6 hours.
20	Roll twice, combining the results, ignoring 1 or 2.

WARP GATE KEYS

To navigate through this maze of warp gates, the celestials generated a set of special keys, which were given to the warden of the Region. This warden was killed long ago and the keys were scattered, some keys were lost definitively, others remain within the Region and can be found in several places.

A warp gate key is shaped like an ordinary key but fashioned from clear blue crystal. Before opening the door to a warp gate, a character can insert such a key within the keyhole to "unlock" it. Doing so opens the warp gate to a specific location, as determined by the key itself. For instance, if a PC has in his possession the warp gate key F22 — which is linked to the warp gate in Room F22 — using this key before opening the door to any warp gate results in the gate opening into Room F22.

If a PC possesses two warp gate keys, he passes through the gate as if it weren't there.

F1 THROUGH F39. BROKEN AXE TRIBAL GROUNDS

Rooms F1 through F39 are controlled by a powerful minotaur tribe known as the Broken Axe. Ten years ago, this all mighty tribe dominated this Region of the dungeon, sharing only small portions of the southern sections with the other monstrous humanoids and magical beasts that secured these areas.

The tribe, then referred to as the Golden Axe — after the ancestral relic held by each successive chieftain since its founding, centuries ago — gradually lost portions of its territory to the aggressive harpies and manticores that moved into the Region. Internal conflicts surfaced and a small clans of minotaurs began to question their chieftain's leadership qualifications.

It was during this time that Durtenian Vaiele came into the Region. A cunning elven wizard and the ally of the gynosphinx Arnarah (Room F48), Durtenian willingly locked himself in a cell and, using a potent magical device, took control of other people's bodies. When he entered the body of a Grauki, he traded places — permanently.

While Grauki's spirit was trapped in the elf's unhealthy body within the confines of a prison cell, the devious wizard became intrinsically involved in the politics of the Golden Axe tribe. Within months, the elf organized a series of bloody raids that split the tribe in two — those loyal to Chieftain Markuli and those believing Grauki should replace him.

In a brutal showdown that maimed Markuli, Grauki broke the ancestral golden axe the tribe took its name from. Though both opponents survived the encounter, it was clear that the tribe had to separate in order to save what remained of their people. Grauki and Markuli made peace and split the territory of the Golden Axe tribe in two. Those remaining loyal to Markuli renamed their tribe the Broken Axe.

Today, the Broken Axe tribe remains under the leadership of the aging Markuli, controlling the northwest portion of this Region and its people live in peace. Because the tribe considers the sexes equal, both males and females are trained as warriors and given access to weapons and armors.

While venturing in this section of the Region, DC 20 Spot checks reveal small runes carved into the walls. These simplistic markings depict a long-handled axe broken in three pieces, which serve as boundary markers delimiting the territorial grounds of the Broken Axe tribe.

For more on the minotaur tribes, see the sidebar on page 285.

RANDOM ENCOUNTERS

1d20	Encounter
1	The sound of metal against metal rings through the halls.
2–12	Nothing
13	Two unsuspecting minotaurs move from one Room to the next. These members of the Broken Axe tribe laugh loudly, their booming voices echoing through the halls.
14	Four Broken Axe minotaurs return from a peaceful exchange with members of the Red Horn clan. They suffer a -4 penalty to Listen and Spot checks.
15	Four Broken Axe minotaurs patrol this Section, attacking anyone they do not recognize on sight.
16	Three Broken Axe minotaurs led by a minotaur barbarian patrol the halls. These men move in silence, constantly on the lookout for trespassers. Ambush 4.
17	Five Broken Axe minotaurs lie in wait, hiding in the shadows. They attack anyone they do not instantly recognize as Broken Axe or Red Horns. Ambush 6.
18	The PCs stumble upon a trap. Camouflaged Pit Trap: CR 5; mechanical; location trigger; manual reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 60 ft. deep (6d6, fall); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 19.
19	Two harpies from Morgul's Den trespass into Broken Axe territory. They use their captivating song to attract the PCs, before rending them with their clawed hands.
20	A pack of four barghests from Region E (in goblin form) seek something to "feed" on. Ambush 8.

F1. ENTRANCE

This door is unlocked.

The wide hallway narrows into a corridor that ends with a door in the middle of the south wall. The door looks like any other in the dungeon, but there is a lock made of black iron just above the knob.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This door is unlocked, but not ordinary in any sense of the word. It is in fact one of the ten warp gates within this Region. Though entering the door leads to Room F2 (as any ordinary door would) without the risk of suffering any side effects from the warp gate, leaving the Region from Room F2 is impossible. In fact, once a creature finds itself in Room F2, the warp gate door automatically shuts behind them. When opened from Room F2, roll on the Warp Gates: Random Locations table to determine in which Room the gate leads. If Room F2 is rolled, then the warp gate opens from Room F2 into Room F1, just as a normal door would.

F2. BROKEN AXE GUARD POST

The door on the north wall of this Room is a warp gate (see Room F1 for further details). The minotaurs in Room F20 hold special keys allowing them to journey from any warp gate to Room F2 or Room F22. A red dot with the blue circle around painted upon the doorway indicates to them which key they need to use (see Room F20 for further details).

The wavering flames from torches set upon bronze sconces on the east and west wall cast orange light to all corners of this narrow hall. Though the burning torches fail to keep darkness at bay, it is strong enough to illuminate the room.

The door on the north wall is painted with a large blue circle with a thick red dot in the center.

The armored figures of four large humanoids bearing the heads of bulls with long yellowish horns stand guard here. One of these minotaurs has a deep scar running across the length of his face, and one of his dark eyes has turned an eerie whitish color.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The scarred minotaur is Brumni the Blind (hp 70), a minotaur barbarian loyal to his cousin Markuli and the Broken Axe tribe. He is charged with the protection of this area with the other three minotaur warriors (hp 45, 41, 36) he leads. Even though this portion of the Broken Axe territory is relatively uninhabited, these men are responsible for ensuring no unwanted visitors enter their tribal grounds via the northern doorway.

When the PCs enter this Room, there is a 10% chance that Brumni is not here, but in Room F7.

Brumni is a loyal member of the Broken Axe tribe. He views any intrusion into tribal territory as a potential threat. However, he is willing to parley with PCs who make good use of the Bluff or Diplomacy skill. If the PCs change the minotaur's attitude to Friendly, Brumni might even be willing to trade with them, offering the tarnished silver dagger he carries and information in exchange for gold or a sound weapon.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 6

Tactics: If combat takes place here, the three minotaurs attack using their horns to deliver powerful charges, after which they use the greataxes they carry, attacking the strongest PCs first. Brumni initiates his barbarian's rage and charges any who would oppose him.

Treasure: There is no furniture or treasure in this Room, but each minotaur carries 1d8 gp in various coins and small gems. In addition to his +1 longspear, Brumni carries a magical potion of cure serious wounds, a tarnished silver dagger (worth 30 gp), and a pouch with three small pieces of raw amber (worth a total of 180 gp).

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two barbarian levels to Brumni and two minotaurs. To decrease the challenge, remove two barbarian levels from Brumni and remove one minotaur.

F3. SECRET CHAMBER

A successful DC 25 Search check reveals a tiny groove in the southern wall of this Room. A closer inspection uncovers the outline of a 5-ft. square stone panel beginning at floor level. To open this secret door, PCs must succeed at a DC 20 Strength check, which is enough to push the heavy panel inside the Room. Because of the simplicity of this door, only someone from the inside can close it properly into place.

The hidden panel upon the north wall opens into a small and oddly shaped room. Several torches are set on sconces upon the walls, their pale yellowish light casting long and brooding shadows to the four corners of the place.

A simple wooden table, a wide bed covered with coarse gray wool sheets, and a simple chest made out of pale oak and reinforced with black iron take most of the chamber. Upon the table is a large wooden mug filled with a foamy liquid and a large bowl holding various slices of cut meats. An eight-ft. wide tapestry hangs from ceiling to floor upon the easternmost portion of the south wall.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: Sarfnush (hp 81), a minotaur barbarian, resides in this Room. The brother of Markuli, Chieftain of the Broken Axe tribe, Sarfnush was once one of the most outspoken opponents of his leader. When Grauki initiated the bloody revolt that led to fracturing the tribe, however, the bonds between Sarfnush and Markuli solidified. During these troubled times, the barbarian showed so much loyalty to his brother that Markuli, at first, believed it was a trick on Sarfnush's part. In a brutal combat, however, Sarfnush slew many rebels loyal to Grauki, proving his loyalty to the tribe and its chieftain.

Sarfnush lives for battle. During Grauki's revolt, the barbarian allied himself with Markuli because he yearned for the survival of his people and believed in his brother's capacity as both a combatant and a cunning tactician. Sarfnush's gamble paid off. He won the trust of his chieftain and was given the command of several squadrons during the revolutionary war. The conclusion of the civil war that divided his tribe in two, however, also marked the end of Sarfnush's glory days.

A few years after the bloody conflict ended, several mutual and peaceful accords were established between the inhabitants of the Region. Sarfnush, a warrior born, found himself without a function. Though he occasionally raided the other Regions, Sarfnush struggled to find a purpose. But Markuli eventually found a task worthy of his skill. He appointed his brother with the delicate mission of guarding the broken pieces of the Golden Axe tribe's ancestral relic. Although he misses combat, Sarfnush is content to care for the relic.

Encounter Conditions: Echoes 8

Tactics: Only Sarfnush and his chieftain Markuli are allowed in this Room. Whenever Markuli travels here, he knocks three times upon the secret panel, then three times more. If the PCs imitate this secret code, Sarfnush expects his brother's company and sits on the corner of his bed, heedless of the PCs.

THE TRIBES

THE GOLDEN AXE TRIBE

Both minotaur factions dwelling in this Region hail from a now defunct tribe, known as the Golden Axe Tribe. After Grauki's revolt, ten years before, two groups emerged from this bloody civil war — The Broken Axe tribe, which remained loyal to Chieftain Markuli, and the Red Horn Clan, which followed the rebel Grauki.

THE BROKEN AXE TRIBE

Through the many hardships they endured, the Broken Axe tribe remained true to its ancient origins and way of life. Proud warriors and cunning explorers, they who would do anything to protect what is theirs. Like most of their kind, the minotaurs of the Broken Axe Tribe are territorial and independent, but their Chieftain and his councilors are also skilled diplomats. They are the architects of the relative peace that exists throughout the Region, and most other inhabitants of the area either fear or respect them. Without the alliances they made with the various creatures of the dungeon, the tribe would have perished long ago.

To a member of the Broken Axe Tribe, gold is the most precious thing of all. The Chieftain's crown and the suits of armor worn by the tribe's elite warriors are fashioned from this material. And many minotaurs would go to great lengths to acquire more gold. Fortunately for those who encounter them, Broken Axe minotaurs prefer to bargain and trade over organizing ambushes and war parties. This is mainly due to the fact that the tribesmen's survival has long depended on the wits of their diplomats rather than the brute force of their warriors. However, they recognize, that nothing backs up an argument better, than a strong contingent of armored barbarians.

The warriors of the Broken Axe Tribe are disciplined — at least by barbarian standards — and work well together. They carry greataxes in battle (their ancestral weapon) and wear well-maintained armor, like chain shirts and polished breastplates. Though they sometimes use their horns as part of a charge, it's a point of honor to use weapons once engaged in melee.

They fight intelligently, flanking the most heavily armed opponents and ganging up on a single foe when given the chance. They distrust spellcasters, and turn their attention against any enemy casting a visible spell against them. each Red Horn minotaur engaged in the battle.

THE RED HORN CLAN

The members of the Red Horn Clan share their origin with those of the Broken Axe tribe, but they are crueler, haughtier, and more primitive. Indeed, the Red Horns consider the tribesmen of the Broken Axe too civilized, too reliant on metallic weapons and armor, and too eager to talk with their rivals. To them, the Broken Axe Tribe lost its way long ago, becoming weaklings and cowards who compromise the nobility of minotaur blood.

When they broke from their original tribe, the Red Horns followed their instincts and reverted to a savage way of life. They rejected the arts their people had taken centuries to perfect, embracing simpler ways. Like their ancient forefathers had done before them, they dipped their horns in blood red paint to identify their new clan and the brutal nature in which they would rule.

The Red Horns are more inclined to fight than the other minotaurs in the Region. They are cunning, fearless warriors who believe non-minotaurs should be slaughtered or enslaved — all other races are inferior. However, they hold proven warriors of any race in high esteem. Though many still hold metallic weapons, such as flails and picks, most prefer the use of cruder arms, like clubs and morningstars. The Red Horns never wield axes as a sign of defiance.

In battle, they charge their foes with their horns, which by their credo must be reddened by the blood of their enemies. They initiate this maneuver as often as they can, targeting whoever is closest. Once a Red Horn draws blood, his opponent is considered marked and no other minotaur is allowed to fight the wounded foe — unless there are fewer enemies than Red Horn combatants, at which point a stray minotaur has his pick of enemies. When this happens, the Red Horns share the kill.

To represent their fighting style, DMs should roll Initiative for each Red Horn minotaur engaged in the battle.

If the PCs fail to tap upon the panel as the chieftain would, Sarmnush hears the ruckus caused by the stone panel being moved upon the rocky floor when they push open the secret wall. The barbarian hides in the shadowy nook in the northwest corner of the Room and readies himself to charge the intruders with his horns, hoping to surprise them.

After 1 round, he enters his barbarian's rage and uses his axe to cleave the PCs, targeting the warriors first. Sarmnush is fervently loyal to his duty and he does everything in his power to protect the treasure he guards. In battle, he utters loud screams that may alert other minotaurs in the vicinity. Allow the minotaurs in Room F2 DC 17 Listen checks to notice the battle. If they do, they come to Sarmnush's aid 1d3+1 rounds later.

Treasure: The large tapestry in the eastern corner of the south wall depicts a great battle between a small group of minotaurs in golden armors and a great host of frog-like humanoids with sharp fangs bearing long spears with strangely dented bladed heads. Though some of the embroideries on the tapestry are damaged and most of their colors are faded by time, its greater than average quality is obvious. This tapestry is worth upwards of 800 gp, but a connoisseur succeeding at a DC 35 Knowledge (history) check realizes it depicts an epic battle fought by the first members of the Golden Axe minotaur tribe and is worth five times this amount.

Behind the thick tapestry is a locked door, which can only be discerned by moving the tapestry or with a successful DC 20 Search check. A DC 28 Open Lock check is required to unlock it. Behind the door is a thin stone altar. Upon the altar lays the three broken pieces of a large greataxe, which seems to be made out of pure gold.

This broken golden greataxe was once the most important relic of the Golden Axe minotaur tribe, and it was passed down from one chieftain to the next for centuries uncounted. The axe was broken during Grauk's revolt and, shortly after, Markuli renamed his tribe the Broken Axe. The ancient relic is priceless to the members of both the Broken Axe tribe and the Red Horn clan who were once proud members of the Golden Axe tribe.

The broken axe can be restored to its original form by a master smith able to fashion magical weapons. If mended, it functions as a +3 shock greataxe that bestows its wielder with resistance to electricity 10.

Sarmnush's enchanted breastplate is fashioned from gold (worth 500 gp) and worth twice as much to the members of the Broken Axe or the Red Horn tribes. He also carries a pouch with six small emeralds (worth 125 gp each).

Powerful Charge (Ex): A minotaur typically begins a battle by charging at an opponent, lowering its head to bring its mighty horns into play. In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +15 attack bonus that deals 4d6+7 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

Rage (Ex): +4 to Str, +4 to Con, +2 on Will saves, -2 to AC for up to 8 rounds.

Improved Uncanny Dodge (Ex): Sarmnush can no longer be flanked.

This defense denies a rogue the ability to sneak attack the barbarian by flanking him, unless the attacker has at least four more rogue levels than the target has barbarian levels.

Skills: Minotaurs have a +4 racial bonus on Search, Spot, and Listen checks.

Possessions: +1 breastplate, masterwork large greataxe.

F4. MINOTAUR GUARD CHAMBER

The burning torches set at various places on the walls illuminate this wide but narrow room, revealing a wooden table upon the south wall. Thick bunk beds fashioned from dark brown wood dominate the east and west portions of the room and a barrel with six empty wooden mugs on top of it lays in the southeast corner.

Three large humanoids with muscular arms and powerful legs sit on the edge of the beds, talking in low tones. Under long horns, their bovine faces bear disquieting and vigilant brown eyes.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room serves as the bedchamber of six minotaurs from the Broken Axe tribe. Three are on duty in Room F2 while their companions, three female minotaurs (hp 44, 38, 37), currently guard this Room. They regard any unknown trespasser as a threat, but are willing to parley with PCs making good use of the Diplomacy skill. If offered, they might be willing to trade goods or information with the party.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: These warriors are used to fighting with one another. If combat ensues here, two of them use their powerful horns to charge the toughest-looking PCs, while the other readies her greataxe and attacks one of the spellcasters.

Treasure: The minotaurs in this Room possess nothing of great value, but each carries 1d8 gp in assorted coins. Additionally, a successful DC 18 Search check reveals a pair of medium-sized gauntlets hidden under the woolen blankets of one of the six bunk beds. The gauntlets are fashioned from thick gray hide. They are of high quality and a small silvery rune in the form of a closed fist is imprinted at the base of each gauntlet, where the wearer's wrist would be. This is a pair of gauntlets of ogre power.

The barrel is filled with a bitter tasting, black ale. See Room F7 for details on the effects of this potent substance.

F5. SECRET WALL PANEL

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: A successful DC 25 Search check reveals the secret door opening into the maze of narrow corridors and empty Rooms to the south-east. The 5-ft. wide by 8-ft. tall panel, which at first glance seems identical to the stone making up the walls in this Region, is set upon hinges that can only be seen when the secret door is opened, inside doorway. PCs need to succeed at a DC 18 Strength check to push the heavy door open. PCs coming from the south must pull upon the panel, which is extremely difficult to accomplish because it offers nothing the PCs can grab on to. A successful DC 32 Strength check is needed to open the secret panel from that side.

F6. TRAINING ROOM

Like many chambers in this section, the wavering torch light set upon the walls illuminates this large hall. At first glance, the room seems void of furniture and decoration, but upon the west wall is a massive structure built from dark wood. F7. ALE STORAGE

The narrow corridor leading south opens into a dark chamber. A potent smell emanates from the room and a look inside reveals a multitude of wooden barrels stacked upon the south wall and a door to the east.

This door leads to another narrow and winding corridor opening into a small chamber. The smell intensifies here, becoming quite nauseating. Three wooden baskets filled with a dark brown and foamy liquid take up most of the space in the room.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room is divided into two chambers comprising the Broken Axe tribe's ale and beer storage. It is unclear where Brumni the Blind (in Room F2) got the booze, but he keeps a constant guard over it, making sure that no one gets a drink from his limited supply. There is a 10% chance that Brumni is here guarding it. If not, there is a 20% chance 1d3 minotaurs are here looking to sneak a keg.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: Brumni is willing to trade a pony keg of ale or beer in exchange for something exotic. Coin is worthless to him, but a magic item or strange gem might get his attention. Otherwise, he does not part with his precious wares.

Treasure: The first chamber contains twenty pony kegs filled with black and bitter tasting ale or beer. Each goblet of this potent substance a PC ingests requires a DC 20 Fortitude save. A failed saving throw results in the PC suffering from a -1 circumstance penalty to all Reflex saves and skill checks for one full hour. A PC drinking more of the stuff must attempt another DC 20 (+1 per previous save) Fortitude save after each goblet-full he ingests. The penalties bestowed by the ale and the amount of time the PC is affected stack. These penalties reduce by 1 with each hour that follows, so a PC who drank five goblets of the ale and failed his Fortitude saving throw three times suffers from a -3 penalty to his Reflex saves and skill checks for the first hour, a -2 penalty for the following hour, and a -1 penalty for the third. Minotaurs do not suffer any ill effects from potent liquid.

The second chamber contains another 40 barrels of the same drink. These are stacked floor to ceiling.

F8. LONE MINOTAUR BARD

Initial Attitude: Indifferent

Encounter: Vornmik (hp 63), a lonely minotaur bard, is having trouble finishing the last stanza of her sonnet. She does not come here often, but she needed a quiet place to think. This piece will be a great epic for her clan and she hopes to impress Markuli with its timeless rhythm and diction.

Vornmik is a relatively easy-going minotaur. She is smart, charming, and used to having things done her way. She is one of Chieftain Markuli's most respected advisors. If she encounters the PCs, she remains quiet and unmoving, preferring to let them make the first move. If they act friendly and talk to her, she converses with them. If the PCs make good use of Diplomacy and improve her attitude to Friendly, she offers to introduce them to the chieftain of the Broken Axe tribe.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 2

Tactics: If combat ensues here, Vornmik uses her enchanted battleaxe in battle and initiates a loud chant to inspire her with courage. The guards in Room F9 hear her automatically and come to her rescue 1d2 rounds thereafter.

Treasure: N/A

Skills and Feats: Diplomacy +9, Intimidate +5, Listen +8, Perform (oratory) +9, Search +3, Spot +8; Great Fortitude, Power Attack, Track, Weapon Focus (battleaxe).

Powerful Charge (Ex): A minotaur typically begins a battle by charging at an opponent, lowering its head to bring its mighty horns into play. In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +11 attack bonus that deals 4d6+4 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

Countersong (Su): A bard with 3 or more ranks in a Perform skill can use his music or poetics to counter magical effects that depend on sound (but not spells that simply have verbal components). Each round of the countersong, he makes a Perform check. Any creature within 30 ft. of the bard (including the bard himself) that is affected by a sonic or language-dependent magical attack may use the bard's Perform check result in place of its saving throw if, after the saving throw is rolled, the Perform check result proves to be higher. If a creature within range of the countersong is already under the effect of a noninstantaneous sonic or language-dependent magical attack, it gains another saving throw against the effect each round it hears the countersong, but it must use the bard's Perform check result for the save. Countersong has no effect against effects that don't allow saves. The bard may keep up the countersong for 10 rounds.

Fascinate (Sp): A bard with 3 or more ranks in a Perform skill can use his music or poetics to cause one or more creatures to become fascinated with him. Each creature to be fascinated must be within 90 feet, able to see and hear the bard, and able to pay attention to him. The bard must also be able to see the creature. The distraction of a nearby combat or other dangers prevents the ability from working. For every three levels a bard attains beyond 1st, he can target one additional creature with a single use of this ability.

To use the ability, a bard makes a Perform check. His check result is the DC for each affected creature's Will save against the effect. If a creature's saving throw succeeds, the bard cannot attempt to fascinate that creature again for 24 hours. If its saving throw fails, the creature sits quietly and listens to the song, taking no other actions, for as long as the bard continues to play and concentrate (up to a maximum of 1 round per bard level). While fascinated, a target takes a -4 penalty on skill checks made as reactions, such as Listen and Spot checks. Any potential threat requires the bard to make another Perform check and allows the creature a new saving throw against a DC equal to the new Perform check result.

Any obvious threat, such as someone drawing a weapon, casting a spell, or aiming a ranged weapon at the target, automatically breaks the effect. Fascinate is an enchantment (compulsion), mind-affecting ability.

Inspire Courage (Su): A bard with 3 or more ranks in a Perform skill can use song or poetics to inspire courage in his allies (including himself), bolstering them against fear and improving their combat abilities. To be affected, an ally must be able to hear the bard sing. The effect lasts for as long as the ally hears the bard sing, and for 5 rounds thereafter. An affected ally receives a +1 morale bonus on saving throws against charm and fear effects and a +1 morale bonus on attack and weapon damage rolls.

Inspire Competence (Su): A bard of 3rd level or higher with 6 or more ranks in a Perform skill can use his music or poetics to help an ally succeed at a task. The ally must be within 30 ft. and able to see and hear the bard. The bard must also be able to see the ally.

The ally gets a +2 competence bonus on skill checks with a particular skill as long as he or she continues to hear the bard's music. Certain uses of this ability are infeasible. The effect lasts as long as the bard concentrates, up to a maximum of 2 minutes. A bard can't inspire competence in himself. Inspire competence is a mind-affecting ability.

Bard Spells Known (3/3/1; save DC 12 + spell level): 0—detect magic, flare, light, mending, message, resistance; 1st—cure light wounds, expeditious retreat, hideous laughter; 2nd—heroism, sound burst.

Skills: Minotaurs have a +4 racial bonus on Search, Spot, and Listen checks.

Possessions: Studded leather armor, buckler, +1 battleaxe, potion of charisma (2 doses), pouch with two rose-colored gems (25 gp each), 7 pp, and 19 gp.

F9. MINOTAUR GUARD POST

This small square room in the middle of the maze-like Region is totally dark. A pair of minotaurs stands guard. They hold long halberds and talk in low tones.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Sarmish and Erki, two minotaur barbarians (hp 56, 52) stand guard here. Though this is a strange place for a guard post, the minotaurs make a habit of posting guards here 50% of the time. These barbarians are at the end of their shifts and eager for rest and recreation.

Erki is Vornmik's (Room F8) best friend. Both Sarmish and Erki are elite members of the Broken Axe tribe with ambitions of one day being admitted into the ranks of the chieftain's personal guard (Room F38).

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If the PCs engage the minotaurs, they initiate their barbarian rage. Erki charges with his horn while Sarmish wields his halberd. They fight to the death.

Treasure: Erki carries a large chunk of amber (worth 375 gp) in a leather pouch. Sarmish has 27 gp in a small leather pouch.

F10. GATHERING HALL

Half a dozen large piles made out of dried branches tied with long pieces of cotton and woolen cloth simulating low sofas are lined along the south and north walls. A massive table dominates the room. In the northeast corner is a barrel with several empty wooden goblets upon it.

Two female minotaurs sit upon one of the crude sofas, sipping black ale from goblets. Long-handled axes lay at their feet. A broad-shouldered male minotaur holding a halberd stands near the table.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The three minotaurs (hp 43, 39, 36) relaxing in the hall do not react well to PC intrusion. Unless members of their tribe accompany the PCs, the two females cast their goblets aside, pick up their weapons, and stand to face them. Meanwhile, the male turns to them, pointing his halberd in a threatening manner.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: In combat, the male minotaur wields his halberd while the two females charge the PCs with their horns before engaging them in melee.

Treasure: Each of these minotaurs carry 1d8 gp worth of coins and semi-precious stones. One of the females wears a pair of mithral armbands of dwarven design. The items were part of a full suit of armor and protected the front of the thighs of a dwarven warrior. The minotaur strapped the pieces upon her large forearms, displaying its wonderful design. Though these pieces of armor do not seem valuable by themselves, they depict a pair of crossed hammers in front of a burning sun. When polished, the mithral of the leg greaves shines brilliantly. Any Medium PC wearing these leg greaves to complement their armor benefit from an additional +1 AC bonus. The items are worth upwards of 500 gp, but historians and dwarves might pay up to three times this amount for them.

F11. EMPTY BEDCHAMBER

Four massive beds are placed along the north and south walls of this darkly lit chamber.

Initial Attitude: N/A

F14. TRAPPED ROOM

This room is cast in deep shadows, but a closer look reveals the south wall is colored with dark brown markings.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: Though the color pattern does not mean anything special to most people, members of the Broken Axe and Red Horn tribes know they indicate a nearby trap.

A 5-ft. wide by 10-ft. long stretch of the floor at the mouth of the corridor opening to the southwest is actually a pressure plate made out of the same stone as the rest of the floor. Anyone stepping upon it automatically triggers the mechanical trap here, but a successful DC 30 Search check reveals a tiny button in the center of the painted southern wall. Pressing this button neutralizes the trap for one full minute.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The wall at the western end of the corridor is not fixed upon the wall. It is a fake wall fashioned by a dwarf slave for the minotaurs several years ago. Three massive oak tables are lined up along the western wall of this room, which is cast in total darkness. On the table to the north are four large bags; on the one to the south is a small iron box with dark green gems imbedded in it; and a large axe of wonderful craftsmanship lays upon the central table.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: N/A

Encounter Condition: [Flooded], Stagnant Air

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: Although this Room was created as a false treasure Room to fool adventurers into thinking these were the only items held by the Broken Axe tribe, it nevertheless contains remarkable riches. The three tables hold the following treasure:

- Table One: The four large bags are filled with coins, which are not of much use in this Region of the dungeon, since the creatures living here prefer to barter goods and gems rather than coins. The first bag holds 831 cp, the second contains 792 ep, the third has 517 sp, and the last and smallest bag is half filled with 211 gp.
- Table Two: The 12-inch-by-8-inch iron box with green gems is of wonderful craftsmanship and worth upwards of 150 gp. It is, however, smeared with Nitharit poison (DC 13 Fortitude save resists, 0/3d6 Con); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 30. In the box is a +3 golden dagger, too small for the minotaurs to wield in battle.
- Table Three: The large axe upon this table is made out of silvery metal with a pale yellowish green stone set upon the butt end of the weapon. It is a masterwork greataxe worth 750 gp. It once belonged to a great hero of the tribe who had no kin, so the chieftain placed this valuable treasure here.

F16. SERGEANT'S OFFICE

There is a secret door behind the bed in this Room. PCs searching the Room must move the bed in order to uncover this secret door. If they move the bed, a successful DC 20 Search check reveals a 5-ft. long groove between the floor and eastern wall. To open this secret door, one must place a hand inside this groove, grip the bottom of the doorway, and pull hard. A DC 18 Strength check is required to open it.

This room has a large wooden desk in the center. A five-branch candelabrum on the table holds five golden hued candles. Their flames illuminate the heart of the room but its walls remain cloaked in heavy shadow. A large empty chair is behind the desk and a wide bed is next to the western wall.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: This Room serves as both the bedchamber and office of Ramafik (hp 87), a mighty female minotaur barbarian responsible for the minotaur warriors in Rooms F17 and F18. Ramafik is a cunning and merciless warrior, considered by many as a paragon of the warrior of the Broken Tribe.

Ramafik is in charge of protecting the borders between the domain of the Broken Axe tribe and the territory of the Red Horns. Though she does not tolerate intrusion into her people's domain, she is willing to parley with PCs who come in peace. If the PCs killed any of the warriors in Room F17, she charges them on sight.

Encounter Condition: Cover (soft), Drafty

Tactics: If Ramafik enters combat, she uses her greatclub to engage the strongest male of the party. Given the chance, she charges her foes with her powerful horns as often as she can.

Treasure: Ramafik wears a breastplate of exquisite quality, a magical ring, and a +1 greatclub. In addition to these items, she carries a pouch with two small amethysts (100 gp each), three bloodstones (45 gp each), five tiger-eye turquoises (10 gp each), and a chunk of well-polished obsidian (worth 45 gp).

The desk in her office has two drawers. The first one contains fourteen golden candles, two torches, as well as flint and steel. The second drawer holds a variety of small trinkets taken from Ramafik's fallen enemies — a masterwork dart, a battered brown leather sling, a broken arrow made out of silver (worth 10 gp in raw silver), the long yellowed fang of a large wolf, a purple velvet handkerchief covered with dried blood, an ivory comb shaped to resemble a polar bear (worth 65 gp), and a dried scroll containing the following arcane spells: enlarge person, firetrap, gaseous form, invisibility sphere, major image, and polymorph.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two barbarian levels to Ramafik. To decrease the challenge, remove two levels.

▲ Ramafik, Minotaur Brb 4: CR 8; Large monstrous humanoid; HD 6d8+18+4d12+12; hp 87; Init +1; Spd 20 ft.; AC 20, touch 10, flat-footed — (see text); Base Atk +10; Grp +18; Atk +15 melee (2d8+7, +1 large greatclub) or +13 melee (1d8+4, gore); Full Atk +15/+10 melee (2d8+7, +1 large greatclub) and +8 melee (1d8+2, gore); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Powerful charge 4d6+7; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., natural cunning, rage, scent; AL CE; SV Fort +11, Ref +7, Will +6; Str 19, Dex 13, Con 17, Int 8, Wis 10, Cha 10.

Skills and Feats: Intimidate +7, Listen +12, Search +2, Spot +7, Survival +3; Great Fortitude, Power Attack, Track, Weapon Focus (great club)

Powerful Charge (Ex): A minotaur typically begins a battle by charging at an opponent, lowering its head to bring its mighty horns into play. In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +13 attack bonus that deals 4d6+7 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

Rage (Ex): +4 to Str, +4 to Con, +2 on Will saves, -2 to AC for up to 8 rounds.

Skills: Minotaurs have a +4 racial bonus on Search, Spot, and Listen checks.

Possessions: Masterwork breastplate, +1 large greatclub, ring of jumping.

F17. BROKEN AXE BORDER POST

Two dozen sconces set upon the walls of this large hall hold burning torches shedding light into all corners of the room, revealing crude markings carved into the stone and painted yellowish gold. They represent various long-handled axes broken in three parts.

In each corner of the room is a large wooden barrel. On top of them are a multitude of mugs. A long bench is lined up next to the east wall and a high table lays next to the west wall.

Six minotaurs, wearing golden-brown hide armors, stand guard. Four are posted beside each door and bear long halberds. The other two stand beside the table and talk in hushed tones, their greataxes dangling at their side.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Six minotaurs (hp 45, 43, 39, 39, 37, 36) stand guard in this Room, which is considered one of the three most important Broken Axe outposts. Because their immediate neighbors are the Red Horn tribe, these men have mixed feelings about their duty. On one hand, they harbor a deep resentment towards those who abandoned the tribe. On the other, since peace was made with the Red Horns they feel secure in the fact that no rebel minotaur poses any real threat to them. In fact, many among them were cousins or friends before the revolution, and most trade with the Broken Axe on a weekly basis (see Room F18).

If the PCs sneak up on the minotaurs here, the guards suffer a -2 circumstance penalty to Listen and Spot checks made to notice them. Because they do not anticipate problems, these minotaurs are slow to react and suffer from a -4 circumstance penalty to their Initiative check on the first round of battle.

Encounter Condition: Drafty, Echoes 4

Tactics: Though the guards feel secure and take their duties lightly, they nevertheless are fierce and proud warriors. Once they recover from the initial shock of the PCs' attack, they fight with all their might, using both their weapons and their mighty horn attack to incapacitate their enemies as quickly as possible.

If combat occurs, allow Ramafik (Room F16) a DC 15 Listen check and the guards in Room F18 a DC 20 Listen check to notice the ruckus. Once aware of the battle, Ramafik comes to the aid of the warriors in 1d3 rounds while the guards in Room F18 take 1d4+2 rounds to arrive.

Treasure: Each minotaur carries a 1d4 small gem worth 4d8 gp each. The four barrels in this Room hold the black and bitter tasting minotaur ale (See Room F7).

EL: 9

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four minotaurs. To decrease the challenge, remove two.

In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +9 attack bonus that deals 4d6+6 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

Skills: Minotaurs have a +4 racial bonus on Search, Spot, and Listen checks.

Possessions: Hide armor, greataxe.

F18. BROKEN AXE TRADING POST

This strangely shaped hall is brightly lit by the flames of two dozen torches set in bronze sconces some fifteen ft. high upon the walls. Five narrow wooden tables dominate the hall. Three of these tables are empty, but one is covered with a thick layer of pelts while another has several slices of dark salted meat laid out upon it.

Four powerful-looking humanoids with bovine faces and long horns stand guard in this room. They hold long axes and wear thick golden yellow hide armor.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: The four minotaurs here (hp 39 each) are in charge of running the daily affairs of the trading post as well as protecting its wares. Since no creatures have tried to invade this Room for more than eighteen months, these warriors are a little more careless than usual. They receive a -3 circumstance penalty to all Listen and Spot checks made to notice the PCs as well as a -2 circumstance penalty on their Initiative check for the first round of battle.

If the PCs come in peace, the minotaurs here are eager to bargain with them. They are interested in gems, jewels, and weapons large enough for them to use.

Encounter Condition: Cover, Echoes 1

Tactics: If there is a battle here, the minotaurs charge the PCs with their great horns, uttering loud cries to alert the guards in Room F17. Allow these warriors a DC 20 Listen check each round to hear the sound of battle. Once they do, they alert Ramafik (in Room F16) and four of them rush to aid their comrades 1d4+2 rounds thereafter. Meanwhile, Ramafik stands guard in Room F17 with the two remaining warriors.

Treasure: There are eleven rich pelts taken from different animals laid out upon one of the tables. These are of good quality and were taken from various kinds of animals and magical beasts. A successful DC 20 Knowledge (the planes) check or DC 30 Knowledge (nature) check reveals half of these pelts come from barghests. Put together, they are worth upwards of 200 gp in any market.

The meat slices upon the other table are edible, if not a little salty. There is enough here to feed a party of four adventurers for an entire week. Each minotaurs in this trading post also has 1d8 gp worth of coins and small gems on his person.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add four minotaurs. To decrease the challenge, remove one.

Possessions: Hide armor, greataxe.

F19. NORTHERN CORRIDOR WARP GATE

This door is identical to any other in the region, but a design resembling an open hand is painted in blue colors in its center.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This door is one of the ten warp gates in the Region. It is unlocked, but a small lock made from black iron is set above the door-knob. When this door is opened, roll on the Warp Gates: Random Locations table (at the beginning of this section) to determine in which Room it leads. Like all other warp gates, once the PCs cross it, it shuts behind them.

If Room F22 is rolled on the Warp Gates: Random Locations table, something strange happens. The PCs open the door and see themselves as if standing on the other side of the warp gate at the southern side of the corridor (Room F22). They see themselves standing in front of an open doorway in the distance, but might not instantly recognize themselves depending on the illumination they use and their ability to see in the dark. A successful DC 20 Intelligence check, however, reveals what they see is their own movement. Once they pass through the gate and emerge in Room F22, the doors of both warp gates (Rooms F19 and F22) closes shut behind them.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: The minotaurs of the Broken Axe tribe have yet to uncover the secrets of this warp gate or find its special key. The painting serves as a warning for them not to cross.

Treasure: N/A

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

F20. OUTER GUARD POST

This Room houses eight minotaurs and serves as their guard post. They keep the door to the north open so they can keep an eye out for any trespassers into their territory. The door on the south wall is also open. PCs succeeding at a DC 22 Listen check hear movement coming from Room F21.

The weak flames of four torches set upon the walls illuminate this hall. Though several sconces made of tarnished dark bronze are set upon the walls of this chamber, only four torches are placed into them.

Four beds are lined up along the east wall and four others lay at the bottom of the west wall. A wide table with eight wooden stools was placed in the center of the room and there is a barrel on either side of the southern door.

Four large humanoids with rich brown fur covering their muscular bodies and bull-like heads bearing slightly curved horns occupy this room. Two sit on the edge of stools around the table, throwing fistfuls of bones upon the wooden surface. The others stand near the northern door but keep their eyes on the game played by their companions.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Four minotaurs (hp 45, 43, 38, 35) currently guard this Room. The other four were charged with cleaning up the mess in Room F21 and are presently working there. These four are enjoying themselves, but nevertheless try to remain vigilant. The recent attack of a pack of barghests in Room F21 slaughtered three of their kind and maimed another, so they are constantly on the lookout for danger.

If the PCs come in peace and parley with the guards, they inform them of the recent barghest attack (from Region E). They offer 20 gp worth of treasure for every barghest hide the PCs bring back to them. If the PCs have already killed the barghests and inform the minotaurs of this fact (or if they successfully lie to them at this fact), the minotaurs' attitude automatically shifts one step towards Helpful.

Encounter Condition: Cover (soft)

Tactics: If battle occurs here, the minotaurs attack the PCs with their greataxes and maneuver so they can flank them. They also call forth the minotaurs in Room F21, who come to their aid in 1d3 rounds.

Treasure: The barrels contain potent minotaur ale (see Room F7). In addition to the weapons they carry, each minotaur has 4d8 gp worth of coins and semi-precious gems.

One of the minotaurs also has two special keys. These keys are fashioned from clear crystal with painted handles — one was dipped in red paint and the other in blue. When the blue key is used to "unlock" any of the warp gates, its door opens into Room F2. When the red key is used in such a manner, the warp gate leads to Room F22.

The minotaurs uncovered these warp gate keys long ago, and learned how to use them to travel from Room F2 through F22, and vice versa; hence the circles and dots upon the warp gate doors in those two Rooms.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, give two barbarian levels to each of the minotaurs. To decrease the challenge, cut their numbers in half.

▀ Minotaur: CR 4; Large monstrous humanoid; HD 6d8+12; hp 45, 43, 38, 35; Init +0; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 9, flat-footed — (see text); Base Atk +6; Grp +14; Atk +10 melee (3d6+6/x3, greataxe); Full Atk +10/+5 melee (3d6+6/x3, greataxe) and +4 melee (1d8+2, gore); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Powerful charge 4d6+6; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., natural cunning, scent; AL CE; SV Fort +6, Ref +5, Will +5; Str 19, Dex 10, Con 15, Int 7, Wis 10, Cha 8.

F21. SACKED GUARD POST

A subtle but pungent smell permeates this room, which is filled with broken furniture. The floor in front of the southern door is covered in a pool of dark brown and slightly foamy liquid, and piles of wood splinters can be seen on either side of the doorway. To the north, large barrels stand on either side of the open door leading to a shadowy corridor.

In the darkness, the large silhouettes of well-muscled humanoids with bovine heads and horns can be seen. They wear hide armors and long-handled axes hang from their weapon's belt. They move broken pieces of furniture around, grunting in displeasure.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Four male minotaurs (hp 42, 40, 38, 35) from Room F20 were ordered to clean up the mess left by the recent barghest raid that killed three of their companions and wounded another. These warriors fear more barghests might come pouring into their tribal grounds from the corridors leading west, so one of them remains on high alert and watches for any intruders coming from there. He stands near the south wall, weapons in hand. The others are piling the broken beds, barrels, and tables in the middle of the place.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: If the PCs engage the minotaurs in battle, the warriors attack the most armored opponents first, ganging and flanking them if the opportunity arises. The sound of battle also alerts the warriors in Room F20, who come to their comrades' rescue 1d2 rounds after the battle begins.

Treasure: The two remaining barrels contain minotaur ale; see Room F7 for details on the effects of this strong substance. In addition to the weapons they carry and the armor they wear, each minotaur holds 1d8 gp worth of coins and small gems. One of the guards also wears a golden armband depicting the face of a raging bull. This trinket is worth 250 gp, but twice this amount to any minotaur of the Broken Axe or Red Horn tribe.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, double the number of minotaurs present. To decrease the challenge, reduce their numbers to two.

F22. SOUTHERN CORRIDOR WARP GATE

This door has an unusual design painted on it: a dark red circle with a blue dot in the middle. A small black iron lock is set above the doorknob.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This door is another warp gate. It is unlocked and not trapped. When PCs open it, roll on the Warp Gates: Random Locations table (above) to determine in which Room the gate leads.

If Room F19 is rolled on the Warp Gates: Random Locations table, the PCs open the door and see themselves as if standing on the other side of the warp gate from Room F19. They see themselves standing in front of an open doorway in the distance, but do not automatically identify the distant silhouettes as their own. With a successful DC 20 Intelligence check, they realize what is happening. Once they move through the gate, the doors of both warp gates (F19 and F22) close shut behind them.

Encounter Condition: Distracting Noises 6

Tactics: The minotaurs in Room F20 have the special crystal keys needed to journey from here to Room F2, and vice versa. The painted sign on the door indicates to them which keys to use (see Room F20 for more details).

F23. ISOLATED WARP GATE I

This square room is completely dark and empty. A door with a black iron lock above the doorknob in the middle of the north wall is the only thing of interest in this room.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The door leading into this Room is one of the ten warp gates in the Region. It is unlocked, but a small mechanism made from black iron is set above its doorknob. When this door is opened, roll on the Warp Gates: Random Locations table to determine into which Room it leads. The door shuts itself close as soon as the PCs pass through it.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: There is no other way of getting in or out of this Room than through the warp gate. The minotaurs of the Broken Axe tribe are aware of a number of these isolated chambers. Because they do not want to venture in other parts of the Region, they avoid the warp gates as much as they can.

F24. TREASURE ROOMS

Each of the doors leading into the treasure Rooms is rigged with a mechanical trap. These traps were built by a dwarven rogue who ventured into these parts and aligned himself with the minotaurs decades ago. The only way to bypass these traps is to use the proper key, which can be found on Chieftain Markuli's person in Room F39.

Door One (South Wall): The five-foot square floor tile at the foot of this door hides a deep pit trap, which is lined with sharp wooden spikes. The trap is triggered when the door is opened.

✦ Spiked Pit Trap: CR 6; mechanical; touch trigger; manual reset; DC 25 Reflex save avoids; 40 ft. deep (4d6, fall); multiple targets (first target in each of two adjacent 5-ft. squares); pit spikes (Atk +12 melee, 1d4 spikes per target for 1d4+4 each); Search DC 21; Disable Device DC 20.

Door Two (North Wall): A tiny hole above this door shoots a potent poison into the air as soon as the door is opened.

✦ Insanity Mist Vapor: CR 8; mechanical; special trigger (see above); repair reset; gas; never miss; onset delay (1 round); poison (insanity mist, DC 15 Fortitude save resists, 1d4 Wis/2d6 Wis); multiple targets (all targets in a 10-ft.-by-10-ft. area); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 27.

This wide hall is illuminated by the flames of ten torches, which are set in bronze sconces upon the walls. The room has no furniture or decoration, but there is a door in the center of each of its four walls.

There are four minotaurs in golden armor and matching helmets from which long horns protrude in this large antechamber. They hold greataxes and large steel shields in their hands.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This large Room is the antechamber of the three small treasure Rooms used to store the most valuable items of the Broken Axe tribe, as well as the corridor to the west leading to a dead end. The doors leading to each of these Rooms (the two north of the antechamber and the one to the south) as well as that opening into the western hallway are locked. A successful DC 25 Open Lock check is required to open each of them.

Four minotaur honor guards (hp 65, 61, 59, 53) protect this Room. Their duty is to prevent any outsiders from getting to their tribe's treasure. They attack the PCs on sight unless a guide from the Broken Axe tribe accompanies them.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: These men are well trained and fight well together. They use their powerful horns to charge the PCs at every occasion and initiate their barbarian's rage abilities early in the combat. They also maneuver around their enemies in order to flank them. They fight to the death.

Treasure: Each of these guards carries a value of 2d12 gp in different coins and small gems. One also wears a silver earring (worth 35 gp) as well as a golden gauntlet carved with various horns and bull-face designs. The gauntlet is an important family heirloom that has been in the guard's family for generations. It is worth 300 gp, but three times as much to any member of the Broken Axe or Red Horn tribe.

- Room 1 (South): This small chamber contains a large stone altar with three items on it: A +1 trident of shock, a +2 keen longsword, and a large gourd containing 5 doses of a potion of cure serious wounds. These items were taken from enemies of the tribe years ago and stored here. On occasion, Chieftain Markuli uses some of these treasures to trade with neighbors or reward minotaurs who proved their worth in battle.
- Room 2 (North): This Room holds five large jars made out of thick copper. A finely crafted tapestry of blue wool and silver threads cover most of the eastern wall (hiding the door behind it). The tapestry's design is abstract but beautiful. It is worth 275 gp. The five jars (worth 100 gp each) hold great riches: A total of 55,075 gp worth of finely hewn gems, shiny jewelry, and gold and platinum pieces.
- Room 3 (North and West): The door leading into this Room is locked (DC 25 Open Lock check to open) and hidden behind the thick tapestry woven from blue wool with silver threads. A DC 18 Search check reveals its location, but PCs looking behind the tapestry find it automatically.

The Room contains the tombs of the tribe's last three chieftains. The three gray stone sarcophagi dominate the small chamber. Each of the lids of these tombs is sculpted in the semblance of a bull-headed humanoid bearing a large axe in his hands. The heavy lids can be lifted with a successful DC 22 Strength check. The sarcophagi hold the bony remains of the minotaur chieftains of old and their most precious possessions.

The first tomb contains a +3 chain mail armor fashioned from golden wire and made to fit a Large PC as well as a masterwork greataxe, which needs sharpening. The second tomb holds a headband made from tarnished silver upon which a dark red ruby is set (worth 1,755 gp). In the third tomb, a +2 heavy mace and a large piece of perfectly clear amber (worth 665 gp) can be found.

PCs caught with this treasure are immediately met with a Hostile Initial Attitude by the Broken Horn minotaurs. Red Horns encountering the PCs have their Attitude shifted one rank toward Hostile.

EL: 10

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two barbarian levels to each minotaur and make the spiked pit trap near the south door 80 ft. deep. To decrease the challenge, ignore the insanely mist vapor trap.

Skills and Feats: Intimidate +2, Listen +7, Search +2, Spot +7; Great Fortitude, Power Attack, Track

Powerful Charge (Ex): A minotaur typically begins a battle by charging at an opponent, lowering its head to bring its mighty horns into play. In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +10 attack bonus that deals 4d6+6 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

Rage (Ex): +4 to Str, +4 to Con, +2 on Will saves, -2 to AC for up to 7 rounds.

Skills: Minotaurs have a +4 racial bonus on Search, Spot, and Listen checks.

F25. LIVING QUARTERS

The rising smoke of the burning fire within the hearth at the center of this hall casts the room in a thin gray mist that burns the naked eye. The dancing red flames bathe the room in a pale yellow luminescence, revealing several crude cots and low wooden benches scattered around the place. The fat body of a wild boar impaled by long wooden sticks hangs above the fire. The smell of the roasting meat is delicate.

There are several large humanoids with bull-like heads and long horns in this room.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: A minotaur warrior (hp 43) is enjoying time off with members of his extended family, two minotaur females (hp 37, 35) and a young male minotaur warrior in training (hp 31). The family recounts a tall tale about the glory days of the Golden Axe tribe.

These people are suspicious of strangers, especially those who journey into their territory unescorted. If the PCs make good use of the Diplomacy skill and change the minotaurs' attitude, the family might be willing to trade goods and information with them. If the PCs change their attitude to Friendly or Helpful, the minotaurs share tales of the people's history for tales of the PCs' exploits.

Encounter Condition: N/A

Tactics: If combat occurs, the oldest warrior places himself between the old female and uses his greataxe to protect her. The young warrior in training yields his halberd in battle while the unarmed female ferociously charges the PCs. Meanwhile the old female utters sharp cries of alarm, which alerts the honor guards in Room F24. These warriors come to aid the family 1d3+1 rounds later.

Treasure: N/A

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three unarmed minotaurs. To decrease the challenge, remove the two unarmed minotaurs.

• Minotaur: CR 4; Large monstrous humanoid; HD 6d8+12; hp 43, 37, 35, 31; Init +0; Spd 30 ft.; AC 17, touch 9, flat-footed — (see text); Base Atk +6; Grp +14; Atk +11 melee (3d6+6/×3, greataxe); Full Atk +11/+6 melee (3d6+6/×3, greataxe) and +4 melee (1d8+2, gore); Space/Reach 10 ft./10 ft.; SA Powerful charge 4d6+6; SQ Darkvision 60 ft., natural cunning, scent; AL CE; SV Fort +6, Ref +5, Will +5; Str 19, Dex 10, Con 15, Int 7, Wis 10, Cha 8.

Skills and Feats: Intimidate +2, Listen +7, Search +2, Spot +7; Great Fortitude, Power Attack, Weapon Focus (greataxe).

Powerful Charge (Ex): A minotaur typically begins a battle by charging at an opponent, lowering its head to bring its mighty horns into play. In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +9 attack bonus that deals 4d6+6 points of damage.

Natural Cunning (Ex): Although minotaurs are not especially intelligent, they possess innate cunning and logical ability. This gives them immunity to maze spells, prevents them from ever becoming lost, and enables them to track enemies. Further, they are never caught flat-footed.

Skills: Minotaurs have a +4 racial bonus on Search, Spot, and Listen checks.

Possessions: Masterwork hide armor, masterwork greataxe.

F26. CHIEFTAIN'S SON'S PRIVATE CHAMBER

A large bed covered with a thick layer of woolen blankets dominates the center of this wide chamber. A massive chest as well as the skin of a large bear-like animal decorates the place, which is totally dark.

Initial Attitude: Hostile

Encounter: This chamber is the private abode of Rankuli (hp 89) and his minotaur mate (hp 41). The only son of Chieftain Markuli, Rankuli is his aging father's direct heir. He helps the old man in the important affairs of the tribe, but prefers to spend his time here with his mate.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: Rankuli does not appreciate intruders, much less non-minotaur ones. He attacks the PCs on sight, descending into a mighty fit of rage and using his horns to impale the strongest warrior. He does not take time to don his armor, which lays under his bed, but grasps his favored weapon: An enchanted dire flail.

Treasure: The large chest here contains half a dozen silken drapes (worth a total 345 gp) as well as an intricate bracer fashioned from black onyx in the shape of a coiled serpent. This bracer appears to be worth approximately 100 gp, but a successful DC 25 Knowledge (religion) check reveals it is made into the semblance of a minor nature deity and worth up to ten times this amount to any follower of the faith.

In addition to the weapons he carries, Rankuli has a pouch filled with 51 pp. His suit of armor, which lays under the bed, is a +1 chain shirt suitable for any Large PC.

EL: 8

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add two barbarian levels to Rankuli and give three barbarian levels to his mate. To decrease the challenge, make Rankuli a 1st level barbarian.

F27. EMPTY LIVING QUARTERS

A low circle of stones was built in the middle of this room. The stones are dirty with soot and the floor in their center is blackened and covered with gray ashes, making it obvious that fire once burnt in this hearth.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This Room once served as living quarters for members of the tribe, but now only the chieftain's son and his mate use it on occasion. It has been several weeks since they made a fire here; the last time they did they used up all the available timber.

Encounter Condition: Drafty, Safe

Tactics: N/A

Treasure: A successful DC 15 Search check reveals the burnt remains of what was once a cooper ring in the ashes of the fire. The ring was hidden in the secret compartment of a drawer used to kindle the flames of the fire several months ago. It belonged to a dwarf who helped the minotaurs build and repair traps and secret wall panels.

On the inside of the ring are Dwarven runes. These runes are the equivalent of a scroll of flesh to stone that spellcasters can decipher with a DC 25 Spellcraft check. Transferring this spell to a spellbook is just like transferring a scroll, but a spellcaster cannot cast from the ring.

EL: N/A

Scaling: N/A

F28. OLD MINOTAURS' LIVING QUARTERS

Three tall but frail-looking humanoids with thick brown and gray fur sit around the fire that burns within a low stone circle in this room. A wisp of thin black smoke rises from the flames, disappearing into a crack somewhere in the darkness of the high ceiling above.

A large stack of wood — mostly dried branches and tree limbs, but also pieces of broken furniture — take most of the southeast corner of the room. The aging minotaurs sit upon thick woolen blankets.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Graakk (hp 45), a minotaur witch, and her two venerable brothers (hp 41, 37) live here. Content to spend most of their days in quiet solitude and mild-mannered philosophical debates on the bleak future of their people, these elders seldom leave this Room. They rely on their younger siblings (minotaur warriors of the tribe) to make sure they have enough firewood to keep their living quarters warm.

Graakk is one of the most respected members of the tribe, and Chieftain Markuli relies on her counsel in times of trouble. Despite their advanced age, her brothers remain competent warriors. Though they prefer to let the younger members of the tribe protect the territory, in times of crisis they do not hesitate to take up arms against invaders.

At the sight of the PCs, the brothers ready their greataxes. Graakk, however, is intrigued and more willing to parley. If the PCs agree to talk with her, Graakk asks them to bring her the body of a manticores from Rooms F96 through F100. If they agree, she promises to pay them with a valuable violet garnet (worth 400 gp) for each dead manticore they bring her.

Encounter Condition: Ambush, Cover, Fearless

Tactics: If combat breaks out here, the two brothers charge the PCs and engage them in melee while Graakk uses her spells from a distance to hamper them. If forced into melee, she uses her blade in an effort to stab her foes, targeting the lighter armored enemies first.

Treasure: In addition to five violet garnets (worth 400 gp each), Graakk also has a black pearl (worth 600 gp), and a scroll with cause fear, expeditious retreat, shield, shocking grasp, and true strike written on it.

F29. ISOLATED WARP GATE II

The door leading into this Room is one of the many warp gates in the Region. It is unlocked, but a tiny black iron mechanism is set above its doorknob. When this door is opened, roll a Random Location to determine into which Room it leads. A roll resulting in Room F29 means the door opens as a normal door would into the narrow corridor encircling the Room. Like any other warp gate, this door shuts itself automatically once the PCs pass through it.

This small square room is void of light, furniture, and decoration. A door with an unusual lock fashioned from black metal in the middle of the east wall is the only thing of interest here.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: The only means of escaping this isolated Room is by using the warp gate.

F30. CHIEFTAIN'S PRIVATE CHAMBERS

The door leading to this Room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to open.

Darkness fills this large room, which is obviously the bedchamber of an important member of the minotaur tribe. A large ~~tapestry~~ covers most of the eastern wall. It shows a ~~massive axe made from~~ countless interlaced gold threads upon a field of the richest green hues. Some of the golden threads were removed, ~~however, making~~ the design of the ~~axe appear as though it was broken in three different parts~~.

Under this ~~tapestry~~, in the center of the east wall, is a ~~wide bed~~ covered with rich ~~black~~, white, and beige furs. Narrow corridors at the far end of the chamber lead towards the north and south.

Initial Attitude: N/A

Encounter: This is Chieftain Markuli's private chamber. Though it contains the most precious possessions held by the mighty chieftain, the leader relies on the lock upon his door and the trapped chest therein to protect his treasure. Since his chamber is also near several minotaur living quarters, Markuli is confident his wealth is well protected.

Encounter Condition: Echoes 4

Tactics: If the PCs spend 30 minutes in this Room roll for a Random Encounter. If a minotaur finds the PCs in Markuli's quarters, his Initial Attitude is Hostile and he attacks immediately.

Treasure: The tapestry in this chamber is worth approximately 100 gp, but to the members of the Broken Axe tribe it is worth ten times this amount. The two narrow corridors, one leading north and the other south, open into smaller chambers.

The northern chamber contains several piles of thick pelts of various colors taken from many different animals and magical beasts, a large golden harp, as well as three weapons hanging from iron pegs on the west wall.

The weapons on the walls were taken from victims of the Broken Axe tribe and claimed by Markuli. The first one is a masterwork silver dwarven axe in dire need of polishing. This axe, too small for the minotaur's taste, belonged to the dwarf who helped the tribe secure their territory years ago and was later enslaved. The second weapon is a +3 kukri made of bronze of a fiery orange shade stolen from an outsider who unwittingly ventured into the dungeon four years hence. The third item is a black, broad bladed, and double-edged +1 bastard sword fashioned from a rare enchanted alloy that absorbs portions of the ambient light, providing its wielder with a +5 circumstance bonus to all Hide and Intimidation checks when the blade is unsheathed.

The harp is made of gold. Its body is long but delicate, with countless abstract markings carved into its frame. Its twelve cords are silvery white and shine slightly when illuminated. A successful DC 20 Knowledge (local) check reveals they are woven from fine elven hair. The item is a harp of charming.

The score of pelts weighs 425 lbs. These fine furs are worth upwards of 1,000 gp.

The southern chamber holds a massive chest made out of dark brownish iron and a round shield is set on its western wall. This masterwork large steel shield is a beautiful work of art (and worth five times the value of similar items). The item is made of blue steel laced with silvery threads, and a thick plate of gold reinforces its contour. An intricate emblem lays on the heart of the shield: a burning sun made out of interwoven yellow gold, red copper, and orange bronze with a pair of miniature mithral hammers encrusted upon it.

The chest that dominates the center of the Room is locked and trapped. A successful DC 40 Open Lock check is required to unlock it. Its mechanical trap can be bypassed by pressing a hidden switch at the back of the chest before opening its lid.

◆ Poisoned Needle Trap: CR 4; mechanical; touch trigger; repair reset; hidden bypass (Search DC 28); Atk +19 melee (1 plus poison, needle); poison (carrion crawler brain juice, DC 13 Fortitude save resists (poison only), paralysis/0); Search DC 25; Disable Device DC 17.

The chest contains 2,150 gp, plus various pieces of jewelry, and precious stones worth 3,500 gp total. The chest weighs over 50 lbs. when full.

F31. BORDER PATROL

A pair of minotaurs holding greataxes and wearing thick hide armors stand guard in this dark and bare room.

Initial Attitude: Unfriendly

Encounter: Three minotaurs (hp 45, 44, 37) are on duty here. Though they are weary of strangers, these warriors might agree to exchange information on the Region with friendly PCs. If the PCs make no effort to befriend them, the minotaurs order them out of the Broken Axe territory. Otherwise, they tolerate the PCs unless otherwise ordered. If the PCs have any obvious valuables, the minotaurs offer to gamble with the PCs.

Encounter Condition: Fearless

Tactics: If forced into battle, these warriors attack fiercely, using their great horn charge at each chance they get. Since there are three of them, they surround the largest PC, flanking their enemies otherwise. Minotaurs are never caught flat-footed and are unafraid of being in the middle of things.

The smallest of the three is a little unhinged and uses a vial of (enhanced) alchemical fire if things don't go his way. The vial is the equivalent of three vials of alchemical fire in one blast, and deals maximum damage. The caustic substance is something he found lying around the dungeon and he carries four at all times.

The largest minotaur also carries potions, but he doesn't know what they do. Assuming they are healing, he drinks one at random when reduced to 10 hit points or less.

Treasure: The largest minotaur carries a potion belt, with three vials on it. One of the vials is holy water, and the others are a potion of water breathing and a potion of cure moderate wounds.

EL: 7

Scaling: To increase the challenge of this encounter, add three minotaurs or give the minotaurs damage reduction 5/—. To decrease the challenge, remove one or the alchemical fire.

In addition to the normal benefits and hazards of a charge, this allows the beast to make a single gore attack with a +9 attack bonus that deals 4d6+6 points of damage.

Skills: Minotaurs have a +4 racial bonus on Search, Spot, and Listen checks.

Possessions: Hide armor, greataxe.

F32. PRISON AREA

A large minotaur male, wearing dirty leather armor, stands in the middle of the room. He cleans his nails using the blade of a large cleaver. Behind him are a wooden table and five empty stools. A wide iron lock rests upon the door in the center of the western wall.

Initial Attitude: Neutral

Encounter: Brakari (hp 54) is in charge of the prison; appointed this task because, despite his failings as a warrior, he is reliable in his duties. Perhaps the most cowardly of all Broken Axe minotaurs, Brakari is content to ensure the prisoners of the clan are safely locked away. Brakari prefers to trade with the PCs rather than engage in combat. He is especially interested in gold coins. Unfortunately, he has little to offer in return, except information.

The door to the west leads into a small cell where the members of the tribe hold their prisoners. To gain access to this cell, the PCs must either succeed at a DC 22 Open Lock check or steal Brakari's key, which he keeps on his person at all times. Locked inside the cell is Riswan (hp 9), an unfortunate halfling who unwittingly ventured into this Section of the dungeon several months ago.

Encounter Condition: Stagnant Air

Tactics: If forced into battle, Brakari uses his mighty horns and the large cleaver he holds to defend himself. He is not stupid enough to fight to the death, unless there is no escape. He holds PCs hostage, if possible, and threatens them with unspeakable violence.
